"That Ann of Orleans, ducheſs of Savoy, &c. "Princeſs of the blood-royal, by the royal Princeſs of Great-Britain, Henrietta her mother, "puts ſo high value upon that prerogative, that ſhe "gladly made uſe of the opportunity which then "offered, to ſet it forth before the eyes of the whole "Engliſh nation, as an evidence ſhe drew from "thence, of having a right to that auguſt throne: "that therefore being informed it had been reſolved in that parliament, that being the only "daughter of the late Princeſs Royal, Henrietta, her "mother, ſhe was the next in ſucceſſion, after his "Majeſty William III, and the Princeſs Ann of "Denmark, according to the laws and cuſtoms of "England, which always prefered the neareſt to "the remoteſt line: that her title being thus notoriouſly known and indiſputable, ſtood in need "of no farther proof: however, ſhe thought fit "to proteſt againſt all reſolutions and deciſions, "contrary thereunto, in the beſt and moſt effectual "manner that might be practiſed in ſuch a caſe, "wherein ſhe complied with cuſtom rather than "neceſſity: becauſe ſhe had ſo great an idea of "the wiſdom and juſtice of the King and parliament, that ſhe had no cauſe to fear they "would do any thing prejudicial to her and her "children.

Not regarded by the parliament.

The commons took however no notice of it: but proceeded in the bill for the farther limitation of the crown, in the Proteſtant line.

The convocation meets.

The convocation of the clergy of the dioceſe of Canterbury being, according to cuſtom, ſummoned to meet at Weſtminſter, at the ſame time with the parliament, they attended the King, on the 10th of March, with an addreſs, in anſwer to which his Majeſty aſſured them of his protection: but ſoon after, a fatal and memorable difference aroſe between the two houſes, about the power of adjournment, whether it was in the archbiſhop alone for both houſes, or whether the lower houſe might adjourn themſelves?

Exchequer bills renewed.

The 13th of March, the King came to the houſe of lords, and gave the royal aſſent to "a bill for "renewing ſuch of the exchequer bills as remained "uncancelled.

The 18th, the King ſent a meſſage to the commons by mr. ſecretary Hedges, importing;

Meſſage from the King to the commons.

"That his Majeſty having directed mr. Stanhope, "his envoy extraordinary and plenipotentiary at "the Hague, to enter into negociations, in con-"cert with the States-General and other potentates, "for the mutual ſecurity of England and Holland, "and the preſervation of the peace of Europe, "according to an addreſs of their houſe, to that "effect, and that mr. Stanhope having tranſmited

(1) The King did not ſo much as hint at the perſon he was deſirous to have favored, on this occaſion: tho' immediately after the death of the duke of Glouceſter, this important affair was previouſly concerted at Loo, whither the principal party concerned came to pay a viſit to his Majeſty.

"to

WILL' III. AN' 1701.

" to his Majeſty copies of the demands made by himſelf, and the deputies of the States upon that ſubject, to the French embaſſador there, his Majeſty had thought fit to communicate the ſame to the commons, it being his intention to acquaint them, from time to time, with the ſtate and progreſs of thoſe negociations, into which he had entered, purſuant to their addreſs above-mentioned (1).

Their addreſs in anſwer.

The 21ſt, the commons took this meſſage into conſideration, and having read the propoſals made to the French embaſſador, by mr. Stanhope, and alſo the tranſlation of the reſolutions of the States-General, for treating with monſ. d'Avaux, the 22d of March 1700, they reſolved, that the treaty of partition be read, likewiſe, which being done accordingly, they voted " an addreſs, to return their " thanks to his Majeſty, for his meſſage, in which " he was pleaſed to communicate his royal intentions to acquaint them, from time to time, with " the ſtate and progreſs of theſe negociations, into " which he had entered, purſuant to their addreſs; " and, at the ſame time, to lay before his Majeſty " the ill conſequences of the treaty of partition, " (paſſed under the great-ſeal of England, during the ſiting of parliament, and without " the advice of the ſame) to this kingdom, and " the peace of Europe; whereby ſuch large territories, of the King of Spain's dominions, were " to be delivered up to the French King."

His Majeſty's reply.

In anſwer to this addreſs, the King, without taking notice of the partition-treaty, only told the commons; " that he was glad they were pleaſed " with his communicating to them the ſtate of the " negociations, which he ſhould continue to inform " them of, and receive their advice thereupon; " being perſuaded nothing could contribute more " to the happineſs of the kingdom, and the peace " of Europe, than the concurence of the parliament, in all his negociations, and a good underſtanding between him and his people."

The lords had, ſome days before, ſhewn their diſapprobation of this treaty; and great debates aroſe thereupon in their houſe, in which very ſevere reflections were caſt upon ſeveral peers, but upon none more than the earl of Portland, who was ſuppoſed to be author and chief manager of this fatal treaty: the debate being ended, the lords ſent a meſſage to the commons, to acquaint them;

The meſſage of the lords to the commons.

" That there having been lately a treaty made " with France, extreamly dangerous in itſelf, and " alſo tranſacted in a moſt irregular manner, the " lords had thought fit to communicate it to the " houſe of commons, and to deſire them to appoint " a committee, for meeting a committee of the " lords, in order to their joint conſideration of " ſome method to be uſed, in making ſuch an application to his Majeſty, about this matter, as " might, for the future, prevent any proceedings of " this kind."

The lords, at the ſame time, deſired the commons, that mr. Vernon, a member of their houſe, might come to a committee of the upper houſe to give an account of ſome matters relating to the treaty of partition, which the commons readily granted.

Addreſs of the the lords.

The 20th, the lords preſented an addreſs to his Majeſty, declaring their ſenſe of the partition-treaty, in the following manner:

" That having read and conſidered the ſaid " treaty, of the 3d of March, 1700, N. S. made " with the French King, together with the ſeparate " and ſecret articles, which he had been pleaſed to " communicate to them, they had, to their great " ſorrow, found the ſubſtance thereof would be of " very ill conſequence to the peace and ſafety of " Europe: for that, beſide the occaſion it might " have given the late King of Spain to have made " his will, in favor of the duke d'Anjou, if that " treaty had taken effect, the prejudice to his Majeſty and his ſubjects, and indeed to all Europe, " by the addition of Sicily, Naples, ſeveral parts " of the Mediterranean, the province of Guipuſcoa, and the duchy of Lorrain, had been not " only very great, but contrary to the pretenſe of " the treaty itſelf, which was to prevent any umbrage that might have been taken, by uniting " ſo many ſtates and dominions under one head: " that by all the informations they had had of the " fatal treaty, they could not find, that the verbal " orders or inſtructions (if any were given to his " Majeſty's plenipotentiaries) were ever conſidered " in any of his Majeſty's councils, or that the " draught of that treaty had ever been laid before " his Majeſty, at any meeting of his council, " much leſs that it was adviſed or approved of by " any council or committee of council: wherefore " they thought themſelves bound, in duty to his Majeſty, and juſtice to their country, moſt humbly " to beſeech him, that, for the future, he would " be pleaſed to require and admit, in all matters " of importance, the advice of his natural-born " ſubjects, whoſe known probity and fortunes might " give him and his people, a juſt aſſurance of " their fidelity to his ſervice: and that, in order " thereunto, he would be pleaſed to conſtitute a " council of ſuch perſons, to whom his Majeſty " might be pleaſed to impart all affairs, both at " home and abroad, which might any way concern " him and his dominions: for, as intereſt, and natural affection to their country, would incline " them to wiſh the welfare and proſperity of it, " much more than others, who had no ſuch ties " upon them; and as their experience and knowlege of their country would alſo render them more " capable than ſtrangers, of adviſing his Majeſty, in the true intereſt of it; ſo they were " confident, that after ſuch large and repeated demonſtrations of his ſubjects duty and affection, his " Majeſty could not doubt of their zeal in his " ſervice, nor want the knowlege of perſons fit to " be imployed in all his moſt ſecret and arduous " affairs. And as it appeared, that the French " King's accepting of the King of Spain's will, " was a manifeſt violation of that treaty, they humbly adviſed his Majeſty, in future treaties with " that Prince, to proceed with ſuch caution as might " carry a real ſecurity (2).

The King's anſwer.

To this addreſs the King anſwered; " that it contained matters of very great moment, and he " would take care, that all treaties he made " ſhould be for the honor and ſafety of England."

The debates on this treaty were no leſs vehement in the houſe of commons, than in the houſe of peers, and ſome members did not ſtick to caſt very ſevere, or rather indecent reflections upon his Majeſty (3). However, being at length come to a cooler temper, the King, on the 30th, ſent another

(1) By the memorial mentioned in the King's meſſage, the Engliſh and Dutch miniſters demanded of the French embaſſador, that his maſter ſhould withdraw his troops out of the Spaniſh Netherlands, and allow a ſufficient barrier for the ſecurity of England and the States-General: to which, however, that embaſſador did not think fit to return any anſwer.

(2) A motion was made, in the houſe of lords, before this petition was preſented, that it might be ſent to the commons for their concurence, which was back'd by ſome lords, with ſeveral reaſons; but the motion was rejected.

(3) Mr. How among others ſaid, the partition-treaty was a felonious treaty, and compared it to the diſtribution of other mens goods among highway-men.

meſſage

Will' III. An' 1701.

His Majesty's message to the commons.

message to the houſe, by mr. ſecretary Hedges, importing:

"That his Majeſty having received an account "from mr. Stanhope, his envoy extraordinary at "the Hague, that the French embaſſador had de- "clared the King, his maſter, had no other an- "ſwer to return to the demands of the States-general, "than that he was ready to renew and confirm the "treaty of Ryſwick; it being all the ſecurity the "States were to expect: and that he had no orders "to give any anſwer to his Majeſty's ſaid envoy, "but if his Majeſty had any thing to demand, it "might be done by his embaſſador at Paris, or the "French miniſter at London; and that he had no "command to treat with any but the States: and "his Majeſty having alſo received two reſolutions "of the States, and a memoraial from their envoy "in England, relating to the ſhips they were ſending "to join his Majeſty's fleet, and the ſuccors they "deſired might be haſtened to them, by virtue of "the treaty of March 3, 1677, his Majeſty had "thought fit to communicate the whole to that "houſe, that they might be particularly informed of "the preſent ſtate of affairs abroad, where the nego- "ciations ſeemed to be at an end, by the poſitive "anſwer the French embaſſador had given to the "States, which his Majeſty recommended to the "ſerious conſideration of that houſe, as a matter of "the greateſt weight and conſequence, and deſired "they would give him ſuch advice thereupon, as "might be for their own ſecurity, and that of the "States-general, and the peace of Europe (1).

Advice of the commons to the King.

The commons, having taken his Majeſty's meſ- ſage into conſideration, the 2d of April, reſolved unanimouſly to adviſe his Majeſty: "that he would "be pleaſed to carry on the negociation, in concert "with the States-general, and take ſuch meaſures "therein, as might moſt conduce to their ſecurity: "and that his Majeſty would purſue the treaty made "in 1677, aſſuring him, that the houſe would ef- "fectually inable him to ſupport the ſame.

His Majeſty's anſwer.

To this, his Majeſty anſwered; "that, accord- "ing to their advice, he had given his envoy at the "Hague orders, to carry on the negociation, in "concert with the States-general, and take ſuch mea- "ſures therein, as might conduce to their ſecurity. "He thank'd them for the aſſurance they gave him "of inabling him to make good the treaty above- "mentioned, and told them he would purſue the "ſame, according to their advice; and he did not "doubt but the readineſs they had ſhewn upon that "occaſion, would very much contribute to the ob- "taining ſuch a ſecurity as was deſired."

King William acknowledges the duke d'Anjou, King of Spain.

King William, however, plainly foreſaw, that France would never tamely yield up any part of the Spaniſh monarchy, which he had now in poſſeſſion, and was at the ſame time ſenſible, that the parlia- ment was not inclined to enter into a war for th recovery of thoſe dominions from the duke d'Anjou; he therefore thought it prudence, to keep the French at a bay, by a feign'd negociation, which was dex- trouſly carrying on by the earl of Mancheſter at Paris, and mr. Stanhope at the Hague; while his Majeſty, the better to cover his deſigns, acknow- ledged the duke d'Anjou to be King of Spain, and wrote him the following congratulatory letter:

Will' III. An' 1701.

Moſt ſerene and potent Prince, our dear brother and ally;

His congratu- latory letter to him.

"We have received your Majeſty's letter, of the "24th of March laſt, which has been very accept- "able to us upon many accounts: firſt, becauſe it "brought us notice of your ſafe arrival into your "kingdom of Spain, and of your coming to the "poſſeſſion of it, and taking upon yourſelf the go- "vernment of the dominions thereunto belonging: "and, in the ſecond place, becauſe it has made it "plain to us, that your Majeſty has a mind to con- "tinue, and keep inviolably, that moſt ancient al- "liance which is between the two crowns. Indeed, "we have willingly imbraced this occaſion, both to "congratulate your Majeſty's happy exaltation to "the Spaniſh throne, and to ſhew you how much "eſteem we have for your Majeſty, and how much "we deſire to make it appear to you, that our in- "clination does moſt readily prompt us to indeavor "what we can, that the mutual conjunction of friend- "ſhip and alliance between us may be confirm'd and "knit faſter, and the common good of the two na- "tions may daily more and more flouriſh and be "promoted, which we hope alſo will redound to the "public benefit, and good of all Europe. What "remains is to commend and commit your Majeſty "to the care and protection of Almighty God.

Given at our palace of Kenſington, the 17th day of April 1701, and the 13th year of the reign of your Majeſty's moſt loving brother and ally, Sign'd, Gulielmus Rex, (2).

Negociations at the Hague fruitleſs.

The duke d'Anjou being now acknowledged King of Spain, both by the King of England and the States-general, the conferences were reſumed at the Hague, between the Engliſh and Dutch miniſters, and monſ. d'Avaux, the French embaſſador, to ſettle a barrier, purſuant to the advice the commons had given his Majeſty: but it plainly appear'd, that the aims of France were to ſpin matters into a length, while they were indeavoring, tho' in vain, to in- gage the Dutch into a ſeparate treaty.

The earl of Portland im- peach'd.

The commons of England continued, in the mean time, to conſider the partition treaty, and the ad- viſers and promoters of it; and, in the begining of April, came to a reſolution; "that William, earl "of Portland, by negociating and concluding the "treaty of partition, which was deſtructive to the "trade of this kingdom, and dangerous to the peace "of Europe, was guilty, and ſhould be impeach'd, "of high crimes and miſdemeanors:" and ſir John Leviſon Gower, by order of the houſe, went up to the bar of the houſe of lords, and there impeach'd the ſaid earl, acquainting their lordſhips, that they would, in due time, exhibit articles againſt him. This done, the commons, at a conference, deſired the lords to communicate to them, what informa- tions their lordſhips had received of any tranſactions relating to the treaties of partition of the Spaniſh monarchy. The lords, thereupon, delivered to them the two Latin commiſſions of powers, granted to the earls of Portland and Jerſey, for negociating the ſaid treaties, one dated the firſt of July 1699, and

(1) The demands made by mr. Stanhope were, that reaſonable ſatisfaction ſhould be given the Emperor, upon his pretenſions to the Spaniſh ſucceſſion: that the French King, by a ſhort and limited time, ſhould withdraw all his troops out of the Spaniſh Netherlands, and that the towns there ſhould be gariſoned by Walloon or Netherland troops, except ſuch places as were reſerved for the ſecurity of England and Holland. That for the particular ſecurity of England, Oſtend and Nieuport ſhould be gariſon'd by Engliſh troops: that no places belonging to Spain ſhould ever be alienated or transfer'd to France, or come under the power of the French King: that the ſubjects of England ſhould have the ſame privileges within the Spaniſh dominions, as at the King of Spain's death, and be upon the ſame foot, with reſpect to trades, in the Spaniſh dominions, as the French.

(2) This ſtep has been very much cenſured by ſome authors, and particularly by biſhop Burnet, as the manner of taking it has been by others, while he was actually forming alliances againſt the Prince he congratulated. But if all circumſtances be con- ſidered, I think he is far from having incur'd blame on either account. The Dutch had long before acknowledged him; the French had refuſed to treat with his Majeſty's envoy at the Hague: and there was now no medium but either to acknowledge the duke d'Anjou, or to declare war, which latter neither the King nor the nation were yet in a condition to do. The French King deceived King William in the partition-treaties, and made a handle of the latter of them to ingage the Spaniards to play the whole Spaniſh monarchy into his hands. If ever it was juſtifiable to deceive the deceiver, it ſurely was, in the caſe before us.

the

WILL' III. AN' 1701.

the other the 2d of January 1700: as alſo a private paper of the lord Portland's, in which ſecretary Vernon adviſes him to negociate the firſt treaty.

The lord Sommers impeach'd.

The 14th, while the commons were in debate, whether they ſhould impeach the lord Sommers for adviſing that treaty, his lordſhip, before they were come to any reſolution, came down to their houſe, and deſired to be heard, when being admited, he made an apology for his conduct, and delivered the copies of two letters, to the houſe, the firſt of which he received from the King, deſiring his advice in the firſt treaty of partition, and the ſecond his lordſhip's anſwer to it; of both which, the reader has ſeen copies above. Notwithſtanding this, he was no ſooner withdrawn, than the commons came to a reſolution, "that John, lord Sommers, by adviſing "his Majeſty, in the year 1698, to the treaty of "partition of the Spaniſh monarchy, whereby large "territories of the King of Spain's dominions were "to be delivered up to France, was guilty of a high "crime and miſdemeanor;" and mr. Harcourt, by the command of the commons, impeach'd that lord, at the bar of the houſe of peers, declaring that the houſe would, in due time, exhibit articles againſt him.

Addreſs of the commons againſt the impeach'd lords.

The 15th, the commons formed an addreſs to the King, in which "they humbly craved leave to re-"preſent to his Majeſty, the great ſatisfaction they "had from their late inquiry concerning the treaty "of partition, made in 1698, (on which the treaty "in 1699 was founded) to ſee his Majeſty's great "care of his people, and this nation, in not enter-"ing into that negociation, without the advice of "his Engliſh counſellors; and finding, that John, "lord Sommers (on whoſe judgment his Majeſty "chiefly relied, in that important affair) did, in "concert with Edward, earl of Orford, and Charles, "lord Hallifax, adviſe his Majeſty to enter into "that treaty, of ſo dangerous conſequence to the "trade and welfare of the nation, and who, to "avoid the cenſure which might juſtly be appre-"hended to fall on thoſe who adviſed the ſame, in-"deavored to inſinuate, that his Majeſty, without "the advice of his council, entered into that treaty, "and, under his ſacred name, ſought protection, "for what they themſelves had ſo adviſed, of "which treatment his Majeſty could not but have "a juſt reſentment; and that they might be no "longer able to deceive his Majeſty, and abuſe his "people, they humbly beſought his Majeſty, that "he would be pleaſed to remove the lord Sommers, "the earl of Orford, and the lord Hallifax, from "his council and preſenſe for ever; as alſo, "William, earl of Portland, who tranſacted thoſe "treaties, which were ſo unjuſt in their own na-"ture, and ſo fatal in their conſequences to England, "and the peace of Europe. After which, they "humbly craved leave, upon that occaſion, to re-"peat their aſſurances to his Majeſty, that they "would always ſtand by, and ſupport his Majeſty, "to the utmoſt of their power, againſt all his ene-"mies, both at home and abroad."

The earl of Orford, and the lord Hallifax impeach'd.

Tho' this addreſs, I ſay, was voted, the 15th, the commons did not preſent it 'till the 23d, in which time they likewiſe impeach'd the earl of Orford, and the lord Hallifax. In the mean while, the houſe of lords, tho' they had themſelves ſaid very hard things, againſt the partition treaty, and the manner of tranſacting it, in their addreſs, were now alarm'd at this forward ſtep of the commons, and reſolved, if poſſible, to prevent the effect of it; to this end, they preſented the King, on the 16th, an addreſs, in which they repreſented; "that the com-"mons having ſeverally impeach'd, at the bar of "their houſe, the earls of Portland and Orford, and "the lord Sommers and Hallifax, of high crimes and "miſdemeanors, and having acquainted their lord-"ſhips, that they would, in due time, exhibit par-"ticular articles againſt thoſe impeach'd lords, and "make the ſame good; they moſt humbly be-"ſought his Majeſty, that he would be pleaſed to "paſs no cenſure upon them, 'till they were tried "upon the ſaid impeachments, and judgment given, "according to the uſage of parliament, and the "laws of the land." To this addreſs, tho' it was preſented by the duke of Devonſhire, and the earl of Romney, two perſons great in the King's intereſt, his Majeſty did not think fit to give any manner of anſwer (1).

WILL' III. AN' 1701.

Addreſs of the peers in favor of the impeached lords.

The King's anſwer to the addreſs of the commons.

When the addreſs of the commons came to be preſented, the 23d, tho' his Majeſty could not but be uneaſy at it, yet he was pleaſed to anſwer; "that "he was willing to take all occaſions of thanking "them very heartily, for the aſſurances they had "frequently given him, and repeated then, of "ſtanding by, and ſupporting him, againſt all his "enemies, towards which, nothing, in his opinion, "could contribute ſo much as a good correſpon-"dence between him and his people; and, there-"fore, they might depend upon it, that he would "imploy none in his ſervice, but ſuch as ſhould be "thought moſt likely to improve that mutual truſt "and confidence betwen them, which was ſo neceſ-"ſary, in that conjuncture, both for their own ſe-"curity, and the defenſe and preſervation of their "allies." This anſwer, tho' ambiguouſly fram'd, was ſo ſatisfactory to the commons, that they returned his Majeſty their thanks for it.

Indirect practices of the French.

Before I proceed to give an account of the ſucceſs of theſe impeachments, it may not be amiſs to ſay a word or two of the negociations at the Hague, which were carried on, by monſ. d'Avaux, in the ſame manner, and with the ſame views as I have mentioned above, and, indeed, with the ſame ſucceſs; the French inſiſting, that the States ſhould treat without the admiſſion of the Engliſh envoy, and the Dutch as ſtrenouſly reſiſting all their importunities and temptations. During theſe negociations, the French were advancing, with great bodies of troops, to the very gates of the Dutch frontier-towns, and tho' King William did all that was in his power, to ſupport them, and ſent over into Holland the three regiments, which were retained in Scotland, in his own pay; and, beſide, the States had, with their own mony, procured ſome auxiliaries from Germany; yet all theſe being inſufficient to remove their juſt apprehenſions, they wrote a very lamentable and affecting account of the dangerous ſituation of their affairs, to his Majeſty, earneſtly intreating, that the Engliſh forces might be ſent to their relief, without delay, purſuant to the treaty of 1677.

Apprehenſions of the Dutch.

His Majeſty hereupon ſent a meſſage to the commons on the 11th of the May, importing;

The King's meſſage to the commons concerning them.

"That having received an account from mr. "Stanhope, of the preſent poſture of affairs in Hol-"land; and, likewiſe, a letter from the States-general, "which was of the greateſt importance, and his "Majeſty, who had ſo perfect a knowledge of "their country, being intirely convinced of the "hardſhip of their preſent condition, and the "great preſſures they lay under, which were parti-"cularly expreſs'd in that letter, he thought it ab-"ſolutely neceſſary to communicate the ſame to that

(1) The houſe of lords were ſo diſſatisfied, at the King's ſilence, that they appointed a committee to inquire if there was any pecedent of the like nature. However, we may, upon this occaſion, obſerve that his Majeſty did, in effect, grant their requeſt, tho' he made a ſhew rather of complying with the commons,

Will' III. An' 1701.

" houſe, that the expectations the States had of " preſent aſſiſtance from his Majeſty might more " fully appear: and his Majeſty did not doubt, but " that houſe would be ſo juſtly ſenſible of theſe im- " mediate dangers, to which they ſtood expoſed, as " to take the ſame into their moſt ſerious conſide- " ration, it being moſt evident, that the ſafety of " England, as well as the very being of Holland, " very much depended upon their reſolution in that " matter.

Votes of the commons thereupon

The commons having read, and maturely conſider'd as well of this meſſage, as of the moving letter of the States, they came to the following unanimous reſolution;

" That they would effectually aſſiſt his Majeſty " to ſupport his allies, in maintaining the liberties " of Europe, and would immediately provide ſuc- " cors for the States-general, and order'd, that this " reſolve ſhould be preſented to his Majeſty by the " whole houſe." This being done accordingly the King returned them " his hearty thanks, for the " zeal they expreſs'd for the common cauſe; adding, " he knew nothing that could be more effectual for " the ſupport of it, both at home and abroad, than the " unanimous concurrence they had ſhewn, upon this " occaſion, and that it would be a particular ſatiſ- " faction to him, in his time, to renew the glory " which the Engliſh formerly had of maintaining " the liberty and balance of Europe."

This letter being, likewiſe communicated to the lords, they thank'd his Majeſty for it, in an addreſs. But to return to the impeachments:

The 5th of May, the lords ſent a meſſage to the commons, to remind them, that there were yet no articles prefered againſt the impeached lords; upon which the commons, on the 9th, ſent up articles againſt Edward, earl of Orford, in maintainance of their impeachment. Theſe articles ſet forth:

Articles againſt the earl of Orford.

" That, prefering his private intereſt to the pub- " lic good, he had, during an expenſive war, pro- " cured ſeveral grants from his Majeſty, of lands, " and exorbitant ſums of mony: that while he com- " manded the royal navy in the Streights, he re- " ceived the public mony, and converted it to his " private uſe, and then procured a privy-ſeal to diſ- " charge him of it: that he receiv'd conſiderable ſums " from the King of Spain alſo, with great quantities " of wine, oil, and other proviſions for the fleet; " which he converted to his own uſe: that he ſold " and diſpoſed of ſeveral veſſels, as prizes, without " condemnation: that preſiding in the commiſſion " of lord high-admiral, he had rejected the requeſt " of the Eaſt-India company, for ſuppreſſing pirates, " and had procured a commiſſion for William " Kidd (1), who had commited piracy, incouraged " thereto by his hopes of the earl's protection: that, " in the time of the aſſaſſination-plot, he had taken " ſeveral ſeamen out of the Ducheſs, to be put on " board captain Kidd, to the prejudice of the public " ſecurity: that in the time of the war, he ſent out " the King's ſhip the Dolphin, upon a private " voyage to his own advantage, but at the public " charge: that he had procured and poſſeſs'd offices, " which were inconſiſtent one with the other. That " while he commanded the royal navy, he loſt " ſeveral opportunities of deſtroying the enemy's " ſhips, and that he had adviſed the King to enter " into the treaties of partition, to the prejudice of the " nation, with ſome other things of leſs moment.

To theſe articles, the earl ſoon put in his anſwer, and ſaid; " that his Majeſty, in conſideration of " his many years ſervice, had voluntarily made him " a reverſionary grant, for the value of about " 10,000 l. That he had legally paſs'd his accounts, " for all monies he had received on account of the " public: that whatever he received of the King of " Spain for the fleet, was duly diſtributed among " the ſeamen. That he denied having injoyed any " offices that were inconſiſtent one with another. " That he conſtantly gave orders for proceeding " againſt the prizes, that were taken according to " law: that he never diſcouraged the Eaſt-India " company's requeſt for the ſuppreſſing of pirates: " that Kidd's commiſſion was granted according to " law, and intended for the public good, and if he had " commited piracy, he was never incouraged in it " by him: that as to the taking of men out of the " Ducheſs, to put on board captain Kidd, they were " but ſome of the very perſons taken before from on " board of captain Kidd, and that all fears of the in- " vaſion were then over: that he had no intereſt or " concern in the ſhip Dolphin. That he had not " neglected his duty againſt the enemy; and, con- " ſidering his ſervices againſt the French fleet, he " did not expect to be charged therewith: and he " denied that he adviſed his Majeſty to enter into " the partition treaty, avering, that he had ob- " jected to it, and gave his opinion againſt it."

Will' III. An' 1701.

His lordſhip's anſwer.

The next againſt whom the commons exhibited articles was the lord Sommers, the charge given in, the 19th of May, was as follows:

Articles againſt the lord Sommers.

" That he, contrary to his truſt, put the great " ſeal to the commiſſion for treating about the par- " tition, without the participation of the council: " that having no warrant for the ſame, he after- " wards indeavored to procure one to be tranſmited " to him: that he ratified the treaty of partition " in 1698. That he did the ſame by the other " treaty of partition in 1699: that he did not " cauſe the ſaid commiſſions and ratifications to be " inrolled: that he procured diverſe grants to him- " ſelf, of which they inſtanced diverſe particulars " in two or three articles, eſpecially of the forfeited " eſtates in Ireland. That beſide the fees and per- " quiſites of his office, he procured a penſion of " 4000 l. per annum; that he was concerned, as " well as the other lords, in ſending out of captain " Kidd: that he did not do his office at chancery, " but aſſerted ſome things dangerous to the conſti- " tution of the kingdom; with ſome other mat- " ters of leſs moment."

Lord Sommers's anſwer.

To theſe articles, the lord Sommers anſwered: " that he had, according to his duty, given the " King his opinion freely, on the partition-treaties, " and had his Majeſty's letters for his warrants, in " ſeting the ſaid great ſeal to the ſaid commiſſions " and treaties: that it was not incumbent on him, " as-lord chancellor, to ſee the ſaid commiſſions or " treaties inrolled; but the care of it belonged to " the prothonotary of the court of chancery: that " he never paſſed any grants without ſufficient war- " rants, and that more conſiderable grants had " paſſed in the times of his predeceſſors. That " the penſion of 4000 l. per annum had been allow- " ed to other chancellors: that he never begged " any grant: but what he had received was given " him voluntarily by his Majeſty, in conſideration " of his ſervices: that the commiſſion to captain

(1) This arch-pirate, returning with his booty to New-England, was there taken by the lord Bellamont, the governor, and ſent to England, where he was tried at a ſeſſions of admiralty, held at the Old-baily, and condemned and executed for murder and piracy. The houſe of commons, upon his being brought to England, which was in the begining of the year 1700, addreſs'd his Majeſty; " that the ſaid captain Kidd might not be tried, diſcharged or pardoned, 'till the next ſeſſion of parliament, and " that the governor of New-England might remit over all inſtructions or papers taken with, or relating to the ſaid Kidd:" with which his Majeſty complied, and Kidd was not executed, 'till the 22d of May, of this year, that is, 'till it appeared, that he either could not, or would not (the former of which is, however, moſt probable) diſcover any thing to the prejudice of the impeached lords. Lediard's Naval hiſtory, Vol. II. p. 728.

Kidd

WILL' III. AN' 1701.

" Kidd was then thought neceſſary, for the preſervation of trade and navigation: he acknowleged, that Samuel Newton's name, in the grant of the veſſels and goods, that ſhould be taken by Kidd, was uſed in truſt for him (the lord Sommers) but that Kidd, having abuſed his commiſſion, and turned pirate, his imployers had loſt their expences, inſtead of making any gain by ſending him out.

Articles againſt the lord Hallifax.

The articles againſt the lord Hallifax ſet forth, that whereas the commons had thought it reaſonable to apply the forfeited eſtates in Ireland to the uſe of the public, he had procured a grant of ſeveral ſums forfeited to the crown, in that kingdom, amounting to 13,000 l. that he had alſo procured ſeveral grants in England, particularly a grant of 14,000. l. to be raiſed out of ſcrubbed beech, birch, holly, &c. growing in his Majeſty's foreſts, under color whereof he had cut down and ſold, for his own benefit, ſappling oaks, and many tuns of well-grown timber; that he procured ſeveral offices and places in the treaſury and exchequer, which he injoyed at the ſame time, tho' they were manifeſtly inconſiſtent, and ought to have been a check on each other; and laſtly, that he adviſed the partition-treaties."

The lord Hallifax's anſwer.

To this charge, the lord Hallifax anſwered, that he did accept a grant of debts, &c. forfeited to the crown, in Ireland, amounting to 13,000 l. as he lawfully might: but that they had been taken away from him by the late act of reſumption and he had not made clear of them, above 400 l; that he had not accepted of the grants mentioned in England, and particularly 2000 l. per annum for ſeven years, to be raiſed by the fall of ſcrub, beech, birch, &c. and if any abuſe had been in cuting of the wood, he was not anſwerable for the ſame, it being done by the direction of his Majeſty's ſurveyor-generals, and other officers. He did not deny his injoying the ſaid places in the treaſury, and the exchequer: but ſaid, it was but for a while; he deſigned, from the begining, to lay ſome of them down, and had actually relinquiſhed ſome of them: he ſaid, he never adviſed the partition-treaties, or was conſulted thereupon: but when the matter was diſcourſed of at Tunbridge-wells, he made ſeveral objections to the ſame."

A meſſage from the lords to the commons.

And now thoſe differences between the two houſes, which afterwards run a great length, and were a great obſtruction to the public affairs, began to ſhew themſelves, and to increaſe daily: for, on the 24th of May, the lords ſent a meſſage to the commons, to put them in mind of replying to the earl of Orford's anſwer, that a day might be appointed for his trial, and of exhibiting articles againſt the earl of Portland, and the other lords.

The anſwer of the commons.

The commons, who began to ſhew ſome uneaſineſs and reſentment at this meſſage, anſwered: " that they defered bringing up the replication againſt the earl of Orford, becauſe they thought fit to begin with the trial of the lord Sommers; and to the other part of the lords meſſage, puting them in mind of ſending up articles of impeachment againſt the earl of Portland, &c. they held it to be unparliamentary, they, as proſecutors, being the proper judges, where articles of impeachment ought to be brought up.

A ſecond meſſage of the lords.

This anſwer of the commons had the ſame effect upon the lords, as their meſſage had upon the commons, and jealouſies thereupon increaſed: inſomuch that the peers ſent a ſecond meſſage to the lower houſe, acquainting them, " that they had appointed the 9th of June, for the trial of the earl of Orford, and that the commons might reply if they thought fit: they alſo put them in mind again, that no articles were exhibited againſt the earl of Portland; which, after an impeachment had ſo long depended, they obſerved was a hardſhip, and not agreeable to the uſual method of parliament."

WILL' III. AN' 1701.

Reply of the commons.

The commons replied to this: " that it was their undoubted right, when ſeveral perſons ſtood impeached to bring to trial ſuch of them, in the firſt place, as they thought fit, and that no day ought to be appointed by their lordſhips for the trial, without ſome previous ſignification to their lordſhips, from the commons, of their being ready to proceed therein; and therefore the commons could not agree, to the day appointed by their lordſhips for the trial of the earl of Orford; and as to the ſending up articles againſt the earl of Portland, they thought their lordſhips, by the frequent repetition of it, intended to introduce diſputes to the delay of juſtice, and in breach of that good correſpondence, which ought to be obſerved between the two houſes."

The lords inſiſt on their right.

The controverſy began now to be very warm, in both houſes: and the lords, to ſhew that they intended to perſiſt in their former meſſage, gave a freſh inſtance of this their reſolution, by " puting the commons in mind of replying to the lord Sommers," and on that occaſion aſſerted, " that the right of limiting a convenient time for the trial was lodged in them."

The commons propoſe a committee of both houſes, &c.

At a conference held, on this occaſion, the commons afterwards propoſed the appointing of a committee of both houſes, to conſider of the moſt proper ways and methods of proceeding on impeachments: but the lords, by another meſſage, inſiſted on " their right of appointing the day of trial, without any previous ſignification from the commons of their being ready, and complained that the commons ſhould charge them with delaying juſtice." On the other hand, the commons inſiſted as ſtrenuouſly on the nominating " a committee of both houſes, to adjuſt the neceſſary preliminaries to the trials: as whether the impeached lords ſhould appear at their trials, at their lordſhips bar, as criminals, and whether they ſhould ſit as judges, at each others trials, or vote, in their own caſes, as they found, by their lordſhips journals, they had been admited to do."

Which the lords refuſe.

The lords ſtill perſiſted to refuſe appointing any ſuch committee to conſider of the ways and methods of impeachments; and to ſhew they would not be controuled, in what they called their right, they appointed the 13th of June, for the trial of the lord Sommers: but the commons were as reſolute, on their ſide, and refuſed to appear at any trial, 'till the preliminaries were ſettled.

Reſolutions of the lords.

The lords, hereupon, came to two reſolutions, which they communicated to the commons, and were as follows: 1. " That no lord of parliament, impeached for high crimes and miſdeamenors, and coming to his trial, ſhall be without the bar. 2. That no lord, impeached of high crimes and miſdeamenors, can be precluded from voting on any occaſion, except in his own trial:" and becauſe the commons ſhould not pretend they were ſtreightned for time, " they ordered the trial of the lord Sommers to be put off to the 17th of June, and agreed to a free conference with the commons.

A free conference held.

At this conference the lord Haverſham ſaid; " one thing there is which a worthy member mentioned, tho' I cannot ſpeak to it large: becauſe I think myſelf bound up by the reſolutions of the houſes: yet it muſt have ſome anſwer; that is, as to the lords voting in their own caſe, it requires an anſwer, tho' I cannot enter into the debate of it. The commons themſelves have made this precedent. For in theſe impeachments they have allowed men, equally concerned in the " ſame

Will' III. An' 1701.

" ſame facts (1), to vote in their own houſe: and " we have not made this diſtinction in ours, that " ſome ſhould vote, and ſome not. The lords " had ſo high an opinion of the juſtice of the houſe " of commons, that they hope juſtice ſhall never be " made uſe of as a maſk for any deſign: and there- " fore give me leave to ſay (tho' I am not to argue " it) it is to me a plain demonſtration, that the " commons think theſe lords innocent; and I " think the propoſition is undeniable: for when " there are ſeveral lords in the ſame circumſtances " (2), in the ſame facts, there is no diſtinction: " and the commons leave ſome of theſe men at the " head of affairs, near the King's perſon, to do any " miſchief if they are inclined to it, which looks as " if they thought them all innocent." Theſe expreſſions were immediately objected to by ſir Chriſtopher Muſgrave, and the managers for the commons, took them to be ſuch an aſperſion on the honor of that houſe, that they immediately withdrew from the conference (3); and theſe managers being returned to their houſe, it was reſolved; " that " John lord Haverſham had, at the free conference, " uttered moſt ſcandalous reproaches and falſe ex- " preſſions highly reflecting upon the honor and " juſtice of the houſe of commons, and tending to " the making a breach in the good correſpondence " between the lords and commons, and to the inter- " rupting the public juſtice of the nation, by de- " laying the proceedings on impeachments: and " reſolved that John lord Haverſham be charged " before the lords, for the words ſpoken at the ſaid " conference; and that the lords be deſired to " proceed in juſtice againſt him, and to inflict ſuch " puniſhment on the ſaid lord, as ſo high an offenſe " againſt the commons does deſerve."

The commons reſent words ſpoken there, by the lord Haverſham.

The lords afterwards deſired that the free conference might be renewed, in order to ſet all matters right: but the commons reſolved, " that it was not " conſiſtent with their honor to renew the free con- " ference, 'till juſtice was done them on the lord " Haverſham."

Farther reſolutions of the commons.

The 16th of June, the lords ſent the commons the following rules, to be obſerved the next day, at the trial of the lord Sommers:

Rules given by the lords, for the trial of the lord Sommers.

1. " That the whole impeachment be read, and " then the anſwer; which being done, the lord- " keeper to tell the commons, that they may go " on with their evidence.

2. " If any of the peers, or the members of the " houſe of commons, who manage the evidence, or " the lord impeached, do deſire, do have any queſ- " tion aſked, they deſire the lord-keeper to aſk the " ſame.

3. " If any doubt ariſes at the trial, no debate to " be in the court, but the queſtion ſuſpended, to " be debated in this houſe.

4. " The members of the houſe of commons to " be there before the peers come.

5. " None but the peers to be covered at the " trial.

6. " Such peers, at the trial of the impeach- " ed lord, who at the inſtance of the ſaid lord, " or of the commons, ſhall be admited wit- " neſſes, are to ſworn at the clerk's table, " and the lord-keeper to adminiſter the oath, " and to deliver their evidence, in their own " places.

Will' III. An' 1701.

7. " Thoſe witneſſes who are commoners, are to " be ſworn at the bar, by the clerk, and are to " deliver their evidence there.

8. " The impeached lords may croſs-examine wit- " neſſes, viva voce."

The commons received, the ſame day, the lord Haverſham's anſwer to their charge; in which he juſtified the expreſſions he had made uſe of, in the late conference between the two houſes; and ſtill aſſerted, " that the commons had ſhewn them- " ſelves partial, and even unjuſt, in proceeding " againſt the impeached lords, while they ſuffered " the earl of Jerſey, mr. ſecretary Vernon, ſir " Joſeph Williamſon, ſir Edward Seymour, " ſir Stephen Fox, and mr. Pelham, who were " ingaged in the ſame tranſactions, to remain un- " moleſted."

Lord Haverſham's anſwer to the charge againſt him.

The commons, on the other hand, gave ſeveral reaſons why they could not appear, at the lord Sommers's trial, of which the following were the principal.

1. " That the lords had not agreed to a commit- " tee of both houſes, for ſettling the preliminaries.

2. " That they could never appear as proſecu- " tors, before their lordſhips, 'till they had given " them ſatisfaction, that lords impeached of the " ſame crimes ſhould not ſit as judges, on each " others trials, for thoſe crimes.

3. " Becauſe the commons had yet received no " reparation for the great indignity offered them, " at the free conference, by the lord Haverſham."

Reaſons given by the commons for not appearing at the trial.

This did not hinder the lords from proceeding to the trial of the lord Sommers, the 17th, in Weſtminſter-hall; or rather to the acquiting him; for the whole proceſs was this: they cauſed the articles againſt him, with his anſwer, to be read, and the commons not having replied, and conſequently no iſſue joined, they put the following queſtion: " that John lord Sommers, be acquited of the ar- " ticles of impeachment exhibited againſt him by " the houſe of commons, and of all things therein " contained; and that the ſaid impeachment be " diſmiſſed?" which was reſolved in the affirmative.

The lord Sommers acquited.

To juſtify their proceedings, the lords ſent, on the 20th, their anſwer to the reaſons given by the commons, why they could not appear, at the trial of the impeached lords, in which their lordſhips ſaid: " they acknowleged that the houſe of com- " mons have a right of impeaching: but that the " lords have an undoubted right of doing juſtice " upon ſuch impeachments, by bringing them to " a trial, and condemning or acquiting the parties, " in a reaſonable time: that there never was an in- " ſtance of a committee of both houſes yielded to " by the lords, in caſe of impeachment for high " crimes and miſdemeanors; and they ſhould make " no new precedent on this occaſion:" and, as to the pretence the commons made to delay the trials, on account of ſome expreſſions which fell from the lord Haverſham, their lordſhips anſwered; " they " had omited nothing that might give the commons

Anſwer of the lords to the reaſons given by the commons, &c.

(1) This his lordſhip afterwards explained in print, alleging; " that the lord Hallifax was impeached, for that he, being " a commiſſioner of the treaſury, aſſented to the paſſing of diverſe grants from the crown, for ſeveral lands in Ireland; and " yet ſir Edward Seymor, ſir Stephen Fox, and mr. Pelham, who being alſo lords-commiſſioners of the treaſury did " ſeverally aſſent to the paſſing of diverſe like grants, ſtood unimpeached.

(2) This his lordſhip, likewiſe, indeavored to juſtify, by urging " that the lords Portland, Sommers, Orford and Hallifax, " were impeached for adviſing the treaty of partition, yet the earl of Jerſey, who ſigned the partition in 1699, ſir Joſeph " Williamſon, who tranſacted and ſigned the firſt treaty of partition in 1698, and mr. ſecretary Vernon, who promoted the " latter, ſtood unimpeached: and that one of the articles againſt the earl of Orford, and the lord Sommers was for procuring " a commiſſion for captain Kidd, and likewiſe a grant of the ſhips and goods of certain perſons; and yet other lords, equally " concerned in procuring the ſaid commiſſion and grant ſtood, unimpeached.

(3) When they were upon withdrawing, the lord Steward ſaid, he hoped they would not think, that lord had any authority from the houſe of lords, to uſe any ſuch expreſſions towards the commons: which however, little availed to alleviate the reſentment the commons ſhewed on this occaſion.

" all

WILL' III. AN' 1701.

" all reaſonable ſatisfaction in that matter;" and obſerved farther, " that this buſineſs had no relation to the trial of the impeach'd lords, and, therefore, they could not imagine why the commons ſhould make ſatisfaction and reparation againſt the lord Haverſham, a neceſſary condition for going on with the trials."

The very ſame day, the commons, being now provoked to the higheſt degree, came to the following warm and remarkable reſolution:

Warm reſolution of the commons.

" That the lords had refuſed juſtice to the commons, upon the impeachment againſt the lord Sommers, by denying a commitee of both houſes to ſettle the preliminaries, and afterwards proceeding to a pretended trial of the ſaid lord, which could tend only to protect him from juſtice, by color of an illegal acquital: againſt which proceedings the commons did ſolemnly proteſt, as being repugnant to the rules of juſtice, and therefore null and void: that the houſe of lords, by the pretended trial of John, lord Sommers, had indeavored to over-turn the right of impeachments, lodged in the houſe of commons, by the ancient conſtitution of this kingdom, for the ſafety and protection of the commons againſt the power of great men, and had made an invaſion on the liberties of the ſubject, by laying a foundation of impunity, for the greateſt offender: that all the ill conſequences which might attend the delay of the ſupplies, given by the commons, for preſerving the public peace, and maintaining the balance of Europe, by ſupporting our allies againſt the power of France, were to be imputed to thoſe who, to procure an indemnity for their own enormous crimes, had uſed their utmoſt indeavors to make a breach between the two houſes.

A meſſage from the lords to the commons.

The ſame day, the lords ſent a meſſage to the commons, to acquaint them: " that the commons not appearing to maintain their articles againſt the lord Sommers, they had acquited him of the articles of impeachment, and diſmiſſed the ſame: and that they had appointed the next inſuing Monday, for the trial of the earl of Orford: that from the commons ſtill preſſing for a committee of both houſes, their lordſhips inferred, that they never deſigned to bring any of their impeachments to a trial: and as to the lord Haverſham, his anſwer was before the commons, and the lords reſolved to do juſtice in that matter."

The commons, on the other hand, to ſhew their reſolutions were immoveable, ordered, " that no member ſhould preſume to appear at the pretended trial of the earl of Orford, on pain of incuring the utmoſt diſpleaſure of the houſe."

Anſwer of the lords to the reſolution of the commons.

The 23d, the lords reſolved; " that the reſolutions of the commons, of the 20th, contained moſt unjuſt reflections on the honor and juſtice of the houſe of peers, and were contrived to cover their affected and unreaſonable delays in proſecuting the impeached lords, and did manifeſtly tend to the deſtruction of the judicature of the lords; to the rendering trials and impeachments impracticable for the future; to the ſubverting the conſtitution of the Engliſh government, and therefore, whatever ill conſequences might ariſe, from the ſo long defering the ſupplies of this year's ſervice, they were to be attributed to the fatal counſel of the puting off the meeting of a parliament ſo long, and to the unneceſſary delays of the houſe of commons."

The earl of Orford acquited.

The ſame day, the lords proceeded to acquit the earl of Orford, as they had done the lord Sommers and on the 24th of June, being the laſt day of the ſeſſion, they made the following order.

WILL' III. AN' 1701.

The earl of Portland, the lord Haverſham, and the ord Halliſax acquited.

" The houſe of commons not having preſented their charge which they brought up againſt John, lord Haverſham, for words ſpoken by him, at a free conference, the 13th inſtant, the ſaid charge is hereby diſmiſſed. The earl of Portland being impeached by the houſe of commons of high crimes and miſdemeanors, the firſt day of April laſt, the impeachment is hereby diſmiſſed, there being no articles exhibited againſt him. The houſe of commons having impeached Charles lord Halliſax, of high crimes and miſdemeanors on the 15th day of April laſt; and on the 14th day of this inſtant June, exhibited articles againſt him, to which he having anſwered, and there being farther proſecution the ſaid impeachment and articles are hereby diſmiſſed."

They diſmiſſed, at the ſame time, an impeachment which had been prefered by a former parliament againſt the duke of Leeds.

As I choſe to give an abſtract of the proceedings againſt the impeached lords in one connexion, I muſt now go back to take a view of ſome other tranſactions which happened during this ſeſſion of parliament, among which none made more noiſe, than the following petition or remonſtrance, which was preſented to the houſe.

The Kentiſh petition.

" We the gentlemen, juſtices of the peace, grand-jury, and other free-holders, at the general quarter-ſeſſions, at Maidſtone, in Kent, being deeply concerned at the dangerous ſtate of this kingdom, and of all Europe; and conſidering that the fate of us, and our poſterity, depends on the wiſdom of our repreſentatives in parliament, think ourſelves bound in duty humbly to lay before this honorable houſe, the conſequence, in this juncture, of your ſpeedy reſolutions, and moſt ſincere indeavors, to anſwer the great truſt repoſed in you, by your country. And in regard, from the experience of all ages, it is manifeſt, no nation can be great or happy, without union, we hope no pretenſe whatſoever ſhall be able to create a miſunderſtanding among ourſelves, or the leaſt diſtruſt of his Majeſty, whoſe great actions for this nation are written in the hearts of his ſubjects, and can never, without the blackeſt ingratitude be forgotten: we muſt humbly implore this honorable houſe to have regard to the voice of the people, that our religion and ſafety may be effectually provided for: that your loyal addreſſes may be turned into bills of ſupply, and that his moſt ſacred Majeſty (whoſe propitious and unblemiſhed reign over us, we pray God long to continue) may be inabled, powerfully to aſſiſt his allies before it be too late.

The petitioners impriſoned.

This petition was preſented to the houſe, the 3d of May, by David Polhill, William Colepepper, Thomas Coleppeper, Juſtinian Champney, and William Hamilton, eſqs(1); and being read, theſe gentlemen were called, when at the bar of the houſe, they owned the petition, and that they had ſigned it They were ordered thereupon to withdraw, and the houſe reſolved; " that the ſaid petition was " ſcandalous, inſolent, and ſeditious, tending to " deſtroy the conſtitutions of parliament, and to " ſubvert the eſtabliſhed government of this king-" dom:" upon which theſe five gentlemen were ordered into the cuſtody of the ſerjeant at arms attending that houſe: but he, ſoon after repreſenting that he was apprehenſive of a reſcue, from the mob, they were removed to a cloſer confinement in the Gate-houſe.

(1) This petition was ſubſcribed by twenty-two juſtices of the peace, and near 250 gentlemen.

Will'III. An' 1701.

A memorial called Legion ſent to the ſpeaker.

Some days after, a memorial was ſent to the ſpeaker of the houſe of commons (1), full of bitter invectives and menaces, and complaining, among other things; "of their voting the Kentiſh petition inſolent, becauſe the free-holders of England are ſuperior to the commons: of their impriſoning gentlemen who were none of their members, and who, at the command of the people, came to put them in mind of their duty; declaring that it was the undoubted right of the people of England, in caſe their repreſentatives in parliament did not proceed, according to their duty, and the people's intereſt, to inform them of their diſlike, diſown their actions, and direct them as they thought fit; of their proſecuting the crime of bribery in elections in ſome only, to ſerve a party: of their voting the treaty of partition fatal to Europe, becauſe it gave ſo much of the Spaniſh dominions to France, and not concerning themſelves to prevent their taking poſſeſſion of it all. Of their deſerting the Dutch when the French were at their doors, 'till it were almoſt too late to help them. Of addreſſing the King to diſplace his friends, upon bare ſurmiſes, before a legal trial, which was inverting the law, and making execution go before judgment: of their delaying proceedings upon capital impeachments, and ſo blaſting the reputation of the perſons, without proving the fact: of the breach of faith in neglecting to pay the nation's debts which were contracted on the ſecurity of their acts. And of their ſuffering ſaucy and indecent reproaches upon his Majeſty's perſon, to be publicly made in their houſe, without ſhewing ſuch reſentment as they ought to do." This memorial, which, tho' printed, no body durſt own, was intirely diſregarded, and taken no notice of by the commons.

Acts paſſed.

The King came to the houſe of peers, the 12th of June, and having ſent for the commons up, gave the royal aſſent; "1. To an act for the farther limitation of the crown, and better ſecuring the rights and liberties of the ſubjects. 2. An act for preventing the inconveniencies that might happen by privilege of parliament (2). 3. An act to continue the acts therein mentioned, for preventing theft and rapine, upon the Northern borders of England. 4. An act for appointing wardens and aſſay-maſters, for aſſaying wrought-plate in the cities of York, Exeter, Briſtol, Cheſter, and Norwich. 5. An act for continuing a former act, to prevent falſe and double returns of members to ſerve in parliament. 6. An act for the better ſettling and preſerving the library kept in the houſe at Weſtminſter, called Cotton-houſe, in the name and family of the Cotton's, for the benefit of the public." And to ſeveral other private acts.

This done, his Majeſty made the following ſpeech to both houſes:

The King's ſpeech to both houſes.

My lords and gentlemen,

"I return you my hearty thanks for the care you have taken to eſtabliſh the ſucceſſion of the crown in the Proteſtant line, and I muſt not loſe this occaſion of acquainting you, that I am likewiſe extreamly ſenſible of your repeated aſſurances of ſupporting me in ſuch alliances, as ſhall be moſt proper for the ſecurity of England and Holland. Your ready compliance with my deſires as to the ſuccors for the States-General, is alſo a very great ſatisfaction to me, as well as a great advantage to the common-cauſe; and as I have nothing ſo much at heart, as the preſervation of the liberties of Europe, and the honor and intereſt of England, ſo I make no doubt of maintaining thoſe great ends, by the bleſſing of God, and the continuance of your chearful concurrence.

My lords and gentlemen,

"The ſeaſon of the year makes it neceſſary to have a ſpeedy receſs, and the poſture of affairs abroad does abſolutely require my preſenſe, for the incouragement of the allies, and for the perfecting of ſuch alliances, as may be moſt effectual for the common intereſt, and therefore, I muſt recommend a diſpatch of the public buſineſs, eſpecially of thoſe matters that are of the greateſt importance."

Will' III. An' 1701.

Addreſs of the commons.

This ſpeech being read in the houſe of commons, they unanimouſly reſolved to preſent an addreſs to his Majeſty, importing: "that they did, with all imaginable chearfulneſs, return their moſt humble thanks to his Majeſty, for his moſt gracious ſpeech upon the throne, wherein he was pleaſed to expreſs his royal approbation of their proceedings: and they farther unanimouſly aſſured his Majeſty, that they would be ready, on all occaſions, to aſſiſt in ſupporting him in ſuch alliances as he ſhould think fit to make, in conjunction with the Emperor and States-General, for the preſervation of the liberties of Europe, the proſperity and peace of England, and for reducing the exorbitant power of France."

The King's anſwer.

To this addreſs, his Majeſty replied; "it would be a great incouragement to his allies to find the ſenſe of the kingdom ſo fully expreſſed on this occaſion, and would contribute moſt effectually to the obtaining the ends they had mentioned."

Differences about the bill for ſtating the public accounts.

As I have given a particular account of the affair of the impeached lords, I muſt not wholly paſs by another tranſaction, which likewiſe occaſioned a difference between the two houſes. The commons having paſſed a bill for appointing commiſſioners to take, ſtate and examine the public accounts, and the lords having made ſome amendments to it, the former would, by no means, allow of them, and drew up reaſons to be offered to their lordſhips, for their diſagreement, importing:

"That the firſt amendment of the lords would prevent the accounting for many millions of mony given for the uſe of the public: that by the ſecond mr. Parkhurſt and mr. Paſchal, commiſſioners of prizes, were exempted from giving an account of the great ſums of mony ariſing therefrom: that they could not agree to a clauſe ſent down by the lords, whereby the commiſſioners were directed to allow a pretended debt to colonel Baldwin Leighton, becauſe the diſpoſition of mony ever belonged to the commons as well as granting it: that they would not allow of the fourth amendment, becauſe mr. Whitacre, ſolliciter to the admiralty, mentioned in the rider, having received 25,000 l. and upwards, of the public mony, unaccounted for, was left out by their lordſhips: and laſtly, that by ſuch amendments of their lordſhips, the ſupplies provided by the commons, for paying the arrears due to

(1) This memorial (as it was intitled) from the gentlemen, freeholders, and inhabitants of the county of ——— in behalf of themſelves and many thouſands of the good people of England, was ſigned, Legion, and incloſed in a letter wherein they charged and commanded the ſpeaker, in the name of 200,000 Engliſh men, to deliver it to the houſe.

(2) This bill indeared both houſes very much to the people, and went near to attone for the late remiſſneſs of the commons, in ſuccoring the Dutch, and other important affairs. The exemptions of their perſons, eſtates and ſervants, from arreſts, executions and ſuits, was a privilege that had belonged to them above 100 years, indiſputably: but it having been the misfortune of latter times, to ſee men crowd, by indirect means, into the lower houſe, to protect themſelves from the payment of juſt debts, and ſome of them to make ſale of other men's properties to redeem their own fortune, this parliament took off that privilege, ſo far as was conſiſtent with the buſineſs of the nation. Hiſt. of King William III. Vol. 3. p. 488.

the

WILL' III. AN' 1701.

" the army, muſt of neceſſity be ineffectual, 'till " another ſeſſion of parliament.

The King found there would be no other m ns to interrupt theſe fatal diſputes, between both houſes, than to put an end to this ſeſſion of parliament: therefore, all other bills being now ready, his Majeſty went to the houſe of peers, and ſending for the commons, the ſpeaker, on preſenting the mony-bills, made the following ſpeech:

Sir,

The ſpeaker's ſpeech to his Majeſty.

" It is with great joy and ſatisfaction, that I attend your Majeſty at this time, ſince your commons have complied with all your Majeſty was pleaſed to deſire at their meeting. They have paſſed the bill of ſucceſſion, which has ſettled the crown in a Proteſtant line, and continued the liberty of England, which your Majeſty has ſettled and preſerved: they have paſſed a bill for taking away thoſe privileges, which might have proved burthenſome, and oppreſſive to your ſubjects: they have given your Majeſty thoſe ſupplies, which are more than ever were given in a time of peace, to inable your Majeſty, when you are abroad, to ſupport your allies, procure either a laſting peace, or to preſerve the liberties of Europe by a neceſſary war."

Acts paſſed.

His Majeſty then gave his royal aſſent to the following acts, viz. 1. " An act for granting to his " Majeſty an aid for defraying the expenſe of his " navy, guards and gariſons, for one year, and " for other neceſſary occaſions. 2. An act for " granting to his Majeſty ſeveral duties upon low " wines, or ſpirits of the firſt extraction, and continuing ſeveral additional duties upon coffee, tea, " chocolate, ſpices and pictures, and certain impoſitions upon hawkers, pedlers, and petty chapmen; and the duty of 15 per cent. upon muſlins; " and for improving the duties upon jappaned and " lacquered goods; and for continuing the coinage-" duties, for the ſeveral terms and purpoſes therein " mentioned. 3. An act for appropriating 3,700 l. " weekly, out of certain branches of exciſe, for " public uſes, and for making a proviſion for the " ſervice of his Majeſty's houſhold, and family, " and other his neceſſary occaſions;" and to ſeveral other private acts.

Theſe bills being paſſed, his Majeſty was pleaſed to deliver himſelf to both houſes, in the following ſpeech:

My lords and gentlemen,

The King's ſpeech to both houſes.

" The ſeſſion being now come to a concluſion, I " muſt return you my hearty thanks, for the great " zeal you have expreſſed for the public ſervice; " and your ready compliance with thoſe things " which I recommended to you, at the opening of " the ſeſſion; and I muſt thank you gentlemen of " the houſe of commons in particular, both for " your diſpatches of thoſe neceſſary ſupplies you " have granted for the public occaſions, and for " the incouragement you have given me to enter " into alliances, for the preſervation of the peace of " Europe, and the ſupport of the confederacy; " in which, as it ſhall be my care not to put the " nation to any unneceſſary expenſe, ſo I make no " doubt, that whatſoever ſhall be done, during " your receſs, for the advantage of the common " cauſe, in this matter, will have your approba-" tion, at your meeting again in winter."

Preferments.

Towards the latter end of March, the King appointed the earl of Pembroke, lord preſident of the council, to be firſt commiſſioner of the admiralty, in the room of the earl of Bridgwater deceaſed. At the ſame time, mr. Henry Boyle, chancellor of the exchequer, was admited into the privy-council, and mr. Thomas Pelham was made one of the commiſſioners of the treaſury. The 26th of April, the King appointed ſir George Rooke, to be admiral and commander in chief of his fleet, this ſummer. The 1ſt of June, the King declared the earl of Marlborough, general of the foot, and commander in chief of his Majeſty's forces in Holland. The 18th, his Highneſs, the elector of Hannover, and the duke of Queenſborough, were elected knights of the Garter. The 19th, the earl of Lindſey, lord great chamberlain of England, and the earl of Carliſle, earl-marſhal of England (during the minority of the duke of Norfolk, hereditary earl-marſhal) were both ſworn members of the privy-council. The 28th, his Majeſty appointed the archbiſhop of Canterbury, the keeper of the great ſeal of England, the lord preſident of the council, the dukes of Devonſhire and Sommerſet, the earl of Jerſey, lord chamberlain, and the lord Godolphin, firſt commiſſioner of the treaſury, to be lords-juſtices of England, for the adminiſtration of the government, during his abſenſe. The ſame day the duke of Sommerſet was ſworn of his Majeſty's privy-council, and the earl of Marlborough, beſide his other imployments, had the character of his Majeſty's embaſſador extraordinary and plenipotentiary in Holland, confered on him. Edward Southwell, Chriſtopher Muſgrave, and James Vernon, junior, eſqs, were conſtituted commiſſioners to execute the office of keeper of the privy ſeal, vacant by the death of the earl of Tankerville. Sir Thomas Trevor, the attorney-general, was made lord chief-juſtice of the common-pleas, in the room of ſir George Treby, deceaſed: and Edward Northey, eſq; appointed to be attorny-general. The ſame day, the lord-mayor and court of aldermen of London, waited on the King at Hampton-court, and, in a moſt humble manner, took leave of his Majeſty. The 1ſt of July, the King imbarked at Margate for Holland, and happily landed there the 14th of July, N. S. He received the next morning, the compliments of all the forein miniſters at the Hague, of the ſeveral courts of juſtice, &c. and then going to the aſſembly of the States General, he told that illuſtrious aſſembly:

The King goes to Holland.

His ſpeech to the aſſembly of the States-General.

" That he always came into that country with " joy; but eſpecially in this dangerous conjuncture, " becauſe he foreſaw his preſenſe would be neceſſary " for the ſervice of the ſtate: he hoped to have " paſſed the reſt of his days in repoſe and peace, " and left that ſtate in a quiet flouriſhing condition: " but there had happened ſuch great alterations " in the affairs of Europe, that they knew not what " the Divine Providence would determine concern-" ing them. However, he could aſſure their " High-mightineſſes, that whether things were ac-" commodated amicably, or whether they ſhould " be obliged to take up arms, he perſiſted in the ſame " zeal he ever had for their ſervice and proſperity. " He was overjoyed to find things ſtill quiet, which, " next to the bleſſing of GOD, was to be aſcribed " to their reſolution of puting themſelves in a poſture " of defenſe, and he was perſuaded their confede-" rates would contribute vigorouſly towards it: he " would aſſure them the whole Engliſh nation were " ready to aſſiſt the State, and ſtrongly to contri-" bute towards their defenſe, and to whatever " might tend to the common ſecurity. This was " what their High mightineſſes might depend on; " and he hoped GOD would ſo far bleſs their indea-" vors, that they ſhould attain their ends, either by " a negociation or by force of arms.

Anſwer of the States.

In anſwer to this ſpeech, the preſident of the aſſembly told his Majeſty; " that they could not " omit thanking him for his aſſurances, not only " in his own name, but in the name of the Engliſh " nation, in favor of themſelves, and of the com-" mon cauſe; well knowing how much they might " rely upon a people, whoſe courage had gained " ſo much reputation in the world; and were always

Will' III. An' 1701.

" always of opinion, that their intereſts were inſe-
" parable from thoſe of England.

His Majeſty began now viſibly to decline in his health, however, as much as the ſtate of it would allow, he imployed his hours for the public good: to this end, he in perſon reviewed the frontier-gariſons of Holland; and having viſited Bergen-op-zoom, Sluis, Fort-Philippina, and ſeveral other places, he returned to the Hague. The French embaſſador, monſ. d'Avaux, had, in the mean time, deliver'd a letter from the French King to the States, to notify his being recall'd. This letter was accompanied by a memorial, in which he alledged: " That he was in hopes their lordſhips
" would have had that confidence in his maſter's
" affection and deſires of peace, as would have
" diſſipated thoſe vain fears, which the advance-
" ment of his grandſon to the throne of Spain, had
" infuſed into them; and this hope was confirm'd
" by their acknowledging that King, and congra-
" tulating his acceſſion, till the propoſals made by " their High-mightineſſes, and the King of Eng-
" land's envoy, gave occaſion to judge, that war,
" rather than peace, would be the fruit of that
" ſtrict union, which the conformity of the pro-
" poſals diſcover'd there was between that Prince,
" and their High-mightineſſes. That if he had " oppoſed, for ſome time, the admiſſion of the " King of England's envoy into the conferences,
" it was out of his ſincere deſire to remove all
" obſtacles, which the enemies to peace were
" continually laying in the way: that his maſter
" did not believe their lordſhips would eaſily
" have inſiſted upon the pretended ſatisfaction
" to be given to the Emperor, confounding the " intereſt of other Princes, with their own, and " ſeting themſelves up for arbitrators, between " the houſes of France and Auſtria. That the " treaties between their lordſhips and the King of " England were too ſtrict, and had too well made
" known their blind ſubmiſſion to the ſentiments
" of that Monarch; and no doubt but after the " Engliſh envoy had declared, that his maſter
" would never depart from the intereſt of the " Emperor, their lordſhips had already taken a
" reſolution, to make the ſame declaration, to the " moſt Chriſtian King's embaſſador: concluding,
" that his Majeſty had taken up arms in the de-
" fenſe of his grandſon only; and if it had been " his deſign to make new conqueſts, he might have " done it when his forces, upon the frontiers of " their republic, afforded him the means to have " made an advantage of their weakneſs: and
" wiſh'd that their lordſhips, convinced of the " ſincerity of his Majeſty's intentions, would, in " time, take ſuch reſolutions, as might be agree-
" able to their true intereſts ".

Monſ. d'Avaux memorial to the States.

The ſubſtance of the anſwer of the States, to this memorial, was a follows:

The anſwer of the States.

" That they could not comprehend, how they " ſhould obſtruct the conferences, either by the " intervention of the King of Britain, who was " one of the parties concern'd in the treaty of par" tition, or of any other Potentate, who had any
" intereſt in preſerving the general peace: that they
" had given a convincing proof of their deſiring
" peace by acknowledging the new King of Spain:
" but that they had not thereby owned the juſtice
" or injuſtice of a third party, nor ſeparated their
" intereſt from any that were concerned in the " general peace; and therefore, the delays and diffi" culties raiſed, about admiting the Engliſh envoy,
" were not chargeable upon them, but upon the " count d'Avaux. That the French King had " reaſon to think they would inſiſt on ſatisfaction
" to the Emperor, ſince that was the firſt of their
" propoſals, which he himſelf thought juſt and
" neceſſary. That they did not ſet up as umpires
" between France and the houſe of Auſtria; but
" deſired his Majeſty to remember, that he him-
" ſelf, as well as the King of Great-Britain, and the " States, thought a war would be unavoidable, if,
" upon the death of the late King of Spain, either
" he, or the Emperor, ſhould inſiſt upon the pre-
" tenſions of their families to the ſucceſſion, and it
" was, therefore, they entered into the treaty of " partition. That their owning the King of Spain
" did not hinder giving a reaſonable ſatisfaction to
" the Emperor. That they had done nothing, which " could be conſtrued a breach of the treaty, which " confirmed and ſealed their ſovereignty. That " their provinces were always free and ſovereign;
" and as their anceſtors ſpent their lives and fortunes
" to aſſert their freedom, ſo they were reſolved
" to do the like. That the States did not blindly
" follow the King of Great Britain's ſentiments, but " had a great deference, for his advice, becauſe
" they were perſuaded he was inclined to preſerve
" the peace, and convinced he ſought nothing but " the welfare of their republic. That if the con" ferences were ſuſpended, upon that account, they
" ſhould be ſorry for it; but if the French King
" had thought fit to let them continue, and to allow " ſatisfaction to the Emperor, they had hopes of " a good concluſion. Laſtly, they alledged the " reaſons they had to arm, from the jealouſy given " them by France and Spain; and concluded, that " if, contrary to their inclinations, they muſt enter " into a war, they had no cauſe to blame themſelves
" for it, and, therefore, hop'd that God would " protect them ".

Will' III. An' 1701.

By this anſwer, the French King might plainly ſee the confederates would not be contented with leſs than his yielding part of the Spaniſh territories, at leaſt, to the Emperor, and granting a barrier to the Dutch; and it is highly probable, tho' Lewis XIV did not think fit to declare himſelf yet, he was determined to hazard a war, rather than do either.

During theſe tranſactions, Prince Eugene of Savoy, at the head of 40,000 Imperialiſts paſs'd the Alps, and penetrated into Italy, in order to recover the Milaneſe, from the French, the Emperor laying claim to it, as a fief of the Empire: and it is not to be doubted, but King William, and the States had promiſed his Imperial Majeſty to ſupport his pretenſions. The brave Prince Eugene had the good fortune to make himſelf maſter of Caſtiglione, in the month of Auguſt; and, the 1ſt of November, he gained an advantage of the French at Cherry: after which, continuing in the field 'till near Chriſtmas, he recover'd almoſt all the Mantuan, from the enemy.

Prince Eugene penetrates into Italy.

Another war was carrying on, at the ſame time, in the north, which, tho' it did not ſo nearly affect us, deſerves our notice here, becauſe I ſhall have occaſion to mention it hereafter. A confederacy had been formed by the Kings of Denmark and Poland, the Czar of Muſcovy, the Elector of Brandenburg, and ſome other Princes of Germany, againſt Charles XII, King of Sweden, then not above 18 years of age. This young hero had (as I have already related) by the aſſiſtance of the Engliſh and Dutch fleet, compel'd the Danes to ſue for peace, and to deſert their allies. After this, he tranſported his troops into Livonia, to relieve Riga, which was inveſted by the Poles, and raiſed the ſiege. He then march'd his army to Narva, which was beſieged by above 80,000 Ruſſians, whom he intirely defeated, with about a tenth part of the number, and in a ſhort time cleared that province both of the Poles and Muſcovites: but to return to our own affairs.

A war in the north.

The conferences at the Hague being intirely broke off, the States continued to augment their troops;

WILL' III. troops; as the French did, on their ſide, in forti-
AN' 1701. fying their lines, from the Scheld, near Antwerp, to the Maeſe, and from Antwerp to Oſtend: and thus I ſhall leave both parties preparing for a war, to give a brief account of what was doing, in the mean time, at ſea.

Maritime affairs.

Tho' it was not believed, at the begining of this year, that a war with France would ſo immediately break out; yet there was a ſuſpicion, that the French had a deſign, to cover a tranſport, ſome time in March, with a ſquadron from Dunkirk, and that they would land forces in this kingdom; orders were, therefore, ſent to rear-admiral Bembow, who commanded in the Downs, to uſe his utmoſt diligence, to fruſtrate any ſuch deſign; and, in the month of February, the flag-officers were diſpatched to the ſeveral ports, to haſten out the ſhips, and to ſend them to the rendezvous in the Downs. But, if the French really had any ſuch intention, they did not think it convenient, at this time, to put it in execution.

Sir Cloudeſly Shovel arrived, at Spithead, the fifteenth of April, with ſix and forty Engliſh and ten Dutch ſhips, including ſmall frigats and fire-ſhips, from whence there were ſquadrons ſent to Ireland, for conducting troops from thence to Holland, and cruiſers into the Soundings, and elſewhere, for ſecurity of the trade, while others were imployed for intelligence: for the French, accoring to the beſt advices, were making all imaginable diſpatch in fiting out, and maning their ſhips, at Breſt, and the ports in that bay.

Sir George Rooke, admiral of the fleet, went on board the Triumph, in the Downs, the ſecond of July (at which time his Majeſty was convoyed to Holland by vice admiral Hopſon) and arriving at Spithead, the fourth, received directions to follow the King's orders. A few days after, he was joined by rear-admiral Mundy, with two third-rates, ſix fourth-rates, and one fifth-rate; and then he formed his line of battle.

This line of battle conſiſted of two ſhips of ninety guns, ſix of eighty, thirteen of ſeventy, eleven of ſixty, and ſixteen of fifty, together eight and forty, beſide ſmall frigats, fire-ſhips, bomb-veſſels, &c. Engliſh: and of the Dutch, one ſhip of ninety-two, one of ninety, two of ſeventy-two, four of ſixty-four, one of fifty-two, and ſix of fifty guns, together fifteen, beſide frigats, and other ſmall craft. The Engliſh flag-officers were, the admiral himſelf; ſir Cloudeſly Shovel, admiral of the blue; ſir Thomas Hopſon, vice-admiral of the red; John Bembow, eſq; vice-admiral of the blue, and ſir John Mundy, rear-admiral of the red. The Dutch flag-officers were, lieutenant-admiral Allemonde, vice-admiral Vandergoes, and rear-admiral Waſſenaer.

For want of proviſions and other neceſſaries, the fleet was detained at St. Helens, 'till the middle of Auguſt, when the admiral ſailed, and got his paſſage to Torbay, where he was forced to anchor, the twenty-firſt. Some days after, he ſailed again; but he was no ſooner got clear of the land, than a ſtorm, in which his ſhips got ſome damage in their top-maſts and ſails, obliged him to return to Torbay.

The admiral weigh'd again the twenty-ninth, and reached off of the Fourn-head, near the Iſle of Uſhant, the firſt of September, where he cruiſed, till near the middle of that month, and then, leaving that ſtation, he beat ſeveral days, between the Start and Plymouth, and arrived at St. Helens the twentieth, where he received orders to come with the great ſhips to the Downs, the Dutch being already got to Spithead. WILL' III. AN' 1701.

While the admiral was on his ſtation, he received orders from the lords-juſtices of the kingdom, in the King's abſenſe, to detach ſix third-rates, nine fourth-rates, one fifth-rate, one ſixth-rate, two fire-ſhips, a ſtore-ſhip, and an hoſpital, of the Engliſh, under the command of ſir John Mundy, and ten Dutch ſhips, beſide fire-ſhips and ſmall frigats, commanded by baron Waſſenaer, to ſee the ſquadron bound to the Weſt-Indies well into ſea; which was done accordingly.

Tho' nothing was attempted by the confederate fleet, this ſummer, yet its being at ſea was of great ſervice, as it ſtruck amazement and terror into moſt of our neighbors. Even the Portugueſe, tho' yet in friendſhip with England, were not altogether free from apprehenſions, having reaſon to dread King William's reſentment, for the alliance they had lately made with France and Spain; the latter of which kingdoms, being unarmed, and the coaſts unguarded, might juſtly fear an attempt from our fleet, which they had refuſed the uſe of their harbors, when inſiſted upon, by the Dutch, before they ſet ſail. But matters were not yet ſo ripe; and all the motions of this fleet was but a politic amuſement, to detach a ſtrong ſquadron, without giving any previous ſuſpicion, to the Weſt-Indies: of the ſucceſs of which, I ſhall give an account in the inſuing reign.

Preparations for war.

We left the confederates and the French both imployed in their preparations, as well to ſuſtain, as to begin a war. The fortifications of Nimeguen, which, by the acquiſitions of the French, was now become a frontier town, were carried on with great diligence, and King William went himſelf to view them, as well as to muſter a body of troops that were drawn up on the Mocker-Hyde, near that place. Freſh recruits were daily ſent over from England, and got together from other parts: and to omit nothing that might tend to the ſecurity of the United-provinces, which ſeemed to be in the moſt immediate danger, his Majeſty indeavored to bring over the Elector of Cologne, to the intereſt of the Empire, England and Holland. The earl of Galway was imployed in this important negociation: but tho' he was ſupported by the chapter, he was not able to ſhake that Prince's reſolution, who, at the inſtigation of his brother, the Elector of Bavaria, was already entered into ingagements with France. The war ſeemed now only to be defer'd, 'till each ſide could form their alliances; but it might not probably have broke out ſo ſoon, had not an accident happen'd, which brought matters to a criſis, I mean the death of King James II, who, being ſeized with a vomiting of blood, departed this life, at St. Germains, on the 6th of September, O.S. (1)

Death of K. James II.

Lewis XIV proclaims the Pretender.

The French King took hereupon the impolitic ſtep (as it was generally thought to be, at that time) to declare the young pretended Prince of Wales to be King of England, Scotland and Ireland; by which he drew upon himſelf immediately, that ſwarm of enemies, which, ſoon after, compos'd the grand alliance, and which he ſhould rather have indeavor'd to keep at bay, 'till the duke d'Anjou was fix'd more firmly on the throne of Spain (2).

(1) His corpſe was carried to Paris, and depoſited in the church of the Engliſh Benedictines, in the ſuburbs of St. James's; where he yet lies not intered, but in a hearſe, together with the body of a Princeſs, which his Queen bore him, after his abdication, but who died before him: and were probably not buried, in hopes ſome favorable opportunity might offer for tranſporting them to England.

(2) This proclamation was performed by order of the court of France. Biſhop Burnet ſays, that the earl of Mancheſter told him, the Prince of Wales's own court was going about it: but a difficulty, propoſed by the earl of Middleton, put a ſtop to it: he apprehended, that it would look very ſtrange, and might provoke the court of France, if, among his titles, he ſhould be called King of France, and might diſguſt their party in England, if it was omited; ſo that piece of ceremony was not performed.

WILL' III. AN' 1701.

It was ſuppoſed, that Lewis XIV had ſolemnly promiſed King James, during King William's laſt indiſpoſition, that in caſe the latter died, he would revive his abſolute title: but King James happening to dy firſt, he reſolved to fulfill, in the ſon, the promiſe he had made to the father, that at leaſt, he might thereby keep up the Jacobite party in England. His moſt Chriſtian Majeſty communicated his intentions to his great council, which conſiſted of twenty-three perſons, of whom all but ſeven were againſt this ſtep; alleging, that a Prince of ſuch ſpirit and intereſt, as King William, could not but highly reſent it, as the Engliſh nation infallibly would, eſpecially at this juncture, when they had juſt ſettled the ſucceſſion in a Proteſtant line. The Dauphin, being the laſt who was to ſpeak, roſe up with ſome warmth, and ſaid, "it would be unworthy the crown of France to abandon a Prince of their own blood, and one who was ſo dear to them, as the ſon of King James: that for his part, he was reſolved not only to hazard his life, but all that was dear to him, for his reſtoration:" the King, and all the Princes of the blood, were of the ſame opinion with the Dauphin, whereupon he was publicly proclaimed, as I have ſaid above (1).

The Dauphin's ſpeech on this occaſion.

This haſty and unexpected proceeding of France was ſo reſented by King William, that he immediately ſent an expreſs to the lord Manchester, his embaſſador in France, to come directly away, without taking his leave (2); and his lordſhip, having received theſe orders, ſent the following letter to mr. de Torcy, ſecretary of ſtate for forein affairs.

The Engliſh embaſſador in France recalled.

My lord,

"The King my maſter, being informed, that his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty has acknowleged another King of Great-Britain, thinks that his glory and honor permits him no more to have an embaſſador near the King, your maſter, and has ſent me orders to depart immediately; whereof I do myſelf the honor to acquaint you, by this letter; and withall to aſſure you that I am, &c."

His letter to mr. de Torcy.

The French King, who was then at Fontainbleau, tho' he could reaſonably expect no other proceeding on King William's ſide, ſeemed ſurprized at this ſudden reſolution; he aſſembled his council, and was two or three days deliberating, before M. de Torcy ſent the embaſſador any anſwer; but then he received the following:

My lord,

"I have nothing more to add, to what I had the honor to tell you, eight days ago, of the ſincere deſire the King has always had, to preſerve, with the King your maſter, the peace confirmed by the treaty of Ryſwick. I pray you only, as to me in particular, to be perſuaded, that in what place ſoever you be, you will have none that ſhall be with more ſincerity, than I ſhall be, all my life time, &c."(3)

Mr. de Torcy's anſwer.

The lord Manchester having, hereupon, obtained his paſs-ports, made haſte to leave that intriguing court, and, before the twenty-third of September, notice was given, by his Majeſty's command, to monſ. Pouſſin, the French ſecretary here, that he ſhould immediately leave the kingdom. Much about the ſame time, that this beggarly Frenchman (as the author of the compleat hiſtory of Europe calls him) departed, there was a ſcandalous paper printed, as it was ſuppoſed, by his orders, intitled, the French King's reaſons for owning the pretended Prince of Wales, for King of England (4).

WILL' III. AN' 1701.

The French ſecretary ordered to depart England.

The nation, in the mean time, was highly inraged at this indignity offered by France, and ſhewed their reſentment, in the numerous addreſſes directed, on this occaſion, to the throne, from all parts of the kingdom, full of expreſſions of loyalty and affection.

The indignity offered by France reſented by the nation.

That from the city of London, which ſet the firſt example, may ſerve as a ſpecimen of the reſt, and was as follows:

Great Sir,

"We are deeply ſenſible, how much we are in duty bound, highly to reſent that great indignity and affront, offered to your moſt ſacred Majeſty, by the French King, in giving the title of King of England, Scotland and Ireland, to the pretended Prince of Wales, contrary to your Majeſty's moſt juſt and lawful title, and to the ſeveral acts of parliament for ſettling the ſucceſſion to the crown in the Proteſtant line.

Addreſs of the city of London.

"By this it is apparent, he deſigns, as much as in him in lies, to dethrone your Majeſty, to extirpate the Proteſtant religion out of theſe your Majeſty's kingdoms, and to invade our liberties and properties; for the maintaining whereof, your Majeſty hath ſignalized your zeal, by the often hazarding your precious life.

"We, therefore, your Majeſty's moſt loyal ſubjects, do ſincerely, unanimouſly and chearfully, aſſure your Majeſty, that we will, at at all times, and upon all occaſions, exert the utmoſt of our abilities, and contribute whatever lies in our power for the preſervation of your perſon (which GOD long preſerve) and the defenſe of your juſt rights, in oppoſition to all invaders of your crown and dignity."

This addreſs having been tranſmited to the King to Holland, his Majeſty gave ſpecial directions to the lords-juſtices, to acquaint his loyal city of London, with the great ſatisfaction he had upon receiving it.

The King all this while, beſtowed his application to perfect the alliances he was negociating abroad, and particularly that between the Emperor, England and Holland, which was concluded in September. This treaty was framed in the nature of propoſals upon which France might come in, and accordingly the ſame were communicated to the Spaniſh embaſſador.

Treaty between the Emperor, England and Holland.

(1) The author of the continuation of Rapin, in French, ſays, King James's Queen got Madame de Maintenon on her ſide, and that ſhe prevailed upon the King and the Dauphin to take theſe ſteps; and the ſame author, under the pretext of fairly ſtating the arguments, which have been made uſe of to juſtify the French King's conduct, plainly ſhews his partiality and attachment to that Monarch and his intereſt.

(2) His Majeſty, likewiſe, immediately diſpatched a meſſenger to the King of Sweden, as guarantee of the treaty of Ryſwick, to give him an account of this manifeſt violation of that treaty.

(3) By this evaſive anſwer, it is plain, the French King was ſenſible his proceeding would not bear a diſcuſſion: but his mentioning the peace of Ryſwick, and his maſter's inclination to preſerve the peace confirmed by it, is a maſter-piece of aſſurance; for could any thing be more contrary to his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty's ſolemn ingagements, at that treaty, than his quickly after promiſing the late King James, on his death-bed, never to abandon the Pretender; but always to acknowlege and entertain him, as a King of England, and declaring, that he hoped to ſee him treated, after the ſame manner, by the whole world.

(4) Beſide the publiſhing of theſe reaſons, which were ſuppreſſed by order of the government, monſ. Pouſſin made himſelf talked of, beyond the ſmallneſs of his character, by being found at ſupper, in a public tavern, with three parliament-men, who were known to be no friends to the court: but whether this was a ſet appointment, to diſcourſe on matters of ſtate, or meerly as a common civility, which mr. Tredenham, one of thoſe members, ſhewed to monſ. Pouſſin on account of the familiarity they had contracted, by lodging in one houſe, I ſhall leave undetermined. Be this as it will, the court gave this meeting a very ſiniſter interpretation; and many of the country-party, were thereupon branded by the name of Pouſſineers, in a paper called the Black Liſt.

But

WILL' III. AN' 1701.

But as this treaty, uſually called the grand alliance, becauſe ſeveral other Princes afterwards acceeded to it, was the baſis of the long and bloody war which ſoon after inſued, the reader may probably be deſirous of knowing the tenor of it, which was as follows:

Articles of the grand alliance.

I. "That there ſhall be a ſtrict alliance between "the Emperor, the King of England, and the "States-General.

II. "That as for ſettling the peace and tranquility of Europe, which is their chief aim, they "have thought nothing could conduce more thereunto than to procure ſatisfaction to the Emperor, "for his pretenſions upon Spain, and ſecurity for "England and Holland, for their dominions and "commerce.

III. "That they ſhall imploy their good offices, "for two months together, after the ratification, "in order to obtain that end, in an amicable "way.

IV. "That if they cannot ſucceed therein, "they ſhall aſſiſt each other, with all their forces.

V. "That they ſhall indeavor to conquer the "Spaniſh Netherlands, that they may ſerve as a "barrier, for the ſecuring the States-General; to "conquer the duchy of Milan, as a fief of the "Empire, the kingdom of Naples and Sicily, "and the iſlands and places on the coaſt of Tuſcany, which may be advantageous to the navigation and trade of the Engliſh and Dutch.

VI. "That for the better ſecurity of the navigation of the Engliſh and Dutch, it ſhall be lawful "for them to attack and poſſeſs the countries and "towns belonging to Spain in the Indies; and that "they ſhall keep for themſelves the countries and "towns conquered by them.

VII. "That if they are neceſſitated to enter "into a war, they ſhall ſincerely communicate "to each other every thing relating to their intereſts.

VIII. "That none of the parties ſhall make "peace without the conſent of the other, and be"fore they have obtained a convenient ſatisfaction "for the Emperor, and a ſecurity for the dominions "and trade of the Engliſh and Dutch, and pro"cured that the crowns of France and Spain be never "re-united, under the ſame Prince; and in parti"cular, that the French be never maſters of the "Indies ſubmited to Spain, or that they be per"mited to trade into that country, directly or "indirectly; nor before they have obtained, for "the Engliſh and Dutch, thoſe rights, privile"leges and franchiſes for their trade in Spain and the "Mediterranean, which they injoyed under King "Charles II, by virtue of treaties, cuſtoms, or any "other title whatſoever.

IX. "They ſhall agree, at the ſame time, that "the peace ſhall be treated of on the means for ſe"curing the commerce of both nations, and the "barrier.

X. "They ſhall agree about the differences that "may relate to the exerciſe of religion, in the "countries they hope to conquer.

XI. "If the moſt Chriſtian King attacks any of "them, by reaſon of this treaty, they ſhall aſſiſt "each other, with all their forces.

XII. "The defenſive alliance ſhall ſubſiſt be"tween the ſaid parties, after the concluſion of the "peace, for the guarantee of the treaty.

XIII. "All Princes and States, who ſhall be "willing to come into this alliance, ſhall be ad"mited; and the States of the Empire ſhall be "particularly invited to come into the ſame, as "being concerned in the recovery of the Impe"rial fiefs.

XIV. "This treaty, which was ſigned the "7th of December, ſhall be ratified within ſeven "weeks after.

The court of France was, in the mean time, ſo very far from having any thoughts of making advances towards an accommodation, that they prohibited all ſorts of goods and merchandizes of the growth and manufacture of England, Scotland and Ireland, except ſome upon which they laid ſuch exceſſive duties, as were almoſt equal to a prohibition.

France prohibits the manufactures of England.

King William having been detained in Holland, partly by the ill ſtate of his health, and in part by contrary winds, imbarked, at length, the begining of November, landed the 4th of that month, at Margate, and came, the next day, to Kenſington, in a very declining condition (1). Two days after the King's arrival, the parliament was prorogued to the 13th of November: but the 11th of that month, a proclamation was iſſued out for diſſolving it, and ſummoning another, to meet at Weſtminſter, the 30th of December (2). Never were elections attended with more heats and animoſities, than at this time, and in ſeveral places, particularly in the city of London and the borough of Southwark, after they were over, the electors thought fit to give their repreſentatives inſtructions for their conduct, in the inſuing ſeſſion, which run chiefly, that they ſhould vigorouſly aſſiſt his Majeſty, in maintaining his title to the crown, to make good his alliances, and reduce the power of France, recommending, above all things, an union between the two houſes.

The King returns to England.

A new parliament called:

The parliament meeting, according to the writs of ſummons, the 30th of December, the commons were directed to chuſe a ſpeaker. The candidates were Robert Harley, eſq; and ſir Thomas Littleton, the firſt of whom carried it, 216 votes againſt 212. He was preſented and approved, the next day, when his Majeſty addreſſed himſelf to both houſes, in the following memorable words;

And meets.

My lords and gentlemen,

"I promiſe myſelf you are met together, full of "that juſt ſenſe of the common danger of Europe, and "the reſentment of the late proceedings of the "French King, which has been ſo fully and univerſally expreſſed in the loyal and ſeaſonable addreſſes of my people.

The King's ſpeech to both houſes.

"The owning and ſeting up of the pretended "Prince of Wales, for King of England, is not "only the higheſt indignity offered to me, and the "nation, but does ſo nearly concern every man, "who has a regard for the Proteſtant religion, or "the preſent and future quiet and happineſs of his "country, that I need not preſs you to lay that ſeriouſly to heart, and to conſider what farther "effectual means may be uſed, for ſecuring the "ſucceſſion of the crown, in the Proteſtant line, "and extinguiſhing the hopes of all pretenders, "and their open and ſecret abettors.

"By the French King's placing his grandſon on "the throne of Spain, he is in a condition to oppreſs "the reſt of Europe, unleſs ſpeedy and effectual "meaſures be taken. Under this pretenſe, he is be-

(1) He is ſaid to have told the earl of Portland, not long after his arrival in England, "he found himſelf ſo weak, that he "did not expect to live another ſummer:" but, at the ſame time, charged his lordſhip, "to take no notice of what he had ſaid, 'till "he was dead."

(2) The reaſon alleged for this ſtep was, "that his Majeſty might have the ſenſe of the nation, in this extraordinary "conjuncture:" two illuſtrious peers are ſaid to have alleged in council; "that the preſent parliament would neither do his "Majeſty's buſineſs, nor that of the nation." But it is highly probable, that nothing was of greater weight with his Majeſty, at this time, than the conſideration, "that if the differences between the two houſes were not prevented, the ſupplies neceſſary "for the approaching war would be delayed.

"come

Will'III. An' 1701.

" come the real maſter of the whole Spaniſh monarchy; he has made it to be intirely depending " on France, and diſpoſes of it, as of his own " dominions, and by that means, he has ſurrounded his neighbors, in ſuch a manner, that tho' " the name of peace be ſaid to continue, yet they " are put to the expenſe and inconveniencies of a " war.

" This muſt affect England in the neareſt and " moſt ſenſible manner, in reſpect to our trade, " which will ſoon become precarious, in all the " valuable branches of it; in reſpect to our peace " and ſafety at home, which we cannot hope ſhould " long continue; and in reſpect to that part, which " England ought to take, in the preſervation of the " liberty of Europe.

" In order to obviate the general calamity, with " which the reſt of Chriſtendom is threatned, by " this exorbitant power of France, I have concluded ſeveral alliances, according to the incouragement given me by both houſes of parliament, " which I will direct ſhall be laid before you, and " which I doubt not, you will inable me to make " good.

" There are ſome other treaties ſtill depending, " that ſhall be likewiſe communicated to you, as " ſoon as they are perfected.

" It is fit, I ſhould tell you, that the eyes of " all Europe are upon this parliament; all matters " are at a ſtand, 'till your reſolutions are known, " and therefore no time ought to be loſt.

" You have yet an opportunity, by God's bleſſing, to ſecure to you, and your poſterity, the " quiet injoyment of your religion and liberties, " if you are not wanting to yourſelves, or will " exert the ancient vigor of the Engliſh nation: but " I tell you plainly, my opinion is, if you do not " lay hold on this occaſion, you have no reaſon to " hope for another.

" In order to do your part, it will be neceſſary " to have a great ſtrength at ſea, and to provide " for the ſecurity of our ſhips in harbor, and alſo " that there be ſuch a force at land, as is expected, " in proportion to the forces of our allies.

Gentlemen of the houſe of commons,

" I recommend theſe matters to you, with that " concern and earneſtneſs, which their importance " requires; at the ſame time, I cannot but preſs " you, to take care of the public credit, which cannot be preſerved but by keeping ſacred the maxim, " that they ſhall never be looſers, who truſt to a " parliamentary ſecurity.

" It is always with regret when I aſk aids of " my people; but you will obſerve, that I deſire " nothing which relates to any perſonal expenſe of " mine; I am only preſſing you to do all you can, " for your own ſafety and honor, at ſo critical and " dangerous a time, and am willing that what is " given ſhould be wholly appropriated to the purpoſes for which it is intended.

" And ſince I am ſpeaking on this head, I think " it proper to put you in mind, that during the " late war, I ordered the accounts to be laid yearly " before the parliament, and alſo gave my aſſent " to ſeveral bills for taking the public accounts, " that my ſubjects might have ſatisfaction how the " mony given for the war was applied; and I am " willing that matter be put in any farther way of " examination, that it may appear whether there " were any miſapplications and miſmanagements, " or whether the debt that remains upon us, has " really ariſen from the ſhortneſs of the ſupplies, or " the deficiencies of the funds.

" I have already told you how neceſſary diſpatch " will be for carrying on that great public buſineſs, " whereon our ſafety, and all that is valuable to us, " depends; I hope what time can be ſpared will " be imployed about thoſe other very deſirable " things, which I have ſo often recommended from " the throne, I mean the forming ſome good bills " for imploying the poor, for incouraging trade, " and the farther ſuppreſſing of vice.

Will'III. An' 1701.

My lords and gentlemen,

" I hope you are come together determined to " avoid all manner of diſputes and differences; reſolved to act with a general and hearty concurrence for promoting the common cauſe, which " alone can make this a happy ſeſſion.

" I ſhould think it as great a bleſſing as could befal " England, if I could obſerve you as much inclined to lay aſide thoſe unhappy fatal animoſities, " which divide and weaken you, as I am diſpoſed " to make all my ſubjects ſafe and eaſy, as to " any, even the higheſt offenſes commited againſt " me.

" Let me conjure you to diſappoint the only hopes " of our enemies, by your unanimity. I have ſhewn, " and will always ſhew, how deſirous I am to be " the common father of my people: do you in like " manner lay aſide parties and diviſions; let there " be no other diſtinction heard of among us, for " the future, than of thoſe who are for the Proteſtant religion, and the preſent eſtabliſhment, and " of thoſe who mean a Popiſh Prince, and a French " government.

" I will only add this, if you do, in good earneſt, deſire to ſee England hold the balance of " Europe, and to be indeed, at the head of the " Proteſtant intereſt, it will appear by the preſent " opportunity.

An' 1702.

This excellent ſpeech could not fail of having a very good influence upon thoſe to whom it was addreſſed; even tho' they had been leſs inclined to comply with his Majeſty's deſires, than they appeared to be, by their addreſs of the next day, in which they ſhewed their juſt reſentment of the French King's proceedings, in owning and ſeting up the pretended Prince of Wales, &c.

Addreſs of the commons.

The 5th of January, the commons " returned " their moſt humble and hearty thanks to his Majeſty, for his moſt gracious ſpeech, and aſſured " him, that they would ſupport and defend his lawful and rightful title to the crown of theſe realms, " againſt the pretended Prince of Wales, and all his " open and ſecret adherents, and all other his Majeſty's enemies: that they would inable his Majeſty, " to ſhew his juſt reſentment of the affront and indignity offered him and this nation, by the " French King, in taking upon him to declare the " pretended Prince of Wales, King of England, " Scotland and Ireland: and that they were firmly " and unanimouſly reſolved to maintain and ſupport " the ſucceſſion to the Imperial crown of this realm, " and the dominions thereunto belonging, in the " Proteſtant line, as the ſame was ſettled by two acts " of parliament: and that for the better effecting " the ſame, they would, to the utmoſt of their " power, inable his Majeſty to make good all thoſe " alliances his Majeſty had made, or ſhould " make, purſuant to the addreſſes and advice of his " moſt dutiful and loyal commons of the laſt parliament, for the better preſerving the liberties " of Europe, and reducing the exorbitant power " of France."

To this addreſs his Majeſty anſwered:

Gentlemen,

The King's anſwer.

" I give you my hearty thanks for this addreſs, " which I look upon as a good omen for the ſeſſion, " and the unanimity with which it paſs'd, adds " greatly to the ſatisfaction I receive from it: ſo " good a ſtep, at your firſt entrance upon buſineſs, " cannot but raiſe the hopes of all who wiſh well " to England and to the common cauſe. I can deſire no more of you, than to proceed as you have " begun,

WILL'III. AN' 1702.

" begun, and I depend upon it: for when I con-
" ſider, how chearfully and univerſally you con-
" cur'd in this addreſs, I cannot doubt but every " one of you will ſincerely indeavor to make it
" effectual, in all its parts".

The lords, likewiſe, preſented another addreſs, the next day, to his Majeſty, more particularly on the preſent juncture of affairs. All things going thus to his Majeſty's ſatisfaction, in both houſes of parliament, he was pleaſed to make ſome new advancements and removes. The firſt of January, the earl of Radnor was admited into the privy-council, as was the earl of Burlington a week afterwards. The fourth of the ſame month, the earl of Mancheſter was made one of the principal ſecretaries of ſtate, in the room of ſir Charles Hedges. The eighteenth, the earl of Pembroke was declared lord-high-admiral of England and Ireland, and, on the twenty-ninth, the duke of Sommerſet was appointed lord-preſident of his Majeſty's privy-council.

Preferments.

A lord high-admiral being appointed, all poſſible expedition was uſed in equiping a fleet to ſea, and a proclamation was iſſued to incourage ſeamen to enter into the ſervice of the navy-royal: the commons having reſolved, that 40,000 ſeamen ſhould be raiſed for the ſervice of the year; and that the like number of land-forces ſhould be the proportion to act in conjunction with thoſe of the allies (1). While both houſes of parliament were thus purſuing the important affairs recommended to them in his Majeſty's ſpeech, with great zeal, unanimity and diſpatch, and were making preparations to ſecond the efforts of the Emperor againſt France, the Germans in Italy were not idle.

Forces for the ſea and land ſervices.

The Marſhal de Villeroy ſurpriz'd at Cremona.

It was near Chriſtmas before they went into winter-quarters, and, towards the latter end of January they were in motion again, having form'd a deſign to ſurprize Cremona, the head-quarters of the French, by ſtratagem. Prince Eugene, holding a correſpondence with ſome of the inhabitants of that place, they admited a party of his men, at midnight, thro' an ancient aqueduct. Theſe men, being got into the town, fell upon the guards, at one of the gates, threw it open, and made way for a greater body, commanded by the Prince himſelf, to enter. By this means, the French general, monſ. de Villeroy, with ſeveral of his officers, were ſurprized in their beds: but ſome Iriſh regiments, which were in the town, making a reſiſtance beyond what was expected, and a body of Germans, who were to have ſupported Prince Eugene, miſtaking their way, in the night, and not arriving in time, he thought it moſt adviſable to abandon the town, leſt his retreat ſhould be cut off, by the garriſons the enemy had in the neighborhood: however, he carried off the marſhal de Villeroy, and the reſt of his priſoners, and got to his quarters again, with very little loſs.

Act for examining the public accounts.

The tenth of February, King William came to the houſe of lords, and, the commons being preſent, gave the royal aſſent to " an act for reviving " and continuing the act for ſtating and examining
" the public accounts".

The affair of the Kentiſh petition revived.

The commons then took into conſideration the conduct of the Kentiſh petitioners, towards the concluſion of the laſt parliament; and there happening to be a controverted election, for the borough of Maidſtone, in that county, between Thomas Bliſſe and Thomas Colepepper, eſqrs (the latter of whom was one of the Kentiſh petitioners) they reſolved,

WILL'III. AN' 1702.

" that the ſaid Thomas Colepepper, eſq; had been " guilty of corrupt, ſcandalous, and indirect prac" tices, in indeavoring to procure himſelf elected
" a burgeſs for that town; and that he had pro" moted that ſcandalous and ſeditious petition, to
" the laſt houſe of commons, generally call'd the " Kentiſh petition, containing groundleſs reflections
" on the houſe of commons, by aſperſing the " members with receiving French mony; and
" being in the intereſt of France, for which offenſes
" he ſhould be commited to Newgate, and the " attorney-general ſhould proſecute him, for the
" ſaid crimes.

The twenty-ſixth they came to the following reſolutions: viz.

Reſolutions of the houſe of commons thereupon.

1. " That to aſſert the houſe of commons
" was not the only repreſentative of the commons
" of England, tended to the ſubverſion of the " rights and privileges of that houſe, and the " fundamental conſtitution of the government of " this kingdom.

2. " That to aſſert the houſe of commons have " no power of commitment, but of their own
" members, tends to the ſubverſion of the conſtitu-
" tion of the houſe of commons.

3. " That to print or publiſh any books or
" libels, reflecting on the proceedings of the houſe
" of commons, or any member thereof, for, or " relating to his ſervice therein, is a high violation
" of the rights and privileges of the houſe of " commons.

4. " That it is the undoubted right of the people
" of England, to petition or addreſs the King,
" for the calling, ſiting or diſſolving of parlia-
" ments, and for the redreſſing of grievances.

5. " That it is the undoubted right of every
" ſubject of England, under any accuſation, either
" by impeachment, or otherwiſe, to be brought " to a ſpeedy trial, in order to be acquited or " condemned".

The King falls off his horſe.

In the mean time, his Majeſty, notwithſtanding his infirm ſtate of health, continued his uſual diverſions of hunting, and taking the air on horſeback; and riding out from Kenſington, to hunt near Hampton-court, as he was puting his horſe to the gallop, he unfortunately threw him, and broke his right collar-bone. He was carried into that palace, where the bone was ſet, and the ſame evening returned to Kenſington.

His Majeſty's meſſage to the houſe of commons.

Being, on this account, confined to his chamber, his Majeſty ſent a meſſage to the houſe of commons, by mr. ſecretary Vernon; importing:

" That being at preſent hindered, by an un-
" happy accident, from coming in perſon to his " parliament, he was pleaſed to ſignify to the houſe
" of commons, by meſſage, what he deſign'd to
" have ſpoken to both houſes, from the throne;
" that his Majeſty, in the firſt year of his reign,
" had acquainted the parliament, that commiſ-

(1) Before King William left Holland ſeveral projects of great importance were formed. He had concerted with the Dutch and Pruſſian generals, the proper meaſures for the ſiege of Keyſerſwaert, a place which the elector of Bavaria had put into the hands of the French. It was agreed with the elector of Hanover, that he ſhould attack and diſarm the Prince of Wolfembuttel, who had raiſed troops, with French mony, in the heart of the Empire, and ſent for a French general to command them. The King of the Romans, and Prince Lewis of Baden were to beſiege Landau: And the Emperor had ingaged to ſend a powerful ſupply into Italy, to inable the brave Prince Eugene to purſue the ſucceſs he had already had, and to attack the city of Mantua in form, the conqueſt of which place his Majeſty was ſenſible would go a great way towards defeating all the deſigns of the French in thoſe parts. But beſide all theſe grand deſigns, there was another on the anvil, more glorious in the execution, and more extenſive in the conſequences: I mean the project upon Cadiz, which was to be attempted by the Prince of Heſſe-Darmſtadt, and the duke of Ormond; the former of which had aſſur'd King William, that the Almirante of Caſtille, and ſeveral other grandees of Spain, with all their dependants, would, upon the taking of that place, immediately declare for the houſe of Auſtria. The ſucceſs of all theſe undertakings the reader will ſee in the ſequel.

Will' III. An' 1702.

" ſioners were authorized in Scotland, to treat with " ſuch commiſſioners as ſhould be appointed in " England, of proper terms for uniting the two " kingdoms, and, at the ſame time, expreſs'd his " greateſt deſire of ſuch an union. That his Majeſty " was fully ſatisfied, nothing could contribute " more to the preſent and future peace, ſecurity and " happineſs of England and Scotland, than a firm " and intire union between them; and he could " not but hope, that upon a due conſideration of " their preſent circumſtances, there would be found " a general diſpoſition to that union: that his Ma- " jeſty would eſteem it a peculiar felicity, if, du- " ring his reign, ſome happy expedient might be " found for making both kingdoms one, and was " therefore extreamly deſirous, that a treaty might " be ſet on foot, to that purpoſe; and did, in the " moſt earneſt manner, recommend that affair to " the conſideration of the houſe ".

Acts paſs'd.

The firſt of March, the King found himſelf very ill, and therefore, the next day, ſign'd a commiſſion to the lord-keeper, and ſome others, for paſſing " the following bills, viz. 1. " An act for the " attainder of the pretended Prince of Wales, of " high treaſon. 2. An act for the puniſhing of " mutiny and deſertion; and 3. An act for con- " tinuing the Quakers ſolemn affirmation, inſtead " of an oath ".

The fourth, the King was taken with a ſhivering fit, after having taken a turn or two in the gallery at Kenſington: this ſhivering turned to a fever, accompanied with a vomiting and looſeneſs; upon which he was apprehended to be in a dangerous way, and ſeveral able phyſicians were on that account ſent for; but notwithſtanding they adminiſtred ſeveral remedies, which gave him great relief, his vomiting and looſeneſs was very violent. On the ſixth and ſeventh, he became ſo weak, that he was forced to have a ſtamp made, in order to ſet his name to a commiſſion for paſſing the " malt- " tax act; and an act for the farther ſecurity of his " Majeſty's perſon, and the ſucceſſion of the crown, " in the Proteſtant line, and to extinguiſh the " hopes of the pretended Prince of Wales, and all " other pretenders, and their open and ſecret " abettors ".

More acts paſs'd

The King's death.

On Sunday, the eighth of March, early in the morning, his Majeſty, finding all the ſigns of his approaching diſſolution, received the holy ſacrament, with great devotion, from the hands of the archbiſhop of Canterbury. The lords of the privy council, with great numbers of the nobility and gentry, attended all the while, in the adjoining apartments, and ſeveral of them were called in, at times, to whom his Majeſty ſpoke a little, and then they withdrew. About eight in the morning, his Majeſty expired, ſiting on his bed, in his night-gown, and in the arms of mr. Sewel, one of the pages of the back-ſtairs, having, ſome time before, given the keys of his cloſet and eſcrutore, to the earl of Albermarle, telling him, he knew what to do with them. As ſoon as his Majeſty had breath'd his laſt, the lords Lexington and Scarborough, who were then in waiting, order'd mr. Ronjat, the ſergeant-ſurgeon, to take from the King's left arm, a black-ribbon, which tied next to his ſkin a gold-ring, with ſome hair of the late Queen Mary, an evident mark how dear her memory was to him (1).

Will' III. An' 1702.

Thus died the great William Henry, Prince of Orange and King of Great-Britain, with that reſignation, reſolution, and compoſedneſs of mind, that had accompanied all the actions of his life, at the age of fifty-one years, four months and four days, after he had reign'd thirteen years and one month, wanting five days.

His character.

What now remains, to conclude this reign, is to give a character of our great deliverer from Popery and Tyranny: but as this has been already done, by ſo many writers, that it would be difficult to ſay any thing new, without exceeding the bounds of truth or decency, either by being too laviſh in his praiſe, or by depreciating his virtues and exagerating thoſe few faults that have been laid to his charge, I ſhall be contented with giving ſome brief extracts of the character given him by ſeveral authors, and where they differ from one another in opinion, ſet them oppoſite to each other, one in the text, and the other in the notes, and then, to continue the impartiality I hope I have all along ſhewn, ſhall leave the reader to judge for himſelf, without making any reflections, that ſhall favor either of panegyric or invective (2).

The author of the hiſtory and reign of King William III, in three volumes, octavo, after having expatiated on his character, under ſeveral general heads, ſums up the whole, in the following words (3).

" Tho' King William (ſays he) was not altoge- " ther free from faults, yet he may be rank'd " amongſt the greateſt men, and vy with the moſt " celebrated heroes of antiquity. To do him " juſtice, he was a Prince experienced in all the arts " of war, policy, and civil government; fearleſs " in dangers; conſtant in his reſolutions; moderate " in proſperity; unſhaken in adverſity; wiſe in his " councils; bold at the head of his armies; faithful " to his allies; dreadful to his enemies; maſter of

(1) The period of this glorious monarch's life was no doubt ſhortened by the great fatigues he had undergone for thirty years together, which could not but very much impair a conſtitution, at beſt but tender and infirm, and his conſtant application to buſineſs had undoubtedly exhauſted his animal ſpirits. As for the fall his Majeſty had from his horſe, it may have accelerated, but cannot have been the efficient cauſe of his death: for the ſurgeons, who were appointed by the privy-council to open him, declar'd, that they not only found his whole body emaciated, but that the right ſide of his lungs adhered to the pleura, and the left much more: from which upon ſeparation, there iſſued forth a quantity of purulent or frothy ſerum: that the upper lobe, on the left ſide of the lungs, and the part of the pleura next to it, were inflamed to a degree of mortification, and this they look'd upon as the immediate cauſe of his death.

(2) " It is true (ſays Salmon, at the begining of his character of this Prince) the great things King William has done for " this nation, particularly his delivering us from Popery and Slavery, muſt incline every grateful Engliſhman to pay a juſt regard " to his memory: but then the laws of hiſtory will not permit us to conceal all his errors and failings, and to repreſent him " rather as a God, than a mortal man; and ſhould our fondneſs for him incline us to be never ſo partial, poſterity poſſibly " will diſcover our biaſs, and conclude, there is more of fiction than truth in the relation. Vol. XXIV. p. 412.

(3) The ſame author gives the following deſcription of his perſon, and of the qualities of his mind: " as to his perſon (ſays " he) he was of a middle ſize, but ill ſhap'd, and ſomewhat round-ſhoulder'd: his face of a light-brown complexion, and hard- " featured; his noſe aquiline; his eyes exceeding good and piercing; his hands very fine and white; but his conſtitution weak " and infirm from his very youth. He ſate well on horſeback, and that poſture became him beſt, as if he had been princi- " pally formed for the field.

" What nature had denied him, as to the advantages of the body, ſhe had abundantly made up by the perfections of his mind: " He had a quick, ready, and penetrating wit, a ſound judgment, an admirable forecaſt, and a firm compoſed ſoul, amidſt " the greateſt and moſt imminent dangers.

To this Salmon adds: " He ſeems to have had no ear: for tho' he uſually commanded the confederates in perſon, neither trumpets, " hautbois, or any other muſic, was heard at his quarters; a profound ſilence reign'd there; no plays, drinking, revelling, " or even innocent diverſions, were ſeen in the royal apartments; and, except that he dined and ſupped publicly, and rode out, " once or twice a day, when he was in the camp, he was ſeen very little: the reſt of his time he was ſhut up with two or three " ſelect friends, whoſe converſation he moſt delighted in, and, when he did appear in public, ſcarce three words dropp'd from " him in an hour.

the

WILL' III AN' 1702.

" the affections of his people, by his forbearing " temper and clemency. He always aſſerted the " freedom of Europe, and declared himſelf an ene- " my to tyranny, oppreſſion and arbitrary ſway: " he preſerved his own country, and reſcued theſe " three nations, when their religion, laws and li- " berties were in moſt imminent danger, and no " other human help left to ſave them. He per- " fectly united England and Holland, two inve- " terate rivals in trade, and by teaching them to " promote their mutual intereſts, has left an effec- " tual barrier, to check the formidable and over- " grown power of France. He revived the ancient " martial ſpirit of the Engliſh, and retrieved the " honor of the nation, not only in the field (1) " but in the cabinet. He maintained the church of " England, without oppreſſing the Diſſenters, and " was ſo tender of the rights and privileges of his " ſubjects, that he ſometimes yielded from the juſt " prerogatives of the crown. Now (ſays my " author, to conclude) if his enemies ſhould aſk " to what purpoſe the nation has ſpent near ſixty " millions ſterling, to maintain him on the throne? " The anſwer is ready; to purchaſe an Engliſh " Proteſtant Queen, and a ſettlement of the ſuc- " ceſſion in the Proteſtant line: a purchaſe which " no true Engliſh-man, will ever account too " dear.

Biſhop Burnet, among other things, ſays; " King " William's behavior was ſolemn and ſerious, ſel- " dom chearful, and but with a few: he ſpoke " little, and very ſlowly, and moſt commonly " with a diſguſting dryneſs, which was his cha- " racter at all times, except in a day of battle; " for then he was all fire, tho' without paſſion. " He was then every where, and looked to every " thing. He had a memory that amazed all about " him; for it never failed him. He was an exact " obſerver of men and things. His ſtrength lay " rather in true diſcerning, and a ſound judgment, " than in imagination or invention. His deſigns " were always great and good: but, it was thought " he truſted too much to that, and that he did not " deſcend enough to the humors of his people. His " reſervedneſs grew upon him; ſo that it diſguſted " moſt of thoſe who ſerved him. He did not like " contradiction, nor to have his actions cenſured: " but he loved to imploy and favor thoſe who had " the art of complacency; yet he did not love flat- " terers. His genius lay chiefly to war, in which " his courage was more admired than his conduct: " great errors was often commited by him; but " his heroical courage ſet all things right, as it in- " flamed thoſe who were about him. He was too " laviſh of mony, on ſome occaſions, both in his " buildings and to his favorites; but too ſparing " in rewarding ſervices, or in incouraging thoſe " who brought intelligence. He was too apt to " take ill impreſſions of people, and theſe ſtuck " long with him; but he never carried them to in- " decent revenges. He gave too much way to his " own humor, almoſt in every thing. He knew " all forein affairs well, and underſtood the ſtate " of every court in Europe very particularly. " He inſtructed his own miniſters himſelf; but he did " not apply enough to affairs at home. He tried " how he could govern us, by balancing the two " parties, one againſt another.——— In his de- " portment towards all about him, he ſeemed to " make little diſtinction, between the good and the " bad; and thoſe who ſerved well, or thoſe who " ſerved him ill. He loved the Dutch, and was " much beloved among them: but the ill returns " he met from the Engliſh nation; their jealouſies " of him, and their perverſeneſs towards him, had " too much ſoured his mind, and had, in a great " meaſure, alienated him from them (2); which he " did not take care enough to conceal, tho' he ſaw " the ill effects it had upon his buſineſs. He grew, " in his laſt years, too remiſs and careleſs as to all " affairs; 'till the treacheries of France awakened " him, and the dreadful conjunction of the two " Monarchies (France and Spain) gave ſo loud " an alarm to all Europe. Few men had the " art of concealing and governing paſſion more " than he had: yet few men had ſtronger paſſions: " theſe were however, chiefly felt by his inferior " ſervants, but they were ſoon over, and he after- " wards ſhed his bounty, ſo plentifully upon them, " as might have tempted them to provoke his ſpleen " for their own advantage (3).

WILL' III AN' 1702.

The biſhop, in a ſermon preached before Queen Ann, ſoon after her acceſſion, mentioning King William, ſays; " We have a perſon raiſed up, and " long ſupported by very ſignal providences, in a " courſe of thirty years, to be the great fence, both " of liberty and religion, againſt a deluge of con- " queſt and deſtruction, that was breaking in and " carrying all before it; 'till he, young and unex- " perienced as he was, ſtood in its way, and ſtoped " its fury: he reſcued his country then, when it " was almoſt quite ſwallowed up; and after he " had reſcued and ſettled his own country, he was " called on to ſave us. I hope thoſe two great years " 72 and 88 are not, and cannot be forgoten: we " were at firſt delivered, and have been now for " thirteen years preſerved by him, in ſo unaccount- " able a manner, that, in the progreſs of a long " devouring war, one of the greateſt and longeſt " in any hiſtory, we have lived in profound " peace at home, under a juſt and merciful admi- " niſtration. His long practice in affairs; his " judgment, that was ſo exact, and of ſuch pene- " tration; the great reputation he had gained all " the world over, and the great figure the nation " made in his hands, all others centring in him,

(1) He loved war (ſays the continuator of Rapin, in French) for the ſame reaſon he loved hunting: becauſe he found exer- ciſe of body, a proper remedy for the weakneſs of his conſtitution; and, at the ſame time, while he was thus imployed, he was freed from the cares of the civil government, which he hated. His inclinations were afterwards ſtrengthened by other reaſons. He looked upon his camp, as a ſure retreat from the daily vexations he met with ſometimes from the jealouſies and perverſeneſs of the Engliſh, and at other times from their inconſtancy and irreſolution.

(2) By way of anſwer to this charge of ingratitude laid by the biſhop on the Engliſh nation, Salmon (Vol 24, of his modern hiſtory, p. 411) aſks the following queſtions: " what did the Engliſh omit to ſhew their reſpect and duty to this great " Prince? Did they not paſs by both his own Princeſs and the Princeſs of Denmark, to ſet the crown upon his head? Did " not they raiſe immenſe ſupplies, ſuch as were never known in former reigns, to ſupport him on the throne? Did they not " ſettle on him the greateſt revenue that ever any King of England injoyed before? Did they not connive at his being governed " by forein counſels, and entertaining forein favorites, and gratifying them with Engliſh poſts and Engliſh treaſure? Did " not the whole nation, as one man, reſent the French King's proclaiming the Pretender, and not only promiſe to maintain " his title with their lives and fortunes, but actually raiſed forces by ſea and land, and immediately entered into all the meaſures " propoſed by this Prince to begin a war againſt France? Does not the King, in almoſt every ſpeech, acknowlege the affection " that his ſubjects had always ſhewn for his perſon and government, and return them his hearty thanks for their confidence in " him, and the great ſupplies they granted? How is it poſſible after all this, to believe, that he thought the Engliſh ungrateful, " or that his mind was alienated from them?

(3) The biſhop farther ſays, " he had no vice, but of one ſort, in which he was very cautious and ſecret;" but as he has not thought fit to give it a name, I have omited it in the character of this Prince.

or

Will' III. An' 1702.

" or depending on him, were too viſible to ſee an " inlargement (1).

Salmon, tho' his character of this great Prince, in the whole, is far from being a panegyric, is obliged to own (and ſays the King ought to have the glory of it) " that he ſaved the church of " England from deſtruction. But at the ſame " time, obſerves, that the Epiſcopal church of " Scotland was ruined at the revolution, and that, " in one of his ſpeeches, he recommended the " taking off the penal laws and teſt in England, " that the Diſſenters might have a ſhare in all " places of truſt and profit. He likewiſe, allows, " that King William ſecured our civil rights and " liberties," and adds (I hope with ſincerity, tho' ſome pretend it has the air of a ſneer) " that " this abundantly attones for all the little irregu- " larities and miſtakes in the adminiſtration: even " his large grants (continues my author) to forein " favorites, and his reſiding every ſummer in " Holland, ought not to be remembered with re- " ſentment, when we conſider he ſecured to us " all that was valuable, and ſetled the crown in the " Proteſtant line, by which we, at this day, injoy " ſuch numerous benefits, under the happy domi- " nion of the illuſtrious houſe of Hanover.

" I never, continues this author, could learn any " vice he was addicted to. His paſſion for his " favorites was his grand foible. Indeed, if am- " bition be a vice, he ſeems to have had a ſhare " of that (2); when he inſiſted on reigning with- " out his Queen; tho' perhaps even this may be " aſcribed to other cauſes: It is not improbable that " Queen Mary choſe to be purely paſſive in the " revolution: Her great tenderneſs for her father " might not ſuffer her to aſſume the government; " at leaſt, the King and his council might think " the nation more effectually ſecured againſt the " return of King James, by his taking the admi- " niſtration of the government upon him, than by " leaving it in the hands of the Princeſs."

The continuator of Rapin, in French, obſerves; " that King William being naturally haughty, and " fearing to be, or to appear to be govern'd, either " by his miniſters, or his favorites, he affected to " make them ſenſible, that they were not to build " too much upon their own knowlege, nor upon " his affection to them; and it was equally diſa- " greable to him, either to be adviſed or contra- " dicted: that he often acted upon the moſt im- " portant occaſions, from no other motives but " thoſe of his own caprice; and that he was there- " by deprived of many advantageous ſervices, " which he might otherwiſe have expected."

Will' III. An' 1702.

I ſhall only add one paragraph more from the ſame continuator, with reſpect to our Monarch's religion and morality: " He ſhew'd himſelf " (ſays my author) a mortal enemy to vice and " irreligion, which he equally diſcountenanced, " by his own regular behavior, and by his rigorous " proclamations; and it is certain, that thoſe lau- " dable ſtatutes that were made in his reign, for " the advantage of religion, and the incourage- " ment of virtue, were as much owing to his " zeal as to that of his ſubjects. I may add, that " the manner in which King William performed " the exterior duties of Chriſtianity was extremely " edifying. He aſſiſted at divine-ſervice with an " exemplary aſſiduity and devotion: and one of " the occupations he moſt delighted in was reading " the holy ſcriptures. When he ſpoke of ſacred " things, it was in ſuch terms, as, at the ſame " time they denoted a profound veneration, gave " the moſt evident marks of a lively conviction. " This (continues my author) was even one of " the ſources of the intrepidity he ever ſhew'd in " the field: for, in a word, being perſuaded, " that a belief of the abſolute decrees of provi- " dence was an eſſential article of the Chriſtian " faith, he expoſed his perſon with the greater " reſolution to danger, being aſſured he ſhould " eſcape it, if his deſtiny was not fixed for that " moment (3).

(1) Salmon (Vol. 24. p. 408.) in anſwer to theſe tranſports of rapture (as he calls them) as far as regards the year 1688, and the war that followed it, ſays; " the Dutch were apprehenſive of an alliance between King James II, and the King of " France, which might prove deſtructive to their ſtate. The Prince of Orange had reaſon to believe that Popery, and an arbi- " trary government would be introduced in England; the conſequence of which would probably be the excluſion of himſelf, " and his Princeſs from that crown, to which they were nearly allied: and the Engliſh nation entertaining the ſame ſentiments, " invited him over, to protect their religion and liberties, and procure them a free parliament, that might ſettle them upon " ſuch a foundation, as ſhould preſerve them from Popery and arbitrary power; and as the Prince was ſupported and incou- " raged in this enterprize, by the States, and by the Emperor and the Princes of Germany, and was aſſured, not only of the " affections of the Engliſh, in general, but of the revolt of King James's fleet and army, on his arrival; what was there miracu- " lous, nay what was there to diſcourage a Prince of ordinary ambition and reſolution, to undertake the project? Or indeed, what " inducements were there wanting (if he had any regard for his own glory and intereſt) to incite him to undertake it? He " had a view, no doubt, to the preſervation of Holland; to the delivering England from Popery and Slavery; to the ſecuring " his own ſucceſſion to the crown of Great Britain, and of forming a confederacy againſt France for the preſervation of the " liberties of Europe, of which he had all the reaſon in the world to expect he ſhould be the head; and he had the happineſs " to ſee this glorious enterprize crown'd with ſucceſs: but this was ſo far from being a compenſation for the toils and hazards " he had run to ſave us (in the opinion of our judicious biſhop) that he grew weary of his ungrateful ſubjects, and every now " and then appeared ſo diſguſted, that he was upon the point of abandoning or abdicating three flouriſhing kingdoms, and " leaving us to ourſelves.

" I proceed (continues my author) in the next place, to take a view of the ſurprizing conduct of this Prince, in his wars, " after he mounted the Britiſh throne. At ſea, his fleet was once beaten, and once victorious: in Ireland, at the battle of the " Boyne, he gained a compleat victory, having a great ſuperiority of regular troops, whilſt moſt of King James's forces were " new-raiſed men, little better than militia: he attack'd the French at Steinkirk, in Flanders, anno 1692, and being miſ- " taken in the ground, did not ſucceed. The French, by ſtratagem, induced him to divide his army, anno 1693, and then " fell upon him at Landen, and gained an intire victory: they took the ſtrong towns of Mons, Namur, Charleroy, Aeth, " and others, before his face; and he took Namur from them again: but what was there ſurprizing or miraculous in all this."

(2) The author of his hiſtory (in 3 Vols. 8vo.) ſays; " he was a very ambitious Prince: but his ambition was governed " by prudence, and founded upon juſt and commendable motives: never aiming to make himſelf great, but to make others " happy at the ſame time." However there are thoſe who will not aſcribe ſo much virtue to his ambition; but will rather argue it productive of evil: " for to what elſe (ſay they, among other things) can we attribute his frequent refuſal of the royal aſſent " to bills prepared and laid before him by his parliament."

(3) King William had no iſſue either legitimate or natural.

End of the Twenty-fifth Book.

BRITISH
20 AU 75
MUSEUM

HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS PRINCE GEORGE OF DENMARK &c.

HONI SOIT QUI MAL Y PENSE

R. White ad vivum.

R. Sheppard Sculp.

...ast before this Reign

QUEEN OF GREAT BRITAIN, FRANCE, AND IRELAND, &c. ANNE

HONI SOIT QUI MAL Y PENSE

SEMPER EADEM

G. Kneller pinx.

R. Sheppard Sculp.

BRITISH
20 AUG 75
MUSEUM

BOOK XXVI.

Containing the Two Firſt Years of the Reign of Queen ANNE.

ANN, Twenty-ninth Sovereign of ENGLAND, ſince the Conqueſt.

Q. Ann, An' 1702. Queen Ann's acceſſion.

UPON the deceaſe of King William III, at Kenſington, the 8th of March 1702, about eight o'clock in the morning, both houſes of parliament (which now continued to ſit, notwithſtanding the King's demiſe, by an act made five years before) being immediately aſſembled, on this extraordinary occaſion, a meſſage was ſent by the lords to the commons, to acquaint them with his late Majeſty's death; upon which they unanimouſly voted, "an addreſs to the Queen, condoling with "her, on this ſad ſubject, and congratulating the "happy acceſſion of her Majeſty to the throne." The lords then deſiring a conference with the commons, acquainted them farther, "that it having "pleaſed ALMIGHTY GOD to take to himſelf the "late King William III, of glorious memory, "and the Princeſs being the only rightful and "lawful Queen of theſe realms, the lords had "thought fit to acquaint the commons, that or-"ders were given for proclaiming her Majeſty, at "three that afternoon."

The ſame day, the members of the privy-council being aſſembled, waited on her Majeſty in a body, at the royal palace at St. James's, where the Queen made the following ſpeech to them:

Her firſt ſpeech to the privy-council.

My lords,

"I am extremely ſenſible of the general misfor-"tune to theſe kingdoms, in the unſpeakable loſs "of the King, and of the great weight and bur-"den it brings, in particular, upon myſelf, which "nothing could incourage me to undergo, but the "great concern I have for the preſervation of our "religion, and the laws and liberties of my coun-"try: all theſe being as dear to me, as they can "be to any perſon whomſoever, you may depend "upon it, that no pains or diligence ſhall ever be "wanting, on my part, to preſerve and ſupport "them; to maintain the ſucceſſion, in the Pro-"teſtant line, and the government in church and "ſtate, as it is by law eſtabliſhed.

"I think it proper, on this occaſion of my firſt "ſpeaking to you, to declare my own opinion of "the importance of carrying on all the prepara-"tions we are making to oppoſe the great power "of France; and I ſhall loſe no time, in giving "our allies all aſſurances, that nothing ſhall be "wanting, on my part, to purſue the true inte-"reſt of England, together with theirs, for the "ſupport of the common cauſe.

Q. Ann, An' 1702.

"In order to attain theſe ends, I ſhall always be "ready to aſk the advice of my council, and of "both houſes of parliament; and deſirous to "countenance and imploy all thoſe who ſhall "heartily concur and join with me in ſupporting "and maintaining the preſent eſtabliſhment and "conſtitution, againſt all enemies and oppoſers "whatſoever" (1).

The privy-council ſworn.

Her Majeſty having made this gracious declaration of her intentions, cauſed all the lords, and others of the late King's privy-council, to take the oaths to her, in the ſame quality. At the ſame time, two proclamations were ordered to be forthwith publiſhed; one to ſignify her Majeſty's pleaſure, "that all perſons being in offices of autho-"rity or government, whether civil or military, "at the demiſe of King William, ſhould ſo con-"tinue till her Majeſty's farther directions;" the other, "for the better obſervance of the act, for "laying duties upon malt."

Proclamations iſſued.

The Queen proclaimed.

The ſame afternoon, the Queen was proclaimed, by the heralds, with the uſual ſolemnity, and the loud repeated acclamations of the people; firſt, before the gates of St. James's palace, and afterwards at Charing-croſs, Temple-bar, in Cheapſide near the end of Wood-ſtreet, and at the Royal Exchange (2).

The Queen being thus proclaimed at London, the two ſecretaries of ſtate of Scotland, and ſuch of the privy-council of that kingdom as were in town, attended her Majeſty at St. James's, where having read their claim of right, they tender'd her the coronation-oath, which ſhe took, and afterwards ſent a commiſſion to the earl of Marchmont, lord chancellor of that kingdom, to be her commiſſioner in the general aſſembly of the kirk, which was then ſiting, and then diſpatch'd the following letter to the privy-council there:

The Queen's letter to the privy council in Scotland.

ANNR.

"RIGHT truſty, &c. we greet you well. "Whereas it has pleaſed ALMIGHTY GOD, "this day, to call out of this life, to the fruition "of his eternal glory, his late Majeſty, our

(1) Her Majeſty (ſays biſhop Burnet) pronounced this her firſt ſpeech, as ſhe did all her other, afterwards, with great weight and authority, and with a ſoftneſs of voice, and ſweetneſs in the pronunciation, that added much life to all ſhe ſpoke.

(2) Notwithſtanding there appeared to be an univerſal joy at her Majeſty's acceſſion to the crown, yet it could not totally ſtifle the apprehenſions ſome were under, at this critical juncture, that the death of King William might be attended with conſequences fatal to Europe, in general, and to the proteſtant ſucceſſion of theſe kingdoms, in Particular.

Q. Ann, An' 1702.

" royal and moſt dearly beloved brother, King " William, whereby the undoubted right of the " Imperial crown of the kingdom of Scotland, con- " form to the act of ſettlement, is now devolved " upon us. And having, likewiſe (after hearing " read the petition of rights and grievances) taken " and ſigned the coronation-oath, in preſenſe of " ſeveral of our privy-council, whom we called " together, for that end, at our palace at St. " James's, have thought fit to authorize you to " continue to meet, and, in all things, to act as " our privy-council, of that our ancient kingdom, " in the ſame manner, to all intents and purpoſes, " as you were intruſted by his late Majeſty, of " glorious memory, until we ſhall ſend you a new " commiſſion for that effect, under our royal-hand. " And we do hereby alſo authorize and require " you, without any delay, in the moſt proper " methods, and with the due ſolemnities, to publiſh " the incloſed proclamation in our name, ordain- " ing all our officers of ſtate, counſellors, magi- " ſtrates, and all other officers whatſoever, both " civil and military, to act in all things, conform " to the laſt commiſſion and inſtructions, that they " had from his ſaid late Majeſty, until new com- " miſſions can be prepared, and ſent down, ſign'd " by our royal-hand: and we do, on this occaſion, at " our firſt acceſſion to the crown, give you, and " all our people, full aſſurance of our firm reſolu- " tion, during the whole courſe of our reign, to " protect them in their religion, laws and liberties, " and in the eſtabliſh'd government of the church, " and that we will do every thing in our power, " that may conduce to their happineſs and proſpe- " rity. And as we are reſolved to continue our " favor to you, ſo we expect you will alſo con- " tinue in the ſame zeal, in our ſervice, which you " have evinced in that of our ſaid moſt dear and " royal brother deceaſed; for all which this ſhall be " your warrant. And ſo we bid you heartily farewell".

Given at our court at St. James's, the eighth of March, 1702, and of our reign the firſt year.

By her Majeſty's command,

Seafield.

The ſame orders were ſent to Ireland, where the joy of the people appeared no leſs, on her Majeſty's aſcending the throne, than in England.

Addreſs of the lords.

The houſe of lords attended the Queen, the next day, in a body, with an addreſs: " condoling their " loſs, and moſt heartily congratulating her Ma- " jeſty's happy acceſſion to the throne; aſſuring " her of their zealous and firm reſolutions, to ſup- " port her undoubted right and title, and the ſuc- " ceſſion of the Proteſtant line, againſt all her ene- " mies whatſoever: being ſenſible their great loſs " was no otherwiſe to be repaired, to themſelves " and their confederates, but by a moſt ſincere and " vigorous adherence to her Majeſty and her allies, " in the proſecution of thoſe meaſures already en- " tered into, to reduce the exhorbitant power of " France. And humbly deſiring, that for the " incouragement of her Majeſty's allies, no time " might be loſt in communicating to them, her " Majeſty's reſolutions of adhering firmly to the " alliances already made, which they ſhould never " be wanting, to the utmoſt of their power, to " inable her Majeſty to maintain.

The Queen's anſwer.

Her Majeſty told them, in anſwer to this addreſs: " That ſhe received theſe aſſurances with great " ſatisfaction, and that her indeavors ſhould always " be very ſincere, to promote the true intereſt of " England, and to ſupport their common cauſe.

In the evening, the ſpeaker of the houſe of commons, at the head of the houſe, in a body, atttended the Queen with an addreſs, in which, after the uſual compliments of condolance and congratulation, they ſaid: " her Majeſty's zeal for their religion " and eſtabliſhment, gave them a certain proſpect " of future happineſs, moderated their grief, and " ingaged them unanimouſly to aſſure her, that " they would, to the utmoſt, aſſiſt and ſupport her " Majeſty on that throne where God had placed " her, againſt the pretended Prince of Wales, and " all her ememies: and ſince nothing could con- " duce more to the honor and ſafety of her Ma- " jeſty and her kingdoms, than maintaining in- " violably ſuch alliances, as had been, or ſhould " be made, for preſerving the liberties of Europe, " and reducing the exorbitant power of France; " they aſſured her Majeſty, that they were firmly " reſolved, to inable her Majeſty to proſecute that " glorious deſign: and that all her Majeſty's ſub- " jects might reſt, in a full aſſurance of happineſs, " under her Majeſty's reign, they would maintain " the ſucceſſion of the crown, in the Proteſtant line, " according to the limitation in the ſeveral acts of " ſettlement, and effectually provide for, and make " good, the public credit of the nation.

Q. Ann, An' 1702.

Addreſs of the commons.

" Her Majeſty returned them thanks, for the " kind aſſurances, they gave her, which could not " be more agreably confirmed to her, than by " their giving diſpatch to all their preparations, " for the public ſervice, and the ſupport of the " allies. (1)

The Queen's anſwer.

The ſame day, the arch-biſhop of Canterbury, with the reſt of the biſhops then in town; and the next day, about noon, the lord-mayor, aldermen, and common council of the city of London, waited upon the Queen, with their addreſſes of condolance and congratulation; and their example was afterwards followed, by all the counties and corporations in her Majeſty's dominions.

Addreſs of the biſhops, city, &c.

The eleventh, the Queen went, the firſt time, with the uſual ſolemnity, to the houſe of peers, and the commons attending, her Majeſty addreſs'd her ſelf, to both houſes, in the following ſpeech:

My lords and gentlemen,

The Queen's firſt ſpeech to the parliament.

" I cannot too much lament my own unhappi- " neſs, in ſucceeding to the crown ſo immediately " after the loſs of a King, who was the great ſup- " port, not only of theſe kingdoms, but of all " Europe; and I am extremely ſenſible of the " weight and difficulty it brings upon me: but " the true concern I have for our religion, for the " laws and liberties of England, for the maintain- " ing the ſucceſſion to the crown, in the Proteſtant " line, and the government in church and ſtate, as " by law eſtabliſhed, incourages me in this great " undertaking: which I promiſe myſelf will be " ſucceſsful, by the bleſſing of God, and the con- " tinuance of that fidelity and affection, of which " you have given me ſo full aſſurances.

" The preſent conjuncture of affairs requires " the greateſt application and diſpatch, and I am " very glad to find, in your ſeveral addreſſes, ſo " unanimous a concurence, in the ſame opinion " with me, that too much cannot be done, for the " incouragement of our allies, to reduce the exorbi- " tant power of France.

" I cannot but think it very neceſſary, upon this " occaſion, to deſire you to conſider of proper me- " thods towards attaining an union between Eng- " land and Scotland, which has been ſo lately re- " commended to you, as a matter that very

(1) Upon King William's death, the national funds had fallen about 15 per cent. But this good harmony between the Queen and her parliament, together with the reſolutions of the houſe of commons, about public credit, immediately raiſed them, even above their former value.

" nearly

Q. ANN, AN' 1702.

" nearly concerns the peace and ſecurity of both " kingdoms.

Gentlemen of the houſe of commons,

" I need not put you in mind, that the revenue " for defraying the expences of the civil govern- " ment is expired.

" I rely intirely upon your affections, for the " ſupplying it in ſuch manner, as ſhall be moſt " ſuitable for the honor and dignity of the crown.

My lords and gentlemen,

" It ſhall be my conſtant indeavor to make you " the beſt return for that duty and affection you " have expreſs'd to me, by a careful and diligent " adminiſtration, for the good of all my ſubjects. " And as I know my own heart to be intirely " Engliſh, I can very ſincerely aſſure you, there " is not any thing you can expect or deſire from " me, which I ſhall not be ready to do for the " happineſs and proſperity of England, and you " ſhall always find me a ſtrict and religious " obſerver of my word. (1)

The twelfth, the commons returned their thanks for the Queen's ſpeech, by ſuch of their members as were of her Majeſty's privy-council: and, the next day, the lords, attended her Majeſty with an addreſs, importing:

Addreſs of the lords.

" That they could not ſufficiently expreſs the " great ſatisfaction they received from her moſt " gracious ſpeech, truſting in GOD it would have " the ſame effect abroad as at home, equally re- " viving the hearts of her allies and ſubjects; uni- " ting all people, and incouraging their utmoſt in- " deavors in the common cauſe. That the ſincere " concern her Majeſty had ſhewn for our religion, " the government in church and ſtate, and the " ſucceſſion to the crown in the Proteſtant line, " the hazards ſhe had expos'd herſelf to, in con- " cert with his late glorious Majeſty, for maintain- " ing the laws and liberties, as well as her moſt " gracious aſſurances, at this time, gave her ſub- " jects ſuch a confidence in her promiſe, ſuch a " dutiful affection to her perſon, ſuch a zeal for " her ſervice, as would oblige them, to make the " utmoſt efforts to ſupport her Majeſty, under the " weight and difficulties of the preſent conjuncture: " the concern (added their lordſhips) your Majeſty " expreſſes for your allies is a farther obligation " laid upon us, who are ſenſible their preſervation " is neceſſary to our own, and who are as deſirous " as ever, to ſupport the character of the crown " of England, in inabling your Majeſty to main- " tain the balance of Europe.

" We cannot make ſuitable returns to your " Majeſty, for your moſt gracious promiſes of a " careful and diligent adminiſtration for the public " good, which we think ourſelves ſufficiently ſe- " cured of, by ſo ſolemn an ingagement, under " your moſt ſacred word. Your Majeſty has been " pleaſed to aſſure us of all we could wiſh, and re- " commend to us what we ought to deſire: and, " we doubt not, your pious intentions will procure " a bleſſing from heaven; and your Majeſty may " be aſſured, that reſolutions ſo becoming a Queen " of England, cannot but make the deepeſt im- " preſſions upon all hearts that are true to the in- " tereſt of their country.

The Queen's anſwer.

To this addreſs the Queen was pleaſed to anſwer, " That it was a great ſatisfaction to her to " find, that what ſhe had ſaid had their lordſhips " concurrence and approbation: and ſhe was wil- " ling to repeat to them, that ſhe ſhould always " hold very exactly to the aſſurances ſhe had given " them."

Q. ANN, AN' 1702.

Her Majeſty's earlieſt care was to cultivate the harmony and good intelligence which her glorious predeceſſor had eſtabliſhed with the States-general of the United-provinces; to which end, the third day after his deceaſe, ſhe wrote a letter to them, informing them of this melancholy event, and of her ſentiments in that critical juncture, of which, as it was the fore-runner of an embaſſy thither, I ſhall give the reader a copy.

The Queen's letter to the States-general.

High and mighty lords, our dear friends, allies, and confederates.

" It is not without a ſenſible grief, that we find " ourſelves obliged to acquaint you with the afflict- " ing news of the death of the moſt high and moſt " mighty Prince William III, King of England, " Scotland, France and Ireland, our moſt dear " brother, of glorious memory. He was ſeized, " on Wedneſday laſt, with a fever, which ſo much " increaſed the following days, that, notwith- " ſtanding all the remedies which were made uſe " of, he expired on Sunday, at eight o'clock in " the morning. This is certainly a very great loſs " to all Europe, and in particular to your State, " whoſe intereſt he always maintained with ſo " much valor, prudence, zeal and conduct: and " as it has pleaſed GOD, that we ſhould ſucceed " him in the throne of theſe kingdoms, we ſhall " alſo ſucceed him in the ſame inclination, to pre- " ſerve a conſtant union and amity with you, and " maintain all the alliances that have been made " with your State, by our ſaid moſt dear brother, and " other our predeceſſors; and likewiſe to concur " with you, in all the meaſures that ſhall be neceſ- " ſary, for the preſervation of the common liberty " of Europe, and for reducing the power of France " within due bounds. This we deſire you fully " to be aſſured of, and that we ſhall always look " upon the intereſts of England, and thoſe of your " State, as inſeparable, and united by ſuch ties as " cannot be broke, without the greateſt prejudice " to both nations. We pray GOD to keep you, " high and mighty lords, our moſt dear friends " and confederates, in his holy protection."

Given at our court at St. James's, March 10, anno domini 1702, and the firſt year of our reign.

Good effect it had in Holland.

This letter was ſent to mr. Stanhope, with new credentials, as her Majeſty's envoy extraordinary to the States-general of the United-provinces, and he immediately delivered both to their high-mightineſſes. The news of the King's death had caſt a great damp on their counſels, and occaſioned many and juſt alarms throughout all the provinces: they therefore made her Majeſty's letter public, to diſſipate the reports which had been induſtriouſly ſpread abroad, by the emiſſaries of France, that England would not proſecute the meaſures agreed upon between the late King and his confederates, to reduce the exorbitant power of France. This had, in a great meaſure, the deſired effect, in removing thoſe fears which ſome had too haſtily imbibed.

Reſolutions of the States-general.

This letter, likewiſe, made ſo lively an impreſſion on the minds of the States themſelves, and ſo far recovered their drooping ſpirits, that, on the twenty-fifth of March, N. S, the States of Holland and Weſt-Frieſland went in a body to the aſſembly of the States-General, where having condoled their irreparable loſs, they repreſented; " that in this " dangerous conjuncture, nothing could prove more " effectual, for their preſervation, than a perfect " unity, mutual confidence, and a vigorous reſolu-

(1) Biſhop Burnet obſerves, that there were two paſſages in this ſpeech, which were thought not ſo well conſidered: She aſſured them, her heart was intirely Engliſh; this was deemed a reflection on the late King; ſhe alſo added, that they might depend on her word: both theſe expreſſions had been in her father's firſt ſpeech, how little ſoever they were afterwards minded by him.

" tion

Q. Ann, An' 1702.

" tion, for the defenſe of their country, and by " adhering firmly to thoſe meaſures already entered " into, and ſuch as ſhould be judged farther expe- " dient for the good of the common cauſe, declaring " withal, that they were ready to perform their " part, and rather to ſacrifice all their blood and " treaſure, than to ſee their State, their liberty and " their religion deſtroyed."

This repreſentation was highly applauded by the States-General, who returned thanks to the States of Holland and Weſt-Frieſland, for their zealous reſolutions in that perilous conjuncture, and aſſured them of their hearty concurence therein, for the ſafety and welfare of the State, and ſtrenuouſly carrying on the common cauſe; and they ordered letters to be ſent to the other Provinces, to invite them to give the ſame aſſurances. The city of Amſterdam, to ſignalize themſelves more particularly on that occaſion, ſignified to the States-general, that they would not only conſent to ſuch reſolutions as ſhould be thought neceſſary, at that time, but would advance mony to thoſe provinces, which could not ſo readily furniſh out their quota's that ſhould be granted. Their high-mightineſſes, ſoon after publiſhed their reſolutions, at large, in print to the ſame effect, and concluded; " that they " were reſolved religiouſly to maintain their treaties " and alliances, entered into with their confederates; " ſtedfaſtly to purſue the contents thereof; vigorouſly " and cordially to put them in execution; to per- " ſevere in the meaſures already taken, and agree to " ſuch other meaſures as ſhould be thought conveni- " ent; and that notice ſhould be given of this their " true meaning and intention to all their allies and " confederates."

The duke of Bedford, and earl of Marlborough, made knights of the garter.

The earl made-captain general.

The 13th of March, the duke of Bedford, and the earl of Marlborough were elected knights-companions, of the moſt noble order of the Garter: and the next day, the Queen declared the earl of Marlborough, captain-general of all her forces in England, and of thoſe imployed abroad, in conjunction with her allies (1).

The earl of Marlborough ſent embaſſador and plenipotentiary to Holland.

The Queen, in the mean time, juſtly conſidering of how great importance it would be to the common cauſe, to have all apprehenſions and jealouſies intirely removed, reſolved to ſend an embaſſy to Holland, which would leave no farther grounds for them. For this weighty truſt, ſhe, following the example of her great predeceſſor, thought none more proper than the earl of Marlborough, whoſe conſummate genius had already approved him as great a miniſter, as a commander; qualities rarely to be found in one and the ſame perſon. Her Majeſty, therefore ſent the earl to Holland, with the character of embaſſador extraordinary and plenipotentiary to the States-General.

Arrives at the Hague.

His excellency arrived at the Hague, the 28th of March, N. S. and after having had ſeveral conferences with the grand-penſionary, and other miniſters, on the 31ſt, he was conducted to his public audience of the States-General, with great ſolemnity, and a numerous attendance, where he made the following ſpeech to their high-mightineſſes:

Has a pubilc audience.

His ſpeech to the States General.

High and mighty lords,

" It having pleaſed God, in his divine provi- " dence, to take to himſelf his Majeſty, King " William, of glorious memory, to the great loſs, " of his kingdom, the ſtate of your high and " mighty lordſhips, and of all Europe; the Queen, " my miſtreſs, who, as it has pleaſed the ſame pro- " vidence, ſucceeds on the throne of her anceſtors, " as your high and mighty lordſhips have been in- " formed by her Majeſty's letter, has commanded " me, at the ſame time I expreſs to your lord- " ſhips her Majeſty's great affliction upon this " ſubject, to make known to you the intereſt her " Majeſty takes in that which this great misfortune " occaſions to your lordſhips in particular.

Q. Ann, An' 1702.

" The firſt of her Majeſty's care was to let your " high and mighty lordſhips underſtand her ſincere " deſire and inclination to entertain, with you, " the ſame union, friendſhip, and ſtrict correſpon- " dence, as has ſubſiſted, during the courſe of the " preceeding reign, as being perſuaded, that nothing " in the world can be more uſeful and beneficial, " for the good of both nations, whoſe intereſts " are the ſame.

" Her Majeſty has, therefore, commanded me " to acquaint your high and mighty lordſhips, that " ſhe is firmly reſolved to contribute all that lies in " her power towards the advancing and increaſing " the ſaid union, friendſhip and correſpondence, " and to make that a conſtant maxim of her " government.

" Her Majeſty has farther ordered me to aſſure " your high and mighty lordſhips, that ſhe will not " only exactly and faithfully obſerve and execute " the treaties and alliances, made between the Kings " her predeceſſors, and your high and mighty " lordſhips, but that ſhe is likewiſe ready to renew " and confirm them: as alſo to concur with you in " all the meaſures, which have been taken by the " late King, of glorious memory, in purſuance of " the ſaid alliances.

" Her Majeſty is likewiſe diſpoſed to enter into " ſuch other ſtricter alliances and ingagements, " which ſhall moſt conduce to the intereſts of both " nations, the preſervation of the liberty of Eu- " rope, and reducing, within juſt bounds, the " exhorbitant power of France.

" In the mean time, her Majeſty is ready, from " this moment, and without any delay, to concur " with your high and mighty lordſhips, and the other " allies, to this end, with all her forces, as well " by ſea as by land.

" And her Majeſty, to ſhew her zeal the more, " has been pleaſed to authorize me, to concert " with your high and mighty lordſhips, the ne- " ceſſary operations.

" Theſe motives obliged her Majeſty to order " me to depart, with all diligence, in order to " come hither, and give your high and mighty " lordſhips all poſſible aſſurances thereof, without " ſtopping at the ordinary formalities.

" And I look upon it as an extraordinary happi- " neſs, that her Majeſty has done me the honor, to " imploy me in this commiſſion, ſince it gives me " the oportunity of expreſſing to your high and " mighty lordſhips, the zeal I have for your ſervice."

To this ſpeech, monſieur Dyckvelt, preſident of the aſſembly, made an anſwer, in the name of the States; " expreſſing their great affliction for " the death of the late King, their congratulation " of her Majeſty's ſucceſſion to the throne; their " hearty thanks for the aſſurance of her friendſhip;

The preſident of the States's anſwer.

(1) It has been reported that King William, but a ſhort time before his death, in the moſt earneſt and affectionate manner, recommended the earl of Marlborough to the Princeſs of Denmark, who was to ſucceed him, as the propereſt perſon to command her armies, in the war, which was upon the very point of breaking out, but of which, he plainly foreſaw, death would prevent his having any ſhare in the glory. Some ſay the King recommended him to her Majeſty on his death-bed, as the fitteſt perſon in all her dominions to conduct her armies, and preſide in her councils; as being a man of a cool head, and a warm heart, proper to incounter the genius of France, and ſuppreſs her deſigns of ſwallowing all Europe. How far this recommendation co-operated with her Majeſty's own judgment and choice is not material; but upon her acceſſion to the throne, ſhe caſt an early eye of favor upon him.

and

Q. ANN, AN' 1702.

" and their own reſolution, readily to concur with " her Majeſty in a vigorous proſecution of the com- " mon intereſt: " To which he added; " that his " perſon would be highly acceptable to them, not " only for the Queen's choice of him, and for the " ſake of King William who firſt inveſted him " with that character, but for his own merit."

Intriegues of France;

The French King, being not a little ſurpriz'd at theſe proceedings of the Queen of Great-Britain, and finding that the death of King William would not have the effect he had vainly imagin'd, put all the means in agitation he could poſſible contrive, to break the growing union between England and Holland (which was the only human means left to put a ſtop to thoſe great and pernicious deſigns he had formed). Among others, the very day the earl of Marlborough had his public audience, the ſieur de Barre, who was left at the Hague, by count d'Avaux, as ſecretary of the embaſſy, to take care of the affairs of France, and had now the title of reſident, preſented a long memorial to the States, to indeavor to draw them off from their ingagements with England. This memorial, however, had a contrary effect to what France hop'd from it. The States look'd, with indignation, on the contumelious inſinuations with which this memorial was ſtuff'd, as if they had acted only by the conſtraining influence of the late King, and received, with the like diſdain, the inſulting menaces contained in it, they therefore, returned an anſwer; ſo pertinent and becoming them, as daſh'd all hopes of France, on that ſide. In this memorial, they ſet forth, how exact they had been in obſerving their treaties and alliances, and juſtly retorted on the French, that if they had been really inclin'd to eſtabliſh the peace of Europe, and re-enter into their ancient amity with the republic, they would not have recali'd the count d'Avaux without at leaſt making ſome propoſals towards a peace. French writers, and particularly monſ. de Quincy, attribute this ſtedfaſtneſs of the States-general to the declaration made to them by the earl of Marlborough, in the name of the Queen, and ſay that was the cauſe of their rejecting every propoſal made by their grand Monarch.

Prove of no effect.

The earl of Marlborough returns to England.

The earl of Marlborough ſtaid but few days in Holland, tho' to very good purpoſe; and having ſettled ſeveral important affairs, with the deputies of the States, eſpecially for the opening of the campain, and the intended ſiege of Keyſerſwaert, which, by his lordſhip's advice, was to be the firſt ſcene of action, he left the Hague, in order to imbark for England, where he arrived in ſafety, the 5th of April.

Proceedings of the commons.

The houſe of commons were, all this while, purſuing the affairs recommended to their conſideration, from the throne, with great zeal and unanimity. The 14th of March, they reſolved to grant a ſupply, " for the better ſupport of her Majeſty's " houſhold, and of the honor and dignity of the " crown; " and the 17th they voted farther, " that towards the ſaid ſupply, the ſame revenues " which were payable to the late King, be granted " and continued to her preſent Majeſty, during her " life, from the death of his late Majeſty." The 19th, the commons paſs'd a bill, " for taking and " ſtating the public accounts of the kingdom," and gave leave for a bill to be brought in, " for " inabling her Majeſty to appoint commiſſioners " to treat for an union between the kingdoms of " England and Scotland," and appointed ſir Rowland Gwyn, mr. ſecretary Vernon, and colonel Stanhope to prepare the ſame. The 24th, and following days, the ſpeaker, and many other members, took the oath directed in an act made this ſeſſion, " for the farther ſecurity of his Majeſty's " perſon, and the ſucceſſion of the crown, in the " Proteſtant line, and for extinguiſhing the hopes " of the pretended Prince of Wales; " according to the alterations lately agreed to by the houſe: but ſome members abſented themſelves from the houſe, as it was believed, on purpoſe to decline it.

Q. ANN, AN' 1702.

The 29th, a proclamation was iſſued, declaring her Majeſty's pleaſure, that the ſolemnity of her coronation ſhould be performed on the 23d of April, being St. George's day.

Acts paſs'd.

The 30th, the Queen came to the houſe of lords, with the uſual ſolemnity, and the commons being preſent, gave the royal aſſent to " an act for the bet- " ter ſupport of her Majeſty's houſhold, and of the " honor and dignity of the crown; " and to ſeveral other public and private bills. After which the Queen made a ſpeech to both houſes; " returning " thanks to the commons, in particular, for con- " tinuing to her the ſame revenue they had granted " to the late King; and aſſuring them, that while

An inſtance of the Queen's generoſity.

" her ſubjects remained under the burden of ſuch " great taxes, ſhe would ſtreighten herſelf, in her " own expences, rather than not contribute all ſhe " could to their eaſe and relief, with a juſt regard " to the ſupport of the honor and dignity of the " crown: and that, tho' the revenue might fall " very ſhort of what it had formerly produc'd, " ſhe would give directions, that 100,000l. be " applied to the public ſervice in this year, out of the " revenue they had ſo unanimouſly given her (1). "

Compliments made by forein miniſters.

The 11th, of April, baron Spanheim, embaſſador extraordinary from the King of Pruſſia, and baron Schutz, envoy extraordinary from the Elector of Hanover, had private audiences of the Queen, and of his royal highneſs, Prince George of Denmark, to condole the death of the late King, and congratulate her Majeſty's acceſſion to the crown; as had, likewiſe, at different times, count Wratiſlaw, envoy extraordinary, and mr. Hoffman, reſident from the Emperor, with ſeveral other forein miniſters.

King William's funeral.

The 12th at night, the funeral obſequies of his deceaſed Majeſty, William III, of glorious memory, were ſolemnized in the collegiate church of Weſtminſter. The proceſſion began from Kenſington, whence the royal corps was carried in an open chariot, attended by a numerous train of the ſervants of the royal family, the judges, the lords ſpiritual and temporal, and the great officers in their coaches. The pall was ſupported by ſix dukes, his royal higneſs, Prince George, was chief mourner, ſupported by two dukes, and followed by ſixteen of the firſt earls of England, as aſſiſtants, and after them, the gentlemen and grooms of the bed-chamber. During the time of divine ſervice, the body was depoſited in Henry VII's chapel, and afterwards interr'd, with the uſual ſolemnities, in the ſame vault, with King Charles II, and Queen Mary, his royal conſort.

Preferments.

The 14th, the duke of Devon was conſtituted lord-ſteward of the houſhold, the earl of Jerſey, lord-chamberlain, the earl of Bradford, treaſurer of the houſhold, ſir Edward Seymour, comptroler, and Peregrine Bertie, eſq; vice-chamberlain. The 17th, ſir Edward Seymour was admited into the privy-council, and, the ſame day, her Majeſty there declared his royal highneſs, Prince George of Denmark, generaliſſimo of all her forces, by ſea and land: and, on the 20th, the duke of Ormond was appointed commander in chief of all her Majeſty's land-forces on board the fleet. The next day,

(1) By this unexpected act of generoſity her Majeſty very much indear'd herſelf to all her people, and both houſes of parliament acknowledg'd it by addreſſes, to which her Majeſty returned moſt gracious anſwers.

Q. Ann, An' 1702.

her Majeſty cauſed the name of the lords Sommers and Hallifax, with ſeveral others (1), to be left out of the liſt of her privy-council, and their places to be fill'd up, with the marquis of Normanby, the earl of Abingdon, ſir John Leviſon Gower, and John How, eſq. At the ſame time, the Queen deliver'd the privy-ſeal to the marquis of Normanby (2), and the ſeal of the duchy of Lancaſter, to ſir John Leviſon Gower.

East and West-Jerſey ſurrender'd to the crown.

The 17th of April, ſir Thomas Lane, and William Dockwra, eſq; with the reſt of the proprietors of the provinces of Eaſt and Weſt New-Jerſey, in America, preſented to her Majeſty in council, an inſtrument under their hands and ſeals, by virtue of which they ſurrendered their rights to the government of thoſe provinces; which her Majeſty was graciouſly pleaſed to accept of, aſſuring them, at the ſame time, that their properties ſhould be intirely preſerved, and the government of thoſe colonies brought under a due regulation, by her Majeſty's taking them under her ſpecial care and direction.

About this time, the Queen wrote a letter to the parliament of Scotland, in anſwer to one they had written to the late King, concerning their trade to Africa and the Indies, and the union with England, in which ſhe told them:

The Queen's letter to the parliament of Scotland.

"That ſhe would maintain the ſovereignty and "independency of that her ancient kingdom, and "be as tender of their rights, as of her kingdom "of England; that ſhe would govern each king-"dom according to their reſpective laws, and in-"deavor to avoid all miſunderſtandings and dif-"ferences between them; to which end ſhe would "indeavor to eſtabliſh an union between them: "that the parliament of England having ſhewn "ſuch an inclination towards an union, ſhe hoped "the parliament of Scotland would not obſtruct "the deſign: that the late King had ordered, that "none of the ſubjects of Scotland ſhould be im-"preſs'd for the Engliſh ſea-ſervice, and ſhe would "continue to protect them in this matter; ſhe "regreted their loſes and diſappointments, in their "trade to Africa and the Indies, and in ſettling a "colony in America, which was now a misfor-"tune to the whole kingdom, and ſhe would "concur in any propoſals for their reparation and "aſſiſtance; and ſhould incourage not only the "trade of that company, but of the whole, and "to the utmoſt of her power promote the welfare "of her people."

The late King's papers inſpected into.

A report having been induſtriouſly ſpread; "that a deſign had been formed (with the know-"ledge and approbation of the late King) to ex-"clude the Queen from ſucceeding to the crown, "(ſome added to impriſon the Queen and to bring "the houſe of Hanover immediately into the ſuc-"ceſſion") the lord-preſident, the lord-ſteward, the lord-chamberlain, the earl of Marlborough, and the earl of Albermarle, were authorized by her Majeſty, to inſpect the late King's papers, it having been ſaid, that ſome writings were in his ſtrong box, which would diſcover the whole ſcheme (3).

But to the honor of their late ſoverein, they ſeverally declared, to the houſe of peers, "that "among the late King's papers, they did not find "any paper or papers, in the leaſt tending to the "prejudice of her Majeſty, her ſucceſſion to "the crown, or to her prejudice in any reſpect "whatſoever, or which might give any ground "or color for ſuch report." Upon which a vote paſs'd in the houſe of lords, "that theſe reports "were groundleſs, falſe, villanous and ſcandalous; "to the diſhonor of the late King's memory, and "highly tending to the diſſervice of her preſent "Majeſty:" and it was order'd, that the matter of fact, and the reſolution of the houſe thereupon, be laid before her Majeſty, with their humble deſire, "that ſhe would be pleas'd to order mr. "Attorney-general to proſecute, with the utmoſt "ſeverity of law, the authors or publiſhers of ſuch "ſcandalous reports:" to which her Majeſty anſwered, that "ſhe was very ready to do any thing "of this kind, and would give directions accor-"dingly."

Q. Ann, An' 1702.

Reſolution of the houſe of peers thereupon.

Some time after, dr. Drake was charged with inſinuating the ſame thing, in a pamphlet he publiſh'd, intitled; "the hiſtory of the laſt parliament," and was thereupon brought before the houſe of peers, where, after having taken his examination, it was reſolved, "that the ſaid pamphlet contained in-"ſinuations ſcandalous and dangerous, tending to "alienate the affections of the ſubjects from her "Majeſty, and to diſturb the peace and quiet of "the kingdom:" and they addreſs'd her Majeſty, to give orders to the attorney-general, to proſecute the ſaid dr. Drake, and all others concern'd in thoſe ſcandalous reports.

A pamphlet of dr. Drake's cenſured.

The 23d, being St. George's day, her Majeſty's coronation was perform'd with great ſplendor and pomp. Of which ſolemnity, as there had not been a coronation of a ſoverein Queen alone, ſince that of Queen Elizabeth, I ſhall give the reader a brief account.

Her Majeſty being come to Weſtminſter-hall, about eleven o'Clock, and having retired into the court of wards, the nobility, and thoſe who formed the firſt part of the proceſſion, being marſhal'd in order, by the heralds, came down into Weſtminſter-hall, where her Majeſty, being ſeated under her ſtate, the ſwords and ſpurs were preſented to her, and laid upon the table at the upper end of the hall.

Then the dean and prebendaries of Weſtminſter, having brought the crown, and other regalia, with the bible, chalice and patten, they were preſented ſeverally to her Majeſty, and quickly after were, together with the ſwords and ſpurs, delivered to the lords appointed to carry them.

The proceſſion, hereupon, began in the following manner; drums and trumpets: ſix clerks in chancery, two a-breaſt; chaplains having dignities; aldermen of London; maſters in chancery; the ſolicitor and attorney-general; the Queen's ancient ſerjeants; gentlemen of the privy-chamber; judges; children of Weſtminſter, and of the Queen's chapel; choir of Weſtminſter, and gentlemen of the chapel; prebendaries of Weſtminſter; maſter of the jewel-houſe, and privy-counſelors not peers, all in their proper habits, as uſual at coronations.

(1) This was look'd upon as a mark of her Majeſty's inclination to favor the high-church or tory-party, preferably to the low-churchmen or whigs.

(2) It is obſervable, that ſome years before the Queen was married to Prince George, the marquis of Normanby, then earl of Mulgrave, and a nobleman of ſingular accompliſhments, both of mind and perſon, and of a plentiful fortune, aſpired ſo high as to marry the lady Ann: but tho' his addreſſes to her were check'd as ſoon as diſcover'd, yet the Princeſs had ever an eſteem for him. Boyer's reign of Queen Ann p. 14.

(3) This pretended ſcheme was ſaid to be: "that the Elector of Hanover ſhould be declared King William's immediate "ſucceſſor: that, in order to effect this, the troops of Hanover and Zell were to file off towards the ſea-coaſt of Holland: "that ſoon a ter the King's return from thence, a ſham-inſurection was to be excited, either in Scotland or Ireland, to give the "King a colorable pretenſe, for inviting over the Hanoverian troops, with their Prince to command them, and that ſeveral "peers, who were privy to this deſign, were to be made lords-lieutenants of counties, in order to influence the elections for "members of a new parliament. Boyer's reign of Queen Ann. p. 18.

Then

Q. ANN, AN' 1702.

Then two purſuivants of arms; baroneſſes and barons, in crimſon-velvet robes, with their coronets in their hands, two a-breaſt (as all the peers and peereſſes went); biſhops: two purſuivants of arms; viſcounteſſes and viſcounts; two heralds of arms; counteſſes and earls; two heralds of arms; marchioneſſes; heralds of arms; ducheſſes and dukes; two kings of arms with their coronets; the lord privy-ſeal, archbiſhop of York, lord keeper, archbiſhop of Canterbury, two perſons repreſenting the dukes of Acquitain and Normandy, and his royal highneſs, Prince George, his train born.

Next the lords who bore the regalia; viz. the earl of Dorſet, St. Edward's ſtaff; the lord viſcount Longueville, the ſpurs; the earl of Huntingdon, the ſcepter with the croſs; the earls of Pembroke, Derby, and Kent, the three ſwords; then the deputy-garter, king of arms, with his coronet, between the uſher of the black-rod and the lord-mayor of London; the lord great chamberlain ſingle (preceeded by the vice-chamberlain;) the earl of Oxford, with the ſword of ſtate, between the duke of Bedford, high conſtable for that day, and the earl of Carliſle, earl-marſhal; the duke of Devonſhire, lord-high-ſteward, on that occaſion, with the crown, between the duke of Richmond, bearing the ſcepter with the dove, and the duke of Somerſet, lord-preſident, with the orb; the biſhop of Worceſter with the bible, between the biſhop of Sarum, with the patten, and the biſhop of Rocheſter, dean of Weſtminſter, with the chalice.

The Queen, with her royal robes of crimſon velvet, wearing the collar of the order of the garter (as all the knights of the order did) and, on her head, a rich circlet of gold and diamonds, ſupported by the biſhops of Durham and Exeter, under a canopy born by twelve barons of the Cinque-ports, her train born by the ducheſs of Somerſet, aſſiſted by the lady Elizabeth Seymour, the lady Mary Pierpoint, the lady Mary Hyde, and mrs. Bridget Oſborn; and by the earl of Jerſey, lord-chamberlain; the ſerjeants at arms, and gentlemen penſioners, going on each ſide of the regalia and canopy.

Next followed the captain of her Majeſty's guard, between the captain of the yeomen of the guard, and the captain of the band of gentlemen penſioners, with the firſt lady of the bed-chamber, and two of her Majeſty's women.

Thus the whole proceſſion march'd on foot (1), upon blue cloath, to Weſtminſter-abby, the houſes, on each ſide, being crouded with vaſt numbers of ſpectators, expreſſing their great joy and ſatisfaction, by loud and repeated acclamations.

Being entered the church, and all duly ſeated and placed, the archbiſhop of Canterbury, who perform'd this grand ſolemnity, began with the recognition, which ended with a great ſhout, from each ſide of the theatre: then her Majeſty made her firſt oblation, and the lords who bore the regalia preſented them at the altar. The litany was ſung on the eaſt ſide of the theatre, by the biſhops of Litchfield and Lincoln; and, after the epiſtle, goſpel, and Nicene creed, the archbiſhop of York preached on the following text; viz. Iſaiah xlix, 23. "Kings ſhall be thy nurſing fathers, and Queens "thy nurſing mothers.

The ſermon being ended, the Queen repeated and ſigned the declaration or teſt eſtabliſhed by act of parliament, then took the coronation-oath, and, in King Edward's chair, placed in the middle of the area, before the altar, was anointed and preſented with the ſpurs, girt with the ſword, and veſted with her purple robes; and, having received the ring, the orb and ſcepters, was ſolemnly crown'd, about four o'clock, with loud acclamations, the drums beating, trumpets ſounding, and the great guns being diſcharged: whereupon the peers, peereſſes, &c. put on their coronets, and the biſhops their caps. Q. ANN, AN' 1702.

Then the holy bible was preſented to her Majeſty, and ſhe vouchſafed to kiſs the biſhops; and, being inthroned, firſt his royal highneſs, Prince George, then the archbiſhops and biſhops, and laſtly the temperal lords, did her homage, and ſeemingly kiſs'd her Majeſty's left cheek, and afterwards touch'd the crown, while the treaſurer of the houſhold threw about the coronation medals.

Her Majeſty then made her ſecond oblation, and received the holy communion, and, after the final prayers, retired into King Edward's chapel, where ſhe was veſted in her robes of purple velvet. The whole proceſſion being hereupon again put in order, her Majeſty returned to Weſtminſter-hall, wearing her crown of ſtate, and the peers and peereſſes, and kings of arms their coronets.

The Queen dined at a table at the upper end of the hall, with his royal highneſs, Prince George, on her left hand, and the nobility, with other perſons of quality, were ſeated at their reſpective tables, which were all ready furniſhed before their coming in. The hot meat, or firſt courſe, for her Majeſty's table, for which ſpace was left, was ſerved up with the proper ceremony, being preceded by the officers, &c. of the board of green-cloth, and by the lord high-ſteward, between the lord-high-conſtable, and earl-marſhal, on horſe-back. Juſt before the ſecond courſe, Charles Dymmock, eſq; her Majeſty's champion, in compleat armor, between the lord high-conſtable and earl marſhal aforementioned, performed the challenge: after which the kings of arms and heralds proclaimed her Majeſty's ſtile in Latin, French and Engliſh. The parliament being then ſiting, the houſe of commons were ſeated in the gallery, on the eaſt ſide of Weſtminſter-hall, and in the north croſs of the abby, and were entertained at dinner, in the exchequer-chamber.

The dinner being ended, and every thing performed, as uſual, on the like occaſions, with great ſplendor and magnifience, her Majeſty returned to St. James's, between eight and nine in the evening. The day concluded with bonfires, illuminations, ringing of bells, and other demonſtrations of a general ſatisfaction and joy.

The Queen forms her miniſtry.

The ceremony of the coronation being over, the Queen, ſoon after, ſet about to form her miniſtry: in the late reign ſhe had not been made acquainted with public affairs; nor did the miniſtry take much care to oblige thoſe who were about her. The earl of Marlborough was the only perſon near her, for whom the court ſhew'd any great regard. Her Majeſty's court, as Princeſs, was then very thin; ſhe lived in a due abſtraction from buſineſs; ſo that ſhe neither gave jealouſy, nor incouraged faction: yet theſe things (ſays biſhop Burnet) had made thoſe impreſſions on her, that had, at firſt, ill effects, which were ſoon obſerved and remedied. I ſhall not enter into a particular detail of all the alterations the Queen made, nor of the motives which may probably have induced her to ſome things; but ſhall confine myſelf to what more immediately concerns the moſt material parts of this hiſtory. Among other changes, the lord Godolphin was made lord-treaſurer, at which he ſhewed an uneaſineſs, and long reſiſted the acceptance of it; but the earl of Marlborough preſs'd it, in ſo poſi-

The lord Godolphin made lord-treaſurer.

(1) Her Majeſty only, not being well enough to walk, was carried in a low open chair.

tive

Q. Ann, An' 1702.

tive a manner, that he inſiſted upon it, he could not go beyond ſea, to command the army, unleſs the treaſury was in his hands; by which he might be ſure that remittances would be punctually made him.

The Prince of Denmark ſaid to deſign commanding the army.

I have already ſaid, that the earl of Marlborough was declared captain-general; but the Prince had the title of generaliſſimo of all the Queen's forces, by ſea or land, and ſoon after was made lord-high-admiral; and the duke of Ormond was appointed to command in chief a land-army, which was to be put on board the fleet. It was for ſome time, reported, that the Prince would command the armies of the allies, in perſon; but this ſoon fell away, and it was ſaid, on the contrary, that the Dutch were not willing to truſt their forces to the command of a Prince, who might be above being limited by their inſtruction, or bound to obey their commands.

The Dutch againſt it.

The Queen made the earl of Nottingham, and ſir Charles Hedges, her principal ſecretaries of ſtate, in the room of the earl of Mancheſter and mr. Vernon, the later of whom, however, was made one of the tellers of the Exchequer. This was again interpreted as a mark of her Majeſty's inclination to favor the high-church party: but what inſued, as plainly evinced ſhe was then, at leaſt, biaſſed by no party, but was reſolved to extend her favor to men of merit in both: for ſhe continued moſt of the great officers of the houſhold, all the judges, except two, and moſt of the lords-lieutenants of counties; nor did ſhe make any change in the forein miniſtry. It was generally thought, that the earl of Rocheſter (1), (who was continued lord-lieutenant of Ireland) and his party, were for ſevere methods, and for a more intire change, to be carried quite thro' all ſubaltern imployments; but that the earl of Marlborough, and the lord Godolphin, were for more moderate proceedings. And hence probably inſued that diviſion, which, at this time aroſe among the courtiers, and the rivalſhip about the Queen's favor, between the earls of Rocheſter and Marlborough, the latter of which ſoon got the aſcendant. The earl of Rocheſter, who was the Queen's maternal uncle, had great expectations of being prime-miniſter on her Majeſty's acceſſion, not only on account of his being ſo nearly related to her, but as he was a nobleman of great capacity and well verſed in affairs of ſtate: but this he could never expect to poſſeſs, if the earl of Marlborough was general of the confederate army abroad, and the treaſury was put into the hands of the lord Godolphin (whoſe only ſon had married the earl's eldeſt daughter) and if (which was ſtill a greater bar to his expectations) the counteſs of Marlborough, the Queen's greateſt favorite, ſhould ſtill continue to have her ear, and a great influence in admiting or excluding whom ſhe pleaſed from her preſenſe; it is no wonder, therefore, that we find the earl of Rocheſter oppoſing the ſchemes formed by the earl of Marlborough.

It was natural, on the other hand, for the earl of Marlborough to take ſuch meaſures as he thought moſt conducive to his deſign of diſmiſſing the earl of Rocheſter from public affairs; and it was, beyond all doubt, for this reaſon, that he obtain'd an early promiſe of the Queen, to make the earl of Godolphin, lord-treaſurer, the very poſt the earl of Rocheſter expected, and which is uſually confer'd on the prime miniſter. By this ſtep the earl of Marlborough not only prevented this important poſt from falling into the hands of his antagoniſt, but, as he probably foreſaw, it ſo diſguſted him, that he retired from court, the very thing he had to wiſh. A farther advantage the earl of Marlborough had by puting the ſtaff into the earl of Godolphin's hand, was, that he was ſure of a friend, who, with the counteſs, would be able to preſerve his intereſt with the Queen, in his abſenſe, and, what was more than all, he was thereby certain of punctual remitances for the payment of the army under his command, and to promote all his deſigns for the public good, and the honor and advantage of the nation.

Q. Ann, An' 1720.

Debates, in council, about declaring war.

But to return to other affairs: the ſecond of May, it was moved, in council, to declare war againſt France and Spain. Some members of that illuſtrious body repreſented the inconveniences which would attend it, and moved, that it would be ſafer for the Engliſh, to act in this conjuncture, as auxiliaries only. But the dukes of Somerſet and Devonſhire, and the earls of Marlborough and Pembroke, maintained the contrary ſtrenuouſly, and ſhewed, not only that it was beſeeming the honor of the nation, to make good the late King's alliances; but that France would never be reduced, within due bounds, unleſs the Engliſh acted as principals in the war; and they at length brought the majority of the board to their opinion; upon which, her Majeſty gave order, for drawing up a declaration of war againſt France and Spain. The management and operations of the war was, likewiſe, warmly debated the ſame day: the grand queſtion was; whether we ſhould make our chief effort in Flanders, and our general have the command of the confederate army there; or if we ſhould only furniſh the Dutch with our quota of troops, and ſerve them to defend their country, who were more immediately concerned in it; while we carried on the war by ſea, and made deſcents on the coaſts of France and Spain, and in the Spaniſh Weſt-Indies, as was done in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, when the nation almoſt paid the charges of the war by the captures they made, and the plunder they took, in the Spaniſh-towns in Europe and America.

And about the operation of it.

It was obſerved by the earls of Rocheſter, Nottingham, and ſome others, that, in the late war, the Emperor, and ſeveral other powers ingaged in the confederacy, had been very deficient in furniſhing their quotas of troops, whereby many advantages had been loſt. That the deficiences in their troops were afterwards ſupplied by the Engliſh, and the burden of the whole war, in a manner, thrown upon them. The Engliſh, like men of honor, but very weak politicians, anticipated their revenues, and mortgaged their country for ages in the quarrel, tho' they were more remotely concerned, in the event of the war, than any of the allies; only it had been repreſented, that as the King of England was at the head of the confederate army, we muſt ſupport him, let the deficiences of the reſt of the allies be never ſo great, leſt his Majeſty's, and the nation's honor ſhould ſuffer any diminution; and the caſe would probably be the ſame again, if an Engliſh general ſhould command the confederate army in Flanders: beſide, the attacking the French King, on that ſide, had been, long ſince, reſembled to the taking a bull by the horns: ſo ſoon as one town was taken, another fortreſs, roſe up within a mile or two, and it muſt require a war of many years to penetrate into the heart of his country: that it might be attack'd in any other part with more hopes of ſucceſs: that all the Spaniſh coaſts, in Europe and America, lay open to us, and might be inſulted and plunder'd by our naval force,

(1) The continuator of Rapin, in French, ſays, that the firſt time this nobleman deſired to be admited to her Majeſty's preſence, after her acceſſion to the crown, ſhe anſwer'd: " I will not ſee him, 'till he has altered his mind, and renounced his " principles; but if he will comply with that, I promiſe him a favorable reception. B. 26. p. 449.

with

Q. Ann, An' 1702.

with a ſmall land-army on board; and this would oblige the enemy to keep up numerous bodies, to defend countries of ſo vaſt an extent: and there was this farther reaſon for carrying on the war at ſea, rather than land; that the mony would all circulate among us, that was laid out on a ſea-war; whereas that which was ſent to Flanders never returned. Beſide, by the treaty of alliance, all the places we could take, in the Spaniſh Weſt-Indies, were to fall to the ſhare of the Engliſh; but we were to gain nothing by a war in the Netherlands, how ſucceſsful ſoever we might be. It was farther urged, that, by keeping a ſquadron in the Weſt-Indies, we might probably interrupt their plate-fleets, or, at leaſt, prevent their coming to Europe, and cut off thoſe treaſures the French King principally relied on, to carry on the war; which would ſoon oblige him to come to our own terms.

The earl of Marlborough, the lord Godolphin, and ſeveral more, urged, on the other hand; that tho' we might haraſs the French and Spaniſh coaſts, put them to a great expence, and make ſome profitable captures, yet this would never bring the war to a concluſion: whereas a victory or two obtained in Flanders, would bring the French King upon his knees at once: that the Dutch were a cautious people, and, if they had the direction of the war, on that ſide, they would probably content themſelves, with taking ſome towns on the frontiers, and ſo ſecure themſelves a barrier againſt France, but would not eaſily be brought to venture a battle, and conſequently we muſt expect a lingring war; whereas, if our general commanded in chief in Flanders, and we furniſh'd them with ſuch forces as would render them abundantly ſuperior to the enemy, they might be brought to conſent to hazard a general battle, and a good peace obtained in a little time. Theſe reaſons had a plauſible appearance, and were not without grounds, on both ſides, as the ſequel, which is the beſt illuſtration that can be given of them, will ſhew: tho' it is hard to determine, even after having ſeen the events, whether the meaſures that were taken, or thoſe which were rejected, were the moſt reaſonable. The former went a great way, and would, infallibly have gain'd the point aimed at, had they not been cut ſhort: but whether the latter might not have obtained the ſame, in leſs time, and at a leſs expence, can only be the ſubject of conjecture.

Her Majeſty was, however, graciouſly pleaſed, notwithſtanding the reſolutions taken in council, to communicate her intention to both houſes of parliament, together with a convention between her Majeſty, the Emperor, and the States-general, concerning the intended meaſures for a war: this convention, which was laid before the commons, the 2d of May, being read, they unanimouſly reſolved to addreſs the Queen, "to return her Majeſty thanks for "communicating to them her intentions of de-"claring war, in conjunction with her allies, againſt "the French King, and his grandſon: and to "aſſure her, that they would, to the utmoſt, ſup-"port and aſſiſt her Majeſty, in carrying on the "war" (1); and the lords likewiſe addreſs'd the Queen on the ſame account.

The war approved by parliament.

The Queen, being thus aſſured of the concurence and ſupport of the commons, cauſed the declaration, which ſhe had before given directions to be drawn up, to be ſolemnly proclaimed, the fourth, before the gate of the royal-palace of St. James, at Chancery-lane-end, and at the Royal-exchange; of which declaration, as it ſhews the motives which induced her Majeſty to enter into this war, it will be neceſſary to give the reader a copy.

Q. Ann, An' 1702.

Her Majeſty's declaration of war, againſt France and Spain.

ANN, R.

"WHEREAS it has pleaſed Almighty "God, to call us to the government of "theſe realms, at a time, when our late dear bro-"ther, William III, of glorious memory, had, "in purſuance of repeated advices of the par-"liament of this kingdom, enter'd into ſolemn "treaties of alliance with the Emperor of Ger-"many, the States-general of the United-provinces, "and other Princes and Potentates, for preſerving "the liberty and ballance of Europe, and for re-"ducing the exorbitant power of France; which "treaties are grounded upon the unjuſt uſurpations "and incroachments of the French King, who "had taken, and ſtill keeps poſſeſſion of a great "part of the Spaniſh dominions, exerciſing an ab-"ſolute authority over all that Monarchy, having "ſeized Milan, and the Spaniſh Low-countries, by "his armies, and made himſelf maſter of Cadiz, "of the entrance into the Mediterranean, and of the "ports in the Spaniſh Weſt-Indies, by his fleets, "every where deſigning to invade the liberties of "Europe, and to obſtruct the freedom of naviga-"tion and commerce: And it being provided, by "the third and fourth articles of the foremention'd "alliance; that if, in the ſpace of two months, "which are ſome time ſince expired, the injuries "complained of were not remedied, the parties "concerned ſhould mutually aſſiſt each other, "with their whole ſtrength: and whereas, inſtead "of giving the ſatisfaction that ought juſtly to be "expected, the French King has not only proceeded "to farther violences, but has added thereunto a "great affront and indignity to us, and our king-"doms, in taking upon him to declare the pretend-"ed Prince of Wales, King of England, Scotland "and Ireland, and has alſo influenced Spain, to "concur in the ſame affront and indignity, as well "as in his other oppreſſions; we find ourſelves ob-"liged, for maintaining the public faith, for vin-"dicating the honor of our crown, and for pre-"venting the miſchiefs which all Europe is threat-"ned with, to declare, and we do, hereby, accor-"dingly declare war, againſt France and Spain. "And placing our intire confidence in the help of "Almighty God, in ſo juſt and neceſſary an "undertaking, we will, in conjunction with our "allies, vigorouſly proſecute the ſame, by ſea and "land, being aſſured of the ready concurence and "aſſiſtance of our ſubjects, in a cauſe they have ſo "openly and ſo heartily eſpouſed. And we do "hereby will and require our lord-high-admiral "of England, our general of our forces, our lieute-"nants of our ſeveral counties, governors of our "forts and gariſons, and all other officers and "ſoldiers under them, by ſea and land, to do and "execute all acts of hoſtility, in proſecution of this "war, againſt France and Spain, their vaſſals and "ſubjects, and to oppoſe their attempts; willing "and requiring all our ſubjects to take notice of the "ſame, whom we henceforth ſtrictly forbid to hold "any correſpondence or communication, with France "or Spain, or their ſubjects. But becauſe there are "remaining in our kingdoms many of the ſubjects "of France and Spain, we do declare our royal in-"tention to be, that all the ſubjects of France or "Spain, who ſhall demean themſelves dutifully to-"wards us, ſhall be ſafe, in their perſons and eſtates.

Given at our court at St. James's, the fourth day of May, 1702, in the firſt year of our reign.

(1) On this occaſion a motion was made for an addreſs: "that no perſon be an officer in England or Ireland, in her Ma-"jeſty's new raiſed forces, but ſuch as were born in England, Scotland or Ireland, or the dominions thereunto belonging, or of "Engliſh parents, unleſs they were before in half-pay"; this motion being however ſtrenuouſly oppoſed, when the queſtion was put, it paſs'd in the negative.

Q. Ann, An° 1702.

The Emperor and the States-general publiſh'd their declarations of war, the ſame day: but the French King did not publiſh his till two months after however, I ſhall inſert the latter; here, that the reader may, at once, ſee the allegations on both ſides.

The Emperor and the Dutch proclaim war againſt France and Spain.

The French King's declaration of war.

By the King,

" Altho' the treaty concluded at Ryſwick, in " a time when the King, by the ſuperiority of his " forces, was in a condition to have given laws to " the neighboring Princes that were jealous of his " power, was a certain proof of the ſincere deſire " that his Majeſty had, always to give peace to his " ſubjects, and to reſtore peace to Europe: his " Majeſty, nevertheleſs, finds that the Emperor, " without any lawful right to the Spaniſh monarchy, " has put himſelf in a condition, by the augmen- " tation of his troops, by treaties and alliances with " ſeveral Princes, and particularly with England, " and the States-general of the United-provinces, " to trouble the repoſe of Europe, by a new war, " as unjuſt as it is ill-grounded. They have begun " hoſtilites on all ſides, againſt, and contrary to " the treaties ſo ſolemnly ſworn to. All Europe " is witneſs of his Majeſty's moderation. He has " ſeen places attack'd, advantageous poſts ſeiz'd, " convoys ſtopped, and priſoners taken, before any " declaration of war, and at a time when his Ma- " jeſty was indeavoring by his embaſſadors and " envoys to preſerve the peace. All theſe ſteps " being ſo contrary to ſincere dealing, and their " own intereſts, and the manifeſto's and declarations " of war of the Emperor, England, and the States- " general having been publiſhed, his Majeſty finds " himſelf under an indiſpenſable neceſſity, in order " to preſerve his own, and the King, his grandſon's " dominions, to arm on his ſide, and to make " levies ſufficient to oppoſe the undertakings of the " common enemies. And for that end, his Ma- " jeſty, is reſolved to imploy all his forces, by " land and ſea; and, by the help of divine protec- " tion, which he implores, on the juſtice of his cauſe, " to declare war againſt the Emperor, England, " and the States-general of the United-provinces, " and the Princes their allies. His Majeſty orders " and commands all his ſubjects, vaſſals and ſer- " vants, to cruiſe upon the ſubjects of the Emperor, " England and Holland, and on the ſubjects of " their allies; and ſtrictly forbids his ſubjects to " have henceforth any communication, commerce " and intelligence with them, on pain of death: and, " therefore, his Majeſty has revoked, and does revoke " by theſe preſents, all permiſſions, paſſports, " ſafe-guards, and ſafe-conducts, which may have " been granted by him, or his lieutenant-generals, " and other his officers, contrary to theſe preſents; " and has declared, and does declare them to be " void and of no effect and force: forbiding all " perſons whatſoever to have any regard unto them. " His Majeſty orders and commands, the admiral, " marſhals of France, governors and lieutenant- " generals for his Majeſty, in his provinces and " armies, marſhals de camp, colonels, camp-maſters, " captains, chiefs, and leaders of his Majeſty's " ſoldiers, both horſe and foot, French and ſtrangers, " and all his other officers to whom it may pertain, " what is herein contained, to cauſe execute, each " in his office, within their towns and juriſdictions. " For ſuch is his Majeſty's will and pleaſure, that " theſe preſents be publiſhed in all the maritime, and " other towns, and in all ports, havens, and other " places of the kingdom and land, under his obe- " dience, where need ſhall be. To the end that " none may pretend ignorance".

Given at Marly, July 3, 1702.

Sign'd Lewis.

Underneath Chamillard.

The 5th of May, the commons reſolved to preſent an addreſs to her Majeſty; " returning the " thanks of their houſe, for her great zeal for the " ſucceſſion of the crown in the Proteſtant-line, ex- " preſs'd in her Majeſty's late order in council, di- " recting the Princeſs Sophia to be prayed for". And the lords addreſs'd the Queen on the ſame account.

Q. Ann, An° 1702.

The Princeſs Sophia ord'r'd to be pray'd for.

The 6th her Majeſty came to the houſe of peers, and gave the royal aſſent: " 1. to the land-tax-act " for 4 s. in the pound: 2. to an act for making " good deficiences, and preſerving the public " credit: 3. to an act for inabling her Majeſty to " appoint commiſſioners to treat of an union, be- " tween the kingdoms of England and Scotland;" and to ſome other acts.

Acts paſs'd.

War being declared, a proclamation was iſſued, the 15th, " for recalling all Engliſh ſeamen, that were " abroad, and requiring them not enter into forein " ſervice". The ſame day, another proclamation was publiſh'd " for obſerving a general faſt on the " 10th of June, for the ſucceſs of the war".

Proclamations.

The 21ſt, both houſes joined in an addreſs to the Queen, in which they repreſented; " that nothing " would more contribute to the effectual carrying " on the war, and reducing her enemies to the " greateſt ſtreights, than an intire prohibition of all " correſpondence with France and Spain, on the " part of the allies; and therefore, they humbly " adviſed her Majeſty, to ingage the Emperor, " the States-general, and her other allies, to join " with her, in prohibiting all intercourſe, between " the ſubjects of her Majeſty and her allies, and the " ſubjects of France and Spain; and alſo to con- " cert ſuch methods with the States-general, as " might moſt effectually ſecure the trade of her " ſubjects and her allies". To all which, her Majeſty readily promiſed to comply: adding, that ſhe was too much concerned for the public welfare, to omit any neceſſary precautions for the protection of our trade. But notwithſtanding this matter was, afterwards, ſtrenuouſly urg'd by the earl of Marlborough, the Dutch were too ſelf-intereſted to ingage in a total prohibition of commerce and correſpondence with France and Spain.

An addreſs of both houſes of parliament.

Her Majeſty's anſwer.

The lords having, on the 23d, made ſome amendments to a bill paſſed by the commons, for the incouragement of privateers, to which amendments the commons had refuſed their concurrence, their lordſhips preſented an addreſs to the Queen, in which, they returned her Majeſty their humble thanks, for her gracious anſwer to the addreſs of both houſes, particularly for the aſſurance, that ſhe would not omit any neceſſary precautions for the protection of trade. And they beg'd leave to repreſent to her Majeſty, that the ſea-preparations of her Majeſty's enemies being ſuch, as ſeemed not to be intended for incountering and fighting her royal navy, but rather for making a piratical war, to the interruption of the commerce of the ſubjects of her Majeſty, and her allies; it was, in their opinion, highly requiſite for the public ſervice, that her Majeſty would be pleaſed to give all poſſible incouragement to her ſubjects, to arm, and ſet out private men of war.

Addreſs of the lords about privateers.

And whereas (continued they) by the ſixth article of the treaty concluded at the Hague, between his Majeſty, of glorious memory, the Emperor, and the States-general, your Majeſty is at liberty to take and ſeize lands and cities belonging to the Spaniſh dominions, in the Indies, and retain the ſame as your own; to the end your Majeſty, and your ſubjects may have a real and effectual advantage of the ſaid article, and that perſons may be incouraged to become adventurers, in order to the taking and gaining cities, ports, countries or places in the Indies, from your Majeſty's enemies; We humbly offer our our advice to your Majesty, that you would be graciously pleased to grant commissions or charters, under the great-seal of England, with such powers, privileges and advantages, and under such limitations and restrictions, as your Majesty, in your royal wisdom, shall think needful and convenient, to all persons, bodies politic or corporate, who shall make applications to your Majesty, and are willing to be adventurers in making such acquisitions in the Indies, or shall contribute there to, or by aiding or assisting therein, subject nevertheless, to such terms and conditions, as your Majesty shall judge most expedient for the good of your kingdoms.

Q. ANN, AN' 1702.

The Queen's answer.

To this address her Majesty answered; she would take all the care in it she could.

Acts pass'd.

The 25th, the Queen went in state to the house of peers, and, the commons being sent for up, her Majesty gave the royal assent, 1. "to an act for preventing frauds in the duties upon salt, and for "better payment of debentures at the custom-house: "2. an act to declare the alterations in the oath "appointed to be taken, by the act intitled, an act "for the farther security of his Majesty's person, "and the succession of the crown in the Protestant "line, and for extinguishing the hopes of the "pretended Prince of Wales, and all other pre-"tenders, and their open and secret abetors, and "for declaring the association to be determined: "3. an act for continuing the present sheriffs, in "England and Wales, until the first day of Hilary-"term, unless her Majesty should think fit to deter-"mine them sooner: 4. an act for importing into "England thrown silk, of the growth of Italy, "from the port of Leghorn, in Italy: 5. an "act for raising the militia, in 1702: 6. an "act for continuing the imprisonment of several "conspirators against the late King's life: 7. an "act for relief of poor prisoners for debt: 8. an "act to oblige the Jews to maintain and provide "for their Protestant children: 9. an act for the "relief of the masters of the hoys and other ves-"sels, carrying corn, and other inland provi-"sions, "within the port of London: 10. an "act for making more effectual the provision out "of the forfeited estates, in Ireland, for the build-"ing of churches, and augmenting small vi-"carages in Ireland: and 11. an act for the re-"lief of Protestant purchasers of the forfeited "estates in Ireland:" after which her Majesty made the following speech to both houses:

The Queen's speech to both houses.

My lords and gentlemen,

"I cannot conclude this session, without repeat-"ing my hearty thanks to you all for your great "care of the public, and the many marks you "have given of your duty and affection to me.

"And I must thank you, gentlemen of the "house of commons, in particular, both for the "supplies you have given to support me, in this "necessary war, and the provisions you have made "for the debts contracted in the former: your great "justice in making good those deficiencies will be "a lasting honor and credit to the nation: I wish "the difficulties they have brought upon us may be "a warning to prevent such inconveniencies for the "future. Q. ANN, AN' 1702.

"I must recommend to you all, in your several "countries, the preservation of the public peace, "and a due execution of the laws.

"I shall always wish, that no difference of opi-"nion, among those that are equally affected to "my service; may be the occasion of heats and "animosities among themselves; I shall be very "careful to preserve and maintain the act of tole-"ration, and to set the minds of all my people at "quiet: my own principles must always keep me "intirely firm to the interest and religion of the "church of England, and will incline me to coun-"tenance those who have the truest zeal to support "it."

The parliament prorogued.

Then the lord-keeper, by her Majesty's command, prorogued the parliament to the 7th day of July next insuing.

Preferments.

Having thus finish'd my account of the proceedings of this session of parliament, it will be necessary, before I proceed to the affairs of more distant parts, to mention some domestic occurences. About the middle of May, the Queen was pleased to appoint sir George Rooke, vice-admiral and lieutenant of the admiralty of England, and lieutenant of the navy and seas of this kingdom; and, on the 21st of the same month, her Majesty declared, in council, that she had constituted his royal highness, Prince George of Denmark, lord high-admiral of England and Ireland, and of all other her dominions, beyond the seas (1): and on the 23d, Prince George apoointed sir George Rooke, sir David Mitchel, George Churchill, esq; admiral of the blue squadron, and Richard Hill, esq; to be his council, as lord high-admiral (2). The 21st, George, earl of Northampton, was sworn of the privy-council; and, on the 27th, the earl of Abingdon was constituted constable of the Tower, and lieutenant general Churchill, lieutenant of the same.

The 2d of June, the Queen appointed Simon Harcourt, esq; to be her solicitor-general, and confer'd the honor of knighthood both on him, and on Edward Northey, esq, attorney-general, having the day before, renew'd the commission for the management of the customs. The 5th her Majesty returned from Windsor, whether she had retired for a few days, and then applied herself to appoint the lords-lieutenants, the commissioners of trade, for prizes, stamp and salt-duties, and generals of her land-forces; to give audience to several forein ministers, and to dispose of many places and imployments: among the rest, the earl of Marlborough was made master of the ordnance; the honorable John Granville, esq; lieutenant-general; William Bridges, esq; master surveyor, and Christopher Musgrave, esq; clerk of the same; and Edward Southwell, esq; was appointed her Majesty's principal secretary of state, in Ireland, on the resignation of that office by sir Robert Southwell. To conclude my account of preferments, I shall

(1) Towards the conclusion of the foregoing reign I took notice, that his late Majesty had revoked the letters-patent, to the lords commissioners of the admiralty, and had appointed Thomas earl of Pembroke and Montgomery, lord high-admiral of England and Ireland, a nobleman, who had before, at the begining, and towards the conclusion of the last war, presided at the board of admiralty, when it was in commission, in which, as well as in several other honorable posts, he gave many remarkable instances of his zeal for the public service. This noble lord, tho' he was not easily brought to accept of this high post, foreseing the heavy load it would draw upon him, no sooner entered upon the important trust, than he diligently applied himself to the execution of it, and had the good fortune to give a general satisfaction. Upon the Queen's accession to the throne, he resolved to command the fleet in person, and took great pains to put things in such order that it might be early ready. A land-army was design'd to go with the fleet, the command of which was given to the duke of Ormond, as I observed above: but upon new measures, the earl of Pembroke was first sent to, not to go to sea in person, and, soon after, he was dismiss'd from his post, with the offer of a large pension, which he very generously refused, tho' the state of his affairs and family seemed to require it. Lediard's naval history, vol. 3. p. 740.

(2) The legality of this council was very much questioned: for it was a new court, which could not be authorized to act but by an act of parliament: yet the respect paid the Queen prevented any public inquiry being made concerning it, and so the objections to it never went farther, than a secret murmer. Lediard's naval history, vol. 2. p. 740.

only

Q. Ann, An' 1702.

only add, that, on the 14th the Prince of Denmark was conſtituted conſtable of Dover-caſtle, and lord-warden of the Cinque-ports; by virtue of which poſt his royal highneſs appointed Charles, earl of Winchelſea, lieutenant of Dover-Caſtle.

Other domeſtic occurrences.

The 20th of May, William Fuller, who had ſo often abuſed the patience both of the lords and commons, on pretenſe of making ſome notable diſcoveries concerning the birth of the Prince of Wales, was brought to his trial, at the King's-bench-bar, upon an information, for contriving and publiſhing ſeveral ſcandalous libels, eſpecially one falſe, ſcandalous, and defamatory libel, intitled, "Original letters of the late King James, "&c," of which he was found guilty, and condemn'd to ſtand three times in the pillory, to be afterwards ſent to the houſe of correction, there to be whip'd, and kept to hard labor, till the 24th of October following; to pay a fine of 1000 marks, and to remain in priſon till paid: which ſentenſe was executed upon him accordingly.

The firſt of June, the Queen out of a juſt regard to the laws of nations, iſſued out her royal proclamation, ordering all ſhips, ſtopped before the declaration of war, to be diſcharged, and cauſed another proclamation to be publiſh'd, for the incouragement of her ſhips of war and privateers.

Affairs of Scotland.

I have already taken notice, that the Queen, on her acceſſion, ſent a letter to the privy-council of Scotland, to continue to act as her council of that kingdom, till farther orders: and that her Majeſty, not long after, thought fit to ſend them another letter, in anſwer to one the late King had received from them a little before his death. I proceed now to give a farther brief account of the affairs of that kingdom.

Debates about the exiſtence of the parliament.

At the begining of this reign, warm debates aroſe in Scotland, concerning the parliament then in being, which conſiſted of the ſame body of men who aſſembled at the revolution: for tho', by their ancient conſtitution, they ſhould have had a parliament every year, there was none but this called during the whole preceding reign. Duke Hamilton was now at the head of a very conſiderable party, who were of opinion, that this parliament was actually diſſolved by the late King's demiſe, and applied themſelves to her Majeſty, to call a new one: but the duke of Queenſborough, and his party, were for continuing the preſent parliament, repreſenting that the calling another, at this juncture, might occaſion tumults in the kingdom: nor could it be called time enough for her Majeſty's ſervice, which required immediate ſupplies of them, and mony for the war; and this party, tho' ſome doubted their real ſuperiority, carried their point.

The parliament aſſembles.

The duke of Queenſborough was, hereupon, conſtituted her Majeſty's high commiſſioner, and ordered to aſſemble the parliament of Scotland, the 9th of June: when, being accordingly aſſembled, duke Hamilton deſired to be heard, before the Queen's commiſſion was read. This being granted, he ſaid, in behalf of himſelf, and the other members who adhered to him; Duke Hamilton's ſpeech.

"that they were all "heartily glad at her Majeſty's happy acceſſion to "the throne of that kingdom, not meerly on ac-"count that it was her undoubted right by deſcent, "but likewiſe becauſe of the many perſonal virtues, "and royal qualities, her Majeſty was indowed "with, which gave them grounds to hope, that "they ſhould injoy, under her auſpicious reign, all "the bleſſings that could attend a nation, which "had a gracious and loving ſoverein, united "with a dutiful and obedient people. That they "were reſolved to ſacrifice their lives and fortunes, "in defenſe of her Majeſty's right, againſt all her "enemies whomſoever: but that, at the ſame time, "as they acknowledged their ſubmiſſion to her "Majeſty's authority, they thought themſelves "bound in duty, by virtue of the obedience they "owed to the ſtanding laws of the nation, and be-"cauſe of the regard they ought to have for the "rights and liberties of their fellow-ſubjects, to "declare their opinion, as to the legality of that "meeting: that they did not think themſelves "warranted by law, to ſit and act any longer as a "parliament; and that, by ſo doing, they ſhould "incur the hazard of their lives and fortunes, if "ever their proceedings ſhould come to be que-"ſtion'd by a ſubſequent parliament."

Q. Ann, An' 1702.

His grace then read a paper, containing the following words:

His proteſt.

"Foraſmuch as, by the fundamental laws and "conſtitution of this kingdom, all parliaments do "diſſolve, by the death of the King or Queen, "except ſo far as innovated, by the ſeventeenth act, "in the ſixth ſeſſion of King William's parliament, "impowering the parliament laſt in being, at his "Majeſty's death, to meet and act what ſhould be "needful, for the defenſe of the true Proteſtant "religion, as now by law eſtabliſh'd, and main-"taining the ſucceſſion to the crown, as ſettled by "the claim of right, and for preſerving and ſe-"curing the peace, and ſafety of the kingdom; and "now ſeeing that the ſaid ends are fully ſatisfied, "by her Majeſty's ſucceſſion to the throne, where-"by the religion and peace of the kingdom is ſe-"cured; we conceive ourſelves not warranted by "this law to meet, ſit, or act; therefore do diſſent "from all that ſhall be done, and thereupon take "inſtruments." The duke, having taken inſtruments accordingly, went out of the houſe, with the clerk-regiſter, and ſeventy-nine other members, who likewiſe took inſtruments, but without giving in the paper the duke had read.

He withdraws with ſeventy-nine members.

Notwithſtanding this, the duke of Queenſborough's commiſſion was read, and her Majeſty's letter to the parliament was preſented by the lord-commiſſioner, importing: "that it would have "been a great ſatisfaction to her, at her acceſſion, "to have met them in perſon, but the multiplicity "of weighty affairs deprived her of that oppor-"tunity. However, ſhe gave them full aſſurance, "that ſhe was firmly reſolved to maintain and "protect them, in the full poſſeſſion of their re-"ligion, laws and liberties, and of the Preſby-"terian government of the kirk: that ſhe had "been obliged, in purſuance of an expreſs article "of treaty, enter'd into by the late King and her "allies, to declare war againſt France and Spain, "wherein ſhe expected their hearty concurence "and aſſiſtance, not doubting but they were af-"fected with the ſame ſenſe of the wrongs and "indignities offered by the enemy, and other juſt "cauſes of the war, as appeared in the many "loyal addreſſes of her ſubjects on that occaſion; "and recommended their providing competent "ſupplies for the forces it would be neceſſary to "have on foot." She alſo recommended to them, "the entring on a treaty of union with England," concluding with the uſual popular topics of "in-"couraging piety and virtue, ſuppreſſing vice and "immorality, advancing trade, and providing for "the poor."

The Queen's letter.

The lord high commiſſioner's ſpeech.

The Queen's letter being read, the high commiſſioner made a ſpeech; wherein, "he bewailed "their great loſs, in the death of King William, "but congratulated them, on her Majeſty's hap-"py acceſſion to the throne; ſaid it was a great "bleſſing, that they had a Queen of ſuch prin-"ciples, of the royal blood, and line of Scotland, "a Princeſs, who had been amongſt them, (when "the duke of York, her father, reſided there) "and had a particular regard for them, and, having "inlarg'd upon the articles mention'd in her

"Majeſty's

Q. ANN, AN' 1702.

" Majeſty's letter, concluded with recommending an " union, between the two kingdoms, there appear- " ing a greater diſpoſition in the Engliſh, towards " an union, than he had obſerved in any preceed- " ing time :" the ſame heads were, likewiſe, in- forced by a ſpeech of the earl of Marchmont's the lord-chancellor.

Acts paſſed.

This aſſembly having, in the firſt place, voted themſelves (and afterwards confirm'd their vote by an act) to be, a free and legal parliament, and declared, that purſuant to their ancient laws, it was high treaſon to impugn their authority, were about paſſing an act for ſecuring the true Proteſtant reli- gion, and Preſbyterian kirk-government ; but this latter occaſion'd great debates, and ſeveral warm ſpeeches ; among which ſir Alexander Bruce made one, in favor of epiſcopacy, wherein, among other things, he aſſerted, that " Preſbytery, was incon- " ſiſtent with Monarchy," which gave great of- fence, and for which he was expell'd the houſe ; and notwithſtanding all the oppoſition thoſe of the Epiſ- copal communion could make, the act paſs'd, as did, likewiſe, a third, for recognizing her Majeſty's authority, and a fourth impowering commiſſioners to treat of an union with England.

The parliament's anſwer to the Queen's letter.

The parliament then wrote a dutiful anſwer to the Queen's letter, and, among other things, told her Majeſty, " they ſhould be wanting to themſelves, " if they did not provide ſupplies for their defenſe ; " aſſured her, that they would promote the union " of the two kingdoms, and acquainted her with " the ſteps that had been taken by duke Hamilton, " and his adherents."

The Queen's ſecond letter.

The duke, and his party, had, in the mean time, prepar'd an addreſs to the Queen, to juſtify their withdrawing themſelves ; but her Majeſty, not only refuſed to receive it, but, in a ſecond letter to the parliament, ſhewed her diſapprobation thereof, and declared, for their better incouragement, " that " they might proceed vigorouſly in their work, " for the defenſe of the true Proteſtant religion, " the maintaining of the ſucceſſion to the crown, " and for the preſerving and ſecuring the peace " and ſafety of the kingdom."

The Scots refuſe to ſettle the Hanover ſucceſſion.

However, it being propos'd, to ſettle the ſucceſ- ſion of the crown in the houſe of Hanover, as had been done in England, a majority appeared againſt it at this time (being probably willing to ſee firſt what terms the Engliſh would afford them on a treaty of union) and the debates running very high, the lord high-commiſſioner thought fit to adjourn them, on the 30th of June, having firſt commended their chearfulneſs and unanimity in diſpatching the buſineſs they had gone thro' (1). As ſoon as the parliament was adjourned, the leading men of the different parties haſtened to London, to make their ſeveral repreſentations of things to the Queen, and her Engliſh miniſters.

The parliament adjourned.

Commiſſioners to treat of an union.

The Queen being impower'd by acts of parlia- ment of both kingdoms, to nominate commiſſioners, for treating about an union, between England and Scotland, appointed, accordingly, twenty-three of the moſt able and conſiderable men of the kingdom for England, and twenty for Scotland, with a ſecre- tary for each.

Q. ANN, AN' 1702.

Their proceedings.

Their firſt meeting was on the 22d of October, at the Cockpit ; where, after the reading o fboth commiſſions, ſir Nathan Wright, lord-keeper of the great ſeal of England, made a ſpeech to the aſſembly, on the part of England, which was an- ſwered by the duke of Queenſborough, on the part of Scotland : in which they both profeſs'd their ſincere intentions to advance this great deſign.

There not being a quorum of the Scotiſh com- miſſioners arrived in town, their meeting was ad- journed, by a letter from the Queen. At their next meeting, which was on or about the 20th of November, ſome previous objections were made by the lord-keeper, againſt the validity of the Scotiſh commiſſion, notwithſtanding which they fully adjuſt- ed the preliminaries, of which, one of the moſt con- ſiderable was ; " that nothing agreed on among " themſelves ſhould be binding, except it be ra- " tified by her Majeſty, and the reſpective parlia- " ments of both nations ; and that except all the " heads propoſed for the treaty were agreed to, " no particular thing agreed on ſhould be bind- " ing."

The lord-keeper then propoſed, on the part of the Engliſh, " that the two kingdoms ſhould be inſe- " parably united into one Monarchy, under her Ma- " jeſty, her heirs and ſucceſſors, and under the ſame " limitations, according to the acts of ſettlement :" and the duke of Queenſborough propoſed, on the part of the Scots ; " that both nations ſhould be " united in one Monarchy, and one parliament, " with a mutual communication of trade and pri- " vileges." The propoſal of the Engliſh was eaſily agreed to, and the Queen, to make things go on with more eaſe and unanimity, was pleaſed, on the 14th of December, to make the following ſpeech to the commiſſioners of both nations :

The Queen's ſpeech to the commiſ- ſioners.

My lords,

" I am ſo fully perſuaded, that the union of " my two kingdoms will prove the happineſs of " both, and render this iſland more formidable " than it has been in ages paſt ; that I wiſh this " treaty may be brought to a good and ſpeedy " concluſion. I am come to know what progreſs " you have made in it, and I do aſſure you, no- " thing ſhall be wanting on my part, to bring it " to perfection."

After reading the procedures the Queen retired.

The lords-commiſſioners for Scotland had, five days before, deliver'd in ſix propoſals ; upon which, the lords-commiſſioners for England deliver'd to the former, on the 16th of December, ſome conſide- rations, to be a ſubject-matter of debate : but as the progreſs of the treaty was thereupon ſtopp'd, I ſhall not detain the reader with a repetition of either : for the Scotiſh commiſſioners having, at the ſame time, deliver'd in their propoſals, for preſerving the rights and privileges of their com- pany trading to Africa, and the Indies, that put a ſtop to the farther progreſs of the treaty, at this time (2).

The progreſs of the treaty ſtopp'd.

(1) It may (ſays a Scotiſh writer) be thought ſtrange, that this act for ſettling the ſucceſſion did not paſs currently in ſuch a made-up meeting, and when ſuch eminently zealous revolutioners were at the helm of affairs, and acted without controul. I pre- ſume (adds he) the reaſons were ; Firſt, the commiſſioners had no inſtructions therein. Second, the uncertainty how affairs would go in England, the Queen being but newly come to the crown, and not well fix'd in the throne ; and they foreſaw they might expect little thanks, if ſhe afterwards ſhould favor the intereſt of the diſtreſſed royal family. And I have reaſon to believe, that the Queen and her Engliſh miniſtry, were then inclined to keep the ſucceſſion open, as a check and awe upon the Whigs, and family of Hanover : and laſtly (as they pretended afterwards in England) that parliament's title to act being controverted, and having ſo little authority in the nation, it was not thought fit to venture upon a matter of ſo great impor- tance. Memoirs of the affairs of Scotland, p. 16.

(2) It may ſeem ſtrange, that there was no mention made, all this while, about religion, the main point that divided the two nations, and the rock on which the project of uniting them had formerly ſplit : but the commiſſioners, like wiſe negociators, were willing to feel one anothers pulſes, in ſmall matters, before they touch'd the grand difficulty. The Scotiſh epiſcopal clergy were not ſo cautious ; for taking this to be a favorable juncture, to get into their livings again, they preſented addreſſes to the Queen, which, however, proved of no ſervice to them.

Q. Ann, An' 1702.

I return now to the warlike tranſactions of this ſummer, by ſea and land; but firſt of thoſe by land: it was not determined by the arguments of either ſide, in council (of which I have given the reader an account above) whether the war at land or at ſea ſhould be the moſt attended: tho' it ſoon after appeared, that the earl of Marlborough's prevailing intereſt carried it for the former; yet was not the latter wholly neglected this ſummer, as we ſhall ſee in the ſequel.

As the earl of Marlborough was, however, detained ſome weeks in England, in concerting the neceſſary meaſures with the miniſtry, before he could croſs the ſea, to take upon him the command of the confederate army, I ſhall be obliged to give a brief account what was doing abroad, in the mean time, that the reader may thereby form a more accurate idea of the ſtate of the campain, when his lordſhip arrived at the army.

Defection of ſome of the German Princes.

The French King being ſenſible what a formidable alliance was making againſt him, left no ſtone unturn'd to draw over ſome of the German Princes to his intereſt; and, in this attempt, he ſucceeded not only with the Electors of Bavaria and Cologn, but with the two dukes of Wolfenbuttle, Rudolph and Anthony, who held the regency together, to raiſe forces in the Empire, in his favor. The duke of Zell was, hereupon, directed, by the Emperor, to make an incurſion into their country, and to oblige them, by force of arms, to abandon the intereſt of France.

This had its deſired effect; for after the duke of Zell had made himſelf maſter of ſeveral ſtrong holds, in the ſaid Principality, and block'd up the capital of Wolfenbuttle it ſelf, Rudolph reſolv'd, notwithſtanding the obſtinacy of his brother, to come to an accommodation; and, whether terrified by the impending danger, or deſirous of having the regency ſolely in his own hands, ſet a treaty on foot. This treaty ended in an agreement, between the Elector of Hanover, and the duke of Zell, on one ſide, and Rudolph of Wolfenbuttle, on the other, that Anthony ſhould be excluded the regency, which Rudolph, upon quiting all his ingagements with France, ſhould take into his own hands; and that the Elector and duke ſhould take into their ſervice 1000 horſe, and 2400 foot, of the Wolfenbuttle troops, which were raiſed with French money, and ſhould thereupon withdraw their forces out of that principality.

State of affairs before the earl of Marlborough headed the confederate army.

All Germany was now united, in favor of the Emperor, excepting the electors of Bavaria and Cologn, the latter of whom had put Liege, and all the places he had on the Rhine, excepting Bonn, (which afterwards followed) into the hands of the French. Among theſe was the ſtrong town of Keyſerſwaert, which, while in the hands of the enemy, expoſed not only the circle of Weſtphalia, but the dominions of the States-general: for their places on the Wahl, not being in the beſt condition of defence, were laid open to the excurſions of that gariſon.

Diſadvantages under which the confederates begun the war.

It may not be improper to remark here, under what diſadvantages the confederates begun this war; as it inhances the glory of thoſe heroes, who, not withſtanding ſo many difficulties, carried it on with great ſucceſs and zeal benefit In the former war, not only Spain, but the united force of the whole Empire, and, for a conſiderable time, the duke of Savoy, acted in concert with England and Holland, againſt the common enemy. On the contrary, now a Prince of the houſe of Bourbon ſat on the Spaniſh throne, a French army had over-run the ſtate of Milan, and, to this army, the duke of Savoy (who was allied to France, by the double marriage of his two daughters) had join'd his forces. Of the nine principal members of the Empire, two, the Electors of Bavaria and Cologn had declar'd for France, and the latter, as I have ſaid above, had admited French forces into all his fortified towns, under the ſpecious name of troops of the circle of Burgundy. A third, the Elector of Saxony, King of Poland, was at war with Sweden and the diſaffected Poles, for his tottering crown, and could not, therefore, ſend his full proportion of troops againſt France. The Emperor had ſent his veteran forces, under the command of Prince Eugene, to keep the French at a bay in Italy; and all the Spaniſh towns, on the frontiers of Holland, were gariſon'd with French troops: but, notwithſtanding all theſe viſible diſadvantages, by the wiſe and ſteady counſels of England; the prudent management of her Majeſty's treaſury; the juſt meaſures concerted by the earl of Marlborough, with forein powers; the valor and reſolution of the confederate troops, and the experience and good conduct of their commanders, it was ſoon concluded, by all who were judges of theſe matters, that the allies would, in the end, be an over-match for France.

Q. Ann, An' 1702.

Diviſion and diſpoſition of the confederate army.

Towards the latter end of April, the Dutch formed three armies: one commanded by the Prince of Naſſau Saarbruck, which undertook the ſiege of Keyſerſwaert (1), in the name of the Elector-palatine, for the Emperor; under whom the Dutch ſerved as auxiliaries, they having not yet declared war againſt France and Spain. Another army was formed under the earl of Athlone, which lay in the duchy of Cleves, to cover that ſiege: and a third, conſiſting of 10,000 men, under the command of general Cohorn, which broke into Flanders, forced and demoliſh'd the lines, between the two forts of St. Donat and Iſabella, which the enemy had been many months raiſing, with great labor and expence, and laid the greateſt part of the Chatelenie of Bruges under contribution: 'tho he was afterwards obliged, upon the approach of a ſuperior French army, under the marquis de Bedmar, and the count de la Motte, to retire under the walls of Sluys, having firſt laid the country under water, and forced the Spaniards to retire towards Ghent (2).

Motions of the French army.

In the mean time, the marſhall de Bouflers drew his army together, and, having laid up great magazines, in Ruremond and Venlo, paſs'd the Maeſe, with his whole army. The duke of Burgundy (the preſent King of France's father) being

(1) Keyſerſwaert is a little town, ſituate on the north banks of the Rhine, about two leagues below Duſſeldorp, belonging, to the elector of Cologn. It is an oblong of one ſtreet only, defended, on the land-ſide, by three baſtions, and four ravelins, and, towards the Rhine, by two baſtions. The extremity or point of an iſland, below the place, may either be of advantage or prejudice to it, according to the uſe that is made of it. The French poſſeſs'd themſelves of this place by cardinal Furſtemburg, in 1688, but the Elector of Brandenburg retook it, in 1689, and deliver'd it to the Elector of Cologn, who received a French gariſon into it, in 1701. The iſland I mention'd was firſt poſſeſs'd by the French and fortified, but was taken afterwards by the Pruſſians. Lediard's life of Marlborough, vol. 1. p. 159.

(2) The marquis de Quincy gives a particular relation of a deſign general Cohorn had form'd of ſurpriſing the caſtle of Namur, by means of a gentleman in the neighborhood, whom he had brought over to his purpoſe, and who having a relation, an officer, in the place, by means of him, and two of the burghers, who ingaged in the deſign, an agreement was made with a Spaniſh captain of the gariſon, who, in conſideration of 10,000 piſtols, a conſiderable part of which he actually receiv'd, and the command of a regiment, promis'd him, undertook to deliver the caſtle into the hands of the Dutch troops; but after having got as much mony as he could, he betray'd the deſign to the governor, which put an end to the attempt. Hiſt. mil. de Louis le Grand tome. III. p. 539.

come

Q. ANN, AN' 1702.

come poſt to the army, to make his firſt campain, as commander in chief, tho' under the direction of the marſhal de Bouflers, put the Dutch under apprehenſions that ſo great a Prince would undertake ſomething worthy of himſelf, and believing the deſign might be upon Maeſticht, they threw 12,000 men into that place. This, with the want of the auxiliary-troops from Germany, who did not come ſo ſoon as was expected, and of a good part of the Engliſh forces, which were ſtopp'd by contrary winds, ſo weaken'd their army, that the earl of Athlone did not think himſelf ſtrong enough to enter into action with the marſhal de Bouflers. He, therefore incamp'd at Clarenbeck, between Nimeguen and Cleve, to watch his motions; while the marſhal lay incamp'd at Santen, near Cleve. While they lay here, there was an action between 1000 horſe of the Dutch, and 600 French horſe, the latter of which were totally defeated.

A French party defeated.

Siege of Keyſerſwaert.

All this while, the ſiege of Keyſerſwaert went on but ſlowly. The trenches were open'd the 18th of April, with little loſs; and, the 20th, the beſiegers did great execution, by the vaſt number of bombs, which they threw into the town; but the enemy made a vigorous ſally, and tho' they were twice repuls'd, with great bravery, the Dutch, not being ſuccor'd in time, and being inferior to the enemy, in number, were forced to quit their poſt, and make a retreating fight; 'till, at length, the cavalry coming up, the enemy were, in their turn, conſtrain'd to retire, with great precipitation. The 21ſt and 22d, the enemy made two ſallies more; but with much the ſame ſucceſs: and, in the latter, were purſued to the counterſcarp. I ſhall not continue to give the farther circumſtances of this ſiege; but only, in general, obſerve, that tho' the beſiegers propoſed, at firſt, to be maſters of the place, in three weeks, they were miſtaken in their calculation, the gariſon having made a vigorous defence, for about two months: and it had like to have proved but a bad begining of a new war, and the firſt campain; however, at length, the place being reduced to a heap of rubbiſh, and the out-works batter'd, with forty-eight large cannon, and thirty mortars, the confederates reſolved, on the 9th of June, N. S. to make a general attack on the counterſcarp and ravelin, which they executed with unparallel'd bravery. The conflict was very bloody and obſtinate, for two hours together; during which time, nothing was to be ſeen but fire and ſmoak, and many brave officers loſt their lives, on both ſides. The beſieged, in the end, were obliged to give ground, and leave the aſſailants maſters of both, and they lodged themſelves accordingly. Among the officers, who diſtinguiſh'd themſelves on this occaſion, none behaved with more remarkable conduct and bravery, than the Prince of Naſſau-Saarbrug, who commanded, and who perform'd prodigies of bravery, giving his orders, with great contempt of danger, and wonderful preſenſe of mind: and the earl of Huntington, who gave no leſs proofs of his valor, tho' but a volunteer, was dangerouſly wounded: nor did they alone diſtinguiſh themſelves; for all the other officers, and even the common ſoldiers, behaved, in this action, beyond expectation. This advantage coſt the confederates, however, very dear; for they had above 2500 men killed or wounded in the action; but it, likewiſe, ſo much weaken'd the gariſon, that they were forced to capitulate, the 15th. They obtain'd honorable terms, and march'd out the 17th, after a ſiege of two months: and the place was razed according to agreement (1).

The counterſcarp taken by ſtorm;

And the town by capitulation.

Q. ANN, AN' 1702.

Count Tallard, who, with a ſeparate body, had hitherto been of great ſervice to the beſieged, now joined the grand army, under the command of the duke of Burgundy, which by the calling in of all their other detachments, was greatly ſuperior to that of the confederates, under the earl of Athlone. They had, for ſometime before, boaſted of a grand deſign they had in view, and they, therefore, thought this the propereſt time to put it in execution, which they did, in the following manner.

A bold attempt of the marſhal de Bouflers.

The duke of Burgundy's army having been reinforced, as I have obſerved above, by ſeveral detachments, and particularly by the troops of the French King's houſhold, the marſhal de Bouflers decamp'd from Santen, the 10th of June, N. S. about eight o'clock in the morning, without ſound of trumpet, or beat of drum, and directed his march thro' the plains of Gock, ſeeming to incline towards the Mocker-heyde, cloſe by Nimeguen, as if his deſign was to get between the confederate army, under the command of the earl of Athlone, and Nimeguen, and by that means to cut them off from their proviſions, ammunition and forage, which would have very much expoſed that city, as well as ſeveral other neighboring towns.

Diſpoſition of the confederate army thereupon.

The earl of Athlone, having timely notice of the enemy's march, and rightly judging what their deſign was, called a council of the general officers, in which it was unanimouſly reſolved, that the confederates ſhould begin their march, about eight the ſame evening, in the following order. The baggage was ſent away to Nimeguen, leaving Cranenburg, on the right; and four battalions were detached to Grave; the firſt line marched in one column, between the woods, at the head of the confederate camp, at Cranenburg; in which woods, the French had, by that time, poſted a numerous body of foot and dragoons; while the ſecond line march'd between the firſt line and Cranenburg, leaving the town on the right hand. The Prince of Wirtemburg was detach'd, with a great body of horſe, upon the left of the confederate's march; and colonel Frederick Hamilton, with three batalions of Engliſh, under the lord Cutts, was likewiſe detach'd, to ſecure the Prince's retreat, and to take care of the highway of Norgina, by which the enemy might otherwiſe, have eaſily fallen on the confederates, in their march, which two detachments both rejoined the earl, upon his entrance into the Mocker-heyde. About day-break, the earl made a halt, and receiving farther intelligence of the ſtrength of the enemy, it was reſolved, that the cavalry ſhould be drawn up, in order of battle, to cover the march of the infantry, which, at the ſame time, was directed to keep along the riſing grounds, making halts, and puting themſelves in battle-array, from time to time, as the generals who led them, ſhould think fit, and keeping always in ſight of the horſe, that they might be ready to ſupport them, if they ſhould be attack'd. About eleven, in the morning, the foot had gained the narrow paſſes, and lined the hedges; and the French horſe advancing, in great numbers, with the troops of the houſhold, at their head, preſs'd hard upon the earl, who was at the head of the horſe, and behav'd with great reſolution. However, he made his retreat in good order, paſſing thro' the lane, along which the foot were poſted, and keep-

(1) If we will believe F. Daniel, the marquis de Quincy, and other French writers, this place coſt the Allies more men, than they might probably have loſt in a pitch'd battle, the number of the ſlain amounting, according to them, to 7 or 8000 men. It is certain the beſiegers loſt a great many men, conſidering the ſmallneſs of the place; but I never found that the number a mounted to half what the French hiſtorians would make us believe.

ing,

Q. Ann, An' 1702.

ing, at the ſame time, as broad a front, as the ground would permit. In the mean time, a conſiderable body of horſe was ordered to the riſing ground on the right-hand; whereupon, the troops of the French King's houſhold, charging ſome of the Dutch ſquadrons, juſt as they were wheeling, in purſuance of their orders, puſh'd them upon the foot, and put two or three battalions into confuſion; but, by the conduct of the general officers, no farther miſchief inſued, and the enemy were ſoon repulſed. On the other ſide, there happened a rude encounter, between ſome of the ſquadrons of the French houſhold, and ſome Daniſh horſe, and ſome of the earl's carabineers, who ſo vigorouſly maintained their ground, that the French were beaten back, tho' with equal loſs; and the French themſelves were oblig'd to own, that they could not enough admire the courage of theſe troops. By this time, the confederates were got under the cannon of Nimeguen, which, ſoon after, began to play upon the enemy; and the burghers of that city ſignaliz'd themſelves, on this occaſion, in an extraordinary manner; for tho' they had not a gunner in the town, they manag'd their artillery with a ſurprizing ſucceſs.

The design fruſtrated.

The Engliſh, who had the honor to cloſe the retreat, maintained their poſt, in excellent order, being aſſiſted by the Prince of Wirtemberg, who put a ſtop to the troops of the houſhold, which were advanced very near them, and preparing to charge them, towards the end of their march. Twenty battalions of foot were thereupon poſted in the out-works of Nimeguen, and the whole army was under arms, all that night, as the enemy was likewiſe.

The next morning, a great body of French horſe and foot advanced towards the allies, as if they intended to attack them; but this they did only to cover the march of their own army, which filed off towards Cleves, venting their rage at their diſappointment, upon the defenſeleſs country, which they rifled and laid waſte; deſtroying the park, and all the delicious walks and avenues to that charming place. And if we will give credit to the marquis de Quincy, the French made a booty, upon this occaſion, of the value of above 500,000 crowns, and near 20,000 oxen. Thus was the important city of Nimeguen (which, if taken, would have offered the French an opportunity to penetrate into the very heart of the United Provinces) almoſt miraculouſly preſerved, being but in an indifferent condition, and the enemy miſſing but half an hour of arriving in the outworks, before the earl of Athlone. The deſign was well laid, and, as we ſee, wanted very little of being as well executed. It muſt have had fatal eeffects had it ſucceeded; for the French would either have got into Nimeguen, or have forced the earl of Athlone to fight at a great diſadvantage; but the earl ſo carefully watched their motions, that he got before them; tho', by this means, as we have ſeen, he was obliged to abandon Cleves, to the fury of the enemy. The burghers, ſeeing their imminent danger, did wonders, upon this occaſion, it being they themſelves, who, at the firſt approach of the enemy, broke open the doors of the arſenal, and bringing out the cannon, bullets and ammunition, haul'd the ſame, without horſes, and planted them on the ramparts and outworks; ſo that, in a little time, they fired upon the enemy with 160 pieces. Q. Ann, An' 1702.

I have not found any certain account, what was the loſs, on either ſide, in this action. If we will believe the marquis de Quincy, the French loſt, at moſt, but 150 men, and fifty horſes, and the allies, at leaſt, eleven or twelve hundred, but, all circumſtances conſidered, this computation is too extravagant to gain credit.

Prudent conduct of the earl of Athlone.

The prudent conduct of the earl of Athlone, on this occaſion, raiſed his credit, as much as it ſunk that of Bouflers, who, tho' he had a ſuperior army, animated by the preſenſe of ſo great a Prince; yet was able to do nothing. Whatever he undertook was unſucceſsful, and his parties, which ingaged with thoſe of the earl of Athlone's army, were almoſt always beaten.

The earl of Marlborough arrives at the Hague.

Thus was the ſtate of the campain, in theſe parts, before the earl of Marlborough left England, from whence he departed, the 12th of May. Upon his arrival, with the character of embaſſador, as well as captain-general, he had ſeveral conferences with the deputies of the States, in which he gave them all imaginable aſſurances of her Majeſty's affection, and reſolution to ſupport them, in all emergencies. On the other hand, the States, to ſhew their gratitude to her Majeſty, and the particular confidence they placed in the earl, declared him generaliſſimo of all their forces, and gave orders to all their generals and other officers, to obey him (1).

Is declared generaliſſimo of the Dutch forces.

Takes the command of the army.

Having regulated every thing that was neceſſary with the deputies of the States, his lordſhip left the Hague, the 30th of June, N. S. and came to the army at Nimeguen the 2d of July. He formed his camp at Duckemberg, conſiſting of 76 battalions of foot, and 120 ſquadrons of horſe, making together about 60,000 men. The 8th, he call'd a council of war, of all the general officers, to concert the farther occupations of the campain; and finding his force, if not ſuperior, in number, to that of the duke of Burgundy, yet juſtly ſo in other advantages; he therefore, march'd his army, the 16th, over the Maeſe, and incamp'd at Over-Aſſelt, near Grave, within two miles and a half of the enemy, who lay intrench'd between Goch and Gennep. (2)

Purſues the French.

The 26th the confederate army repaſs'd the Maeſe, and march'd in purſuit of the enemy; in their way, the lord Cuts, with a detachment under his command, took poſſeſſion of the caſtle of Gravenbroeck, after a ſhort reſiſtance, and obliged the French garriſon to ſurrender at diſcretion.

The French retreat before him.

The 2d of Auguſt, they advanced to Petit Brugel, following the French (who retreated as they advanced) ſo cloſe, that they were obliged, to abandon the Spaniſh Guelderland, which was thereby left to the diſcretion of the confederates. The earl of Marlborough was for hazarding a deciſive battle; for which end, the whole army was ordered to their arms, the next morning early. But the Dutch would not conſent to it. (3)

(1) Biſhop Burnet ſays; The earl of Athlone was ſet on by the other Dutch generals, to inſiſt on his quality of velt-marſhal, and as ſuch to ſhare the command, with the earl of Marlborough, by turns: the States, however, obliged him to yield up his pretenſions, and the earl of Marlborough behaved in ſo courteous and obliging a manner to him, as made amends for the diſappointment he met with, in loſing his ſhare of the command. Hiſt. of his own times, Vol. II. p. 324.

(2) Upon this occaſion, he is reported to have ſaid to the field-deputies of the States-general, that the French ſhould be no longer their bad neighbours, and that he would oblige them to march farther off from that country, with a witneſs: whether our hero did give the deputies this aſſurance, I ſhall not pretend to determine, and the leſs, becauſe it ſeems, in ſome meaſure to exceed the bounds of his accuſtomed modeſty; but that he perform'd what is there inſinuated we ſhall ſoon ſee. Lediard's life of Marlborough, Vol. I. p. 169.

(3) It was believed by thoſe who thought themſelves judges, that if the earl of Marlborough's advice had been followed, matters might have been brought, at once, to a happy deciſion; and the more, as it afterwards appeared, that not above half of the French army was got to their camp, greatly fatigued by an almoſt contiuual march of two days and two nights, and in the greateſt conſternation. Lediard's life of Marlborough, Vol. I. p. 171.

From

Q. ANN, AN' 1702.

Farther motions of the confederate army.

From Petit-Brugel, the army march'd, in order to demoliſh the walls of Peer and Bray, in the biſhopric of Liege, two ſmall towns, which had been of great ſervice to the enemy, in ſecuring their convoys. The 12th, the confederate army incamp'd at Everbeck; and, on the 22d, at Holchteren, where they found the French, ſeemingly preparing to receive them, being very advantageouſly poſted, and having received diverſe re-inforcements, making about 18 or 20,000 men: ſo that they were now in a condition, if courage had not been wanting, to venture an ingagement. The earl of Marlborough rang'd his troops in order of battle, and, in that manner, continued his march. The duke of Burgundy, and the French generals, ranged their army, likewiſe, in order of battle; tho' they very well knew there could be no action; the two armies being ſeparated by marſhes and defilees, in ſuch manner, that it was impoſſible for either to attack the other, without a very great hazard.

In this poſture, both armies remained two days, cannonading each other, and expecting which would begin the attack: but at length the French, not willing to run the riſk of a battle, tho' they were ſo well ſecured, decamp'd ſilently in the night, and took poſt at Berringhen. Brigadier Roſs, with ſome ſquadrons, fell in with their rear, and charged them, in their flight, for upwards of a league (1), but without any conſiderable advantage, with ſuch precipitation they fled before him: a great number of the enemy's troops took, however, this occaſion to deſert (2).

Father ſucceſs of the confederate army.

The earl of Marlborough continued the purſuit, taking, in his way, ſeveral places which made little or no reſiſtance: but finding, at length, that the French were not to be brought to an ingagement, on equal terms, and the deputies of the States-general, who followed the army, having repreſented to him, that it was much more for the advantage of Holland to diſpoſſeſs the enemy of the places they yet held in the Spaniſh Guelderland, whereby the navigation of the Maeſe was interrupted, and the important town of Maeſtricht in a manner block'd up; he therefore diſpoſed all things for the ſiege of Venlo: and, in the mean time, general Schultz, with a ſmall detachment, took the town and caſtle of Wert, which capitulated, after a ſhort reſiſtance.

Siege of Venlo.

The 29th, the town of Venlo (3) was inveſted by monſ. Opdam, with a detachment of Engliſh and Dutch, commanded, under him, by the lord Cuts, on one ſide of the Maeſe, by fort St. Michael; and by the margrave of Brandenburg, the late King of Pruſſia's brother, with his Pruſſian Majeſty's forces, commanded, under him, by the baron de Heyde, on the other. General Cohorn had the direction of the attacks, and the Prince of Naſſau Saarburg had the command of the ſiege. Upon this the duke of Burgundy returned to Paris, not to be an eye witneſs of the taking of that place (4).

Q. ANN' AN' 1702.

The troops imployed in this ſiege, at both attacks, conſiſted of 32 battalions, and 36 ſquadrons, with 64 cannons, 24 mortars and hawbitzers, and a great number of Cohorn-mortars. The town and fort were commanded by the count de Varo, major-general L'Abadie, and two brigadiers, having under their command ſix battalions of foot, and two ſquadrons of horſe, with 38 cannon, and 12 mortars mounted, and great ſtore of ammunition.

The trenches open'd.

The 7th of September, N. S. the trenches were opened on both ſides the Maeſe, without any loſs, the confederates having caſt up ſuch high works, as almoſt covered them, before they were perceived by the enemy. The eighth, the beſiegers were re-inforced, by a body of Munſter troops, conſiſting of 2000 foot, and 500 horſe, and the following days, the attacks were carried on with great vigor: but the moſt memorable action, which happened, during this ſiege, was performed by the lord Cutts, in the following manner:

Fort St. Michael attack'd by the lord Cuts and the Engliſh.

On the eighteenth, his lordſhip was commanded to attack fort St. Michael, between the baſtion, which is next the plain, and the ravelin, which lies on the north-ſide of it, having under his command brigadier-general Hamilton, with the royal-regiment of Ireland, and general Hukelom's regiment, and a lieutenant-colonel, with 172 grenadiers, and 100 fuſileers (ſome accounts ſay 200 of the former and 150 of the latter) moſt Engliſh, under a lieutenant-colonel; as alſo 300 workmen, with a competent number of ingineers, under colonel Blood. His lordſhip's orders were to make a lodgment, from the point of the ravelin to the baſtion, leaving him at liberty to proceed farther, if he found it practicable; and, at the ſame time, the Prince of Anhalt, with the ſame number of troops, was to make an attack, between the baſtion and the ravelin, on the north-ſide, with the like diſcretionary orders, either to lodge himſelf, or to advance as he ſhould ſee occaſion. The ſignal for both attacks, which was to be the blowing up a barrel of powder, and the diſcharge of all the batteries of the beſiegers, both cannon and mortars, was accordingly made, a little before ſix in the evening.

Prudent management of the lord Cuts.

The lord Cuts, who, at firſt, had no thoughts of taking the main fort, gave orders, on his attack, to the officers who led the grenadiers, firſt to clear the covered-way of the enemy; and, if they ſaw it practicable, when that was done, to attack the ravelin, ſword in hand, aſſuring them, in the

(1) The French to do ſome honor at leaſt to the duke of Burgundy, for this his firſt campain, pretended it was the allies, who declined the battle. "The enemy (ſays monſ. de Quincy) continued in order of battle, during the whole time the two "armies cannonaded one another, and if they had but advanced never ſo little towards us, an ingagement would have inſued; "but they would not come out of their advantageous camp. The duke of Burgundy took a view of their ſituation, the next "morning, at break of day: but he found it impoſſible to attack them. The enemy having, however, made a motion "the 24th, we were in hopes then we ſhould have been able to have attack'd them: but having intelligence, by ſeveral ways, "that they had, on their left, a moraſs that was unpaſſable, and a water on the right; ſo that it would have been very diffi-"cult to come at them; it was determin'd to retreat, in order to ſecure a convoy, which was expected to join the army."

The continuator of Rapin in French, who blames the duke of Burgundy for neglecting an advantage, which (according to him) he might have taken of the confederates in this ſituation, lays the whole fault upon the marſhal de Bouflers, who upon returning from recognizing the confederate cavalry, reported that it was impoſſible to attack them, and thereby put a ſtop to the count de Tallard, and the duke of Berwick, who were upon the point of begining the attack: but (adds he) had the duke of Burgundy poſſeſſed the ſoul of the great Condé, he would never have ſubmited to ſuch remonſtrances. B. 26. p. 466.

(2) The Dutch who were in the deepeſt conſternation, but a few weeks before, on the retreat of their army, under the cannon of Nimeguen (before the earl of Marlborough arrived) had now the pleaſure to ſee the enemy flee in their turn; and thus were the United-Provinces preſerved, by the earl's prudence and vigilance, while the duke of Burgundy, who, as I have ſaid above, came to the army to be taught how to fight, learned nothing from the marſhal de Bouflers, but how to avoid an ingagement.

(3) Venlo is a very ſtrong town in the Low-countries, in the territory of Ruremond, in Spaniſh-Guelderland. It ſtands on the river Maeſe, near the biſhopric of Juliers, ten miles ſouth-weſt of Gueldres, and eleven north of Ruremond.

(4) The French, however pretend, that the reaſon of the duke of Burgundy's leaving the camp was, becauſe he had been oblig'd to make detachments, to re-inforce all the gariſons of the Spaniſh-Netherlands, the biſhoprick of Liege, and electorate of Cologne, which had ſo weakned his army, that there were no more laurels to be gather'd this campain. But it would be very difficult to ſay where he gather'd any before.

Q. Ann, An' 1702.

hearing of all the grenadiers, that as ſoon as he ſaw fifty of the latter, upon the top of the ravelin, he would ſacrifice himſelf, and his troops, rather than not ſuſtain them; and that, therefore, they might go on with undauntedneſs, if they found it poſſible to paſs; his lordſhip heightening their courage and alacrity, by promiſing rewards, in her Majeſty's name, to all who ſhould ſignalize themſelves. His lordſhip's orders were executed, with inexpreſſible vigor and chearfulneſs, and as ſoon as the grenadiers, whom his lordſhip, with diſtinguiſh'd intrepidity, and admirable preſenſe of mind, ſuſtained with freſh numbers, had cleared the counterſcarp with their fire, and avoided a mine, which was unſucceſsfully ſprung by the enemy, they boldly attack'd the ravelin, ſword in hand, incouraging and aſſiſting one another upon the aſſurance of being ſeconded.

His bravery.

The lord Cuts, perceiving this, according to his promiſe, march'd, with all his forces, ingaged the enemy, and was ſoon maſter of the ravelin. The French then made a great fire upon the Engliſh, from the rampart of the fort, upon which the lord Cuts ſent orders to the officers, who were at the head of the grenadiers, to throw in their grenadoes, and attack the fort, ſword in hand, if it were poſſible to find a paſſage; which they did, by charging and following the enemy ſo cloſe, that they had not time to break the bridge, tho' it was hotly diſputed by fire and puſh of pike, eſpecially by the enemy's grenadiers, from the flank of one of their baſtions. But the bravery of the Engliſh grenadiers ſurmounted all difficulties, by following the example of their officers, and ſome brave Engliſh and other volunteers of diſtinction (1).

Bravery of the earl of Huntington.

The earl of Huntington, in particular, call'd to the ſoldiers, who had got over the palliſadoes, to help him over likewiſe and promiſed them all the mony he had about him, which he accordingly gave them very generouſly, and led them on with much bravery and ſucceſs. The enemy continued to defend themſelves, till the Engliſh poured in ſo faſt upon them, that they were no longer able to reſiſt.

The fort taken.

The lord Cuts perceiving this, check'd the fury of the ſoldiers, and put a ſtop to the ſlaughter. The Engliſh took about 200 priſoners, of whom 30 were officers, with a brigadier-general, and the governor; but all the reſt, that were in the fort, to the number of 600, were killed or drowned in indeavoring to eſcape, except twelve (the French ſay eighty) who paſs'd the Maeſe, in ſmall boats (2).

When the lord Cuts found himſelf intirely in poſſeſſion of the forts, having left 400 men in the outworks, he poſted a guard, at the great port, towards the town, and a ſmall guard at each ſally-port; ſeized the magazines, ſent out a hundred grenadiers to diſcover, on the ſide of the Maeſe, if any of the enemy were there; drew up the reſt of his troops upon the rampart, towards the town; turned the enemy's cannon upon themſelves; made a diſcharge, to give notice to the camp, that all was well, and continued under arms all night. In the magazine of the fort, and round the rampart were found 30 fine braſs cannon, ſix mortars, and a large quantity of powder, ball, corn, meal, brandy, and other proviſions (3). Q. Ann, An' 1702.

Never was more bravery ſhewn than on this occaſion, by all, both officers and ſoldiers, of the reſpective nations under his lordſhip's command, but eſpecially the Engliſh. Among the reſt, the Prince of Hanover, a voluntier at this ſiege, paſs'd the night before the attack in the trenches, with the lord Cuts, behaved himſelf with a great deal of gallantry, and ſtood moſt of the night with his lordſhip in the fort. Colonel Blood, who acted as firſt ingineer under general Cohorn, and was to have made the lodgment, when he ſaw that the lord Cuts had quited that deſign, to puſh on farther, as we have ſeen, ſhew'd the part of a brave officer, charging with the men, ſword in hand, and killing an officer of the enemy's grenadiers, who made a vigorous oppoſition with his party; and monſ. de la Martinerie, a French Proteſtant ingineer, lately ſent from England by his royal highneſs, was alſo very ſerviceable in this action, as well by his bravery as his ſkill. For it was partly thro' his advice, that the lord Cuts reſolved to make himſelf maſter of the fort; rightly conjecturing, that if the enemy made a vigorous reſiſtance at the ravelin, and were beaten off, as, indeed, they were, they would be ſo fatigued as not to be able to hold out long in the fort; and it happened ſo accordingly. This was a bold and glorious action, chiefly owing to the bravery and conduct of the lord Cuts, who himſelf behaved in ſo gallant a manner, as juſtly deſerved, a general applauſe.

Bravery of the late duke of York.

And of colonel Blood.

Bravery and ſkill of monſ. de la Martinere.

While theſe glorious actions were performing, on the ſide of the lord Cuts's attack, the Prince of Anhalt behaved himſelf with a gallantry ſuitable to his birth; and his troops, incouraged by his example, attack'd the enemy with all imaginable vigor, and carried the ravelin on their ſide, ſword in hand; but the French having broke the bridge between that ravelin and the fort, tho' ſome of the Pruſſians leap'd into the ditch and ſwam over, it was impoſſible for the reſt of their troops to paſs.

Gallant conduct of the Prince of Anhalt.

The beſiegers imployed the four following days in firing furiouſly from their batteries upon the wall of the town, in order to widen the breaches; and all other neceſſary preparations were made for a general aſſault to which the ſoldiers ſhew'd an eager deſire. The twenty-third, the confederates, having received advice of the ſurrender of Landau, expreſs'd their joy for the news, in order of battle, with the triple diſcharge of all their cannon and ſmall arms. This the beſieged, as it was reported, took to be a ſignal for the approaching ſtorm on the town; becauſe the attack of fort St. Michael, which had very much intimidated the gariſon, began in the ſame manner. They, therefore, immediately beat a parly, and ſurrender'd the place, on the twenty-fifth (4). Purſuant to the capitulation, they were conducted to Antwerp, with their arms and baggage; but without any cannon or mortars, as they at firſt inſiſted on, and which the Prince of Venlo ſurrenders.

(1) Among others were the late duke of York, the earl of Huntington, the lord Lorn (now duke of Argile,) the lord Mark Ker, the Prince d'Avergne; ſir Richard Temple, baronet, (now lord viſcount Cobham) colonel Webb, and mr. Dalrimple.

(2) The French, to depreciate the honor gain'd by the allies, and more particularly by the Engliſh, in this action, pretend, that being ſenſible of the weakneſs of the gariſon of the fort, orders had been given them, that morning, to abandon the cover'd-way and the half-moons; to cut off the draw-bridges, and to make what fire they could from the body of the place; that they were juſt about executing theſe orders, when the allies attack'd the cover'd way of the fort; and that the whole gariſon conſiſted only of , juſt come out of the hoſpitals of Ruremond and Venlo, not perfectly recover'd. De Quincy, Hiſt. Mil. de Louis le gr. Tome, III. p. 566.

(3) Of the Engliſh, in this action, two captains were wounded, two lieutenants and one enſign killed, and three wounded; one ſerjeant killed, and three wounded; one hundred and thirty men kill'd, and a hundred and thirty two wounded; and the lord Cuts's aid de camp, captain Bolas, with mr. Eley, an Engliſh volunteer, killed on the ſpot. The loſs of the Dutch was no leſs than that of the Engliſh.

(4) French writers themſelves allow, that the great motions they obſerv'd in the camp of the beſiegers, the 23d in the evening, which they apprehended was in order to a general aſſault, determin'd them to beat a parly, and deſire to capitulate.

Naſſau-

Q. ANN, AN' 1702.

Naſſau-Saarbruck would, upon no account allow them. During this ſiege, which laſted four weeks, the beſieged are computed to have loſt as many men, and more commiſſion'd officers, than the beſiegers.

Ruremond,

The earl of Marlborough was no ſooner informed of the ſurrender of Venlo, than his active genius put him upon making the beſt of the remainder of the ſeaſon, and puſhing on to new conqueſts. He, therefore, ordered thoſe Engliſh, Dutch and Pruſſian forces, which had taken Venlo, to inveſt Ruremond (or Roermond) another town of Spaniſh Guelderland (1), of equal, or more conſiderable importance, tho' not ſo well fortified as Venlo. The town was inveſted, the twenty-ninth of September, N. S. and the confederates, as ſoon as the trenches were open'd, attacking it with a more than common vigor, or rather fury, the gariſon, conſiſting of four battalions of foot, commanded by the Prince de Hoorn, found it was to no purpoſe to attempt a long reſiſtance. They, therefore, beat a parly, the ſixth of October, and, the next day, ſurrender'd the town upon articles, the gariſon being conducted to Louvain.

And Stevenſwaert, beſieged and taken.

During this ſhort ſiege, Stevenſwaert, a ſmall but very ſtrong town, or rather fortreſs, ſeated on a little iſland in the middle of the Maeſe, about five miles to the ſouth of Ruremond, defended by a colonel, with 400 men, being likewiſe vigorouſly attack'd, by general Schultz, with a detachment, and taken by capitulation, the navigation of the Maeſe was thereby opened, and made free, between Maeſtricht and Holland: and all this while, the marſhal de Bouflers ſate ſtill, without making any motion for the relief of theſe important places, or even ſo much as to aim at offering the allies any diverſion.

The ſiege of Liege reſolved upon.

With theſe conſiderable conqueſts, the deputies of the States would very willingly have ſate down contented; but the earl of Marlborough, wiſely foreſeing how valuable a conqueſt the fine and noble city of Liege would be, and how highly it would redound to the reputation of the confederate arms, and, beſide, the great importance of it, as he might put a great part of his army, in winter-quarters there, reſolved to attempt it, and thereby put a glorious end to the campain (2).

The marſhal de Bouflers retreats with precipitation.

The marſhal de Bouflers, who ſoon ſuſpected the earl's deſign, being rouſed from his lethargy, thought it now high time to do ſomething for the ſecurity of that important place. He therefore viſited the moſt conſiderable poſts between that city and Maeſtricht, making a ſhew as if his deſign was to incamp thereabouts. He likewiſe, went twice, with the duke of Maine, and ſeveral ingineers, to view the fortifications of the citadel. However, he was no ſooner informed of the march of the confederate army towards Liege, than he retreated to Tongren, with great precipitation, and intrench'd himſelf there: but ſoon after, not thinking himſelf ſafe enough even there, he decamp'd and march'd towards Brabant.

Q. ANN, AN' 1702.

Farther motions of the two armies.

During theſe marches, ſeveral inſtances occur'd to ſhew the ſuperior conduct of the earl of Marlborough to that of the marſhal de Bouflers, how much better intelligence he had, and how active he was in circumventing all the marſhal's deſign (3).

The confederates come before Liege.

Nor was the earl's vigilance leſs conſpicious, in the extraordinary march he made from his camp at Soutendale to Liege, before which place he ſate down with his army, the 12th of October N. S. (4). The 13th, the whole army decamp'd, and advanced a little nearer the city. At their approach, they found the ſuburb of St. Walburg ſet on fire by the French gariſon; and the governor, with eight battalions, retired into the great citadel, having put the remainder of his troops, in the ſmaller citadel call'd the Chartreuſe. The chapter and magiſtracy had, the evening before, ſent commiſſioners to the earl of Marlborough, deſiring to treat, and their requeſt being readily granted, this day, three of the chapter, and as many of the magiſtracy, came out again, and the articles being agreed on, they were ſigned by the earl, by the deputies of the States-general, and by the commiſſioners from the chapter and magiſtracy. In purſuance to theſe articles, one of the gates of the city was delivered up to the confederates, the ſame night, at ten o'clock; and, on the fourteenth, they took poſſeſſion of the whole town, with three Engliſh regiments of horſe, and as many battalions of foot, under the command of the lord Cuts.

The city ſurrenders.

The great citadel beſieged.

The eighteenth of October, N. S. in the evening, the trenches were opened before the great citadel, by four Engliſh battalions, on the right, commanded by lieutenant-general Sommerſelt, and the like number of Dutch on the left, commanded by lieutenant-general Fagel. The very ſame evening, the allies attacked an intrenchment of the enemy's, which occaſioned a great fire on both ſides; but at length the French were beaten off, and, having attempted to regain that poſt, were repulſed with conſiderable loſs.

The 20th, at ſun-riſing, the batteries of the beſiegers being all erected and compleat, and mounted with forty-four cannon and twelve mortars, they began to play againſt the citadel with great fury, and thereby blew up a magazine of the enemy's, with upwards of 1000 loaded bombs and grenadoes, and ſeveral barrels of powder.

The 21ſt, the beſiegers continued to cannonade the citadel more furiouſly than the day before, and diſmounted all the enemy's batteries, two pieces of cannon and two mortars excepted.

The ſame evening, the confederates throwing

(1) This place is generally reckoned the ſecond city of Guelderland, and ſtands on the Maeſe, at the confluence of that river, and the Roer; eleven miles ſouth of Venlo, and twenty-one ſouth of Guelders. It has ſeveral ſtately monaſteries, among which that of the Carthuſians is the moſt conſiderable.

(2) This place, which is number'd among the great cities of Europe, has, within the town and ſuburbs, above one hundred churches, eight of which are collegiate, and thirty-two parochial, and is beſide very rich and populous: and has a famous univerſity, indow'd with large eccleſiaſtical revenues. It is ſeated in a pleaſant vally, ſurrounded with hills, the river Maeſe entering it, in two branches, accompanied with ſeveral ſmaller ſtreams, which form a great number of delightful iſlands. On the brow of a hill, that hangs over it, is a citadel of great ſtrength, which commands it: and it has beſide another ſmaller citadel call'd the Chartreuſe. Lediard's life of Marlborough. Vol. 1. p. 185.

(3) Of this, among others, we have the following memorable inſtance: the earl having notice where the marſhal deſign'd to be, one day, at noon, marched ſo early, and was ſo poſted, that Bouflers, with his army, came within ſhot of the confederate troops, before he knew where he was, and might probably have been intirely cut off, if the too cautious Dutch could have been prevailed upon to venture a battle: but that being prevented, the marſhal ſtole out of the trap, by favor of the dark night. Lediard's life of Marlborough, Vol. 1. p. 186.

(4) The duke decamp'd, with the grand army, about one in the morning, and march'd, in two columns, towards that important place. He croſs'd the Jecker, a little above Maeſtricht, leaving the Maeſe to the left. About four, in the afternoon, he came within cannon ſhot of the citadel; and, about ſun-ſetting, both columns joining, the camp was form'd along the hill, near it, on the north-ſide; by which means, the city, citadel and lower-fort, were, in a manner, all block'd up. The governor, and commander in chief, was lieutenant-general Violaine, who had twelve battalions of foot under his command, and had, in the two citadels, near 50 pieces of cannon and mortars mounted, with great ſtore of ammunition, and all other neceſſaries. Lediard's life of Marlborough. Vol. 1. p. 187.

ſome

Q. Ann, An' 1702.

ſome bombs into the place, ſet another of the enemy's magazines on fire, in which were 6000 grenadoes ready filled, and a great quantity of powder. The attack was carried on that night with great ſucceſs; and, the next day, two more magazines were ſet on fire by their bombs. The ſame evening, their ſmall mortars for grenadoes (an invention aſcribed to monſ. Cohorn, and called by his name) being ready, all the batteries began to play, with great order, diſpatch and ſucceſs.

The 23d, a conſiderable breach being made, and four other magazines of the enemy's being blown up, it was reſolved to attack the counterſcarp that evening: accordingly, four battalions of 500 grenadiers, on the right, commanded by lieutenant-general Sommersfelt, and a like number, on the left, under the command of lieutenant-general Fagel, were appointed for the attack.

The counterſcarp ſtormed.

About four in the afternoon, the ſignal being given, the confederates advanced, with great intrepidity, towards the enemy: ſuch ſtrict order was likewiſe obſerved, that not a muſket was fired, tho' the French more than enough provoked them, by a continual fire from the town. Being advanced to a convenient nearneſs, they attacked the counterſcarp with ſo much fury, that the French could not defend their poſt, but ſoon abandon'd it. The allies, in the mean time, inſtead of lodging themſelves upon it, got into the covered-way, paſſed the ditch, mounted the breach at once, and took the place by dint of ſword.

In the heat of action, the lord Cuts, who was in the city with ten battalions, detached 1200 men to the aſſiſtance of the aſſailants; theſe ruſh'd ſuddenly and unexpectedly into the citadel, on that ſide next the city, which contributed not a little to the ſucceſs of the attack; for the enemy were ſo ſurprized and daunted to find themſelves fallen upon in this manner, on every ſide, that they quited the breach much ſooner than there was otherwiſe reaſon to expect they would have done.

Monſ. de Violaine, the governor, (who, but five days before, upon a ſummons ſent him to ſurrender, returned the earl of Marlborough this haughty anſwer, "that it would be time enough to think of "that ſix weeks after") was ſo ſurprized at this vigorous attack and unexpected boldneſs, that he immediately beat a parly; but the victorious allies, being already in the place, would hear nothing of it, and had killed all they met, if the French had not thrown down their arms and beg'd quarter, which was readily granted (1).

The citadel being thus taken, after an obſtinate fight of about three quarters of an hour, the victory of the confederates was, ſoon after, compleated, by the ſurrender of the Chartreuſe, which they deſigned to have attack'd two days ſooner, had not the ſtormy weather, which happened the 26th and 27th, damaged their bridge of boats.

The Chartreuſe ſurrenders.

On the 29th, about ten in the morning, their mortars began to play, which having ſet the greateſt part of the building in flames, and about two in the afternoon, the cannon of the beſiegers having begun to play, and batter the place, the garriſon immediately deſired to capitulate. Hoſtages being, hereupon, exchanged, it was agreed, that one of the gates ſhould be delivered to the confederates, in the morning, and that the gariſon, which inſiſted to go directly to Namur, ſhould march out, the 31ſt, in the evening, with their arms, colors flying, drums beating, and two ſmall pieces of cannon, and be conducted by Tongres, Vogelſanck, and Herenthal, to Antwerp.

The confederate army ſeparates.

The 3d of November, N. S. the confederate army ſeparated near Liege, and thereby put an end to a campain, glorious beyond expectation, in which a great number of places were taken, with an inconſiderable loſs, and in which the earl of Marlborough laid the ground-work, to the great ſucceſs and reputation he afterwards gained during this war (2).

The earl of Marlborough taken by a French party.

This campain, however happy, was ſucceeded by an accident, which had almoſt, at once, loſt the honor and advantage of it. The day the army ſeparated, the earl of Marlborough went to Maeſtricht, where he imbarked, the very ſame evening, on the Maeſe, for Holland. He had a detachment of twenty-five ſoldiers, commanded by a lieutenant, in the boat with him, to ſerve as a convoy. The next morning, he joined monſ. Cohorn, and they continued their paſſage together, having a company of ſixty men, in a larger boat before them. A troop of horſe, of ſixty men, was likewiſe ordered to ride along the banks of the river. The great boat, in which general Cohorn was, happen'd to out ſail the other in the night, and the troopers on ſhoar, at the ſame time, miſtook their way. The French had yet the town of Guelder in their hands; and a party of thirty-five men from thence, were lurking on the banks of the river, near three leagues below Venlo, waiting for an adventure. It was now between eleven and twelve o'clock, and the company being all aſleep, theſe men ſeized the rope by which the boat was towed, and hauled it to the ſhoar: they then made an immediate diſcharge of their ſmall arms and threw ſeveral grenadoes into the boat, by which ſome ſoldiers were wounded: this done, they enter'd and ſeiz'd the boat, and thoſe who were in it, before they could recover themſelves to make oppoſition.

But gets out of their hands again.

The earl's brother had taken a paſſport, which not being made uſe of, it remained in the hands of his ſecretary, and which now ſerved the earl. The date indeed was expired; but the calm and wonderful preſenſe of mind with which he produced it, together with the hurry they were in, favored by the night, happily prevented that from being diſcovered. They therefore only rifled the boat, ſearched the trunks and baggage, emptied them of what plate and other things of value they found, and took preſents from thoſe whom they believed were protected by their paſſes; and then, after having detained them ſeveral hours, and taken

(1) At the concluſion of this glorious action, a ſmall miſtake happen'd, which was fatal to ſome of the victors, who, firing ſome ſmall arms after they were in poſſeſſion of the place, gave occaſion to thoſe who were in the batteries to believe, that the enemy had rallied again, on the farther ſide of the citadel; upon which they poured in a whole ſhower of bombs, at random, which falling among friends and foes, did ſome damage before the miſtake was diſcovered.

The troops, and more particularly the Engliſh, all behaved with great bravery, and, beſide an immortal honor, got a very conſiderable booty, in gold and ſilver, notes upon ſubſtantial merchants in Liege (which were as good as mony) and plate. The loſs of the Engliſh (beſide mr. Wentworth, brother to the lord Raby, who went as volunteer) was one lieutenant-colonel, one major, three captains, and ſix ſubalterns ſlain, twenty-four officers wounded, 143 private ſoldiers killed, and 360 wounded. The enemy was computed to have had double that number kill'd and wounded, and beſide the loſs of thirty-ſix pieces of cannon, and a great quantity of arms and amunition, the governor and the duke of Charoſt, with the remainder of eight battalions, that were in the citadel, were made priſoners at diſcretion. Lediard's Life of Marlborough. Vol. I. p. 191.

(2) When the earl took the command of the army, he found it flying before the enemy; and hardly thought ſecure, tho' under the cannon of a conſiderable fortreſs: but no ſooner had he taken that command, than the pale-faced goddeſs, Fear, took up her abode with the enemy. They were as aſſiduous to avoid a battle, as he to ſeek it. They even neglected advantages they might have taken, and ſuffered him to undertake and execute juſt what he himſelf would. Lediard's Life of Marlborough, Vol. I. p. 195.

their

Q. Ann, An' 1702.

their guard of foot-priſoners, they let them go, and ſo happily eſcaped the danger.

The governor of Venlo having early notice of his excellency's being taken, but not being informed of the circumſtances which followed, preſumed he was carried priſoner to Guelder; he therefore, with his whole gariſon, marched immediately to inveſt that place. This news coming likewiſe to the Hague, in the ſame imperfect manner, put the States under no ſmall conſternation. They immediately aſſembled, and reſolved to ſend orders to all their forces, to march immediately to Guelder, to threaten the gariſon with the utmoſt extremities, unleſs they ſhould deliver the priſoners, and never to leave the place till either they had taken it, or the general were ſet free. But, before theſe orders could be diſpatch'd, the earl of Marlborough came to the Hague, where he was received with inexpreſſible joy, not only by the States, but by the inhabitants, who began to look upon him as their guardian-angel, and upon that occaſion, ſo crouded the ſtreets, to give his excellency a hearty welcome, that it was not without great difficulty, he could get thro' them to his lodgings, to ſuch a degree was he beloved, and of ſo high eſteem was the name of Marlborough, with people of every condition.

Conſternation of the Dutch on this occaſion;

Removed by his arrival at the Hague.

The grand penſionary Heinſius, when he complimented him, in the name of the States, on his happy eſcape; ſaid, "that his captivity had well-nigh "inſlaved not only their provinces, but put it in "the power of France, to have extended her uncon-"troulable dominion over all Europe, by detaining "his perſon, whom they could not but look upon "as deſtined by providence, to be its inſtrument, in aſcertaining the liberty of the better part "of the Chriſtian world". To which his excellency made the following modeſt anſwer; "that "he ſhould always take pride in being ſerviceable "to the common cauſe, and their High-mightineſſes in particular; but he thought what had "been applied to him, in juſtice belonged to the "Queen, his miſtreſs, who, by God's aſſiſtance, "might be the inſtrument of the divine will; but "as for his part, it was glory ſufficient for him, "to be her Majeſty's agent."

The grand penſionary's compliment to the earl.

His modeſt anſwer.

Affairs of the Empire.

Prince Lewis of Baden, who commanded the Imperial army, in Germany, finding himſelf ſuperior to the enemy, laid ſiege to Landau, the ninth of June: but the place being ſtrong (1), and defended by a numerous gariſon, held out 'till the begining of September; when the Prince having informed the King of the Romans, that the town was upon the point of ſurrendring, his Majeſty came into the Imperial army, and was preſent when the gariſon beat a parly, the 10th of that month, and conſequently had the honor of the conqueſt.

Landau taken by the Imperialiſts.

To counterbalance this advantage, a few days before that place ſurrendered, the Elector of Bavaria, who had been a long time ſuſpected by the allies of being in the intereſt of France, ſurpriſed and took Ulm, a large and ſtrong Imperial city, the capital of the circle of Suabia (2); declared openly againſt the confederates, threatned the circles of Suabia and Franconia, in caſe they did not obſerve an exact neutrality, and, by his actions and declarations, ſtruck terror and amazement throughout the whole Empire. It appear'd alſo by ſome intercepted letters, that the Bavarians intended to penetrate into the Briſgow, with 10,000 men, and to have poſted themſelves on the Rhine, near Hunninghen, in order to join the French. However, by the diligence and valor of Prince Lewis of Baden, and the other Imperial generals, eſpecially at the bloody and unequal battle of Friedlingen, where the French were routed (3), all the indeavors of the French and Bavarians, to join each each other, were fruſtrated for this winter, and the former obliged to paſs the Rhine.

The elector of Bavaria ſeizes Ulm.

Q. Ann, An' 1702.

The diet of the Empire was ſo incens'd at the treachery of the Elector of Bavaria, in ſeizing Ulm, that, after a warm debate thereupon, it was reſolved, by a plurality of voices, to declare war againſt the French King, and the duke d'Anjou, which was done accordingly; and a memorial was order'd to be drawn up, requeſting his Imperial Majeſty, to proceed againſt the Elector, according to the conſtitutions of the Empire. The miniſters of the Elector of Bavaria and Cologn were, hereupon, forbid appearing any more in the general diet; notwithſtanding which, the Elector of Bavaria proteſted againſt theſe proceedings of the general diet, and particularly againſt their declaration of war (4); but no regard was had to this proteſt: and for the Empire's declaration of war, it was publiſh'd and notified to the cardinal of Lamberg, the Emperor's commiſſioner, on the 30th of September, N. S. by the direction of the Elector of Mentz, in the name of the diet of Ratiſbon (5).

The Empire declares war againſt the French King, and the duke d'Anjou.

And now, the Empire having declared war againſt France, the diet came to a reſolution to maintain an army of 120,000 men; but how miſerably they fell ſhort of their quota, almoſt every year, the ſequel will too evidently ſhew.

The quota of the Empire.

Before I quit Germany, I muſt take notice, that towards the latter end of the year, count Tallard took the ſtrong caſtle of Traerbach, upon the river Moſel, after a ſtout reſiſtance; and, on the other ſide, the hereditary Prince of Heſſe-Caſſel took Zinch, Lintz, Brizich and Audernach, all ſmall places which the French had poſſeſſed themſelves of upon the Rhine. Thus ſtood matters, at this time, in Germany.

The duke of Bavaria's declaring for France, ſo extreamly imbaraſs'd the Emperor, that he could not ſend the re-inforcements into Italy, which he had promiſed Prince Eugene, tho' he ſtood in great need of them: for King Philip of Spain, having firſt viſited his kingdom of Naples, afterwards joined the duke de Vendôme, in Lombardy. How-

Affairs of Italy.

(1) Landau is a ſmall but ſtrong city of Germany, in the lower circle and palatinate of the Rhine, once Imperial, but ſubject to the French after the treaty of Munſter. It ſtands on the river Queich, about eight miles ſouth of Neuſtadt, about thirteen weſt of Philipſburg, and about ſixteen ſouth-weſt of Spiers.

(2) This city, which is rich and populous, as well as large and ſtrong, is adorned with many ſtately edifices, and particularly with a cathedral reckoned the fineſt in Germany. It ſtands on the rivers Danube and Iller, near forty miles weſt of Augſburg, about fifty almoſt ſouth-weſt of Stutgard, and near ſixty almoſt north-eaſt of Conſtance.

(3) According to the account publiſh'd by the Imperialiſts, which they grounded upon the Prince of Baden's having gain'd his point, to prevent the conjunction of the Elector with the French. But monſ. de Villars, likewiſe, laid claim to the victory, becauſe he took Friedlingen the next day; and he was afterwards rewarded for it with a marſhal's ſtaff.

(4) The elector alledged, "that an offenſive war, like this, ought to be reſolved upon by common conſent, and not by "plurality of voices". To which it was anſwered, "that the King of France had attack'd the Empire, by invading, not "only in his own name, but in the name of the duke d'Anjou, his grandſon, ſeveral fiefs o the Empire in Italy, the archbiſhop-"rick of Cologn, and the dioceſe of Liege, as alſo by diſturbing the trade of the Rhine, and commiting ſeveral other hoſti-"lities which rendered this war defenſive, and not offenſive, on the ſide of the Empire. Boyer's reign of Queen Ann, p. 29.

(5) The occaſion of this defection of the electors of Bavaria and Cologn has been very differently reported: but the continuator of Rapin, in French, gives us one ſo very ſingular, that I cannot forbear mentioning it. He not only ſuppoſes it to proceed from a diſcontent at the crown of Spain's being loſt to their family, by the death of the Prince of Bavaria; but inſinuates, as if they thought there was ſomething myſterious in that Prince's premature death, and imagined foul play in the caſe, to make way for the houſe of Auſtria; and that they thereupon conceived ſuch a prejudice againſt the Imperial family. Book 26. p. 477.

Q. Ann, An' 1702.

ever, Prince Eugene was not diſcouraged from attacking them, notwithſtanding the ſuperiority of 40,000 of the enemy, againſt 25,000 of his troops. This he did the 15th of Auguſt, and, according to the German account, obtain'd the victory: but as the French gave out, that their army was victorious, and ſung Te Deum for it, as well as the Germans, I ſhall, for the ſatisfaction of the reader, give both their accounts.

The account given by the Imperialiſts of the battle of Luzara.

The battle of Luzara.

Upon ſeveral advices which we received, that the enemy advanced towards us, with their whole army, Prince Eugene ordered the trumpets to ſound to horſe, the 15th in the morning, and about ten o'clock he ordered the whole army to march towards Luzara.

Never were men ſeen to march with ſuch a zealous alacrity: both officers and ſoldiers, over-joyed, advanced with ſo much ſpeed, that our right wing ingaged before four in the afternoon, with the enemy's left, which they met near the Po. We fired ſo thick upon them, with our cannon, that we forced the enemy's army to make a halt, which gave our left wing time to advance, and range themſelves in order of battle.

About ſix o'clock, our right wing fell on, with an undaunted and wonderful courage, and was received very briſkly by the enemy. Both the one and the other fought with an extraordinary obſtinacy, neither of the parties being willing to loſe a foot of ground; 'till our left wing being ingaged, we overthrew the King's gens d'arms, and the Iriſh regiments, which ſo increaſed the courage of our men, that they forced the enemy to retreat 700 paces, leaving the field of battle, and their dead, in our poſſeſſion; tho' they were much ſuperior to us in number, and advantageouſly poſted. Their firing, which was extreamly thick and violent, laſted about two hours: but, at length, night parted the two armies, and put an end to the combat. Ours remained maſters of the field of battle, and poſted themſelves upon it, and the enemy retreated ſeveral hundreds of paces.

We may judge, by the enemy's loſs, which, as all the deſerters acknowledge, amounts to 10,000 men, with what courage both the armies fought. Our loſs is about 3000 killed and wounded. We lament extreamly the loſs of the Prince of Commerci, who, in the firſt onſet, was ſhot thro' the body, and fell down dead: the marquis Davia, who was abroad, with a party, returned in the heat of the combat, and took his opportunity ſo well, that he fell upon the enemy's baggage, on the other ſide of the army, and carried off, to Guaſtalla, as many horſes, mules, oxen and waggons, as poſſibly he could.

The account given by the French of the battle of Luzara.

French account of this battle.

The 15th of this month, about one o'clock in the morning, the army decamp'd from Teſta, without beating a march, or ſounding to horſe. The King of Spain was in the right wing, the count de Theſſe led the left, which made the van-guard, and the duke de Vendôme march'd before, with twenty-four companies of grenadiers, and two regiments of dragoons. He march'd with ſo much ſpeed, that by eight o'clock in the morning he arrived at Luzara, which the enemy had re-inforced the night before, for the ſecurity of their magazines. He ſummoned the commander to ſurrender, but he returned his anſwer in muſket-ſhot, by one of which the count de Seſane, was wounded in the arm; by which the duke de Vendôme judged, that the enemy was not far off, and, therefore, reſolved to incamp in that place. About noon, being ranging his men as they arrived, they ſaw the enemy drawn up in battle-array, with their cannon in front, and marching againſt our left wing, which extended it ſelf as far as the Po, in that part where they had a deſign to have built a bridge of communication. The duke de Vendôme ordered the brigades of Piemont, the marines, the regiment of Perche, and the brigades of Grancy and Sault, to advance; and the ſieur Albergotti, who was intruſted to poſt them, ordered they ſhould intrench themſelves forthwith, by the favor of a ſmall wood, and a mound upon the banks of the river Po: but the ground not permiting a ſecond line, the ſieur de Beſons drew up the regiments of cavalry of colonel-general de Montperoux, d'Uſez, du Borge, d'Anjou, Cavaillac, the dragoons of Savoy, and ſome other regiments, behind the ſaid infantry, to ſupport it. The dragoons of Senectaire, and a ſquadron of dragoons of Spain, were placed near the brigade of Piemont. The duke de Vendôme ſent cannon, which were placed on the mound, between the right and the left wing. In the mean time, the marquis de Crequi, lieutenant-general for the day, ranged the right wing in battle-array, according to the orders of the King of Spain, and the duke de Vendôme, who were in continual motion, commanding every where. About five o'clock, the enemy's whole army being arrived, their infantry in two lines, ſuſtained by their cavalry, march'd againſt our left wing, who tarried for them, without diſcharging one ſhot, 'till they came half as far as a fuſee would carry. The nature of the ground was ſuch, that, advancing, they laid their flank open to the regiment of Piemont, and the marine brigade, who fired continually on them, with ſo much vigor, that they were repulſed, leaving the ground covered with the ſlain. Within half an hour, they returned to the charge, and were ſtill repulſed. Then they brought on freſh troops, and charged the third time with the ſame ſucceſs. At length, the fourth time, they forc'd the Iriſh, and the regiments of Perche and Sault, to give a little ground; but the count de Beſons cauſing the regiments of the colonel-general Montperoux and of Bourbon, to march againſt the enemy, and which he led on ſeveral times to the charge, put a ſtop to their career. The regiment of Piemont preſerved their poſt, notwithſtanding the efforts of the enemy, who demanded a ſuſpenſion of arms, to recover the dead body of ſome perſon of quality, whoſe name we knew not. At the ſame time, almoſt, the fight began in our right wing, where the enemy were received with no leſs vigor and intrepidity, tho' all the troops, that were to have compoſed it were not yet arrived. The marquis de Crequi was mortally wounded, in the firſt charge, and died yeſterday, lamented by the whole army. The count d'Eſtrades, at the head of his regiment of dragoons, took a ſtandard from the enemy. The dragoons of the Dauphin, of Lautruch, and Languedoc gained two pieces of cannon. The battle continued, in this manner, 'till an hour before night, with ſuch an extraordinary firing of the ſmall ſhot, that the oldeſt officers in the army acknowledged they had never ſeen the like. At length, the enemy retired to the banks of the Zero, where they incamp'd: they had between 5 and 6000 men, or more, killed or wounded, on this occaſion, and ſeveral of their principal officers, which is confirm'd by the report of all their deſerters. In the confederate army, there were about 2500 kill'd or wounded, with ſeveral other officers of quality. The marquis de Montandre, colonel of the marine regiment, the count de Ronel, a reformed colonel, the ſieur de Vandeville, and the ſieur d'Arenes, brother to the major-general, were ſlain. The duke de Leſdiguiers, the marquis de Mongon, de Grancy, de Montperoux, de Liguerac, and the lieutenant-colonel of Piemont were wounded, and the count de Theſſe received a contuſion. All the

Q. ANN, AN' 1702.

the general officers ſignalized themſelves, by their conduct and by their reſolution. The King of Spain, being willing to incourage the ſoldiers, by his preſenſe, expoſed himſelf, ſeveral times, to the fire of the cannon and ſmall ſhot, and remained all this day and yeſterday, almoſt forty hours together, without ſleeping, or hardly eating. The duke de Vendôme, who was preſent every where, performed all the duties of a general, being always in the greateſt danger. It was thought, the enemy's deſign was to ſave their magazines in Luzara, to make themſelves maſters of a particular part of the river, where, by the conveniency of an iſland, a bridge might be made, by the French, to preſerve their communication with the army of the Prince de Vaudemont, and to make the beſt of the advantage which the ground afforded them, covered with trees, and inter-cut with ditches, cauſe-ways and hedges. But the conduct of the duke de Vendôme, and the valor of the ſoldiers, broke all their meaſures. We are now at work, without interruption, upon cutting off the bridges, that preſerve their communication with Berſello. Yeſterday the gariſon of Luzara, conſiſting of 400 foot, and 150 horſe; ſurrender'd at diſcretion, &c.

Notwithſtanding both ſides, we ſee, boaſted of the victory; the Germans, as they ſay, becauſe they remained upon the field of battle, the French having retreated ſome hundred paces; and the French becauſe they made themſelves maſters of Luzara, the next day, being intrench'd between that place and Prince Eugene's army: neither of them thought fit to renew the ingagement, but contented themſelves with the honor they had gained: and the truth ſeems to be, that night put an end to the battle, and the French thought fit to retreat under favor of it. Prince Eugence certainly did far more than could be expected from him, all circumſtances conſidered; for he was ſtrangely neglected by the court of Vienna; and the French and Spaniards, notwithſtanding this battle, continuing much more numerous, diſlodged the Imperialiſts, afterwards, from ſeveral ſmall places; with which the campain in Italy ended. I come now to maritime affairs, which were, this year, pretty conſiderable.

Maritime affairs.

Towards the concluſion of the foregoing book, I gave the reader an account, that ſir George Rooke had detach'd ſir John Munden, with a ſquadron of Engliſh and Dutch ſhips, to ſee the ſquadron, bound to the Weſt-Indies, well into ſea. This Weſt-India-ſquadron was commanded by vice-admiral Bembow, and conſiſted of two third and eight fourth-rates. He left ſir George Rooke off of Scilly, the ſecond of September 1701, and, on the twenty-eighth, made St. Maries, one of the Azores, or Weſtern-iſlands, where, calling the flag-officers and captains on board, he communicated his inſtructions to them.

Vice-admiral Bembow's expedition to the Weſt-Indies.

Not to follow the vice-admiral, in his voyage to ſeveral parts of the Weſt-indies, where no action of note happened, I ſhall only briefly obſerve; that ſir John Munden, with his ſquadron, left him, the tenth of October, and made the beſt of his way for England; that towards the latter end of January 1702, he was joined, at Jamaica, by one fourth, one fifth, and one ſixth-rate, a bomb-veſſel, a hulk, a fire-ſhip, and three veſſels with naval ordnance-ſtores, to which two fire-ſhips were added, by the governor and council of Jamaica; that in May he was joined by rear-admiral Whetſton; and that ſeveral of his detach'd ſhips, and ſquadrons, took a good number of prizes from the enemy. Having premiſed this, I come now to the only memorable action which happened during this expedition, I mean the vice-admiral's ingagement with monſ. du Caſſe's ſquadron.

Q. ANN, AN' 1702.

The eleventh of July, the vice-admiral ſet ſail from Port-royal, with two third-rates, ſix fourth-rates, one fire-ſhip, a bomb-veſſel, a tender and a ſloop, deſigning to join the rear-admiral, who was ſent out before, on the cruiſe: but geting advice, by the Colcheſter and Pendennis, that monſ. du Caſſe was expected at Logane, he made for that port; where arriving, the twenty-ſeventh, he ſaw ſeveral ſhips at anchor near the town, and one, which was under ſail, was taken by his boat. He purſued a man of war, of fifty guns, but with thirty only mounted, which ran a ſhore and blew up. The next morning, three other French ſhips were taken, which, together with a ſloop, were ſent to Port-royal, with the Colcheſter: a fourth, of ſixteen guns was ſunk, and a ſhip of eighteen guns being haul'd under a fort, which had twelve guns mounted, the boats were ſent in, and had not only the good fortune to burn her down to the ground, but brought off ſeveral other ſhips, laden with wine, brandy and other merchandizes.

He goes in purſuit of monſ. du-Caſſe's ſquadron.

He arrived, not long after, in a bay of cape Donna Maria, on the weſt end of Hiſpaniola, where he was informed, that monſ. du Caſſe was gone to Carthagena, and was bound from thence to Puerto Bello. He reſolved, therefore, to ſail to that coaſt, with two third-rates, and four fourth-rates; rear-admiral Whetſtone (who had taken a French man of war of eighteen guns, and two ſloops) being returned to Jamaica, with inſtructions, for the ſafety of that iſland. The tenth of Auguſt, he ſet ſail, and ſtretching over towards Santa-martha, on the nineteenth, in the afternoon, he diſcovered ten ſail, near that place, ſteering weſtward along ſhoar, under their top-ſails: four of them were from ſixty to ſeventy guns, one a great Dutch-built ſhip, of about thirty or forty, another full of ſoldiers, three ſmall veſſels, and a ſloop. The vice-admiral coming up with them, about four the ingagement began. He had diſpoſed his line of battle in the following manner, viz. the Defiance, Pendennis, Windſor, Breda, Greenwich, Ruby, and Falmouth; but two of theſe ſhips, the Defiance and Windſor, did not ſtand above two or three broadſides, before they looſ'd out of gun-ſhot; ſo that the two ſternmoſt ſhips of the enemy lay on the admiral, and gall'd him very much; nor did the ſhips in the rear come up to his aſſiſtance, with the diligence they ought to have done. The fight laſted, however, till dark, and tho' the firing then ceaſed, the vice-admiral kept them company all night (1). The next morning, at break of day, he was near the French ſhips, but none of his ſquadron, excepting the Ruby, were with him; the reſt being three, four, or five miles a-ſtern, notwithſtanding which the French did not fire a gun at the vice-admiral, tho' he was within their reach. At two in the afternoon, the French drew into a line; tho', at the ſame time, they made what ſail they could to avoid fighting. However, the vice-admiral and the Ruby kept them company, all night, plying their chaſe-guns.

The enemy's ſquadron diſcovered.

The ingagement begins.

Cowardice or treachery of ſome captains.

Thus the vice-admiral continued purſuing, and, at times, ſkirmiſhing with the enemy, for four days more; but was never duly ſeconded by ſeveral of the ſhips of his ſquadron.

The French purſued.

(1) The admiral believing, that if he led himſelf, on all tacks (perceiving the French would decline fighting if they could) that thoſe captains, for ſhame, would not fail to follow a good example, he ordered the following line of battle: The Breda, of ſeventy-guns, vice-admiral Bembow and captain Fogg; Defiance, of ſixty-four, captain Richard Kirby; Windſor, of ſixty, captain John Conſtable; Greenwich, of fifty-four, captain Cooper Wade; Ruby, of forty-eight, captain George Walton: Pendennis, of forty-eight, captain Thomas Hudſon: and the Falmouth, of forty-eight, captain Samuel Vincent.

The

Q. Ann, An' 1702.

The twenty-third, about noon, the admiral took from them a ſmall Engliſh ſhip, called the Anngally, which they had taken off of Liſbon; and the Ruby being diſabled he ordered her to Port-royal. About eight at night, the whole ſquadron was up with the vice-admiral, and the enemy not two miles off. There was now a proſpect of doing ſomething, and the vice-admiral made the beſt of his way after them; but his whole ſquadron, except the Falmouth, fell a-ſtern again. At two in the morning, the twenty-fourth, the vice-admiral came up with the enemy's ſternmoſt ſhip, and fired his broadſide, which was returned by the French ſhip, very briſkly; and, about three, the vice-admiral's right leg was broken to pieces by a chain-ſhot. He was carried down; but ſoon after ordered his cradle on the quarter-deck; and the fight was continued till day-light, when one of the enemy's-ſhips, of ſeventy guns, was diſcerned to be very much diſabled; her main-yard being down, and ſhot to pieces; her fore-top-ſail-yard ſhot away, her mizzen-maſt ſhot by the board, all her rigging gone, and her ſides bored to pieces, with our double-headed ſhot. In this fight not a ſhip ſtood by the admiral but the Falmouth, the Ruby being ſent away, as I have ſaid above. And when day appeared, the French bearing towards our ſquadron, with a ſtrong eaſterly wind, the cowardly or treacherous captains behaved as ſhamefully, ſuffering the French to tow off their diſabled ſhip, when the vice-admiral, who was within half gun-ſhot of her, might, with a little of their aſſiſtance, eaſily have carried her off.

The vice admiral's leg broke.

Shameful behavior of ſome captains.

The vice-admiral, being very uneaſy at theſe ſhameful proceedings, ordered the captains on board: but finding he had no reaſon to hope any better behavior from them (1), he thought it high time to return to Jamaica, where he ſoon after joined the reſt of his ſquadron, with rear-admiral Whetſtone.

The vice-admiral returns to Jamaica.

The 20th of September, the York and the Norwich arrived at Jamaica, with a ſupply of ſtores and proviſions; and the neceſſary preparations being made, the captains, who had failed ſo ſcandalouſly in the performance of their duty, were brought to their trials, on the 6th of October, at a court-marſhal, in which, rear-admiral Whetſtone preſided; and, after ſeveral days ſpent in examining witneſſes, and hearing what they could alledge, in their juſtification, ſentence was pronounced againſt them, according to their deſerts (2).

The captains tried before a court-martial.

And condemned.

The fourth of November, the vice-admiral died, upon which the command of the ſquadron devolved on rear-admiral Whetſtone, who having made what diſpatch he could, in refiting the ſhips, left part of them at Jamaica, for the ſecurity of the iſland, and with the remainder cruiſed on the north and ſouth ſides of Hiſpaniola; where we ſhall leave him, to take a view of tranſactions nearer home.

In the month of April, information was given to the earl of Nottingham, one of her Majeſty's principal ſecretaries of ſtate, that about 2000 men were raiſed in Spain, and deſign'd for the Weſt-indies, with the duke of Albuquerque who was going vice-roy to Mexico, and that it was determined, he ſhould be at the Groyne, on or about the 8th of May, N. S. where the ſoldiers were to imbark, when the French ſhips, deſign'd for that purpoſe, arrived. The intercepting of thoſe ſhips and troops being deemed an important piece of ſervice, the earl of Pembroke (purſuant to a reſolution of the cabinet-council) ſent orders to ſir John Munden, rear-admiral of the red, on the 5th of May, to take eight third-rate ſhips, at Spithead, together with two fire-ſhips, and to man them immediately out of other ſhips there and at Portſmouth, that they might be fit for ſervice. This done, he was ordered, with the firſt fair wind, to repair to ſuch a ſtation off of the Groyne, where he might receive intelligence of the enemy.

Q. Ann, An' 1702.

Sir John Munden's attempt to deſtroy ſome French ſhips at the Groyne.

The 12th of May, ſir John got clear of the land, with eight third-rates, a fourth-rate, called the Saliſbury, and two ſmall frigats, and then he firſt communicated to the ſeveral captains, the ſervice they were going upon. He no ſooner made the land of Galicia, than he ſent the Saliſbury and Dolphin into the ſhoar, for intelligence, and the next day he came to the appointed rendezvous, about fifteen leagues, N. W. from Cape-Prior, from whence, according to a reſolution taken with the captains, they ſtood ſo near in, that they might plainly ſee the Groyne, which was about four in the afternoon, and then ſtood off again for the rendezvous.

The Dolphin and Saliſbury not coming back, as ſoon as was expected, a council of war was held, the 18th.

The 25th, at night, the vice-admiral ſent in a ſmack, with the Saliſbury and the Dolphin, who, the next morning, brought off a Spaniſh boat, together with a French bark, and ſeveral priſoners, from whom they got intelligence, that there were thirteen French men of war bound from Rochel to the Groyne.

Intelligence of the enemy.

Upon this advice, ſir John carried a preſs'd ſail, to get to the windward, in order to intercept them, before they could harbor themſelves; and, on the 27th, he communicated his deſign to the captains, that they might prepare for battle. The next morning early, he diſcovered fourteen ſail, between Cape-Prior and Cape-Ortegal, to which he immediately gave chaſe; but they were too nimble for him, and got into the Groyne, before he could poſſibly come up to attack them; upon which, he called the captains together, who having taken all circumſtances into conſideration, and finding it impracticable to attack the French ſhips, in the harbor of the Groyne; and, beſide, their water being near ſpent, and the ſhips having received damage by bad weather, it was reſolved, the 29th of June, to repair into port, to refit, eſpecially, as the nine ſhips of the line of battle wanted three fifths of the number of men, they ſhould have had, according to the then eſtabliſhment.

They are purſued in vain.

The ſquadron returns to England.

(1) The captain of the Defiance, in a very odd manner, indeavored to diſſuade him from renewing the ingagement, ſince he had (as he alledged) tried the enemy's ſtrength with ſo little ſucceſs, for ſix days together; and moſt of the other captains gave it as their opinion, that it was not adviſeable to continue the fight, tho' they were then, on the enemy's broad-ſides, with the faireſt opportunity of ſucceſs that had yet offered. And beſide, our ſtrength was then one ſhip of ſeventy-guns, one of ſixty-four, one of ſixty, one of fifty-four, and two of forty-eight, with their maſts, yards, and every thing elſe, in as good a condition as could be expected, and not above eight men killed, except in the vice-admiral's own ſhip. Nor was there any want of ammunition: whereas the enemy had no more than four ſhips of force, from ſixty to ſeventy-guns, one of which was diſabled, and in tow. Lediard's Nav. Hiſt. Vol. 2. p. 745.

(2) Kirby and Wade, captains of the Defiance and Greenwich, were ſentenced to be ſhot to death, which was executed, at their return, on board the Briſtol man of war, at Plymouth, without their being ſuffered to land: captain Conſtable, of the Windſor, was caſhiered, and ſentenced to be impriſoned, during her Majeſty's pleaſure; captain Hudſon of the Pendennis, died ſome days before he was to have been brought on his trial: and the vice-admiral's own captain, Fogg, with captain Vincent, of the Falmouth, were ſuſpended: but the ſuſpenſion was ſoon taken off, by orders from the lord high-admiral. Annals of Queen Ann.

The

Q. Ann, An' 1702.

A great clamor on that account.

The return of this ſquadron, without having effected any thing, occaſion'd a great clamor; for tho' the rear-admiral, and all the captains in his ſquadron, did unanimouſly conclude, that at leaſt twelve of the fourteen ſhips, which they chaſed into the Groyne, were men of war; yet it was afterwards known, that there were no more than eight ſhips of force, and the reſt tranſports for the ſoldiers. It was, therefore, thought neceſſary to have this matter thoroughly examined into, by a court marſhal. Accordingly his royal highneſs (who was now entered on the office of lord high admiral) iſſued his orders for that purpoſe, to ſir Cloudeſly Shovel, admiral of the white, who ſummoning a court at Spithead, the 13th of July, they came to ſeveral reſolutions (1), after having taken the articles exhibited againſt ſir John Munden under examination, in the preſence of nineteen captains; by which reſolutions ſir John was fully acquitted.

The affair examined by a court-martial.

Sir John acquited.

I come now to the principal maritime tranſactions of this year, the unſucceſsful expedition to Cadiz, which, however, was followed by the more ſucceſsful attack of the Spaniſh gallions at Vigo.

The expedition to Cadiz.

No ſooner was war declared againſt France and Spain, than all poſſible diligence was uſed to fit out a formidable fleet: and as it was known, that the French were preparing for hoſtilities, it was reſolved, if poſſible, to be beforehand with them, and to ſend a conſiderable ſquadron on an expedition to Cadiz, in conjunction with the Dutch. The conduct of this expedition was deſign'd for the earl of Pembroke (as lord high-admiral,) had not his royal highneſs, Prince George of Denmark, been appointed to that office, as I have ſaid above, but it was now commited to ſir George Rooke (2), who, beſide the command of the fleet, was appointed vice-admiral, and lieutenant of the admiralty of England, and lieutenant of the fleets, and ſeas of this kingdom; and the duke of Ormond, as I have ſaid before, general of the land-forces, which conſiſted according to ſome, of 7000 Engliſh and 5000 Dutch, all very well appointed: tho' ſome accounts make them but 10,000 in all (3).

Sir George Rook admiral;

Arrives with the great ſhips at Spithead.

The 30th of May, the admiral, on board the Royal-Sovereign, having the union-flag on the maintop maſt-head, came to Spithead, together with ſir Cloudeſly Shovel, on board the Queen, and the great ſhips that lay at the Nore. At the ſame time, rear-admiral Fairborn arrived there from Ireland, with a ſquadron of men of war, having on board four regiments of foot, being part of the land-forces abovementioned.

The fleet proceeds to ſea.

The firſt of June, the duke of Ormond, with admiral Churchill and ſir Henry Bellaſis, arrived at Portſmouth; where his royal highneſs the Prince came the next day, and the day following, reviev'd the forces which lay incamp'd in the Iſle of Wight. The 4th he took a view of the whole fleet, and honor'd ſir George Rooke, with his preſenſe at dinner, on board the Royal-Sovereign. The 19th, the fleet weigh'd from Spithead, and came to an anchor, at St. Helens. The 22d, rear-admiral Fairborn and rear-admiral Graydon were detach'd, with thirty Engliſh and Dutch ſhips, firſt to look into the Groyne, and if they ſaw any ſquadron of French ſhips there to block them up; but if they found none, to cruize off of Cape Finiſterre, at ten or twelve leagues diſtance north-weſt; but the body of the fleet did not reach the Start, till the 21ſt of July (4).

Q. Ann, An' 1702.

The next day, they got off of the Deadman, from whence continuing their courſe croſs the bay of Biſcay, with little wind, northerly, they reached the ſtation for joining rear-admiral Fairborn, on the 30th. The laſt of July, the Lime-frigate was ſent to the Groyne in queſt of admiral Fairborn, and returned the 3d of Auguſt, with advice, that neither he, nor any of the French fleet, were in the Groyne, he having been driven from Cape Finiſterre, by contrary winds, and was working up to it again. Sir George hereupon made a ſignal for all the flag and land general-officers, to come on board him to a council, in which it was agreed, to bear away towards Liſbon, to meet him.

Arrives on the coaſt of Portugal.

About one, in the afternoon, they bore away, and, about two, the Plymouth came into the fleet, with advice, that admiral Fairborn, with his ſquadron, was about nine leagnes, S. W. from thence, and that captain Norris, in the Orford, had taken three French prizes, and the Dutch two. The 7th, the admiral made the ſignal for all the cruiſers to come in, and ſent off the Lime-frigate for intelligence. The next morning, the Orford came into the fleet, from admiral Fairborn, as the admiral himſelf did, with his ſquadron, about noon, after having been reduced to great ſtreights for want of proviſions. Soon after, the whole fleet made the rock of Liſbon, towards which place ſir George ſent the Kent and Pembroke frigats. On the 9th they return'd, and the admiral and general having received all the advice they could from mr. Methuen, her Majeſty's envoy at Liſbon, and the Prince of Heſſe, concerning the ſtate of Cadiz, a council of war, of land and ſea-officers was held, the 11th, in which it was determined to put, that night, a detachment of grenadiers, on board two or three frigats, to be ſet on ſhoar near Rota, on a diſcovery. The 12th, in the morning, ſir George made his ſignal to draw up in a line of battle, and ſteer'd away for Cadiz, which, by noon, he had about ſix leagues diſtant. About five, the ſame afternoon, the fleet anchored in the bay of Bulls, about two leagues from Cadiz, Rota bearing N. by E. and Cadiz, E. N. E. (5). The French men of war, and the Several French prizes taken.

Admiral Fairborn's ſquadron joins the fleet.

The fleet arrives at Cadiz.

(1) Biſhop Burnet (having before ſuppoſed him faulty) ſays, they acquited him, indeed, ſome excuſing themſelves, by ſaying that if they had condemned him the puniſhment was death; whereas, they thought his errors flowed from a want of ſenſe; ſo that it would have been hard to condemn him, for a defect of that which nature had not given him. Thoſe who recommended him to the imployment (continues the biſhop, who had before ſaid it was ſir George Rooke) ſeemed to be more in fault. This acquital raiſed ſuch an outcry, that the Queen ordered him to be broke. Hiſtory of his own times,

(2) Biſhop Burnet, who ſeems to have been no very great friend of ſir George's, ſays, he ſpoke ſo coldly of the deſign he went upon, before he ſailed, that thoſe who converſed with him were apt to infer, that he intended to do the enemy as little harm as poſſible. To divert the deſign (ſays the biſhop) ſir George himſelf was to go upon, he wrote up, from St. Helen's, that the Dutch fleet was victual'd only to the middle of September; ſo they being then in July, no great deſign could be undertaken, when ſo large a part of the fleet was ſo ill provided. When the Dutch admiral heard of this, he ſent to their embaſſador, to complain to the Queen, of this miſ-information; for he was victual'd till the middle of December. Hiſt. of his own times.

(3) By a particular liſt, which the reader will find in the appendix to the firſt volume of the annals of Queen Ann, it appears that the Engliſh were, including officers, nine thouſand, ſix hundred, and ſixty-three; and the Dutch three thouſand, nine hundred and twenty-four, excluſive of officers; and therefore together, thirteen thouſand, five hundred, and eighty-ſeven, without the Dutch officers.

(4) They were, for ſome time (ſays biſhop Burnet) ſtopp'd by contrary winds, accidents, and pretenſes, many of which were thought to be ſtrained and ſought for. Hiſt. of his own times,

(5) Biſhop Burnet ſays, ſir George Rooke had laid no diſpoſition beforehand how to proceed upon his coming thither: that ſome days were loſt on pretenſe of ſeeking for intelligence; that it was certain our court had a falſe account of the ſtate the place was in, both with relation to the gariſon and fortifications: and that the gariſon was much ſtronger, and the fortifications were in better caſe than was repreſented: however, by the account given ſir George by mr. Methuen from Liſbon, the deſign might very probably have ſucceeded, had the attempt been immediately made, in the firſt ſurprize, upon the arrival of the confederate-fleet. Hiſt. of his own times

Q. Ann, An' 1702.

gallies, which lay in the bay, retired within the Puntals: and if we may believe biſhop Burnet, it had been an eaſy matter, to have followed them, in the ſurprize, and to have taken or burnt them; "which (adds my author) Fairborn offered to "execute; but Rooke and the reſt of this crea-"tures, did not approve of it.

The 13th, an hour before day, the duke of Ormond ſent ſir Thomas Smith, quarter-maſter-general, with ſeveral ingineers, and officers to view the backſide of the iſland of Leon, to ſound the ſhoar, and to find out the moſt convenient place to make a deſcent, between the iſland of St. Pedro, and the town of Cadiz: and ſir Thomas brought his grace the report; that there was one large and two ſmaller bays, very proper to make a deſcent (1).

A council of war, of the flag and general-officers, was hereupon held, in which his grace the duke of Ormond, was of opinion, to land immediately in the iſland of Leon, the better to take advantage of the fright and diſorder into which the ſudden arrival of the confederate fleet had caſt the city of Cadiz. In this council of war (ſays biſhop Burnet) in which their inſtructions were read, it was propoſed to conſider, how they ſhould put them in execution. O Haro, one of the general-officers, made a long ſpeech againſt landing: he ſhewed how deſperate an attempt it would prove, and how different they found the ſtate of the place, from the repreſentation made of it in England. The greater number agreed with him, and all that the duke of Ormond could ſay, to the contrary, was of no effect. Rook (continues the biſhop) ſeemed to be of the ſame mind with the duke, but all his dependents were of another opinion, ſo this was thought to be a piece of craft in him. In concluſion, the council of war came to a reſolution, not to make a deſcent on the iſland of Cadiz; and without any regard had to the report made by ſir Thomas Smith, they adhered to this reſolution, nor were there any orders given for bombarding the town. The ſea was, for the moſt part, very high while they lay there, but it was ſo calm for one day, that the ingineers believed they could have done much miſchief, had they had orders for it: and, indeed (ſays Burnet) it appeared very evidently, that they intended to do nothing but rob St. Mary's. A landing on the continent was, as I have ſaid, reſolved on; and, the ſame afternoon a boat was ſent to Cadiz, from the admiral, with a flag of truce, and ſome declarations. The duke of Ormond wrote a letter, at the ſame time, to the governor of that place, with whom he had been acquainted in the late wars in Flanders, to invite him to ſurrender, whoſe anſwer, however, gave no great proſpect of it. At five, the fleet weigh'd and came to an anchor in ten fathom water, Rota bearing N. by E. and St. Sebaſtians, S. E. by S. about three miles off ſhoar. That evening, ſir George Rooke made a ſignal for a general-council of war; and, on the 15th, the forces began to land.

Q. Ann, An' 1702.

Objections made againſt landing.

Reſolved not to land on the iſle of Cadiz;

But on the continent.

The Spaniards oppoſed the landing of our troops, with a body of horſe: but the lieutenant-general, who commanded them, being kill'd in the action, ſome of them were taken priſoners, and the reſt put to flight (2). The landing proved, however, very difficult, the wind being high, and the ſea beating on the ſhoar with ſuch violence that thirty boats were overſet, and ſeveral men drown'd, while others were oblig'd to ſwim on ſhoar, or wade up to the neck. The Dutch likewiſe received ſome damage from their fort, St. Katherine's; but the Lenox, one of the third-rate men of war, commanded by captain Jumper, bringing her broad-ſide to bear, ſoon obliged them to retire. Our ſmall frigats, in the mean time, driving them from their batteries on the left, the Dutch poſſeſs'd themſelves of the cannon mounted upon them.

The 16th, the forces marched towards Rota, which ſurrendered without ſtriking a blow, and the general taking his quarters, in the caſtle, the army incamped before the place. The town of Rota taken.

While theſe things were doing on ſhoar, a council of war of flag-officers was held on board the Liberty, to conſult how the bombardment of Cadiz might be moſt effectually put in execution. The field-pieces, with four mortars, and proper ammunition, as alſo the dragoons and train-horſes being put on ſhoar, between the 17th and the 19th, the next day, the army marched to port St. Mary's, which they found deſerted by the inhabitants, but full of riches (3); with which the ſoldiers made very free, and had their ſwing of plunder for ſeveral days; the plenty of wine found there, having, as it was ſaid, in juſtification of the officers, render'd them ungovernable (4). Port St. Mary's plunder'd.

The 22d, a party was ſent back, under the command of colonel Pierce, from port St. Mary's, to St. Katherine's fort, which ſurrender'd after ſome oppoſition. No farther action happen'd, but a fruit- St. Katherine's fort taken.

(1) While this was doing (ſays biſhop Burnet) the officers, by the taking of ſome boats, came to know, that thoſe of Cadiz had ſent over the beſt of their goods, and other effects, to the port of St. Mary's, an open town, over againſt it, on the continent of Spain; ſo that here was good plunder to be had eaſily; whereas the landing on the iſle of Cadiz, was like to prove dangerous, and, as ſome made them believe, impracticable. Hiſt. of his own times.

(2) A grenadier of the Engliſh-guard who killed the Spaniſh-general, being afterwards admited to the duke of Ormond's preſenſe, offer'd his grace the ring, which the Spaniard wore on his finger: but he not only returned it to the ſoldier, and bid him keep it; but, pulling ſome pieces of gold out of his pocket, gave them him as a farther incouragement. Life of Queen Ann, Vol. I. p. 105.

(3) Both officers and ſoldiers (ſays biſhop Burnet) ſet themſelves with great courage againſt this tempting but harmleſs enemy. Some of the general officers ſet a very ill example to all the reſt; chiefly O. Haro and Bellaſis. The duke of Ormond tried to hinder it; but did not exert his authority. Hiſt. of his own times.

The firſt night was ſpent by the half famiſh'd and thirſty ſoldiers in the cellars of rich wines they had found out. The next day, their licentiouſneſs being heighten'd by the fumes of their liquor, they proceeded to rifle and pillage the houſes, in a moſt outrageous manner, not contenting themſelves to take moveables, but breaking and ſpoiling what they could not carry away. And as this booty would have been of no uſe to them, unleſs they could ſecure it on board the fleet, they called the ſeamen to their aſſiſtance, who from ſeconds ſoon became principals, and pilfered whatever they could lay hands on, with more eagerneſs, than the others. Nor did the plundering ſtop here. For the officers of the army themſelves thought it prudence, to ſhare the ſweetneſs and profit of a miſdemeanor, which they could not hinder: nay, ſome went ſo far as to think themſelves intitled by their eminent ſtations, to ingroſs the greater part of the booty. For which purpoſe, they ſet guards on the avenues, and ſtop'd all the meaner ſort, that were carrying goods to the fleet, with which they ſtored their own magazines, and afterwards retailed them for ready mony. Some churches fared no better than private houſes, being deſpoiled of their moſt precious ornaments. Inſomuch that the damage done the enemy was computed at three millions ſterling. The duke of Ormond (who had ſtrictly forbid plundering) ſo highly reſented the breach of his commands, that ſir Henry Bellaſis, and ſir Charles O Haro were afterwards put under arreſt for it. Annals of Queen Ann.

(4) It has been farther ſaid in extenuation of the irregularities commited there, that the duke of Ormond having ſent a letter to the governor of port St. Mary's, he returned a rude and unbecoming anſwer, in a paper unſealed, and no name ſubſcribed to it, in theſe words: Nos otros eſpanoles, no mudamos de religion, ni de Rey. (We Spaniards never change either our religion or our King.) Lediard's Naval hiſtory, Vol. II. p. 751.

leſs

Q. ANN, AN' 1702.

leſs attempt of baron Spar's on the Matagorda, an inconſiderable fort over againſt the Puntals (1); ſo the forces being all re-imbark'd, it was reſolved, in a general council, of ſea and land-officers, that the fleet ſhould take the firſt opportunity of returning for England (2). From which reſolution none diſſented but the duke of Ormond and baron Spar.

The deſign abandon'd.

The fleet ſails.

The 18th of September, the admiral made a ſignal to weigh, having a fine land-breeze: but (if we may give credit to biſhop Burnet) ſome of the ſhips-crews were ſo imployed, in bringing on board and beſtowing the plunder, that they did not take the neceſſary care to furniſh themſelves with freſh water (3). The wind ſlackening, the fleet did not ſail till the 19th, having, the ſame day, ſent a flag of truce to Port St. Mary's, with all the French and Spaniſh priſoners, which were unredeemed, to the number of 230, for which the Spaniards returned thirty-two men, which they had of the confederates. They plied ſome days, with an eaſy and variable wind, during which time, two letters were ſent from mr. Methuen, his Majeſty's envoy at Liſbon, one to the duke of Ormond, the other to ſir George Rooke, by which he aſſured them, that the King of Portugal would willingly aſſiſt in any thing that ſhould be deſired, not only in that port, but in any other ports of his dominions. A general council was thereupon called, the 22d, but it was reſolved to adhere to their former reſolution (4). The 23d, the diſpoſition was made for the ſquadron to be ſent to the Weſt-Indies, which being compleated, on the 24th, the admiral made his ſignal for them to depart. This ſquadron conſiſted of ſix men of war, and twelve tranſports, having four regiments on board, and was commanded by captain Walker, in the Burford.

A ſquadron detach'd to the Weſt-Indies.

The ſame day, being off of Cape St. Vincent, the Engliſh flag-officers took into conſideration ſeveral clauſes in her Majeſty's inſtructions (5), relating to the wintering of ſeveral of the great ſhips abroad; but it was concluded not to be adviſeable for ſeveral reaſons.

Q. ANN, AN' 1702.

Sir George Rook, with the fleet, being on their paſſage to England, ſent, the 21ſt of September, the Eagle, the Sterling-caſtle, and the Pembroke, with ſome tranſports, to water in Lagos-bay. They arrived there, the next day, and the land-officers, who were on board the Pembroke, going immediately on ſhoar, they got intelligence, that the Spaniſh plate-fleet, with a good convoy of French-men of war, had put in at Vigo, a port in Gallicia (6). This intelligence being made known to captain Hardy (afterwards ſir Thomas, and a flag-officer, commander of the Pembroke) he communicated it to captain Wiſhart, commander of the Eagle, and of the whole ſquadron. There was immediately a conſultation of captains held, in which it was reſolved, that this news being of ſuch vaſt importance, a ſhip ſhould be ſent to acquaint the admiral with it, and as captain Hardy's was the beſt ſailer, and he was maſter of the intelligence, he was pitch'd upon to ſail a-head, to find out the fleet: which, after having ſurmounted inexpreſſible difficulties, he had the good fortune to do, the 6th (or as ſome accounts ſay the 7th) of October The admiral was no ſooner informed of the news, than he imparted it to the Dutch admiral, and having declared it to be his opinion, that the fleet ſhould directly ſail for Vigo, he readily concurr'd: and, the next day, it was agreed, in a council of flag-officers, that in regard the attempting and deſtroying the French and Spaniſh ſhips, at Vigo, would be of great advantage to her Majeſty, and no leſs honorable to her and her allies, as alſo tend, in a great meaſure, to reduce the exorbitant power of France, the fleet ſhould make the beſt of their way to that port, and fall upon them immediately, with the whole line, if there were room ſufficient for it, otherwiſe attack the enemy with ſuch detachments, as might render the enterprize moſt effectual and ſucceſsful.

Intelligence of the Spaniſh plate-fleet.

It is reſolved to attempt them.

---

(1) The diſappointment of the nation's hopes from this expedition was certainly, in a great meaſure, owing to the miſmanagement and want of diſcipline, at port St. Mary's. To fall upon a people (ſays the author of the life of Queen Ann) in that manner, whom they ſhould have treated as friends, to raviſh the nuns, plunder private houſes, and even churches, was ſuch an effectual method of provoking that bigoted people, that no ſucceſs was to be expected afterwards, but what was to be obtained by downright force. Vol. I. p. 113.

(2) The reaſons alledg'd, for this reſolution, were the oppoſition and obſtinacy of the Spaniards, in Andaluſia, againſt the houſe of Auſtria; the difficulties which might be expected from the ſeaſon of the year; the averſion that they might reaſonably expect to find from the people of any other part of Spain (which by the by, their behavior at port St. Mary's had raiſed) the want of intelligence, which the army had been wholly deſtitute of, from the time they landed; a ſcarcity of proviſions for the Dutch troops, which they pretended could not be ſupplied from their ſhips, longer than a month; the leſſening of the army, by the detachment which was to be ſent to the Weſt-Indies, with captain Walker, and the inconvenience which might ariſe from ſickneſs; theſe, I ſay, were the pretended motive, for abandoning this deſign in a manner that gave occaſion to much cenſure. Lediard's Naval hiſtory, Vol. II. p. 752.

(3) As we are now come to a concluſion of this unſucceſsful expedition, let us hear what the French and Spaniards ſay of it. The confederate fleets of England and Holland (ſays F. Daniel) made an attempt, this year, upon Cadiz; but, after having been at a very great expence, in the preparations for this enterprize, were repulſed, with a conſiderable loſs. The Marquis de Villadarias, general of the coaſts, behaved, on this occaſion, with great courage and prudence. The French gallies ſtood by him gallantly, in defence of the Fort of Matagorda, where the Conde Hernando Nunez, captain-general, and commander of the gallies of France and Spain, performed his duty, with a ſingular conduct. The enemy were forced to deſiſt from their undertaking, after having loſt near two thouſand men in the expedition.

The marquis de Villadarias, in his letter, of the twenty-ſeventh of September, to the court of Madrid, ſays;

Nothing has been omited on my ſide, whereby I could merit the good opinion his Majeſty has of me. As the King was, ſo was I convinced the enemy could never pretend to beſiege Cadiz with ſo ſmall a number of men. Had the city ſent me the troops I required, I could have intirely defeated the enemy's forces when they re-embark'd. All the veſſels, both ſhips and gallies, did whatever could be expected from the valor and experience of their commander. The advantage we had at Matagorda was owing to the fire from the gallies. (Here we ſee the ill conduct of not ſending in our fleet at firſt, before the entrance into the harbor was rendered impracticable). The conſequence of that action, was their being forced to leave port St. Mary's, and the diſappointment of the whole undertaking (to the public, indeed, but not to thoſe who took care to inrich themſelves with the plunder both of friend and foe).

(4) The Queen, in the mean time, upon information, that monſ. Chateau-Renaud was got into the harbor of Vigo, with the French fleet and Spaniſh gallions, immediately diſpatch'd away two expreſſes, one to ſir George Rooke, with poſitive orders to attempt the taking or deſtroying them, and another to ſir Cloudeſly Shovel, to ſail with his ſquadron, to re-inforce the grand confederate fleet: but ſir George received the intelligence by another channel. Lediard's naval hiſtory, Vol. II. p 732.

(5) Biſhop Burnet ſays, that Rooke, without proſecuting his other inſtructions, in caſe the deſign on Cadiz miſcarried, gave orders only for a ſquadron, to ſail to the Weſt-indies, with ſome land forces; and tho' he had a fleet of victualers, that had proviſions to the middle of December, he ordered them to ſail home, by which means, the men of war were ſo ſcantily furniſhed, that the ſailors were ſoon forced to be put on ſhort allowance. Nor did Rooke ſend advice boats, either to the ports of Algarve, or to Liſbon, to ſee what orders or advices might be lying for him, but ſailed in a direct courſe for England. Hiſtory of his own times.

(6) The diſcovery was more particularly made, by mr. Beauvoir, a gentleman of Jerſey, and chaplain of the Pembroke, who, going aſhore, with theſe officers, pump'd the ſecret out of the French conſul, and a gentleman he met there, who was going from Liſbon on board the fleet. Appendix to Harris's Coll.

Purſuant

Q. Ann, An' 1702.

Purſuant to this reſolution, the whole fleet ſteer'd their courſe for Vigo, and the admiral having diſpatch'd two frigats, for intelligence, they return'd, the 9th at night, with a confirmation of captain Hardy's account, adding, that the enemy's ſhips lay up the river, in Redondella-harbor: and a ſhip of ſir Cloudeſly Shovel's ſquadron, coming into the fleet the next morning, with advice, that the admiral was off of Cape-Finiſterre, orders were ſent him to join the grand fleet. The 11th, in the afternoon, the fleet came to an anchor, at Vigo, the weather having proved ſo haſy, that they were not diſcovered, till they were juſt upon the town, and tho' they then fired very thick upon them, the confederates took no notice of it. The French admiral, monſ. Chateau-Renaud, had taken all human precautions to ſecure his fleet (1).

Diſpoſitions for the attack.

The confederate fleet was no ſooner come to an anchor, than the admiral called a general council of land and ſea-officers, where it was reſolved to attempt the forcing of the harbor, the next morning: and, as the whole fleet could not attempt the enemy's ſhips, without manifeſt danger of runing foul upon one another, a detachment of fifteen Engliſh, and ten Dutch men of war, of the line of battle, with all the fireſhips, ſhould be ſent in, with orders to uſe their beſt indeavors in deſtroying or taking the enemy's fleet, that the frigats and bomb-veſſels ſhould follow the rear of the detachment, and that the great ſhips ſhould move after them, and go in, if there ſhould be occaſion: that the army, at the ſame time, ſhould land, and attack the fort, on the ſouth of Redondella, and thence proceed on, where they might moſt effectually annoy the enemy: that becauſe it was not well known what depth of water there might be, the attempt ſhould be made with the ſmaller ſhips, and that, to give the better countenance to the ſervice, all the flag-officers ſhould go in with the ſquadron. For the better execution of theſe reſolutions, the admiral ſpent a good part of the night, in going from ſhip to ſhip, in his own boat, to give the neceſſary orders, and incourage both officers and ſeamen to their duty.

Succeſs of the land-forces.

The 12th in the morning, the duke of Ormond landed, about two leagues from Vigo, on the ſouth-ſide of the river, with between 2 and 3000 men; and, meeting with no oppoſition, his grace ordered the lord Shannon and colonel Peirce, to march, with the grenadiers, directly to the fort, that guarded the entrance into the harbor, where the boom lay, which they executed with much alacrity and and courage: and the duke himſelf, at the head of the reſt of the forces, march'd on foot, over craggy mountains, to ſuſtain the firſt detatchment: at the ſame time, there appeared about 8,000 men, between the fort and the hills; but, as the grenadiers advanced they retired; and the former, in like manner, driving another party of the enemy before them, followed them to the very fort, and bravely made themſelves maſters of the lower platform, on which they found thirty-eight pieces of cannon. Lieutenant-general Churchil's regiment advanced, hereupon, on the left, and took their poſts, as they ſaw moſt convenient. The batteries being thus taken, with a handful of men, notwithſtanding the French and Spaniards had near 20,000 men, at or not far from the place, the enemy retired into an old tower or ſtone-caſtle, and fired, from thence, for ſome time, very briſkly upon the Engliſh: but the granadiers plying them very warmly with their grenadoes and fuzees, as ſoon, as they appeared on the wall, monſ. de Sorel, a valiant captain of a French man of war, who commanded in the fort, opened the gates, and indeavored to force his way thro' the Engliſh, ſword in hand. The Engliſh grenadiers ruſhing, however, immediately into the caſtle, made themſelves maſters of it, and took near 300 French ſeamen, and fifty Spaniards, with their officers, priſoners at diſcretion: while a detachment of the Dutch ſtopp'd another ſmall party, that were eſcaping thro' the water.

Q. Ann, An' 1702.

Succeſs of the fleet.

As ſoon as the land-forces were got on ſhoar, the admiral gave the ſignal to weigh; the line was formed, and the ſquadron was bearing briſkly up to the boom, but when the van was got within ſhot of the batteries, it fell calm, ſo that they were obliged to come to anchor again. A freſh gale coming up, ſoon after, vice-admiral Hopſon, in the Torbay, being next to the enemy, immediately cut his cables, clapp'd on all his ſails, and bearing up directly upon the boom, amidſt all the enemy's fire, broke thro' it, at once, caſt anchor, with great reſolution, between two French men of war, the Bourbon and l'Eſperance, which lay near the boom, and received ſeveral broad-ſides from them. The reſt of vice-admiral Hopſon's diviſion, and that of vice-admiral Vandergoes, having weigh'd, at the ſame time, ſailed abreaſt towards the boom, but, being becalmed, they all ſtuck, and were forced to cut their way thro': a freſh gale, however, blowing again, the Dutch admiral made ſuch good uſe of it, that having hit the paſſage, the valiant Hopſon had made, he boldly went in, and made himſelf maſter of the Bourbon. Admiral Hopſon was all this while, in extream danger; for being clapp'd on board by a French fire-ſhip, by which his rigging was immediately ſet on fire, he expected, every moment to be burnt: but it fortunately fell out, that the French fire-ſhip, which was only a merchant-man, laden with ſnuff, fited up in haſte, for that purpoſe, being blown up, the ſnuff help'd to extinguiſh the fire, and preſerved the Engliſh man of war: however, the vice-admiral received conſiderable damage in this action (2). At the ſame time, captain Bokenham, in the Aſſociation, of ninety guns, laid

(1) He had not only drawn them up, beyond a very narrow ſtreight, not above a muſket-ſhot broad, defended by a caſtle on the one ſide, and plat-forms on both ſides of the ſtreight, on which he had planted his beſt guns: but he had, likewiſe, laid athwart it, a very ſtrong boom, made up of maſts, yards, cables, top-chains and caſks, faſtned together with ropes, ſeveral yards in circumference, under-run with hawzers and cables, and kept ſteady by anchors caſt on both ſides of it. The top-chain, at each end, was moored to a ſhip of ſeventy-guns. Within the boom, five men of war, of ſixty and ſeventy guns each, were ſo moored, with their broad-ſides fronting the intrance of the ſtreight, that they might fire at any ſhips which came near the boom and plat-forms. The harbor itſelf is ſo ſurrounded with hills, that no circumſtance of ſituation was wanting to render it impregnable, had there been time for it.

Biſhop Burnet ſays, monſ. Chateau-Renaud had not time to finiſh what he deſigned, otherwiſe the place had been inacceſſible; but, as it was, the difficulty in forcing this port was believed to be greater than any they would have met with, if they had landed on the iſle of Cadiz. He adds, that as ſoon as the Spaniſh flota had put in at Vigo, Methuen, the Queen's miniſter at Liſbon, ſent advertiſements of it, to all the places where he thought our advice-boats might be ordered to call: Rooke had given no orders for any to call, ſo held on his courſe towards cape Finiſterre; but when he received the intelligence (in the manner I have above related) he turned his c urſe towards Vigo, very unwillingly, as was ſaid, and finding the advice was true, reſolved to force his way in. Hiſtory of his own times.

(2) Beſide his having the fore-top-maſt ſhot by the board, 115 men killed and drowned, and nine wounded, moſt of his ſails were burnt and ſcorched, his fore-yard burnt to a coal, and his lar-board-ſhrouds, fore and aft, burnt to the dead-eyes; inſomuch that, tho' he peſerved the ſhip, he was afterwards obliged to leave her, and hoiſt his flag on board the Monmouth. For this good ſervice, as well the officers as the men, when they came home, were deſervedly rewarded, ſome with medals and chains of gold, and the reſt according to their reſpective qualities. Lediard's naval hiſtory Vol. II. p. 756.

his

Q. ANN, AN' 1702.

his broad-ſide againſt a battery of ſeventeen guns, on the left-ſide of the harbor, while captain Wyvell, in the Barfleur, a ſhip of the like force, was ſent to batter the fort, on the other ſide. Thus, for a long while, there was a conſiderable firing of great and ſmall ſhot, on both ſides, 'till the French admiral, (ſeing the platform and fort in the hands of the victorious Engliſh, his fireſhip ſpent in vain, the Bourbon taken, the boom cut, and the confederate fleet pouring in upon him) ſet fire to his own ſhip, and ordered the reſt of the captains, under his command, to follow his example, which was done, in great confuſion, yet could not be ſo punctually obeyed, but ſeveral of the men of war and gallions were taken by the Engliſh and Dutch (1).

Loſs of the confederates;

To make this victory ſtill more glorious and memorable, it was obtained with a very inconſiderable loſs, on the ſide of the confederates: for, beſide the damage ſuffered by vice-admiral Hopſon, as I have already mentioned, the Kent had only her fore-maſt ſhot, and her boatſwain wounded, the Aſſociation her main-maſt ſhot, two men killed, and as many wounded. And the Mary her boltſprit ſhot. Of the land-forces, two lieutenants, and about forty ſoldiers were killed, colonel Pierce was wounded by a cannon ball, from our own men of war, in the thigh, and colonel Seymour, colonel Newton, and mr. Talmaſh, with about thirty private men were alſo wounded.

And of the French and Spaniards.

On the French ſide, the number of men killed was much the ſame, as that of the allies: but they had near 400 officers, and men taken priſoners; among whom were Don Joſepho Checon, the Spaniſh admiral, monſieur d'Aliegre, commadore of a ſquadron, the marquis de la Galliſſoniere, and ſeveral other officers of note.

Q. ANN' AN' 1702.

The conſequence of this victory was a vaſt booty, both of plate and other things, the value of which it would be difficult to compute (2): but tho' the duke of Ormond poſſeſs'd himſelf of Redondella (where he took a great booty, which he cauſed to be diſtributed among the officers) and would have attacked Vigo, and wintered there; admiral Rooke would not conſent to it; for which he has been ſeverely cenſured by biſhop Burnet.

Admiral Rooke returns to England.

The 16th, ſir Cloudeſly Shovel, with about twenty of her Majeſty's ſhips, joined the grand fleet from England. The next day, the duke of Ormond, with the land-forces, left Redondella: and, on the 19th, the forces being imbarked, the admiral ſailed from Vigo-harbor, with nine Engliſh men of war, beſide ſome ſmaller veſſels, ſeveral Dutch men of war, and one of the gallions which was rigged (3); leaving the remainder of his fleet under the command of ſir Cloudeſly Shovel, with orders to ſee the French men of war and gallions rigged, and ſupplied with men, ſo that ſuch of them, as were our prizes, might be brought to England; and to deſtroy thoſe he could not have a proſpect of bringing home, firſt ſaving ſo much of their loading, guns and rigging, as poſſibly he could (4). With theſe ſhips ſir George Rooke arrived, the 7th of November, in the Downs, from whence the great ſhips were brought to Chatham (5).

About a week after ſir George Rooke's departure, the French men of war, and other prizes,

(1) Of thirteen gallions, which carried from twenty to upwards of thirty guns each, four were taken by the Engliſh, five by the Dutch, and the reſt were all deſtroyed. Of fifteen French men of war, five, together with two frigats, a fireſhip, and three ſcouts were burnt. The other ten men of war were taken, of which four, however, were run aſhore and bilged. How three Spaniſh men of war, which were in the harbour of Redondella fared, I do not any where ſo particularly find: but it is certain, they underwent the ſame fate, either of being burnt or taken. Some accounts make the number of the gallions more, and ſay the Engliſh, beſide the four abovemention'd, took two on the ground. Certain it is, that whether out of deſign, or by accident, the true ſtate of things was very much conceal'd.

(2) It has however been remarked; that this flota was the richeſt that ever came from the Weſt-Indies to Europe; that the ſilver and gold was computed at twenty millions of pieces of eight, of which fourteen millions only had been taken out of the gallions, and ſecured by the enemy at Lago or Lugo, about twenty-five leagues from Vigo, and the reſt was either taken, or left in the gallions, that were burnt or ſunk: and that the goods were valued at twenty millions of pieces of eight more, one fourth part of which was ſaved, near two deſtroyed, and the other taken by the confederates: beſide the ſhips already mentioned, and a great deal of plate and goods belonging to private perſons, moſt part of which was either taken or loſt. Annals of Queen Ann.

(3) Thus (ſays biſhop Burnet) ended this expedition, which was ill projected, and worſe executed. But as for the project, I muſt beg leave to differ from the biſhop. It was form'd by King William, and was worthy of ſo great a Prince: it was likewiſe, well timed, if not ſomething too late: however, the King of Spain being in Italy, the French King having occaſion for all his troops, in Flanders, Germany and Italy, and the Spaniards having neither fleet nor army, were favorable conjunctures. The duke of Ormond (adds the biſhop) told me he had not half the ammunition that was neceſſary, for the taking of Cadiz, if they had defended themſelves, tho' he believed, they would not have made any great reſiſtance, if he had landed, on his firſt arrival, and not given them time to recover from the diſorders, into which the firſt ſurprize had put them. A great deal of the treaſure taken at Vigo was imbezzel'd, and fell into private hands; one of the gallions foundered at ſea. The public was not much inrich'd by this extraordinary capture; yet the loſs our enemies had by it was a vaſt one; and to compleat the ruin of the Spaniſh merchants (and I fear a great number of ours too, who no doubt were deeply concern'd in the cargo's of this rich fleet) their King ſeized on the plate that was taken out of the ſhips, at their firſt arrival at Vigo.

(4) I ſhall conclude this relation, as I did that of the expedition to Cadiz, with an account what the French ſay of it: the confederate fleets (ſays F. Daniel) were more ſucceſsful at Vigo, than at Cadiz. The count de Chateau-Renaud was returning as convoy to the Spaniſh gallions, which were bound, very richly laden, from Mexico to Cadiz. But when he arrived within ſight of that Port, he found the fleets of England and Holland in poſſeſſion of the harbor. He offered to convoy them into ſome port of France. But to that they would not, on any account, give their conſent; ſo he was forced to go into the port of Vigo. He took all the meaſures he poſſibly could to put this poor harbor into a poſture of defence, and convey'd a great part of the gold and ſilver, out of the gallions, to Lago, within land. Not many days after, admiral Rooke appeared, and landing 2000 men, attack'd the fort and the batteries which defended the port. The fort they took, after ſome reſiſtance, and ſeized upon a battery, while the veſſels broke down the bomb which was laid before the haven. The count de Chateau-Renaud, when he found he had no hopes left, gave orders to the commanders of the ſhips and gallions to ſet fire to them, as ſoon as they had drawn out their men, while he threw a body of troops into the town and caſtle to defend them. They had time only to burn ſeven veſſels, and to run four a-ground. Fifteen gallions were likewiſe burnt, four run a-ground, and as many frigats. Five men of war, and as many gallions were taken by the enemy. This action coſt them 900 men killed or wounded. They took the Spaniſh admiral, monſieur d'Aliegre, chief of a ſquadron, the marquis de la Galiſſoniere, meſſieurs de Monbault, and la Maiſon-fort, captains of ſhips. The French loſt monſieur de la Rude, and de l'Eſcalette, lieutenants, de Pont de Veſe, an enſign, Tricambaut, captain of a ſhip, and monſieur du Pleſſis-Liencourt. Among the wounded were de Camilli, Pimont, la Tour, Landry, la Valette, Marigni, Lambourg, Chatelet, the chevalier Begon, the ſieurs de St. Victor and Hardi. The enemy attempted to make themſelves maſters of Vigo, but were repulſed by the Prince de Barbançon, governor of the province of Galicia, and by monſieur Renaud. With this agree ſeveral other French Relations, as well as that of an anonimous Spaniſh author; and they all indeavor, by a general and ſummary account only, to conceal the loſs of treaſure the Spaniards ſuſtained.

(5) He was obliged (ſays biſhop Burnet) to make all poſſible haſte home: for if the wind had turned to the eaſt, which was ordinary in that ſeaſon, a great part of our ſhips crews muſt have died of hunger. Hiſt. of his own times.

Q. Ann, An' 1702.

were put into the beſt condition, for their paſſage home, that the place would admit of, and all the loading was taken out of a gallion which was aground, ſeiz'd by the Mary; as alſo of another ſhip of fifty guns, called the Dartmouth, taken from the Engliſh, the laſt war, and now made prize by captain Wyvell. There were, likewiſe, taken out of ſome French ſhips of war, which were on the ground, fifty braſs guns, which with thoſe taken from the ſhore, amounted to about 110. And the day before ſir Cloudeſly ſet ſail, he ſet fire to all the ſhips and veſſels, which he could not poſſibly bring away.

Sir Cloudeſly Shovel returns with the prizes.

Sir Cloudeſly left Vigo the 25th, having then with him at leaſt ſeventy ſail of all ſorts: but, the next day, ſtanding thro' the ſouth channel, one of the gallions, which was the Monmouth's prize, ſtruck upon a hidden rock, and immediately founder'd; as did, afterwards, a rich prize from Morlaix, taken by the Naſſau. Several other ſhips ſuffered damage, and the whole fleet being ſeparated in bad weather, every one made the beſt of their way to the channel. Having thus given an account of the moſt remarkable tranſactions at ſea, this year; I return now to domeſtic affairs (1).

The parliament diſſolved.

The parliament of England being of courſe, purſuant to an act paſs'd for that end, to determine, ſix months after the demiſe of the late King, her Majeſty thought fit, on the 2d of July, to iſſue out a proclamation, "for diſſolving that parliament, "and declaring the ſpeedy calling another, to "meet at Weſtminſter, the 20th of Auguſt next." The 6th, the count de Platen, envoy extraordinary from the elector of Hanover, had his public audience of the Queen, and the Prince of Denmark (2).

Promotions and preferments.

In this month, her Majeſty was pleaſed to make ſeveral promotions in the army, and beſtow diverſe places and preferments. Among others, the duke of Bolton was made warden of New-foreſt, and the duke of Newcaſtle governor of the town of Kingſton upon Hull. Brigadier Cholmondley was made a major-general, and governor of Tilbury-fort. The earl of Berkley was appointed conſtable of the caſtle of Brianels, in the foreſt of Dean, and cuſtos-rotulorum, of the counties of Glouceſter and Surrey. The earl of Ranelagh was made receiver and pay-maſter general of her Majeſty's forces. William Blaithwait, eſq; was made ſecretary of war; and the lord Walden, commiſſary-general of the muſters, and chief muſter-maſter of her Majeſty's forces. Major-general Earl was made governor of Portſmouth, Robert Crawford, eſq; governor of the fort of Sheerneſs; Anthony Duncomb, eſq; governor of the caſtle of Scarborough, and Henry Villars, eſq; governor of the fort of Tinmouth. The duke of Somerſet was made maſter of the horſe to her Majeſty, in the room of the earl of Pembroke, who was made preſident of the council. The lord Wharton's patent as warden and chief-juſtice in Eyre of all the foreſts, &c. on this ſide Trent, was revoked. The duke of Newcaſtle was made warden of the foreſt of Shirwood, in the county of Nottingham; and John Tucker, eſq; was made keeper and regiſter of the papers and records of ſtate.

Q. Ann, An' 1702.

The elections for the inſuing parliament were carried on, in the mean time, with great warmth and contention, tho' with conſiderable advantage on the ſide of the high-church or tory-party. The 6th of Auguſt, the Queen thought fit, by proclamation, to prorogue the new parliament, which was to have met the 20th of that month, to the 8th of October, as ſhe did afterwards to prorogue it farther to the 23d of the ſame month.

The new parliament prorogued.

His royal highneſs, Prince George of Denmark, being very much indiſpoſed, this ſummer, with his uſual aſthma, was adviſed by his phyſicians, to go to the Bath, and her Majeſty, as an inſtance of her conjugal affection, reſolved to attend him thither. They ſet out accordingly, the 26th of Auguſt, from Windſor, in order to ly at Oxford, that night. They were met, at the entrance into that country by the earl of Abingdon, as lord-lieutenant, with the high-ſheriff, and a great number of gentlemen: and, at ſome diſtance from the city, by the vice-chancelor, doctors and maſters in their robes, on horſeback, and were, in that manner, attended to Chriſt-church, where they ſuped. The Queen was pleaſed to honor the univerſity, the next day, with her preſenſe, in convocation, when the univerſity-orator congratulated her arrival among them, and many of the nobility and perſons of quality, took the degree of doctor of law. From the convocation-houſe, the Queen went to the theatre, where ſhe was entertained with a concert of vocal and inſtrumentacal muſic; and ſeveral pieces of poetry were exhibited expreſſive of that honor and happineſs they injoyed by her Majeſty's preſenſe. Her Majeſty was afterwards entertain'd at dinner by the univerſity, and then ſet out, with the Prince, for Cirenceſter, where ſhe lay that night, and, the next day, reached the Bath. They were met by the high ſheriff and gentlemen on the borders of the county of Sommerſet, and, within half a mile of the city, by 200 maids, richly dreſs'd, and carrying bows and arrows like amazons. They were met, at the weſt-gate of the city, by the mayor and corporation, in their formalities, who attended them to the abby-houſe, which was prepared for their reception. The ſtreets were illuminated, that night, and all imaginable expreſſions of joy appeared at her Majeſty's arrival among them, as there had been alſo in every place thro' which ſhe paſs'd.

The Queen and Prince go to the Bath.

The 8th of October, her Majeſty, with her royal conſort, left the Bath, arrived the 10th at Windſor, and came the 15th to St. James's. The 20th the parliament met, and the Queen, being come to the houſe of lords, ſent for the commons, who being directed to chuſe a ſpeaker, unanimouſly elected Robert Harley, eſq; who had been ſpeaker of three preceeding parliaments. The next day, they preſented him to her Majeſty, who, after having ſignified her approbation of their choice, made the following ſpeech to both houſes:

Return to Windſor.

The parliament meets.

My lords and gentlemen,

The Queen's ſpeech to both houſes.

"It is with great ſatisfaction I meet this parliament, which I have ſummoned to aſſiſt me, in "carrying on the juſt and neceſſary war, in which "we are ingaged. I have called you together as

(1) I muſt not, however, quite paſs by the ſucceſs of commadore (afterwards ſir John) Leake, in Newfoundland, where he, with a ſmall ſquadron, under his command, took, this ſummer, in the French harbors, twenty-nine ſail of ſhips, and burnt twenty-two more; deſtroying all the ſtages and ſettlements of the French, in thoſe parts. For farther particulars, I refer to Lediard's naval hiſtory, Vol. II. p. 759.

(2) We have in Harris, of this year's date, the charter of ſettlement for the trade to the Eaſt-Indies, granted upon the agreement of the two companies; by way of abſtract. Being an indenture tripartite, dated July the 22d of this year, between the Queen, the governor, and company of merchants trading to the Eaſt-Indies, and the Engliſh company trading to the Eaſt-Indies; by which the two companies were united, their ſeveral charters confirmed, and being thus join'd, they were appointed, after the performance of certain points ſtipulated in this indenture, to call themſelves: the united company of merchants trading to the Eaſt-Indies.

"early

Q. Ann, An' 1702.

" early as was conſiſtent with your convenience in " coming out of your ſeveral countries; and I " aſſure my ſelf of ſuch evidences of your affections " to me, and of your zeal for our common cauſe, " as will not only give ſpirit and forwardneſs to " our own preparations, but ſuch example and " incouragement to our allies, as, by God's bleſ- " ſing, cannot fail of a good effect for the advan- " tage of the whole confederacy.

" I have met with ſo many expreſſions of joy " and ſatisfaction, in all the countries, thro' which " I have lately had occaſion to paſs, that I can- " not but look upon them, as true meaſures of " the duty and affection of the reſt of my ſub- " jects.

Gentlemen of the houſe of commons.

" I muſt deſire you to grant me ſuch ſupplies " as will inable me to comply both with our par- " ticular treaties and ingagements already made, " and ſuch others as may be neceſſary, for the in- " couragement of our allies, and the proſecuting " the war where it ſhall moſt ſenſibly effect our " enemies, and be moſt effectual for diſappointing " the boundleſs ambition of France.

" And, that my ſubjects may the more cheer- " fully bear the neceſſary taxes, I deſire you to in- " ſpect the accounts of all the public receits and " payments, and, if there have been any abuſes " or miſmanagements, I hope you will detect them, " that the offenders may be puniſhed, and others " be deterr'd, by ſuch examples, from the like " practices.

" I muſt obſerve to you, with ſome concern; " that the funds given by the laſt parliament, " have, in ſome meaſure, fallen ſhort of the ſums " propoſed to be raiſed by them; and tho' I have " already paid and applied to the public ſervice, " the 100,000 l. which I promiſed to the laſt " parliament, yet it has not ſupplied that defi- " ciency.

My lords and gentlemen,

" I cannot, without much trouble, take notice " to you of the diſappointment we have had, at " Cadiz, I have not yet had a particular account of " that enterprize, nor of all the difficulties our " forces have met with there: but I have had ſuch " repreſentations of diſorders and abuſes commited " at port St. Mary's, as has obliged me to give " directions, for the ſtricteſt examination of the " matter.

" I am earneſtly deſirous, for all our ſakes, that " this may prove a ſhort ſeſſion: however, I hope " you will find time to conſider of ſome better and " more effectual method, to prevent the exportation " of wool, and to improve that manufacture, which " is of great conſequence to the whole nation; on " my part, nothing ſhall be omited for its in- " couragement.

" I am firmly perſuaded, that the love and good " affections of my ſubjects is the ſureſt pledge of " their duty and obedience, and the trueſt and " juſteſt ſupport of the throne. And as I am re- " ſolved to defend and maintain the church, as " by law eſtabliſh'd, and to protect you in the full " injoyment of all your rights and liberties, ſo I " rely upon your care of me: my intereſts and " yours are inſeparable: and my indeavors ſhall " never be wanting to make you all ſafe and " happy."

Addreſs of the lords.

In anſwer to this ſpeech, the lords preſented her Majeſty, on the 23d, an addreſs of thanks, in which " they congratulated the ſucceſs of her arms, in " conjunction with her allies, under the command " of the earl of Marlborough. As alſo the ſucceſs " of her Majeſty's allies in Germany and Italy, " and the proſperous condition of trade, which " they acknowledged to be chiefly owing to her " Majeſty's wiſdom and conduct; declaring their " readineſs to aſſiſt her in this juſt and neceſſary " war. They alſo thank'd her Majeſty for the " reſolution ſhe expreſs'd to maintain and defend " the eſtabliſh'd church, and to protect their rights " and liberties, aſſuring her, they would ſupport " and defend her royal perſon and government, " with all poſſible zeal and duty.

Q. Ann, An' 1702.

The 24th the commons, likewiſe, preſented an addreſs of thanks, to her Majeſty, in which they obſerved; " that her ſubjects had already received " ſo many benefits, under the influence of her " happy government, that ſhe would have met " with the like expreſſions of joy and ſatisfaction, " had ſhe viſited any other part of her dominions, " as ſhe did, in her journey to Bath. That the " late diſappointment at Cadiz did not affect them " more, as it gave her Majeſty ſo much trouble: " but this misfortune could not make them for- " get, that the protection and ſecurity of their " trade, the vigorous ſupport of her Majeſty's " allies, and the wonderful progreſs of her arms, " under the earl of Marlborough, had ſignally " retrieved (1) the ancient honor and glory of the " of the Engliſh nation.

Addreſs of the commons.

" That her Majeſty had been always a moſt il- " luſtrious ornament to this church, and expoſed " to great hazards for it; and, therefore, they " promiſed themſelves, that, in her Majeſty's reign, " they ſhould ſee it perfectly reſtored, to its due " rights and privileges, and ſecured in the ſame to " poſterity, which was only to be done, by diveſt- " ing thoſe men of the power, who had ſhewn they " wanted not will to deſtoy it.

" That her Majeſty's deſire to have the public " accounts inſpected, and the abuſes therein puniſhed, " would indear her Majeſty to her people, and in- " courage them cheerfully to aſſiſt her in carrying " on the preſent war: that ſhe might rely upon " the care of her faithful commons: the value ſhe " was pleaſed to ſet on the love of her ſubjects was " the higheſt obligation could be laid on them: " they were ſenſible her Majeſty's intereſt and " theirs were inſeparable; as they gratefully ac- " knowledged her indeavors to make them ſafe " and happy, ſo their prayers and indeavors " ſhould never be wanting to make her Majeſty's " reign more proſperous and glorious than any " of her predeceſſors."

A ſupply voted.

The ſame day the commons unanimouſly voted a ſupply, and, on the 30th, they reſolved, " that " 40,000 ſeamen be imployed for the next year's " ſervice, at four pound a man, per month, and " that 129,314 l. be allowed for the ordinary of " the navy". The ſame day, likewiſe, the lord Shannon arrived, from the confederate fleet, with advice of the ſignal victory obtained over the French and Spaniards, at Vigo, in Spain, of which the reader has already ſeen an accoont above.

The Queen dines in the city.

The twenty-ninth, being the lord mayor's-day, her Majeſty did the city the honor of her preſenſe, and accepted of an entertainment at Guild-hall, which was very ſplendid on that occaſion: at the concluſion of which, ſhe was pleaſed to confer the honor of knighthood on Gilbert Heathcote,

(1) The word retrieve, in this addreſs, occaſioned a debate in the houſe of commons, it being alledged, that it ſeemed to caſt a reflection on the memory of King William, and the word maintain was propoſed to be inſerted in the room of it; but, upon a diviſion, it was carried for retrieve, one hundered and eighty votes againſt eighty. From whence it was infer'd, that the Tory-party had a vaſt majority in the houſe.

Francis

Q. Ann, An' 1702.

Francis Daſhwood, James Eyton and Francis Hoare, eſqrs (1).

Reſolution concerning the impeach'd lords.

The ſecond of November, a motion was made, and the queſtion put, in the houſe of commons: "that right had not been done the commons, upon "the impeachments before the lords, brought "againſt diverſe peers, in the thirteenth year of the "late King's reign": which was carried in the affirmative, 189 againſt 81.

The Queen's meſſage about a thankſgiving.

The 4th, mr. ſecretary Hedges, by her Majeſty's command, acquainted the houſe of commons: "that her Majeſty had appointed Thurſday, the "12th inſtant, to be obſerved in London and "Weſtminſter, as a day of public thankſgiving "to Almighty God, on occaſion of the great ſuc-"ceſſes of her Majeſty's arms, and thoſe of her "allies, and particularly that of her troops, under "the conduct of the earl of Marlborough, that of "the forces under the command of the duke of "Ormond at Vigo, and alſo for the extraordinary "ſucceſs of the fleet, under the command of ſir "George Rooke: that, for the greater ſolemnity, "on that day, her Majeſty would be pleaſed to go "to St. Paul's-church, as had been accumſtomed, in "former times, in this kingdom, to return thanks "to Almighty God, for the ſignal and great ſuc-"ceſs, in which, not only her Majeſty, but all "her ſubjects, were ſo highly concerned; and that "her Majeſty had given neceſſary orders, for pro-"viding convenient places in the ſaid cathedral, "for the members of that houſe, as well as for the "houſe of lords". For this meſſage, the commons returned their thanks to the Queen, and reſolved: "that they would attend her Majeſty, as "a houſe, to St. Paul's-church, upon the day ap-"pointed for a public thankſgiving.

Bills for preventing occaſional conformity.

The ſame day, mr. William Bromley made a motion, for bringing in "a bill to prevent occaſional "conformity," which was ordered to be brought in, accordingly, by mr. Bromley, mr. St. John (afterwards lord Bolingbrook) and mr. Anneſley (afterwards earl of Angleſey) (2). At the ſecond reading it was commited to a committee of the whole houſe; but a motion being made, and the queſtion put; "that the ſaid committee have "power to receive a clauſe for the exempting Diſ-"ſenters from ſuch offices as cannot, by law, be "executed without receiving the ſacrament, ac-"cording to the uſage of the church of England," it paſs'd in the negative. Towards the end of the ſame month, the ſaid bill paſs'd the houſe of commons, and was ſent to the lords for their concurrence, who, the 9th of September, ſent it back to the lower houſe, with ſeveral amendments (3). At the ſame time, their lordſhips being apprehenſive, that the commons would not give their concerence to the ſaid amendments, and might, as they had done, on other occaſions, tack their bill, to ſome money-bill, their lordſhips, therefore, made a vote, "that "the annexing any clauſe to a mony bill was con-"trary to the conſtitution of the Engliſh govern-"ment, and the uſage of parliament", and ordered this vote to be added to the roll of the ſtanding orders of their houſe. On the other hand, the commons having read the amendments made by the lords, agreed to ſome of them, and diſagreed to others, and, on the 12th of December, appointed a committee to draw up reaſons for this their diſagreement, to be offered to the lords at a conference. Theſe reaſons being prepared, the commons, on the 17th, deſired a conference with the lords, where their managers left them, together with the bill and amendments, with the managers for their lordſhips.

Paſſes the houſe of commons.

Q. Ann, An' 1702.

Vote againſt tacking.

A farther ſupply voted.

The 6th they reſolved; "Firſt, that the propor-"tion of land-forces, to act in conjunction with "the forces of the allies, for making good the al-"liances, be 40,000 men, conſiſting of 33,000 foot, "and 7000 horſe, and dragoons. 2dly, That "the ſum of 350,000 l. be granted, for the main-"taining of guards and gariſons, for the year "1703 (including 5000 men, to ſerve on board "the fleet;) and 3dly, the ſum of 70,973 l. for "land-ſervice, to be performed by the office of "ordnance, for the year 1703". The 10th they reſolved, "to grant 833,826 l. for main-"taining the 40,000 land-forces, and 51,843 l. "for her Majeſty's ſubſidies to her allies."

The commons vote thanks to the duke of Ormond, and ſir George Rooke.

At the ſame time, the commons unanimouſly voted their thanks to the duke of Ormond, and ſir George Rooke, for the ſignal ſervices by them performed, for the nation, both by ſea and land: and ſir George, afterwards, taking his place in the houſe of commons, on the 21ſt, the ſpeaker gave him their thanks, in a ſet ſpeech, in which he obſerved: "That formerly admirals and generals "had ſucceſs againſt France or Spain ſingly: but "the action at Vigo had been a victory over them "confederated together: that he had not only "ſpoiled their enemies, but inriched his own "country; common victories brought only terror "to the conquered; but he had brought deſtruction "upon them, and additional ſtrength to England. "That France had indeavored to ſupport its "ambition, by the riches of India: but his ſuc-"ceſs had left them the burden of Spain, and "ſtripp'd them of the aſſiſtance of it: the wealth "of Spain, and the ſhips of France, were by "this victory brought over to their juſter cauſe; "that this was an action ſo glorious in the perfor-"mance, and ſo extenſive in its conſequence, that, "as all times would preſerve the memory of it, "ſo every day would more and more inform "them of the benefit. No doubt, in France, "he was writ in remarkable characters, in the "black liſt of thoſe who had taken French gold "(4); and it was a juſtice due to the duke of

The ſpeaker's ſpeech to the latter.

(1) In the month of October, of this year, her Majeſty was pleaſed to appoint the earl of Peterborough governor of Jamaica; and he was declared captain-general and admiral of all her Majeſty's ſettlements in the Weſt-Indies: mr. Graydon was ordered with a ſquadron to convoy his lordſhip, and the forces he was to take with him thither. And all people concerned in the plantations were extreamly pleas'd to ſee this commiſſion in his hands. Why this nobleman did not go, tho' the Dutch admiral Vanderduſſen was actually arrived at Spithead, with a ſquadron of men of war, and land-forces on board, In order to have joined him; and why the Dutch-admiral was ordered to return home, and the expedition wholly laid aſide, are queſtions I ſhall not pretend to determine; but what was done with mr. Graydon's ſquadron, the reader ſhall ſee in the ſequel. Lediard's naval hiſtory vol. II. p, 761.

(2) The ſubſtance of this bill was: that any perſon in office, reſorting to a conventicle or diſſenting meeting, was made liable to a forfeiture of a hundred pound, and five pound for every day he ſhould continue in his office afterwards; and ſuch perſon was diſabled from holding that or any other office, till he conformed regularly for one whole year, and received the ſacrament, according to the rites of the church of England, three times within ſuch year; and, upon a ſecond offence, the penalties were doubled.

(3) By theſe amendments of their lordſhips the Jacobite meetings were included. The hundred pound penalty was reduced to twenty pound, and the whole incapacitating clauſes were left out. They alſo limited the information to ten days, and the proſecution to three months exempted Diſſenters from holding offices; for which they could not be qualified without taking the ſacrament; and provided that the act ſhould not extend to the univerſity-churches, or to the French or Dutch churches, or to the governors of hoſpitals, or to the aſſiſtants of corporations for relieving or imploying the poor.

(4) It will be neceſſary, in order to juſtify this odd expreſſion of the ſpeaker's, to acquaint the reader; that in ſome pamphlets, which were publiſh'd about that time, the names of ſir George Rooke, and ſeveral others, were put in black characters, as penſioners to France.

"Ormond's

Q. ANN, AN' 1702.

" Ormond's and his merit, that they would ſtand " recorded, in the regiſters of that houſe, as the " inſtruments of that glorious victory: therefore " the houſe, having come to that unanimous reſo- " lution, that the thanks of this houſe be given to " his grace the duke of Ormond, and ſir George " Rooke, for the great and ſignal ſervices per- " formed by them, to the nation, at ſea and land; " he did, by their command, return him their " thanks."

Thanks of both houſes to the duke of Ormond.

The commons ſent their thanks to the duke of Ormond, by a commitee of their own members, and his grace coming into the houſe of peers, on the 13th, the lord-keeper, in the name of the houſe, returned him thanks, for his ſignal ſervices performed at Vigo: however, they ſoon after addreſs'd her Majeſty, to order an account of his grace's and ſir George Rooke's proceedings, in the late expedition, to be laid before them; with which her Majeſty complying, the duke of Ormond, on the 16th, laid his journal before the lords (1).

The thankſgiving ſolemnized.

The 12th, being the day appointed to be ſolemnized as a thankſgiving, for the ſucceſſes of this campain, in the cities of London and Weſtminſter (as the 3d of December was, for other parts of the kingdom) her Majeſty went to St. Paul's, attended by the two houſes of parliament, which formed one of the moſt ſplendid proceſſions, this nation had ſeen. The biſhop of London read the communion-ſervice, and the biſhop of Exeter preach'd, before her Majeſty, on the 23d of Joſhua, ver. 8 and 9.

Reſolutions againſt the biſhop of Worceſter.

The 18th, the commons took under their conſideration, a complaint made by ſir John Packington, one of the repreſentatives for the county of Worceſter, againſt the biſhop of Worceſter, and mr. Lloyd, his ſon, for certain undue practices, in order to prevent ſir John's election for that county; and the houſe having examined the matter, reſolved; " That ſir John Packington had, by evidence, " fully made out the charge which he exhibited " againſt the lord biſhop of Worceſter: that it " appeared to the houſe, that the proceedings of " of William, lord biſhop of Worceſter, his ſon, " and his agents, in order to the hindering the " election of a member of the county of Wor- " ceſter, had been malicious, unchriſtian, and " arbitrary, and an high violation of the privi- " leges of the commons of England; and that " an humble addreſs be preſented to her Majeſty, " that ſhe would be graciouſly pleaſed to remove, " William, lord biſhop of Worceſter, from being " almoner to her Majeſty; and ordered mr. at- " torny-general to proſecute mr. Lloyd, the bi- " ſhop's ſon, for thoſe offenſes, after his privi- " lege, as a member of the lower houſe of con- " vocation, was expired (2)." On the other hand, the lords addreſs'd her Majeſty, ſhewing, " that " it was the undoubted right of every lord of par- " liament, and of every other ſubject of England, " to have an opportunity of making his defenſe, " before he ſuffer any ſort of puniſhment; and, " therefore, deſired ſhe would not remove the bi- " ſhop of Worceſter, from the place of lord-al- " moner, nor ſhew any mark of her diſpleaſure " towards him; till he was found guilty of ſome " crime by due courſe of law:" to which her Majeſty anſwered: " She agreed, that every peer " and lord of parliament, and, indeed, every o- " ther perſon, ought to have an opportunity of " being heard to any matters objected againſt " him, before he is puniſh'd: that ſhe had not " yet received any complaint againſt the biſhop of " Worceſter, but looked upon it as her un- " doubted right, to continue or diſplace any ſer- " vant, attending her own perſon, when ſhe " thought proper."

Q. ANN, AN' 1702.

The lords, hereupon, reſolved; " That no " lord of that houſe ought to ſuffer any ſort of " puniſhment, by any proceedings of the houſe " of commons, otherwiſe than according to the " known and ancient rules and methods of parlia- " ment." But her Majeſty being attended by ſir Edward Seymour, comptroler of the houſhold, with the reſolution and addreſs of the commons, for removing the biſhop of Worceſter, from being almoner, the Queen anſwered: " She was very " ſorry there was occaſion for this addreſs againſt " the biſhop of Worceſter; and ſhe would di- " rect, that he ſhould no longer continue to ſup- " ply that office:" for which anſwer, " the " commons returned her Majeſty their moſt hum- " ble thanks (3)."

The 21ſt, mr. ſecretary Hedges delivered a meſſage to the commons, ſigned by the Queen, importing: " That her Majeſty, conſidering, " that there was but a very ſmall proviſion made " for the Prince, her huſband, if he ſhould ſur- " vive her Majeſty; and that ſhe was reſtrained

(1) The duke of Ormond, at his firſt arrival from the expedition to Cadiz, complained very openly of Rooke's conduct, and ſeemed reſolved to carry the matter to a public accuſation: but the court found the party that prevailed in the houſe of commons, determined to juſtify Rooke; ſo, to comply with this, the Queen made him a privy-counſellor, and much pains were taken with the duke of Ormond, to ſtifle his reſentments. He was in a great meaſure ſoftned, yet he had made his complaints to ſo many lords, that they moved the houſe to examine both his inſtructions, and the journals relating to that expedition. A commitee of the houſe ſate long upon the matter. They examined all the admirals and land-officers, as well as Rooke himſelf, upon the whole progreſs of that affair. Rooke was ſo well ſupported by the court, and by his party in the houſe of commons, that he ſeemed to deſpiſe all that the lords could do; ſome, who underſtood ſea-matters, ſaid, that it appeared from every motion which he made, during the expedition, he intended to do nothing but to amuſe and make a ſhew. They alſo concluded, from the protection the miniſtry gave him, that they intended no other. He took much pains to ſhew, how improper a thing a deſcent on Cadiz was, and how fatal the attempt muſt have proved; and, in doing this, he arraigned his inſtructions, and the deſign he was ſent on, with great boldneſs, and ſhew'd little regard to the miniſters, who took more pains to bring him off, than to juſtify themſelves. The lords of the commitee prepared a report, which was hard upon Rooke, and laid it before the houſe; but ſo ſtrong a party was made, to oppoſe every thing which reflected on him, that tho' every particular in the report was well proved, yet it was rejected, and a vote was carried in his favor, juſtifying his whole conduct. The great imployment (lord-lieutenant of Ireland) given to the duke of Ormond, ſo effectually prevailed on him, that tho' the inquiry was ſet on foot, by his means, and upon his ſuggeſtions, yet he came not to the houſe, when it was brought to a concluſion. So Rooke, being but faintly puſhed by him, and moſt zealouſly ſupported by his party, was juſtified by a vote, tho' unanimouſly condemned by more impartial judges. The behavior of the miniſtry, in this matter, heightned the jealouſies, with which many were poſſeſſed; for it was infered, that they were not in earneſt, in this whole expedition; ſince the conduct, being ſo contrary to the inſtructions, their juſtifying one, was plainly condemning the other. Biſhop Burnet's Hiſtory of his own times.

(2) For this regard had to the privilege of the lower houſe of convocation, the commons had afterwards their thanks, delivered, by their order, to the ſpeaker, by the prolocutor, the dean of Canterbury, archdeacon Ottley, and mr. Moor; upon which they reſolved: " That they would, upon all occaſions, aſſert the juſt rights and privileges of the lower houſe of convoca- " tion."

(3) Thus (ſays Boyer, in his reign of Queen Ann, p. 36.) this pious and learned prelate, fell a ſacrifice to the reſentment of the prevailing high-church party, for being too warm a ſtickler for their antagoniſts: while, on the other hand, ſir George Rooke, who was in great eſteem with the tories, was ſworn of the privy-council, and had the thanks of the houſe.

Q. Ann, An' 1702.

"from increaſing the ſame, by the late act of "parliament for ſettling her revenue, thought it "neceſſary to recommend the making a farther "proviſion for the Prince to their conſideration." The commons, after having conſidered this meſſage, reſolved, on the 1ſt of December; "that "the yearly ſum of 100,000 l. be ſettled on his "royal highneſs, in caſe he ſhould ſurvive her "Majeſty."

Vice-admiral Hopſon rewarded.

The Prince having, two days before, preſented to her Majeſty, Thomas Hopſon, eſq; vice-admiral of the red, the Queen confer'd the honor of knighthood upon him, and afterwards ſettled a penſion of 500 l. a year upon him, with a reverſion of 300 l. a year for his wife, in conſideration of his eminent ſervices at Vigo.

Submiſſion of one of the Kentiſh petitioners.

About this time, Thomas Colepepper, eſq; one of the Kentiſh petitioners, who had given the houſe ſo much trouble in the late reign, preſented a petition of another nature, in which he acknowledg'd; "That he had, in the reign of his late "Majeſty, given juſt offenſe to the houſe of "commons, and thereby juſtly drawn on him-"ſelf, not only their diſpleaſure, but alſo their vote "for his proſecution by the attorny-general; and "that he was truly ſorry for all thoſe cauſes, by "which he ever offended the ſaid houſe of com-"mons, or might incur their diſpleaſure, and hum-"bly pray'd, that the houſe would be pleaſed to "interpoſe with her Majeſty, in his behalf, to give "order to her attorny-general, to ſurceaſe farther "proceedings, in the proſecution againſt him." Mr. Colepepper was, hereupon, called in, and having owned the petition, was commanded to withdraw. The houſe then ordered, that he ſhould be ask'd, whether he was ſorry for his ſeveral ſcandalous and ſeditious practices, by him acted, againſt the honor and privileges of that houſe, againſt the peace of the kingdom in general, and the quiet of his own country, in particular? and the ſame having been ask'd him accordingly, he anſwer'd, he was ſorry: and being withdrawn a ſecond time, the commons reſolved to addreſs the Queen, to ſtop the proſecution againſt him, which had been at their deſire, and ſo this matter ended.

The earl of Marlborough receives the thanks of the houſe of commons.

The 30th of November, ſir Edward Seymour, comptroler of her Majeſty's houſhold, reported, to the houſe of commons, that the commitee appointed by the houſe, had attended the earl of Marlborough with their thanks, for the great and ſignal ſervices by him performed for this nation, and that thereupon his lordſhip had expreſs'd himſelf to the following effect: viz. "that nothing "could add to the ſatisfaction he took in the Queen's "moſt gracious acceptance of his hearty and ſincere "indeavors for the public ſervice, but the obliging "and favorable ſenſe which that houſe was pleas'd "to expreſs of them, of which honor, no man could "be more truly ſenſible than himſelf. That our ſucceſs was chiefly to be imputed to God's bleſſing "upon her Majeſty's happy conduct, and the great "bravery of her own troops, and thoſe of her "allies".

His anſwer.

Upon the 2d of December, the Queen, to ſhew what a ſenſe ſhe had of the earl of Marlborough's ſervices, was pleaſed to declare, before a committee of council, that ſhe was ſo ſatisfied of the eminent ſervices of my lord Marlborough to the public, and to herſelf, both in the command of the army, and the intire confidence he had ſettled between her and the States-general, that ſhe intended to make him a duke; which ſhe did accordingly, by the title of marquis of Blandford, and duke of Marlborough: and, on the 10th, her Majeſty ſent the following meſſage to the commons in his lordſhip's favor:

The earl of Marlborough made a duke.

Q. Ann, An' 1702.

Ann, R.

The Queen's meſſage to the commons in his favor.

"The earl of Marlborough's ſervices to her Ma-"jeſty, and to the public, have been ſo eminent, "both in his command of the army, and in his "having eſtabliſhed an intire confidence, and good "correſpondence, between her Majeſty and the "States-general, that ſhe has thought fit to grant the "title of a duke of this kingdom to him, and to "the heirs male of his body, and alſo a penſion "of 5000 l. per annum, upon the revenue of the "poſt-office, for the ſupport of this honor, during "her Majeſty's natural life. If it had been in her "Majeſty's power, ſhe would have granted the ſame "term in the penſion, as in the honor, and ſhe hopes "you will think it ſo reaſonable, in this caſe, as to "find ſome proper methods of doing of it".

Debates thereupon.

This meſſage having occaſioned great debates, in the houſe (1), and there being no likelihood, that the commons would comply with her Majeſty's deſire, the 15th, ſhe ſent them another meſſage, whereby ſhe acquainted them, that the duke of Marlborough had declined her Majeſty's meſſage to them. Nevertheleſs, the commons being in a grand commitee, the motion was made, the ſame day, that an addreſs be preſented to her Majeſty, ſeting forth the reaſons why they could not comply with her Majeſty's firſt meſſage. This motion was agreed to, on the 16th, and a commitee appointed to draw up the addreſs, which was as follows:

A ſecond meſſage.

Moſt gracious Soverein,

The commons addreſs to the Queen about it.

"We your Majeſty's moſt dutiful and loyal ſub-"jects, the commons in parliament aſſembled, hum-"bly beg leave to declare our unanimous ſatisfaction "in the juſt eſteem your Majeſty has been pleaſed "to expreſs, of the eminent ſervices performed "by the duke of Marlborough, who has, not only "by his conduct of the army, retriev'd the ancient "honor and glory of the Engliſh nation, but, by "his negociations, eſtabliſh'd an intire confidence, "and good correſpondence, between your Majeſty "and the States-general, and therein vindicated the "gentlemen of England, who had, by the vile "practiſes of deſigning men, been traduced, "and induſtriouſly repreſented, as falſe to your "Majeſty's allies, becauſe they were true to the in-"tereſt of their country.

"It is to their inexpreſſible grief, that your "Majeſty's moſt dutiful commons, find any in-"ſtances where they are unable to comply with "what your Majeſty propoſes to them; but they "beg leave humbly to lay before your Majeſty, "the apprehenſions they have of making a prece-"dent, for the alienations of the revenue of the "crown, which has been ſo much reduced "by the exorbitant grants of the laſt reign, and "which has been ſo lately ſettled and ſecured, by "your Majeſty's unparallel'd grace and goodneſs.

"We are infinitely pleaſed to obſerve by your "Majeſty's late gracious acceptance of the duke of "Marlborough's ſervices, that the only way to ob-"tain your Majeſty's favor, is to deſerve well from "the public; and we beg leave to aſſure your "Majeſty, that whenever you ſhall think fit to "reward ſuch merit, it will be to the intire ſatiſ-"faction of your people".

This addreſs being preſented to the Queen the 21ſt of December by the whole houſe, her Majeſty was pleaſed to return this anſwer:

The Queen's anſwer.

"I ſhall always think my ſelf much concerned to

(1) The duke of Marlborough, as ſoon as he was informed thereof, waited on her Majeſty, and pray'd her, rather to forego her gracious meſſage, on his behalf, than to create any uneaſineſs on his account; ſince it might imbarraſs her affairs, and be of ill conſequence to the public.

"reward

G. Kneller Pinx.

R. Sheppard Sculp.

TEAL PERQ PIS DIEHABO

The Most High, Puissant, and Noble Prince JOHN CHURCHILL Duke and Earl of Marlborough Marquis of Blandford Baron Churchill of Sandridge and Baron of Aymouth in Scotland, Prince of the Holy Roman Empire, Captain General of the Forces, Master of the Ordnance, Colonel of the First Regiment of Foot Guards, one of the Privy Council, and Knight of the Garter.

BRITISH
20 AP 75
MUSEUM

Q. Ann, An' 1702.

" reward thoſe who deſerve well of me, and of the " public: on this account I beſtow'd ſome favors " on the duke of Marlborough, and I am glad to " find you think they are well placed".

The 13th of December, a proclamation was iſſued for the diſcovery and recovering of all ſuch goods, plate, and other effects, as, contrary to her Majeſty's and the duke of Ormond's expreſs commands, were plundered or imbezzel'd at Port St. Mary's, or from the gallions taken at Vigo, and put on board her Majeſty's men of war, or other veſſels; her Majeſty reſerving to herſelf the power of rewarding every one who had been in thoſe ſervices.

Proceedings againſt the earl of Ranelagh.

Some time before this, the commiſſioners for taking the public accounts, having, by order of the houſe of commons, examined thoſe of the earl of Ranelagh, as pay-maſter general of the army, and drawn up a narrative, wherein they charged him with great miſmanagements: his lordſhip, on the laſt of November, preſented to the houſe, his anſwer to the ſame. On the 7th of December, after a full hearing of all parties, the commons unanimouſly reſolved:

1. " That it appeared to the houſe, that the " commiſſioners appointed, by act of parliament, " for taking, examining and ſtating the public ac- " counts of the kingdom, had very good grounds " for making the obſervations in the narrative or " repreſentat on laid before the houſe.

2. That all monies iſſued to the pay-maſter-gene- " ral of the army, ought to be applied to the uſe of " the army and forces only, and to no other uſe or " purpoſe whatſoever.

3. " That all privy-ſeals, orders of the treaſury, " or other warrants, to the pay-maſter-general of " the army, to apply the mony in his hands, to " other than the uſe of the army and forces, are il- " legal and void.

4. " That all privy-ſeals, or warrants of the " auditors of the impreſt, to paſs accounts, with- " out proper vouchers, or to make any allowances, " other than according to the law and courſe of the " exchequer, are illegal and void.

5. " That the ſaid commiſſioners had made " good the allegations in their narrative: and,

6. " That the pay-maſter-general of the army " had miſapplied ſeveral ſums of the public mony.

The earl of Ranelagh, ſeing ſo violent a torrent againſt him, which oppoſition might but have rendered yet more boiſterous, choſe rather to put a ſtop to it, by laying down his place, which was afterwards divided between ſir Stephen Fox, and John How, eſq; the firſt being for the army abroad, and the latter for the guards and gariſons at home. This, however, was but a ſalvo for a while, as we ſhall ſee below.

Acts paſs'd.

The 23d of December, the Queen went to the houſe of lords, and gave the royal aſſent to " an " act for granting to her Majeſty a land-tax, for " carrying on the war againſt France and Spain, " and to two private bills.

Lords-lieutenants made.

The ſame day, Hugh, lord Cholmondley, was made lord-lieutenant of the counties of Denby, Montgommery, Flint, Merioneth, Caernarvon and Angleſea: James earl of Derby, lord-lieutenant of the county of Lancaſter: and Scroop earl of Bridgewater, lord-lieutenant of the county of Bucks. The ſame day, likewiſe, the queſtion was put, whether Prince George's ſervants ſhould be capacitated to ſit in parliament, which was carried by a great majority, in the affirmative.

Motion for reſuming of grants.

After this, ſir Edward Seymour moved, that leave might be given to bring in " a bill for reſuming " all grants made in King William's reign, and ap- " plying them to the uſe of the public," which being carried by a majority of one hundred and eighty voices, againſt ſeventy-eight, mr. Walpole moved, " that all the grants made in the reign " of the late King James ſhould be reſumed like- " wiſe:" but this paſs'd in the negative. This being over, ſir John Holland made a motion, and the queſtion was put, that leave be given to bring in " a bill for the more free and impartial pro- " ceedings of parliament, by providing that no " perſon whomſoever, in office or imployment, " ſhould be capable of ſiting in parliament"; which, likewiſe paſs'd in the negative; and, inſtead thereof an order was procured, for the bringing in " a bill for the more free and impartial " proceedings of parliament, by providing that " no perſon ſhould be choſen a member of the houſe " of commons, but ſuch as have a ſufficient real " eſtate:" which done the houſe adjourn'd to the 4th of January.

Q. Ann, An' 1702.

An' 1703.

The French King having given out commiſſions for conſiderable levies, in order greatly to increaſe his armies, an aditional force was, likewiſe, neceſſary, in thoſe of the allies; and the States-general thereupon made their applications to the Queen, for an augmentation of her troops: her Majeſty therefore at the firſt meeting of the houſe of commons, after new-year, ſent the following meſſage to them:

Ann, R.

Her Majeſty's letter to the commons.

" Her Majeſty having received ſeveral letters " from the States-general of the United-provinces, " as alſo ſeveral memorials from their embaſſadors, " ſeting forth the great apprehenſions they ly under, " from the extraordinary preparations of France; " to attack them early in the ſpring, and the ne- " ceſſity, as they conceived, of making an aug- " mentation of the forces of England and Holland, " as the only means to prevent the immediate ruin " which threatned their country, was pleaded, there- " upon, to propoſe ſome expedient to the States- " general, which ſhe hoped might have been of " advantage to the common intereſt, and relieved " them, in ſome meaſure, from their juſt appre- " henſions, without having recourſe to her parlia- " ment. But theſe expedients, propoſed by her " Majeſty to the States-general, not having pro- " duced the effect ſhe hoped for, and the States ha- " ving again renewed their applications to her Ma- " jeſty, with more earneſtneſs than before, to aſſiſt " them in this time of their danger, with an aug- " mentation of her forces, as the only means to " diſappoint the effect of thoſe great and early " preparations, which the French are making " againſt them; her Majeſty has commanded the " ſeveral letters and repreſentations, which " have paſſed between her, and the States-general, " upon this ſubject, to be herewith tranſmited to " you, that you may the better judge of the dan- " ger which threatens them.

" Her Majeſty conceives this matter to be of " ſuch great conſequence, as indiſpenſably obliges " her to acquaint you with the preſent ſtate of it; " that ſhe may have your advice upon it; not " doubting but you will take ſuch meaſures, upon " this occaſion, as may be moſt for the honor and " advantage of her Majeſty, the ſafety of her " kingdoms, and the neceſſary ſupport of her " allies".

The commons having taken her Majeſty's meſſage into conſideration, the next day, agreed, that 10,000 foreiners be hired, for an augmentation of the forces, to act in conjunction with the allies; but upon condition, that an immediate ſtop be put to all commerce and correſpondence with France and Spain, which they reſolved to lay before the Queen, in the following addreſs:

Moſt gracious Sovereign.

The addreſs of the houſe of commons in anſwer.

" We your Majeſty's moſt dutiful and loyal " ſubjects, the commons in parliament aſſembled, " do

Q. Ann, An' 1703.

" do beg leave to return your Majeſty our humble " thanks for your Majeſty's moſt gracious condeſ- " cenſion, in communicating to your commons " the ſeveral memorials, tranſactions and letters, " that have paſſed between your Majeſty and the " States-general, for the augmentation of your " Majeſty's forces, which are to act in conjunction " with the forces of the States-general; by all " which your commons are intirely convinced of " your Majeſty's great tenderneſs of your ſubjects, " in not laying a greater burden upon them, " than the neceſſity of affairs does abſolutely re- " quire.

" And your commons do humbly aſſure your " Majeſty, that in caſe your Majeſty ſhould think " it neceſſary to enter into any farther negociation, " for increaſing the forces, which are to act in " conjunction with the forces of the States-general, " (for whoſe intereſt and preſervation we ſhall " always have the greateſt regard) your commons " will inable your Majeſty to make good the " ſame.

" And your commons do farther crave leave " humbly to beſeech your Majeſty, that you will " pleaſe to inſiſt upon it, with the States-general, " that there be an immediate ſtop of all poſts, and " of all letters, bills, and all other correſpondence, " trade and commerce with France and Spain, which " your commons are humbly of opinion is ſo abſo- " lutely neceſſary for carrying on the juſt and ne- " ceſſary war, wherein your Majeſty is ingaged, " to the interrupting the trade of your enemies, " and reducing them to the greateſt ſtreights, that " your commons do humbly deſire, that England " may not be charged with the pay of ſuch ad- " ditional troops, but from the day, when ſuch " ſtop ſhall be made by the States-general."

This addreſs having been preſented to the Queen, by the whole houſe, the 8th of January, her Majeſty was pleaſed to anſwer:

Gentlemen,

The Queen's anſwer.

" It is with great ſatisfaction, that I receive this " addreſs, which inables me to join with the States- " general, in augmenting our forces, according to " their deſire.

" I make no doubt, but the condition you men- " tion will be approved, ſince it is abſolutely ne- " ceſſary for the good of the whole alliance; and " I ſhall, this night, ſend directions to my mini- " ſters in Holland, to concur with the States, in " providing the troops accordingly."

The lords addreſs on the ſame occaſion.

The ſame papers having been laid, by her Majeſty's commands, before the houſe of lords, the 13th, their lordſhips preſented an addreſs to the Queen, in which they returned her Majeſty thanks for communicating the ſeveral letters and memorials of the States-general to that houſe; adding, " that having taken notice how much time had " been already ſpent in this negociation, and with " what repeated and preſſing inſtances the States- " general had repreſented the apprehenſions they " were under, from the extraordinary and forward " preparations of the French, the lords took leave " humbly to adviſe her Majeſty, that without any " farther loſs of time, ſhe would be pleaſed to agree " to the propoſals made to her Majeſty, by the " States-general, for ſuch an augmentation of " forces, as might diſappoint the great and early " preparations of France, and effectually ſupport " and defend the common cauſe; and they, far- " ther, humbly acquainted her Majeſty, that it " was the opinion of that houſe, that her Majeſty's " furniſhing her quota of the augmentation of " troops in the Low-countries, would be ineffectual, " unleſs all correſpondence with France and Spain, " by letters, or otherwiſe, be totally prohibited by " the States-general, and all other her Majeſty's " allies."

Q. Ann, An' 1703.

Her Majeſty's anſwer to this addreſs was:

The Queen's anſwer.

" That no time ſhould be loſt, in relation to the " augmentation of troops, and the prohibition of " the commerce by letters, recommended in this " addreſs."

Reaſons for inſiſting on this prohibition.

Notwithſtanding all that has been ſaid, and particularly by biſhop Burnet, to make this proceeding appear too harſh and ill-natured, with regard to the Dutch, the parliament had certainly very cogent and juſtifiable reaſons for it. Among other motives which induced that illuſtrious body to inſiſt ſo ſtrenuouſly on this prohibition, the chief may probably have been the great difficulty the court of France labor'd under, at this time, to make remitances of mony, to maintain their army in Italy; and to ſend ſubſidies to the Elector of Bavaria in Germany: which the parliament of England (and indeed every one elſe) juſtly preſumed the French could not do, without the aſſiſtance of Engliſh and Dutch merchants. This opinion was likewiſe confirmed by a late diſcovery made by the earl of Nottingham, one of her Majeſty's principal ſecretaries of ſtate, of an unlawful intercourſe of bills of exchange, between ſome French bankers, at Paris, and ſome citizens of London (1). But to return to the occaſional conformity bill.

Debate on the occaſional conformity bill.

The 8th of January, the lords ſent a meſſage to the commons, to deſire a new conference, the next day, in the painted-chamber, upon the ſubject-matter of the laſt conference, on the bill intitled: " an " act for preventing occaſional conformity," which was readily granted: the managers for the commons, having met the lords at the conference, their lordſhips inſiſted upon all their amendments to the bill; which being reported to the commons by mr. Bromley, and his report taken into conſideration, on the 11th of January, the queſtion was put, " that the houſe ſhould inſiſt upon their diſagree- " ing with the lords in the ſaid amendments, and " carried in the affirmative." It was, thereupon, reſolved; that a free conference be deſired with the lords upon the ſubject-matter of the laſt conference: to which their lordſhips having readily agreed, and appointed the ſame to be on the 16th of the ſame

(1) This illicite and clandeſtine correſpondence and trade, carried on openly by the Dutch, with the common enemy, and which, notwithſtanding this notice taken of it, was, as it has been ſaid, continued during the whole war, even to the furniſhing them with arms and ammunion, was of ſo great an advantage to them, that ſome have ventured to ſay, they were gainers by the war, while we, out of an exceſs of generoſity (but too common with us) were plunging our ſelves into debts and difficulties to ſupport the common cauſe, and ſcorned to take advantage of theſe under-hand practices, to the detriment of it, tho' to our own impoveriſhment, and notwithſtanding we had the ſame right to it as they: for tho' there were perhaps, ſome few here, who underhand were concern'd in theſe unlawful practices; yet all commerce with France was ſtrictly forbid by the government, and all poſſible meaſures taken to prevent it.

Biſhop Burnet, tho' an advocate for the Dutch, in this caſe, and tho' he thinks they were treated in it very indecently, is obliged to own, that France could not have ſupplied their armies in Italy, but by the means of this ſecret trade: but he pretends the impoſing it on the Dutch, in the manner in which this was preſſed, carried in it too high a ſtrain of authority over them: but, in this, I muſt beg leave to diſſent from our prelate. It was a favor the Dutch deſired of us, for their own immediate advantage and ſecurity; and, in return, we inſiſted on no more, than what we had a right to demand, even without this conſideration: where then is the hardſhip? The argument the biſhop makes uſe of in their favor, viz. " That their country, " ſubſiſted by their trade ", will hold as good with reſpect to our nation. The States reſolved, however, to comply with England in every thing (at leaſt in ſhew) and tho' (as the biſhop ſays) they did not like the manner of demandiug this, yet they readily conſented to it: (and, if they are not wrong'd, as readily broke thro' it again.)

month,

Q. Ann, An' 1703.

month in the painted-chamber, the commons order'd, that their members, who managed the laſt conference, viz. mr. Bromley, mr. St. John, mr. Finch, mr. ſolicitor-general, and ſir Thomas Powis, ſhould manage the ſaid free conference, and ſeveral others were added to them: while, on the ſide of the lords, the duke of Devonſhire, the earl of Peterborough, and the lords Sommers and Hallifax, were appointed managers (1); but all to no purpoſe; the lords perſiſting in their amendments, and the commons in diſagreeing to them; and ſo the bill was loſt (2).

The bill loſt.

While the occaſional conformity-bill was depending, Daniel de Foe, the author of the True-born Engliſhman, who himſelf was a Diſſenter, publiſh'd an anonymous libel, pretended to be in order to exaſperate the parliament againſt the Diſſenters, or rather, as it was generally believed, to turn into ridicule, what they call'd the immoderate zeal of the High-church party, and to inſinnate, that the commons were about to re-eſtabliſh ſanguinary laws, in matters of religion. This ſcandalous libel (for ſuch it is taken either way) was intitled, "The ſhorteſt way with the Diſſenters", and was fill'd with bitter invectives (3) againſt them and their principles, the tendency of which was covered

Q. Ann, An' 1703.

(1) The commons, in their reaſons, alledg'd, that the intent of this bill, for preventing occaſional conformity, was only to reſtrain a very ſcandalous practice, which is a reproach to religion, gives offenſe to all Chriſtians, and to the beſt among the Diſſenters themſelves: that this bill inacted nothing new, and was only intended to make the laws in being more effectual. That thoſe laws were thought ſufficient to ſecure our eſtabliſhment, but ſince the invention and iniquity of man had found out ways to elude them, the commons could never doubt but the lords would let thoſe men ſee, they would not be wanting, on their part, to maintain and ſupport them. That this bill appear'd to the commons abſolutely neceſſary, for preventing thoſe miſchiefs, which muſt prove deſtructive to the church and monarchy; that the commons were incapable of having any deſigns they were aſhamed to own; and as they intended nothing but the preſervation of the church of England, and the Monarchy, ſo they doubted not but to meet a ready concurrence from the lords in theſe deſigns. That an eſtabliſh'd religion, and a national church, are abſolutely neceſſary, when ſo many ill men pretend to inſpiration, and when there are ſo many weak men to follow them: that if a national church be neceſſary, the only effectual way to preſerve it is by keeping the civil power in the hands of thoſe whoſe practiſes and principles are conformable to it. That when the corporation-act was made, the parliament had freſh in their minds, the confuſion and calamities that had been brought upon the nation, by ſuch as pretended to be, at the ſame time, in the true intereſt of religion and of their country. That the parliament by that act, and afterwards by the teſt-act, thought they had ſecured our eſtabliſhment, both in church and ſtate; and that they had provided a ſufficient barrier to defeat and diſappoint any attempts againſt them, by inacting, that all in offices ſhould receive the ſacrament of the Lord's-ſupper, according to the rites and uſage of the church of England, and never imagined, that a ſet of men could at any time riſe up, whoſe conſciences were too tender to obey the laws, but hardned enough to break them; that as, upon the revolution, the laſt reign begun with an act in favor of the Diſſenters, ſo the commons did deſire in the begining of her Majeſty's auſpicious reign, an act might paſs in favor of the church of England, that the laws, which had been evaded, might now be effectually inforced, and that thoſe men might be kept out of offices, who have ſhewn they never wanted the will, when they had the power, to deſtroy the church: and that nothing had been more miſ-repreſented than this bill; which did not, in any reſpect, intrench on the act of toleration, or take from the Diſſenters any one privilege they have by law, or give any one privilege to the church of England, which was not, at leaſt, intended her by the laws, as they now ſtand.

The commons, then deſcending to particulars, inſiſted on their diſagreement to an alteration the lords had made, in the preamble of the bill; where it was recited, that the laws intended all people in office ſhould be conformable to the church. They alſo diſagreed to their lordſhips amendment in relation to the penalty: they ſaid, if their lordſhips pleaſed to conſider how much greater the penalties, in other penal laws were, in many inſtances, than in this bill, they preſumed the lords could not think thoſe in this bill exceſſive: that, in laying penalties, the commons ſhall always indeavor to make them ſuch, as ſhall neither tempt to perjury, nor totally diſcourage informations and proſecutions; which, they thought this amendment of the lords would do, could the commons agree to it. As to the commons diſagreeing to their lordſhips 9th amendment, they alledg'd, that the puniſhment of incapacity, the re-capacitating, and the increaſe of puniſhment for a ſecond offenſe, are warranted by many precedents of the like nature, in other penal laws: that an incapacity, as qualified by the ſubſequent proviſo, is a very proper puniſhment: that a ſecond offenſe is a relapſe, or apoſtacy; which are circumſtances that aggravate and make it more heinous then the firſt offenſe, and therefore deſerve an increaſe of puniſhment: that he is, indeed, reduced to a very unhappy condition, who is made incapable of ſerving his Prince and country. But, in the preſent caſe, our Prince and country would be in a more unhappy condition to be ſerved by ſuch, whoſe principles are inconſiſtent with the good and welfare of our eſtabliſhment. That the commons could never imagine the lords would infer from this incapacity, the taking away the toleration. That the toleration was intended only for the eaſe of tender and ſcrupulous conſciences, and not to give a licenſe for occaſional conformity. That conforming and non-conforming are contradictions; nothing but a firm perſuaſion, that our terms of communion are ſinful and unlawful, can juſtify the one, and plainly condemns the other. Laſtly, as to the commons diſagreeing to the clauſes mark'd A B C D, their managers urged, that the exempting Proteſtant Diſſenters from ſerving offices, would rather eſtabliſh occaſional non-conformity, than prevent occaſional conformity; and therefore, increaſe, and not cure, the evil the bill was intended to remedy: that the act of uniformity, which eſtabliſhes the liturgy and practiſe of the church of England, has provided for the ſermons or lectures, preach'd or read in the univerſities. That thoſe ſermons and lectures having been in ſuch manner provided for, it was not thought neceſſary, when the acts paſs'd, in the 16th and 22d of Car. II. to prevent and ſuppreſs ſeditious conventicles (in both which acts conventicles are deſcribed, as in this bill) to have any particular exceptions for them, and yet they were never, by any conſtruction, taken to be conventicles. That the allowing an exemption to ſuch as ſhould be preſent, at the exerciſes in forein reformed churches, would be to open a door for the evading this law. That the places of governors in ſome hoſpitals are very conſiderable preferments, and given as ſuch to the clergy of the church of England; and the commons can never conſent, by any law, to let in the Diſſenters to the injoyment of them.

The lords, on the other hand, tho' they allow'd occaſional conformity to be a ſcandal to religion, ſaid, that this ſeemed to be a breaking in upon the toleration: that the nation had been quiet ever ſince the toleration-act had been made, and that the Diſſenters, who were not obnoxious, but well affected to the preſent government, had loſt more ground by it than the church: that the nation was ingaged in a great war, and it was not prudent to incourage animoſities in religion at ſuch a time: that the fines were exceſſive, and would induce informers to proſecute innocent men; and that every one would be expoſed to the malice of profligate villains and wicked ſervants.

To which the commons replied, that the bill eſtabliſh'd the toleration, inſtead of weakening it: that the fines were ſuited to the nature of the caſe, and that the lords could not alter a fine: that it was the practiſe of all governments, even of Holland itſelf, not to admit any Diſſenters to the eſtabliſh'd church to any ſhare in the government; and, if there was no precedent for it, the thing itſelf was ſo reaſonable, that none could oppoſe it, who had not ſome ſiniſter view; for it could never be imagined, that Diſſenters, whoſe principles led them to deſtroy the church, would not advance its intereſts, but rather ruin the church, if power was put into their hands; or that republicans, in place, would not contribute to the ſubverting the Monarchy, rather than the defending it. In ſhort, that if any government was ſo ſottiſh, to put the civil or military power into the hands of their enemies, they muſt expect to feel the ill conſequences of it; and even in a time of war, the adminiſtration would be much ſafer in the hands of its friends, than of its profeſs'd enemies.

(2) It has been obſerved upon this occaſion, that the majority of the temporal lords, were ſatisfy'd with this laſt reply of the commons; but that the biſhops made in the laſt reign fell into the oppoſite ſcale, and that, with them, one vote only loſt the bill.

(3) After many others, of the like kind, were the following: "that this was the time to pull up this heretical weed of ſedition, "that had ſo long diſturbed the peace of the church, and poiſon'd the good corn: if it ſhould be objected, that this renewing fire "and faggot would be cruelty, and accounted barbarous, he anſwered; that 'tis cruelty to kill a ſnake or a toad, in cold blood; "but the poiſon of their nature makes it a charity to our neighbors to deſtroy thoſe creatures, not for any perſonal injury "received, but for prevention; not for the evil they have done, but the evil they may do: and that as ſerpents, toads and "vipers are noxious to the body, and poiſon the ſenſitive life; ſo the Diſſenters poiſon the ſoul, corrupt our poſterity, inſnare "our children, deſtroy the vitals of our happineſs, our future felicity, and contaminate the whole maſs, and, therefore, they "are to be rooted out of this nation, if ever we would live in peace, ſerve God, and injoy our own.

Q. Ann, An' 1703.

with too thin a varniſh not to be ſeen thro' ; the commons, therefore, taking theſe dangerous inſinuations under their conſideration, ordered, on the 25th of February, the pamphlet to be burnt by the hands of the common hangman, and the author to be proſecuted at law.

Proceedings againſt the lord Hallifax.

The commons were, in the mean time, entered upon another affair, which made a great noiſe, and very much augmented the differences which the occaſional conformity-bill had excited between the two houſes of parliament ; I mean the proceedings upon the reports of the commiſſioners of the public accounts, of which I have already made ſome mention, with regard to the earl of Ranelagh. The 26th of January, colonel Bierly, from the ſaid commiſſioners, preſented to the houſe, their report, purſuant to an order, by which they were directed to examine the auditor, and other officers of the exchequer, relating to the paſſing of the accounts of the public mony, and to lay before the houſe, what they ſhould find to be the cauſe, that the accounts were not annually and duly paſs'd, according to the laws in that caſe, and thro' whoſe default it had happened. This report, and ſeveral paragraphs of the commiſſioners obſervations, being read, the houſe reſolved :

1. " That Charles, lord Hallifax, auditor of the " receit of the exchequer, had neglected his duty, " and was guilty of a breach of truſt, in not tranſ- " miting the impreſs'd rolls, half-yearly to the " King's remembrancer, according to the late " ſtatute, made in the eight and ninth year of King " William.

2. " That the allowing accomptants the charges " of law-ſuits to determine the right of their offices, " was a miſapplication of the public mony.

3. " That the auditors of the impreſt had been " guilty of a great neglect of their duty, in not " certifying to the King's remembrancer, the " neglect of the ſeveral annual accounts, that " proceſs might go out againſt them : and,

4. That there had been a general miſmanage- " ment of the public mony, by not obliging ac- " comptants to make up their accounts, and by " continuing receivers in ſeveral counties, contrary " to law, who had neglected to make up their ac- " counts in due time, which had been a great abuſe " of the public, and another cauſe of the great debt " that lay upon the nation."

The 27th, the commons having proceeded in the farther conſideration of the obſervations of the commiſſioners of public accounts, reſolved :

1. That the mony impreſs'd out of the exche- " quer, for the ſervice of the public, ought to be " kept by the reſpective officers, in their own " cuſtody, untill the ſame ſhall be paid to the uſes " for which it was directed.

2. " That Charles, lord Hallifax, auditor of the " receit of exchequer, had been guilty of a breach of " truſt, in not examining, every three months, the " tellers-vouchers for the payments, upon the annuities " which he allowed in his weekly certificates, ac- " cording to the aforementioned act of parlia- " ment.

3. " That the reſolutions relating to the lord " Hallifax, be laid before her Majeſty ; and,

4. " That an addreſs be preſented to her Ma- " jeſty, that ſhe would be pleaſed to give directions, " to the attorny-general, to proſecute him, for " the ſaid offenſes."

The 7th of February, colonel Granville acquainted the houſe, that the Queen had been pleaſed to ſay : " ſhe would ſend to the attorny-general, " and give him her directions, purſuant to this " addreſs." Q. Ann, An' 1703.

The earl of Ranelagh expell'd the houſe of commons.

The ſame day, the commons reſumed the adjourned debate, upon the laſt obſervation of the commiſſioners for public accounts ; and the reſolutions of the 4th and 7th of December, relating to the earl of Ranelagh, being read, it was reſolved ; " That the ſaid earl, being guilty of a high-crime " and miſdemeanor in miſapplying ſeveral ſums of " the public mony, be expell'd the houſe ; and " that an addreſs be preſented to her Majeſty, upon " the narrative, repreſentation, and obſervation of " the ſaid commiſſioners, and upon the reſolution " of the houſe of commons thereupon, and upon " the debate of the houſe " (1).

The lords examine the public accounts.

The lords, on the other hand, apprehending they had an equal right, with the commons, to examine the public accounts, and having gone thro' ſeveral papers laid before them by mr. King, ſecretary to the commiſſioners of accounts, and likewiſe appointed a commitee to conſider of the obſervations made by the ſaid commiſſioners ; which commitee, having ſat, for that purpoſe, reported to the houſe of peers ; " that tho' the commiſſioners of accounts " had notice of the commitee's ſiting, yet none of " them attended ; and, therefore, the commitee " was of opinion, that a meſſage be ſent to the " houſe of commons, that they might have leave " to attend." This meſſage was accordingly ſent, the 4th of February ; and, the next day, the commons having taken the ſame into conſideration, appointed a commitee, " to inſpect the journals, and " to ſearch precedents, relating to what had been " done upon the lords deſiring members of the " houſe of commons, to attend the houſe of lords, " and in relation to the lords inſpecting and examin- " ing accounts : " which took up ſome time : however, the lords proceeded in their examinations, and, after a farther report of their commitee made by the duke of Sommerſet, on the ſaid 5th of February, and read, in the houſe of peers, together with the examinations taken upon oath, by the commitee, and the dates and indorſements of the ſeveral impreſs'd rolls, deliver'd by mr. Barker, deputy to her Majeſty's remembrancer, the queſtion was put ; " whether this houſe would agree to the opinion of " the committee, in this report ? " which being carried in the affirmative, it was reſolved and declared, by the lords ſpiritual and temporal, in parliament aſſembled ; " that Charles, lord Hallifax, " auditor of the receit of the exchequer, has per- " formed the duty of his office, in tranſmiting " the ordinary impreſs'd rolls to the Queen's re- " membrancer, according to the ancient cuſtom of " the exchequer, and the direction of the act " viii and ix. Gulielmi iii. regis, intitled ", an act for the better obſervation of the courſe anciently uſed in the receit of the exchequer ; " and that he " has not been guilty of any neglect or breach of " truſt upon that account." At the ſame time, their lordſhips ordered their proceedings in this affair, to be forthwith printed and publiſh'd.

And clear the lord Hallifax.

Difference between the two houſes thereupon.

The commons, who were by no means ſatisfied with this honorable acquital of the lord Hallifax, ordered their commitee, on the 12th, to ſearch the journals of the houſe of lords, and report their lordſhips proceedings, relating to this matter. This report being made, and, purſuant to farther orders, the ſame commitee

(1) Biſhop Burnet is very ſevere upon the houſe of commons, with regard to this addreſs, and boldly aſſerts, " that there was " not one article in all the long addreſs, the commons had made to the Queen on this ſubject (of any importance) that was not " falſe in fact " : (hiſtory of his own times.) To which, a late hiſtorian anſwers : " this is the moſt falſe and ſcandalous aſſer- " tion, upon a whole houſe of commons, that ever had a place in hiſtory ; and, if any of the biſhops friends will enter into a " fair ſcrutiny of that matter, I will be content his whole hiſtory ſhould paſs for goſpel, if I do not demonſtrate the commons " had good grounds for that addreſs. Salmon's modern hiſtory, Vol. xxv. p. 122.

having

Q. ANN, AN° 1703.

Q. ANN, AN° 1703.

having drawn up reaſons to be offered to the lords, at a conference upon the ſubject-matter of their lordſhips meſſage of the 4th, theſe reaſons were reported, by colonel Glanville, on the 16th, and were in ſubſtance:

"That the commons could not comply with "their lordſhips deſires, contained in their meſſage "of the 4th of that month, becauſe they were "ſtill of the ſame opinion, as was delivered to "their lordſhips, in February 1691, at a free con-"ference upon the ſubject-matter of the amend-"ments made by the lords, to the additional bill, "for the appointing and inabling commiſſioners "to examine, take and ſtate the public accounts "of the kingdom, when they deſired to know the "end their lordſhips would propoſe to themſelves, "by an inquiry into the public accounts: for, ſaid "they, ſhould there appear to have been any "miſapplication of the public mony, or a default "in the diſtribution, your lordſhips cannot take "cogniſance thereof originally, or otherwiſe, even "in your judicial capacity, than at the complaint "of the commons; and, ſhould a failure, or want "of mony, appear, 'tis not in your lordſhips power "to redreſs it, for the grant of all aids is in the "commons only: or, if there be any ſurpluſage, "the commons only can apply it to the charge "of the inſuing year.

"But, ſhould the commons give leave to the "commiſſioners to attend your lordſhips, no in-"formation they can give againſt any perſon "whomſoever, can intitle your lordſhips either to "acquit or condemn: yet, ſince this meſſage, the "commons find, in your lordſhips journals, a re-"ſolution, declaring, that Charles, lord Halliſax, "auditor of the receit of the exchequer, has per-"formed the duty of his office, &c. which looks, "to the commons, as if your lordſhips pretended "to give judgment of acquital, without any accu-"ſation brought before your lordſhips, and conſe-"quently without any trial: and that which makes "your lordſhips proceedings yet more irregular, "it tends to prejudging a cauſe, which might re-"gularly have come before you, either originally, "by impeachment, or by writ of error, from the "courts below: and, therefore, the commons "can ſee no uſe of your reſolution, unleſs it be ei-"ther to intimidate the judges, or prepoſſeſs a jury. "But if your lordſhips could have judg'd, in this "matter, it does not appear by your lordſhips "journals, that you have had, under examination, "the reſpective times of tranſmiting the ſeveral "impreſs'd rolls to the Queen's remembrancer: "without which it is impoſſible to know, whether "the auditor of the receit has done his duty ac-"cording to the late act of parliament".

Theſe reaſons being approved by the houſe, a meſſenger was immediately ſent to the lords to deſire a conference; to which the lords having agreed, the 17th, the managers for the commons delivered the ſaid reaſons to their lordſhips.

The lords, who were not a little provok'd at theſe reſolutions of the commons, came, on the 18th, to the following reſolutions:

1. "That the lords have an undoubted right "(which they can never ſuffer to be conteſted) to "take congizance originally of all public accounts, "and to inquire into any miſapplication or default "in the diſtribution of public monies, or into any "other miſmanagement whatſoever.

2. "That the lords, in their inquiry into the "examination of the obſervations of the commiſ-"ſioners of accounts, in relation to Charles, lord "Halliſax, and in their reſolution, thereupon, had "proceeded according to the rules of juſtice, and "the evidence that was before them: and,

3. "That the commons, in their reaſons deli-"ver'd at the laſt conference, had uſed ſeveral ex-"preſſions and arguments, highly reflecting, and "altogether unparliamentary, tending to deſtroy all "good correſpondence between the two houſes, and "to the ſubverſion of the conſtitution."

The Queen, apprehending the conſequences of theſe differences between the two houſes, ſent a meſſage, on the 22d of February, to the lords, by the earl of Nottingham, to deſire them to make a quick diſpatch of the buſineſs before them: upon which, the commons reſolved; "that an addreſs "be preſented to her Majeſty, humbly to lay be-"fore her, that the commons had already diſ-"patch'd all the neceſſary buſineſs before them": The ſame day, their lordſhips communicated their laſt reſolutions to the commons, at a conference by them deſired and appointed.

The commons having taken theſe reſolutions into conſideration, the next day, reſolved that a free conference be deſired with the lords, upon the ſubject-matter of the two laſt: which being done, accordingly, the 25th, their lordſhips appointed the ſame immediately, in the painted-chamber, and named the lord ſteward, the earl of Carliſle, and the lords Herbert, Halliſax and Ferrer, to be their managers.

The managers for the commons, at the head of whom was the learned mr. Finch, open'd the particulars, which they had in direction to inſiſt on; and were as follows;

1. "That no cognizance the lords can take of "the public accounts, can inable them to ſupply "any deficiency, or to apply any ſurpluſage of the "public mony.

2. "That the lords can neither acquit nor con-"demn any perſon whomſoever, upon any inquiry "ariſing originally in their own houſe.

3. "That the attempt the lords have made to "acquit Charles lord Halliſax, auditor of the re-"ceit of the exchequer, is unparliamentary, and "not warranted by any precedent: and the reſo-"lution, thereupon, plainly contrary to what ap-"pears on the records themſelves.

4. "That the conference deſired by the com-"mons, was in order to preſerve a good under-"ſtanding between both houſes, by offering reaſons "to prevent the lords from proceeding in a caſe "which they had no precedent to warrant: and the "commons expreſſing the conſequences which they "apprehended might follow from that reſolution, "was neither reflecting nor unparliamentary, or "tending to deſtroy the good correſpondence be-"tween the two houſes, much leſs to the ſubver-"ſion of the conſtitution: and,

5. "That the lords delivering, at a con-"ference, their reſolutions inſtead of reaſons, in "anſwer to the reaſons of the commons, is not "agreeable to the ancient rules and methods of "parliament, obſerved in conferences between the "two houſes."

To all which, he added, "that when they ac-"quainted their lordſhips, that the expreſſing the "conſequences, which they apprehended might "follow from their lordſhips reſolutions, it was not "a charge upon their lordſhips, that they intended "that conſequence; but they would have been "very glad their lordſhips would have been plea-"ſed to have let them know, what uſe was to be "made of it, or what they intended by it: "and concluded, that if their lordſhips did con-"travert any of theſe points, they were ready to "maintain them."

The lords made no anſwer to any of theſe particulars, ſave to the matter of the reſolution relating to the lord Halliſax, upon which they acknowledged: "that they were no court of inquiry, "to form any accuſation: that their proceedings,

"in

Q. Ann, An' 1703.

" in relation to that lord, was no trial; nor was " their reſolution any judgment or acquital; but " that he might ſtill be proſecuted as before. But " what gave occaſion to that proceeding was the " reſolution of the houſe of commons, which they " found in the printed votes, reflecting upon a " member in their houſe, and whereupon they " thought fit to give their opinion, which they did " in their legiſlative authority."

The commons rejoin'd largely, and the earl of Hallifax having, to conclude, ſpoken in his own juſtification, the conference broke up; and the members being returned to their reſpective houſes, the commons ordered their managers to draw up a report of the ſaid free conference; after which, a motion was made, " that the votes of the houſe of " commons ſhould not be printed, and that this " might be a ſtanding order;" which being carried, in the affirmative, occaſioned various diſcourſes, both in the city and country. The lords, on the contrary, ordered their proceedings, in relation to the occaſional conformity bill, and the public accounts, to be forthwith printed, whereupon the commons reſolved to publiſh theirs likewiſe.

Acts paſs'd.

The 27th of February, the Queen went to the houſe of lords, and gave the royal aſſent; 1. " To " the land-tax bill, of four ſhillings in the pound. " 2. To an act to inable her Majeſty to ſettle a " revenue of 100,000 l. per ann. on the Prince " of Denmark, in caſe he ſurvived her. 3. To " the malt-tax bill. 4. To an act for continuing " the duty upon coals. 5. An act for granting " an aid to her Majeſty, by the ſale of annuities " (1). 6. An act for preventing eſcapes out of " the King's-bench and fleet-priſons. 7. An act " for finiſhing and adorning the cathedral of St. " Paul's. 8. An act for the puniſhment of acceſ- " ſaries to felonies, and the receivers of ſtolen " goods. 9. An act for inlarging the time, for " taking the abjuration-oath, and for the farther " ſecuring the ſucceſſion in the Proteſtant line, " and extinguiſhing the hopes of the Pretender. " 10. An act for ſtating and examining the pub- " lic accounts. And, 11, An act for advancing " the ſale of the forfeited eſtates in Ireland;" with ſome others.

This done, her Majeſty made the following remarkable ſpeech to both houſes:

The Queen's ſpeech to both houſes.

My lords and gentlemen,

" I return you my hearty thanks for the great " diſpatch you have given to the public affairs in " this ſeſſion, which is an advantage extreamly " material at all times, and I hope we ſhall find " the fruit of it this year, in the forwardneſs " of our preparations.

" I am to thank you, gentlemen of the houſe " of commons, in particular, for the great ſup- " plies with which you inable me to carry on " the war: it ſhall be my care, to have them " ſtrictly applied to the uſes for which you have " deſigned them, and to the beſt advantage for " the public ſervice: you have repoſed great " confidence in me, by allowing ſo unuſual a la- " titude as you have done in the clauſe of ap- " propriation. I ſhall improve all opportunities " in the uſe of it, for the honor and true intereſt " of the nation.

" I muſt farther take notice to you, that the " readineſs you have ſhewn, in the proviſion made " for the Prince, is a very ſenſible obligation " to me.

Q. Ann, An' 1703.

My lords and gentlemen,

" I deſire and expect from you, that you " make it your buſineſs, in your ſeveral coun- " tries, to continue and preſerve the quiet and ſa- " tisfaction of all my ſubjects. I hope, that ſuch " of them, as have the misfortune to diſſent from " the church of England, will reſt ſecure and ſa- " tisfied in the act of toleration, which I am " firmly reſolved to maintain: and that all thoſe, " who have the happineſs and advantage to be of " our church, will conſider, that I have had my " education in it, and that I have been willing " to run great hazards for its preſervation; and, " therefore, they may be very ſure, I ſhall al- " ways make it my own particular care, to in- " courage and maintain this church, as by law " eſtabliſh'd, and every the leaſt member of it, " in all their juſt rights and privileges; and upon " all occaſions of promotions to any eccleſiaſtical " dignity, I ſhall have a very juſt regard to ſuch " as are eminent and remarkable for their piety, " learning, and conſtant zeal for the church; " that by this, and all other methods, which " ſhall be thought proper, I may tranſmit it ſe- " curely ſettled to poſterity.

" I think it might have been for the public " ſervice, to have had ſome farther laws for re- " ſtraining the great licenſe which is aſſumed of " publiſhing and ſpreading ſcandalous pamphlets " and libels; but as far as the preſent laws will " extend, I hope you will all do your duty in " your reſpective ſtations, to prevent and puniſh " ſuch pernicious practiſes.

" Above all other things, I do recommend to " you, peace and union among yourſelves, as " the moſt effectual means, that can be deviſed, " to diſcourage and defeat the deſigns of our ene- " mies.

" I muſt not conclude without acquainting " you, I have given directions, that my part of " all the prizes, which have been, or ſhall be " taken during this war, be applied intirely to " the public ſervice, and I hope my own reve- " nue will not fall ſo ſhort, but that I may be " able, as I deſire, to contribute yet farther to the " eaſe of thy people."

The parliament prorogued.

After which, the lord-keeper, by the Queen's command, prorogued the parliament to the 22d of April next inſuing (2).

The diſputes in convocation reviv'd.

The convocation having been aſſembled, at the ſame time the parliament met, the former controverſy was revived, between the upper and lower houſe, concerning the power of the lower houſe to adjourn themſelves, and ſeveral papers paſs'd between them, on that account: but all proving ineffectual, the lower houſe, in the end, propoſed, that the biſhops would join with them in an addreſs to the Queen; praying, that her Majeſty, out of her tender regard to the peace and good order of the church, would pleaſe to take this controverſy into her conſideration, and appoint ſuch perſons, as ſhe, in her wiſdom ſhould chuſe, to hear and determine it.

In anſwer to this propoſal of the lower houſe, the biſhops obſerved, that they affected to expreſs themſelves in a manner, that ſet the two houſes

(1) By this act each contributor for every 210 l. paid in, was to receive fourteen pound per ann. for ninety-nine years.

(2) Beſide what I have already mentioned, there were ſeveral other bills loſt this ſeſſion: as, an ingroſſed bill from the lords; " For the better carrying on the preſent war, both by ſea and land, in the Weſt-Indies;" which was poſtponed and loſt in the houſe of commons: a bill from the commons, " For the more free and impartial proceedings in parliament, by " providing, that no perſon ſhall be choſen a member of the houſe of commons, but ſuch as have a ſufficient real eſtate;" which was rejected by the lords: and a bill from the commons; " concerning the ſale of the hoſpital of the Savoy;" which they, likewiſe rejected.

upon

Q. Ann, An' 1703.

upon ſuch an equality, as they judg'd inconſiſtent with the epiſcopal authority, and the preſidency of the archbiſhop over the whole convocation, and to lead to ſuch an independency of preſbyters upon their biſhops, as the clergy of the lower houſe, in former times, never pretended to: that they were abundantly aſſured of her Majeſty's tender regard to the peace and good order of the church, but could not think it proper to trouble her with this controverſy, it not being in their power to part with any of thoſe rights, with which they were intruſted, by the conſtitution of the church, and the laws and cuſtoms of the realm.

Semper Eadem, the Queen's motto.

This winter, the earl of Carliſle, earl marſhal of England, gave public notice of her Majeſty's pleaſure, that whenever there ſhould be occaſion to imbroider, depict, grave, carve or paint her Majeſty's arms, the words Semper Eadem ſhould be uſed for the motto, being the ſame with that of her great predeceſſor, Queen Elizabeth.

Promotions, creations, &c.

The latter end of February, the major-generals, William Stuart and Thomas Earl, eſqs; the lords Portmore, Cuts, Lumley, Tiviot, and major-general Ramſey, were made lieutenant-generals of her Majeſty's forces: and the earl of Rocheſter having reſign'd the poſt of lord-lieutenant of Ireland, the duke of Ormond was, ſome time before this, appointed to ſucceed him. The 9th of March, John Sheffield, marquis of Normanby, was created duke of the ſame name, to which the title of duke of Buckinghamſhire was afterwards added: John Granville, eſq; was made baron Granville of Potheridge, in the county of Devon; Heneage Finch, eſq; baron of Guernſey, in the county of Southampton; ſir John Leviſon Gower, baron Gower, of Sittenham, in the county of York; Francis Seymour Conway, eſq: younger ſon of ſir Edward Seymour, by a ſecond venter, baron Conway of Ragley, in the county of Warwick, with a remainder to his brother, Charles Seymour, eſq; and John Harvey, eſq; baron Harvey of Ickworth, in the county of Suffolk. The 11th, the marquis of Carmarthen, was advanced from the poſt of vice-admiral of the white, to that of vice-admiral of the red, of her Majeſty's fleet; John Graydon, eſq; from rear-admiral of the white, to vice-admiral of the ſame ſquadron, and John Leake eſq; from rear-admiral of the blue, to be vice-admiral of the ſame ſquadron. At the ſame time, George Byng, eſq; was appointed to be rear-admiral of the red, Thomas Dilkes, eſq; rear-admiral of the white, and Bazil Beaumont, eſq; rear-admiral of the blue. The 13th, three knights-companions of the moſt noble order of the garter were inſtall'd in St. George's chappel, at Windſor: viz. his moſt ſerene highneſs, the elector of Hanover, by his proxy, the lord Mohun; the duke of Bedford, in perſon, and the duke of Marlborough, by his proxy, ſir Benjamin Bathurſt. The 20th, the archbiſhop of York, the earl of Thanet, and the lord Guernſey, were called to the privy-council: the next day, Gervas Pierpoint, eſq; was created baron Pierpoint of Anglas, in the kingdom of Ireland: and, on the 24th, the earl of Rutland was made marquis of Granby, and duke of Rutland, and Edward Harley, eſq; was appointed auditor of the impreſt, in the room of Thomas Done, eſq; deceas'd, ſir John Verney, baronet: was created baron Verney, of Belturbet, and viſcount Fermanagh, in the kingdom of Ireland, and the duke of Schomberg was appointed general of the Engliſh and Dutch auxiliaries, which were to be ſent to the aſſiſtance of the King of Portugal, who came this ſpring, into the grand alliance, and his grace was ſoon after elected knight of the moſt noble order of the garter.

Q. Ann, An' 1703.

Affairs of Scotland.

The convention of the ſtates, which aſſembled in Scotland at the revolution, and was afterwards turn'd into a parliament, had been continued as ſuch during all King William's reign. This was complained of, as a great grievance, without a precedent, and an invaſion on their old conſtitution, by which a parliament was to be choſen annually. Her Majeſty was therefore pleaſed, this year to gratify her people of Scotland, by calling a new parliament; which met on the 6th of May, when her Majeſty's letter was preſented to them, by the duke of Queenſborough, the lord-high commiſſioner, in which, among other things ſhe told them: "That ſhe had, on ſeveral occaſions, given "them aſſurance of her firm reſolution, to main- "tain and protect them in their religion, rights "and liberties, as eſtabliſh'd by law, and ſhould "be always ready to do every thing elſe that was "wanting, for the ſatisfaction and ſecurity of "that her ancient kingdom. She recommended "to them, the ſtate of the forces and gariſons, "and the giving ſuch ſupplies as were neceſſary for "carrying on the war, and for the ſafety of their "country. She alſo recommended to them the "incouragement of their trade, the promoting "religion and virtue, the ſuppreſſing vice and im- "morality, and providing for the poor. She "ſaid, ſhe had appointed the duke of Queens- "borough, her high commiſſioner, being ſatiſ- "fied his great experience and abilities would "render him acceptable to them. She ſaid, ſhe "recommended nothing to them at this their firſt "meeting, but what was for their ſecurity and wel- "fare, and confidently expected a ſuitable return, "and a cheerful concurrence in what ſhe propoſed; "and that all animoſities being laid aſide, they "would, with concord and diligence, bring mat- "ters to ſuch a happy concluſion, as ſhould eſtabliſh "a laſting union between her and her people."

A new parliament choſen.

The Queen's letter to the parliament.

This letter being read, the high commiſſioner, and the earl of Seaforth, lord chancellor, made each of them a ſpeech, to back the purport of the letter: "The duke of Hamilton then offer'd the "draught of an act for recognizing and aſſerting "her Majeſty's authority, and her undoubted "right and title, to the Imperial crown of that "kingdom;" this act being read, it was, by unanimous conſent, ordered to be read a ſecond time: and then the houſe adjourning for ſome days, they return'd to her Majeſty's palace, where the lord commiſſioner had prepared a noble entertainment (1.) The 15th, the chancellor moved for a ſecond reading of this act, in order to its being paſs'd; but, before it went to the vote, the Queen's advocate propoſed the inſerting a clauſe, "making it treaſon to quarrel her Majeſty's right "and title to the crown, or the exerciſe of the "government, from her actual entry on the ſame." This clauſe, duke Hamilton, and thoſe who adhered to him, oppoſed, alledging that the miniſtry only propoſed it, as being conſcious they had, contrary to law, been inſtrumental in adviſing her Majeſty to exerciſe ſome acts of adminiſtration, ſuch as the calling together the late parliament,

An act for acknowledging her Majeſty's title.

(1) This entertainment was very ſolemn and grand: at one end of the room was a table raiſed two or three ſteps, where his grace ſat alone, and was ſerved at table by the duke of Argyle, as maſter of the houſhold, who gave the firſt glaſs kneeling; the earl of Mar ſerved as carver; the earl of Loudon as cup-bearer; the lord Boyle as comptroler; and ſir William Erſtruther baronet, as under maſter of the houſhold. Down from the commiſſioner's table, there was a table of about 120 foot long, where the nobility, barons and burgeſſes ſat.

Q. Ann, An' 1703.

which had continued during all the late reign, and promoting in it ſome commiſſions, laws and powers, which were plainly beyond thoſe limitations, which determined the being of that parliament, and circumſcrib'd its power. It was, however, carried for this clauſe, and the bill having been twice read, had the royal aſſent, the nineteenth (1).

An act of toleration rejected.

An act "for the toleration of all Proteſtants, "in the exerciſe of religious worſhip," was, likewiſe, propos'd in this parliament: upon which a repreſentation was offered againſt it, in the name, and at the appointment of the general aſſembly of the kirk; in which they inſiſted, "That there "could be no juſt ground to grant a toleration to "thoſe of the epiſcopal perſuaſion, ſince there "was no ſinful condition of communion required "of them, and difference in opinion about "church-government was not a ſufficient reaſon "for ſeparation in worſhip: and that to grant a "toleration to that party, in the preſent circum-"ſtances of that church and nation, would ſhake "the foundations of their happy conſtitution. We "therefore (ſaid they) moſt humbly beſeech, yea, "we are bold in the Lord, and in the name of the "church of God, earneſtly to obteſt his grace, "and the moſt honorable eſtates, that no ſuch "motion of any legal toleration, to thoſe of the "prelatical principle, may be entertained by the "parliament: being perſuaded, that in the pre-"ſent caſe and circumſtances of that church and "nation, to enact a toleration for thoſe of that "way (which we pray God, of his infinite mer-"cy to avert) would be to eſtabliſh iniquity by "a law, and bring upon the promoters thereof, "and upon their families, a dreadful guilt, &c." (2.) The kirk, in ſhort, ſo managed matters, that the act of toleration was drop'd.

The ſucceſſion in the houſe of Hanover rejected.

Some time after, it was propoſed to take the ſupply into conſideration; but the houſe inſiſted, before they went upon that buſineſs, upon paſſing an act for their ſecurity, in which it was provided, in order to ſecure their ancient independency, "that in default of iſſue of her Majeſty, the ſame "perſon ſhould, in no event, be capable to be "King or Queen both of England and Scotland, "unleſs a free communication of trade, the free-"dom of navigation, and the liberty of the "plantations, &c. was fully agreed to by the "parliament of England;" and ſeveral proviſions and limitations were alſo contained in the ſaid act, to the prejudice of the prerogative of the crown (3). The ſettling the ſucceſſion, in the houſe of Hanover, was afterwards propoſed by the earl of Marchmont; but his propoſal was rejected (4). Q. Ann' An' 1703

The act of ſecurity having been twice read, and the high commiſſioner neglecting to give it the royal aſſent, he was frequently addreſs'd to that purpoſe; 'till, at length, he told the parliament: "that he was fully impower'd to give the royal aſ-"ſent to all the acts voted this ſeſſion, except the "act of ſecurity, which, they might eaſily believe, "required her Majeſty's farther conſideration. At "the ſame time, her Majeſty expected they would "mind their own ſafety, in making the neceſſary "proviſion for the troops, and that they would "put the trade and cuſtoms upon ſuch a foot, that "the civil liſt might be ſupported:" and he intreated them to finiſh theſe matters as ſoon as poſſible.

The royal aſſent refuſed to the act of ſecurity.

Some members of the houſe began, upon this, to queſtion whether the crown had a negative or not. They ſaid, 'till of late, a negative had never been interpoſed, and that but in very few caſes; and, in the end, they peremptorily reſolved, not to go upon the ſupply, 'till the act of ſecurity had paſs'd the royal aſſent: whereupon, the lord-commiſſioner having given the royal aſſent to ſeveral other acts, on the 16th of September, the parliament was adjourned to the 12th of October (5).

The negative of the crown call'd in queſtion.

The parliament adjourned.

The duke of Ormond having been conſtituted lord-lieutenant of Ireland, as I have obſerved already, his grace held a parliament of that kingdom, which met the 21ſt of September. When his grace made a ſpeech to both houſes, importing in ſubſtance: "that what her Majeſty expected from the com-"mons at this time, was only that the public debts "be diſcharged, and the revenue made equal to "the expence of the government, which was much "increaſed by the charge of the barracks: and they "were found ſo uſeful, and ſo great an eaſe to the "country, that they ought not to be neglected: "aſſuring both houſes, that ſince the Queen had "done him the honor to place him in that ſtation, "as his duty and gratitude obliged him to ſerve "her Majeſty, with the utmoſt diligence and fide-"lity, ſo his inclination and intereſt, and the ex-"amples of his anceſtors, were indiſpenſable ob-"ligations upon him, to improve every opportu-"nity, to the advantage and proſperity of this his "native country: concluding, that ſince he had "no other deſign, than what they all aimed at, "the Queen's ſervice, and the good of their coun-"try, he only recommended to them, that they

Affairs of Ireland.

The duke of Ormond's ſpeech to the parliament.

(1) Before the royal aſſent was given, the duke of Hamilton deſired, it might be remember'd, that, at paſſing this act, it was expreſsly declared, "that the meaning of the advocate's clauſe could affect only the Queen's exerciſe of her government, and "not the actings of her miniſtry: and, therefore, that whatever challenge might be given afterwards, to the illegality of the "actings of the late parliament, might not be conſidered as a violation of this act.

(2) It may here be naturally and properly aſk'd; why it ſhould not be as laudable and innocent to tolerate Epiſcopacy in Scotland, as to tolerate Preſbytery in England, eſpecially if we conſider, that the legiſlative authority of both nations, are now of the Epiſcopal communion.

(3) The debates upon this act of ſecurity laſted, by adjournment, from time to time, three months, and were often very warm, on both ſides. Several other projects, acts and expedients were propos'd by different members, and debated, but all, at length terminated in this.

(4) His lordſhip preſented an act, intitled, "an act to ſettle the ſucceſſion on the houſe of Hanover", and deſired it might be read; but when the clerk came to that paragraph, where it ſubſtituted the Princeſs Sophia, &c. the words were no ſooner out of his mouth, than the whole houſe was in a flame. Some moved to have it burnt; others to have the earl, who offered it, called to the bar; and again others, that he might be ſent to the caſtle. But at length, after the houſe had expreſs'd a great deal of diſſatisfaction, the clerk was ſuffered to read it thro': but the earl's ſecond motion, that it might be mark'd a firſt reading, was over ruled, and ſo the act was loſt.

(5) The acts which had the royal aſſent were, 1. "An act for ſecuring the true Proteſtant religion, and Preſbyterian govern-"ment: 2 an act ratifying the turning the meeting of eſtates into a parliament: 3. an act anent leeſing-makers and ſlanderers: "4. an act anent peace and war: 5. an act anent the public accounts: 6. an act in favor of the company trading to Africa and "the Indies: 7. an act diſcharging the importation of Iriſh victual: 8. an act continuing the prohibition of exporting Eng-"liſh and Iriſh wool, till next ſeſſion of parliament: 9. an act allowing the importation of wines, and other forein liquors", and ſome private acts.

Thus ended this remarkable ſeſſion of the Scotiſh parliament, which, according to an eminent writer of that nation, "did "more for redreſſing the grievances, and reſtoring the liberties of that nation, than all the parliaments ſince 1660. Lockhart's memoirs, &c. p. 60.

With how great warmth matters were debated in this parliament, the reader may conceive by one inſtance, when upon a debate for a vote, "Liberty or ſubſidy", ſome members ſaid, "that, if there was no other way of coming at ſo natural and "undeniable a privilege of the parliament, they would demand it, with their ſwords in their hands.

"unite

Q. Ann, An' 1703.

" unite and agree, in the ſame meaſures, and purſue them, with wiſdom and temper."

Addreſſes.

The firſt thing both houſes went upon, after the commons had choſen a ſpeaker, was the framing and preſenting dutiful and affectionate addreſſes both to the Queen and the lord-lieutenant: and the lords alſo wrote a letter to the Queen, returning her Majeſty thanks, " for her happy choice of James, duke of " Ormond, to be her lieutenant and chief governor " over that Kingdom: " to all which compliments, the Queen, and lord-lieutenant, returned very gracious anſwers.

The ſtate of the nation inquired into.

The 11th of October, mr. Moleſworth reported from the commitee of the whole houſe, appointed to take into conſideration the ſtate of the nation, that they had come to a reſolution; which was agreed to by the houſe, viz. " that an humble repreſentation be made to her Majeſty, ſeting " forth the preſent diſtreſſed condition of this kingdom: " he reported alſo, ſeveral other reſolutions, as heads of the ſaid repreſentation, which being agreed to, a commitee was appointed to prepare and bring it in. That the nation look'd upon themſelves, to ly under very great hardſhips, at this time we may ſee by the ſaid repreſentation to her Majeſty from the parliament; which they preſented to the lord-lieutenant, the 22d of October, in which they ſet forth; " that her royal predeceſſors had " always had the glory of governing a free people; " but that the conſtitution of the kingdom of Ire- " land had been of late greatly ſhaken, and the " lives, liberties and eſtates of the ſubjects called " in queſtion, and tried, in a manner unknown " to their anceſtors. That the charge they had " been put to, by the truſtees for forfeited eſtates, " in defending their juſt rights (which, after many " and expenſive delays, had been allowed by the ſaid " truſtees) exceeded the value of the current caſh " of that kingdom: that they could not, without " the greateſt grief of heart, reflect on the loſs of " their trade, and of being deprived of the means " of earning their livelyhood, and maintaining " their own manufactures, whereby their poor " were become very numerous, eſpecially the poor " induſtrious Proteſtants: that very many Proteſtant families had been forced to leave the kingdom, and remove into forein countries: that their " forein trade was under ſuch reſtrictions and diſcouragements, that it became in a manner unprofitable; that the want of frequent parliaments " had given incouragement to evil men, who minded nothing but their own gain, tho' it tended to " the ruin and oppreſſion of her Majeſty's ſubjects: " that the rapacious covetouſneſs of ſome civil " officers was inſupportable, who amaſs'd together " vaſt eſtates, in a ſhort time, in that poor country: that others reſided, for the moſt part out " of the kingdom, and neglected their duties, to " the great detriment of her Majeſty's ſubjects, " and failure of juſtice: and that it was from her " Majeſty's gracious interpoſition alone, in their " favor, that they hoped for relief from theſe their " manifeſt griefs and oppreſſions. That they did " not doubt, her Majeſty would take ſome prudent meaſures for their ſupport, either by reſtoring to them the full injoyment of their conſtitution, or by promoting a more firm and ſtrict " union with her ſubjects of England, which " would prove to the advantage of that kingdom; " nothing being more certain, than that what ever " riches Ireland ſhould acquire, muſt at laſt neceſſarily center in the ſeat of government: " they pray'd, that ſhe might long continue to be " the choiceſt bleſſing of her people, and the aſſerter of the liberties of Europe: and that they, " her poor ſubjects of Ireland, might be an eminent " inſtance of her Majeſty's having a juſt right to " that moſt glorious title; that they might join with " the reſt of mankind, in proclaiming her moſt " excellent Majeſty, not only the greateſt, but " the beſt and juſteſt Princeſs that ever reign'd".

Repreſentation of the parliament to the Queen.

Q. Ann, An' 1703.

The 25th, mr. Southwell, ſecretary of ſtate, acquainted the houſe of commons: " that their repre- " ſentation was a matter of the higheſt conſequence; " and that his grace would take ſuch care of it, as " might moſt conduce to the ſervice of the nation.

They retrench ſeveral penſions.

The ſame day, the commons voted ſeveral penſions (to the value of 17,634l.) to be un-neceſſary branches of the eſtabliſhment, and particularly 1200l. per annum, that was paid to the Preſbyterian miniſters in Ulſter, in the reign of King William.

A complaint having alſo been exhibited, in this parliament, againſt the noted mr. Aſgil, a member of the houſe of commons of that kingdom (as he had been of that in England) for writing a book intitled, " An argument proving, that, according " to the covenant of eternal life, revealed in the " ſcriptures, men may be tranſlated from hence to " Heaven, without paſſing thro' death, altho' the " humane nature of Christ himſelf could not be thus " tranſlated 'till he paſs'd thro' death." The houſe, on the 11th of October, after having heard mr. Aſgil, in his defence, reſolved, " that as it appear'd to " them, John Aſgil, eſq; a member of this houſe, is " author of the ſaid book, and that he be expell'd " the houſe, and for ever after incapable of " being choſen, return'd, or ſiting as a mem- " ber in any ſucceeding parliament in that king- " dom."

Proceedings on the ſupply.

The 13th, the houſe of commons took into conſideration that part of the lord-lieutenant's ſpeech as regarded the ſupply, and came to ſeveral reſolutions, which were ordered to be reported the next day. The 14th, the houſe ordered major Clayton to carry the heads of a bill (" to make it high- " treaſon, in this kingdom, by word or writing, " to impeach the ſucceſſion of the crown, as limited " by ſeveral acts of parliament", to his grace the lord-lieutenant, and deſire the ſame might be tranſmited to England in due form. Mr. Ludlow reported the reſolutions which were taken the day before, in a commitee of the whole houſe, on a ſupply, which were unanimouſly agreed to by the houſe, viz. " That the funds formerly granted by " parliament, and the revenue of the kingdom, " were ſufficient to ſupport the government, and " diſcharge the public debts, due to and for Michael- " mas 1703. That the ſupply to be granted to " her Majeſty, be a ſum ſufficient to make up the " deficiency of the revenue, to ſupport the neceſſary " branches of the eſtabliſhment, for two years, " ending at Michaelmas 1705."

Acts paſs'd.

The 16th, the lord-lieutenant came to the houſe of lords, and gave the royal aſſent to three acts: 1. " For an aditional duty of exciſe upon beer, " ale, and other liquors: 2. for incouraging the " importation of iron and ſtaves; and, 3. to " prevent Popiſh prieſts from coming into the " kingdom."

A ſupply voted.

The 26th, they " granted 150,000 l. to her " Majeſty, to make good the deficiency of the ne- " ceſſary branches of the eſtabliſhment, for the " ſupport of the government for two years, com- " mencing at Michaelmas 1703;" and the following days, they proceeded on ways and means to raiſe the ſame.

Heads of ſundry bills preſented.

The 30th of October, they finiſh'd the heads of " a bill, for ſecuring the liberty of the ſubject, " and for preventing of impriſonment beyond the " ſeas;" and order'd them to be carried to the lord-lieutenant. The 8th of November, the commons went thro' the heads of " a bill, for natura- " liſing all Proteſtant ſtrangers," and ordered that likewiſe to be carried to the lord-lieutenant, to be tranſmited tranſmited to England. The 23d, the houſe of commons, with their ſpeaker, attended his grace, and preſented him heads of "a bill, to prevent the "farther growth of Popery," and alſo heads of another bill, "to incourage the linen-manufacture "of that kingdom;" with an addreſs of the commons to her Majeſty. On this occaſion the ſpeaker made a ſpeech to the lord-lieutenant, in which he, in a more eſpecial manner, recommended the firſt of theſe bills to his favor, as of great importance to their future well-being. And the more, as they ſaid, they were well informed, and fully convinced, that great ſums of mony had been lately raiſed among them, to oppoſe the paſſing of a bill of this nature, in England. The lord-lieutenant aſſured them, "that he would take care to "tranſmit theſe two bills, which were ſo much "for the intereſt of the nation, and recommend "them in the moſt effectual manner, according to "their deſire, and do all that was in his power, "to prevent the growth of Popery."

Q. Ann, An' 1703.

Vote againſt Papiſts.

The 26th the houſe reſolved, "that, as it ap-"peared to them, the Papiſts of that kingdom ſtill "retained hopes of the coming in of the perſon, "who went by the name of the Prince of Wales, "in the life of the late King James, and now by "the title of James III." But, the ſame day, mr. ſecretary Southwell, by command of his grace the lord-lieutenant, acquainted the houſe, with his grace's pleaſure, that they ſhould adjourn till the 11th of January next inſuing, which was done accordingly (1).

The parliament of Ireland adjourn'd.

Maritime affairs.

I come now to give ſome account of the maritime affairs of this year, in which, as nothing very extraordinary happened, I ſhall be as ſhort as poſſible: however, before I enter upon thoſe occurrences at or near home, and in other parts of Europe, I ſhall ſay a word or two of what paſs'd in America. We left rear-admiral Whetſton cruiſing about Hiſpaniola; and I have already given the reader an account, that on the 24th of September, of the foregoing year, ſir George Rooke detach'd captain Walker, in the Burford, with five more third-rates, and ten tranſports, having four regiments on board, for the Weſt-Indies.

Vice-admiral Graydon ſent to the Weſt-Indies.

The 19th of January, of this year, vice-admiral Graydon, then of the white ſquadron, who was to have carried over the earl of Peterborough, as I have ſaid above (2), was now ordered to go without the earl, and was appointed commander in chief in the Weſt-Indies (3). He was ordered at firſt, to proceed from hence with the Reſolution, Blackwall, and Sheerneſs only: but the latter not proving fit for the voyage, it was afterwards thought proper, that the Montague of ſixty, and the Nonſuch of fifty guns, which were then at Plymouth, ſhould accompany him 150 leagues into ſea.

Q. Ann, An' 1703.

Meets part of du Caſſe's ſquadron.

The 18th of March, being in the latitude of forty-ſeven degrees and thirty minutes, the vice-admiral having theſe ſhips with him, and the tranſports with brigadier Colombine's regiment, together with ſome ſtore-ſhips and merchant-men, they met with four French men of war to leeward, two of about ſixty, one of fifty, and the other of forty guns, which latter being not only the ſmalleſt, but the ſternmoſt, the Montague, commanded by captain Cleveland, bore down to and ingaged her. The vice-admiral, hereupon, made the ſignal for a line of battle, and conſequently for the Montague's coming off: but her fore-top-ſail being ſhot to pieces, ſhe could not be ſo quick in tacking, but that the other three ſhips wore, and bearing down to the ſhip that had been ingaged, each of them gave the Montague a broad-ſide, tho' without doing her much damage. The French ſhips, which were part of monſ. du Caſſe's ſquadron, that had been purſued by Bembow, and were reported to be very rich, now made the beſt of their way from ours, but were very foul (4).

But lets them eſcape.

Rear-admiral Whetſtone ſucceſsful.

Rear-admiral Whetſtone was, in the mean time, pretty ſucceſsful, in taking, ſinking, and burning ſeveral of the enemy's privateers, by which their loſs was computed at 18,000 l.

Several places in Guadelupe taken.

Captain Walker arrived, the 18th of February, at Antegoa, from whence he ſailed again the latter end of that month. And the ſquadron, with diverſe privateers, and other veſſels, and the forces under colonel Codrington, got together the 7th of the following month. They put aſhore a ſmall number of men, at the north end of Guadelupe, who burnt ſome houſes and plantations, and then came on board again. The fleet ſtood off and on, till the tenth, waiting the coming up of the Maidſtone man of war, and ſome other ſmall ſhips, which lay off of Marigalante. The 12th, by break of day, they landed colonel Byam, with his own regiment, and 200 of colonel Whetham's regiment, at a place called Les Petits Habitants, where they met with a warm reception from the French; but ſoon obliged them to retire.

---

(1) This vote was occaſion'd by the repreſentation of a member, ſeting forth the great danger the Proteſtants were in, in ſome parts of Ireland, particularly in the county of Limerick, where the Iriſh were begining to form themſelves into bodies, and to plunder the Proteſtants of their arms and mony; adding, that the diſaffected there held a correſpondence with thoſe in England, and were not out of hopes of reſtoring the pretended Prince of Wales: and the ſudden adjournment, when the houſe was on a hot ſcent againſt Popery, afforded matter of ſiniſter reflections, againſt the lord-lieutenant. Boyer's reign of Queen Ann, p. 82.

(2) Biſhop Burnet ſays this project was laid aſide, upon an inſinuation, that if we attempted any of the Spaniſh ſettlements in the Weſt-Indies, it would but unite that nation more firmly with the French: tho' others think it was rather owing to the augmentation of our troops in Flanders.

(3) A ſquadron (ſays biſhop Burnet) was ſent to the Weſt-Indies, commanded by Graydon; a man brutal in his way, and not well affected to the preſent ſtate of affairs. The deſign was to gather all the forces that we had ſcattered up and down the plantations, and with that ſtrength to go and take Placentia, and ſo to drive the French out of the Newfoundland-trade: but the ſecret of this was ſo ill kept, that it was commonly talked of before he ſailed: the French had timely notice of it, and ſent a greater force to defend the place, than he could bring together to attack it. Hiſt. of his own times.

(4) As vice-admiral Graydon had more than a ſufficient force with him to have dealt with theſe French ſhips, which were foul, and could not eaſily have eſcaped him, it occaſion'd many reflections: but it has been alledg'd, in his excuſe, that he had poſitive orders, not to interrupt his paſſage, by chaſing or ſpeaking with any ſhips whatever. Lediard's naval hiſtory, Vol. II. p. 765.

His orders (ſays biſhop Burnet) were preſſing; in particular, that he ſhould not go out of his way, to purſue any of the enemy's ſhips, which he might ſee. Theſe he obſerved ſo punctually, that when he ſaw a ſquadron of four French men of war ſailing towards Breſt, that were viſibly foul, and in no condition to make any reſiſtance, he ſent indeed one of his ſhips to view them, who ingaged them; but Graydon gave the ſignal to call him off, upon which they got ſafe into Breſt. This was afterwards known to be du Caſſe's ſquadron, who was bringing treaſure home from Carthagena, and other ports of the Weſt-Indies, reported to be four millions of pieces of eight. But tho' here was a good prey loſt, yet ſo careful was the Prince's council to excuſe every thing, done by ſuch a man, that they ordered an advertiſement to be put in the Gazet, to juſtify Graydon, in which it is ſaid, that purſuant to his orders, he had not ingaged that fleet. The orders were indeed ſtrangely given, yet our admirals had never thought themſelves ſo bound down to them, but that, upon great occaſions, they might make ſtretches; eſpecially where the advantage was viſible, as it was in this caſe; for ſince they were out of the way of new orders, and new occaſions might happen, which could not be known, when their orders were given, the nature of the ſervice ſeemed to give them a greater liberty, than was fit to be allowed in the land-ſervice. Hiſt. of his own times.

About

Q. ANN, AN' 1703.

About nine, colonel Whetham landed in a bay to the northward of a town called la Bayliffe, where he, likewiſe, met with a vigorous reſiſtance of all the enemy's forces, poſted behind very advantageous breaſt-works, from whence they plied them with their great and ſmall ſhot; notwithſtanding which, the Engliſh did not fire a ſhot till they could lay the muzzles of their muſkets on the enemy's breaſt-works. About noon, they made themſelves maſters of the enemy's intrenchments, and in two hours after, of la Bayliffe, the Jacobine's church, which, they had fortified, and ten pieces of their cannon. About two, the Engliſh took a platform, with three pieces of their cannon, and a redoubt with one. At night, four hundred of the Engliſh, and the marine regiment, attack'd the Jacobine plantation and breaſt-work, all along the Jacobine's river, which the enemy left upon the firing only of two vollies of ſmall ſhot upon them: and the commadore having ordered the Chicheſter, at the ſame time, to fire upon their other batteries, they ſoon quited them, and ſuffered our men to take poſſeſſion of them all. The reſt of the ſoldiers, with 400 ſeamen, being landed, the next day, they marched without any oppoſition, but the firing of the enemy's cannon, and drove them out of the north part of the great town, called Baſſe-terre, forcing them to retire into the caſtle and fort, which they defended till the 3d of April, and then, blowing them up, retreated into the mountains.

A caſtle and fort blown up.

The country ravaged.

They had now nothing to do, but to ſend out parties to burn and deſtroy the enemy's houſes, works, ſugar-canes and proviſions, to ravage the country, and to bring in what cattle and plunder they could find; after which, they burnt the town to the ground, razed the fortifications, took the beſt of the guns on board, and burſting the reſt, made their retreat without the loſs of a man (1). The forces being on board, the ſquadron ſet ſail, and coming off of Montſerrat, the 8th of May, they landed ſome of the ſoldiers there, and came to Mevis, the ſame night, with the reſt; who from thence were ſent to St. Chriſtophers (2).

The ſquadron returns to St. Chriſtopher's

Vice-admiral Graydon arrived, in the mean time, the 10th of April, at Madera, the 12th of May, at Barbadoes, and the 4th of June, at Jamaica, where he made himſelf remarkable for nothing but ſquabling with ſome of the chief of the iſland (3). Having put all her Majeſty's ſhips into a condition for ſailing, or returning home, purſuant to the inſtructions he had received, he left ſeven of his ſmalleſt ſhips to attend the iſland, and two others to convoy home the latter trade; and then ſet ſail, together with rear-admiral Whetſtone, and the reſt of the ſhips, on the 21ſt of June, for Bluefields, where having watered, and proceeding from thence, he fell in with cape Pine, in Newfoundland, the 2d of Auguſt. As ſoon as they were got thro' the gulph, the Trial-ſloop was ſent for intelligence to captain Richards, who commanded at St. John's, and for pilots for Placentia, the attack of which place was the principal deſign of his voyage: but a thick fog, which laſted thirty days, ſo diſperſed the ſhips, that it was the 3d of September before they could come together again. A council of war was then call'd; where all difficulties and obſtructions being maturely weigh'd, together with the good circumſtances the enemy were in, and the aſſiſtance they might have, from their privateers and other ſhips, then at Placentia, they were unanimouſly of opinion, that to make any attempt on that place, at ſuch a ſeaſon of the year, was altogether impracticable, and could have no probability of ſucceſs: it was therefore reſolved, to make the beſt of their way for England. After a very bad paſſage, the vice and rear-admirals, with only one fire-ſhip, in their company, arrived, the 22d of October, in the Downs, having, made ſeveral detachments, for different places, and the other ſhips put in, one after another, in different harbors (4).

Q. ANN, AN' 1703.

Sir George Rooke commands the main fleet.

While theſe things were tranſacting in America, ſir George Rooke, admiral of the fleet, received orders, the 4th of April, to take under his command, that part thereof which was deſign'd for ſervice in the channel: conſiſting of five firſt, ſix ſecond, thirteen third, nine fourth, nine fifth, and one ſixth-rates, together with three bomb-veſſels, ſix fireſhips, and three hoſpital-ſhips. As alſo the ſquadron intended for the Mediterranean, under the command of ſir Cloudeſly Shovel, in caſe it ſhould be found, for the advantage of the ſervice, to put a ſtop to that expedition (5).

The admiral arrived in the Downs, the 12th of April, and there got information, that her Majeſty's ſhips, the Saliſbury and Adventure had met with a ſquadron of French ſhips from Dunkirk,

(1) Father Daniel, tho' he mentions this deſcent of the Engliſh on Guadelupe, conceals all theſe circumſtances to their advantage, and pretends they were repulſed with loſs by the ſieur Auger, governor of the iſland. De Larrey ſays; that monſ. Gabaret arriving at fort St. Mary's, with two frigats, a flute, nine armed barks, and 700 men, to the aſſiſtance of the inhabitants, they did not think themſelves a force ſufficient to withſtand them, and therefore re-imbarked.

(2) In this expedition were killed, on our ſide, one major, two captains, ſix lieutenants, and one hundred fifty-four ſoldiers; two colonels, ſeven captains, nine lieutenants, and 211 ſoldiers were wounded; two colonels, four lieutenants, three enſigns, and ſeventy-two ſoldiers died, fifty-nine deſerted, and twelve were taken priſoners. Lediard's naval hiſtory, Vol. II. p. 766.

(3) When he came to the plantations (ſays biſhop Burnet) he acted in ſo ſavage a manner, as if he had been ſent rather to terrify, than to protect them.

(4) And this was the end of an expedition, in which no ſmall part of our navy was imployed, and ſome of it from the year 1698. An expedition which was attended with a continual and vaſt expence, and which coſt the lives of many brave officers, ſeamen and ſoldiers. The fruits of it the reader has ſeen, and what proportion they bore to the coſt and loſſes of it, I leave him to judge. Biſhop Burnet ſpeaks freer, and ſays, it ended ingloriouſly, and that many complaints of Graydon's conduct were ſent after him.

(5) Biſhop Burnet introduces his account of the ſea-expeditions of this year as follows: our operations at ſea (ſays he) were ill-deſign'd, and worſe executed: the making Prince George our lord-high-admiral proved, in many inſtances, very unhappy to the nation. Men of bad deſigns impoſed on him: he underſtood thoſe matters very little, and they ſhelter'd themſelves under his name, to which a great ſubmiſſion was paid, but the complaints roſe the higher for that. Our main fleet was ready to go out in May; but the Dutch fleet was not yet come over; ſo Rooke was ſent out to alarm the coaſts of France. He linger'd long in port, pretending ill-health; upon that Churchill was ſent to command the fleet; but Rooke's health returned happily for him, or he thought fit to lay aſide that pretence, and went to ſea, where he continued a month: but in ſuch a ſtation, as if his deſign had been to keep far from meeting any of the French fleet, which ſailed out at that time, and to do the enemy no harm, and not ſo much as to diſturb their quiet, by coming near their coaſt. At laſt he returned without having attempted any thing. Hiſt. of his own times.

Father Daniel, however, ſays, Rooke appeared before Belle-Iſle, with 7000 men, where he landed his troops, and inveſted the fort; but met with ſo vigorous a reſiſtance, as ſoon obliged him to re-imbark them again; that he likewiſe attempted, at the ſame time, a deſcent, on the iſland of Grovais; but that the troops and militia gave him ſuch a reception, that his ſhallops were obliged to make towards their ſhips again, without landing a man. And that he had as little ſucceſs in ſeveral other attempts he made. Certain it is, that he was on the enemy's coaſts, and near Belle-Iſle, as well as Grovais, whether he attempted any thing or not. So that in this, at leaſt, the biſhop does ſir George wrong.

Q. Ann, An' 1703.

and (as it was feared) had fallen into their hands. Two detachments were hereupon immediately made, one under rear-admiral Byng, to ly in wait, and indeavour to intercept them in their return to Dunkirk, and the other under rear-admiral Beaumont, to cruiſe off of that port, for the ſame purpoſe: but they were ſo fortunate to get in with their prizes (which they took, after the Saliſbury, commanded by captain Cotton, had made a gallant reſiſtance of two hours, againſt ſeven French ſhips) before either of theſe detachments could get up with them. The main fleet put to ſea, ſoon after, from Spithead and St. Hellen's, and joined with admiral Leake off of Plymouth, the 8th of May. They cruiſed about in the chanel, ſoundings, and off the French coaſt, till the tenth of June, without any thing remarkable happening, except the taking of a few prizes. It was then reſolved to return to St. Helens, to be ready for any neceſſary ſervice, and the fleet arrived there, accordingly, the 21ſt of the ſame month (1).

But with little ſucceſs.

Sir Cloudeſly Shovel's expedition to the Mediterranean.

The 4th of May, ſir Cloudeſly Shovel received his inſtructions to proceed on an expedition to the Mediterranean, to which ſome additions were made on the 7th (2); till the 16th of June he was imploy'd in making the neceſſary preparations for the deſign, and, that day, twelve ſhips of the States-general joined him. There being no proſpect of any more ſhips coming from Holland, he was then ordered to ſet ſail with the firſt opportunity of wind and weather: however, it was thought fit, on the 29th, to re-inforce him with eight Engliſh ſhips more, and, to avoid delay, he was ordered to take them in the condition they were.

The fleet ſails.

The 1ſt of July, he ſet ſail from St. Hellens, and indeavored to beat it out of the chanel: but was forced, by contrary winds, to put into Torbay again the fifth.

Several French prizes taken.

Captain John Norris, of the Orford, who had been cruiſing with the Montague, in the Soundings, joined the admiral in Torbay, having, after an hour's diſpute, taken the Philippeaux, of ſix and thirty guns, twelve patereroes, and two hundred and forty men. Her captain behaved himſelf well, and did not ſurrender 'till he had near fifty men killed and wounded, and his ſhip much torn. The Orford had eight men wounded, ſome very deſperately; and her mizzen-maſt, fore-maſt and main-yard, being ſhot thro', were wholly diſabled. The Mountague, commanded by captain William Cleveland, had alſo the good fortune to take the ſhip ſhe had chas'd, of eighteen guns, and one hundred and ten men; but in the purſuit, the French captain threw moſt of her ordnance over board; and the Orford, ſoon after took another French ſhip, which had ſixteen guns mounted.

The 8th, they ſet ſail again for the rock of Liſbon, the place appointed for their rendezvous: in their paſſage thither, ſir Thomas Hardy, in the Bedford, took a French Weſt-India ſhip: and, about the ſame time, the Auguſte, a French ſhip of fifty-four guns, and 420 men, commanded by the chevalier de Neſmond, was taken and brought into the fleet.

Q. Ann, An' 1703.

The 24th, the fleet came to anchor off of Caſcais, vice-admiral Leake having joined it with five ſhips from England, two days before, and, the very ſame evening, ſir Cloudeſly ſent ſir Stafford Fairborn, to Liſbon, to acquaint his Portugueſe Majeſty (who was now entered into the grand-alliance) with the arrival of the confederate fleet. Sir Stafford, having had audience of the King, who received him with all imaginable marks of eſteem, returned to the fleet extreamly ſatisfied with the honors done him. The 27th, the Pembroke, Monmouth, Orford, Litchfield, and Hampton-court, (which had been left behind at Plymouth, to clean) and the 29th, the Naſſau, joined the fleet, which having watered, and got wines and freſh proviſions, ſailed the 31ſt from Caſcais. Sir Thomas Hardy was ordered to go, with his own ſhip, the Bedford, Pembroke, Montague and Lizard, along the Chriſtian ſhoar, and call at Lagos, for intelligence, the governor of that place having orders to impart what he could get: and, at the ſame time, captain Norris, with four ſhips more, received orders to look into Cadiz, to diſcover what ſhips were in that harbor.

The fleet arrives at Caſcais.

Sir Stephen Fairborn ſent to Liſbon.

The grand fleet had a fair wind, till they came to the mouth of the Streights, where they met with a ſtrong Levant, which drove them along the coaſt of Barbary. Captain Norris came in with ſome Spaniſh boats, which reported, that they had but eight French gallies at Cadiz, for the ſecurity of that port: but none of their men of war on the Spaniſh coaſts: and ſir Thomas Hardy brought a ſtout Genoeſe ſhip into the fleet, who could give no account of the French.

The 9th of Auguſt, the fleet came to an anchor in Tangier-road, and, the ſame day, the Alcaid of that place ſent a compliment to ſir Cloudeſly, to offer him what refreſhments the country afforded; to which he afterwards added ſeveral preſents to him, and the chief commanders. The fleet continued here three days, during which time, the ſeamen went freely aſhore, and bought freſh proviſions.

The fleet arrives at Tangier.

The 12th, the fleet ſailed from Tangier-road, and, with a weſterly-wind, got thro' the Streights, that night: but the Levant blowing afrerwards pretty freſh they made but little way; and the fleet begining to want water, ſtretched from Cape de Gat to Cape Hony in Barbary, to get ſome water there; but the Moors not only refuſed it, but fired upon the boat ſent aſhoar, with a flag of truce for that purpoſe, killed one man, and mortally wounded the lieutenant of the Tartar. The want of water increaſing, and many men dying, thro' the exceſſive heat, which the calms had render'd more intolerable, a council of war was held, the 29th, on board the Triumph, to conſider of the moſt proper place to put into; and Altea, in the kingdom of Valencia in Spain, being reſolved upon, the Eagle, commanded by the lord Archibald Hamilton, Gets thro' the Streights.

(1) Thus ended an expedition, from which very little advantage accrued, whatever might be expected: and, in my poor opinion (ſays mr. Burchett, whom we muſt allow to be a judge) a ſquadron of ſmall ſhips might have had much better ſucceſs.

(2) They were, in ſubſtance, to indeavor to aſſiſt the Cevennois, and to deſtroy the ſalt-works at Peccais. To indeavor to reduce the iſland of Sicily, and the kingdom of Naples, to the obedience of the houſe of Auſtria. To conſer with any perſon, whom he might find at Leghorn, appointed by Prince Eugene of Savoy, concerning the deſigns of that Prince, to which he was to be aiding and aſſiſting. To detach ſome ſhips to the coaſt of Barbary, and to authorize the conſuls of Algiers, Tunis and Tripoli, or other proper perſons, to treat with their governments and conclude a peace. To demand the puniſhment of the governor of Leghorn, for not obſerving a ſtrict neutrality. To take and deſtroy all the enemy's ſhips going in, or coming out at that port, and to exact ſome other conditions from the grand-duke. To demand ſatisfaction for ſome indignities offered, to the Engliſh nation by the republic of Venice, and, in caſe of refuſal, to uſe reprizals; to take care of proper convoys for the ſeveral branches of our trade: to take all opportunities of attacking Cadiz, Toulon, or any of the other enemy's towns, forts, ſhips, gallies or magazines. If proper, to ſend a detachment into the Adriatick, to ſecure the Imperial convoys for Italy; and all theſe, with many other things, mention'd in his inſtructions, he was to do within the ſpace of three months; for he was ordered to return down the Streights, ſome time in September. Lediard's naval hiſtory, Vol. II. p. 770. ſeq.

and

Q. Ann, An' 1703.

and the Hampton-court were ſent before, but the governor fired upon them, from two guns planted on a tower; but they were ſoon ſilenced and diſmounted by the ſhot from thoſe two ſhips.

Troops landed in Spain.

The 31ſt of Auguſt, the whole fleet came in ſight of the place, and the Flamborough was ſent cloſe to the ſhoar, to cover the deſcent of the regiment of marines, who, to the number of five and twenty hundred men, landed without any manner of confuſion, and were actually drawn up in batalia, upon the ſhoar, before half the fleet was come to their anchors. Brigadier-general Seymour landed with the firſt detachment, and gave ſuch orders, that never a more regular deſcent was made in an enemy's country.

Theſe troops being thus got on ſhoar, a camp was formed, and a meſſage ſent to the governor, that they did not come as enemies, but as friends: to which he anſwer'd: "that he had a great eſteem "for the Engliſh: but, nevertheleſs, was ſorry, he "was not in a condition to oppoſe their landing. "That he would write to the vice-roy of Valen-"cia, and, if his orders ſhould be ſo, the ad-"miral muſt not take it amiſs, if he ſhould fire "upon his men." At the ſame time, the admirals Shovel and Allemonde, cauſed, in their names a ſhort manifeſto (1) to be publiſh'd and diſperſed among the Spaniards: this manifeſto had ſo far a good effect, that all manner of refreſhments and proviſions were brought to the camp, for which the Spaniards were paid read mony; and, upon this occaſion, they ſhew'd a diſpoſition for the houſe of Auſtria, and an averſion to the French. The ſhips being furniſhed, with water and proviſions, the marines return'd on board again, the 3d of September, and, the ſame evening, the whole fleet ſet ſail for Leghorn, where they arrived the 19th.

Indeavors to relieve the Cevennois.

The court of England having reſolved to give relief to the Proteſtants in the Cevennes (2) as we have already ſeen by ſir Cloudeſly's inſtructions, the better to ſucceeded in this enterpriſe, two French refugees were ſent by land into France, to acquaint the Cevennois, with the Queen's good intentions, that they might concur in rendering them effectual; and leſt theſe two perſons ſhould miſcarry, the marquis de Miremont diſpatch'd a third perſon, for the ſame purpoſe. The States of Holland had already ſent them, not only remittances of mony, but officers, which latter, however, moſt miſcarried; and of all the meſſengers ſent, either by the Engliſh or Dutch, none had the good fortune to penetrate into the Cevennes, and return from thence, but the marquis de Miremont's (3). Beſide theſe perſons ſent by land into the Cevennes, there were three French gentlemen, refugees (meſſieurs Portales, la Billiere, and Tempié) commiſſioned to go on board the Engliſh fleet, to be witneſſes of her Majeſty's good intentions.

A council of war, of all the Engliſh and Dutch flag-officers, being aſſembled, the twenty ninth of Auguſt, on board the Triumph, wherein, among other things, it was debated, how to put that enterprize in execution, monſieur Portales was ſent for into the aſſembly, and told by ſir Cloudeſly, that the ſeaſon being ſo far advanced, it would be imprudent to hazard her Majeſty's fleet on an unknown dangerous coaſt; but that he would order two men of war to go upon the attempt, with a good quantity of arms, ammunition and mony: and that if they had the good fortune to ſpeak with their friends, it would be eaſy for them to concert matters for a farther relief.

Q. Ann, An' 1703.

Two men of war appointed for this ſervice.

Accordingly two men of war, the Pembroke, commanded by captain Arris, and the Tartar, by captain Cooper, were appointed for this ſervice. Theſe two ſhips ſailed a-head from the grand fleet, when they left Altea, and made towards the gulph of Narbonne, having the three French gentlemen on board, and two French pilots. The next day, being the 4th of September, they took, near Ivica, a French tartan of Agde, of about eighty ton, laden with corn, and other commodities, from the maſter of which, they got information, that their whole deſign was diſcovered, and that the French had taken care to ſecure their coaſts. This account very much ſurprized the French gentlemen, who now began to deſpair of ſucceſs. It was ſaid, that this diſcovery was unluckily made by ſome of the French refugees ſent from England to inform the Cevennois of her Majeſty's intention to aſſiſt them.

The 11th, the Pembroke and Tartar took three French tartans, and the 15th they entered the gulph of Narbonne. The 17th, they ſailed in ſight of Narbonne, Vias, and Beſiers; and when they came before Agde, fort Breſcon fired four guns, to alarm the country, which was preſently in arms. Being come before Cette; two French gallies made directly towards them, but ſoon plied their oars to get into harbor again. The ſame day, captain Arris held a conſultation on board the Tartar; and, purſuant to the reſolution there taken, that ſhip was ordered to go a-head, and advance as near the ſhoar as poſſible. The next day, ſhe ſtood in ten fathom water, and the Pembroke in thirteen, at about two miles diſtance from land, and there made the ſignals as directed; but were not anſwered. The eighteenth, two ſeveral conſultations being held on board the Pembroke, and it appearing, by ſeveral circumſtances (to the ſatiſfaction of the French gentlemen themſelves) that nothing more could be attempted, it was reſolved to make the beſt of their way to the general rendezvous, and purſuant hereunto they ſailed for Leghorn, where they arrived the 23d.

They make ſignals to the fleet.

But in vain.

They return to Leghorn.

We left the grand fleet arrived, the 19th of this month, at Leghorn-road. The next morning, the town ſaluted the admiral with five guns,

(1) The ſubſtance of this manifeſto was; that purſuant to the orders of her Majeſty of Great-Britain, and the States-general, they did not deſign to give the leaſt diſturbance to the good ſubjects of Spain, but to protect ſuch of them, who remembring their ancient obligations to the houſe of Auſtria, ſhould ſwear allegiance to their lawful ſoverein, the arch-duke Charles, and indeavor to throw of the yoke of France. And as they would give their aſſiſtance to thoſe of the Spaniſh nation, that ſhould regard their duty, and true intereſt, ſo they would deſtroy the perſons, houſes and goods of ſuch as ſhould oppoſe the effort which ſhould be made, for the deliverance of that valiant and glorious nation of Spain, from the tyranny and oppreſſion of France.

(2) The Cevennes is a mountainous country, in the ſouth part of France, three fourths of the inhabitants of which profeſſed the Proteſtant religion, before the general perſecution in 1685. And notwithſtanding their ſubmiſſion then, moſt of them had ſince ſhaken off the yoke of Popery. Their numbers, and the ſituation of their country, made the French court more jealous of them, than of all the other Proteſtants in France, and conſequently they were more oppreſs'd, to render them uncapable of recovering their liberty. Extorſions, military executions, and many horrid barbarities, made them riſe, at length, in defence of their liberties. The general concern the Engliſh nation expreſſed for the ſufferings of their Proteſtant bretheren, added to her Majeſty's natural compaſſion, moved the Queen to reſolve in council, that the fleet, which was going into the Mediterranean, ſhould indeavor to carry them a ſupply of arms, ammunition and mony.

(3) This meſſenger was mr. David Flotard, who ſtaid ſix days among the Covennois, and having delivered his meſſage acquainted them with the ſignals the Engliſh fleet would make, and how they ſhould anſwer them by other ſignals; and having viewed their troops, the chief officers gave Flotard commiſſion to ſolicit, in their name, all the Proteſtant Princes and States, in their favor, and to aſſure the marquis of Miremont, that they ſhould by glad to have him for their general,

of

Q. Ann, An' 1703.

Of which ſir Cloudeſly took no notice, nor would he accept the uſual preſent ſent him by the governor. The latter deſiring to know the reaſon of it; he made him ſenſible of the miſtakes and, at the ſame time, ſent a meſſage to the great duke of Tuſcany, inſiſting upon a royal ſalute, as having the union-flag. After ſome diſpute, his highneſs ordered that the citadel ſhould ſalute with eleven guns, which was accordingly performed, and ſir Cloudeſly anſwered with the like: this done he was complimented by ſeveral perſons of diſtinction, and received the extraordinary preſents which had been prepared for the count de Thouloufe, who it ſeems was expected there with the French fleet, before the Engliſh: but he never durſt ſtir out of the harbor of Toulon, as long as ſir Cloudeſly remain'd in the Mediteranean.

Diſputes about ſalutes.

Count Lamberg, the Imperial embaſſador at Rome, having notice of the arrival of the confederate fleet, in the road of Leghorn, his excellency haſtened thither. The twenty-eighth of November, he went on board the Engliſh admiral, and acquainted him, that the arch-duke of Auſtria had been declared and proclaimed King of Spain, at Vienna, by the name of Charles III, on the twelfth of that month, N. S. upon which every one of our flag-ſhips fired twenty-one guns, and all the other ſhips in the Engliſh ſquadron fired fifteen guns each, and his Catholic Majeſty's health was drunk (1).

The arch-duke proclaimed King of Spain.

The fleet having got water, and bought what wine and proviſions they could find, ſailed from Leghorn, the ſecond of October: ſir Cloudeſly having, before he departed, wrote to the great duke, demanding ſatisfaction, in her Majeſty's name, as he was directed, who promiſed fair and performed little. The 27th he got thro' the Streights, having firſt detach'd ſquadrons to Tunis, Tripoli and Algiers, to renew treaties, and order'd convoys for the trade. The 30th, the Dutch parted with the Engliſh, to make the beſt of their way home; and, the ſame day, ſir Cloudeſly detach'd a convoy of five men of war, under the command of ſir Andrew Leake, to take up the merchant-ſhips that were ready to ſail for England, from Liſbon, Oporto, Viana, &c. After which, having a fair wind, and good weather, the fleet arrived in the Downs, the 17th of November (2).

The fleet ſails from Leghorn.

And returns to England.

The Orford, Warſpight and Litchfield, which parted from ſir Cloudeſly ſix days before, met ſoon after with a French man of war of fifty-two guns, and 500 men, coming from Newfoundland, whom they ingaged and took, after an obſtinate fight of nine hours.

A French man of war taken.

Before I conclude my account of the maritime affairs of this year, I muſt juſt mention a ſmall but ſucceſsful expedition of rear-admiral Dilkes, who being order'd, on the 22d of July, to ſail, with a ſquadron under his command, for the coaſt of Normandy, to deſtroy a ſmall fleet of French traders, ſaid to be then lying in Cancal-bay, he had the good fortune to meet with them about a league to the weſtward of Granville, being forty-five merchant-ſhips, and three men of war; of which only four eſcaped, the reſt being all either taken, burnt, or ſunk. To recompenſe this brave action, and perpetuate the memory of it, a gold medal was ſtruck, and diſtributed among thoſe who were principally concern'd.

Rear-admiral Dilkes's expedition on the coaſt of Normandy.

I come now to the affairs of the continent, and ſhall begin with the campain in the Netherlands, where we were moſt immediately concerned, with our troops under the duke of Marlborough. While his grace was buſied, in making the neceſſary preparations for the campain, he had a very heavy domeſtic affliction to incounter with, I mean the loſs of his only ſon, the marquis of Blandford, who died, the 20th of February, of the Small-pox, at Cambridge. This misfortune happening juſt as his grace was upon his departure for Holland, put a ſtop to it for ſome days; however, nothing was neglected in the mean time: for count Lottum, general of the Pruſſian troops, having block'd up Rhineburg, it ſurrendered, by capitulation, the 9th of February; after which, he block'd up Guelders.

Campain in the Netherlands, and on the lower Rhine.

Rhineburg taken.

The duke of Marlborough arrived at the Hague, the 17th of March, N. S. and having held ſeveral conferences with the deputies of the States, reviewed the Engliſh forces, in their reſpective gariſons, and ordered the troops near Liege to be in a readineſs to take the field, he diſpatch'd general Cohorn, to make preparations for opening the campain with a ſiege. Upon his grace's arrival, the Dutch immediately brought their armies into the field likewiſe, and, by his prudent management, the confederates were inabled to open the campain early, with the ſiege of Bonn (3). All neceſſary preparation for the expeditious carrying on of this ſiege, being made, (4) the duke ordered the place to be

The duke of Marlborough arrives in Holland.

Siege of Bonn.

(1) The count ſent a gentleman, with mr. Jourdain, one of ſir Cloudeſly Shovel's ſecretaries, to the Dutch admiral, to notify the arch-duke's acceſſion to the Spaniſh throne. He ſeem'd ſurpriſed, that the Imperial miniſter ſhould not pay him a viſit, on that account, as he had done the Engliſh admiral. However, ſome hours after, he ordered his ſhips to fire fifteen guns each: and then count Lamberg gave him the viſit. Lediard's naval hiſtory, vol. II. p. 778.

(2) I ſhall add to this, biſhop Burnet's ſhort account of this expedition in his own words: it was reſolved (ſays he) to ſend a ſtrong fleet into the Mediterranean: It was near the end of June, before they were ready to ſail, and they had orders to come out of the Streights, by the end of September: every thing was ſo ill laid in this expedition, as if it had been intended that nothing ſhould be done by it, beſide the convoying our merchant ſhips, which did not require the fourth part of ſuch a force. Shovel was ſent to command; when he ſaw his inſtructions, he repreſented to the miniſtry (as well he might) that nothing was to be expected from this voyage: he was ordered to go, and he obeyed his orders; he got to Leghorn, by the begining of September. His arrival ſeemed to be of great conſequence; and the allies began to take courage from it; but they were ſoon diſappointed of their hopes, when they underſtood, that, by his orders, he could only ſtay a few days there. Nor was it eaſy to imagine what the deſign of ſo great an expedition could be, or why ſo much mony was thrown away on ſuch a project, which made us deſpiſed by our enemies, while it provoked our friends; who might juſtly think they could not depend upon ſuch an ally, that managed ſo great a force, with ſo poor a conduct, as neither to hurt their enemies, nor protect their friends.

There was alſo (ſays the Biſhop, in another place) great complaint tho' the whole fleet, of their victualing. We loſt many of our ſeamen, who, as it was ſaid, were poiſon'd by ill food: and tho' great complaints were made of the victualers, before the fleet went out, yet there was not ſuch care taken to look into it, as a matter of that conſequence deſerved. The merchants, likewiſe, complained, that they were ill ſerved with convoys, and ſo little care had been taken of the Newcaſtle-fleet, that the price of coals roſe very high. It was alſo ſaid, that there was not a due care had of our ſeamen, who were taken by the privateers. Many of them died, by reaſon of their ill uſage, while others, to deliver themſelves from that, went into the French ſervice. Thus all our marine affairs were much out of order, and theſe diſorders were charged on thoſe, who had the conduct of them. Hiſtory of his own times.

(3) Bonn is a very ancient and ſtrong city, in the circle of the Lower-Rhine, and arch-biſhopric of Cologn, formerly an Imperial city; but now ſubject to the Elector of Cologn, and the uſual reſidence of that Prince, who put it, with the reſt of his dominions, into the hands of the French, at the begining of this war. It is ſituate on the Lower-Rhine, fourteen miles almoſt ſouth of Cologn, twenty-four, S. E. of Juliers, fifty-five almoſt N. E. of Triers, and ſixty N. W. of Mentz. It was anciently a Roman colony, called Colonia Julia Bonna.

(4) Theſe early preparations, to put the confederate army in a condition to act offenſively, broke all the projects laid by the enemy, who deſign'd to have acted offenſively, on their ſide, and to have opened the campain, the 29th of April, with the ſiege of Liege, for which they actually had provided 15,000 pioneers, 3000 wagons, and other neceſſaries; not dreaming that the confederates would be ſo early ready to oppoſe them. Lediard's life of Marlborough. vol. I. p. 219.

inveſted,

Q. Ann, An' 1703.

inveſted, the 24th of April; and the 3d of May the trenches were opened and carried on with great ſucceſs, and a very inconſiderable loſs. The troops appointed for the ſervice of this ſiege conſiſted of forty battallions of foot, and ſixty ſquadrons of horſe and dragoons, with an artillery of above 100 large cannons; and thirty-ſix mortars, beſide 500 ſmall cohorn-mortars.

When the governor ſaw the terrifying preparations which were making againſt him, by the allies, who had ſo vaſt a train of artillery, he ſent a letter to the duke of Marlborough, importing:

The governor's letter to the duke.

"That an agreement had been made, the laſt "year, between the Electors Palatine and Co- "logn, that the cities of Duſſeldorp and Bonn "ſhould not be bombarded, in order to preſerve "the churches, palaces, and other public build- "ings. The performance of which he was order'd "to requeſt from his grace: and to declare withal, "unleſs the ſame were obſerved, the elector of "Bavaria would deſtroy the city of Nieuburg, "belonging to the elector Palatine."

The duke, after having communicated this letter to the elector Palatine, and the generals, return'd this anſwer:

His grace's anſwer.

"That it was not his cuſtom nor inclination to "deſtroy cities or public buildings, out of pro- "penſe malice or deſign, provided the enemy's "conduct did not put him upon ſuch a neceſſity."

The ſiege carried on ſucceſsfully.

The very day the trenches were open'd, the batteries were raiſed, with great alacrity, and being finiſh'd by the 8th, the beſiegers began to fire with ſuch good ſucceſs, againſt both the town and fort, that, the ſame day, the chain which held the flying bridge, by means of which the fort had a communication with the town, was broken by a canon-ſhot, and the bridge, which was ſtaved to pieces, carried away by the ſtream.

The fort taken.

The next day, the battery which played upon the fort, having made a large breach, and the beſiegers being informed, that the gariſon was not numerous, it was reſolved to ſtorm it in the evening, which was done with great intrepidity, and the wiſh'd for ſucceſs; the commander, with thirty of his men being made priſoners, and all the reſt either kill'd or wounded. Being now maſters of the fort, a great battery was raiſed in it, which, on the 12th, began to play on the town, from ſeventy pieces of heavy cannon, and eighteen mortars, in order to make two breaches, that the place might be ſtormed (1).

An unſucceſsful ſally.

The next day, about noon, the beſieged, with about 1000 foot, ſupported by all their horſe and dragoons, made a ſally upon general Dedem's attack. The beſiegers, in the trenches, were, at firſt, put into ſome diſorder; but ſoon recovering themſelves, they repuls'd the French, with the loſs of about one hundred men kill'd, and as many wounded, beſide a major, and three captains taken priſoners: whereas the loſs, on the ſide of the allies, did not amount to half the number (2).

All things being now in a readineſs to aſſault the counterſcarp, and covered way, on the ſide of the Prince of Heſſe's attack, the onſet began about eight o'clock the ſame night, under the command of major-general Tettau, and brigadier Palandt; and the Prince, being there in perſon, animated the ſoldiers with ſo much courage and reſolution, that being ſeconded by the continued fire, both from the cannon and mortars of ſeveral attacks, they forced their way forwards, drove the beſieged from their works, and in leſs than an hour's time lodg'd themſelves there. In this warm action, general Tettau was wounded, with about ten other officers, and 150 ſoldiers killed and wounded, together with the ingineer, who commanded in the works. The French pretend the allies had 300 men kill'd, and 200 wounded, in this action.

Q. Ann, An' 1703.

The counterſcarp taken.

The confederate troops ſhewed, upon this occaſion, ſo much bravery, and ſuch an aſtoniſhing tempeſt of artificial fire was poured in upon the beſieged, that rather than ſtand another attack, the next day, they beat a parly, and, on the 15th of May, N. S. ſurrendered the place, on honorable terms, which were ſign'd by the duke of Marlborough, and the French governor, monſieur d'Alegre (3).

The city ſurrenders.

During this ſiege, the French marſhals de Villeroy and Bouflers, who commanded in Flanders, imbracing the opportunity of the duke's being imployed there, thought to have ſurprized the confederates, who lay diſperſed about Maeſtricht, and, after having bombarded that place to have fallen upon Liege.

A deſign of meſſieurs de Villeroy and Bouflers fruſtrated.

To this end, they advanced, the 9th of May, N. S. at night, unexpectedly, into the neighborhood of Tongeren (4), with an army of about 40,000 men, part, on the one ſide, under the marſhal de Villeroy, and part, on the other, under the marſhal de Bouflers, which obliged the confederate troops, who deſign'd to poſt themſelves there, to retreat under the canon of Maeſtricht; while the enemy fell upon Tongeren, which they took after a ſtout reſiſtance of twenty-eight hours. This time gave however opportunity to the confederates to draw together before Maeſtricht; ſo that, when the enemy advanced, to attack them, they found, to their great ſurprize and diſappointment, the confederate army, under general d'Auverquerque, drawn up, in order of battle, advantageouſly poſted, and ready to ingage them, tho' much inferior in number (5). About ten, in the morning, they made a general motion of all their troops, and came nearer towards the confederates; but when they were within reach of cannon, they made a halt. In this poſture both armies ſtood gazing on one another, till three in the afternoon: but then the two marſhals, finding their attempt was to no purpoſe, and not daring to attack the confederates, march'd back, the ſame way they came, to Tongeren, leaving the whole honor of the day, to general d'Auverquerque; who, by his

(1) The marquis de Quincy pretends, that, after the taking of the fort, the allies raiſed batteries for thirty pieces of cannon, forty mortars, and one hundred hand-grenado-mortars, at the attack, at the Lower-Rhine only.

(2) French accounts pretend to a great advantage, on their ſide, in this ſally: of which the marquis de Quincy, in particular, gives the following account: "About two, in the afternoon, the marquis d'Alegre made a ſally, with 1200 men "infantry, and 400 horſe, at general Dedem's attack. They at firſt did very conſiderable damage to the works, and kill'd all "before them; but the allies having caus'd a great number of troops to advance, they retir'd in very good order, having loſt "but thirty men, a captain of the royal grenadiers, and an aid-major of the crown: monſieur de Polaſtron, colonel of that "regiment, with ſome other officers, being wounded. They nail'd up ten of the beſiegers canon, and ſix of their mortars, "kill'd fourſcore of their men, wounded 160, and took colonel Malsburg, and ſeveral other officers priſoners: in ſhort (con- "tinues my author) more than 400 rods of their works were deſtroy'd." Hiſt. Mil. de Louis le Gr. Tom. IV. p. 14.

(3) According to father Daniel's account, monſieur d'Alegre defended the place, till the town and all the works were demoliſh'd by the dreadful artillery of the confederates, and the whole circumference was no more than one continued breach.

(4) Monſieur de Quincy ſays, the two marſhals had the whole French army with them, excepting one man out of every company, and all the guards, which they left behind to ſecure their camp.

(5) The continator of Rapin, in French, pretends, however, that the confederates were, at leaſt, equal in number, to the French (that is, forty eight batalions, and 120 ſquadrons) and, for that reaſon, accuſes the marſhal de Villeroy of great imprudence in the attempt. B. XXVI. p. 521.

Q. Ann, An' 1703.

prudence, experience and valor, prevented the total ruin of this part of the confederate army.

The duke of Marlborough rejoins the confederate army.

Bonn being ſoon after taken, as I have already related, the duke of Marlborough re-joined the army of the confederates, which now conſiſted of 136 ſquadrons, and ſixty-ſix battalions, (or, as ſome accounts ſay, of but 130 of the former, and fifty-nine of the latter) and march'd them towards Liege, with a deſign not only to ſecure that place, but to oblige the enemy to decamp from Tongeren, where their army, which was computed to conſiſt of about ſeventy batalions, and one hundred ſquadrons (tho', if we will believe their accounts, they were no more, than ſixty batalions, and little more than one hundred ſquadrons) ſemeed to be poſted in a very advantageous ſituation.

The 25th of May, the duke march'd from Hocke near Maeſtricht, and, having paſs'd the river Jecker, advanced to Hautin, where the enemy deſigned to have foraged that morning; but, upon notice of the duke's approach, they removed to a greater diſtance, and continued upon their arms that night. However, the next day, when the confederates advanced to Nieudorp, they retreated, with great precipitation, to Bockworn, not daring to hazard a battle; and the duke of Berwick, after having blown up the walls and tower of Tongeren, where he commanded, quited that place likewiſe.

The French abandon Tongeren again.

Retire before the confederate army;

The duke followed them, and advanced within half a league of their camp; but the Jecker parted the two armies, and the French had ſecured all the bridges and paſſes of that river; notwithſtanding which, they were far from thinking themſelves ſecure 'till they got to Hannuye. Upon the duke's advancing to Thys and Lamyn, they did indeed drew up in order of battle, and ſent away their baggage, as if they were reſolved to try their fortune in a battle; but their courage again failed them, and they thought it their ſafeſt courſe to retire within their lines.

And ſhelter themſelves within their lines.

Reſolution to attack their intrenchments:

Thus was ſpent the beſt part of the month of June, the duke indeavoring to draw the enemy to a battle, and they as carefully avoiding it. At length, his grace, finding it was to no purpoſe to think of bringing them to an ingagement, on equal terms, took the reſolution to attack them in their intrenchments. The execution of this deſign was intruſted to general Cohorn and baron Spar, who performed it ſucceſsfully, in the country of Waes: while general Opdam (with another part of the army) ſtaid on this ſide the Scheld, in order to make an attempt on the lines before Antwerp. The French, at that time, had two flying camps, one commanded by the marquis de Bedmar, and the other, which hovered about Bruges, by the count de la Motte. The attack was undertaken in two different places: that under the command of general Cohorn, was at a place call'd Hoeck van Callo, where he made himſelf maſter of a reboubt called St. Anthony's Hoeck, and of the Pearl-fort, with little reſiſtance, and an inconſiderable loſs.

Executed by general Cohorn and baron Spar.

The other attack, commanded by baron Spar, was made near the village of Steeken. The baron perceiving, that the count de la Motte obſerved him diligently, fein'd a march towards Bruges, in order to deceive him: but, returning, march'd directly towards the lines, where a vigorious oppoſition was made, by eight battalions of regular foot, and 6000 of the country-people, who made a ſtouter defenſe than the diſciplined-troops, and by their fire, from the houſes of that village, very much gauled the confederates, after they were maſters of the lines: which obliged baron Spar to give orders, that no quarters ſhould be given them. This warm action coſt baron Spar 1200 men of his detachment, killed and wounded, ſeveral of whom were officers of note; in particular two brigadier-generals were wounded, and monſ. de Vaſſy, governor of Sas van Ghent, killed. What number of ſlain the enemy had I do not find, but about eighty of their common ſoldiers were taken priſoners. This action happen'd the 27th of June.

Q. Ann, An' 1703.

The duke's deſign was, after the forcing of the lines, to make himſelf maſter of Antwerp, which was gariſon'd by ſome Spaniſh troops, under the command of the marquis de Bedmar: and the firſt ſucceſs made every one, as well at the Hague, as in the confederate army, ſo ſanguine upon it, that it was hardly doubted but that important place would ſoon fall into the hands of the allies: but as nothing is more precarious than the events of war, they ſoon found themſelves deceived in their expectations. The grand army of the confederates, under the command of his grace, and of monſ. d'Auverquerque, was to attack the lines, on the ſide of Louvain and Mechlin; monſ. de Cohorn, with his flying camp, was on the right of the Scheld, towards Dutch-Flanders, to draw the attention of the marquis de Bedmar, on that ſide; while baron Opdam, with another detatchment of the army, of about 10 or 12,000 (ſome accounts and particularly the French ſay 15,000) men, went to incamp between Eckeren and Capelle, near Antwerp; deſigning to act, on that ſide, againſt the lines, which were guarded by the Spaniards. This deſign was excellently well concerted, and would probably have been as well executed, had it not been diſcovered by (or as the continuator of Rapin, in French ſays, betrayed to) the two French generals, who thereupon imagined there would be no other means to fruſtrate this project, but by attacking the body of troops under monſ. Opdam, and, if poſſible, cuting of his retreat. To conceal this deſign, the marſhal de Villeroy made a motion, with the army of the two crowns, and advanced towards Dieſte, upon the intelligence he had of the duke's marching towards Antwerp.

The duke of Marlborough forms a deſign on Antwerp;

Which is fruſtrated by the vigilance of the enemy.

His grace was no ſooner advis'd of this, than he held a council of war, which was unanimouſly of opinion, that the confederate camp at Eckeren, conſiſting only of thirteen battalions, and twenty-ſix ſquadrons, which were hardly cover'd on the right, and it being eaſy for the enemy, with a ſuperior force, not only to cut off their communication with Bergen-op-Zoom and Breda, but likewiſe that with Lillo, the beſt thing they could do, would be to ſend (as they did the very ſame night) their heavy baggage to Bergen-op-Zoom, and, upon the firſt intelligence they ſhould have of the motion of the enemy, to change the ſituation of their camp, and retire nearer towards Lillo: which was accordingly done, upon advice that the enemy were come out of their lines, the 30th of June, with a very conſiderable body of troops, and it was not long before the van guard of their left wing perceived them (1). Theſe motions brought on the famous battle of Eckeren: which being a very remarkable as well as a brave action, and redounding much to the honor of the allies, I ſhall give the reader a tranſlation of general Schlangenberg's letter to the States, writen the day after the battle (as we find it in Rouſſet's hiſtoire militaire, &c. tome II. p. 88.)

Reſolutions of a council of war.

Motions preceeding the battle of Eckeren.

(1) This body of troops, as it afterwards appear'd, conſiſted of thirty-three battalions, thirty-two ſquadrons, and forty-ſeven companies of grenadiers, under the command of the marquis de Bedmar, who was afterwards joined and aſſiſted by monſ. de Boufflers, and prince Tierclaes, with thirty ſquadrons, and thirty companies of grenadiers from the marſhal de Villeroys grand camp. Lediard's life of Marlborough, vol. I. p. 238.

wherein

Q. Ann, An' 1703.

wherein we have the most exact account of it I have seen.

General Schlangenberg's account of the battle of Eckeren.

High and mighty lords,

" After that, by order of your highnesses, the " army commanded by general Opdam was lessen- " ed to thirteen battalions, and twenty-six squadrons, " and that it was found good, that this small " army should march from Stabroeck towards " Eckeren, count Tilly and I represented the bad " constitution of that camp, with so small a num- " ber of troops, within three quarters of a league " of the enemy's lines, who, according to general " Cohorn's report, could assemble fifty battalions, " from Lier to Ostend, and that, beside, they " could be re-inforced from their great army; " whereas we could expect no assistance in time, " nay, not from general Cohorn. Beside, I and " count Tilly remonstrated, that the enemy, be- " ing superior in number, might always cut off " our retreat; and that we understood, that the " enemy were stronger in their lines, than we were " in our army, and that our great army had passed " the Jecker, and that of the enemy advanced as " far as Tirlemont; and beside, that we had ad- " vice, that the enemy expected more troops in " their lines. Nevertheless, we could obtain nothing " by our remonstrance, but only a resolution to " send our heavy baggage to Bergen-op-zoom. " This we did, at the same time, when monsr. de " Boufflers arrived in the French lines, with a con- " siderable body of horse and dragoons, and, as " prisoners say, with seventy companies of grena- " diers, and, without loss of time, sent all their " troops out of their lines, with the marquis of " Bedmar, Prince T'serclaes, monsr. Villeroy's son, " and many other general officers; and having " march'd, with incredible diligence, they posted an " ambuscade of their dragoons before our left, and " advanced, with the main of their army, to " Cappelle, behind our camp, before we had the " least advice of their design or march: nor had we " been informed then, before we had been incom- " pass'd, but that I, and count Tilly, with some " of our major-generals, making the tour of our " camp, met their ambuscade of dragoons, about " one o'clock, near our grand horse-guard. Having " thus discovered this ambuscade, we judged the " enemy designed to attack us, and immediately " put our troops in arms, and acquainted general " Opdam, with what we had done. One of our " guards, on the steeple of the church of Eckeren, " acquainted us, at the same time, that the enemy " came with a great body of troops, towards " Capelle, and advanced continually; upon which " general Opdam resolved to retire under Lillo, " and ordered two squadrons of dragoons to posses " themselves of the post of Houwen, to cover the " march of our army.

" While general Opdam was busy ordering " their march, we understood, that the enemy was " advanced to Houwen, and had repuls'd those " two squadrons of dragoons, whereby the road " to Lillo was stopp'd. Brigadier Schulemberg " was detach'd at first to post himself at Muisbrock, " and Getting, below Houwen to cover our re- " treat; but when he came there, he found that " post well guarded, by French dragoons and gre- " nadiers; whereupon he began to charge them; " but, they being much superior in number, he " judged a retreat necessary, and tried to seize the " port of Houteren, but he found the enemy also " possessed of that. This obliged him to draw " up at Watering, betwixt Houteren and Muis- " broek, and it was resolved to attack the French " there, and to make them retire, if possible; " but they were so advantageously posted, that it " was impracticable. On the other hand, the enemy " advanced upon us, made a vigorous charge on " the troops of Munster, and began a sharp battle, " with the foot, about three o'clock.

Q. Ann, An' 1703.

" Perceiving the enemy to be much superior in " number, we were obliged to change our de- " sign, and to indure a terrible fire of their muskets. " General Opdam, and count Tilly, who were " upon the road, with the horse, upon the dike " that goes to Willemerdonck, tried to continue " their march opposite to Houteren, along the " dikes of the Scheld, to Lillo, and, when they " arrived, found the enemy possessed of Houteren, " but were afterwards chased from thence by our " troops. Mean while the foot continued the fight, " betwixt Houwen and Eckeren, with a terrible " fire, on both sides, till eight at night, especially " about and upon the dike between Eckeren and " Willemerdonck, where lieutenant-general Fagel, " and the major-generals Friesheim and Elberfield " gave such proofs of their conduct and valor, " as cannot be enough admired. Lieutenant-gene- " ral Fagel being wounded in the head and foot, " we not being able to sustain his regiment, and the " enemy perceiving we wanted foot, took the op- " portunity to force our troops at Houteren to " retire, and posted themselves there, and at some " sluices betwixt that village and fort la Croix, " and, by that means we were incompass'd on all " sides, having the enemy's lines and Antwerp, " on our rear, and fort Philippine, and the Scheld, " on our left, which obliged me to send to general " Opdam and count Tilly, for their advice, how " to get out of that labyrinth. Word was brought " me, that general Opdam had not been seen for " some time, and count Tilly said, he believed " him either to be killed or taken.

" Upon this, we resolved to try all courses with " the utmost vigor. Count Tilly detached some ca- " valry, under general Hompesch, to sustain the foot, " who maintained a bloody fight, for a long time, " upon the dike. The French also sent horse to " sustain their foot, on this occasion. General " Hompesch, led on his horse, with so much con- " duct and courage, that he broke several French " squadrons, took some of their standards and " drums, routed several battalions of their foot, " and drove the enemy back a quarter of a league.

" Brigadier Wyke, and the other brigadiers and " colonels, having spent all their powder and lead, " ordered their men to put their bayonets on their " muskets, and pursue the enemy, and the battle " being sharp and bloody, the dike was covered " with the slain and wounded.

" I had then taken post on the key of a canal " that joined the dike, where I placed two batta- " lions, and the cavalry behind them, to maintain " that post to the last extremity, if our first troops " happened to be broke, and for the security of " the rest of the regiments, that we expected in the " night; but the enemy was so disordered, that " they had no mind to renew the fight, in that " post. They indeavored, during the heat of the " charge above-mentioned to fall upon our rear, " having, for that end, charged us with four batta- " lions from Antwerp and fort la Croix, along the " village, and another dike of Willemerdonck; " but found that post well guarded, and their men " were forced to retire, by the dreadful fire of our " troops. Night coming on, and finding our " selves still incompass'd on all sides, we were " forced to open a passage by dint of sword. The " French had seized the post of Houteren, and " several others towards the sluices, which cut off " our communication with Lillo, upon which " count Tilly, monsr. Hop, and I, resolved to at- " tack that post, with utmost vigor, and, our in- " fantry wanting powder and lead, we ordered " them

Q. Ann, An' 1703.

" them to advance with their bayonets on their " muſkets.

" Major-general Frieſheim and brigadier Dona " were detached, with four battalions, and march- " ing through a ground full of ditches, waded " up to their middle, to attack the enemy, in that " poſt, on flank and rear. We marched alſo ſome " regiments along the dike, and count Tilly ad- " vanced with ſome dragoons, and after firing ſome " cannon, on that poſt, we attack'd the enemy, " in flank, front and rear, chaſed them from Hou- " teren, took their cannon, and beat them from " the ſluices, where they were intrench'd. We " purſued them fighting, as far as fort la Croix, " which opened our paſſage along the dikes to " Lillo, where we arrived this morning, and are " now incamp'd.

" I can aſſure your highneſſes, that all your " troops, horſe, foot and dragoons, fought with " a ſurpizing valor, and that lieutenant-general " Fagel, and all the other generals, majors and " brigadiers, behaved themſelves in this dangerous " action, with admirable conduct, being only ſorry " that we have loſt ſo many brave men. There " are ſome taken priſoners, and many wounded, " of whom I cannot ſend a liſt till the next. We " have taken ſome ſtandards, drums and colors, " and my regiment has taken one piece of cannon " and a color. I hope your highneſſes will con- " ſider the ſmall number of our troops: that the " enemy was twice as ſtrong as we; that their " loſs is much greater than ours; and that almoſt " all of them retired in confuſion, and left us the " field of battle: whereas we came hither in good " order. It was my opinion, as well as count " Tilly's, and all the generals who were preſent, " that we ought never to have expoſed our ſelves in " ſuch a diſadvantageous camp; however, I hope " it will be no ſmall ſatisfaction to your high- " neſſes, and this action will certainly advance the " reputation of your troops.

" I forgot to tell you, that the count of Eaſt " Friezland, and count vander Nat, diſtinguiſhed " themſelves, on this occaſion, and that colonel " Ivois aſſiſted me with his care, valor and good " advice; ſo that, I doubt not but your high- " neſſes will conſider his merit. General " Fagel is imbarked to day, to have his wounds " better look'd after. General Cohorn came to " Lillo in the night with ſome regiments, after the " battle; but ſent them back immediately, under " major-general Dedem. All our regiments eſ- " pecially the foot, are extreamly weaken'd, ſo " that they cannot act in a body, except your " highneſſes change thoſe, that ſuffered moſt, with " others that are in gariſons. This poſt is not " ſafe, except the ſluices of fort Frederick Henry " be opened, which cannot be while we are here, " becauſe the ſalt water would occaſion diſeaſes. " Monſ. Opdam not being preſent, I have taken " upon me the general command, till I receive " your highneſſes order.

Lillo, July. 2, 1703. (1).

Q. Ann, An' 1703.

The States received the firſt account of this action by an expreſs from general Opdam, acquainting them; " That the French, near Antwerp, " having received a conſiderable re-inforcement, " from their main army, came out of their lines, " the 30th of June, N. S. and ſurrounded the " body of the confederate forces, under his com- " mand; which they had intirely routed, and that " he had eſcaped to Breda, with only thirty horſe, " and could give no farther account of thoſe " troops."

The truth was, general Opdam had the misfortune to be cut off from the reſt of his army, at the begining of the ingagement, and fled to Breda, looking upon the army as loſt: and tho' that general had ſerved his country above thirty years, without any imputation on his courage, and his being cut off from his army, was purely an accident, yet he could never afterward recover any tolerable reputation in the army (2).

Upon the arrival of general Opdam's expreſs, all the Hague was in the utmoſt confuſion: but a meſſenger diſpatch'd by monſ. Hop, the deputy of the States in that army, arriving ſoon after, with a quite different account, revived their ſpirits: and, upon the receit of general Schlangenburg's letter, the States came to a reſolution, that thanks ſhould be given to him and the whole army, for the great conduct, zeal, and courage they had ſhewn in the battle of Eckeren (3).

The

(1) According to the beſt computation, the Dutch loſt, in this ingagement, 717 men kill'd, 1003 wounded, 694 priſoners or deſerted, and 376 horſes: whereas the French had near 1600 men kill'd and wounded, beſide 150 officers: and, notwithſtanding monſ. Opdam went off in the midſt of the action, yet the other Dutch generals maintain'd the fight, with ſuch admirable preſenſe of mind, that the enemy were obliged to abandon the field of battle, and march off by night, without beat of drum or ſound of trumpet, towards their lines, The marſhal de Bouflers had, at leaſt 30,000 men under his command; the greateſt part of their choſen troops, a great many general officers, and young French lords accompanied him. The firſt to aſſiſt him and the latter to acquire glory, and ſignalize themſelves: whereas the confederate army did not exceed 10,000 men. Lediard's life of Marlborough, vol. 1. p. 248.

(2) There ſeems to be a hardſhip, in this gentleman's caſe, which deſerves compaſſion: it is certain, that he ſerved his country above thirty years, with unblemiſh'd fidelity, zeal and courage, nor does their ſeem to have been a want of either, in this laſt action, if the circumſtances he relates, in a juſtification by him publiſh'd, be true; and I never yet found they were contradicted. If he was really cut off by the enemy, and not able to regain his troops, what better courſe could he take, than to keep out of the enemy's power? If he had been ſlain or taken, one of which muſt have been the alternative, what benefit could the allies have reaped by it? What a tickliſh thing is honor, how hardly obtained, and how eaſily forfeited, in the eye of the world! That the merit of thirty years painful ſervice ſhould be ſunk in one error of judgment, by which no one was ſufferer! it is the misfortune of great men, that their actions ly open to the cenſures of the meaneſt, and are but too often judg'd of, not by their true motive, but by the ſucceſs of them. However, it was not general Opdam's fate alone to ſuffer in his reputation on account of this action. Marſhal Bouflers's conduct was juſtly cenſured, and it was thought this finiſh'd his diſgrace: nor was the duke of Marlborough without ſome ſhare of cenſure on this occaſion: for it was pretended, that he ought to have ſent a force to ſupport Opdam, or have made an attempt on Villeroy's army, when it was weakned by the detachment ſent with Bouflers. But mr. Hop, in his letter to the States, allows, that the duke of Marlborough had wrote to him, two days before the battle, to adviſe them to be upon their guard, and that his grace had reaſon to expect from theſe brave commanders, when forewarned, all that men could do, the very circumſtances of this action themſelves ſufficiently evince. Lediard's life of Marlborough, Vol. I. p. 254.

(3) The French court, to make this action appear with the luſtre of a compleat victory, did not ſcruple to affirm, that the allies were ſuperior in infantry, and advantageouſly poſted, and yet were obliged to abandon the field of battle, as alſo their wounded, tents, baggage, ſix pieces of canon, forty-four mortars (cohorn perhaps) their ammunition, proviſions, 150 artillery waggons, ſeveral colors and drums, with the loſs of 4000 men on the ſpot, and 500 taken priſoners.

F. Daniel goes yet farther, and not only poſitively avers, that the marſhal de Bouflers, and the marquis de Bedmar, defeated the army under general Opdam, but makes the loſs of the allies conſiderably greater than that of the two crowns. The confederates (ſays he) by their own confeſſion, had 1200 ſoldiers killed or wounded, eight colonels, as many lieutenant-colonels, ſix majors, ſeven and thirty captains, and 166 ſubalterns; 700 were made priſoners, ſix pieces of cannon taken, two large mortars, forty ſmall ones, all their tents, and abundance of military furniture. To all this, the marquis de Quincy adds, 300 artillery and baggage waggons, with a pretty large quantity of plate and coin. And to the priſoners he adds, madam

Q. Ann, An' 1703.

Motions of the confederate army.

The allies being willing to repair the diſadvantages they had lain under by the action at Eckeren (1) join'd all their forces together, with the intent to come to an ingagement with the marſhal de Villeroy, who, incamping near St. Job, rang'd all his forces, in order of battle, and gave out, that he reſolved to ſtay there for the duke of Marlborough. His grace, and monſieur d'Auverquerque, hoping he would be as good as his word, march'd with the army under their command, in ſeveral columns, to Hoogſtraat, within half a league of the enemy's camp, who, to all appearance, were making great preparations for a vigorous action. General Schlangenburg, decamping from Lillo, march'd all night, and arrived early in the morning, between Eckeren and Capella, to attack them, on that ſide; and the duke of Marlborough, with his army, advanc'd in a great plain, over againſt the enemy, and cauſed four pieces of cannon to be diſcharged, for a ſignal to general Schlangenburg, in order for him to begin the attack; but, as he advanced, the marſhal declined the ingagement, and, having ſet fire to his camp, order'd his army to retire within their lines; which they accordingly did with great precipitation. By this means they cover'd the city of Antwerp, which was exactly in their rear, and thereby fruſtrated the duke's deſign.

The duke of Marlborough views the French lines.

The duke failing thus in his hopes of bringing the enemy to an ingagement, being attended by ſeveral general officers, and a guard of 4000 horſe and dragoons, went, the 27th of July, to view the enemy's lines. Lieutenant Benſon, of the Engliſh royal regiment of dragoons, with about thirty Engliſh, being detach'd, fell in with one of the enemy's out-guards of forty horſe, who, after one diſcharge, retired, and were chaſed, by the Engliſh, to the very barrier of their intrenchments, which gave the confederate generals an opportunity to view them, within muſket ſhot; and from that day the duke laid a ſcheme to force them: but the execution of that project was induſtriouſly put off, from time to time, by the deputies of the States-general.

Huy beſieg'd.

The 16th of Auguſt, N. S. the count de Noyelles, with a detachment from the grand army, arrived before Huy; upon whoſe approach, the governor with his gariſon, retired into the caſtle and forts, which were inveſted, and the trenches opened the 17th and 18th. The attack againſt fort St. Joſeph was commanded by the Prince of Anhalt, and that againſt fort Picard, by colonel Frederick Hamilton. The approaches were continued with ſuch ſucceſs, and the batteries, which began to play the 21ſt, did ſuch execution, that, the next day, the gariſons of the forts, would have retired into the caſtle; but, being refuſed admittance, were obliged to come to the town, where they were ſeized and diſarmed. The batteries being then removed againſt the caſtle, and play'd with great fury, they had ſo good effect, that, the 27th, the gariſon ſurrendered at diſcretion. During this whole ſiege, the confederates had not above twenty men kill'd, and thirty-five wounded: but the loſs of the enemy was much more conſiderable.

Q. Ann, An' 1703.

And taken.

The duke of Marlborough and ſeveral generals are for forcing the lines.

Three days before, a grand council of war was held at the confederate camp, at Val Notre Dame, in which were preſent, the duke of Marlborough, the deputies of the States-general, monſieur d'Auverquerque, monſieur Schlangenburg, the lieutenant-generals, and ſeveral major-generals. The queſtion in debate was, what they ſhould next undertake, after Huy ſhould be ſurrender'd? and, the ſiege of Limburg being propoſed, the duke of Marlborough, who (as I have obſerved above) had, with great care and diligence, informed himſelf of the condition of the enemy's lines, and got the beſt intelligence he could, where they might be forc'd, with the greateſt probability of ſucceſs, was againſt the propoſal; and he, together with ſome of the other generals, gave their ſentiments rather for attacking the enemy's lines, between the Mehaigne and Leuwe, as an enterprize that would contribute much more to the glory and advantage of the arms of the high allies: being alſo of opinion, that Limburg might be attack'd, by a detachment, when the ſeaſon was more advanced.

But the Dutch oppoſe it.

The deputies of the States, and the Dutch generals, on the other hand, would by no means conſent to hazard their troops, in what they called a deſperate action, which they ſaid, was, at beſt, very dubious, and which, if attended with ſucceſs, would yield no farther advantage than to find the enemy retired into their fortified towns; whereas, on the contrary, ſhould the French get the victory, the United-provinces would remain expoſed to their incurſions. However, the arguments offered by the duke and his party were very cogent, and beſide theſe, the duke had his private reaſons, founded upon very good intelligence, which he had by his ſpies, of which, an officer who ſerved under him, has aver'd, he had no leſs than three introduced to him in one night (after the fatigue of a hard day's march) in his tent, the officer of his guard having orders to wake him when they came.

The ſiege of Limburg reſolved on.

The project of attacking the lines being thus laid aſide, the reſolution was taken to beſiege Limburg (2); and, to that end, the 5th of September, by break of day, the grand army, under the command of the duke, and with him, monſieur d'Auverquerque, march'd from the neighborhood of Huy, and pitch'd their camp at Hanuye, within about two leagues of the French grand army, which then conſiſted of ſeventy-four battalions, and 140 ſquadrons, with upwards of 120 pieces of cannon, and twenty-four mortars, all mounted on their intrenchments and lines in front. The confemadam de Tilly, who came, that day, to dine with her huſband. The French (according to both) had but 500 ſlain, and 840 wounded. The allies were purſued in their retreat, till eleven at night, and retired in confuſion under the fort of Lillo.

Theſe circumſtances are not only contradicted by general Schlangenburg's account, but by many others: monſieur Rouſſet ſays, the enemy took four pieces of cannon at firſt, but were oblig'd to abandon them again with one of their own, ſome ammunition, ſeveral pair of kettle-drums, two ſtandards of the gens d'arms, ſeveral colors, and a good number of priſoners. The army continued in the field of battle all night, under their arms, and march'd the next morning, from Houteren to Lillo, without any diſturbance or attempt from the enemy. The French King was, however, made to believe, that his troops got the victory, and cauſed Te Deum to be ſung in the cathedral church of Paris: and that upon the bare and only circumſtance of the retreat of general Opdam.

(1) The States, in the mean time, tho' their troops gain'd great honor, in this action, had the mortification to loſe the future ſervices of two brave generals by it: that of general Opdam, for the reaſons already aſſign'd; and that of general Schlangenburg, becauſe, having given offenſe to the duke of Marlborough, by being to free of his cenſure on this occaſion, they were obliged, ſoon after, to diſpenſe with his ſervice, rather than diſoblige his grace, whoſe ſervice they ſtood more in need of: thus this brave officer, who certainly behaved gallantly in this action, loſt by his tongue, the advantnge he had gained by the ſword. Lediard's life of Marlborough, Vol. I. p. 254.

(2) Limburg is a very ſtrong, tho' not large city, the capital of the duchy and territory of that name, ſituate on a rock, among ſhady woods, on the river Weſdret. It is ſixteen miles, S. E. of Aix la Chapelle, nineteen almoſt E. of Liege, forty three almoſt S.W. of Cologn, fifty-four N. of Luxemburg, and ſeventy almoſt Eaſt of Bruſſels.

Q. Ann, An' 1703.

derate army then consisted of eighty battalions, and 142 squadrons. The duke with several other generals, with a guard of forty squadrons, advanced out of the front of the camp, within almost cannon-shot of the enemy's lines, to view their situation, which put them in so great a consternation, that they expected nothing less than being immediately attack'd. But how earnestly soever his grace might desire it, his hands were tied. He, therefore returned, in the evening, to the camp.

Limburg invested.

The 6th, the army incamp'd at St. Tron, from whence, on the 8th, the duke detach'd lieutenant-general Bulau, with a body of troops towards Limburg, which place he invested the 10th, with twenty-four squadrons of horse and dragoons. The garison in the town and castle, consisted of four battalions, and they had twelve pieces of cannon and four mortars mounted (1). The 14th, the duke of Marlborough arrived to command the siege in person. Till the 25th, was imployed in making the necessary preparations for opening the trenches, and finishing the batteries, which then playing night and day, with twenty-four pieces of cannon and eight mortars, upon the upper-town, the breach was so wide by the 27th, that the confederates were preparing to give a general assault; but the French, perceiving it, beat a parly. The duke would, however, grant them no other conditions, than, "that the garison should surrender "prisoners of war; that the officers and soldiers "might keep what was their own, and that the "officers should be allowed twelve wagons to "carry their bagage, provided they delivered up "one of their gates, within half an hour after this "agreement."

The trenches opened.

The garison surrenders prisoners of war.

This being consented to by the besieged, and the garison having laid down their arms, and being march'd out, the besiegers took possession of the place (2).

Thus ended the campain in the Netherlands; which proved glorious to the allies, and particularly to the duke of Marlborough: but it might have been much more so had his grace been allow'd to pursue his own reasonable and well-grounded measures; especially as he had the superior army (3).

Affairs of Germany.

The French, and their new confederates, the Bavarians, had, the whole summer, miserably harrass'd the Emperor and the Empire. The French, on their side, took Fort-Kehl, Old-Brisac (4), and Landau, all considerable fortresses, on the Upper-Rhine, and defeated the Dutch and Germans, under the command of the Hereditary Prince of Hesse-Cassel, at the battle of Spirebach, where they surprized the German camp, while the officers were celebrating the festival of St. Leopold, in honor to the Emperor, in mirth and jollitry. And the Bavarians, on the other hand, having been joined, in the spring, by the marshal de Villars, possess'd himself (tho' not without great difficulty) of Ratisbon (5).

Q. Ann, An' 1703.

The elector of Bavaria takes possession of Ratisbon.

The Emperor having not only refused to consent to the neutrality of Ratisbon, proposed by the Elector of Bavaria, but, instead of that, required the soverein Princes, and States of Germany, to furnish their quota's, and to inable him to prevent the mischiefs that threatned the Empire; their deputies at the diet, who were, indeed, no better than the Elector of Bavaria's prisoners, insisted upon their securities, alleging, that the Imperial court's refusal was out of season, and prejudicial to the authority of the Princes and States of the Empire.

The Queen of England, and the States-general of the United-provinces, press'd, with all possible earnestness, that unweildy and lethargic body, by their ministers, to take effectual measures, to prevent the fatal consequences of the conjunction of the French and Bavarians. But when some of the deputies would have taken into present consideration, the ways and means for every circle to furnish out their shares of men, artillery, and ammunition, for the army of 120,000 men, which the diet had, the year before, resolved to set on foot for the defense of the Empire, others replied, that the consideration of these things was too late for this campain, and too soon for the next.

This supine negligence of the diet, the cause of all the succeeding distractions of the Empire, incourag'd the Elector of Bavaria, to publish a manifesto, wherein he complains, in the first place,

The Elector of Bavaria's manifesto.

"against the Emperor and his allies, accusing them "of exorbitant plundering, extorting contributions, "and burning his country, from thence insinuating, "that he took up lawful arms, in his own defense. "He denies his having had any design (as the house "of Austria gives out) of joining with France to

(1) The officer, who commanded in the place, had orders to abandon it at the approach of the allies, but first to blow up the castle. However, being surprized, he was obliged to make some defense, for his honor's sake. F. Daniel.

(2) By the taking of this place, the allies not only became intire masters of the duchy of Limburg, but secured the country of Liege, and the electorate of Cologn, from the incursions of the French; and before the conclusion of the year, they were likewise masters of the whole Spanish Guelderland, by the surrender of the city of Guelders, on the 17th of December, after it had been long blockaded and bombarded by the Prussian general Lottum, and was reduced almost to a heap of ruins. Lediard's life of Marlborough, Vol. I. p. 270.

(3) The French make it a merit in their generals, and heap applauses upon them, for having, with so much conduct, prevented the allies from making any farther conquests this campain; and pretend, notwithstanding what they had attempted at the opening of it, that they never design'd any thing more than to be on the defensive, in Flanders, that they might act with the greater vigor in Germany and Italy. De Quincy, hist. mil. de Louis le Gr. Tom. IV. p. 43.

The continuator of Rapin in French, who is very ready upon all occasions to depreciate the actions of the duke of Marlborough, will hardly allow this campain to be glorious: one might, says he, reasonably have expected something more from such a superiority of force as the intrigues of the English general, supported by the re-iterated sollicitations of the State-general had procured. Without this augmentation, he would have been in a condition to have besieged and taken the three places which fell this campains into his hand: B. xxvi. p. 525. But all this while our author conceals the real reasons why nothing more was done, the non-compliance of the Dutch with the duke's measures.

(4) This place, tho very strong before, was rendered so much the more so, by the fortifications which the famous monsr. de Vauban added during the last war, that it was rendered almost inpregnable: yet the French were masters of it in fourteen days after they opened the trenches. The Emperor, to shew his resentment, caused the count d'Arco, who was governor, to be beheaded, and the deputy-governor, count Marsigli to be degraded with dishonor: and yet (says my author) they could do no more than they did, the place not being provided with necessaries for a defence (a thing very common with the Emperor and the Empire) and beside, the French general having made a feint of besieging Friburg, they had been oblig'd to detach ten men out of every company of the garison, for the security of that place. But the Emperor was obliged to do something, to excuse his own negligence to his allies. Contin' of Rapin in French. B. xxvi. p. 526.

(5) Ratisbon is a very large, rich, and strong city of Germany, in the circle and dukedom of Bavaria; and bishopric of the same name, under the archbishop of Saltsburg; it is famous for the general diets of the Empire, which have been held there ever since the year 1662. It was formerly the capital of Bavaria, and afterwards the residence of the Franconian Emperors; but was, at length, taken from the Bavarians by Emperor Frederick I, in the year 1180, and made a free Imperial city, as it now remains. It has a very fine stone-bridge over the Dannbe, 1091 foot long, and 32 broad, supported by pillars, and adorn'd with three towers. It has, likewise, a magnificent old cathedral, and a stately castle, where the Imperial diets are generally held. The river, Regen, which falls into the Danube, on one side of it, has given it the name of Regenspurg, by which alone it is known in Germany. Lediard's life of Marlborough, Vol. I. p. 273.

"attack

Q. Ann, An' 1703.

" attack the Empire: and avers, that he left the " Netherlands, and retired to his own country, " meerly to keep himſelf out of this new war, " and to join his indeavors, with thoſe of the cir- " cles of Suabia and Franconia, firmly to eſtabliſh " the peace obtain'd by the treaty of Ryſwick. " He adds, that the miniſters of the crown of " France, having not only by memorials, but " verbally, repreſented to the diet at Ratiſbon, " and the circles of the Empire, that their maſter " was diſpoſed to keep the treaty of Ryſwick in- " violably, and the circles, in their anſwers, ex- " preſſing a like inclination, he had conformably " declar'd, on the ſide of France, and entered " into a treaty with that crown; that he wiſhed, " that the Imperial court, when they began the " war in Italy, for the ſucceſſion to the Spaniſh " Monarchy, had had the conſent of the Empire, " at leaſt of the Electoral college: as alſo, when " they declared againſt the dukes of Savoy and " Mantua, and againſt the Elector of Cologn, " whoſe only crime was, that he would not be " ſubſervient to the deſigns of the houſe of Auſtria. " That his Electoral Highneſs had cauſe ſufficient " to complain of ſuch proceedings of the Imperial " council, but ſmother'd his reſentments, out of " reſpect to the Emperor; but when the circles of " Auſtria, Suabia and Franconia, without wait- " ing for the reſolutions of the diet of the Empire, " entered into the war, and conſequently became " unqualified to give an impartial vote in the " diet, his Electoral highneſs, finding his coun- " try left naked and expoſed, his enemy grown " more formidable, and the houſe of Bavaria in " danger of being oppreſſed, he judg'd it high " time, for his own ſecurity, and for the preſer- " vation of his country, to poſſeſs himſelf of ſome " advantageous poſts, particularly Ulm and Mem- " mingen, to prevent being cruſh'd by the Monar- " chical adminiſtration, till now unheard of in the " Empire." This manifeſto was preſented to the diet at Ratiſbon, by the Bavarian miniſter, with another writing, importing; " that the Elector would " think himſelf no longer oblig'd to evacuate that " town, tho' the Emperor's ratification of the " reſolve of the diet, for a neutrality, ſhould be " ſign'd by his Imperial Majeſty; however, he " aſſur'd the public miniſters reſiding there, that " they ſhould injoy all freedom and ſecurity in the " ſaid place, with which aſſurance he hoped they " would reſt contented, and demand nothing far- " ther."

He invades Tirol.

Marſhal Villars then remain'd on the Danube, while the elector of Bavaria invaded Tirol, and poſſeſs'd himſelf of Inſpruck, and other places, with ſuch rapidity, as amazed all Germany, and very much alarmed the court of Vienna. He made his publick entry into Inſpruck, from which he demanded homage, and a monthly contribution of 120,000 florins, beſide a great quantity of ammunition and proviſions.

In the mean time, the Emperor's force was ſo broken into ſmall armies, in different places, that he had not one good any where; and in Tirol he had none at all. All that the Prince of Baden could do, was to watch the motions of the marſhal de Villars. The duke de Vendôme had orders to march from the Milaneſe to Tirol, in order to join the Elector of Bavaria, which, if he had effected, would have reduced the houſe of Auſtria to the loweſt extremity: but the boors of Tirol riſing, attack'd the Elector's forces with ſo much reſolution, that he was forced to retire out of the country, with conſiderable loſs, before the duke could join him, who was, thereupon, likewiſe obliged by the boors to return back without effecting any thing.

Q. Ann, An' 1703.

But is obliged to quit it.

The Elector, afterwards, rejoined the marſhal de Villars, and deſign'd immediately to have ſeized on Augſburg, but was prevented by Prince Lewis of Baden; however the French and Bavarians having defeated count Stirum, with a conſiderable body of Germans, near Hochſtadt, the Prince, could no longer keep that place out of the Elector's hands, who was no ſooner in poſſeſſion of it, than he delivered it up to the French (1).

He takes Augſburg.

The Elector, not long after this, turned eaſtward, took Paſſaw, march'd into Auſtria, and made himſelf maſter of Lintz, a very conſiderable city, and capital of the Upper-Auſtria. He even threatned to join Ragotzki, and the Hungarian rebels, who ravaged Auſtria, Stiria, and Moravia, and made incurſions almoſt to the very gates of Vienna, his Imperial Majeſty's ſeat and capital. To this fatal dilemma was the houſe of Auſtria at that time brought; and what would have been the end of it, if the duke of Marlborough had not come to their relief, the inſuing campain, as we ſhall ſee below, is eaſy to gueſs.

Great diſtreſs of the houſe of Auſtria.

The duke of Savoy comes into the grand alliance.

It was ſome alleviation of the loſs which the allies ſuſtained, by theſe misfortunes that befell the houſe of Auſtria, that the King of Portugal (as I have ſaid above) and the duke of Savoy, acceeded this year, to the grand alliance. The French King having ſome intimation of the latter, before hand, commanded the duke de Vendôme, to ſeize and diſarm the troops of Savoy, that were in his army. The duke of Savoy, by way of repriſal, commanded ſeveral French officers, who were in Turin, and the French embaſſador himſelf, to be put under arreſt. The duke de Vendôme was hereupon commanded, immediately to invade the frontiers of Savoy, and to tranſmit the following letter to his royal highneſs.

Sir,

" Since neither religion, honor, intereſt, alliance, " nor even your own hand-writing, are of any force " between us, I ſend my couſin, the duke de " Vendôme, at the head of my armies, to make " known to you my intentions; he will allow you " but twenty-four hours to reſolve what you have " to do. Lewis.

The duke of Savoy, however, continued firm to the allies, and publiſhed a manifeſto, ſeting forth the neceſſity and juſtice of his proceedings, and ſent expreſſes to the Emperor, and the reſt of the confederated powers, to ſollicit their aſſiſtance to inable him to weather the impending ſtorm. (2)

(1) Augſburg (the Auguſta Vindelicorum of the Ancients) is a very large, populous, and rich city, one of the moſt celebrated of Germany, and a free Imperial city, adorn'd with magnificent churches, palaces, magazines excedingly well furniſhed, and ſeveral excellent hoſpitals. It is famous for ſeveral Imperial diets held there, and particularly, in the 16th century, after the reformation in Germany by Luther. Here likewiſe, the then King of the Romans, Joſeph (afterwards Emperor) was elected and crown'd in 1689. It is ſituate at the confluence of the river Lech and Wertach, near the borders of Bavaria. Lediard's life of Marlborough, Vol. I. p. 278.

(2) The Emperor had his ſhare in theſe negociations, but England and Holland much more. The vaſt ſums which were laviſh'd away, on the duke of Savoy, certainly never came out of the Emperor's coffers. He promiſed him nothing more than the inveſtiture of Montferrat; but left him the care of geting poſſeſſion of it. It muſt have been ſomething more than promiſes, that could determine this Prince to give up 30,000 crowns a month, which he received of France and Spain, for the ſmall aid they had from him. Queen Ann made a liberal uſe of the power given her by parliament, to ſpare nothing in procuring ſuch new alliances, as ſhe might judge advantageous and neceſſary for the common cauſe: Cont. of Rapin in Fr. B. xxvi. p. 528.

The

Q. Ann, An' 1703.

The duke of Marlborough visits the King of Spain.

The duke of Marlborough, after having given the neceſſary orders for the diſpoſition of the troops, was informed, juſt as he was preparing to return to England, that the archduke Charles of Auſtria, with the title of Charles III King of Spain, was arrived at Duſſeldorp, in his way thro' Holland and England, for that kingdom; his grace, therefore, went thither, to congratulate his Majeſty, on his acceſſion to the Spaniſh throne, in the name of the Queen of Great-Britain (1). The King having had notice of the duke's coming, put on, the day he expected his viſit, a fine rich ſword, that he deſign'd to make a preſent of to his grace, which he did, in the following polite manner: while they were diſcourſing together, his Majeſty took it from his ſide, and giving it into the duke's hand, with a graceful air, My lord (ſaid he, in French) I am not aſhamed to ſay I am but a poor Prince (Je n'ai que la Cape et l' Epée) I have only my cloak and my ſword (alluding to his being a younger brother) the latter may be of uſe to your grace, and I hope you will not think it the worſe for my wearing it one day. So far from it (replied the duke) that it ſhall always put me in mind of your Majeſty's juſt right and title, and of the obligations I ly under to hazard my life, and all that's dear to me, to make you the greateſt Prince in Chriſtendon. And we ſhall find, in the ſequel, his grace was ever mindful of his promiſe, as far as in him lay. His grace accompanied his Majeſty to the Hague, where he arrived the ſecond of November, N. S. and the duke, after ſome ſtay there, to concert proper meaſures for the inſuing campain, went over to England, where he arrived the 30th of October O. S.

He makes the duke a noble preſent.

Rebellion in Hungary.

Before I return to England, it may not be improper to mention, that, as another addition to the Emperor's ill fortune, about the ſame time, the Hungarians, under the famous Prince Ragotzki, broke out into open rebellion, and, poſſeſſing themſelves of ſeveral places, advanced within two leagues of Preſburg, whither count Schlick, the Imperial general, who was ſent againſt them, was obliged to retire: and it was even reported, that count Caroli and count Berezeni, having joined their forces, to the number of 20,000 men, had march'd by Preſburg, and were advancing to beſiege Vienna, which occaſioned a general conſternation there. The 12th of December, Prince Eugene of Savoy ſat out for Preſburg, to give the neceſſary orders for the ſecurity of that place, and other frontiers, and to indeavor to bring the male-contents to an accommodation. About the ſame time, Prince Ragotzki, and his adherents, publiſh'd a manifeſto, proteſting; "That they "did not intend to withdraw themſelves from "the allegiance they owed to the Emperor, pro- "vided they might have the free injoyment of "their religion, liberties, eſtates and privileges, "and that the government of Hungary be in the "hands of the natives of that country." However, the Emperor did not ſhew any diſpoſition to grant them theſe terms.

The parliament meets.

The 9th of November, the parliament of England met, at Weſtminſter, and the Queen open'd the ſeſſion, with the following ſpeech to both houſes:

The Queen's ſpeech to both houſes.

My lords and gentlemen,

"I have call'd you together, as ſoon as I thought "you could conveniently come out of your coun- "tries, that no time might be loſt in making "our preparations for carrying on the preſent war, "in which I do not doubt of your cheerful con- "currence, ſince you cannot but be ſenſible that "on the ſucceſs of it depends our own ſafety and "happineſs, and that of all Europe.

Q. Ann, An' 1703.

"I hope I have improved the confidence you "repoſed in me laſt year, to your ſatisfaction, and "the advantage of us and our allies, by the treaty "with the King of Portugal, and the declara- "tion of the duke of Savoy, which, in great mea- "ſure, may be imputed to the cheerfulneſs with "which you ſupported me in this war, and the "aſſurance with which you truſted me in the con- "duct of it: and we cannot ſufficiently acknow- "ledge the goodneſs of Almighty God, who "is pleaſed to afford us ſo fair a proſpect, as we "now have, of bringing it to a glorious and ſpeedy "concluſion.

"I muſt therefore deſire you, gentlemen of the "houſe of commons, to grant me ſuch ſupplies "as ſhall be requiſite, to defray the neceſſary charge "of the war, in the next year, with regard not "only to all our former ingagements, but parti- "cularly to our alliance lately made with the "King of Portugal, for recovering the Monarchy "of Spain from the houſe of Bourbon, and re- "ſtoring it to the houſe of Auſtria; which treaty "being in it ſelf of the higheſt importance imagi- "nable, and requiring all poſſible diſpatch in the "execution of it, has neceſſarily occaſioned a great "expence, even in this preſent year, tho' not ſo "much as it will require, and for which, I hope, "we ſhall be amply recompenced in the next.

"The ſubſidies which will now be immediately "required, for the aſſiſtance of the duke of Savoy, "will likewiſe occaſion a farther neceſſary charge.

"I muſt take notice to you, that no particular "proviſion was made, in the laſt ſeſſion, either "for the charge of our preſent expedition to Por- "tugal, or for that of the augmentation-troops "deſired by the States-general; yet the funds given "by parliament have held out ſo well, and the "product of the prizes has proved ſo conſiderable, "that you will find the public will not be in "debt, by reaſon of either of theſe additional ſer- "vices.

"I may farther obſerve to you, that tho' the "funds for the civil government are diminiſhed "by the war, I have, in conjunction with the "States-general, contributed out of my own re- "venue towards ſome public ſervices, and parti- "cularly the ſupport of the circle of Suabia, whoſe "firm adherence to the intereſt of the allies, "under the greateſt preſſures, did very well de- "ſerve our ſeaſonable aſſiſtance. And I ſhall ſtill "be careful not to ingage myſelf in any unne- "ceſſary expence of my own, that I may have "the more to ſpare towards the eaſe of my ſub- "jects.

My lords and gentlemen,

"I heartily wiſh ſome eaſy and leſs chargeable "method could be found, for the ſpeedy and "effectual maning of the fleet.

"I muſt alſo recommend to you, to make ſome "regulation for preventing the exceſſive price of "coals: I have examined this matter, and taken "particular care to appoint convoys for that ſer- "vice: but the price has not been in the leaſt "abated, notwithſtanding a very conſiderable quan- "tity has been imported ſince that time. This "gives great ground of ſuſpicion, there may be "a combination of ſome perſons to inrich them- "ſelves, by a general oppreſſion of others, and "and particularly the poor. It will deſerve your "conſideration how to remedy this inconvenience.

"And in all your affairs, I muſt recommend

(1) The duke, among other things, told him: "he was juſt come from puting his Majeſty in poſſeſſion of Limburg;" to which the young Monarch anſwer'd: "that he hoped to be much more indebted to his grace's valor, in the reduction of other "places and territories to his obedience." Lediard's life of Marlborough, Vol. I. p. 279.

"to

Q. ANN, AN' 1703.

" to you, as much diſpatch as the nature of them " will admit. This is neceſſary to make our " preparations early; on which, in great mea- " ſure, depends the good ſucceſs of all our enter- " prizes.

" I want words to expreſs to you my earneſt de- " ſire of ſeeing all my ſubjects in perfect peace and " union among themſelves. I have nothing ſo " much at heart as their general wellfare and hap- " pineſs. Let me therefore deſire you all, that " you would carefully avoid any heats or diviſions, " which may diſappoint me of that ſatisfaction, " and give incouragement to the common enemies " of our church and ſtate".

Addreſs of the commons.

The 11th, the commons attended the Queen with an addreſs, in anſwer to her ſpeech, in which, they returned her Majeſty thanks " for ingaging the " King of Portugal, and the duke of Savoy, in " her alliance; for contributing out of her own " revenue to the public ſervice; and for her aſſiſt- " ance to the circle of Suabia: they aſſured her " that they would ſupport her Majeſty in her " alliances, and inable her to carry on the war " with vigor; and, finally, that, according to " her deſire, they would carefully avoid any heats " or diviſions, that might give incouragement " to the common enemies of the church and " ſtate."

The Queen's anſwer.

To this addreſs, the Queen anſwered; " that " ſhe was very well pleaſed with their aſſurance of " ſupporting her in the preſent war, and their " kind acknowlegements of her indeavors to bring " it to a happy concluſion: and that they might " aſſure themſelves, ſhe ſhould always purſue the " true intereſt of the kingdom, and omit nothing " that might promote the general welfare of her " people."

Addreſs of the lords.

The 12th, the lords likewiſe attended her Majeſty with an addreſs; in which, they ſaid, " they ſaw " with the greateſt ſatisfaction, the zeal with which " her Majeſty eſpouſed the public intereſt, even " beyond the obligations of her treaties: that ſhe " might depend upon ſecurity at home, in the love " of her people, and might, therefore, with the " greater ſafety and glory, ſend her fleets and " armies abroad, in defenſe of her allies.

" That the happy declaration of the duke of " Savoy, for the common intereſt, gave her Ma- " jeſty a ſeaſonable opportunity, to ſhew her com- " paſſion and concern, for thoſe Proteſtants in the " ſouth of France, who ly under the heavieſt per- " ſecution and oppreſſion.

" That they ſhould willingly pay their propor- " tion of taxes, incouraged by her royal generoſity, " for the eaſe of her people, and by the frugal " management of what was given. That her Ma- " jeſty might expect a ready compliance with all " her deſires, and aſſured her they ſhould oppoſe " whatever might tend to create any diſquiet or " diſunion among her ſubjects: that they ſhould " not be wanting in their duty to ſupport her Ma- " jeſty's honor, and her allies, not doubting but " GOD would proſper her arms, ſo glorioufly " imployed, to protect all thoſe whom the am- " bition of the French King would oppreſs."

To which her Majeſty returned the following anſwer.

My lords,

The Queen's anſwer.

" I am extreamly ſenſible of the particular con- " cern you expreſs for me, in this addreſs, and of " your great zeal for the common cauſe of Europe. " I rely very much upon the aſſurance you give me " of your duty and affection, and ſhall alwaye uſe " my beſt indeavors, to eſtabliſh the ſafety and " happineſs of the kingdom."

The 19th, mr. ſecretary Hedges laid before the commons, the copies and tranſlations of ſuch treaties as were not laid before them the laſt ſeſſion of parliament, among which was the defenſive and offenſive treaty with Portugal. Theſe treaties having been examined, in a commitee of the whole houſe, it was reſolved, the 27th, " that the 40,000 men, " which were raiſed, to act in conjunction with " the forces of the allies, and the additional troops, " conſiſting of 10,000 men, ſhould be continued " for the year 1704. That the proportion of " land-forces to act in conjunction with the forces " of Portugal, ſhould be 8000 men, conſiſting of " 1000 horſe and dragoons, and 7000 foot: and " that the ſum of 1,801,006 l. 15 s. be granted " for maintaining the ſaid forces, and the guards " and gariſons of this kingdom, the payment of " invalids, and diſcharging the ſubſidies payable " to her Majeſty's allies." The commons had, two days before, reſolved; " that 40,000 men, in- " cluding 5000 marines, be imployed for ſea ſer- " vice for the year 1704, and that a ſum of 4 l. " per man, per month, for thirteen months, be al- " lowed for maintaining the ſaid 40,000 men, " including the ordnance for ſea-ſervice."

Q. ANN, AN. 1703.

A ſupply granted.

Addreſſes of the commons.

The 30th, mr. ſecretary Hedges acquainted the houſe, that an addreſs they had made to her Majeſty, relating to the continuance of the ſtop of all correſpondence with France and Spain, having been preſented to the Queen, her Majeſty was pleaſed to anſwer; " that ſhe thought the continuance of " the ſtop of all poſts, letters, trade, and all other " correſpondence with the enemies, ſo neceſſary for " the public good, that ſhe would forthwith give " orders to her miniſter at the Hague, to inſiſt " upon it, with the States-general, as the commons " deſired." The ſame day, the commons voted an addreſs to her Majeſty, aſſuring her; " that " they would provide for the making good ſuch " alliances, as her Majeſty had made, or ſhould " make with the duke of Savoy."

A violent ſtorm of wind.

The 26th of this month was fatal to England for the moſt violent ſtorm that ever was known in this kingdom, in the memory of any man living, or recorded in hiſtory. It began between eleven and twelve at night, the wind was at W. S. W. and was attended with a roaring noiſe, like thunder at a diſtance, followed by great flaſhes of lightning, continuing with almoſt unrelenting fury, till ſeven in the morning. It blew down a multitude of chimnies, tops of houſes, and even ſome whole buildings; tore up a great number of trees in St. James's park, the inns of court, Moorfields, and other places, by the roots, and broke off others in the middle; beat down ſeveral ſpires off of ſteeples; roll'd up great quantities of lead, like ſcrowls of parchment, and blew them off of churches, halls and houſes. Several people were killed in their beds, particularly the biſhop of Bath and Wells and his lady; ſeveral others were wounded; but far more almoſt miraculouſly preſerved. A great number of veſſels, barges and boats were ſunk in the river of Thames, and the arches of London-bridge were ſtopp'd with the wrecks of them. The damage done in London and Weſtminſter was conjectured to amount to one million ſterling, and that of the city of Briſtol to little leſs than 150,000 l. It would be endleſs to enumerate the loſſes to private perſons, and more particularly at ſea; where the royal navy, which was return'd but a few days before from the Streights, and many of the ſhips not yet got into harbor, had a great ſhare in the misfortune: thirteen of her Majeſty's ſhips, viz. one ſecond-rate, four third-rates, three fourth, four fifth, and one ſixth-rate, were caſt away, and 1519 ſeamen drowned; beſide many more ſhips damaged in ſeveral parts of England and Holland. It was remarkable, however, that the northern parts of this iſland felt but little of the effects of this violent tempeſt.

Q. Ann, An' 1703.

On this melancholy occaſion, the houſe of commons unanimouſly reſolved; "that an addreſs be "preſented to her Majeſty, expreſſing the great "ſenſe the houſe had of the calamity fallen upon "the kingdom, by the late violent ſtorm; and "that they could not ſee any diminution of her "Majeſty's navy, without making proviſion to re-"pair the ſame: they therefore beſought her Ma-"jeſty, that ſhe would immediately give direction "for repairing this loſs, and for building ſuch ca-"pital ſhips as her Majeſty ſhould think fit; and "to aſſure her Majeſty, that, at their next meet-"ing, the houſe would effectually make good "that expence, and would give diſpatch in "raiſing the ſupplies alread voted, for making "good her Majeſty's treaties with the King of "Portugal, and all her Majeſty's allies, and would "conſider of effectuat ways for promoting trade, "for managing her Majeſty's navy royal, and for "incouraging ſeamen."

Addreſs of the commons on this occaſion.

A public faſt appointed.

This addreſs being preſented, accordingly, her Majeſty gave a ſuitable anſwer; and, ſoon after, ordered her royal proclamation to be iſſued, "that "a general and public faſt ſhould be obſerved, "throughout all England, on the 19th of Ja-"nuary next inſuing, to deprecate the divine ven-"geance, avert the like judgments for the future, "and obtain the heavenly bleſſing on the forces "of her Majeſty and her allies, both by ſea and "land".

The King of Spain comes to England.

We left Charles III, the new King of Spain, at the Hague, concerting matters with the States-general (1) and preparing for his voyage to England, in order to go to Liſbon, with a fleet of Engliſh and Dutch men of war, which were appointed to convoy him thither. Sir George Rooke, being nominated, by her Majeſty, to command this fleet, ſet ſail with a ſmall ſquadron for Holland, and arrived in the Maeſe the 16th of October.

The troops being imbarked the begining of November, and the King of Spain on board, the admiral ſailed; but the wind being contrary, and blowing hard, his Majeſty thought fit to go on ſhoar, the eleventh, and went, with a ſmall part of his retinue, to the Hague. While he was on ſhoar, happened the great ſtorm of wind, of which I have given an account above, and which very much retarded his Majeſty's voyage, by the damage ſome of our ſhips ſuſtained. When every thing was in a readineſs, their ſailing was, for ſome time, prevented, by fogs and calms; but, at length, the admiral got out, and joined rear-admiral Vanderduſſen, with five Dutch ſhips of war, having four fourth-rates, and one fifth of ours, with which he arrived ſafe at Spithead. There came out but thirteen tranſport-ſhips, the reſt being left behind, the admiral having her Majeſty's expreſs orders, to ſail, with the firſt fair wind, taking with him ſuch of thoſe veſſels as ſhould then be ready.

The King of Spain landed, at Portſmouth, the twenty-ſixth of December: the duke of Somerſet was ſent by the Queen, to receive him, and to bring him to an interview, which was to be at Windſor: Prince George met him on the way, and he was treated with great magnificence. The court was very ſplendid, and much throng'd; the Queen's behavior to him was very noble and obliging; the young King charmed all that were there. He had a gravity beyond his age, tempered with much modeſty. His behavior was, in all points, ſo exact, that there was not a circumſtance in his whole deportment, that was liable to cenſure. He paid an extraordinary reſpect to the Queen, and yet maintained a due greatneſs in it. He had an art of ſeeming well pleaſed with every thing, without ſo much as once ſmiling, all the while he was at court, which was only three days. He ſpoke but little, and all he ſaid was judicious and obliging. He took leave of her Majeſty, the evening before his departure, having made ſeveral preſents to ſeveral ladies attending her Majeſty's perſon, and particularly to the ducheſs of Marlborough, to whom he, in a polite manner, gave his ring from his finger, ſaid to be valued at a thouſand pound; but theſe largeſſes were ſufficiently retaliated, by the preſent, it is ſaid, her Majeſty made him of fifty-thouſand pounds. To conclude, his Majeſty approved himſelf a moſt accompliſhed Prince, to a moſt diſcerning and polite court.

Q. Ann, An' 1703.

The occaſional conformity bill again rejected.

The parliament had not ſat long, before the bill for preventing occaſional conformity, which had miſcarried in the former ſeſſion, was again ſet on foot in the houſe of commons, where it met with an eaſy paſſage, on the 7th of December: but when it came to the lords, it was rejected, at the ſecond reading, by a majority of twelve or thirteen votes. The reaſons for and againſt this bill, at this time, being much the ſame as they were in the preceeding ſeſſion, I ſhall not detain the reader by repeating them.

The 17th of December, the Queen came to the houſe of lords, and having given the royal aſſent to the land-tax-bill, made the following ſpeech to both houſes:

My lords and gentlemen,

The Queen's ſpeech concerning the Scotiſh plot.

"I think proper, upon this occaſion, to acquaint "you, that I have had unqueſtionable information "of very ill practices and deſigns carried on in "Scotland, by the emiſſaries of France, which "might have proved extreamly dangerous to the "peace of theſe kingdoms, as you will ſee by the "particulars, which ſhall be laid before you as "ſoon as the ſeveral informations relating to this "matter can be fully perfected and made pub-"lic, without prejudice. In the mean time, I "make no doubt, but by this ſeaſonable diſcovery, "I ſhall be able to give ſuch directions for our "ſecurity, as will effectually prevent any ill conſe-"quences from their pernicious deſigns.

Gentlemen of the houſe of commons,

"I am very ſenſible of your great readineſs and "affection for the public ſervice, by preſenting me "ſo early in the ſeſſion, with a conſiderable part "of your ſupplies. I depend intirely upon your "continuing, with the ſame zeal, to diſpatch the "remainder of them, that ſo we may be prepared "to give the readieſt aſſiſtance to our allies, and "to defeat the malicious deſigns of the enemy "who cannot be more induſtrious to contrive the "ruin of this kingdom, and of the Proteſtant re-"ligion, than I ſhall always be vigilant and care-"ful, both for their preſent preſervation, and for "their future ſecurity."

The grounds of this matter.

The foundation of this matter was in ſubſtance as follows: upon the refuſal of the Scots, either to ſettle the ſucceſſion in the houſe of Hanover, or to grant the neceſſary ſupplies for the ſupport of the war, as well the French King as the Pretender, entertained great hopes, that

(1) Before this Prince departed from the Hague, his Majeſty repreſented to the States-general; "That being lawful heir of "the Spaniſh monarchy, and the province of Limburg, belonging to that crown, he deſired the States would deliver up to "him the civil government thereof, as a confirmation of their owning his title, and of their real intention to perform their "ſolemn treaties." The States, and their allies, having granted his demand, his Catholic Majeſty appointed count Sinzendorff to take poſſeſſion of the town and duchy of Limburg, in his name; which he did accordingly. Boyer's reign of Queen Ann, p. 100.

the

Q. Ann, An' 1703.

the latter might be reſtored to the crown of Scotland; and, thereupon, ſome Scotiſh gentlemen, belonging to the court of St. Germains, and particularly Frazier and Keith, were appointed to go over to Scotland, and ſound the inclinations of the leading men. About the ſame time, ſir John Macclean, the head of a clan in the highlands of Scotland, coming over, with his wife, from Scotland, and landing at Folkſtone in Kent, was taken up, by the cuſtom-officers, on ſuſpicion, and afterwards brought up in cuſtody of the Queen's meſſengers to London. One Keith, nephew to the Keith I have mentioned above, was taken up at the ſame time; as was mr. Lindſey, who had been under ſecretary to King James and the Pretender. James Bouchier, who had been aid de camp to the duke of Berwick, was likewiſe taken, on the coaſt of Suſſex, coming from France: tho' they all pretended, at leaſt, that they come over, propoſing to live peaceably at home, under her Majeſty's government for the future. The lords apprehending there was a great deal more in this matter than was diſcovered, or than ſome of the miniſters deſired they ſhould be acquainted with, thought fit, the ſame day, to order the priſoners, who were then in the hands of her Majeſty's meſſengers, to be taken into the cuſtody of the black-rod, in order to be examined by a commitee of their lordſhips appointing.

The priſoners taken into the cuſtody of the black rod.

The lords appoint a ſelect commitee to examine into them.

The 18th, the lords proceeded, by balloting, to the choice of a ſelect commitee; which fell on the dukes of Devonſhire and Somerſet, the earls of Sunderland and Scarborough, and the lords Sommers, Townſhend and Wharton.

The 20th, the earl of Kingſton reported their lordſhips addreſs of thanks for the Queen's late ſpeech, which, the ſame evening, was preſented to her Majeſty, and in which, "they acknowleged "her condeſcenſion, in promiſing to communicate "to them, the informations ſhe had received of "the ill practices of her and their enemies in Scot-"land;" they added, "that they doubted not, "the zeal this houſe had ſhewn, for having the "perſons ſecured, and their deſigns brought to "light, had been very acceptable to her Majeſty; "that they relied upon her, that ſhe would give "ſuch directions, as might effectually prevent any "pernicious deſigns; that they would maintain "the rights of the crown and the church of Eng-"land, in all ſuch ways as might moſt promote the "good and happineſs of all her ſubjects:" and concluding; "that they deſired not to let their "thoughts go beyond her Majeſty's perſon, to a "future ſecurity, but as it was neceſſary for her "Majeſty's preſervation, as well as for ſettling the "minds of all her good ſubjects, who look'd on "the Proteſtant ſucceſſion, as her Majeſty's beſt "ſecurity, as well as their own".

The Queen's anſwer.

In anſwer to this addreſs, the Queen told the lords; "ſhe was very glad to find, that the com-"munication ſhe had made to the parliament had "been ſo acceptable to them: that ſhe made no "doubt of the zeal of the houſe of lords, nor "ſhould her own ever be wanting to ſecure her "people from dangers, or promote their good "and happineſs, to eſtabliſh the church of Eng-"land, and the Proteſtant ſucceſſion to all po-"ſterity".

Addreſs of the commons.

The commons, likewiſe, waited on the Queen, the ſame day, with an addreſs of thanks; in which, "they repeated their unanimous reſolutions to ſtand "by and ſupport her Majeſty, and the ſucceſſion "in the Proteſtant line, againſt all pretenders, and "all her Majeſty's enemies;" aſſured her, "that "they would diſpatch the remainder of the ſup-"plies with readineſs and zeal;" and concluded, "that they would never have the leaſt miſtruſt "of her Majeſty's vigilance and care for the pre-"ſervation of the Proteſtant intereſt in general, of "the Monarchy, and the church of England as by "law eſtabliſh'd."

Q. Ann, An' 1703.

The Queen anſwer'd, "that ſhe was very well "pleaſed with their aſſurances of diſpatching the "ſupplies, and with the other parts of their ad-"dreſs, in which they expreſs'd ſo much duty "and readineſs to ſupport, and to truſt her:" aſſuring them withal; "that they might depend "upon her willingneſs, to join her indeavors with "them, in ſecuring the Proteſtant ſucceſſion in the "Monarchy, and the church of England as by law "eſtabliſh'd."

Her Majeſty's anſwer.

When mr. St. John reported the above addreſs, on the 17th, the commons reſumed the adjourned debate of the day before, concerning a perſon who was an officer in the late King James's army, and who, having been taken into cuſtody by the governor of Berwick, was afterwards diſcharged by the earl of Nottingham's allowance, which was not only complain'd of, but ſeveral ſevere reflections were caſt upon her Majeſty. The debate laſted long; but it was, at laſt, reſolved; "that the earl of "Nottingham, one of her Majeſty's principal ſe-"cretaries of ſtate, for his great ability and dili-"gence, in the execution of his office; for his "unqueſtionable fidelity to the Queen and her "government, and for his ſteady adhering to the "church of England, as by law eſtabliſhed, had "highly merited the truſt her Majeſty had re-"poſed in him:" which reſolution, they directed their ſpeaker, to lay before her Majeſty, at the ſame time when the addreſs was preſented: and, to this, the Queen was pleaſed to ſay: "ſhe "was glad to find they were well ſatisfied with the "earl of Nottingham, who was truſted by her in ſo conſiderable a poſt".

Complaint againſt the earl of Nottingham:

The commons clear him.

The commons, who were jealous of the lords having appointed a ſelect commitee to examine the perſons ſuſpected, preſented, the 23d, another addreſs to her Majeſty, on that account; in which, "they repreſented the juſt concern they were un-"der to ſee her prerogative violated: they ſaid, "they were ſurprized to find, that when ſeveral "perſons, ſuſpected of treaſonable practices, were "taken into cuſtody by her Majeſty's meſſengers, "in order to be examined, the lords, in violation "of the known laws of the land, had wreſted them "out of her Majeſty's hands, and without her leave "and knowledge, in a moſt extraordinary manner, "taken the examination of them ſolely to themſelves; "whereby a due inquiry in the evil practices and "deſigns againſt her Majeſty's perſon and govern-"ment might be, in a great meaſure, obſtructed. "They deſired her Majeſty, that ſhe would ſuffer "no diminution of her perogative, in the exerciſe "whereof they were reſolved to ſupport her, as well "as in carrying on the war.

Addreſs of the commons againſt the lords examination into the plot.

The Queen told them, in anſwer; "She had "the ſatisfaction of finding, that the matter which "might have occaſioned this addreſs was now at "an end: that ſhe returned them many thanks for "the concern they expreſs'd for her prerogative, "and for their repeated aſſurances of making the "ſupplies effectual, which would be greatly for the "honor and advantage of the kingdom: and that "ſhe would be careful not to give way to any in-"vaſions of the prerogative of the crown, or of "the rights and liberties of the people".

The Queen's anſwer.

An' 1704.

The houſe of peers highly reſented the reflection caſt upon them by the commons in this addreſs; and therefore, to vindicate their honor, and aſſert their privileges, their lordſhips reſolved and declared, on the 12th and 13th of Januray, "that, by the "known laws and cuſtoms of parliament, they "have an undoubted right, whenever they conceive

Reſolutions of the lords;

"it

Q. Ann, An' 1704.

" it to be for the ſafety of her Majeſty and the " kingdom, to take examinations of perſons charged " with criminal matters, whether they be in cuſtody " or not; and to order, that perſons to be exa- " mined, be taken into cuſtody of her Majeſty's " ſworn officer attending their houſe". And, on the 17th, " that the ſaid addreſs of the commons is " unparliamentary, groundleſs, without precedent, " and highly injurious to the houſe of peers, tending " to interrupt the good correſpondence between the " two houſes, and create an ill opinion in her " Majeſty of the houſe of peers, and of dangerous " conſequence to the liberties of the people, the " conſtitution of the kingdom, and the privileges " of parliament". They then appointed a com-

Repreſented to the Queen.

mitee to draw up a repreſentation upon the ſaid reſolution, which being done they preſented it to her Majeſty, the next day, and received the following anſwer:

My lords,

Her Majeſty's anſwer.

" I am very ſorry for any miſunderſtandings that " happen between the two houſes of parliament, " which are ſo inconvenient for the public ſervice, " and ſo uneaſy to me, that I cannot but take no- " tice, with ſatisfaction, of the aſſurance you give " me, that you will carefully avoid all occaſion of " them. I thank you for the concern you expreſs " for the rights of the crown, and for my preroga- " tive; which I ſhall never exert ſo willingly, as " for the good of my ſubjects, and the protection " of their liberties."

The 21ſt, the Queen came to the houſe of peers, and gave the royal aſſent to an act, granting an aid to her Majeſty, " by continuing the duties " upon malt, mum, cyder and perry, for one year:" and the King of Spain having, in the mean time, put to ſea, but being forced back by a ſtorm (as I ſhall ſhew more particularly below) her Majeſty took notice of it, in the following ſpeech to both houſes.

My lords and gentlemen,

The Queen's ſpeech to both houſes.

" The misfortune of the King of Spain's being " forced back upon our coaſt, by contrary winds, " which I hope will loſe but very little time, does " yet make it ſo reaſonable, to haſten our prepa- " rations for this year's ſervice, that tho' I am " very ſenſible of your zeal in forwarding all " things relating to mine, and the public ſervice; " yet I cannot but take this occaſion to deſire " you, with all earneſtneſs, that you would give " the greateſt diſpatch to the buſineſs of this " ſeſſion ſtill depending, which is ſo neceſſary " for the good of the common intereſt."

Papers communicated to the lords.

The 29th, the earl of Nottingham, acquainted the houſe of lords: " That he was commanded " by the Queen, to lay before them the papers " which contained all the matters hitherto diſ- " covered of the conſpiracy in Scotland: but " that there was one thing which was not yet " proper to be communicated to the houſe, be- " cauſe the making it public might prevent a far- " ther diſcovery of matters of great importance: " but that their lordſhips ſhould be acquainted " with this alſo, ſo ſoon as it could be done with- " out prejudice to the public ſervice.

They addreſs for farther informations.

The lords, hereupon reſolved to addreſs her Majeſty; " That the whole matter, and all pa- " pers relating to the Scotiſh plot, might be " laid before them, with all convenient diſpatch, " that this houſe might not want an opportunity " before the end of this ſeſſion, of inquiring into, " and diſcovering the wicked deſigns and conſpi- " racies of her enemies."

The Queen's anſwer.

To this addreſs, at which the Queen ſeemed to be offended, her Majeſty anſwered; " That " having ſo lately acquainted them, that ſhe had " communicated to them all the particulars re- " lating to the deſign againſt Scotland, which " could yet be made public, without prejudice to " the ſervice, her Majeſty did not expect to be " preſs'd upon that matter, before it was ſcarcely " poſſible, that the ſtate of it could be altered: " and that her Majeſty made no doubt, but be- " fore the end of the ſeſſion, there might be a " proper time to communicate that, which could " not now be made public, without great incon- " veniency."

Q. Ann, An' 1704.

The 3d of February, the earl of Nottingham delivered to the lords ſeveral other papers, relating to the Scotiſh conſpiracy, which being ſealed up, as the former were, it was ordered, that all the ſaid papers ſhould be opened on the 8th of February, and all the lords ſummoned to attend.

Other papers communicated.

Indeavors were, in the mean time, uſed, to ſtifle the plot, and to prepoſſeſs the Queen and the public, that the whole was a contrivance of the duke of Queenſborough, her Majeſty's high-commiſſioner in Scotland, to draw ſome people into a plot: and for this purpoſe, the famous plotter and counter-plotter, Ferguſon, was a very uſeful inſtrument to the perſons ſuſpected. He came in voluntarily, and, " declared his knowledge of " this matter: he affirmed that Frazier was, in- " deed, imployed by the duke of Queenſborough " (for the uſe I have already mentioned) but that " there was, in reality, no Jacobite plot at this " time; for they were glad to ſee one of the " race of the Stuarts upon the throne; tho' " they hoped matters would be ſo compremiſed, " that the Queen might injoy the crown for life, " and that her brother might ſucceed her." Some days after this his firſt declaration, Ferguſon laid a long narrative before the Queen's privy-council, containing what he had omited in his former declaration, and what he had ſince been able to recollect, chiefly about his conferences with captain Frazier: all which ſeemed calculated either to ridicule or ſtifle the plot.

Methods uſed to ſtifle the plot.

The 8th of February, as appointed, the lords took this matter into conſideration, and in the firſt place read the papers which had been laid before them the 29th of January, the moſt material of which was intitled; " An account of " the conſpiracy in Scotland." This, with many other papers, examinations, &c. were read that day, and the next: and the 14th, the lords having " taken the ſaid papers into conſideration, order'd " the uſher of the black-rod immediately to at- " tach the body of William Keith, and keep him " in ſafe cuſtody, in order to his being examined " by the houſe, and that no perſon be allowed to " ſpeak with him." They then, after having read other papers, and debated farther thereupon, reſolved to preſent an addreſs to her Majeſty, which was reported, the next day, by the duke of Bolton, and with ſome amendments agreed to. In this addreſs, they told her Majeſty; " That " having (according to their duty, and her Ma- " jeſty's royal intention) taken into their moſt ſe- " rious conſideration, the papers laid before them, " by the earl of Nottingham, relating to the " very ill practices, and deſigns carried on in " Scotland, by emiſſaries from France; they " found mention made therein of ſeveral other " papers, not yet brought to the houſe, which " they had reaſon to believe were very material, " as well for ſeting thoſe wicked and dangerous " conſpiracies in a due light; as for forming a " right judgment upon the whole matter."

The lords take this matter into conſideration.

Addreſs of the lords.

They then enumerated ſeveral of theſe papers, which they deſired to have laid before them; made ſome apologies for this their requeſt, and told told her Majeſty, " they remained ſtill in hopes, " that, according to her Majeſty's gracious intimation, there might be a proper time, before " the end of the ſeſſion, to communicate that " matter to them, without inconvenience to the " public." They concluded, with " renewing " to her Majeſty the promiſe made in their addreſs, of the 16th of January laſt, that no dangers nor reproaches, nor artifices whatſoever, " ſhould deter or divert them, from uſing their utmoſt indeavors, from time to time, in diſcovering and oppoſing all contrivances and attempts " againſt her royal perſon and government, " and the Proteſtant ſucceſſion, as eſtabliſhed by " law.

Q. ANN, AN' 1704.

The Queen's anſwer.

To this addreſs, the Queen anſwered, " that ſhe " had ordered ſuch papers to be laid before them, " according to their deſire in this addreſs, as were " now ready, and would have been ordered them " at firſt, had ſhe imagined they would have been " expected: but ſome of the particulars being contained in letters writen to herſelf, which would " require a little time to be extracted, and others " being in the hands of the ſecretary of Scotland, " ſhe was not able to make a full anſwer to their " addreſs, but they ſhould have a more particular anſwer with all convienient ſpeed".

More papers deliver'd.

The 19th, the earl of Nottingham acquainted the lords, that her Majeſty had now ſent them all the papers deſired in their laſt addreſs, except one, which the duke of Queenſborough had left in Scotland, but was order'd to be ſent for; that there were ſome letters in giberiſh that wanted explanation; and he had lately received a letter, by the diſcovery of mr. Keith, upon which he thought it proper that Keith ſhould be examined.

Repreſentation of the commons.

The 20th, the commons addreſs'd her Majeſty, in anſwer to the repreſentation of the lords: " they " ſaid, their lordſhips thought fit to take offenſe, " at the manner and words of their addreſs, but " they had made uſe of no terms but what were " ſuitable to the occaſion, and ſuch as had been " frequently and reciprocally uſed by both houſes " to each other: and whatever expreſſions their " zeal for her Majeſty and the public might have " inſpired, they could never have offer'd to their " ſoverein ſo ungrateful a remembrance as the deſtruction of the Monarchy, by a deteſtable aſſembly, compoſed of members of both houſes, who " being alike partakers of the guilt, ought equally " to ſhare the reproach: they might with more " reaſon obſerve, that their lordſhips, not contented with prefering their own examinations " to her Majeſty's, and not content with excluding " her and the commons (to whom parliamentary " inquiries properly belong) had appropriated to " their houſe only, the name of a parliament, an " inſtance not to be parallel'd unleſs by that very " aſſembly that ſubverted the Monarchy. That " the queſtion was not, whether their lordſhips " had a power of taking into cuſtody, while under " examination, perſons accuſed of criminal matters, cognizable in parliament, but that the peers " had a right to take the priſoners of the crown, " and the examination of them, ſolely into their " own hands, without her Majeſty's conſent, and " in ſuch manner as muſt neceſſarily prove an excluſion of her Majeſty and the commons. This " the commons denied, and the lords had produced no precedent for it: that when her Majeſty communicated to the lords the Scotiſh " conſpiracy, with an exception only of ſome matters not yet proper to be made public, and with " which her Majeſty aſſured them they ſhould be " acquainted as ſoon as it could be done without " prejudice, their lordſhips, notwithſtanding this, " immediately addreſs'd her Majeſty, preſſing her to lay before them the whole matter: This could not but ſenſibly affect her faithful commons, who earneſtly deſired to ſee both houſes of parliament, and the whole body of the people, intirely agreed to pay the deference due to her Majeſty's wiſdom, to confide in her care, and maintain her honor and dignity. That the lords, not ſatisfied with aſſuming this unprecedented power, indeavored to perſuade her Majeſty of the neceſſity of it, to prevent the deſigns of ill Princes and their favorites: but as it was unreaſonable to begin to practiſe upon a good Prince ſuch methods as were pretended only needful againſt an ill one; ſo it was their opinion, that the danger might be much greater, by admiting this precedent, ſhould the lords continue to defend one another from inquiries and proſecutions. That had the lords conſulted their own journals, they would not have affirmed, that a direct appeal to the throne, without any previous conference, was an unprecedented practice: nor could they ſo ſoon forget their addreſs to her Majeſty, the laſt ſeſſion, on behalf of the biſhop of Worceſter, and their addreſs to the late King, on behalf of the four impeach'd lords. That they ſhould be careful, as far as was conſiſtent with their neceſſary juſtification, of reviving animoſities; and how great ſoever the provocation had been, her Majeſty having declared her uneaſineſs at theſe miſunderſtandings, they ſhould make no difficulty of laying aſide their reſentments, but hoped they ſhould ſtand acquited to the world and her Majeſty, ſince the zeal they had ſhewn, and the reproaches they had born, had been owing to no other cauſe but the defenſe of an excellent Queen; in whoſe hands GOD had placed the executive authority over theſe nations.

Q. ANN, AN' 1704.

The Queen's anſwer.

The Queen " thank'd them for the great concern they expreſs'd for her juſt rights; told them their diſpatch of the ſupplies was a great advantage to the public ſervice; and that ſhe was very well pleaſed with the aſſurances they gave her of their care to avoid any occaſion of difference between the two houſes, eſpecially at this time, when there is ſo apparent a neceſſity of ſtrengthning ourſelves againſt the malicious deſigns of our enemies."

The commons, ſoon after, addreſs'd her Majeſty again, " that ſhe would re-aſſume the juſt exerciſe of her prerogative, and take to herſelf the examination of the ſaid conſpiracy, and declared, that the eſtabliſhing a commitee of ſeven lords, for the ſole examination thereof, was of dangerous conſequence, and might tend to the ſubverſion of the government."

The Queen " thank'd them for their confidence in her, and ſaid ſhe would conſtantly exerciſe her juſt prerogative, for the ſecurity and ſatisfaction of her ſubjects."

Farther repreſentation of the lords,

This did not, however, hinder the lords from going on in their examinations, and, ſome time after, they preſented another repreſentation to the Queen, in relation thereunto, which was fill'd with reflections and inſinuations againſt the commons, and contain'd ſome farther juſtification of their conduct. Among other things, they took notice, " that the " commons ſtop'd the inſuing writ, for filling up " the vacancies in their houſe, whereby they ſaid, " they made themſelves an imperfect repreſentation, " which was a wound to the conſtitution, and that " there were very few things leſs excuſable in that " unhappy houſe of commons which began the rebellion, than their refuſing to fill up their body, " and compleat the repreſentation; and that an " ill Prince might take advantage of theſe preceſ dents,

Q. Ann, An' 1704.

" dents, and think himſelf juſtified in with-holding " his writs from ſome places, by as good law as " the commons could ſhew for pretending to ſtop " them from iſſuing to others "; and concluded, " expreſſing a juſt ſenſe of her Majeſty's modera- " tion, in not ſuffering herſelf to be prevailed " upon to do any thing to the prejudice of the " conſtitution, from whatever hands the invitation " came."

Her Majeſty's anſwer.

The Queen anſwer'd; " ſhe hoped none of her " ſubjects deſired to leſſen her prerogative, ſince " ſhe ſhould uſe it only for their protection and " advantage. That any miſunderſtanding between " the two houſes muſt be to the prejudice of the " public; and, therefore, ſhe ſhould not omit any " thing in her power to prevent the occaſions of " them."

The lords continued their examinations, till the 22d of March, when having taken into conſideration the report of their commitee, they came to the following reſolutions:

Reſolutions of the lords;

I. " That it appears to this houſe, that there had " been a dangerous conſpiracy carried on, for the " raiſing a rebellion in Scotland, and invading that " kingdom with a French power, in order to the " ſubverting of her Majeſty's government, both " in England and Scotland, and the bringing in " the pretended Prince of Wales.

II. " That it was the opinion of this houſe, " that nothing had given ſo much incouragement " to this conſpiracy, as that the immediate ſuc- " ceſſion of the crown of Scotland, after her pre- " ſent Majeſty, and the heirs of her body, was not " declared to be in the Princeſs Sophia, and the " heirs of her body, being Proteſtants.

III. " That the Queen would be pleaſed to uſe " her indeavors, by ſuch methods as ſhe ſhould " think moſt proper, to have the ſucceſſion of the " crown of Scotland declared to be ſettled on the " Princeſs Sophia; and to take ſuch meaſures as " might beſt conduce to the diſappointing and " fruſtrating the deſigns of her enemies, who were " ingaged in this conſpiracy againſt her Majeſty " and her government: and,

IV. " That her Majeſty be aſſured, that when " her indeavors ſhall take effect for ſettling of the " ſucceſſion, this houſe would do all in their power " to promote an intire union between the two " Kingdoms, for their mutual ſecurity and advan- " tage."

Preſented to the Queen:

The ſame day, the lord-keeper, by order of the houſe of lords, gave the thanks of that houſe, to the lords of their commitee, for their exactneſs, care and fidelity, in the examination of the Scotiſh conſpiracy: and the above reſolutions being drawn up into an addreſs, it was preſented on the 31ſt to her Majeſty, who was pleaſed to give the following anſwer:

My lords,

Her Majeſty's anſwer.

" I have ſome time ſince declared my intentions, " of indeavoring the ſettlement of the Proteſtant " ſucceſſion in Scotland, to my ſubjects of that " kingdom, as the moſt effectual means for ſecur- " ing their quiet and our own, and the readieſt " way to an intire union betwixt both kingdoms; " in the perfecting of which, it is deſirable no time " ſhould be loſt".

Difference between the two houſes in the caſe of Aſhby and White.

Theſe differences between the two houſes were not a little heighten'd, by the lords interpoſing in another affair, the cognizance of which, the commons pretended, was ſolely in them: the caſe, in ſhort, was this; " one Matthew Aſhby com- " menced and proſecuted an action, at common " law, againſt William White, mayor of Ayleſ- " bury, and the conſtables of that town, for re- " fuſing to receive his vote, at an election of bur- " geſſes to ſerve in parliament for the ſaid borough, " but, being caſt, bronght the cauſe, by a writ of " error, into the houſe of lords, who gave judg- " ment in favor of Aſhby.

Q. Ann, An' 1704.

Theſe contrary judgments, in the court of King's-bench, and the houſe of lords, were neither of them paſs'd till after great debates. In the court of King's-bench, three of the judges, viz. Powel, Gould and Powis were of opinion the action would not ly, and the lord chief juſtice Holt gave it as his, that every man had a right to ſue the returning-officer (if he had a legal vote) where his vote was refuſed. But there being three againſt one, the defendants carried their point. In the houſe of lords, the judges were ordered to give their opinions: ſir Thomas Trevor, lord chief juſtice of the common-pleas, with ſeveral others, declared it was their opinion, " that the houſe of commons only had a right to " judge of elections, and conſequently who were " the electors, nor had it ever been diſputed": others anſwered to this, " that a voter had no other " remedy, but in a court of law: for if the perſon " he would have voted for was returned, he had " no pretence to complain to the houſe of commons; " and if they could admit of ſuch a complaint, they " could give him no damages, to make him ſatiſ- " faction for the officer's denying his vote"; and their lordſhips, adhering to this latter opinion, over-rul'd the determination of the court of King's-bench.

The commons, looking upon theſe proceedings as an infringment on their privileges, after having inſpected into the journals of the houſe of lords, reſolved:

Reſolutions of the commons.

1. " That according to the known laws and " uſage of parliament, it was the ſole right of the " commons (except in caſes otherways provided " for by act of parliament) to examine and deter- " mine all matters relating to the right of election " of their own members.

2. " That neither the qualification of any elector, " nor the right of any perſon elected, is cogniz- " able or determinable elſewhere than before the " commons, except as aforeſaid.

3. " That the examining and determining the " qualification or right of any elector, or any per- " ſon elected, in any court of law, or elſewhere, " than before the commons, except as aforeſaid, " will expoſe all mayors, and other returning-officers, " to multiplicity of actions and vexatious ſuits, and " ſubject them to different and independent juriſ- " dictions, and inconſiſtent determinations.

4. " That Matthew Aſhby having brought his " actions againſt White, &c. for not receiving his " vote, was guilty of a breach of privilege.

5. " That whoever ſhall commence or proſecute " any action, indictment or information, which " ſhall bring the right of the electors or elected, " to the determination of any other juriſdiction " than the houſe of commons, except as aforeſaid, " ſuch perſons, and all attornies, ſollicitors, coun- " ſelors and ſerjeants at law, ſolliciting, pleading " or proſecuting, in any ſuch caſe, are guilty of a " high breach of the privilege of this houſe"; and theſe reſolutions were ordered to be fix'd on Weſt-minſter-hall-gate, ſigned by the clerk.

The lords, on the other hand, reſolved:

Reſolutions of the lords.

1. " That by the known laws of this kingdom, " every free-holder, or other perſon, having a " right to vote at the election of members to ſerve " in parliament, and being wilfully denied or hin- " dered ſo to do, by the officer who ought to re- " ceive the ſame, may maintain his action againſt " ſuch officer, and recover damages for the in- " jury.

2. " That the aſſerting, that a perſon having " right to give his vote at an election, and being " hinder'd ſo to do, by the officer who ought to " take

Q. ANN, AN' 1704.

" take the ſame, is without remedy for ſuch wrong, " by the ordinary courſe of law, is deſtructive of " the property of the ſubjects, againſt the freedom " of elections, and manifeſtly tends to incourage " corruption and partiality in officers, who are to " make returns to parliament, and to ſubject free- " holders and other electors, to their arbitrary will " and pleaſure.

3. " That the declaring Matthew Aſhby guilty " of a breach of privilege of the houſe of commons, " for proſecuting his action againſt the conſtables " of Ayleſbury, &c. after he had obtained a judg- " ment in parliament for recovery of his damages, " is an unprecedented attempt upon the judicature " in parliament, and is, in effect, to ſubject the law " of England to the votes of the houſe of commons.

4. " That the detering electors from proſecuting " actions, in the ordinary courſe of law, where " they are deprived of their right of voting, and " the terrifying attornies, ſollicitors, counſelors and " ſerjeants at law, from ſolliciting, proſecuting and " pleading in ſuch caſes, by voting their ſo doing " to be a breach of privilege of the houſe of com- " mons, is a manifeſt aſſuming a power to con- " troul the law, to hinder the courſe of juſtice, " and ſubject the property of Engliſhmen to the " arbitary votes of the houſe of commons".

Nor was there the beſt underſtanding at this time, between the lords and ſome of the miniſtry, the latter thinking the former ſeemed to direct the admiſtration, more than was conſiſtent with the royal prerogative, particularly on the following occaſion.

Addreſs of the lords about the navy.

The lords, having made an inquiry into the condition of the navy, found; " that by reaſon the " royal navy wanted 5 or 6000 men, the allowed " complement, for the whole number of ſhips, ne- " ceſſary for the defenſe of the kingdom, could not " be depended upon; they therefore thought it a " duty incumbent on them, to make an humble ap- " plication to her Majeſty, deſiring that ſhe would " be pleaſed to give ſpeedy and effectual orders, " that ſuch a number of ſhips, proper for the home- " ſervice, might be forthwith got ready and " man'd, as might be a competent ſecurity for the " nation, and protect our forein trade: the " Queen taking this as a reflection on the lord high " admiral, her royal conſort, or his council, gave " the following anſwer, on the ſecond of March;

Her Majeſty's anſwer.

My lords,

" I am glad you find no greater number of ſea- " men wanting, at this ſeaſon of the year, to com- " pleat the maning of the fleet; for which I hope " ſuch effectual meaſures are already taken, that " no ſervice ſhall be diſappointed either abroad or " at home, which is neceſſary for the ſecurity and " advantage of the kingdom, or the protection and " incouragement of trade."

Votes againſt admiral Graydon.

This dry anſwer did not deter the lords from carrying on their inquiries into the affairs of the navy; and, on the 17th of March, they reſolved: that vice-admiral Graydon, with a ſquadron of her Majeſty's ſhips at war under his convoy, meeting with four French ſhips, in his paſſage to the Weſt-indies, and leting them eſcape, without attacking them, according to his duty, from the pretenſe of his inſtruction, had been a prejudice to the Queen's ſervice, and a great diſhonor to the nation.

The next day, they reſolved, likewiſe, 1ſt, that admiral Graydon's diſorderly proceedings, in preſſing of men in Jamaica, and ſevere uſage of maſters of merchant men, and tranſport-veſſels, under his convoy there, had been a great diſcouragement to the inhabitants of that iſland, and prejudicial to her Majeſty's ſervice: and, 2d, that admiral Graydon having behaved himſelf ſo ill, in this expedition to the Weſt-indies, was not fit to be imploy'd any more in her Majeſty's ſervice: which reſolutions were agreed to by the houſe; and, together with ſome abuſes in victualing the navy, and other things, laid before her Majeſty, in a long addreſs. With regard to the abuſes in victualing the navy, their lordſhips laid great blame on the Prince's council, for having delay'd the execution of his royal highneſſes order, for a ſurvey of the proviſions complained of, for near three months, and thereby giving great diſcountenance to the complaint, and an opportunity of removing or changing the tainted and ſtinking proviſions complained of; which neglect, among other proofs of it, they ſay was evident, from ſeveral letters which paſs'd between mr. Hoar (one of the complainants) and mr. ſecretary Burchett; the former inſiſting, that the perſons he had deſired to be preſent would not attend at the ſurvey, unleſs they were impowered by the admiralty, and mr. Burchett acquainting him, that ſuch a power was not judged either reaſonable or proper to be given. With reſpect to the expedition into the Mediteranean, the laſt ſummer, which had raiſed ſo great an expectation in the world, and concluded with ſo little advantage to the undertaking, they told her Majeſty; it was their opinion, that the time the fleet ſailed from England, being about the middle of July, under the order ſir Cloudeſly Shovel had to return out of the Streights within the month of September, made it impoſſible to execute the main ſervices, that appeared before the commitee were required to be perform'd by his inſtructions.

Q. ANN, AN' 1704.

The 23d, they likewiſe reſolved; " that an " addreſs be preſented to her Majeſty, to remove " admiral Graydon, from all places of truſt in the " government, and that her Majeſty would be " pleaſed to order her attorney-general to proſe- " cute him at law, for the matters laid to his " charge."

The earl of Orford cleared.

The 24th, their lordſhips took into conſideration, the report of the commiſſioners of the public accounts, in relation to the earl of Orford, as late treaſurer of the navy, and reſolved; that he had made up his accounts very fairly.

The lords addreſs about the commiſſions of peace.

The 31ſt, the lords preſented an addreſs to the Queen, importing: that having taken into their " conſideration, the great alterations lately made, " in the commiſſions of the peace; they begg'd " leave to lay before her Majeſty, that it was their " opinion, that no perſon that refus'd to take the " oaths to the late King was fit to be in the com- " miſſion of the peace under her Majeſty; and " beſought her Majeſty, that ſhe would be gra- " ciouſly pleaſed, to order the ſaid commiſſions " to be reviewed, and to give directions, that no " perſon be continued, or put into the commiſſion " of the peace, but men of quality and eſtates, and " of known affection to her Majeſty's title and " government, the Proteſtant ſucceſſion, and " the church of England, as they were both eſta- " bliſh'd by law; and that ſuch be reſtored, who " were ſo qualified, and had been turned out with- " out juſt cauſe (1).

The Queen's anſwer.

To this addreſs her Majeſty anſwer'd; " that " ſhe always thought it reaſonable, that the com- " miſſioners of the peace ſhould be filled with gen- " tlemen of the beſt quality and eſtates in their " countries: and it was as fit they ſhould be of

(1) The occaſion of this addreſs was an act, impowering juſtices of the peace, to impreſs ſuch men as they ſaw fit (who were not intitled to a vote for members of parliament) for the land-ſervice; to which the houſe of peers objected, that this might be too great a power to be lodged in the hands of juſtices of the peace; eſpecially as ſuch gentlemen had of late been put in commiſſion, as were not acceptable to a majority of that houſe.

" known

Q. Ann, An' 1704.

" known loyalty and affection to the government, " to the Proteſtant ſucceſſion, and the church of " England, as eſtabliſhed by law, and ſhe would " give directions according to this rule."

Books ordered to be burnt.

Complaint having been made to the commons towards the latter end of this ſeſſion, of two book, containing ſome heterodox notions; the one aſſerting; " the mortality of the ſoul;" and the other intitled; " the grand eſſay or vindication of " reaſon and religion againſt impoſtures of Philo- " ſophy;" the houſe reſolved, that they contained diverſe doctrines and poſitions, contrary to the doctrine of the church of England, and tending to the ſubverſion of the Chriſtian religion; and ordered the ſaid books to be burnt by the common hangman.

I ſhould have mention'd before, but defer'd it to keep up a connexion of other parliamentary affairs, that on the 7th of February, mr. ſecretary Hedges delivered the following meſſage, from her Majeſty, to the houſe of commons:

Ann, R.

Her Majeſty's meſſage concerning the poorer clergy.

" Her Majeſty having taken into her ſerious " conſideration the mean and inſufficient mainte- " nance belonging to the clergy, in diverſe parts of " this kingdom, to give them ſome eaſe, has been " pleaſed to remit the arrears of the tenths to the " poor clergy: and for an augmentation to their " maintenance, her Majeſty is pleaſed to declare, " that ſhe will make a grant of her whole revenue, " ariſing out of the firſt fruits and tenths, as far as " it now is, or ſhall become free from incum- " brances, to be applied to this purpoſe: and if " the commons can find any proper method, by " which her Majeſty's good intentions to the poor " clergy may be made more effectual, it will be a " great advantage to the public, and very accept- " able to her Majeſty."

St. James's Feb. 7. 1703.

The commons, hereupon, in an humble addreſs, of the 11th of February, returned her Majeſty their moſt hearty thanks, " for her moſt gracious " meſſage, and the great and pious concern her " Majeſty had, for the increaſing the maintenance " of the poor clergy, out of her own revenue; " aſſuring her withal, that they would do their " utmoſt to make her Majeſty's charitable inten- " tio s moſt effectual." Accordingly a bill was brought in, for that purpoſe; and, on the 15th, the archbiſhop, biſhops, and clergy of the province of Canterbury, in convocation aſſembled, acknowleged the Queen's bounty, in an humble addreſs to her Majeſty, who took that opportunity again to aſſure them, " that ſhe would al- " ways continue to protect the church of Eng- " land." The lower houſe of convocation, likewiſe, return'd their ſolemn thanks to the commons, " for their readineſs to aſſiſt and farther " her Majeſty's charitable intentions, and to eſ- " pouſe the intereſt of the clergy." The 29th, the clergy of the province of York alſo addreſs'd her Majeſty on the ſame ſubject.

Acts paſs'd.

The 24th of February, the Queen came to the houſe of peers, and gave the royal aſſent to, " an " act for granting an aid to her Majeſty for car- " rying on the war, and other her Majeſty's oc- " caſions, by ſelling annuities, at ſeveral rates, " and for ſuch reſpective terms or eſtates as are " therein mention'd: an act for the increaſe of " ſeamen, and better incouragement of navigation, " and ſecurity of the coal-trade;" and to ſeveral other acts, both public and private.

The heats and animoſities between both houſes continuing, and the parliament having finiſh'd the moſt important affairs before them, the Queen came to the houſe of peers, the 3d of April, and gave the royal aſſent to twelve public and twenty-four private acts, the chief of which were; " an act " for regiſtring deeds in the weſt-riding of York- " ſhire; an act for making her Majeſty's gracious " intentions, for the augmentation of the mainte- " nance of the poor clergy, effectual, by ina- " bling her Majeſty to grant the revenues of the " firſt fruits and tenths; and alſo for inabling any " other perſons to make grants for the ſame pur- " poſe; an act for diſcharging ſuch inſolvent deb- " tors out of priſon, as ſhould ſerve, or procure " a perſon to ſerve, in her Majeſty's fleets and ar- " mies; an act for the farther explanation and re- " gulation of privilege of parliament, in relation " to perſons in public offices; an act for raiſing " recruits for the land-ſervice and mariners, " whereby three juſtices of peace were impowered " to impreſs men, as has been mention'd already, " &c."

Q. Ann, An' 1704.

This done, her Majeſty made the following ſpeech to both houſes:

My lords and gentlemen,

The Queen's ſpeech to both houſes.

" I cannot put an end to this ſeſſion, without " returning you thanks for the willingneſs which " you have expreſs'd to ſupport and aſſiſt me in " continuing the preſent war.

" And I muſt thank you, gentlemen of the " houſe of commons, very particularly, for the " great forwardneſs and zeal, which you have " ſhewn, both in the early diſpatch of the ſupplies, " and in making them ſo effectual for carrying " on the public expence, without any additional " burdens upon the country: it ſhall be my care " to improve this to the beſt advantage."

My lords and gentlemen,

" At the opening of this ſeſſion, I did earneſtly " expreſs my deſires of ſeeing you in perfect uni- " ty among yourſelves, as the moſt effectual means " imaginable to diſappoint the ambition of our " enemies, and reduce them to an honorable and " laſting peace; and tho' this has not met with " all that ſucceſs which I wiſh'd and expected; " yet, being fully convinced, that nothing is ſo " neceſſary to our common welfare, I am not " diſcouraged from perſiſting in the ſame earneſt " deſires, that you would go down into your ſe- " veral counties, ſo diſpoſed to moderation and " unity, as becomes all thoſe who are joined " together in the ſame religion and intereſt.

" This, I am perſuaded, will ſoon make you " ſenſible, that nothing, next to the bleſſing of " God, can ſo much contribute to our ſucceſs " abroad, and to our ſafety at home,".

The parliament prorogued.

The Queen having ended her ſpeech, the lord-keeper, by her Majeſty's command, prorogued the parliament, to the fourth day of July next inſuing (1).

I return now to ſome tranſactions out of parliament.

The duke of Marlborough goes to the Hague.

The States-general having repreſented to her Majeſty, by their envoy extraordinary in London, " Of how great advantage the duke of Marlbo- " rough's coming to the Hague would be, to the " confederacy, by concerting there, with them, " the meaſures proper to be taken at that junc- " ture;" and deſired her Majeſty to give his grace leave to paſs the ſeas, for a few days. Her Majeſty was therefore pleaſed, on the 2d of January, to give directions for that purpoſe. Accordingly, the 15th of the ſame month, the duke imbarked

(1) The moſt remarkable bill brought into the houſe of commons, this ſeſſion, which did not paſs, was, " for recruiting her " Majeſty's land-forces, by obliging the ſeveral pariſhes or corporations, in England, to furniſh a certain number of men:" but this being look'd upon as a copy of what is practiſed in France, and other deſpotic governments, a general diſtaſte appear'd againſt it, and it was drop'd.

on

Q. ANN, AN' 1704.

on board the Mary yacht, in the river, in order to ſail for Holland, and arrived in three days, at the Hague, where he received the compliments of all the public miniſters, the general officers, and other perſons of quality. He had ſeveral conferences with the deputies of the States-general, in which there was a ſcheme formed for the operations of the next campain. It was reſolved, that, inſtead of a fruitleſs one in the Netherlands, they would have only a ſmall army there, to ly on the defenſive, which was to be commanded by monſieur d'Auverquerque; but that, ſince the Rhine was open, by the taking of Bonn, all up to the Moſel, their main army, which was to be commanded by the duke of Marlborough, ſhould act there. More was not underſtood to be deſigned, except by thoſe few who were let into the ſecret. Upon this, all the preparations for the campain were ordered to be carried up to the Rhine, that every thing might be in a readineſs againſt the duke's return. The true ſecret was in few hands, and the French had ſo little ſcent of it, that they ſeemed to have no manner of apprehenſions tending that way. All theſe matters being ſettled, his grace left the Hague, the 11th of February, and on the 14th arrived at London.

Concerts a plan for the campain, and returns.

The order of the Thiſtle revived in Scotland.

The 31ſt of January, the Queen ſign'd a patent, in order to paſs the great ſeal of Scotland, for reviving and reſtoring there the moſt ancient and noble order of the Thiſtle (1). And the 4th of February, her Majeſty, as ſoverein thereof, received into that order his grace, John duke of Argile, as ſhe did likewiſe, the 7th, John duke of Athol, William marquis, of Anandale, James earl of Dalkeith, George earl of Orkney, and James earl of Seafield. She was alſo pleaſed to give a commiſſion to David Nairne, eſq; to be ſecretary to the ſaid order, and to confer upon him the honor of knighthood.

The play-houſes regulated.

About the ſame time, her Majeſty publiſh'd an order for the regulation of the play-houſes, prohibiting them to act any that was contrary to religion and good manners; and that no woman ſhould come into the play-houſe in a vizard-maſk; a cuſtom very common with the women of the town of that time, who wore maſks rather as a badge of their profeſſion, than to avoid being known.

Proceedings againſt the author of the Obſervator.

John Tutchin, the author of a weekly paper, called the Obſervator, noted for its low ſcurrility, having publiſh'd his remarks on occaſional conformity, a complaint was made againſt him in the houſe of commons, and, upon examination of the matter, it was reſolved, on the 3d of January; "That the Obſervator, from the 8th to the 11th "of December, 1703, contains matters ſcandalous "and malicious, reflecting upon the proceedings "of the houſe, and tending to the promoting of "ſedition in the kingdom: and that Tutchin the "author, How the printer, and Bragg the publiſher of that paper, ſhould be taken into cuſtody of the ſerjeant-at-arms attending the houſe." Tutchin, hereupon, abſconded; but, notwithſtanding the cenſure paſs'd upon him, went on in his licentious way of writing, and made very ſevere reflections upon a ſpeech ſaid to have been made by ſir John Packington, in the houſe of commons, in favor of the bill to prevent occaſional conformity. A freſh complaint being made for this ſecond offenſe, the commons reſolved, on the 14th of February: "that the author, printer, and "publiſher of the Obſervator, having broke the "privilege of the houſe, and ſince abſconded from "juſtice, an humble addreſs be preſented to her "Majeſty, that ſhe would pleaſe to iſſue her royal "proclamation for apprehending, them, promiſing "a reward for diſcovering of them:" which proclamation was publiſhed accordingly, the 24th, offering a reward of one hundred pound for Tutchin, and fifty pound each, for How and Bragg. The former was afterwards proſecuted by the attorny-general, and convicted, but there being ſome error in the proceeding, he got off unpuniſhed.

Q. ANN, AN' 1704.

The convocation ſat this winter, at the ſame time with the parliament; but the differences between the two houſes ſtill continuing, they ſcarce agreed upon any thing elſe this ſeſſion, but a repreſentation of the want of eccleſiaſtical diſcipline, and the abuſes in the ſpiritual court.

The Engliſh convocation meets to little purpoſe.

Since I have mentioned the convocation here, I ſhall juſt take notice, that the convocation in Ireland being likewiſe ſuffered to ſit this year, tranſmited an addreſs to her Majeſty, in which "they expreſs'd their gratitude for her reſtoring "them, after a long diſcontinuance, to the right "of aſſembling themſelves in a national convo-"cation, being perſuaded, that this inſtance of "her royal juſtice would be no inconſiderable ad-"dition to the glories of her Majeſty's reign:" and as nothing happen'd farther, this year in Ireland, I ſhall only obſerve, that the duke of Ormond, lord-lieutenant of that kingdom, put an end to the ſeſſion of the Iriſh parliament, on the 4th of March; when having given the royal aſſent to ſeveral public and private acts, and, of the former, in particular one, "to prevent the farther growth of "Popery," he porogued it to the 3d of October.

Addreſs of the Iriſh convocation.

Soon after the prorogation of the Engliſh parliament, ſeveral changes happened at court. The firſt and principal which was concerted, at leaſt, tho' it did not take effect till ſome time after, was the reſignation of the earl of Nottingham, one of her Majeſty's principal ſecretaries of ſtate, who was ſucceeded in that important imploy, by Robert Harley, eſq; ſpeaker of the houſe of commons (2). The conſequence, or perhaps condition of this was, that, on the 20th of April, Henry St. John, eſq; was made ſecretary of war, in the room of William Blaithwait, eſq; the 23d the earl of Kent was made lord-chamberlain, in the room of the earl of Jerſey, and Thomas Manſel, eſq; comptroller of the houſhold, in the room of ſir Edward Seymour. A few days after, his lordſhip, mr. Harley, and mr. Manſel were ſworn of the privy-council; and, on the 16th of May, mr. Harley was declared one of her Majeſty's principal ſecretaries of ſtate.

Changes at court.

While theſe changes were making, a ſeditious libel appear'd, with the title of "Legion's humble

Legion's addreſs to the lords.

(1) Some hiſtorians pretend, that this order was firſt inſtituted by Achaius, King of Scotland, after having concluded an alliance with Charlemaign: and others tell us, it was inſtituted, or at leaſt renewed, by James IV, who choſe St. Andrew for protector thereof. Be that as it will, the ſaid order was neglected, 'till the late King James revived it; but there was no creation of any knight in the reign of King William. The enſigns of the order are a green ribbon, which the knights wear, in the ſame manner as the knights of the garter wear a blue; and a ſtar, with St. Andrew's croſs. Their Motto is, Nemo me impune laceſſit. Boyer's reign of Queen Ann, p. 118.

(2) This gentleman was of an ancient family, tho' moderate fortune, quick parts, good reading, and of an aſpiring genius; who by his unwearied application to buſineſs was early taken notice of, and who, by his plain familiar behavior, flexibility, and unaffected dexterity, had gained ſuch an extenſive intereſt, as to be almoſt unanimouſly choſen ſpeaker of the two former, and of the preſent houſe of commons: add to all this that from his education among the Diſſenters, and the great ſhare he had in the ſettlement of the ſucceſſion on the houſe of Hanover, he ſeemed to be moſt agreeable to the Whig-party, whom the court now thought fit to cajole, as the moſt able and willing to ſupport the public credit: and hitherto mr. Harley had not made himſelf obnoxious to either party. Boyer's reign of Queen Ann, p. 125.

Q. Ann, An' 1704.

" addreſs to the lords" wherein the proceedings of the commons, with relation to the Ayleſbury buſineſs, and the examination of the Scotiſh plot, were arrained, in a moſt audacious manner: the firſt were taxed as " arbitrary and illegal, contrary " to the liberties of Engliſhmen, deſtructive of " the rights of elections, and an invaſion of the " judicature of the nation:" and as to the other it was ſuggeſted; that the careſſing of her Majeſty with the title of " a Queen ſiting on the throne " of her anceſtors, by right of ſucceſſion from her " father;" when, at the ſame time, they knew her right depended upon the validity of parliamentary limitation, and was built on the foot of the late revolution, and the act of ſettlement, was a barbarous treachery to the whole nation, an inſolent affront to her Majeſty, an inſinuation of the title of the pretended Prince of Wales, and a vilanous attempt to deſtroy the preſent ſettlement of ſucceſſion, and was conſequently high-treaſon, by their own act of parliament: and that to addreſs her Majeſty to extend her prerogative, and thereby to imbroil her with the privilege of the peers, was the moſt aggravated piece of treachery, that ever houſe of commons was or could be guilty of; the ſame being an affront to her Majeſty, a malicious deſign on her perſon, by perſuading her to enter on that very thing, the exorbitant practice whereof was the ruin of her father and grand-father; an unprecedented attempt upon the liberties of the people, and a medling with what they have no power or right to touch. They (the author or authors, with the aſſumed name of Million) alſo heartily acknowleged their lordſhip's zeal, courage and fidelity, both in vindicating their own undoubted rights, invaded by the houſe of commons, in their diligent care for the ſafety of her Majeſty's perſon, in ſarching after the deeply laid contrivances of her enemies in the late plot, and in their aſſerting the liberties and rights of the people of England, againſt the invaſion and uſurpation of the houſe of commons: and as they look'd upon the lords, as " the ſanctuary and ſafety of this na- " tion, ſo, in the name of the injured freeholders, " and commons of England, they aſſured their " lordſhips, in the concluſion; that they would " firmly adhere to, and faithfully defend their lord- " ſhips, in the farther purſuit of theſe juſt and glo- " rious ends."

The 25th of May, the Queen cauſed a proclamation to be publiſhed promiſing a reward of one hundred pound for the diſcovery of the author, and fifty pound for the apprehending of the printer, of this ſeditious paper: tho' I never heard that any one was puniſhed for it.

The Queen goes to Windſor.

The 31ſt the Queen, with her royal conſort, went from St. James's to Windſor, where they paſs'd moſt part of the ſummer-ſeaſon: and here we ſhall leave her Majeſty to take a view of the affairs of Scotland.

Affairs of Scotland.

The Queen having promiſed the houſe of peers, to uſe all proper methods to procure the ſettlement of the crown of Scotland on the houſe of Hanover, in the inſuing ſeſſion of the parliament of that kingdom, it was thought abſolutely neceſſary, for that end, to make ſome alterations in the miniſtry there, and ſeveral Scotiſh councils were held on that account. The marquis of Tweedale was therefore appointed her Majeſty's high commiſſioner there; the earl of Clomarty was made principal and only ſecretary of ſtate, the duke of Queenſborough being ſet aſide; mr. Alexander Weddenburn was made deputy-ſecretary, in the room of ſir David Nairne; the earl of Leven was re-inſtated governor of the caſtle of Edinburg, in the room of the earl of March; James Johnſon eſq; ſucceeded ſir James Murray of Philiphaugh, as lord-regiſter; and the earl of Glaſcow, deputy-treaſurer was removed, but no-body was named to fill his poſt.

Change in the miniſtry.

Q. Ann, An' 1704.

The parliament meeting, at Edinburg, the 6th of July, the Queen's commiſſion, appointing the marquis of Tweedale to repreſent her royal perſon, was recorded; and on the 11th, the lord high commiſſioner repreſented to them the Queen's letter, in which ſhe obſerved; " that their unhappy diffe- " rences had proceeded to ſuch a height, as had in- " couraged her enemies abroad, to imploy their " emiſſaries, in order to debauch them from their " allegiance, and render that kingdom a ſcene of " war: but ſhe was willing to hope, that none but " men, who were obnoxious to the laws, or of " mean and deſperate fortunes, had given ear to " them. She was always inclined to believe, that " the late miſtakes did not proceed from any want " of duty or reſpect to her, but only from dif- " ferent opinions, as to meaſures of gover- " ment.

The parliament meets.

The Queen's letter.

" That ſhe was reſolved, for the ſatisfaction of " her people, to grant whatever could in reaſon " be demanded for rectifying abuſes, and quieting " their minds; and, in order to this, ſhe had named " the marquis of Tweedale her commiſſioner; of " whoſe capacity and diſpoſition to ſerve his coun- " try, there could be no doubt, and ſhe had given " him authority to conſent to ſuch laws as they " ſhould think yet wanting for ſecuring their go- " vernment in church and ſtate: and having done " her part, ſhe hoped they would lay hold of this " opportunity of ſhewing the world the ſincerity " of the profeſſions they had made her.

" But the main thing ſhe recommended to them " was, their ſettling the ſucceſſion of the crown " in the Proteſtant line, as abſolutely neceſſary for " ſecuring their peace and happineſs. As to the " terms and conditions of the government, with " regard to a ſucceſſor, the commiſſioner was im- " power'd to grant whatſoever could in reaſon be " demanded, for ſecuring the ſovereinty and li- " berties of that kingdom.

" She recommended to them the providing ſup- " plies for their forces and gariſons, the diſcourag- " ing vice, and incouraging piety and trade; and " concluded, that unanimity and moderation, in " all their proceedings, would be of great uſe for " bringing to a happy iſſue, the important affairs " ſhe had laid before them."

Speeches inforcing it.

The lord-commiſſioner made a ſpeech to the ſame effect, adding only, that the whole buſineſs of the plot ſhould be laid before them, and her Majeſty doubted not but their inquiries into theſe practices ſhould end in their laying down ſolid meaſures for preventing them for the time to come.

The earl of Seafield, lord-chancellor, and the earl of Clomarty, lord-ſecretary, each of them, likewiſe, made a ſpeech to inforce what her Majeſty had inſiſted upon in her letter: the latter concluding, with this aſſertion, which (ſaid he) I think evident without diſcourſe; " that as the " union of Britain is apparently its greateſt politic " good, ſo as certainly, and by the infallible " rule of contraries, a diviſion of Britain is its " greateſt evil: and then it is a neceſſary corollary, " whoever is not for the union of Britain may be " concluded an enemy to it."

Reſolutions concerning the union and ſucceſſion.

The 13th, the parliament ſat again, and the duke of Hamilton made a ſpeech, deſiring that her Majeſty's letter might be conſidered, and likewiſe the nomination of a Proteſtant ſucceſſor; but inſiſted, at the ſame time, that commiſſioners might be named to treat previouſly with England. This overture occaſioned a great debate, on the 17th, and the earl of Rothes having preſcrib'd another reſolve, it was carried by a majority of fifty-five, that the reſolve preſented by the ſaid earl, and that that preſented by the duke of Hamilton, ſhould be jointly voted, and they were as follows:

Q. Ann, An' 1704.

Reſolved, "that the parliament will not proceed to the nomination of a ſucceſſor, unleſs we have a previous treaty with England, for regulating our commerce and other concerns with that nation:" and farther, it is reſolved; "that this parliament will proceed to make ſuch limitations and conditions of government, for the rectification of our conſtitution, as may ſecure the religion, liberty, and independency of this nation, before they proceed to the ſaid nomination." The firſt part of this reſolution was propoſed by duke Hamilton, and the other by the earl of Rothes.

Perſons and papers concerning the late plot call'd for.

The ſame day, the duke of Athol moved, that his grace, the lord-commiſſioner, would be pleaſed to write to her Majeſty, to ſend down the perſons who were witneſſes in the late plot, and all the papers relating to the ſame, that the affair might be examined to the bottom, thoſe who were unjuſtly and falſely accuſed be vindicated, and thoſe who were guilty puniſhed according to their deſerts. The lord chancellor, hereupon, declared, that his grace had written, and would write again for that purpoſe: however, they not coming ſo ſoon as was expected, the parliament drew up an addreſs to her Majeſty, on the ſame ſubject: and a majority of that aſſembly ſo much reſented the proceedings of the Engliſh lords, with regard to this affair, that a reſolve being preſented, and propoſed to be read and voted, importing: "That the addreſs of the Reſolutions againſt the Engliſh lords; "Engliſh houſe of lords to the Queen, in relation "to the nomination of their ſucceſſor to the crown "of Scotland, and their examination of the plot, "ſo far as it concerned Scotland and Scotſmen, was "an undue intermedling with our concerns, and "an incroachment upon the honor, ſovereinty "and independency of this nation; and that the "proceedings of the houſe of commons were like "thoſe of good ſubjects to the Queen, and good "neighbors to us"; when it was put to the vote, the firſt branch, with relation to the lords, paſs'd by a great majority, tho' the other, concerning the commons, was rejected.

And about the act of ſecurity.

They alſo came to the following reſolution; "that the parliament will proceed to grant two "months ſupply, for ſubſiſting her Majeſty's "forces; and, as ſoon as the act of ſecurity (now "read) has got the royal aſſent, will give four "months more", this motion being oppoſed, the earl of Roxburg preſented the following reſolution, as an expedient, viz. "that there be a firſt "reading mark'd on the act of ſecurity, and that "both this act, and that for the ſupply, be no farther proceeded upon, until his grace, her Majeſty's commiſſioner, receive inſtruments as to "the act of ſecurity; it being then free to the "parliament to proceed to the acts jointly or ſeparately, as they ſhall think fit". This reſolution was approved, and the act of ſecurity was mark'd a firſt reading. The 27th, the parliament adjourn'd to the 3d of Auguſt, in expectation, that the lord-commiſſioner would then have received her Majeſty's inſtructions on that act: and it happened as they wiſhed: for when they met, The act of ſecurity with that for a ſupply paſs. on the third, the lord-commiſſioner acquainted them, that he was impowered to paſs the act of ſecurity: accordingly both that, and the act for a ſupply paſſed, and received the royal aſſent, the 5th of Auguſt.

Tenor of the act of ſecurity.

By this act of ſecurity it was ſtatuted and ordained; "that in caſe of the death of the Queen, her heirs "or ſucceſſors, the parliament then in being ſhould "ſit; and if the parliament happen'd to be adjourned, then they ſhould aſſemble and ſit, the "20th day after ſuch death; and if there ſhould "be no parliament in being, then the members of "the preceeding parliament ſhould meet at Edinburg, the 20th day after ſuch death, and the ſaid "eſtates of parliament were impowered to adminiſter "the government: and, if the Queen ſhould leave "heirs of her body, or a ſucceſſor be appointed by "the Queen and parliament, the ſaid eſtates ſhould "tender the coronation-oath to ſuch ſucceſſor within "thirty days after their meeting; and if the ſucceſſor "ſhould be under age, then the ſaid eſtates ſhould appoint a regency until he attain'd the age of ſeventeen.

"And if her Majeſty died without iſſue of her "body, or a ſucceſſor appointed as above, the "aforeſaid eſtates were impowered to nominate "a ſucceſſor, and to ſettle the ſucceſſion of the crown "upon the heirs of ſuch ſucceſſor's body; the ſaid "ſucceſſors, and the heirs of his body, being of "the royal line of Scotland, and of the true Proteſtant religion; provided ſuch ſucceſſor be not "the ſucceſſor to the crown of England; unleſs, "during her Majeſty's reign, there ſhould be ſuch "conditions of government inacted, as might ſecure the honor and ſovereinty of this crown and "kingdom, the freedom of parliaments, the religion, liberty and trade of the nation, from Engliſh, or any forein influence.

"It was made high-treaſon to acknowlege any "perſon, King or Queen of Scotland, contrary "to the tenor of this act. Until the meeting of "the eſtates, as above, ſuch members of them, and "of the privy-council, as happen'd to be at Edinburg, were appointed to adminiſter the government: all the Proteſtant heretors and burghs "were to provide themſelves with fire-arms, for "all their ſenſible men, who were to be diſciplined, at leaſt, once every month (1).

The parliament prorogued.

The 17th of Auguſt, the lord-commiſſioner told the parliament, "that he was not allowed to give "them any more time, her Majeſty thinking a "ſhort receſs neceſſary: but that it would not be "long before they had another opportunity of do"ing what ſtill remained to be done; for no diſ"appointment her Majeſty had met with, could "alter, in the leaſt, her favorable diſpoſitions to"wards that her ancient kingdom." The parliament was hereupon prorogued to the 7th of October: and, ſoon after, ſome ſmall alterations were made in the miniſtry of Scotland, and a new commiſſion of council was ſent down to that kingdom.

Martime affairs.

I come now to maritime affairs, and ſhall begin with the new King of Spain's voyage to Liſbon, under convoy of a good part of the royal navy. Sir George Rooke convoys the King of Spain to Liſbon. We left his Catholic Majeſty departing from Windſor, to imbark at Portſmouth, and all poſſible haſte being made in fiting out the fleet, the admiral unmoored, the 4th of January: but after being advanced to about forty-ſix degrees and a half, he met with ſuch tempeſtuous weather, that the fleet, diſperſing, was obliged to make for our harbors again, and ſir George Rooke, with the ſhips with him, did not reach Spithead till the 23d.

His Majeſty went on ſhoar at Portſmouth, where he continued till the fleet was ready to ſail again, which was by the 1ſt of February; tho' contrary winds detained them till the 12th. The 25th, the ſquadron, with the tranſports, arrived in the river of Liſbon, after a fine paſſage, without the leaſt accident to ſo numerous a fleet. In ſailing up the river, the admiral, on board of whom was the King of Spain, was ſaluted by all the forts and caſtles, with a triple diſcharge of all their cannon, ſtriking their flags three ſeveral times, before they fired.

(1) By this act we ſee, the hopes the Engliſh miniſtry had conceived, before the opening of this ſeſſion, of bringing the Scots over to their meaſures, proved abortive: and it was ſaid, that it was a neceſſary piece of policy of the court, to give into this act, to prevent a rebellion, for which, the Scotiſh nation ſeem'd, at that time, pretty ripe.

of

Q. Ann, An' 1704.

His arrival.

The fleet anchored below Belem, a league ſhort of the King's palace, where mr. Methuen, the Engliſh embaſſador's ſon (his father being confined with the gout) went on board, and welcomed his Majeſty, in the name of the Queen of England, as did the duke of Cadaval, the ſame evening, in the name of his Portugueſe Majeſty. His Catholic Majeſty ſent, the ſame night, the Prince of Lichtenſtein, to return the compliment, and to condole with his Portugueſe Majeſty for the loſs of the Infanta, his eldeſt daughter, whom the King of Spain was to have married; but ſhe died a few days before his arrival.

His Catholic Majeſty's reception by the King of Portugal.

All things being ready, and the ceremonies for the reception of the King of Spain being adjuſted, the 27th, his Majeſty, on board the Royal-Catherine, admiral, with the reſt of the men of war, came up, and anchored over againſt the royal palace, the caſtles, on both ſides the river, continually firing. Between four and five, in the afternoon, the King of Portugal, accompanied by the two Princes, his eldeſt ſons, with ſeveral perſons of the firſt quality, imbarked on a very noble brigantine, rowed by forty men, clad in crimſon velvet laced with ſilver, attended by the reſt of the nobility, in barges and felucca's, and went on board the Royal-Catherine. When his Majeſty came by the ſhip's ſide, he ſtruck his flag, and when he came into the ſhip, ſir George Rooke ſtruck his flag, and let fly his ſtreamer, and ſaluted him with twenty-five guns, which was taken by the whole fleet, and anſwered from on ſhoar. His Catholic Majeſty received the King of Portugal, at the ladder-head, which upon this occaſion was made very commodious, and waited on him to his cabin, giving him the right hand, while he was in the ſhip. After a ſhort ſtay there, the two Kings went into the brigantine. When they put off, both ſhips hoiſted their flags, which had remained ſtruck while the King of Portugal was on board the admiral, and ſir George gave two ſalutes of twenty-five guns each, which was followed by the reſt of the fleet. The King of Spain had the right hand on board the brigantine, and both Kings landed under a triumphal arch, which was erected at the head of a very magnificent bridge, built for this purpoſe, and adorned with ſeveral triumphal arches, which run a good way into the river, from the palace-gate. At landing, the King of Portugal, gave his Catholic Majeſty the right, and taking him by the hand, led him along the bridge to the palace, and to the royal chapel, where Te Deum was ſung, on account of his Majeſty's ſafe arrival. I forbear a recital of the farther ceremonies, to return to the fleet.

And here, not to detain the reader with a tedious account of the cruiſings of our ſeveral ſquadrons under ſir George Rooke, ſir John Leake, ſir Cloudeſly Shovel, and ſir Stafford Fairborn, with their ſeveral ſucceſſes in taking a good number of the enemy's ſhips, I ſhall confine myſelf to the two principal naval tranſactions of this year, the taking of Gibraltar, and the ſea-fight off of Malaga, in which I ſhall be the more particular. Sir George Rooke, who, with the ſquadron under his command, after having cruiſed ſome time on the coaſt of Portugal, had been up the Streights, and, together with the Prince of Heſſe, had made a fruitleſs attempt on Barcelona, return'd down the Mediteranean. In his way, he had a ſight of the French Breſt-ſquadron, under the count de Thouloufe, who was come into the Mediteranean in order to join that of Toulon: but, they being too nimble for him, and to windward, he could not come up with them: he therefore bent his courſe towards the Streights, and join'd ſir Cloudeſly Shovel, with the ſquadron he commanded, off of Lagos. Sir George having orders from the Queen, not to attempt any thing on the coaſt, without the approbation of the Kings of Spain and Portugal, and it being their opinion, that ſomething might be attempted on the coaſt of Andaluſia, a council of war was called, the 17th of June, on board the Royal Catherine, the united fleet being then about ſeven leagues to the eaſtward of Tetuan: and the reſolution was to make a ſudden attempt on Gibraltar (1).

Q. Ann, An' 1704.

The ſiege of Gibraltar.

According to this reſolution, the fleet ſailed over from the Barbary-ſhoar, the 20th, in the night, and the 21ſt got into that bay. The ſame afternoon, at three o'clock, the marines, both Engliſh and Dutch, to the number of 1800, with the Prince of Heſſe at the head of them, were put on ſhoar, on the neck of land to the northward of the town, to cut off any communication with the country. His highneſs, having poſted his men there, ſent a ſummons to the governor to ſurrender the place for the ſervice of his Catholic Majeſty; which he rejecting with great obſtinacy, alleging, that the gariſon had taken an oath of fidelity to their natural lord King Philip V, and that, as faithful and loyal ſubjects, they would ſacrifice their lives, in defenſe of the city; the admiral gave orders, the 22d, in the morning, that the ſhips which had been appointed to cannonade the town, under the command of rear-admiral Byng, and rear-admiral Vanderduſſen, as alſo thoſe which were to batter the South-Mole-Head, commanded by captain Hicks, of the Yarmouth, ſhould range themſelves accordingly; but the wind blowing contrary, they could not poſſibly get into their places till the day was ſpent.

In the mean time, to amuſe the enemy, captain Whitaker was ſent in, with ſome boats, who burnt a French privateer of twelve guns, at the old Mole. The 23d, ſoon after break of day, the ſhips being all placed, the admiral gave the ſignal for begining the cannonade, which was performed with very great fury, above 15000 ſhot being made in five or ſix hours time, againſt the town, inſomuch that the enemy were ſoon beat from their guns, eſpecially at the South-Mole-Head.

The admiral hereupon conſidering, that by gaining this fortification, they ſhould of conſequence reduce the town, ordered captain Whitaker, with all the boats armed, to indeavor to poſſeſs himſelf of it, which was performed with great expedition; but captain Hicks and captain Jumper, who lay next the Mole, had puſhed on ſhoar with their pinaces, and ſome other boats, before the reſt could come up; whereupon the enemy ſprung a mine, that blew up the fortifications upon the Mole, killed two lieutenants, and about forty men, and wounded about ſixty: however, our men kept poſſeſſion of the great platform, which they had made themſelves maſters of, and captain Whitaker landing, with the reſt of the ſeamen, which had been ordered upon this ſervice, they advanced, and took a redoubt, or ſmall baſtion, half way between the Mole and the town, and poſſeſſed themſelves of many of the enemy's cannon. It being Sunday, all the women were at their devotion, in a little chapel, about four miles from the town; ſo that

(1) They were twelve third-rates, and four fourth-rates, with ſix ſhips of the Dutch.

Q. Ann, An' 1704.

that our men were between them and their huſbands, which was a very great inducement to the citizens, to oblige the governor to capitulate. The admiral then ſent in a letter to the governor, and, at the ſame time, a meſſage to the Prince of Heſſe, to ſend him a peremptory ſummons, which his highneſs did accordingly; and, on the 24th, in the morning, the governor deſiring to capitulate, hoſtages were exchanged. The capitulation being concluded, the Prince marched into the town, in the evening, and took poſſeſſion of the land and North-Mole gates, and the outworks (1).

The town ſurrenders.

They found the town extreamly ſtrong, with a hundred guns mounted, all facing the ſea, and the two narrow paſſes to the land; and it was well ſupplied with ammunition. But the gariſon conſiſted of about 150 men only; ſome accounts ſay leſs (2): however, in the opinion of officers, who have ſeen the works, fifty men might have defended them againſt thouſands. The attack made by the ſeamen, was brave almoſt beyond example. We had only ſixty men killed, of which were two lieutenants, and one maſter: and 216 wounded, among whom were one captain, ſeven lieutenants and a boatſwain.

The important city and fortreſs of Gibraltar being thus in the hands of the confederates, the united fleet ſtood over to the coaſt of Barbary, to water; returning from thence the 9th of Auguſt, and ſtanding out of Tetuan-bay, within ſight of the high lands of Gibraltar, the Centurion-ſcout made a ſignal of ſeing the enemy's fleet, to windward, as it appear'd their ſcouts did of ſeing ours. It was reſolved to lay to the eaſtward of Gibraltar, to receive them; but they (3) indeavoring to avoid the fight, were purſued, the 10th, and the 11th, by the report of their ſignal guns.

The enemy's fleet diſcovered.

Q. Ann, An' 1704.

The 12th, about noon, they diſcovered the enemy's fleet and gallies to the weſtward, near cape Malaga, going away large, and bore after them, in a line of battle, all that night (4).

The 13th, in the morning, they were within three leagues of the French, who then brought to, with their heads to the ſouthward, the wind being eaſterly, and, forming their line, lay in a poſture to receive them, in their diviſions. In the Engliſh line, ſir George Rooke, with the rear-admirals Byng and Dilkes were in the center; ſir Cloudeſly Shovel, and ſir John Leake, led the Van, and vice-admiral Callemberg, with rear-admiral Vanderduſſen, commanded the Dutch ſhips, in the rear (5).

The ſea-fight off of Velez-Malaga.

We have ſeveral accounts of this action, which, tho' they differ in ſome circumſtances, agree pretty well in the whole. I ſhall keep to that publiſh'd by authority, as brought by captain Trevor, commander of her Majeſty's ſhip the Triton, from ſir George Rooke, to his royal highneſs: making ſuch remarks, and additions, in the notes, as I ſhall judge proper. And this being the only general ingagement, which happened during this whole war, I ſhall be the more particular.

On Sunday, the 13th of Auguſt, in the morning, (ſays this relation) we bore down upon the enemy, in order of battle, till a little after ten o' clock, when being about half gun-ſhot from them, they ſet all their ſails, at once, and ſeemed to intend to ſtretch a-head, and weather us, ſo that our admiral was obliged to put the ſignal out, and begin the battle (6), which was continued with very

(1) Biſhop Burnet, who upon all occaſions is pretty forward in ſpeaking to the diſadvantage of ſir George Rooke, will hardly allow him any honor or merit, in the taking of this important place. "Rooke (ſays he) that he might ſeem to attempt "ſomething, fell upon Gibraltar; where he ſpent much powder, (bombarding, or rather cannonading it) to very little purpoſe, tho' there was no reaſon to hope, that he could ſucceed. Some bold men ventured to go aſhoar, in a place where it "was not thought poſſible to climb up the rocks; yet they ſucceeded in it. When they got up, they ſaw all the women of "the town were come out, according to their ſuperſtition, to a chapel there, to implore the virgin's protection. They "ſeized on them, and that contributed not a little to ingage thoſe in the town to ſurrender." Hiſt. of his own times.

The circumſtance of ſome bold men climbing up the rocks, I find mentioned by none of our hiſtorians before the biſhop; I have, however, myſelf, ſpoken with ſome, who have pretended, at leaſt, that they were of the number. Lediard's naval hiſtory, Vol. II. p. 790.

(2) Father Daniel, who is for throwing the blame of this misfortune on the Spaniards, for having ſo ſlender a gariſon, ſays: "It was an aſtoniſhing piece of negligence in Spain, to have a gariſon of but 100 men, in a place of ſuch importance."

(3) The reaſon was, becauſe they had then but few of their gallies with them, and the rendezvous of the reſt of thoſe veſſels being at Velez-Malaga, they plied up to that place where they joined them. This likewiſe gave the confederate-fleet the leiſure to ſend for half of the 1800 marines, they had left at Gibraltar.

(4) Tho' the French indeavored, at leaſt, to avoid the battle, as we have ſeen above, yet they had, in many things, the advantage over our fleet: they were ſuperior in force, having, at leaſt, ten three deck ſhips more than the confederates; all their ſhips were clean and full-man'd; they had the advantage of fighting on the coaſt, and near a harbor of their ally; and had the benefit of a large number of gallies. The confederates, on the contrary, beſides the remoteneſs of ports and ſuccour, in caſe of adverſe fortune, and the great diſadvantage of ſuch a ſuperior ſtrength againſt them, were conſcious of many defects, which the enemy could not (and happy for us they did not) ſo well know. Such as, the fleet's being thinly manned, a great deficiency of ſtores and proviſions, both naval and military; one the effect of a long voyage, the other occaſioned by the great expence of ammunition at the taking of Gibraltar; and the foulneſs of their ſhips, of infinite prejudice, in a day of battle, ſince it would hinder them both from purſuing an advantage, and from avoiding a misfortune: but notwithſtanding all theſe diſadvantages, the confederates reſolved rather to ſeek, than to ſhun, an engagement. Lediard's naval hiſtory, Vol. II. p. 793.

The continuator of Rapin, as much a friend as he is to France, is oblig'd to own, that this action ſhew'd an exceſs of bravery in the Engliſh. He allows the inferiority of their force, and the diſadvantage of their having been ſo long at ſea, as well as their having no place of refuge in caſe of misfortune: and yet (ſays he) they came off with honor. B. XXVI. p 578.

(5) The confederate fleet conſiſted together of fifty-three ſhips of the line, and eighteen ſmall craft; but the admiral ordered the Swallow and the Panther, two fourth-rates, with a fifth-rate, a ſixth-rate, and two fire-ſhips, to lay to the windward of him, that if the enemy's Van, ſhould puſh thro' our line, with their gallies and fireſhips, they might give them ſome diverſion.

The French fleet conſiſted of fifty ſhips, that might be call'd of the line, but were in general, much larger than thoſe of the Engliſh, eight frigats, nine fire-ſhips, and two flutes: and beſides theſe they had twelve French, and eleven Spaniſh gallies; in all ninety-two ſail: eleven of the gallies were placed on the ſecond line of the white and blue ſquadron, under the command of the duke of Turſis; four, under the command of the marquis de Roye, behind the count de Thoulouſe, in the center, and the other eight commanded by the marquis de Ferville, behind the marquis de Langeron, in the rear. Lediard's naval hiſtory, Vol. II. p. 791, 792.

(6) The fight was properly begun between ſir Cloudeſly Shovel, and the marquis de la Villette, the former bearing down upon the enemy, with the Van of the confederate fleet, and the latter hoping to cut him off. But admiral Shovel having diſcovered the enemy's intention, immediately clap'd upon a wind, and ſir George Rooke foreſeing what would be the conſequence, if his Van was intercepted, bore down upon them, with the reſt of the confederate fleet, and put out the ſignal for the fight, which was immediately begun by admiral Shovel. The French accounts own, that in this part of the ingagement, between the marquis de Villette, and ſir Cloudeſly Shovel, the former was obliged to bear out of the line to repair, his ſloop being blown up by a bomb, and his ſhip ſet on fire, and in danger of blowing up likewiſe; and that the ſame happened to monſieur de Belle-Iſle's ſhip, he himſelf being before kill'd.

Q. Ann, An. 1704.

great fury on both ſides; but about two in the afternoon, the enemy's Van gave way to ours, which was commanded by ſir Cloudeſly Shovel, and led by ſir John Leake; as their rear did to the Dutch, towards night. But their body being very ſtrong, and ſeveral of the ſhips of the admiral's, rear-admiral Byng's, and rear-admiral Dilkes diviſion's being forced to go out of the line, for want of ſhot, the battle fell very heavy on the admiral's own ſhip, the St. George, and the Shrewſbury (1). This want of ſhot was occaſioned by our great expence of it at Gibraltar; and tho' every ſhip was ſupplied to have twenty-five rounds, two days before the battle, which was judged ſufficient, and would have been ſo, if we could have got ſo near the enemy as the admiral intended; (tho' the French pretended it was they who indeavor'd to fight cloſe; but the Engliſh avoided it;) yet every ſhip, that was on that ſervice, wanted ammunition before night.

The enemy's Van and Rear give way.

The Engliſh want ammunition.

The battle ended with the day, when the enemy went away, by the help of their gallies, to the Leeward. In the night, the wind ſhifted to the northward, and, in the morning, to the Weſtward, which gave the enemy the wind of us. We lay by, all day, within three leagues of one another, repairing our defects, and, at night, they filed, and ſtood to the northward.

The enemy retreats.

On the 15th, in the morning, the enemy was got four or five leagues to the windward of us; but, a little before noon, we had a breeze of wind, eaſterly, with which we bore down on them, till four o'clock, in the afternoon. It being too late to ingage, we brought to, and lay by, with our heads to the northward all night (2).

On the 16, in the morning, the wind being ſtill eaſterly, hazy weather, and having no ſight of the enemy, or their ſcouts, we filed, and bore away to the weſtward, ſuppoſing they would have gone away for Cadiz, (3). But being adviſed from Gibraltar, and the coaſt of Barbary, that they did not paſs the Streights, we conclude they have been ſo ſeverely treated, as to oblige them to return to Toulon, which may prevent any attempt upon Gibraltar, this winter, the ſending any ſuccor into Cadiz, or the inſulting the coaſt of Portugal, and conſtrain them to a winter-paſſage to Weſt-France, if they intend any of their ſhips thither this year (4). We have not yet the particulars of the enemy's loſs. The marquis de Villadarias, marching with his army to beſiege Gibraltar, ſent a letter to the Prince of Heſſe, governor of that place, that the French have burnt eight of our ſhips, taken ſixteen, ſunk ſeven, and he allows the French have loſt four men of war, and one gally, and that the count de Thouloufe is wounded. During the action, we ſaw two of the enemy's gallies ſink, and many of their ſhips ſo diſabled, that they were towed off by their gallies, and we have reaſon to believe ſeveral of them periſhed; whereas there was not one of her Majeſty's ſhips loſt, and the Dutch loſt only their admiral called the Albemarl, of ſixty-four guns, which blew up by accident, the 16th, in the afternoon, after we had loſt ſight of the enemy, and had only nine men ſaved. We loſt, beſide, 695 men killed, among whom were two captains, ſir Andrew Leake, of the Grafton, and captain Cow, of the Ranelagh; and 1663 wounded, among whom were three captains, captain Mynge of the Namur, captain Baker, of the Monmouth, and captain Jumper, of the Lenox. Of the Dutch, captain Liinſlager was killed, and they had 400 men killed and wounded (5).

Q. Ann, An' 1704.

Vain glory of the Spaniards.

Loſs of men on both ſides.

Our fleet having intirely loſt ſight of the enemy, ſir George call'd a council of war, in which it was determined to repair, with the fleet, to Gibraltar; and having ſtaid eight days there to refit, and ſupplied that place with men and proviſions, he ſailed from thence the 24th of Auguſt. The 26th, being out of the Streights-mouth, he gave the neceſſary orders to ſir John Leake, and admiral Vanderduſſen, who with a ſquadron left under their command, were to protect the coaſts of Portugal, and relieve Gibraltar, if it ſhould be beſieged, as it was apprehended. He then continued his voyage, with thoſe ſhips, which were in a condition to come home; and arrived at Spithead, the 25th of September. The 29th, he waited on the Queen and Prince, at Windſor, who received him very graciouſly, and expreſſed themſelves very well ſatisfied with his conduct.

The Engliſh loſe ſight of them.

As ſir George Rooke expected, with reſpect to Gibraltar, ſo it happen'd; for, in the month of October, the French and Spaniards, under the command of the marquis de Villadarias, inveſted that

The French attempt Gibraltar, in vain.

(1) This being obſerved by ſir Cloudeſly Shovel, he like a good and valiant officer, immediately back'd aſtern, and indeavored to re-inforce the admiral. This act, both of valor and good ſea-manſhip, had two uſeful effects; firſt it drew ſeveral of the enemy's ſhips from our Center, which, was ſo hard preſs'd, by a great ſuperiority, both of ſtrength and number, and drove them at length out of the line: for after they had felt the force of this ſupply, from ſome of the ſhips of ſir Cloudeſly Shovel's diviſion, which were a-ſtern of him, they found it not ſafe to advance along his broadſide; but being clean, and better ſailers, they ſet their ſprit-ſails, and with their boats a-head towed from him, without giving him the opportunity of exchanging a ſingle broad-ſide, with them. Theſe were the vice-admiral of their white, and the rear-admiral of their white and blue, with part of their diviſions: and tho' the count de Thouloufe was ſuſtained by the beſt ſhips and commanders in the center, and aſſiſted by the greateſt officers, for quality, experience and courage, (who were placed as counſellors near him) yet he ſhared at length the like fate as his van, and about ſeven o'clock, was obliged to tow out of danger. Lediard's naval hiſtory, Vol. II. p. 794.

(2) The confederates braved the enemy to conceal their own weakneſs, for neither ſide had any great inclination, nor, indeed, were in a condition to come to a ſecond ingagement; they were, therefore, glad to loſe ſight of one another lb.

(3) They kept on their couſe towards the Spaniſh coaſt, and the confederates made uſe of the ſame opportunity to bear away to the weſtward, and ſo got into Gibraltar.

(4) Tho' both parties claimed the victory, yet, in the opinion of all impartial judges, neither had a very clear title to it. For as there was not one ſhip, either burnt, ſunk or taken, (the French gallies excepted) on either ſide, (the Dutch ſhip blew up, by accident, two days, after the fight) ſo was the loſs of men near equal on both. The Engliſh and Dutch, however, carried their point, which was to diſable the French fleet, from aſſiſting the Spaniards, in retaking Gibraltar, which, together with the vaſt diſproprotion of ſtrength, with which they ingaged the enemy, makes their advantage little leſs, than a compleat victory. Beſides, whatever they may pretend, it is certain, that the iſſue of this general ingagement deprived them of the inclination to hazard another: for, after this, they never ventured their fleet at ſea; but contented themſelves with ſending out ſquadrons to diſturb the commerce of the confederates, by attackiug their convoys: and for this fleet, in particular, it is certain it ſuffered ſo much, in this action; and went into Toulon ſo diſabled, that the ſhips could not be put into a conditon to go to ſea again in many months. Tho' the number of the ſlain and wounded on both ſides were pretty equal, yet the French, by their own account loſt many more officers, and perſons of note. They name thirty-eight perſons of note killed, among whom were monſ. de Belle-Iſle, a flag-officer, and the count de Chateau-Renaud; and 112 wounded; among whom were ſeveral perſons of diſtinction, particularly, the count de Thouloufe, commander in chief, monſ. du Caſſe, a flag-officer, the count de Relingue, a lieutenant-general, the count de Sept Ville, and the marquis de Chateau-Renaud. Lediard's naval hiſtory, Vol II. p. 795.

(5) I ſhould now, as I have hitherto done, with regard to other actions at ſea, give the enemy's account, but as they differ little or nothing from our relations, and even F. Daniel, and the Paris Gazet, allow every circumſtance of them, (except what I have above remarked) during the action, I have only to obſerve that tho' they have no farther title to a victory, than the account the reader has ſeen above (which agrees with their own) can give them, yet they laid claim to it, upon the only, and evidently falſe, pretence of our fleet having left them maſters of the place of battle, and Te Deum was ſung, on that account, in Paris, by the King's command, with as much ſolemnity, as if they had gained the moſt compleat victory.

place,

Q. ANN, AN' 1704.

place, and open'd trenches before it. However, ſir John Leake arriving there from Portugal, with a ſquadron of men of war, under his command, and throwing ſupplies into the town, from time to time, not only defeated their deſign for this year, but extreamly harraſs'd the beſiegers, and reduced them to great miſery and want.

Affairs on the continent.

Having thus given an account of our ſucceſs, this year, at ſea; I come now to the proceedings of our armies on the continent, and particularly in Germany, where ſuch glorious actions were perform'd, to the eternal honor of the Engliſh nation, that they deſerve all the notice which can poſſibly find place in a general hiſtory: but to be withal as brief, as the nature of the ſubject will allow, I ſhall confine my ſelf to the bare relation of facts, from the moſt genuine accounts I have been able to procure, refering the reader, for the confirmation of them, to the more particular relations, letters, and other documents, on which they are grounded (1).

Deplorable ſtate of the Emperor and Empire.

The affairs of the empire were (as I have already obſerved) in a very deſperate condition. The Emperor was reduced to the laſt extremities: the Elector of Bavaria was maſter of the Danube, quite down to Paſſau, and the male-contents in Hungary were making a formidable progreſs. The Emperor was not in a condition to maintain a defenſive war long on both ſides: nor was he able to make any oppoſition againſt them at all, ſhould they have once come to act in concert. Thus his affairs had a very dark appearance, and his utter ruin ſeem'd to be approaching.

Vienna was in apparent danger of being beſieged, on both ſides; and it was but in a very indifferent ſtate of defenſe. Prince Eugene, under theſe emergencies, wiſely propoſed, that the Emperor ſhould implore the protection of the Queen of Great-Britain; which being agreed to, count Wratiſlau, his Imperial Majeſty's miniſter, managed the negociation at our court. with great application and ſecrecy (2), and on the 2d of April, preſented a memorial to her Majeſty (3), importing: "that having, "at ſeveral times, repreſented to her Majeſty's "miniſters, by word of mouth, the preſſing ne- "ceſſities of the Empire, by the breaking in of a "conſiderable army of French into Bavaria; which, "together with the Inſurrection in Hungary, had "reduced the Imperial Hereditary countries "into an incredible perplexity and confuſion; ſo "that, it was to be feared, an intire re- "volution and deſolation of all Germany would "follow, if ſome ſpeedy aſſiſtance were not ap- "plied, proportionable to the great danger they "were now threatned with: he was extreamly well "ſatisfied with the zeal her Majeſty's miniſters had "for the common cauſe, and with the attention "they gave to his repreſentations; but nothing "being as yet reſolved on, tho' the ſeaſon was far "advanced; and the final reſolution, on the ſeveral "ſchemes that had been preſented, being deferr'd, "'till the arrival of the duke of Marlborough at "the Hague, this envoy thought himſelf obliged, "before his grace's departure, to do his laſt indea- "vor, by repreſenting, in writing, the danger "wherein the Emperor and empire were at pre- "ſent involv'd, that her Majeſty, out of the ſame "zeal for preſerving the liberties of Europe, "for which ſhe was ſo much fam'd, among the "Potentates in alliance with her Majeſty, would "be pleaſed to order the duke of Marlborough, "her captain-general, ſeriouſly to conſult with the "States-general, of the ſpedieſt method for aſſiſting "the empire; or, at leaſt, to conduct part of the "troops in her Majeſty's pay beyond ſea, to pre- "ſerve Germany from a total ſubverſion; it not "being juſt in it ſelf, nor any ways advantageous to "the common cauſe, that her Majeſty's troops "ſhould tarry on the frontiers of Holland; which "were not in the leaſt threatned by the enemy, and "were defended by great rivers and ſtrong places, "whilſt the empire was deſtroyed by the French "troops, by fire and ſword. In the concluſion, "count Wratiſlau ſaid, that the deſire he moſt "humbly preſented was grounded on the alliance "concluded between the Emperor, England and "Holland; purſuant to which he hoped, that her "Majeſty would give thoſe orders, which were "neceſſary for the aſſiſtance of Germany; by the "want of which, he foreſaw the miſchiefs which "would inſue to the common cauſe; eſpecially "if the orders of the States-general, to recall their "troops from the empire, ſhould take place, "in a time when France indeavor'd to ſend a "powerful aſſiſtance to their army in Bavaria".

The Emperor implores the Queen's protection.

Count Wratiſlau's memorial to the Queen.

Q. ANN' AN' 1704.

To this memorial, the Queen was pleaſed to return an anſwer, by mr. Secr. Hedges, importing, "that "the duke of Marlborough, captain-general of "her armies, had received orders from her Ma- "jeſty, to take the moſt effectual methods with the "States-general of the United-provinces, her good "allies and confederates, to ſend a ſpeedy ſuccor "to his imperial Majeſty, and the Empire, and "to preſs the States to take the neceſſary meaſures "to reſcue Germany, from the imminent danger "it was expoſed to (4)."

Her Majeſty's anſwer.

The duke of Marlborough goes for Holland.

Purſuant to her Majeſty's commands, the duke imbark'd at Harwich, the 8th of April, O. S. with his brother, general Churchill, and ſeveral other officers of note, and came the 21ſt. N. S. to the Hague. The 23d, he had a preliminary conference, with the deputies of the States, about the meaſures he thought moſt proper to be proſecuted this ſummer. The 2d of May, his grace had another long conference with the deputies of the States-general, in which he declared to them the project he had long before concerted, and of which he had only given ſome hints, to ſuch of them as he had moſt confidence in, when, at the deſire of the States, he went laſt to the Hague. He told them withal, that his marching into Germany would moſt conduce to the

(1) It may be proper to inform the reader, that I hear mean ſuch authentic and more extenſive relations, documents, and letters, as are here and there diſperſed in more voluminous hiſtories, both domeſtic and forein, and in the lives and memoirs of particular perſons; eſpecially Lediard's life of Marlborough, which contains many ſuch, never before made public.

(2) The Duke of Marlborough ſaw the neceſſity of undertaking his relief, and reſolved to uſe all poſſible indeavors, to put it in execution. When he went into Holland, as I have ſaid above, he propoſed it to the penſionary, and other perſons of the greateſt confidence: they approved of it; but it was not adviſeable to propoſe it to the States, at that time; many would not have thought their country ſafe, if their army ſhould be ſent ſo far from them: nothing could be long a ſecret, that was propoſed to ſuch an aſſembly, and the main hope of ſucceeding in this deſign lay in the ſecrecy, with which it was conducted. Therefore, under the pretext of carrying the war to the Moſel, every thing was prepared, that was neceſſary for executing the true deſign. Lediard's life of Marlborough. Vol. I. p. 285,

(3) I have thought it neceſſary to inſert this memorial at large, as it fully juſtifies our conduct (and the neceſſity of it) in this glorious campain, which, ſucceſsful as it proved, has not been free from cenſure: but of this I ſhall have occaſion to ſay more below.

(4) Either the foregoing memorial was but matter of form, or the Emperor's envoy was then unacquainted with the great project, which the duke of Marlborough had already formed to deliver the empire; and which, it is ſaid, he had communicated to three perſons in England only, viz. the Queen, the Prince of Denmark, and the lord-treaſurer; not to above two perſons more in Holland; and not to any of the Imperial-court, before he was ready to put it in execution. Lediard's life of Marlborough, Vol. I. p. 287.

advantage

Q. Ann, An' 1704.

advantage of the confederacy, and the annoyance of the common enemy, and doubted not but the States-general would readily concur with him, in the ſame opinion. After the States-general had debated this matter a whole day, the duke had, the next morning, a conference with them, and the council of ſtate, to whom he made a very lively repreſentation, of the imminent danger, which threatned the whole empire, and with that, all Europe, if an immediate check were not given to the progreſs of the French and Bavarians in Germany; adding, that, being now entire maſters of the Maeſe, and all the Spaniſh Guelderland, a ſmall number of forces were ſufficient to ſecure their frontiers. Some of the members of theſe illuſtrious bodies were apprehenſive, that, by dividing their forces, they might loſe, in one ſummer, the advantages they had gained in the two former.

The States concur in the duke's meaſures.

However, the reaſons alledg'd by the duke, and the reputation and credit he had with them, added to the influence of thoſe, with whom he had truſted his ſecret, made ſo great an impreſſion in their minds that all affairs, relating to the operations of the inſuing campaign, were happily determined and adjuſted, in this conference, after which, his grace took his leave of them, and, on the 5th of May, went in a yacht to Utrecht (1).

The duke of Marlborough's march into Germany.

The next day, the duke's coaches met him at Utrecht, with which he proceeded to Ruremond, where he arrived the 8th, and, the ſame evening, gave orders for building a bridge, over which the Engliſh, and other troops deſign'd (as it was induſtriouſly reported) for the Moſel were to paſs. The 18th, the duke march'd to Bedburg, where he was joined by general Churchill, with the Engliſh forces and the artillery (2). The 20th, he advanced to Kerpen, and the next day to Kalſecken, where he received an expreſs from Prince Lewis of Baden, giving it as his opinion, that the French might force their paſſage thro' the black foreſt, and re-inforce the Elector of Bavaria, which was confirmed by the opinions of the Prince of Heſſe, monſieur Bulau, and baron Hompeſch. About the ſame time, he received advice from the Netherlands, that thirty-five battalions, and forty-ſix ſquadrons, were order'd to march from the French army there, to the Moſel; being yet perſuaded the duke's intention was to act on that ſide.

Q. Ann, An' 1704.

Upon theſe advices, the duke preſs'd the march of his army, with all poſſible aſſiduity, and to prevent the ill conſequences that might attend a conjunction of the French and Bavarians, he advanced himſelf with the horſe, and left his brother to follow him with the Infantry. Notwithſtanding this diligence, he had the diſſatisfaction, on the 23d, being then near Bonn, to hear, that the recruits for the French army, in Bavaria, with farther re-inforcements, had actually joined the Elector, the 20th, at Villingen (3). This incident did, indeed, greatly increaſe the difficulties our illuſtrious general had to incounter with, but could not ſhake his ſteady reſolution. The eyes of all Europe were, by this time, fix'd on the duke, who, notwithſtanding this junction, was, on account of the number of the troop's, which the French left behind them, and by the marſhal de Tallard's marching back, with the reſt of his army, towards the Rhine, confirmed in his opinion, "that the enemy was yet wholly ignorant of his true deſign: he, therefore, continued his march, with unwearied diligence.

Junction of the French and Bavarians.

The 31ſt, the army paſs'd the Mayn, at Caſſel, over againſt Mentz, and the duke continued his march towards the Neckar, and came the 2d of June to Ladenburg, where the troops paſs'd that river. His grace, having gained the advance of ſome days march of the French, wrote to the States, and thought he might now let them know the whole ſecret, that he had the Queen's order, to march to the relief of the empire, with which he hoped they would agree, and allow of his carrying their troops to ſhare in the honor of that expedition. He had their anſwer, as quick as the courier could carry it, by which they approved of the deſign, and of his carrying their troops with him; ſo that now the whole army was at his command without controul (4). The duke having given orders to his foot and

The duke continues his march.

(1) The conſumate wiſdom of the duke of Marlborough, in the management of this important affair, on which the fate of all Germany, I may ſay of all Europe, depended, cannot be ſufficiently admir'd. The plan of it was intirely his own, and was long treaſur'd up in his breaſt only. When matters were ripe for that purpoſe, and the way prepared, he open'd his deſign to his ſoverein, whoſe approbation and conſent was primarily neceſſary; but truſted none elſe with the ſecret, but the lord-treaſurer, in whom he knew he could confide, and who muſt neceſſarily have a knowlege of it. Having the Queen's conſent, he was ſenſible that of the States was likewiſe requiſite, as ſo large a body of their troops were under him, to be inſtrumental in the execution of it. He then open'd ſome part of his mind, to one or two only of the aſſembly of the States, in his firſt voyage to Holland, but prudently kept the main deſign yet a ſecret. At his return to Holland, theſe his confidents having prepar'd the way, he open'd ſo far of his mind, to the whole aſſembly of the States, and by force of argument obtain'd their conſent to act with their troops, in Germany, that is, on the Moſel; but they had yet no knowlege of his real deſign to march into the heart of the Empire, and ſtrike at the root of the evil, which threaten'd, and muſt have brought to paſs its intire ruin, without this ſeaſonable and ſalutary relief. Lediard's life of Marlborough, Vol. I. p. 289.

(2) The French, in Flanders, began, by this time, to be alarm'd; tho' they were far from ſuſpecting the duke's real deſign. His marching towards Coblentz, and the great preparations which were making, in that place, made them believe, that his grace deſigned to open the campain, with the ſiege of Traerbach, and indeavor to advance, along the Moſel, into France. Upon this ſuppoſition, they detach'd eight battalions, and ſixteen ſquadrons, towards that river, and gave out, that they intended the ſiege of Huy, vainly imagining, that, by this report, they might ſtop the progreſs of the Engliſh general. This feint was too thinly gloſs'd over, to have any effect on the duke; and, beſide, he very well knew, that the forces he had left in Flanders, under the command of monſ. d'Auverquerque, were ſufficient to fruſtrate any attempt the French could make on that ſide; he, therefore continued his march. Lediard's life of Marlborough, Vol. I. p. 292.

(3) The conduct of the Imperialiſts, on this account, was very much cenſured, as well for truſting the guard of the important paſſes of the Black-foreſt, to the militia alone, as becauſe they did not take the opportunity of fighting the elector of Bavaria, when they might have done it to advantage. The duke of Wirtemberg, the margrave of Bareyth, and count Stirum, who had a fine army, conſiſting of ninty-nine ſquadrons, and forty-two battalions, had reſolved to attack the elector of Bavaria, the 17th, near Villingen: but Prince Lewis of Baden ſent them poſitive orders, not to ſtir from their camp till he arrived. He came, indeed, the 19th, and it was reſolved, to attack the enemy, the next day; but it was then too late, and the opportunity was neglected: and tho' the army march'd, according to the reſolution taken, they found the enemy ſecure, and out of their reach. They had, however, another opportunity afterwards, which was as ſhamefully neglected. Prince Lewis being joined the 24th, by 7000 men, from the lines of Stolhoffen, moved towards Stockach, and thither the Bavarians were marching, likewiſe, it being the only paſs thro' which they could retreat: inſtead of ſecuring this paſs, the Imperialiſts amus'd themſelves with cannonading the enemy, who in the mean time eſcap'd, thro' a defile ſo narrow, that only two men could go in front, and taking the advantage of the night, between the 25th and 26th in the morning their whole army was got thro'. The Bavarians were three days without bread, and had the Imperialiſts ſecured this paſs, they muſt of neceſſity have laid down their arms and diſbanded themſelves. Lediard's life of Marlborough. Vol. I p. 298.

(4) The duke's bending his march towards the Danube was a terrible ſurprize to the French, who, after their firſt miſtake in their conjectures, that the field of his graces action was to be, on the Moſel, had ſurmiſed, that he would advance to the Upper-Rhine, and that he might have a deſign on Landau. This jealouſly was confirm'd, both by his grace's march to Mentz, and by the governor of Philipſburg's making a bridge over the Rhine. Upon this ſuſpicion, marſhal Tallard, repaſs'd the Rhine, the ſecond of June, at Altenheim, in order, either to join the marſhal de Villeroy, or to oppoſe the duke of Marlborough's paſſage over that river. Lediard's life of Marlborough, Vol. I. p. 303.

artillery,

Q. Ann, An' 1704.

artillery, which had paſs'd the Mayn to follow with the re-inforcement of horſe and foot, which was marching from the Maeſe, under the duke of Wirtemberg, his grace decamp'd from Ladenburg, the 6th, and continued his march to Great-gardach.

First interview between Prince Eugene, and the duke of Marlborough.

The 9th, the duke march'd, with the horſe, from Great-gardach to Mondelſheim, where he halted the next day, and, in the morning, received advice, by an adjutant-general, that Prince Eugene of Savoy, with count Wratiſlau, were on the road to his camp, intending to dine with his grace. About three in the afternoon, his highneſs arrived, at the duke's quarters, at Mondelſheim, where he was received with all the marks of honor and civility due to his rank and quality.

A ſketch of their characters.

Poſterity, as well as the preſent age will, without doubt, be curious to know, what paſs'd at the firſt interview of theſe twin-conſtellations in glory, the two greateſt generals of this age, equal in their merit and fame, as well for their courage and conduct in military exploits, as their prudence in council; their dexterity and addreſs, in the managment of affairs; and their politeneſs, temper and affability. What is come to my knowledge, I ſhall faithfully relate, and wiſh it were in my power to gratify the reader farther. After dinner, which was as magnificent as the circumſtances of time and place could admit of, the remaining part of the day was ſpent in conſultations, on the preſent poſture of affairs, which laſted ſeveral hours together, and the mutual ſatisfaction and opinion they, at that time, conceived, at and of each others prudence and capacity, muſt have been very great; ſince the reciprocal eſteem, they before had, grew, from thence forward, into ſo ſtrict a friendſhip and confidence, as very much contributed to the glorious ſucceſſes, which atttended the arms of the allies, during the whole war. The reſult of their conſultations then was, that the two armies ſhould join, and that the duke of Marlborough, and Prince Lewis of Baden, ſhould command, each, day, alternately, and that Prince Eugene ſhould head a ſeparate army on the Rhine.

They hold a conſultation.

Reſult of it.

Compliments paſs'd between the Prince and the duke.

The next day, his highneſs marched with the duke to Great-Heppach, where his grace having ordered his army to be drawn up, in Battalia, before the Prince, his highneſs expreſs'd his ſurprize, to find them in ſo excellent a condition, after ſo long and ſpeedy a march: upon which occaſion, he is reported to have ſaid; "my lord, I never ſaw better horſes, better cloaths, finer belts and accoutrements; yet all theſe may be had for mony; but there is a ſpirit in the looks of your men, which I never yet ſaw in any, in my life". His grace, who could not but be extreamly pleaſed with the compliment, was not, however behind-hand with his highneſs in politeneſs, but is ſaid to have anſwer'd: "ſir, if it be as you ſay, that ſpirit is inſpired in them by your preſence."

Prince Lewis of Baden comes to the duke of Marlborough.

The 12th, advice was brought from the army commanded by Prince Lewis of Baden, that three regiments of horſe march'd from thence, the 8th, to the lines of Stolhoffen; and that, the 10th, they were followed by 9000 men of the Pruſſian forces, in order to oppoſe the French, on that ſide. The 13th, in the morning, the duke was informed by count Wratiſlau, that Prince Lewis of Baden was coming poſt to meet his grace: upon which the duke ſent colonel Cadogan, with a compliment to his highneſs, whom he found at Eſſlingen, with Prince Lobcowitz, his nephew, and conducted them to Great-Heppach.

Expreſſions of civility which paſs'd betwext them.

Among other expreſſions of civility, which paſs'd between Prince Lewis and the duke of Marlborough, his highneſs ſaid; "that his grace was come to ſave "the Empire, and give him an opportunity to "vindicate his honor, which he was ſenſible was, "in ſome manner, at the laſt ſtake, in the opinion "of ſome people." To which his grace is ſaid to have replied: "that he came to learn from him, "how to do the empire ſervice; for they muſt "want judgment who did not know, that the Prince "of Baden had not only, when his health would "permit him, preſerved the Empire, but extended "its conqueſts, as well as ſecured its own." Mutual compliments being over, a conference was held between the generals, wherein it was reſolved, "that the Auxiliary troops, in the neighbourhood, "ſhould join the army on the Danube, for ſome "days, and that Prince Lewis, and the duke of "Marlborough, ſhould have each his day of command alternatively, as long as they continued together; while Prince Eugene ſhould repair towards Philipſburg, to defend the Paſſage of the "Rhine, the lines of Stolhoffen, the country of "Wirtemberg, or act otherwiſe, according to the "motions of the French".

Q. Ann, An' 1704.

A conference between the generals.

The next morning early, the horſe march'd from Great-Heppach, while his grace ſtaid there, to entertain Prince Lewis and Prince Eugene at dinner, after which, the former returned to his army on the Danube, and Prince Eugene went poſt for Philipſburg, to command the army on the Rhine. In the Evening, the duke joined the troops under his command, in the camp at Eberſpach, where the Prince of Heſſe, with monſ. Bulau, and baron Hompeſch attended, to acquaint his grace, that the troops were all in the neighbourhood, ready to march to their appointed rendezvous. The 21ſt, the army incamp'd between Launſheim and Urping, and, on the 22d, made a motion, in order to join Prince Lewis of Baden at Weſterſtetten.

A farther motion of the army.

They join with that under Prince Lewis of Baden.

In the mean time, the Elector of Bavaria ſent a conſiderable detachment, to Dillingen and Lawingen, with intent, that upon the advance of the confederate army, towards the Danube, his whole army might poſſeſs themſelves of that camp. The 23d, Prince Lewis and the duke, continued in the camp, near Launſheim, to form the line of battle; and, the ſame day, his grace reviewed the twelve regiments of foot, which came into thoſe parts, the preceeding year, under the command of lieutenant-general Goor, with the four battalions of the duke of Wirtemberg's troops, in the pay of the States, which appeared compleat, and in very good order. The next day, the army, march'd from Launſheim and Weſterſtetten, and incamp'd, with the right at Elchingen, near the Danube, and the left at Languenau, where they halted three days. The 28th, they march'd again, and incamp'd, with the right at Herbrecting, and the left at Gingen, on the river Brentz, within two leagues of the Elector of Bavaria's army, which lay between Dillingen and Lawingen, with the Brentz between the two armies.

Motions of the united confederate army.

The 29th, the Engliſh foot and artillery, under the command of general Churchill, who had been joined in their march, by a battalion of the King of Pruſſia's forces, arrived in the camp, and took their poſt in the line, where an interval had been left for them: ſo that all the forces the duke of Marlborough expected had now join'd him, excepting the Daniſh horſe, which were detach'd after him, from the Netherlands. The whole army then conſiſted of ninety-ſix battalions of foot, and 202 ſquadrons of horſe and dragoons, having with them forty-four field-cannon, four hawbitzers, and twenty-four pontons. The ſame day, the generals held a council of war, wherein it was reſolved to draw near Donawert; Whereupon, the laſt day of June, the confederate army march'd from Gingen, and Herbrechting, and incamp'd, with their right, at Landhauſen, and their left, at Balmerſhoffen: They marched ſo near the enemy's camp, that lieutenant-general Bulau, was ſent out, the night before, with a detachment of 2000 horſe and dragoons, to ſecure the avenues, by which they might have diſturb'd the march of the allies, who, by theſe means, proceeded without any oppoſition. The enemy's army was then computed to conſiſt of eighty-eight battalions and 160 ſquadrons, having ninety peices of canon, forty mortars and hawbitzers, and thirty pontons. The firſt of July, the confederates continued their march, in ſight of the Elector of Bavaria's army at Dillingen, and incamp'd, with their right, at Amerdingen, and their left at Onderingen. The camp being pitch'd, the duke of Marlborough, with a guard of ſixty ſquadrons, advanc'd a little in the front of his army, to take a view of the ſtrong ſituation of the enemy, and returning ſoon after, gave the neceſſary orders for preparing every thing during the night, in order to attack the enemy's intrenchments, the next day. Some officers were of opinion, that after ſo tireſome a march, the troops ſhould have ſome reſt before the attack, but the duke would hear of no delays.

Q. Ann, An' 1704.

The fight at Schellenberg, near Donawert.

The Elector of Bavaria rightly judging, from the duke's march, that he intended to attack Donawert, ſent a conſiderable detachment, of his beſt troops, to re-inforce count d'Arco, who was poſted at Schellenberg, a riſing ground, near that place, on the north-ſide, where he had already caſt up great intrenchments, and imploy'd ſome thouſands of pioneers, for ſeveral days, to perfect thoſe works, which covered Donawert, on that point between the rivers Brentz and Danube: but notwithſtanding that great advantage, the duke of Marlborough reſolved to drive the enemy from that important poſt. The neceſſary orders being, accordingly, given to the army, his grace advanced, the 2d of July, at three in the morning, with a detachment of 6000 foot, commanded by lieutenant-general Goor, and thirty ſquadrons of Engliſh and Dutch cavalry, beſide three battalions of Imperial grenadiers; the reſt of the army, under Prince Lewis, following, with all poſſible diligence; but the way being very bad and long, the detachment led by his grace, could not come to the river Wernitz, which runs by Donawert, till about noon, and it was three in the afternoon, before the bridges were finiſh'd, to get over that river, with the artillery. About five, the duke had paſs'd it, at the head of the cavalry, and riding up as near to the intrenchments as was neceſſary viewed them, and then made the neceſſary diſpoſition for the attack. In the mean time, the Engliſh and Dutch artillery began to thunder againſt the enemy, who anſwer'd as briſkly from their batteries for about an hour.

Q. Ann, An' 1704.

All things being ready for the attack, the Engliſh and Dutch foot, ſupported by the horſe and dragoons, commanded by lieutenant general Goor, and brigadier Ferguſon, made the onſet, with unparallel'd valor and intrepidity, before the Imperialiſts came up, and met with ſuch a vigorous defence, that, having the greateſt part of the enemy's forces to deal with, they were twice repulſed, but, after an ingagement of near an hour and a half, the Imperialiſts being, by that time, come up, their cavalry broke into the intrenchments, and the Engliſh and Dutch forcing their way in, about the ſame time, the confederates made a terrible ſlaughter of the enemy, purſuing them to the very Danube, where a great part of them followed the example of the count d'Arco, and other general-officers, who ſaved themſelves by ſwimming over that river. They took ſixteen pieces of the enemy's canon, with all their ammunition, tents and baggage, and thirteen colors, beſide count d'Arco's plate, with other rich booty, which was diſtributed among the victorious ſoldiers.

The enemy's intrenchments forced.

A rich booty taken.

All the confederate troops that ingaged, behaved themſelves with a great deal of bravery and reſolution; and the horſe and dragoons ſhared the glory of the day, with the infantry: but the firſt attack being begun by a battalion of the Engliſh foot-guards, and the regiments of Orkney and Ingoldſby, they ſuffered more than any others (1).

The enemy's forces conſiſted of two battalions of the Elector's life-guards, one of grenadiers, thirteen other bavarian battalions, five French, four regiments of Cuiraſſiers, of 800 men each, and three ſquadrons of dragoons, making in all about 18000 men, (tho' ſome accounts make them 32000) all choice troops, commanded by count d' Arco, field-marſhal of the Elector of Bavaria's forces, lieutenant-general Lutzemburg, and count Maffey, generals of Battalia, beſide two French lieutenant-generals. The duke of Marlborough gain'd great honor in this action, giving his orders with the greateſt preſence of mind imaginable, and expoſing his perſon to the greateſt danger (2): nor was Prince Lewis of Baden wanting, in performing the part of a brave and great general. The loſs of the enemy, killed, wounded, priſoners and deſerters was computed at five, ſome accounts ſay 6000 men; nor was that of the confederates much leſs (3), which, however, was abundantly made up, by the gaining ſo compleat a victory as gave them a free entrance into the duke of Bavaria's country, and forced that Elector to retire under the canon of Augſburg.

Loſs on both ſides.

The next day, the Bavarian gariſon quited Donawert

(1) The French, tho' they could not deny the confederates the honor, of this victory, indeavor'd to leſſen the advantage of it, by pretending their works were not near finiſh'd, and exaggerating the loſs of men and officers, this action coſt them. The allies (ſay their writers) tho' we loſt but 1000 men, in the action, had 6000 men kill'd, in their ſeveral attacks, and a far greater number wounded, and ſome of their regiments were almoſt intirely cut off. Several of their generals were killed or wounded, and the count de Stirum died of his wounds after the battle. In the former part of their account, they go exceedingly beyond the truth. But for the latter, it is certain the confederates loſt a great number of brave officers; and, indeed, it could not naturally be otherwiſe, in ſo deſperate an attempt.

(2) The continuator of Rapin, in French, who, on other occaſions, is very ready to rob the duke of Marlborough of his merit, is oblig'd to confeſs here, that the victory was wholly owing to the activity, and courage of the Engliſh general. "If (ſays he) the duke had defer'd the attack 'till the next day, as he was advis'd, it is certain he would never have ſucceed-"ed, the enemy would have been re-inforced, and have perfected their intrenchments". B. xxvi. p. 568.

(3) An officer, then in the army, has given us the following general liſt of the kill'd and wounded, in this action:

	Kill'd	Wounded
Lieutenant-generals	6	5
Major-generals	2	2
Brigadiers	—	1
Colonels		7
Lieutenant colonels	7	9
Majors	3	15
Captains	26	62
Subalterns	46	181
Soldiers	1329	3599
	1423	3981
		1493
Total kill'd and wounded		5474

Among

Q. ANN. AN' 1704.

wert (1), upon the approach of the confederates, and broke down the bridges: but had not time to deſtroy their ammunition and proviſions, as they intended (2).

During the whole time of action, the confederates ſtood to their arms, in a readineſs, either to aſſiſt the aſſailants, if occaſion had required, or to oppoſe the Bavarian army, if they had attempted any thing againſt the camp, in the mean time; and the whole army, excepting thoſe troops that had been imployed in the attack, reſted on their arms all night.

The elector of Bavaria quits his camp,

The Elector of Bavaria was no ſooner informed of the defeat of his troops at Schellenberg, than he quitted his advantageous camp, between Dillingen and Lawingen, and came to the other ſide of the Danube, over againſt Donawert, the third, in his march to the river Lech, to prevent the confederates cutting of his retreat to his own country.

And intrenches his army under the cannon of Augſburg.

The confederate army paſs'd the Danube, the 5th of July, over ſeveral bridges of pontons, near Donawert, and incamp'd at Mertingen, in the dominions of of the Elector of Bavaria, whoſe army had retired to the other ſide of the Lech, and intrench'd themſelves under the canon of Augſburg.

A thanksgiving obſerved.

The 6th was obſerved as a day of thankſgiving for the late victory, throughout the whole army; and te deum was ſung in Prince Lewis of Baden's camp, and in all the towns adjacent.

Newburg taken.

The duke, to improve this advantage, and not to ſuffer the enemy to recover out of the conſternation they were under, immediately commanded his troops to paſs the Lech, upon which the gariſon of Neuburg abandoned that place, and retired to Ingoldſtadt. The duke, thereupon, ſent a detachment to take poſſeſſion of that place, and general Herbeville, who commanded a body of three or 4000 men, on the other ſide of the Danube, was ordered to remain there for it's ſecurity, the importance of it being great for drawing of proviſions out of Franconia. The enemy having, likewiſe, left a gariſon in Rain, a ſmall town in the circle of Bavaria, about half a league on the other ſide of the Lech, the confederate generals reſolv'd to attack it, and it was inveſted accordingly.

The marſhals de Villeroy and Tallard paſs the Rhine,

The 13th, the count de Vehlen, general of the Palatine-horſe, came to the confederate camp, with advice from Prince Eugene, that the marſhals de Villeroy and Tallard, with an army of 45,000 men, had paſs'd the Rhine, about fort Kehl, and gave out, that they were reſolved to ſuccor the Elector of Bavaria, and it was not doubted but one of them, at leaſt, would attempt it, his highneſs, therefore, deſired a re-inforcement of horſe might be ſent him, to inable him the better to obſerve the enemy's motions. Prince Maximilian, of Hanover, (the late King George's brother) was thereupon detach'd, with thirty ſquadons of Imperial horſe, with orders to join Prince Eugene, with all poſſible diligence; and the duke of Marlborough ſent, likewiſe, an expreſs, to acquaint the latter, that, if he thought neceſſary, a larger number ſhould follow.

A re-inforcement ſent Prince Eugene.

The ſame night, the trenches were opened before Rain; the gariſon ſeemed, at firſt, reſolved to defend it to the laſt extremity: but the beſiegers playing upon the town, with twenty ſeven pieces of canon; and the approaches being carried on, with good ſucceſs, the 16th, in the morning, the gariſon deſired to capitulate, and, the articles being agreed on, they marched out, the next day, being about 400 foot, commanded by the count de Merci, a brigadier general, and were conducted by a party of horſe to the Elector of Bavaria's camp, near Augſburg. Four hundred men of the allies took poſſeſſion of the place, in which they found twenty-four braſs-canon, with ſome ammunition, and a great quantity of proviſions.

Q. ANN AN' 1704. Rain taken.

The army decamp'd, the ſame day, from Burcheim, and came, with the right to Holtz, and the left to Ooſterhauſen. The 18th, the allies being incourag'd by the proſperity of their arms, and willing to puſh forward their conqueſts, continued their march, and incamp'd, with the right, at Kuepach. and the left at Aicha, a very fine town. Here the enemy had a gariſon of eight or 900 Bavarian Boors, who, refuſing to ſubmit, were part of them put to the ſword, the reſt made priſoners of war, and the town permited to be plunder'd by the ſoldiers. Here likewiſe the generals took their quarters, and cauſed a magazine to be erected.

Aicha taken.

The Emperor writes to the duke of Marlborough.

The Emperor, no ſooner received advice of this ſucceſs of the confederate army, which might juſtly be called his delivery from apparent ruin and deſolation, than he was thoughtful how to ſhew the grateful ſenſe he had of the ſignal ſervice done him by the duke of Marlborough; and, therefore wrote a letter of thanks to his grace, on occaſion of the victory at Schellenberg.

Count Wratiſlau, upon the delivery of this letter, told the duke, "that the Emperor deſired he "would accept of the honor intended him, of "the title and dignity of a Prince of the Empire;" which his grace, at firſt, declined; 'till, at length, the Queen, at his Imperial Majeſty's requeſt, laid her commands upon him to accept of it. The 22d of July, the enemy abandoned Friedburg, of which the confederates immediately took poſſeſſion.

Friedberg taken.

The elector of Bavaria cut off from his dominions.

The 23d, the army marched again, and incamp'd, with the right, at Wolfurtſhauſen, and the left at Ooſtmaring; the town of Friedburg being in the center of the line, and within a league of Augſburg, under the canon of which the Elector of Bavaria had ſo advantageouſly poſted the remains of his army, that it was impoſſible to attack him, or to force him out of his ſhelter; however, by this march, the duke of Marlborough had intirely cut off all communication between him and his country, which his grace had now wholly in his power.

It was now believed, the Elector of Bavaria was reduced to ſuch a condition, that he would readily imbrace any favorable diſpoſitions that might be ſhewn him; terms of accomodation were, therefore propoſed him (3) and in a manner agreed on: but upon advice, that the marſhal de Tallard had

Propoſals of an accommodation, firſt accepted;

Among whom were the following of diſtinction: Prince Lewis of Baden, general Thungen, the hereditary Prince of Heſſe-caſſel, Prince Alexander of Wirtemberg, the Prince of Saxony, count Horn, lieutenant-general, the major-generals Wood and Palland, and brigadier Bedmar, ſlightly wounded: lieutenant-general Goor, the Prince of Homburg, the Prince of Beveren, the counts van Erbach and Schulemberg, and major general Beinheim kill'd, and count Stirum died, not many days afterwards, of his wounds.

It is to be recorded to the immortal glory of the lord Mordaunt, ſon to the earl of Peterborough, that of a detachment of fifty grenadiers, of Engliſh guards, which he led on to the attack, he eſcaped unhurt, with only ten of his men. Lediard's life of Marlborough, vol. I. p. 323.

(1) Donawert is a city of Germany, on the confines of Suabia, Neuburg, and Bavaria, once Imperial, ſituate on the river Danube; twenty five miles north of Augſburg, ſeventeen weſt of Neuburg, and forty-four north eaſt of Ulm.

(2) The neglect of the officer, who commanded in Donawert, made this conqueſt of the confederates the more eaſy: for he might have put the three battalions, which were in that place, in the covered way, that joined the left of the intrenchment; and, as the allies made their firſt attack on that ſide, he might have gaul'd them terribly, from that poſt. French writers lay great ſtreſs upon this neglect, as the occaſion of their misfortune; and count d'Arco, the Bavarian general, in his letter to the Elector, attributes it ſolely and wholly thereunto.

(3) Biſhop Burnet ſays, the duke of Marlborough went ſo far as to offer paying him the whole charge of the war, if he would immediately break with the French, and ſend his army to join the Imperialiſts, in Italy. Hiſtory of his own times.

paſſed

Q. Ann, An' 1704.

But afterwards rejected by the Elector.

The country of Bavaria ravaged.

paſſed the Black-foreſt, and was coming to join him, he ſent his miniſter, to acquaint count Wratiſlaw, "that ſince the King of France made ſuch "powerful efforts, to ſupport him, he thought "himſelf obliged, in honor, to remain firm in his "alliance."

This inſincerity of the Elector was ſo highly reſented, by the duke of Marlborough, that he detached thirty ſquadrons of horſe and dragoons, to plunder and burn the country of Bavaria, to the very walls of his capital city of Munich; upon which deputations came, from ſeveral places, to his grace; offering to pay contributions, to ſave them from military execution, to whom the duke anſwer'd: "that the Queen of England's forces were not come "into Bavaria to get mony; but to bring their "Prince to reaſon": and the orders for burning and ravaging that country were accordingly put in execution, with the utmoſt ſeverity; to the deſtruction of more than 300 towns, villages and caſtles (1).

The Elector of Bavaria and the marſhal de Marſin, having evacuated Ratiſbon, were forced, in the mean time, to keep cloſe within their ſtrong camp and intrenchments at Augſburg, in expectation of another army from France, under the marſhal de Tallard; who, according to the advice the duke received from Prince Eugene, arrived, the 18th, at Villingen. The marſhal battered this place, for ſix days together; but, upon advice, that Prince Eugene was advancing, he adandon'd his deſign upon it, and continued his march.

The ſiege of Ingoldſtadt reſolved on.

The duke of Marlborough and Prince Lewis of Baden, finding that the Elector of Bavaria was ſtill inflexible, and that it was not poſſible to attack him in his fortified camp, under the canon of Augſburg, without infinite diſadvantage; and conſidering, beſide, that the marſhal de Tallard was advancing, with a large body of troops, they reſolved to attempt the reducing of the ſtrong places of Bavaria, and to begin with Ingoldſtadt, the moſt important place the Elector had, in which his great magazines were laid up. Prince Lewis took upon him to command and carry on the ſiege, with the Imperial troops, and the duke of Marlborough undertook to cover it, with the auxiliary forces, which, in caſe of need, might be joined by thoſe under Prince Eugene, who, by this time was advanced to Dillingen.

Monſ. de Tallard joins the Elector of Bavaria;

The marſhal de Tallard, with about 22,000 horſe and foot, being come, the 4th of Auguſt, to Biberach, the Elector of Bavaria left eight Battalions and four ſquadrons in Augſburgh, and march'd, the 5th, with the reſt of his forces, to join theſe new auxiliaries at that place.

And Prince Eugene the duke of Marlborough.

The 6th, Prince Eugene came to the duke's army, to confer with him and Prince Lewis of Baden, where it was agreed, that Prince Lewis ſhould continue the ſiege of Ingoldſtadt, while Prince Eugene and the duke obſerved the Elector of Bavaria. Prince Eugene, being returned to his army, received intelligence, the 10th, that the enemy had paſs'd the Danube, and had a deſign to fall upon him ſeparately; upon which he diſpatch'd an expreſs to the duke, to deſire him to march and join him. This expreſs return'd, the 11th, with an account, that his grace had received the ſame advice, and had been upon the march ever ſince two that morning; and that twenty Battallions, which he had ſent before, under the command of general Churchill were very near. Theſe troops came accordingly, that morning into Prince Eugene's camp, and, in the evening, the duke arrived, with his whole army; when the two armies being thus joined, they incamp'd between the villages of Munſter and Erlinghoven, and that of Appershoven.

Q. Ann, An' 1704.

Preparations for attacking the enemy.

The 12th, the confederate generals ſpent in taking a view of the enemy's camp, and from an eminence, which is by the corner of the wood, near Wolperſtette, they ſaw their whole army in motion. At one, in the afternoon, they perceived their quarter-maſters ſetting up their camp-ſtandards, and marking a camp, from Blenheim to Lutzingen (2).

The generals, being returned to the army, ordered the neceſſary paſſages to be made, and bridges of communication to be erected over a rivulet, near Thiffingen. The pioneers were hardly got to their work, when the enemy's advanced guards came ſo near, as between Schweinigen and Thiffingen, and their Huſſars obliged the pioneers to retire: but the duke coming that way, with the whole piquet, and ſome other troops, they found the enemy not only retired, but returning full gallop to their main army.

Situation of the enemy's army.

At four in the afternoon, they plainly diſcovered, from the tower of Thiffingen, the enemy's camp their tents being ſet up; and ſaw, that they were poſſeſs'd of a very advantageous poſt on a hill; that their right flank was covered by the Danube, and the village of Blenheim, and their left by the village of Lutzingen; and that they had before them a rivulet, whoſe banks were high, and the bottom marſhy; ſo that it was believed at firſt to be unpaſſable, as, indeed, it was afterwards found to be, in ſeveral places. They had, beſide, the village of Oberklau, in the center of their army, and the village of Unterklau, on the oppoſite ſide of the rivulet; and two mills towards the mouth of the rivulet, which ſecur'd the paſſage on that ſide, and ſerved as redoubts for the defenſe of the river of Blenheim. In theſe circumſtances, it was thought a very hazardous enterprize, to attack ſo numerous an army, in ſo advantageous a poſt, which the Confederates could not approach, but by filing off, and by paſſing, in view of the enemy, a marſhy rivulet, which could not be done in good order. But, on the other hand, there ſeemed to Reaſons which induced the duke of Marlborough and Prince Eugene to attack the enemy in their advantageous poſt.

(1) The deſolation of ſo fine a country could not but very much affect the Elector, tho' it was not an effectual cure for his obſtinacy: he wrote a letter to the duke of Marlborough, intreating him to put a ſtop to theſe ravages: he ſaid, he could not believe ſuch violences, ſo oppoſite to true glory, were commited by his graces's orders, or thoſe of Prince Lewis of Baden, and that, if they were continued, he ſhould be obliged to make repriſals. The duke anſwer'd; it was in his power to put an end to them, by a ſpeedy accommodation: but the Elector, being buoy'd up, by the near approach of the marſhal de Tallard, replied haughtily; that ſince they had obliged him to draw the ſword, he had thrown away the Scabard. Rouſſet hiſt. mil. tome, II. p. 99.

(2) It will be highly neceſſary here, in order to give the reader a better idea of what follows, to give a particular account of the ſituation and circumſtances of the ſpot of ground which was then between the two armies, and upon which they were encamp'd. It is a plain of near two leagues long, but of an unequal breadth, the entrance into it not being above the breadth of a canon-ſhot, but widening ſoon after to the breadth of about a league. It is border'd on one ſide by the wood of Schellenberg, and on the other by the Danube, and three or four rivulets croſs this plain, in their courſe to the Danube. This, with the inconvenience of ſeveral marſhes, together with the villages and hamlets, which are ſcatter'd here and there, in this plain, to the number of above twenty, render'd the march of the confederate army, to attack the enemy, very troubleſome. The little town of Hochſtadt (which gave name to this battle) is ſituate at the other extremity of the plain, oppoſite to the confederate army, on the north-ſide of the Danube, and at the mouth of a rivulet, which, runing by the village of Oberwemingen, there falls into this river. Here it was the confederate generals intended to have form'd their camp, but the enemy were before-hand with them, and had taken poſſeſſion of the whole ſpace between Blenheim and Lutzingen, and had placed their advanc'd guard on the other ſide of the rivulet, which was on the front of their camp. Lediard's life of Marlborough. Vol. I. p. 360.

be

Q. Ann, An' 1704.

be an indiſpenſable neceſſity of falling immediately upon the enemy, before they had time to fortify themſelves, in that poſt: for not only the confederate army would have wanted forage, much ſooner than Ingoldſtadt could have been taken; but the generals had very good information, from intercepted letters, that the marſhal de Villeroy had orders to leave monſ. de Coigni, in the camp near Offenburg, with a body of troops, ſufficient to keep thoſe of the allies within the lines of Biehl, and was ready, with the remainder of his army, to make an irruption into the country of Wirtemberg. That army might then have acted in concert with the Elector of Bavaria, and have been re-inforced by detachments from that prince's army, to fall afterwards on the rear of the lines of Biehl; ſo that, thereby, the French armies would have eſtabliſhed a free communication from the Rhine to the Danube, and have forced all to ſubmit to them, as far as the Mayn. In the mean time, the Elector, from his camp at Hochſtadt, might have ruined a great part of the circle of Franconia, and have brought things to that paſs, that the auxiliaries, under the duke of Marlborough, would not have been able to find, either ſubſiſtence, or winter-quarters, on the Danube, and in the Upper Germany; tho', on the other hand, that great and ſeaſonable ſupply, could not have left the empire, in the winter, without expoſing it to the very brink of ruin, from which they had ſo lately, and ſo happily retrieved it, and without leaving a very great ſuperiority to the enemy (1). Theſe reaſons had their due weight with our generals; for, that very night, all the neceſſary diſpoſitions were made for the attack, and the bagage was ſent to Rietlingen, a village between Munſter and Donawert.

The duke's unſhaken reſolution.

Several general officers came, in the mean time, and repreſented to the duke of Marlborough the difficulties of the deſign, in their moſt lively colours: but they had no effect on his ſteady reſolution, which he had not fixed, without weighing every circumſtance, and the conſequences which might, or could poſſibly attend them. He knew that the poſt which the enemy poſſeſs'd was capable of being put, in a very ſhort time, out of all danger of future attacks: and, on the other hand, duly conſidered, that even a defeat it ſelf could hardly be more fatal than lying ſtill and doing nothing: he, therefore, only told them, that he was ſenſible of all theſe difficulties; but the attempt was abſolutely neceſſary: upon which, the orders that were diſtributed, throughout the whole army, were received with ſuch alacrity and chearfulneſs, as gave a happy preſage of the glorious victory that enſued.

Q. Ann, An' 1704.

The battle of Blenheim or Hochſtadt.

The 13th, before one, in the morning, the general was beat, about half an hour after one the aſſembly, and at two the march; upon which the whole confederate army was in motion, and, by three, they began to paſs the rivulet, call'd Keſſel, on ſeveral bridges, which had been prepared the night before. They filed off, in eight columns, of which two, of Imperial foot, marched quite to the right of all, towards the height, along the wood, having two columns of Imperial cavalry to their left. The left wing, which was compos'd of the auxiliaries, march'd, likewiſe, in four columns, viz. two of foot, on the left of the Imperial horſe, and two of horſe, on the left of all. Thus the whole army proceeded as far as the rivulet, near Thiffingen, where the advanced guards were ordered to return to their reſpective bodies, and the two brigades of Heſſian infantry, which had been left in that village, under the command of major-general Wilks, with fifteen ſquadrons, which the duke of Marlborough commanded out, formed a ninth column, on the left of all, and thus they march'd towards Schweiningen (2).

The whole army marches.

The nine columns, being arrived between that village and the wood, made halt, to obſerve the enemy, who ſeem'd unconcerned, and did not make any great motion: about ſix, the duke of Marlborough and Prince Eugene, who had poſted themſelves on a riſing ground, called all the generals to them, and gave them the neceſſary directions, for the attack, after which the army advanced into the plain, where they were drawn up in order of battle (3).

The enemy begins to be in motion.

About ſeven, before the confederate army was quite drawn up in Battalia, the enemy, at the approach of their vanguard, gave a ſignal, by firing two pieces of canon, to call in their foragers. They, likewiſe, ſet fire to the villages of Unterklau, Wolperſtette, Weiler, Berghauſen, and Schweinenbach, and their whole army was perceived to be in motion. They then beat the General, afterwards the Aſſembly, and the Confederates ſaw them in arms before their camp, their generals, with their Aids de Camps, galloping to and fro, to put all things in order (4).

A detachment of the confederates advances.

On the confederate ſide, two brigades of foot, com-

(1) Theſe were prevalent arguments to engage the duke of Marlborough and Prince Eugene to hazard a battle, tho' under greater diſadvantages: yet there were not wanting thoſe, who accus'd theſe two great generals of raſhneſs in the attempt, and inſinuated, that they would not have been ſufficient to have excuſed them had ſucceſs been wanting. The Engliſh (ſay they, in particular) would not have pardon'd the duke for hazarding the lives of their countrymen, in favour of the Imperialiſts. But here theſe remarkers ſeem to be under an undeniable miſtake; for we certainly were in an humour, at that time, to have ſacrificed more in favour of that nation, which, in the opinion of many, has not ſince ſhewn the greateſt marks of gratitude in return. It is, indeed, true, that ſucceſs generally covers a raſh action, and, on the contrary, ill ſucceſs is as often the cauſe, that temerity is not forgiven. The grounds, however, upon which theſe arguments were founded, ſeem inconteſtable. Lediard's life of Marlborough. Vol. I. p. 364.

(2) The confederate army conſiſted of ſixty-ſix battallions and 178 ſquadrons, amounting to about 50, or 52,000 men, and had fifty-two pieces of canon, That of the enemy was near 60,000 men ſtrong, conſiſting of eighty-two battallions, and 160 ſquadrons, with ninety (or, as ſome ſay, 100) pieces of canon, ſome of which were twenty-four pounders. We have various other accounts of the force of both armies: this, however, is certain, that the united army of French and Bavarians was conſiderably more numerous, than that of the allies, under the duke and Prince Eugene; and the marſhal de Tallard, himſelf confeſs'd them to be ſo, by about 4000 men. Their right wing was commanded by the marſhal de Tallard, with the French reinforcements, and, on the left, was the Elector, with the Bavarians, and the marſhal de Marſin, with the troops under his command. Lediard's life of Marlborough. Vol. I. p. 365.

(3) The left wing, which was under the immediate care of the duke of Marlborough, conſiſted of forty-eight battalions, and eight ſix ſquadrons, whereof fourteen battalions and thirteen ſquadrons, were Engliſh troops; twenty-two ſquadrons, Daniſh; fourteen battalions, and nineteen ſquadrons, Dutch; thirteen battalions, and twenty-five ſquadrons, of the forces of Lunenburg; ſeven ſquadrons of the troops of Heſſe; and ſome troops of Wirtemberg. Lediard's life of Marlborough. Vol. I. p. 368.

(4) The marſhal de Tallard, in particular, having made all his diſpoſitions, on the enemy's right, where he commanded, gave orders to monſ. de Surlauben, who commanded the right of the cavalry, to have a watchful eye on the motions of the confederates, and that as ſoon as a certain number of them had paſs'd the rivulet, he ſhould charge them. Monſ. de Clerambault had orders to remain in the village of Blenheim, and there to withſtand the enemy's attack, with all his might. This done, the marſhall gallop'd to the center, where he found the Elector, and the marſhal de Marſin, who had juſt been making the neceſſary diſpoſitions on the left, and were ranging their infantry in the beſt poſture they could, to withſtand the attack of the allies. Monſ. de Tallard gave his electoral highneſs an account of what diſpoſitions he had made, with which he ſeem'd perfectly ſatisfied, and embracing him, told him, he hop'd he ſhould do it, with a yet greater ſatisfaction, in the evening.

Q. Ann, An' 1704.

commanded by the lord Cutts, lieuteuant-general, the major-generals St. Paul and Wilks, and the brigadiers Row and Ferguſon, and ſupported by fifteen ſquadrons, under the command of major-general Wood, were ordered on the left to poſſeſs themſelves of the two Water-mills, near Blenheim, which the enemy immediately ſet on fire.

Bridges laid over the moraſs.

The Confederate army, in the mean time, advanced into the plain; four columns march'd to the left, towards the village of Greynheim, and four, of the Imperial troops, took the right, towards the village of Schweinenbach, leaving Wolperſtette and Berghauſen to the left. About eleven, the whole army being in battalia, in two lines, except ſome ſquadrons, which made a body of reſerve; and the moraſs heing found unpaſſable for the infantry, they quickly made five bridges, with the planks of their pontons; and repaired the bridge, on the high road, which the enemy had deſtroyed. Prince Eugene cauſed the right wing to march, at the ſame time, along the wood, to fall on the flank of the Elector, who extended his left, in proportion, to prevent it, and to face the Prince.

Canonading on both ſides.

To prevent the Confederates from gaining the flank of their right wing, the enemy poſſeſſed themſelves of the village of Blenheim, and poſted twenty-eight battallions of foot, with twelve ſquadrons of dragoons, in the place. They alſo poſted ſome infantry in the village of Oberklau and Lutzingen (1). The two brigades of foot, commanded by the lord Cutts, were ordered to go over the rivulet, to favour the paſſage of the left wing, and they poſted themſelves, for that end, in a bottom, near the village of Blenheim, where, for ſeveral hours, they ſtood the fire of ſix pieces of canon, with wonderful reſolution. The enemy fired, at the ſame time, very briſkly, on the bridges, which the confederates had laid for the paſſage of their infantry; but they ſoon returned the compliment from two of their batteries (2). Every thing was ready for the attack, on the left wing, about noon, and, by that time a good part of the infantry, of the main battalia, of the confederate army had poſted themſelves in and about the village of Unterklau, and the Prince of Holſteinbeck poſſeſs'd himſelf of that of Weiler, or Schonbach, and cauſed a counter-battery to be erected there.

The general attack made.

Theſe preparations being all made, the duke of Marlborough gave orders for a general attack, which was begun, on the left, a quarter before one. Major-general Wilks made the firſt onſet, with the five Engliſh battalions of How, Ingoldſby, Marlborough, Row, and North and Gray, and four battalions of Heſſians, ſupported by the Lord Cutts, and major-general St. Paul, with eleven other battalions; and the fifteen ſquadrons of horſe, under the command of major-general Wood. The five Engliſh battalions, led on by brigadier Row, who charged, on foot, at the head of his own regiment, with unparallel'd intrepidity, aſſaulted the village of Blenheim, advancing to the very muzzles of the enemy's muſkets; and ſome of the officers exchanging thruſts of ſwords, with the French, thro' the palliſadoes: but being expos'd to a fire much ſuperior to theirs, they were ſoon forced to retire, leaving behind them near one third part of their men, either killed or mortally wounded, and amongſt the latter, brigadier Row himſelf.

Q. Ann, An' 1704.

The Engliſh infantry on the left repulſed.

In this retreat, they were purſued by thirteen ſquadrons of the French Gendarmerie and Carabiniers, who would have entirely cut them in pieces, had not the Heſſian infantry ſtop'd their career, by the great fire they made upon them.

The French retreat in their turn.

The French, being repulſed in their turn, were chaſed by five ſquadrons of Engliſh horſe; till a ſuperior number of freſh brigades charging them with great vigour, obliged many of them to repaſs the rivulet, with precipitation. In the mean time, Ferguſon's brigade, commanded by himſelf, attack'd the village of Blenheim, on the left; but, after ſeveral attempts, with little ſucceſs, it was found impracticable to force the enemy in that poſt, without entirely ſacrifizing the infantry.

The forcing of Blenheim found impracticable.

The whole army paſſes the rivulet.

The Engliſh foot having begun the engagement, on the left, the horſe, of the ſame wing, paſs'd the rivulet, pell-mell, over againſt the center, or main battalia, of the enemy. The horſe of the right wing, likewiſe, paſs'd the rivulet, having made ſeveral paſſages, with diverſe pieces of wood, which they found at hand, and a good number of faſcines. In a word, all paſs'd and drew up, in order of battle, as well as the ground would permit, on the other ſide of the rivulet. The enemy gave them all the time they could deſire, for that purpoſe, remaining quietly on the hill, without deſcending into the meadow towards the rivulet; ſo that even the ſecond line of the confederates horſe had time to form themſelves (3).

The two armies come to a cloſer engagement.

At length, the cavalry of the confederates left wing marching up, towards the hill, that of the enemy began to move, and charged them, with a great deal of fury. The French infantry, which was in the village of Blenheim, made, at the ſame time, a terrible fire, from behind ſome hedges of that village, on the flank of the confederate cavalry, which were advanced too near; ſo that the firſt line of horſe, of their left, from the head of the line, to the three regiments of the troops of Hannover, viz. the electoral regiment, that of Voigt, and that of Noyelles, was put into ſuch diſorder, that part of them retired even beyond the rivulet. Hereupon, lieutenant-general Bulau, commander in chief of the troops of Lunenburg, brought up his own regiment of dragoons, and two of the troops of Zell, viz. that of major-general Villers, and that of brigadier Bothmar, from the ſecond line, which charged the enemy's evening. The marſhal ſtaid in the center to obſerve the diſpoſitions of the Confederates; and took that time to dine, with three or four general officers who were with him. He was prevail'd upon (as monſ. de Quincy ſays, much againſt his Will, and in a very wrong time) to go to the left, that he might be the better judge of the diſpoſitions made there.

(1) The making theſe detachments extremely weakened their main battalia, and was thought to be one of the principal cauſes of their defeat.

(2) The French, who own they had ninety pieces of canon advantageouſly placed, in a line, before the whole front of their army, pretend they did great execution from their batteries, and that the allies loſt 2000 men, before the battle began: but if it had been ſo, it redounds to their own ſhame, to be ſo totally routed as they were, in the end, after ſo advantageous a begining. Lediard's life of Marlborough. Vol. I. p. 371.

(3) To this capital fault, of the French, ſome principally aſcribe the victory which enſued. It has been ſaid, with what truth or grounds I ſhall leave un-determined, that this neglect proceeded from an ill-timed haughtineſs and preſumption of the marſhal de Tallard, who being informed, that the allies were laying bridges on the rivulet, uſed this expreſſion; "if they "have not bridges enough, I will lend them ſome:" and when they told him, that our troops were actually coming over the rivulet, is reported vainly to have ſaid; "let them paſs, the more there come over, the more we ſhall have to kill and take "priſoners." But others, who make it their buſineſs to excuſe that general, aſſure us, on the contrary; "that he had "given poſitive orders, not to let the enemy paſs the rivulet, but to charge them as they paſs'd, which orders were not "executed:" monſ. de Quincy ſays, orders were given to monſ. de Surlauben (as I have obſerved above) to charge when a certain number of them were paſs'd, and that monſ. de Clerambault ſhould remain in Blenheim, which ſeems, in ſome meaſure, to favour the report of the marſhal's preſumption.

horſe,

Q. Ann, An' 1704.

horſe, with ſo much vigor, that they drove them to the very hedges of the village of Blenheim.

The enemy's cavalry routed.

The cavalry of the confederates left wing, having by this ſucceſs, gained the advantage of forming themſelves intirely, in order of battle, advanced leiſurely to the top of the hill, where they charg'd the enemy's horſe ſeveral times, and, at every charge, gain'd ground. Monſ. de Tallard, hereupon, cauſed ten of his battalions to advance to fill the intervals of his cavalry, in order to make a laſt effort; which the allies, on their ſide, perceiving cauſed three battalions, of the troops of Zell, to come up, to ſuſtain their horſe, and then returned to the charge: but the ſuperior fire of the enemy's infantry put their firſt line into ſome diſorder, and made them retire about ſixty paces, where they remained ſome time.

Ten of the enemy's battalions cut in pieces.

The allies, at length, renewed the charge, with ſo much vigor and ſucceſs, that having broken and routed the enemy's horſe, the ten batalions, who were now abandoned by them, were intirely cut in pieces; excepting a very few ſoldiers only, who threw themſelves on the ground as dead (1). Monſ. de Tallard rallied his broken cavalry behind ſome tents, and now thought it time to draw off his dragoons and infantry from the village of Blenheim. To this end, he deſired the marſhal de Marſin to face the allies with ſome troops, on the right of the village of Oberklau, to keep them in play: but this general let him know, he was in no condition to favor his deſign, and was ſo far from being victorious, on his ſide, that he had enough to do to ſtand his ground.

The French intirely routed.

Lieutenant-general Ingoldſby made the Prince of Heſſe, and the lieutenant-generals Lumley and Hompeſch, in the mean time, ſenſible, that the French cavalry might, with eaſe, be intirely defeated, by charging them on the right flank: and this advice being followed, it happened ſo accordingly, and their rout was compleat. Part of them indeavored to gain the bridge they had on the Danube, between Blenheim and Hochſtadt: The other part, among whom were the Gens d'armes, were cloſely purſued by the dragoons of Bothmar, and thoſe who eſcaped the ſlaughter threw themſelves into the Danube, where moſt of them were drowned (2). Thoſe who fled towards Hochſtadt rallied once more, and made a ſhew as if they deſigned to ſuccor the reſt; but the regiment of Bothmar faced them, and kept them in awe, for ſome time, 'till being, at length, joined, by ſome other regiments, the enemy fled full gallop towards Hochſtadt.

The Marſhal de Tallard was ſurrounded by the Fugitives, and taken near a mill, behind the village of Sonderen, not far from the Danube, by monſ. Boinenburg, a lieutenant-colonel of the troops of Heſſe, and aid de camp to the Prince of Heſſe-caſſel: the marquis de Montperoux, general of horſe, de Seppeville, de Silly, and de la Valiere. Majors-general; monſieur de la Meſſiliere, St. Poüange, de Ligondais, and ſeveral other officers of note, were likewiſe made priſoners, in this defeat (3).

Q. Ann, An' 1704.

The marſhal de Tallard taken priſoner.

The village of Oberklau attack'd; with ſucceſs.

During theſe tranſactions, at the village of Blenheim, and in the center, the duke of Marlborough cauſed the village of Oberklau, which was the marſhal de Marſin's quarters, to be attack'd, by the brigade of Berenſdorff, conſiſting of ten battalions. The Prince of Holſtein-Beck, who commanded them, as major-general, and who came to the army but the day before, paſs'd the Rivulet, at the head of two battalions, with great reſolution; but, as the Imperial cavalry, which was to have ſupported him, were wanting in their duty, and kept above two Muſket-ſhot from him, he was hardly got over, when ſeven or eight of the enemy's battalions, fell on him with great fury, before he could form his two battalions; ſo that one of them, that of Goor, was almoſt intirely cut in pieces, and the Prince himſelf deſperately wounded and taken priſoner. They put the Prince, wounded as he was, upon a waggon, in order to carry him away; but fortune, afterwards, ſhifting hands, he was retaken in that condition, with three or four bleeding wounds on him, of which he afterwards died. Notwithſtanding this firſt ſhock, theſe battalions were no ſooner ſupported, by ſome Daniſh and Hanoverian cavalry, than they charged a ſecond time; but with no better ſucceſs: 'till upon the third charge, the duke of Marlborough, having himſelf brought up ſome ſquadrons, which were ſupported by others of the body of reſerve, made them advance with ſome battalions beyond the Rivulet; whereupon the enemy began to retire. His grace thought it now time to repair towards the attack of the horſe, where he, indeed, found the action already decided in his favor, as we have ſeen above. He came, however, time enough to have his ſhare of puſhing the thirty ſquadrons of French horſe and gens d'Armes, into the Danube.

The enemy obliged by the duke to retire here likewiſe.

Farther ſucceſs of the duke of Marlborough.

As ſoon as the duke had perform'd theſe conſiderable ſervices, the action in the center being now decided, in favor of the confederates, his grace cauſed part of his victorious cavalry to halt, to obſerve the motion of that part of the enemy,

(1) It may not be improper to obſerve, in this place, that the French themſelves are oblig'd here to allow the ſuperior conduct of our Britiſh hero. "During all theſe charges (ſays monſ. de Quincy, and we find the ſame remark, in other French hiſtorians) "the duke of Marlborough, having found the poſt of Blenheim impracticable, only made a ſhew, (of attacking that poſt) with "a front of battalions, out of muſket-ſhot. Theſe he caus'd to advance by Platoons only, who, having diſcharg'd their fire-arms, "retir'd, and gave way to others who reliev'd them, and did the ſame. This was done, during the ſeveral charges of their "cavalry, in order to keep all the troops, which were in the village, in action, while the duke of Marlborough march'd the "ſtrength of his troops oppoſite to the center of monſ. de Tallard's army, where he had obſerv'd, there was no infantry. If "this had been perceiv'd (continues my author, and that it was not, is an inconteſtable proof of our general's ſuperior conduct) "it would have been eaſy to have prevented it, by marching thither all the troops which were in the ſecond line of the village, "where they were of no manner of ſervice; but, unhappily for us, we did not diſcover it, and the allies knew how to take "advantage of our neglect".

(2) In this particular, it is, that the French accounts differ the moſt from ours: they allow but a very few to have been drowned in the Danube (monſ. de Quincy reduces the number to leſs than fifty) but they, at the ſame time, own, that part of the gens d'Armes, with ſeveral general officers, were ſurrounded by the confederate cavalry, and that of thoſe, who attempted to fight their way thro', a great many were taken priſoners.

(3) It may not be forein to obſerve here, what a power fear and conſternation can have over a body of troops, when they are once poſſeſs'd with it, of which we have a flagrant inſtance before us. Theſe troops, which compos'd the right of the French army, not only fled before the victorious Engliſh, but did it in the utmoſt confuſion and diſorder, without any regard to the command of their ſuperiors, or obſerving whither or which way they fled. They look'd upon themſelves as loſt beyond hopes of recovery, and giving way to deſpair, ſuffer'd themſelves to be drove to perdition, like a flock of ſheep to the ſlaughter. A whole body of their cavalry, the beſt and moſt renown'd of their whole army, ſeiz'd with the ſame pannic, hurried away the marſhal de Tallard, with them, in their flight, and, void of all thought, threw themſelves, by whole ſquadrons, into the Danube, men and horſes, officers and troopers. Some few had the good fortune to eſcape, but much the greater part, to avoid an uncertain death, which, at worſt, could but have overtaken them in the field of battle, and laid them down, in the bed of honor, ruſh'd upon a certain and ignominious death in the river. The impotent marſhal, not capable of ſtemming this torrent of deſpair, was obliged to ſurrender priſoner of war, with ſeveral other general officers, who were in his company. Lediard's life of Marlborough, Vol. I. p. 379.

which,

Q. Ann, An' 1704

which, by this time, was drawn up beyond the Moraſs of Hochſtadt. During this halt, the Elector of Bavaria was perceived making his retreat from the village of Lutzingen; upon which, a meſſenger was diſpatch'd to general Hompeſch, (who, with ſeveral ſquadrons, was purſuing the enemy towards Morſelingen, and who had already overtaken two of their battalions, and forced them to lay down their arms,) with orders to face about, and march to join thoſe who halted; as well to prevent the Elector's falling upon Hompeſch's rear, as to form a body, in order to charge that Prince, who march'd in great haſte, but in pretty good order, with his ſquadrons on the left, and his battalions on the right.

His great prudnce.

Before general Hompeſch returned from his chace, the right wing of the confederate army was perceived at ſome diſtance behind the Elector; and appearing to be part of his army, marching in ſuch manner as might eaſily have flanked them, had the duke of Marlborough immediately charged him, his grace, with great prudence, ſent out a party to view them. During this time, the Elector continued marching off, with great precipitation, till he reach'd the Moraſs of Morſelingen.

The French, in Blenheim, ſurrender priſoners.

The French horſe being intirely defeated, and the confederates maſters of all the ground, which was between the enemy's left, and the village of Blenheim, the twenty-eight battalions, and twelve ſquadrons of dragoons, which were in that village, found themſelves cut off from the reſt of their army; and deſpairing of being able to make their eſcape, after a weak attempt to repulſe the whole infantry which ſurrounded the village, they, at length, capitulated, about eight, in the evening, laid down their arms, deliver'd their colors and ſtandards, and ſurrender'd themſelves priſoners of war, on condition, that the officers ſhould not be ſearch'd.

Only two battalions of the whole French infantry eſcape.

By this, it appears, that of the whole French Infantry, which the marſhal de Tallard had brought to the aſſiſtance of the Elector of Bavaria, conſiſting of forty battalions, all Veterans, and the very choice of the French infantry, only two battalions eſcaped; ſince twenty-eight were here made priſoners, and ten were intirely cut in pieces, as we have ſeen above (1).

Prince Eugene's ſucceſs on the right.

Having given an account of the ſucceſs on the left wing, I am now to relate what paſs'd on the right, under the command of Prince Eugene, who labor'd under great difficulties, having to deal with the Elector of Bavaria, and the marſhal de Marſin, both old generals, of great courage, conduct and experience; eſpecially the former, who had commanded in all the wars of Flanders, in King William's time, and had, before that, commanded the Imperial army, in Hungary, and, particularly, in the year 1688, took the famous city of Belgrade, from the Turks. Such generals, I ſay, Prince Eugene had to deal with. The infantry of this wing conſiſted only in ſeven battalions of Daniſh, and eleven of Pruſſian forces; but his cavalry was ninety-two ſquadrons of the troops of the Emperor, the king of Pruſſia, the circle of Suabia and Wirtemberg, and other Princes and ſtates of the Empire; tho' his foot, in the end, proved moſt victorious, as we ſhall ſee below. The enemy, on their ſide, had, in their left wing, thirty battalions, and tho' I do not any where find the preciſe number of ſquadrons they had in this wing; yet by the number we find monſ. de Tallard had in the other wing, and the general account we have of their whole force, their number, on this ſide, muſt have been about ſeventy or eighty; and they had poſted fourteen battalions in the village of Oberklau, the attack of which the duke of Marlborough had taken upon him, (as I have ſaid above) with his infantry.

Force of the confederates right, and enemy's left wing.

The horſe of the right wing of the confederates were poſted, moſt of them, over againſt Oberklau; but the eighteen battalions, who were to the right of all, had a great way to march before they could get up the hill; and, beſide, the paſſage of the Rivulet being very difficult, the attack could not begin, on that ſide, ſo ſoon as Prince Eugene could have wiſh'd. Moreover, the troops of the right, which poſted themſelves in a bottom, not far from Lutzingen, were obliged to remain expos'd, during three hours, to the canonading of the enemy, without being able to uſe their artillery, 'till, at length, a counter-battery was raiſed, near the wood.

Q. Ann, An' 1704.

The infantry of the right wing ſucceſsful.

Tho' the right could not charge 'till half an hour after the left had begun the attack, yet they were pretty ſucceſsful at firſt; for the infantry, notwithſtanding they were much inferior in number, to that of the enemy, ſtood their ground againſt them, with great firmneſs and reſolution, and the cavalry broke that of the enemy's firſt line; but they were ſo vigoriouſly repuls'd by that of their ſecond line, that part of them were driven, in great confuſion, beyond the Rivulet; and the Infantry, having no more horſe to ſuſtain them, was obliged, notwithſtanding the great reſiſtance they made, to retreat, with conſiderable loſs, 3 or 400 paces; eſpecially the two battalions, which were in the flank; inſomuch that things were now in a very bad condition, on that ſide. The infantry ſtood firm, near the wood, and Prince Eugene having rallied the horſe, brought them up again to the charge, but they were repulſed a ſecond time.

The cavalry repuls'd.

They were rallied once more, and the enemy gave the confederates time to place their troops advantageouſly, after which they charged a third time. The cavalry had, at firſt, ſome advantage over that of the enemy, but were afterwards forced to retreat a third time: whilſt the infantry broke and overthrew that with which they were ingaged, tho' they could not march up to them, but thro' a moſt difficult ground, where a ſmall number of troops was ſufficient to ſtop a greater. Upon this, Prince Eugene left his Cavalry, ſeing little likelihood of being able to rally them again, and put himſelf, at the head of the infantry, who improving the diſorder, into which they had put that of the enemy, purſued them over hills, dales, rocks and woods, and, having charged them again,

The infantry victorious.

(1) The fate of the ten battalions, which were intirely cut off, and whoſe ſlaughter thoſe in Blenheim could not but know, without doubt brought a panniç upon them, which, in ſome meaſure, cauſed this tame ſurrender, for which their commanders were ſeverely (and, indeed, juſtly) cenſur'd, even by their own country-men, as having ſo quietly given up the choiceſt infantry of France. One of their own generals, ſpeaking of their puſillanimity, ſays: monſ. de Clerambaut (who commanded thoſe dragoons and infantry in chief) without taking a reſolution worthy of his name, with a powerful body, which was yet intire, as ſoon as he ſaw the rout of our cavalry, cauſed his poſtillion to ſound the Danube, and, throwing himſelf into it, was drowned. The marquis de Quincy, to excuſe this puſillanimity of monſ. de Clerambault, ſays, it was reported, that his horſe, being frighten'd by a canon-ball which paſs'd near him, threw his rider into the Danube, where he was drowned. The ſame author draws, likewiſe from hence, an argument to excuſe the tame ſurrender of theſe troops "who (ſays he) if they had not loſt their "commander, might eaſily have retreated; but the marquis de Blanzac, who commanded under him, knowing nothing of "this misfortune, waited for his orders". The ſame general farther adds: the duke of Marlborough, judging rightly, that there were old troops, in that place, the overcoming of which would coſt him dear, made uſe of monſ. Deſnonville, his priſoner, to exhort them to accept of their lives. This (the truth of which we have no reaſon to doubt, the French themſelves allowing it, in their accounts) is another mark of the duke's conſummate prudence, in not unneceſſarily hazarding the lives of the troops under his command, and expoſing them to apparent danger, when the ſame end was to be attained by other means.

intirely

Q. Ann, An' 1704.

intirely routed them, and continued the chace for above an hour's march, as far as the village of Lutzingen. Here Prince Eugene cauſed his victorious foot to make a ſtand, to give time to his Cavalry, which had rallied a great way behind, to rejoin them. The Imperial horſe having joined their foot, the whole wing continued the chace, for the ſpace of an hour, and followed the enemy as far as the villages of Morſelingen, and Teiſſenhoven, where they made a ſhew as if they would ſtand their ground, that they might gain time to paſs a great moraſs, and reach Dillingen and Lawingen.

The whole wing purſues the enemy: And compleat the victory,

As ſoon as the action, on the left wing, was decided, the duke of Marlborough diſpos'd himſelf to march, with part of that wing towards the village of Oberklau, to charge the left of the enemy on their flank, and to ſuccor their own right, under Prince Eugene; but he was inform'd by the way, by one of that Prince's aids de camp, that there was no farther occaſion for it; that all was recovered, on his highneſs's ſide, and that the enemy had abandoned the villages of Oberklau, and Lutzingen, after having ſet them on fire.

Thus this ſtupendous battle, which, during near five hours, was fought with dubious fortune, ended, at laſt, in a moſt compleat victory, on that ſide, which, before the ingagement, had a viſible diſadvantage; and the ſucceſs of this great day, under the bleſſing of the all-ruling providence, may juſtly be attributed to the invincible courage and intrepidity of the confederate troops, and to the conduct and bravery of their generals; tho' the enemy themſelves, as I have ſaid above, were guilty of ſome overſights, which did not a little facilitate their overthrow (1) I might now give ſome account of what French writers have ſaid of this battle: but their relations (I mean thoſe of their writers of any reputation; for that of the Paris gazeteers is too ridiculous to deſerve our notice,) differ ſo little from ours, in material circumſtances at leaſt, that it would be ſuperfluous; eſpecially as I have already remark'd, wherein their difference chiefly conſiſts.

Juſt Encomium of the generals, officers, and troops.

As the whole action was chiefly managed and directed by the duke of Marlborough; ſo the greateſt ſhare of the glory is certainly his due: and indeed it was, at that time, accordingly, aſcribed to him, both by friends and enemies (2). Juſtice, however, obliges me to allow, that Prince Eugene's ſhare of the glory of this great day, tho' not equal to that of the duke, did not fall very ſhort of it: and it is acknowledg'd, on all hands, that they both performed the parts of conſummate generals. Both gave their commands with all the clearneſs and compoſedneſs imaginable; expoſed their perſons, wherever their preſence was neceſſary, with the greateſt unconcernment; and preſerved their temper and preſence of mind, in the moſt preſent dangers. The duke, for his part, very narrowly eſcaped being killed by a cannon-ball, which grazed under the belly of his horſe, and cover'd him with dirt. The Prince, was always in the thickeſt of the enemy's fire, and yet had the good fortune to come off unhurt.

Q. Ann, An' 1704.

The other generals of the confederate army, diſcharged their reſpective commands with great prudence, activity and valor: but, among the reſt, the hereditary Prince of Heſſe-Caſſel, and the Prince of Hanover, generals; Lumley, Hompeſch, and Bulau, lieutenant-generals; Wood and Villers, major-generals of horſe; the lord Cuts, the lord Orkney, and Ingoldſby, lieutenant-generals: the Prince of Holſtein-Beck, Wilkins, and St. Paul, major-generals; and Row, Ferguſon and Bernsdorff, brigadiers of foot, deſerve particularly to be mentioned, for their great bravery and prudent conduct.

All the troops, in general, fought with valor and unconcernedneſs; tho' their courage may have differed in ſome circumſtances, according to the particular temper of the ſeveral nations, which compoſed the confederate army. The Engliſh foot ſhew'd their natural fire, briſkneſs and intrepedity, in their ſeveral attacks of the village of Blenheim; the Pruſſian and Daniſh infantry, their innate firmneſs and reſolution, on Prince Eugene's ſide, where they recovered all; and the German horſe perform'd wonders in the center, particularly Bothmar's regiment of dragoons.

Praiſe and cenſure of the enemy.

Having thus recorded the deſerved praiſes of the generals and ſoldiers, on the ſide of the confederates, hiſtorical juſtice and impartiality call upon me to give the enemy likewiſe their due; and here I am obliged to allow, that as many of their troops as ingaged fought with vigor and courage; inſomuch that had their generals performed their parts, with anſwerable prudence and forecaſt, it is probable the fortune of that day might have remained undetermined. The Elector of Bavaria, it it true, maintained his reputation of a brave and experienc'd commander; nor was he ill-ſeconded by the marſhal de Marſin; but then the marſhal de Tallard, and the generals of the enemy's right wing, were guilty of two inexcuſable faults; firſt in throwing ſo great a number of their men, into the village of Blenheim, whereby their center was extreamly weakened; and, ſecondly, by ſuffering our troops to paſs the rivulet, without any conſiderable oppoſition, as I have already obſerved more at large above.

Compliments between the duke of Marborough and the marſhal de Tallard.

The ſame night, the marſhal, with two or three more, were carried in the duke's coach, to the Prince of Heſſe's quarter, where his grace, making him a viſit, the next day, told him, he was ſorry, that ſuch a misfortune ſhould fall perſonally on one for whom he had ſo great an eſteem. Monſieur de Tallard returned the compliment, by telling his grace, that he had the honor of having vanquiſhed the beſt troops in the world: to which the duke wittily replied; he thought his own troops were

(1) The victory being thus compleatly gain'd, beyond all human poſſibility of the enemy's making any farther ſtand, the duke, even while he was in hot purſuit of the fugitives, and had then been ſixteen hours on horſeback, thought his happineſs not compleat, tell he had diſpatch'd a meſſenger to England, that his royal miſtreſs, and the whole nation, might pertake with him, in the univerſal joy, occaſion'd by this ſucceſs: he, therefore, ſent away colonel Park, one of his aids de camp, with the following lines to his dutcheſs, written on horſeback, with a black-lead pencil, on a leaf torn out of his pocket-book.

Aug. 13, 1704.

"I have not time to ſay more, than to beg of you to preſent my humble duty to the Queen, and to let her Majeſty know, "that her army has had a glorious victory. Monſ. Tallard, and two other generals are in my coach, and I am following the "reſt. The bearer, my aid de camp, colonel Park, will give her Majeſty an account of what has paſs'd. I ſhall do it in a "day or two, by another more at large.

Marlborough.

(2) Prince Eugene himſelf was not more forward in ſending relations of this wonderful ſucceſs, to the ſeveral courts of Germany, than he was in attributing it chiefly to the valor and conduct of the duke of Marlborough; I, my ſelf, have ſeen one of them to the court of Zell, in which he is very ſanguine in his praiſes of our Engliſh Hero.

Q. Ann, An' 1704.

the beſt in the world, ſince they had conquered thoſe, which the marſhal accounted to be ſo (1).

The loſs of the enemy, in this battle.

The enemy's loſs, according to their own confeſſion, in ſeveral intercepted letters, amounted to near 40,000 men, in which number they included 4 or 5000 men they loſt in their precipitate retreat to the Black-Forreſt, either by deſertion, or by the purſuit of the Huſſars and Peaſants, who made a great ſlaughter of the ſtragglers. And, indeed, if it be conſidered, that after an exact computation, the number of the priſoners the confederates made, exceeded 13,000 men, (ſome accounts ſay, 14,000) of which above 1200 were officers, that they cut in pieces ten French battalions, on their right, and overthrew, into the Danube, near thirty ſquadrons of horſe and dragoons, moſt of whom were drowned, that their left wing did alſo ſuffer very much. eſpecially the foot; that, beſides ninety-five officers, who were found at Hochſtadt, Dillingen, and Lawingen, the number of the wounded, whom (as it has been ſaid, from good authority) they brought off from Ulm, exceeded 7000 men, of which 1000 were officers, and the great number of officers found buried in the villages thro' which the army afterwards marched. If all this, I ſay, be conſider'd, it muſt be own'd, that thoſe letters ſpoke within compas (2).

Tho' the French have been induſtrious enough in concealing their particular loſſes; yet it is known, that the count de Verue, general of the horſe was kill'd, monſieur de Buſen, and count de Clerambaut, lieutenant-generals drown'd in the Danube; that meſſieurs de Blainville and Sallaube, lieutenant-generals, died of their wounds; that monſieur de Marillac, brigadier, only ſon to the counſellor of ſtate of that name, the duke d'Humieres, brother to the duke d'Aumont, the marquiſſes d'Arpajou, de Hautefort and de Beringhen, were either killed or drowned, and that the marquis de la Baulme, only ſon to the marſhal de Tallard, was mortally wounded, and died a few days after the action.

The leaſt computation made of the loſs of the French, which can be ſaid to be any ways impartial, allow it to have been 30,000 men, viz. 14,000 killed and wounded in the field of battle, and drowned in the Danube, 13,000 priſoners, and 3000 deſerted, or otherwiſe loſt in the action and precipitate retreat.

The priſoners of note, beſides the marſhal de Tallard, were the marquis de Montperoux, Maitre de Camp, general of horſe; monſieur de Hautefeuille, Maitre de Camp, general of dragoons; marquis de Marivaux, lieutenant-general; marquis de Blanſac, marſhal de Camp of foot; monſ. de Valſeme, marſhal de Camp, marquis de la Valiere, marquis de Silly, brigadier-general of horſe; monſieur Deſnonville, monſieur d'Amigay, chevalier de Croſſi, monſieur de St. Second, monſieur de Signey, monſieur de Montfort, brigadiers-general of foot; monſieur Jolly, brigadier-general of dragoons, marquis de Seppeville, monſieur de la Maſſeliere, brigadiers-general of the Gens d'Armes; marquis de Saſſenage, Aid de Camp, and ſon-in-law to the marſhal de Tallard; marquis de St. Pouange, the chevalier de Ligondais, colonels of horſe; marquis de Nonan, colonel of the regiment of Provence, count de Tavannes, connt de Schack, monſieur Bliancourt, monſieur Sauboeuf, count de Lionne, marquis de Laſſy, baron d'Elſen, colonels of foot; marquis de Vaſſy, marquis d'Aurival, colonels of dragoons, Prince Maubecq of Lorrain, captain of horſe; marquis d'Auvet, captain of the Gens d'Armes; monſieur de Carman, ſecond lieutenant of the Gens d'Armes, and colonel; monſieur d'Ovillars, enſign of the Gens d'Armes; monſieur Suiſſac, Guidon of the Gens d'Armes: and the ſieurs de Breuil, and la Morcelaire, commiſſaries of the artillery.

Q. Ann. An' 1704.

Loſs of the confederates.

Beſides the priſoners, the confederates got many other enſigns of a compleat victory, as above one hundred pieces of canon, great and ſmall, twenty-four mortars, 129 colors, 171 ſtandards, ſeventeen pair of kettle-drums, 3600 tents, thirty-four coaches, 300 laden mules, two bridges of boats, fifteen pontons, twenty-four barrels, and eight caſks of ſilver.

This ſucceſs coſt the allies 4485 men kill'd, 7525 men wounded, and 273 loſt, or made priſoners. A great number in it ſelf, but an inconſiderable price for the infinite advantage which the allies gained by their victory. They loſt few men of note, except the Prince of Holſtein-Beck, and brigadier Row, who died of their wounds after, and Philip Dormer, lieutenant colonel of the Engliſh guards, major Frederick Cornwallis, lieutenant-colonel Dallyel. lieutenant-colonel Fetherſtonhaugh, major Creed, colonel John White, lord Forbes, captain, major Chenevix, who were killed in the fight. The principal perſons among their wounded were, the lord North and Gray, who loſt his right hand; the lord Mordaunt, who had his left arm ſhatterd, colonel Hamilton, lieutenant-colonel Levingſton, lieutenant-colonel Peyton, major Granville, major George Morgan, lieutenant-colonel Britton, major Armſtrong, and major Ketley.

Retreat of the Elector of Bavaria.

The Elector of Bavaria, and the marſhal de Marſin, made an orderly retreat, with the left wing of their army, behind the moraſs of Hochſtadt, where they reſted ſome hours, and, that night,

(1) This victory, tho' as great and compleat in itſelf, as any ever was gained, was ſtill greater in it's conſequences. It was introductory to all the ſucceſs which follow'd, during the courſe of this war, either in Italy or Flanders; and certain it is, that had it not been for this victory, the Emperor could not have maintained himſelf, in his dignity and eſtates, and muſt, this very year, have been forced from his capital; for the Hungarians were now almoſt univerſally in rebellion; and whilſt the Elector of Bavaria penetrated into Upper-Auſtria, and had taken Lintz, the chief town thereof, the Hungarians ravaged the Lower-Auſtria, and even threatned Vienna itſelf: for the rebels, at this time, wanted nothing but artillery, and other neceſſaries for a ſiege, to have taken both that, and the ſtrongeſt towns in Hungary; which deficiency would ſoon have been ſupplied by French mony, had not the glorious day of Blenheim prevented it, and obliged the monarch of France to employ his treaſures in recruiting his forces, and filling his magazines, where it was more immediately neceſſary. The Emperor was, alſo, at this time, ſo low, that his forces in Italy, upon the Po, were almoſt dwindled into nothing, and the poor remains of them had been obliged to retire into the Trentin, while the duke of Savoy was very hard preſs'd, by the duke de Vendome, and his whole country in great danger of being made an abſolute conqueſt: but this great and unexpected ſucceſs gave a new turn to the poſture of affairs, on every ſide; and Lewis the Great had afterwards ſuch a train of ill ſucceſs, that he had, in the courſe of this war, as much reaſon to complain of the frowns of fortune, as he had before to exult in the ſmiles thereof. And tho', in all the advices, which we received from the Emperor's territories, before this battle, great care was taken to put the beſt color upon every thing, in favour of his imperial Majeſty, and to gloſs over his deplorable circumſtances; yet, in his letter of thanks to the duke of Marborough, on account of this victory, he owns them pretty freeely. Lediard's life of Marlborough, Vol. I. p. 393.

(2) This alſo agrees with what monſieur de Marſin wrote to the King of France ſoon after, viz. that the Elector of Bavaria, and himſelf had, the night before, conducted to Ulm thirty-one battalions, and ſixty-two ſquadrons, which is all that I can find eſcaped from this battle of the French and Bavarians, except Stragglers: and we need not doubt, but monſieur de Marſin, made the beſt of his ſtory to the King, as well in this, as when he told him, in his letter, that they had loſt 10,000 men, beſides what were taken, and very many wounded. Lediard's life of Marlborough, Vol. I. p. 396.

cauſed

Q. Ann, An' 1704.

caused their bagage to pass the Danube, and sent their horse towards Ulm: the next morning, before break of day, they march'd, with their infantry, and pass'd the Danube, at Lawingen: and the Elector sent orders to his troops in Augsburg, to quit that city, and join him at Ulm. The night after the battle, the confederate army lay upon their arms, on this side the morass of Hochstadt, over against the Elector of Bavaria, and, the next day, the army made a small motion, and came to Steinheim, where they remained encamp'd four or five days, to look after their wounded men, and take care of their prisoners (1).

Motions of the confederate army.

The face of affairs being now wholly changed in these parts, the generals resolved no longer to amuse themselves with the siege of Ingolstadt, which, with the whole country of Bavaria, they were sensible must now fall of themselves; but to join all their forces to streighten the enemy as much as possible, and oblige the French to quit Germany and repass the Rhine. The 16th of August, the French garison in Augsburg quitted that place, which, thereupon, desiring the protection of the duke of Marlborough, his grace sent a detachment to take possession of it: and Memmingen, a free imperial city of Suabia, soon after, followed the example of Augsburg.

Augsburg and Memmingen submit to the duke of Marlborough.

Farther proceedings of the confederate army.

The 17th, a thanksgiving was celebrated thro'-out the whole confederate army: and, the next day, the repartition of the prisoners being made (2), the marshal de Tallard, with most of those of distinction, were sent from Hochstadt towards Francfort, under a guard of forty English horse. The 21st, the confederate army came to Sefelingen, near Ulm, from which place the Elector of Bavaria was retired, up the Danube, towards the Iller, having left a garison of four French and five Bavarian battalions; and the 24th, Prince Lewis of Baden came to confer with Prince Eugene, and the duke of Marlborough.

The 25th, these three generals had a long conference, wherein they concerted the farther operations of the campain; and it was resolved; "that, seeing the enemy were returning towards "the Rhine, all the confederate forces should likewise march that way, except twenty-three battalions and some squadrons, which should be left, "under the command of general Thungen, to "carry on the siege of Ulm, and that count "Wratislau should continue in the camp before "that place, to manage the negociations with "the Electress, who made some overtures, to deliver, not only Ulm, but the whole Electorate "of Bavaria, upon certain conditions".

The French having repass'd the black forest, and afterwards retired over the Rhine; the confederate army followed them: and, the 12th of September, Prince Lewis marched with the troops which were appointed to besiege Landau, to that place, in order to invest it; while the duke of Marlborough and Prince Eugene took possession of the camp of Crone-weissemburg, on the little river Lauter, to cover the siege. The same night, the duke of Marlborough received an express from general Thungen, with advice that Ulm surrendered the 11th (3).

Landau invested.

Ulm surrender'd.

Q. Ann, An' 1704.

The trenches were opened before Landau the 16th; but that place holding out longer than was expected, the duke of Marlborough march'd, with part of the army, towards Triers, and arrived, the 28th, at Hermerskel, within six leagues of Triers, where three deputies of that city waited on his grace, and acquainted him, "that as the French "had still 300 men, in the fort of St. Martin, they "were apprehensive of some ill usage, if his grace "did not prevent it". Upon this account, the duke marched, the 29th, before break of day, with all the horse, and four battalions of foot; and, about eleven o' clock, his Vanguard appearing in sight of Triers, the French abandoned the fort, having thrown their ammunition, and some corn into the Mosel. The duke's dragoons pursued them to the banks of the river, and took part of their bagage, with some prisoners. The enemy had no sooner pass'd the river, than they burnt the bridges, and, in all probability, would have done more mischief, if the duke had not come so suddenly to dislodge them.

The duke of Marlborough's expedition on the Mosel.

His grace being thus possessed of that important post, he summoned a great number of pioneers, to work on the fortifications of Triers. He went, the next day, to view the ground about Saar, and caused a camp to be mark'd at Consarbrück, on that river, for the horse to cover those that work'd on the fortifications of Triers, whither the cavalry march'd accordingly, the first of November, N. S. The same day, the duke made the repartition of the winter-quarters, to the several generals under him, and, in the afternoon, went towards Traerbach, accompanied by the hereditary Prince of Hesse-Cassel, and other generals. They lay, that night, at Fels, the next Day, at Nimeguen, and came to Bern-cassel, the third of November, about noon. His grace went immediately to the rising grounds, near Traerbach, to take a narrow view of the place, and re-view'd the Dutch, which were lately arrived, in the neighbourhood, from the Maese; and having given the necessary directions for the siege of Traerbach, the care of which was committed to the Prince of Hesse-Cassel, his grace set out, the next day, early, on his return to the camp at Crone-Weissemburg.

His grace came, that night to Kern, the next day to Kayserslauteren, and, the 6th, at night, to the camp before Landau, where he found the besiegers masters of the counterscarp, on which they had raised some batteries; and more being perfected, the next day, they had about sixty pieces of canon firing to make a breach. The 8th of November, the duke returned to Weissemburg, somewhat displeased with the slowness, with which the siege of Landau was carried on; and considering, that the French had sent all their horse of the houshold, from their camp at Haguenau, to put them into winter-quarters, his grace ordered

The duke returns to Landau.

And sends the English cavalry towards Holland.

(1) It may here very naturally be ask'd; why, after so compleat a victory, and the great consternation and confusion the remains of the enemy's army was thrown into, the confederate generals, upon their abandoning the places they had seiz'd, did not cut off their retreat towards, and over the Rhine again, and why they did not surround them in a country, where victory had now render'd the allies their masters and superiors: to this, it may be answered; that their troops were not only very much fatigued, but in want of several sorts of provisions; that they were very much embaras's'd with their great number of prisoners; and that they could not know what succors or re-inforcements the enemy might meet with in their march, in which, at least, they would find the marshal de Villeroy, with his little army. Lediard's life of Marlborough. Vol. I. p. 446.

(2) The duke of Marlborough's share amounted to 5678 men, and that of Prince Eugene to 5514 in all 11,192; besides 3000 Germans, of the regiments of Greder and Surlauben, who listed themselves voluntarily in the service of the allies. Lediard's life of Marlborough, Vol. II. p. 448.

(3) The Imperialists found in Ulm, 222 pieces of brass cannon, 12 iron guns, 25 brass-mortars, 1200 barrels of powder, with other stores and provisions, in great abundance: a seasonable supply for carrying on the siege of Landau. Lediard's Life of Marlborough, Vol. I. p. 454.

the

Q. Ann, An' 1704.

the Engliſh cavalry to march from Crone-Weiſſemburg towards Holland.

A Treaty concluded with the Electreſs of Bavaria.

The 10th of November, the treaty of accomodation, between the Emperor and the Electreſs of Bavaria, was concluded, by the King of the Romans, and the deputies of her Electoral highneſs, who was to ſurrender all the towns, in her Poſſeſſion, to his Imperial Majeſty, to continue at Munich, with a guard of 400 men, and to have a yearly penſion allowed her, out of the revenues of that Electorate, for the ſupport of her court and family. And this was one of the immediate conſequences of the ever-memorable victory obtained by the duke of Marlborough, at Blenheim.

The duke of Marlborough ends his campain;

About the middle of November, the duke of Marlborough, being ſenſible, that the ſiege of Landau would not laſt much longer, took his leave of the King of the Romans, and the other generals, ordered the Engliſh foot to decamp, and march towards the Rhine, in order to be imbark'd for Holland; and having given the neceſſary directions for the winter-quarters, of the reſt of the forces, under his command, reſolved to crown his glorious campain, by an importatant negociation with the King of Pruſſia in favor of the duke of Savoy; In order to which, his grace ſet out from Weiſſemburg, on his Journey to Berlin, the 15th of November.

And goes to Berlin.

Landau ſurrender'd.

The 23d, the garriſon of Landau, be at a parly, and Hoſtages being exchanged, the King of the Romans granted the gariſon very honorable terms (1); in purſuance of which they delivered one of the gates, the 25th, and the 26th, marched out of the place, to the number of 3400 men, which were left out of 7000 of which the gariſon conſiſted, at the begining of the ſiege. The loſs of the beſiegers was leſs in proportion; for they had not above 2000 men killed, and about twice as many wounded.

The duke of Marlborough arrives at Berlin;

The duke of Marlborough arrived at Berlin, the twenty-ſecond of November, in the evening, having been received, in all the towns, thro' which he paſs'd, lying moſtly in the territories of the landgrave of Heſſe-Caſſel, the duke of Wolfenbutel, the Elector of Hanover and the King of Pruſſia, with extraordinary marks of reſpect. The duke was ſucceſsful in his negociations at the court of Pruſſia, and, among other things, obtain'd, that 8000 Pruſſians ſhould march into Italy, to ſerve there, for the relief of the duke of Savoy, under the command of Prince Eugene; and with this reinforcement and other aſſiſtances procured him by the duke of Marlborough, his highneſs afterwards ſaved Italy from the ravages of the French, and relieved the duke of Savoy, who was beſieged in Turin.

Returns to Holland.

The duke returned from Berlin, by the way of Hanover, to Holland, and arrived the 10th of December, at Amſterdam. The 12th in the morning, his grace having received all poſſible marks of honor, at Amſterdam, ſet out for the Hague, being ſaluted with a triple diſcharge of all the canon, as he had been at his arrival, and with the like acclamations of Joy from the people.

The ſiege of Traerbach.

In the mean time, the Prince of Heſſe-Caſſel was carrying on the ſiege of Traerbach, where the allies found as great reſiſtance, as they had met with at Landau, in proportion to the bigneſs of the place, and the number of the gariſon. The caſtle of Traerbach, a very ſtrong fortreſs, on the Moſel, was unveſted, by orders of the duke of Marlborough, the beginning of November, N. S. and the batteries began to play, the 18th of that month. Q. Ann, An. 1704.

The badneſs of the weather, and the loſs of the baron de Trogne, the chief engineer of the States who was ſhot by the Prince of Heſſe's ſide, giving the neceſſary orders, were great diſcouragements to his highneſs, to purſue the ſiege of Traerbach; nevertheleſs, that Prince cauſed the attacks to be carried on with vigor, and, at length, obliged the gariſon to ſurrender, the 20th of December, N. S. tho' on honourable conditions. Beſide the governor, who died of his wounds, the French loſt 350 men, out of 600 men, which was the number of the gariſon, before the ſiege. As for the allies, they had about 1000 men kill'd or wounded. Traerbach ſurrender'd.

The campain in Flanders produced this year very little. General d' Auverquerque bombarded Namur, in order to deſtroy the enemy's magazines there; and baron Spar, on the ſide of proper Flanders, bombarded Bruges. and took the fort Iſabella near Sluys. Towards the latter end of the year, the Elector of Bavaria arrived in the French army, with ſome remains of his defeat at Blenheim. That Prince like a puſhing gameſter, who attempts to regain all his loſſes, by ventring his laſt ſtake, had formed a deſign to attack general d'Auverquerque, in his camp at Borcholm, the 28th of October; but was prevented by the marſhal de Villeroy, who, when all other arguments could not prevail upon him to lay aſide his deſign, ſhewed him the French King's poſitive orders to the contrary, which was as a thunder bolt to his Electoral highneſs, who breath'd nothing but revenge: and, upon this mortification, he immediately left the army, and went to Bruſſels. The campain in Flanders.

Affairs of Italy.

In Italy, the duke of Savoy had a melancholy campain, loſing place after place; but he ſupported his affairs, with great conduct, and ſhewed a firmneſs in his misfortunes beyond what could have been imagined. Verceil and Yvrea gave the duke de Vendôme the trouble of tedious ſieges; they ſtood their ground as long as poſſible. But the duke of Savoy's army was not ſtrong enough to raiſe thoſe ſieges, ſo both places, at length fell. The French, on their ſide, had not troops enough both to carry on the war and to leave gariſons in thoſe places; ſo they demoliſhed the fortifications; and, after they had ſucceeded ſo far, ſat down before Verue, at the end of October; which they did not take till after a ſiege of five months. The duke of Savoy poſted his army at Creſcentino, over againſt it, on the other ſide of the Po. He had a bridge of communication, and went often into the place, during the ſiege, to animate his troops, and give neceſſary orders. The ſick and wounded were carried away, and freſh men put in their ſtead. This ſiege proved very famous, the gariſon being often changed, and always well ſupplied. The French army ſuffered very much, by continuing the ſiege all the winter, and they were at a vaſt charge to carry it on. The bridge of communication was, at length, after many unſucceſsful attempts, cut off, and the duke of Savoy being thus ſeparated from the place, left it to it's own defenſe. He complained much of the Emperor's failing in his ingagements: but, in a diſcourſe on that ſubject, with the Queen's envoy, he ſaid, "tho' he was abandoned by his allies, he "would not abandon himſelf (2).

(1) The King of the Romans (ſays biſhop Burnet) came before Laudau, to have the honor of taking the place. His behavior there did not ſerve to raiſe his character. He was not often in the place of danger, and was contented to look on, at a great and ſafe diſtance. He was always beſet with prieſts, and ſuch a face of ſuperſtition and bigotry appeared about him, that it very much damp'd the hopes which were given of him. Hiſtory of his own times, Vol. II. p. 386.

(2) The war in Hungary was in a great meaſure, the occaſion of the misfortunes in Italy. There was, indeed a negociation ſet on foot this ſummer, between the Emperor and the male-contents, the Engliſh and Dutch miniſters acting as mediators: but after a great deal of time ſpent in treaties, the war was renewed; and the troops the Emperor had promiſed to ſend to Italy, were ordered to re inforce the army in Hungary, and to act againſt the male-contents, whereby the whole burden of the Italian war, lay upon the Engliſh and Dutch.

I have

Q. ANN, AN' 1704.

The campain in Portugal.

I have already given an account of King Charles's landing in Spain, with a body of Engliſh and Dutch forces, commanded by the duke of Schomberg, which were to act, in conjunction with the forces of Portugal, againſt Spain. It had been agreed, that the greateſt part of the Engliſh cavalry ſhould be provided with horſes in Spain; but when duke Schomberg came to demand them, in order to enter upon action, there appear'd to be a great deficiency, ſome accounts ſay, of at leaſt two thirds, and thoſe which were provided were too light, and not fit for ſervice. There was, likewiſe, another cauſe why little or no ſervice was done in theſe parts; I mean a miſunderſtanding between the generals in point of command. The King of Portugal expected the Engliſh general would be commanded by the governor of every province, where the army happened to be; and would not ſuffer the Engliſh and Dutch generals to command their own forces, or keep them in a body: but diſtributed them into his poor frontier-towns, which were not tenable; where ſeveral regiments were made priſoners by the French and Spaniards, who invaded Portugal with an army of 22,000 men. The Portugueſe general, the marquis das Minas, indeavored to give the Spaniards a diverſion by marching into Caſtille; but the duke of Berwick treated him with contempt, and having taken Caſtle-David, in a few days, made the gariſon priſoners of war, with which this inſignificant campain ended. The duke of Schomberg being weary of his command in theſe circumſtances, and the Portugueſe, on the other hand, thinking he aſſumed too much, he was recall'd, and the earl of Galway ſent thither in his place. I now return to England.

The States-general congratulate her Majeſty on the victory of Blenheim.

The 20th of Auguſt, O. S. monſ. Vryberg, envoy extraordinary from the States-general, deliver'd to her Majeſty, at Windſor, a leter from their High-mightineſſes, and, by expreſs order from his maſters, congratulated her Majeſty upon the late victory obtained, by the army of the allies, under the valiant and wiſe conduct of the duke of Marlborough. Q. ANN, AN' 1704.

A public thanſgiving appointed.

The joyful news of the great victory obtained by her Majeſty's forces, and thoſe of her allies, had been brought over to England, ſome days before, firſt by colonel Park, and ſoon after by the lord Tunbridge, who both attended the duke of Marlborough, as his aids de camp, on that great day. Hereupon her Majeſty, being deeply ſenſible of this general bleſſing, "and moſt devoutly acknowledging the goodneſs of ALMIGHTY GOD, who "had afforded her his protection and aſſiſtance, "in the juſt war, in which ſhe was ingaged," appointed the 7th of September, to be obſerved throughout this kingdom, as a day of public thankſgiving.

Great rejoycings throughout all England, on that day.

As this victory was, in all its circumſtances, the moſt glorious and conſiderable that had been gained in many ages, the rejoycings in London and Weſtminſter were ſuitable to the great occaſion; and her Majeſty's ſubjects gave all the demonſtrations imaginable of their affection to her Majeſty's perſon, and zeal for her government. This feſtival was obſerved, in all the other parts of her Majeſty's dominions, if not with the ſame ſolemnity, yet with as great affection and loyalty; and both before that day, and many months after, her Majeſty's court was throng'd by deputies, from all the corporations and public ſocieties, in the three kingdoms, and in the remoteſt plantations, who waited on her Majeſty with congratulatory addreſſes, for the glorious ſucceſſes of her Majeſty's arms, under the wiſe conduct of the duke of Marlborough. Nor did the forein miniſters, in England, omit to compliment her Majeſty, on that great occaſion.

Numerous congratulatory addreſſes preſented to her Majeſty.

End of the TWENTY-SIXTH BOOK.

BOOK XXVII.

Containing the ſecond part of the reign of Queen ANN.

The parliament meets.

THE 24th of October, the parliament met at Weſtminſter, purſuant to their laſt prorogation, and the Queen being come to the houſe of peers, and the houſe of commons attending, her Majeſty made the following ſpeech to both houſes:

The Queen's ſpeech to both houſes.

My lords and gentlemen,

"The great and remarkable ſucceſs, with which "GOD has bleſſed our arms this ſummer, has "ſtir'd up our good ſubjects, in all parts of the "kingdom, to expreſs their unanimous joy and "ſatisfaction; and I aſſure myſelf, you are all "come diſpoſed to do every thing that is neceſſary "for the effectual proſecution of the war; nothing being more obvious, than that a timely improvement of our preſent advantages will inable "us to procure a laſting foundation of ſecurity for "England, and a firm ſupport for the liberty of "Europe. This is my aim; I have no intereſt, "nor never will have any, but to promote the good "and happineſs of all my ſubjects.

Gentlemen of the houſe of commons,

"I muſt deſire ſuch ſupplies of you, as may be "requiſite for carrying on the next year's ſervice, "both by ſea and land, and for punctually performing our treaties with all our allies; the rather, for that ſome of them have juſt pretenſions "depending ever ſince the laſt war; and I need "not put you in mind of what importance it is "to preſerve the public credit, both abroad and "at home.

"I believe you will find ſome charges neceſſary "next year, which were not mentioned in the "laſt ſeſſion, and ſome extraordinary expences "incur'd ſince, which were not then provided "for.

"I aſſure you, that all the ſupplies you give, "with what I am able to ſpare from my own expences, ſhall be carefully applied to the beſt "advantage, for the public ſervice; and I earneſtly "recommend to you a ſpeedy diſpatch, as that "which, under the good providence of GOD, we muſt "chiefly

Q. Ann, An' 1704.

" chiefly depend upon, to diſappoint the earlieſt " deſigns of our enemies.

My lords and gentlemen;

" I cannot but tell you, how eſſential it is for " attaining thoſe great ends abroad, of which we " have ſo hopeful a proſpect, that we ſhould be in- " tirely united at home.

" It is plain, our enemies have no incourage- " ment left, but what ariſes from their hopes of our " diviſions. It is, therefore, your concern not " to give the leaſt countenance to thoſe hopes.

" My inclinations are to be kind and indulgent " to you all: I hope you will do nothing to in- " danger the loſs of this opportunity, which God " has put into our hands, of ſecuring ourſelves and " all Europe, and that there will be no contention " among you, but who ſhall moſt promote the " public welfare.

" Such a temper as this, in all your proceedings, " cannot fail of ſecuring your reputation both at " home and abroad.

" This would make me a happy Queen, whoſe " utmoſt indeavors ſhall never be wanting to make " you a happy and flouriſhing people."

Addreſs of the lords.

The next day, the lords attended her Majeſty with an addreſs of thanks for her ſpeech; declaring, " they would improve, to the utmoſt, " the bleſſed opportunity put into their hands; " and congratulated the ſucceſs of her Majeſty's " arms, under the conduct of the duke of Marl- " borough."

To this addreſs, her Majeſty returned the following anſwer:

The Queen's anſwer.

My lords,

" I am very ſenſible of the great duty and af- " fection which you have expreſs'd in the ſeveral " particulars of this addreſs.

" I return you my hearty thanks for your con- " gratulation of our great ſucceſs, and for the " aſſurances of your readineſs to concur in pro- " ſecuting it effectually".

Addreſs of the commons.

The commons, likewiſe, preſented an addreſs to her Majeſty, the ſame day; in which they " congratulated her Majeſty, as well upon the " victory obtained over the united force of France " and Bavaria, by the arms of her Majeſty and " her allies, under the command, and by the " courage and conduct of the duke of Marl- " borough; as upon the victory obtained by her " Majeſty's fleet, under the command, and by " the courage and conduct of ſir George Rooke. " They aſſured her, they came diſpoſed to do " every thing that was neceſſary, for the effectual " proſecution of the war, and that they would " give ſuch a ſpeedy diſpatch to the public " buſineſs, as might inable her Majeſty to purſue " the advantages ſhe had obtained over the com- " mon enemy: that they would uſe their utmoſt " indeavors, by all proper meaſures, to prevent " all diviſions amongſt them; and they would " have no contention, but who ſhould promote " and eſtabliſh the public welfare, both in church " and ſtate (1)".

The Queen, in anſwer, " returned them many " thanks for this addreſs, and for the aſſurances " they gave her, of diſpatching the ſupplies, and " avoiding all diviſions, both which, as they were " exceeding acceptable to her, ſo they would be " advantageous to them, and beneficial to the " public.

Q. Ann, An' 1704.

Soldiers and ſeamen rewarded.

The commons, having afterwards taken the ſervices of the army and navy into their conſideration, deſired the Queen, on the 2d of November, by an unanimous vote, to beſtow her bounty on the ſeamen and land-forces, who had behaved themſelves ſo gallantly; and her Majeſty gave directions accordingly for diſtributing a bounty among them.

Great ſupplies granted.

The commons then went upon the ſupply with ſuch zeal and application, that, before the end of November, the ſums neceſſary for maintaining both the navy and the army were voted; which I ſhall, therefore, give the reader an account of, in one connexion: viz. " for maintaining 40,000 ſeamen, " including 8000 marines, 4 l. per man, per month, " for thirteen months, amounting to 280,000 l. For " the ordinary of the navy 100,000 l. and 40,000 l. " for ordnance-ſtores for the ſea-ſervice, over and " above the proportion of 4 l. per man. For " making a wharf and ſtorehouſe at Portſmouth, " 10,000 l. For 40,000 land-men, to act in con- " junction with the allies, 885,193 l. For 10,000 " additional forces, for the ſame ſervice, 177,511 l. " For maintaining 10,000 men, to act in con- " junction with the Portugueſe, 222,379 l. For " her Majeſty's proportion of ſubſidies to her " allies, 370,119 l. For her Majeſty's ſubſidy to " the duke of Savoy, from October 3, to Decem- " ber 25, 1703, 40,000 l. For levy-mony for " recruiting the horſes of the Engliſh horſe and " dragoons, loſt at Schellenberg and Blenheim, " 6725 l. For recruiting the men and horſes, of " the foreiners in her Majeſty's pay, in the ſame " battles, 24,665 l. For an additional regiment, " on the Portugueſe eſtabliſhment, 5136 l. For " ſurgeons in the hoſpital in Portugal, for the year " 1704, 244 l. For expences in the Portugueſe " war, laſt year, not provided for by parliament, " 68,546 l. For guards and gariſons in England, " 357,000 l. For the ordnance of the land-ſer- " vice, 120,000 l. For tranſports, 60,000 l. For " circulating Exchequer-bills, 4000 l. And for " 5000 additional forces, to be raiſed in conjunc- " tion with our allies, to ſerve with the fleet, for " their levy-mony, 11,244 l. For their pay, for " one year, 87,125 l. In all 4,670,486. l.

Ways and means.

Towards raiſing this large ſum they granted a land-tax of four-ſhillings in the pound, which produced about two millions; the duty upon malt, which might raiſe about 800,000 l. and 3700 l. per week, out of the exciſe: 877,930 l. by the ſale of annuities for ninety-nine years, at fifteen years purchaſe: a ſubſidy on wines and merchandizes for four years, as a fund for raiſing 646,957 l. for the uſe of the navy, and continued the duty on low wines.

The land-tax bill paſs'd.

There appeared, this ſeſſion, ſo general an inclination in both houſes, to give an early diſpatch to the mony-bill, that, the 9th of December, the land-tax-bill received the royal aſſent: on which occaſion, the Queen made a ſhort ſpeech to both houſes, in which ſhe, in particular, returned thanks to the houſe of commons, for " their early diſpatch of ſo " great a part of the neceſſary ſupplies, which ſhe " look'd upon to be a ſure pledge of their affections " for her ſervice."

The occaſional bill again rejected by the lords.

The occaſional conformity-bill was again brought early upon the carpet, this ſeſſion; and as it was expected, that the houſe of peers would again reject it, it was propoſed, by ſome members, to tack it to the mony-bill: however, upon better conſideration, the commons ſent it up ſingly; and it met with the ſame fate the former had done (1).

(1) The lords addreſs was univerſally applauded: but abundance of perſons were ſhock'd with that of the commons, particularly with their uſing the ſame terms, to commend the duke of Marlborough's victories, and the advantages gain'd by ſir George Rooke. It was alſo obſerved, that the promiſes the commons made to the Queen, of " uſing their utmoſt indeavors to " prevent all diviſions", was, in a manner, reſtrained, by the addition of " all proper methods", which many look'd upon as ominous. Boyer's reign of Queen Ann. p. 161.

to

Q. Ann, An' 1704.

The lord Haverſham's ſpeech.

At the ſame time the commons were upon this bill, the lords were taken up with an affair that made no leſs noiſe, I mean the lord Haverſham's ſpeech, which was uſher'd in with great pomp. His lordſhip having, the 20th of November, acquainted the peers, that he had matters of great importance to lay before them; but that he deſired it might be in a full houſe; all the lords in town, and in the neighborhood, were ſummon'd to attend three days afterwards, when he made that remarkable ſpeech to them. "His lordſhip's chief topics "were, the States withdrawing part of their quota "of men of war from the fleet in the Streights, "a little before the battle of Malaga; the loſs of "our ſhiping for want of convoys, and the ſuf-"fering the royal aſſent to be given to the Scotiſh "act of ſecurity. He congratulated the peers on "the duke of Marlborough's victory, and ſir "George Rook's deliverance, as he term'd it; "obſerving that a ſquadron of Dutch were call'd "away juſt before the battle of Malaga, to be "convoy to their merchants; while neither the "Engliſh trade or coaſts were protected; but the "enemy inſulted us, tho' we pretended to be maſters "at ſea, even in the channel. He alſo mention'd "the exportation of our coin, as a grievance; "but chiefly inveigh'd againſt the miniſtry, for "ſuffering the act of ſecurity to paſs in Scotland, "calling it a bill of excluſion: he obſerved there "were two occaſions of all troubles, much diſ-"content and great poverty; and both theſe were "to be found in Scotland: that their gentry were "brave but diſcontented; their common people "very ſtout, and very numerous, but very poor: "and what (ſaid he) may ſuch a multitude, ſo "armed and diſciplined, as the act of ſecurity "directs, with ſuch leaders, do; eſpecially when no "promiſes, no aſſiſtance would be wanting, which "France could give? concluding, that he look'd "upon it of the laſt conſequence to England, that "there ſhould be the leaſt ſhadow or pretence of "a neceſſity to keep up regular ſtanding troops, "in this kingdom, in time of peace.

Various effects of this ſpeech.

This ſpeech had a very various effect upon the lord; and, tho' it was pretty generally approved, as to that part which related to the Scotiſh affairs, yet the reflections it contain'd, on the preſent miniſtry, was diſtaſteful to many: ſome thought it derogatory to the duke of Marlborough's glory, that Prince Eugene was named in that ſpeech, before his grace, in the mention of an action, wherein he had acted but a ſecond part. It was, however, ſeconded by the earls of Rocheſter and Nottingham, and the firſt lamenting the ill conſequences of the exportation of the coin, the lord-treaſurer, who took it as, in ſome meaſure, a reflection on himſelf, ſaid: "It "would not be difficult to demonſtrate, that there "never was ſuch a plenty of mony in England, "as at preſent, yet there was a ſure way to increaſe "that plenty, and prevent the exportation of coin; "and that was by clapping up a peace with France: "but then (added he, very ſhrewdly) I leave it "to the conſideration of any wiſe man, whether "we will not thereby be ſhortly in danger of "loſing not only all our coin, but all our land to "boot?

Debates on the Scotiſh affairs.

The moſt material part of the lord Haverſham's ſpeech being the Scotiſh buſineſs, the 29th of November was appointed to take it under conſideration; on which day, the Queen went, the firſt time, to the houſe of peers incognito. In the courſe of the debate, the earl of Nottingham having reflected on the memory of King William, with relation to the treaty of partition, the lord Sommers roſe up and ſaid; "It was unbecoming a member "of that houſe, to ſully the memory of ſo great "a Prince; and he doubted not, but a man, who "could reflect on King William, before his ſuc-"ceſſor, would do the ſame by her preſent Majeſty "when ſhe was gone". As to the main buſineſs of the day, the earls of Nottingham and Rocheſter urged the ill conſequences of the act of ſecurity paſſed in Scotland; and it being anſwered, "that "it was granted to prevent the danger of a rebel-"lion in that kingdom;" it was replied; "that "if the Scots had rebell'd, they would have re-"bell'd without arms; whereas, if they had a "mind to rebel now, this act had legally ſup-"plied them with neceſſaries to ſupport their re-"bellion." The moſt moderate among the lords repreſented, that they ought rather now to apply a preſent remedy to the known evil, than to loſe time in inquiring, whether or no it might have been prevented: and after having ſpent ſeveral days on this affair, the grand committee of the peers came to theſe reſolutions: "that the beſt method to "prevent the inconveniencies, which might hap-"pen by the late acts paſs'd in Scotland, was by "making ſuch laws here, for that purpoſe; that "(2) the Queen being inabled, by act of parlia-"ment, on the part of England, to name com-"miſſioners to treat about an union with Scotland, "provided that theſe powers be not put in execu-"tion, 'till commiſſioners ſhould be named, on the "part of Scotland, by the parliament there. That "(3) Scotſmen ſhould not injoy the privileges "of Engliſhmen, except ſuch as are ſettled in this "kingdom, in Ireland, and the plantations, and "ſuch as are, and ſhall be, in our land and ſea "ſervice, until an union be had, or the ſucceſſion "ſettled as in England: (4) that the bringing of cattle "from Scotland into England be prevented. That "(5) the lord-admiral, or commiſſioners of the "admiralty, for the time being, be required to "give orders to her Majeſty's ſhips, to take ſuch "ſhips as they ſhall find trading from Scotland to "France, or to the ports of any of her Majeſty's "enemies, and that cruiſers be appointed for that "end: and (6) that the exportation of Engliſh "wool into Scotland be carefully hindered." Theſe reſolutions being approved by the houſe, the judges were ordered to reduce them into bills: one of which, for an intire union with Scotland, being read a third time, and paſs'd, the 20th of December, was ſent down to the commons for their concurrence.

Q. Ann, An' 1704.

Reſolutions of the peers thereupon.

The 9th of December, the lords addreſs'd her Majeſty, "that ſhe would give orders for the for-"tifying Newcaſtle, Tinmouth, Berwick, Carliſle, "and Hull; that the militia of the four northern "counties might be diſciplined, and provided with "arms; that a competent number of regular troops "might be kept upon the northern borders of "England, and in the north of Ireland; and that "the laws for diſarming Papiſts might be put in "execution." To which addreſs, her Majeſty gave a favorable anſwer.

Addreſs of the lords.

The houſe of commons, in the mean time, having, the 12th of the ſame month, conſidered, in a grand committee, the ſtate of the nation, with regard to Scotland, reſolved, the next day; "that

Reſolutions of the commons.

(1) Upon the queſtion whether it ſhould be read a ſecond time, it was carried in the negative by a majority of ſeventy-one voices againſt fifty.

(2) This was ſuggeſted by the lord Wharton: (3) this by the lord Hallifax; (4) this by the lord Ferrers; (5) this by the earl of Torrington: and (6) this by the lord Mohun. Boyer's reign of Queen Ann, p. 165.

"a bill

Q. Ann, An' 1704.

" a bill be brought in for the effectual ſecuring the " kingdom of England, from the apparent dangers " that might ariſe from ſeveral acts lately paſs'd " in the parliament of Scotland:" and, the 11th of the inſuing month, mr. Conyers reported, from the committee of the whole houſe, to whom it was refered to conſider of heads for that bill, the reſolutions they had come to, which were as follows; 1. " that it be one head of the bill, to inable her " Majeſty to nominate and appoint commiſſioners " for England, for an union between the two " kingdoms; 2. that all natives of the kingdom " of Scotland, except ſuch as are ſettled, and ſhall " continue inhabitants of England, or the domi- " nions thereunto belonging, or at preſent in the ſer- " vice of the army and navy, ſhall be reputed as " aliens, unleſs the ſucceſſion to the crown of Scot- " land be ſettled on the Princeſs Sophia, of Han- " over, and the heirs of her body being Proteſtants; " 3. that a more effectual proviſion be made to " prevent the exportation of wool, from England " and Ireland, into Scotland; 4. that proviſion be " made to prevent the importation of Scotiſh linen " into England and Ireland, and to permit the ex- " portation of the linen manufactures of Ireland, " in Engliſh bottoms, into her Majeſty's planta- " tions in the Weſt-Indies; 5. that immediate " proviſion be made, to prevent the conveying of " horſes, arms and ammunition, from England or " Ireland, into Scotland; 6. that all Proteſtant " freeholders of the ſix northern counties of Eng- " land, be permited to furniſh themſelves with " arms." Theſe reſolutions, being twice read, were all agreed to, by the houſe, except the laſt, and they appointed a commitee, to prepare and bring in a bill accordingly: which having paſs'd the commons, met with a ready concurrence, in the houſe of lords, without any amendment; while their bill, for the ſame purpoſe, at the ſecond reading, in the houſe of commons, was ordered to ly on the table.

The duke of Marlborough concerts at the Hague the operations of the inſuing campain.

We left the duke of Marlborough, the 12th of December, juſt arrived at the Hague; he was immediately complimented by the deputies of the States-general, at his palace, where they gave him the thanks of that illuſtrious aſſembly, for his conduct, as well in the cabinet as in the camp, and had likewiſe, a long conference with him. All the forein miniſters, and other perſons of diſtinction, likewiſe, waited on the duke, and congratulated his ſafe return, after the labors and fatigues of his glorious campain; and many private perſons made illuminations, and other rejoycings on that occaſion. His grace having ſtay'd a few days at the Hague, to concert meaſures with the deputies of the States, for the operations of the next campain, imbark'd, in the Maeſe, the 22d of December, N. S. at night, on board one of her Majeſty's yachts, under convoy of ſeveral ſhips of war; bringing over with him, the marſhal de Tallard, with twenty-ſix other French priſoners, and the ſtandards and colors taken at Blenheim, as trophies of his grace's victory. The 14th of December, O. S. the yacht, and men of war, entered the river of Thames, and the duke went privately, the ſame afternoon, to St. James's houſe, where he was received with all the marks of grace and favor, which could be ſhewn to the moſt deſerving ſubject, by her Majeſty, and his royal highneſs Prince George of Denmark.

Returns to England with his priſoners, &c.

The lord-keeper's compliment to the duke.

The next day, the duke being come to the houſe of peers, ſir Nathan Wright, then lord-keeper, addreſs'd his grace, by orders of that auguſt aſſembly, with the following compliment:

My lord duke of Marlborough,

" The happy ſucceſs that hath attended her " Majeſty's armies, under your grace's command, " in Germany, the laſt campain, is ſo truly great, " ſo truly glorious, in all its circumſtances, that " few inſtances, in the hiſtory of former ages, can " equal, much leſs excel the luſtre of it.

" Your grace has not overthrown young unſkilful " generals, and raw and undiſciplin'd troops; but " your grace has conquer'd the French and Bava- " rian armies; armies that were fully inſtructed in " all the arts of war; ſelect veteran troops, fluſh'd " with former victories, and commanded by generals " of great experience and bravery.

" The glorious victories your grace has obtained at " Schellenberg and Hochſtadt, are very great, very " illuſtrious, in themſelves; but they are greater " ſtill, in their conſequences, to her Majeſty and " her allies.

" The Emperor is thereby relieved; the Empire " itſelf freed from a dangerous enemy, in the very " bowels of it; the exorbitant power of France " is check'd; and, I hope, a happy ſtep made " towards reducing of that Monarch, within his " due bounds, and ſecuring the liberties of Europe.

" The honor of theſe glorious victories, great " as they are (under the immediate bleſſing of " Almighty God) is chiefly, if not alone, " owing to your grace's conduct and valor.

" This is the unanimous voice of England, and " all her Majeſty's allies.

My lord,

" This moſt honorable houſe is highly ſenſible " of the great and ſignal ſervices your grace has " done her Majeſty, this campain, and of the im- " mortal honor you have done the Engliſh nation; " and have commanded me to give you their " thanks for the ſame.

" And I do accordingly give your grace the " thanks of this houſe, for the great honor your " grace has done the nation, and for the great and " ſignal ſervices you have done her Majeſty, and " this kingdom, the laſt campain.

The duke of Marlborough's reply was:

My lords,

The duke's anſwer.

" I am extreamly ſenſible of the great honor " your lordſhips are pleaſed to do me; I muſt beg, " on this occaſion, to do right to all the officers " and ſoldiers I had the honor of having under " my command; next to the bleſſing of God, the " good ſucceſs of this campain is owing to their " extraordinary courage.

" I am very ſure, it will be a great ſatisfaction, " as well as incouragement to the whole army, to " find their ſervices ſo favorably accepted."

His grace receives the thanks of the houſe of commons.

The ſame day, a commitee of the houſe of commons having waited upon his grace, to give him the thanks of the houſe, as well for the eminent ſervices he had performed to her Majeſty, and the kingdom, in the glorious victories which had been obtained under his command, as for his prudent negociations with ſeveral Princes and States; and to congratulate his arrival; His anſwer. " It is a great ſa- " tisfaction to me, ſaid the duke to them, to find " that my faithful indeavors, in diſcharging my " duty to the Queen, and to the public, are ſo " favorably accepted. I beg leave to take this " opportunity of doing juſtice to a great body of " officers and ſoldiers, who accompanied me in " this expedition, and all behaved themſelves with " the greateſt bravery imaginable: and, I am " ſure, this honor done us by the houſe of com- " mons, in taking ſo much notice of it, will give " a general ſatisfaction and incouragement to the " whole army."

The French priſoners ſent to Nottingham and Litchfield.

The 16th of December, the marſhal de Tallard, with the reſt of the French priſoners, were landed at Blackwall; where they were magnificently entertain'd at dinner by mr. Johnſon, and then, in the afternoon, they ſet out, in a great number of coaches, for Barnet, in their way to Nottingham and Litchfield, where her Majeſty thought thought fit they ſhould reſide. They were accompanied by general Churchill, and attended by a detachment of the duke of Northumberland's royal regiment of horſe, who were alſo ordered to guard them, at large, at Nottingham and Litchfield, they being allowed all manner of freedom, not only in thoſe places, but ten miles round about them.

Q. Ann, An' 1704.

The lord Godolphin inſtall'd knight of the garter.

To conclude the tranſactions of this year, I have only farther to add, that Sidney, lord Godolphin, lord high-treaſurer of England, was, the 30th, inſtall'd knight of the garter, at Windſor, having been elected into that moſt noble order ſome months before.

An' 1705.

The ſtandards and colors taken at Blenheim put up in Weſtminſter-hall, &c.

The begining of this year, the cities of London and Weſtminſter were eye-witneſſes of a triumphant memorial of the battle and victory of Hochſtadt. Her Majeſty having been pleaſed to order, that the ſtandards and colors, taken in that famous battle, which were lately brought from beyond ſea, and lodged in the Tower, ſhould be put up in Weſtminſter-hall, a detachment of her Majeſty's horſe-guards, and horſe-grenadiers, and a battalion drawn out of both regiments of the foot-guards, marched, the 3d of January, early in the morning, to the Tower, to receive them, at which time the great guns were fired. From thence, they proceeded, in the following manner: firſt, the troop of horſe-grenadiers; then the detachment of the three troops of her Majeſty's horſe-guards, four and thirty of the gentlemen in the center carrying each a ſtandard taken from the enemy; the battalion of foot-guards cloſed the march; the pike-men, to the number of 128, who had left their pikes at the Tower, carrying each one of the enemy's colors, advanced. In this manner, they marched thro' the city, the Strand, and the Pall-mall, and paſs'd before her Majeſty's palace at St. James's; then thro' St. James's Meuſe, into the Park, where her Majeſty was pleas'd to ſee them paſs by, from the lord Fitzharding's lodgings, forty guns in the Park being twice fired, at the ſame time: thence they proceeded thro' the Horſe-guards, Kingſtreet, and the New-Palace-Yard, to Weſtminſter-Hall, where the ſaid ſtandards and colors were put up, to remain there as trophies of that ſignal victory. The 6th, the duke of Marlborough having been invited, by the lord-mayor and court of aldermen, to dine with them in the city, his grace, accompanied by the lord-treaſurer, the Prince of Heſſe and the duke of Somerſet, in one of her Majeſty's coaches, and followed by a great train of other coaches, in which were the forein miniſters, and ſeveral other perſons of diſtinction, generals, and other officers, repaired to Goldſmith's-hall, where they were magnificently entertained.

The duke of Marlborough entertained by the city.

Vote of the commons in favor of the duke of Marlborough.

The 11th of the ſame month, being the day appointed by the commons for taking into conſideration the great ſervices that had been performed by the duke of Marlborough, the laſt ſummer, and to conſider of ſome means to perpetuate the memory of them, they came to this unanimous reſolution; "That an humble addreſs be preſented to her Majeſty, expreſſing the ſenſe "this houſe has of the glorious victories obtain'd "by the forces of her Majeſty, and her allies, "under the command of his grace the duke of "Marlborough, and humbly deſiring her Majeſty, that ſhe would be graciouſly pleaſed to "conſider of ſome proper means to perpetuate "the memory of the great ſervices performed by "the ſaid duke."

Which addreſs being preſented to her Majeſty, by the whole houſe, her Majeſty was pleaſed to give this gracious anſwer:

Gentlemen,

"I am very well pleas'd with your addreſs; "and I will take it into conſideration, as you de- "ſire, and ſend you my thoughts upon it, in a "little time."

Q. Ann, An' 1705.

The 17th, mr. chancellor of the exchequer acquainted the houſe; that he had a meſſage ſigned by her Majeſty; and he delivered it to mr. ſpeaker, who read the ſame to the houſe, which as follows:

Ann, R.

Her Majeſty's meſſage to the houſe of commons on that account.

"Her Majeſty having taken into her conſi- "deration the addreſs of this houſe, relating to the "great ſervices perform'd by the duke of Marlbo- "rough, does incline to grant the intereſt of the "crown, in the honor and manor of Woodſtock, "and hundred of Wootton, to him and his heirs; "and deſires the aſſiſtance of this houſe, upon "this extraordinary occaſion.

"The lieutenancy and rangerſhips of the parks, "with the rents and profits of the manor and "hundreds, being granted for two lives, her Ma- "jeſty thinks it proper that incumbrance ſhould "be cleared."

Reſolutions thereupon.

Upon which, the houſe reſolv'd, "that a bill "be brought in, to inable her Majeſty to grant "the honor and manor of Woodſtock, and hun- "dred of Wootton, to the duke of Marlbo- "rough, and his heirs."

And it was farther reſolv'd, "That an hum- "ble addreſs be preſented to her Majeſty, that "ſhe would be graciouſly pleas'd to advance the "mony, for clearing the preſent incumbrance upon "the lieutenancy and rangerſhip of the parks, "rents and profits of the honor and manor of "Woodſtock, and hundred of Wootton, in or- "der to the preſent ſettlement thereof, upon the "duke of Marlborough, and his heirs."

An act of parliament paſs'd in his grace's favor.

The ſaid bill paſs'd both houſes, and received the royal aſſent on the 14th of March: and the preamble to that act ſhews the ſenſe the parliament had of the great ſervices perform'd by the duke.

By this act, the honor and manor of Woodſtock, with the hundred of Wootton, were veſted in his grace, and his heirs, "rendring to the "Queen, her heirs and ſucceſſors, on the 2d day "of Auguſt, in every year, for ever, at the caſtle "of Windſor, one ſtandard or colors, with three "flower de luces painted thereon, for all manner "of rent, ſervices, &c."

Blenheim-houſe ordered to be built.

The beneficent Queen, likewiſe, ordered the comptroler of her works to build, in Woodſtock park, a moſt ſtately palace or caſtle, to be call'd Blenheim-houſe: and about the ſame time, her Majeſty alſo appointed the duke of Marlborough, colonel of her firſt regiment of foot-guards.

Several promotions in the navy.

The begining of this year, ſeveral advancements happened in the navy; ſir George Rooke being publicly ſet aſide, his royal highneſs appointed ſir Cloudeſly Shovel, admiral of the white ſquadron of her Majeſty's fleet, to be rear-admiral of England; and not many days afterwards, to be admiral and commmander in chief of her Majeſty's fleet; ſir John Leake to be vice-admiral of the white; ſir George Bing, vice-admiral of the blue; ſir Thomas Dilkes, rear-admiral of the red; William Whetſtone, eſq; rear-admiral of the white; and ſir John Jennings, rear admiral of the blue, in the room of ſir James Wiſhart, who had laid down his commiſſion. About this time, likewiſe, James lord Durſley, eldeſt ſon to the earl of Berkley, was likewiſe call'd by writ to the houſe of peers. But to return to the parliament.

Acts paſs'd.

The 16th of January, the Queen gave the royal aſſent, to "an act for raiſing monies by

Q. Ann, An' 1705.

" ſale of annuities, and to an act for continuing " the duties on malt.

Addreſs of the commons.

The 8th of February, the houſe of commons took into conſideration, the treaty lately concluded by the duke of Marlborough, and unanimouſly reſolved: " that an humble addreſs be preſented to " the Queen, returning the thanks of this houſe " to her Majeſty, for concluding the late treaty " with the King of Pruſſia, which was ſo ſeaſon- " able a ſupport to the duke of Savoy, and ſo " great an advantage to the common cauſe: and " alſo to aſſure her Majeſty, that her faithful " commons would effectually inable her to make " good the ſaid treaty with the King of Pruſſia, " who, upon ſo many occaſions, had ſignalized " his zeal for the Proteſtant religion, and the " liberty of Europe".

The Queen's anſwer.

The next day, mr. ſecretary Hedges acquainted the houſe, " that her Majeſty returned them many " thanks, for the aſſurances they gave her, in " their addreſs, and was very well pleaſed to find " they had ſo juſt a ſenſe of the King of Pruſſia's " zeal for the Proteſtant religion, and the liberty " of Europe".

Another addreſs.

The 26th, mr. ſpeaker reported, that the houſe had attended her Majeſty, with their addreſs; " that her Majeſty would be pleaſed to uſe her " intereſt with her allies, that they might, the " next year, furniſh their ſeveral compleat " quotas, both by ſea and land, according to their " reſpective treaties, and to continue her indea- " vors for an accommodation, between the Em- " peror and his ſubjects, now in arms in Hungary, " in order to the better and more effectual carrying " on the preſent moſt neceſſary war:" and that her Majeſty was pleaſed to give her anſwer:

Her Majeſty's anſwer.

" That ſhe would continue to uſe her utmoſt in- " deavors to obtain a compliance from the allies, " with what was deſired in the commons addreſs: " and as to the accommodation with the male- " contents in Hungary; that ſhe had made appli- " cation to the Emperor, ſeveral times, upon that " point, and ſhould continue to preſs him in it, " with all the earneſtneſs imaginable.

The affair of the Aileſbury-men revived.

The right of an elector to bring his action againſt the return-officer, for refuſing his vote, came again under debate, this ſeſſion: ſome of the inhabitants of Aileſbury, incouraged by the countenance the peers had given Aſhby to ſue White, and the reſt of the conſtables of Aileſbury, for refuſing his vote, ventured alſo to bring their ſeveral actions againſt the ſaid conſtables: upon which the commons reſolved; " that John Paty, John " Oviat, John Paton, Henry Baſs, and Daniel " Horn, of Aileſbury, had been guilty of com- " mencing and proſecuting an action, at common- " law, againſt William White, and others, late " conſtables of Aileſbury, for not allowing their " votes, in the election of members to ſerve in " parliament, contrary to the declaration of the " commons, in high contempt of the juriſdiction, " and in breach of the known privileges of that " houſe". At the ſame time, they ordered the five Aileſbury men to be commited to Newgate; which being done, accordingly, they moved for an Habeas Corpus in the court of King's-bench, but were remanded to the ſame priſon, by that court, and their counſel, ſolicitors, &c. voted guilty of a breach of privilege, by the commons, and taken into cuſtody of the ſearjeant at arms. Two of theſe Aileſbury-men were afterwards about to bring their writs of error, returnable in parliament, which occaſioned great animoſities between the two houſes, and ſeveral repreſentations to her Majeſty; the lords addreſſing, that the writs of error, in this caſe, might be granted, and the commons inſiſting that they might not.

The principal matter in diſpute was: " whether " an elector's vote being refuſed, by the proper " officer impower'd to take the poll, he might " bring his action at law againſt ſuch officer? or " whether ſuch elector's right to vote could be " determined any where but in the houſe of " commons"? The lords held, that every elector had a right to vote, by virtue of his freehold or freedom, and that matters of freehold, &c. were determinable by the courts of law; and that if the commons only could judge of the right of their electors, they would, in effect, chuſe their electors, and might exclude as many freeholders and freemen, from voting in elections, as they ſaw fit. The commons, on the other hand, inſiſted, that they had ever been held the ſole judges of the elections of their own members, and that, by an act of the 7th of William III, the laſt determination of the houſe of commons, as to the right of their electors, is made concluſive; and any return, contrary thereto, is therein declared to be a falſe return: that the two houſes of parliament are independent of one another, and ſole judges of their own rights and privileges: but if the right of electors might be determined in the courts of law, from whence cauſes are removed by writ of error, into the houſe of lords, then the lords would become judges of the right of electors to chuſe, and conſequently who were duly elected members of the houſe of commons; whereby the commons would loſe their independency, and become ſubject to the lords, as to their very being: for tho' they allowed the commons to determine the right of the members to ſit in the houſe; yet if the lords could, notwithſtanding, upon a writ of error, give damages againſt the return-officer, for not allowing the vote of a perſon, whom they adjudged to have a right, this muſt neceſſarily have ſuch an influence upon the officer, as to induce him to return ſuch perſons, as would be moſt acceptable to their lordſhips, and conſequently their lordſhips might, in time, chuſe the houſe of commons themſelves. And farther, ſhould the houſe of commons determine the right of election to be in one, and the courts of law, or their lordſhips, adjudge it to be in another, this would produce contradictory judgments, and muſt create confuſion. There is, indeed, nothing of human inſtitution, but is liable to ſome objection, and it was poſſible the commons might err in their determinations: but they thought the rights and privileges of the commons of England much ſafer in the hands of their own repreſentatives, than if they were but tenants at will to the houſe of lords.

Q. Ann, An' 1705.

Subſtance of the debate.

Addreſs of the lords.

The concluſion of this matter was, that her Majeſty, upon their lordſhips addreſſing her, not to put a ſtop to the iſſuing writs of error, in this caſe, returned the following anſwer:

My lords,

The Queen's anſwer.

" I ſhould have granted the writ of error de- " fired in your addreſs, but finding an abſolute " neceſſity of puting an immediate end to this " ſeſſion, I am ſenſible there could have been no " farther proceeding in this matter.

This anſwer being reported to the houſe of peers, their lordſhips order'd; " That the hum- " ble thanks of their houſe be preſented to her " Majeſty for her moſt gracious anſwer, in which " ſhe had expreſs'd ſo great a regard to the judg- " ment of their houſe, ſo much compaſſion to the " petitioners, and ſuch tenderneſs to the rights of " the ſubject".

The 14th of March, being the very day their lordſhips preſented their repreſentation and addreſs, the Queen came to that houſe, with the uſual ſtate, and, the houſe of commons being, likewiſe, attending, her Majeſty made the following ſpeech to both houſes:

My

Q. Ann, An' 1705.

Her Majeſty's ſpeech to both houſes.

My lords and gentlemen,

" I cannot put an end to this ſeſſion, without " doing you the juſtice to acknowledge, you have " fully made good the aſſurances you gave me at " the begining of it, by the great readineſs you " have ſhewn in the diſpatch of the public buſi- " neſs; and I make no doubt, but this diſpatch " will prove a real advantage to us, and a great " diſcouragement to our enemies".

Gentlemen of the houſe of commons,

" I return you my hearty thanks, in particular, " for the great ſupplies, with which you have " inabled me to carry on this neceſſary war. I " aſſure you, they ſhall be carefully applied to the " uſes for which they have been given, and, I " perſuade myſelf, I ſhall always have the chear- " ful aſſiſtance of my dutiful and loving ſubjects, " in the proſecution of the preſent war, till our " enemies are obliged to ſuch a peace, as ſhall be " a laſting advantage and ſecurity to us and our " allies".

My lords and gentlemen,

" We have, by the bleſſing of God, a fair " proſpect of this great and deſirable end, if we " do not diſappoint it, by our own unreaſonable " humor and animoſity; the fatal effects of which " we have ſo narrowly eſcaped in this ſeſſion, that " it ought to be a ſufficient warning againſt all " dangerous experiments for the future.

" I conclude, therefore, with exhorting you all " to peace and union, which are always com- " mendable; but more particularly neceſſary at " this time, when the whole kingdom being ſhortly " to proceed to new elections, it ought to be the " care of every body, eſpecially of ſuch as are in " public ſtations, to carry themſelves with the " greateſt moderation and prudence. Nothing " will contribute more to our reputation abroad, " and our ſecurity at home."

The parliament prorogued.

And then the lord-keeper, by her Majeſty's command, prorogued the parliament to the firſt of May next inſuing.

Acts paſs'd.

Beſide the acts already mentioned, the following bills received the royal aſſent, this ſeſſion; viz. 1. " An act to permit the exportation of Iriſh " linen to the plantations, and to prohibit the " importation of Scotiſh linen into Ireland. 2. An " act for giving the like remedy on promiſſory " notes, as upon bills of exchange. 3. An act for " the relief of the creditors of Thomas Pitkin, a " bankrupt, and for the apprehending of him, " and the diſcovery of the effects of the ſaid " Thomas Pitkin, and his accomplices (1). 4. An " act to incourage the importation of naval " ſtores from the plantations. 5. An act to pro- " hibit all trade and commerce with France. 6. An " act to prevent all correſpondence with her Ma- " jeſty's enemies (2). 7. An act for the better " recruiting her Majeſty's land-forces, and the " marines for the year 1705. 8. An act for puniſh- " ing mutiny and deſertion, and falſe muſters, and " for the better payment of the army and quarters. " 9. An act for raiſing the militia for the year " 1705, altho' the month's pay formerly advanc'd " be not repaid" (3).

Q. Ann, An' 1705.

The Dutch permited to trade with France.

I come now to ſundry domeſtic occurences out of parliament: and I ſhall firſt take notice, that notwithſtanding the ſeveral addreſſes and repreſentations, which had been made to the throne, by both houſes of parliament, againſt the Dutch, for trading with France during the war; that cunning people ſo inſinuated themſelves into the good graces of the miniſtry, at this time, that they obtained an order of council, ſeting forth, that the Queen, being about to open a trade with Spain, the ſhips of the States, that had proper paſſes, ſhould not be moleſted by the commanders of her Majeſty's ſhips, in their trade with France (4).

Creations and promotions at court.

About this time, likewiſe, ſeveral creations and promotions happened at court: the duke of Newcaſtle was made lord-privy-ſeal, in the room of the duke of Buckingham; Charles, earl of Peterborough, and Hugh, lord Cholmondly, were ſworn of the privy-council; the earl of Mountague was created duke of Mountague; the lord Cutts was made commander of her Majeſty's forces in Ireland, under the duke of Ormond; dr. Wake (now archbiſhop of Canterbury) was named biſhop of Lincoln, in the room of dr. Gardiner deceas'd; and dr. Bull, biſhop of St. David, in the room of dr. Watſon, who was deprived for ſimony, &c. Several promotions happened likewiſe in the army, where the brigadiers Frederick Hamilton, eſq; the lord Windſor, the lord Raby, and —— Tidcombe, eſq; were made major-generals, and the honorable colonel Mordaunt, colonel Blood, and colonel Stanhope were made brigadiers. There were alſo ſeveral alterations made in the lieutenancy: and, not long after, the Queen created Ralph earl of Mountague, marquis of Mount-hermer, and duke of Mountague.

A new parliament choſen.

The term for the exiſtence of the preſent parliament, according to the triennial act, being near expiring, a proclamation was iſſued, the 5th of

(1) This man broke for 100,000 l, and fled to Holland with great part of the ſpoils of his creditors; but was apprehended there, by the duke of Marlborough's intereſt, and brought back to England.

(2) By this act, whoever went to France, after the 4th of May, in the firſt year of the Queen; or had born arms in the French ſervice, and returned into the Queen's dominions, after the 25th of March 1705, without licenſe, was declared guilty of high-treaſon.

(3) There were ſeveral important bills loſt this ſeſſion, in both houſes, as (1) " A bill for excluding out of the houſe of " commons all perſons in any offices or imployments, erected ſince the 6th day of February, 1682, or to be erected," which met with a quick paſſage thro' the houſe of commons, but the lords making ſome amendments to it, which the commons diſagreed to, it was thereby loſt. (2) " A bill to prevent perſons, who were intitled by their offices to receive " any benefit by public annual taxes to be granted, from being members of parliament, while they are in ſuch offices:" this bill was ſet on foot in the houſe of commons; but tho' a clauſe of modification was admited, it was rejected, at a third reading in that houſe. (3) " A bill for qualification of juſtices of peace," which paſs'd the commons, but was refuſed a concurrence by the lords. (4) " A bill for the farther preventing the growth of Popery;" which paſs'd the houſe of lords; but being ſent down to the commons for their concurrence, they made ſuch amendments to it, as came little ſhort of the " bill for " preventing occaſional conformity:" which being like to occaſion new diſputes between both houſes, they were prevented by her Majeſty's puting an end to the ſeſſion. Beſide theſe bills, an addreſs of the houſe of lords, of the effect of which great hopes were conceived, likewiſe miſcarried, I mean their addreſs about ſundry miſmanagements in the admiralty and navy: this addreſs being too long to find place here, I can only take notice, that it concerned the extraordinary expence of the navy, for the three foregoing years; the navy debts; the funds appropriated for that ſervice, and the ſums iſſued from the treaſury on that account; with ſeveral obſervations thereupon, as well as upon the number of men allowed by parliament, and thoſe imployed: the unneceſſary increaſe of ſome penſions, and miſapplication of others; the continuance of admiral Graydon in ſervice, notwithſtanding the former reſolutions and addreſs of that houſe; the number of flag-officers imployed of which ſome had done no duty; the negligence of convoys, &c. But this being looked upon as reflecting on the ſupineneſs of the Prince of Denmark, her Majeſty only anſwered; " That it contained many obſervations, which ſhe would con- " ſider particularly, and give ſuch directions upon them, as might be moſt for the advantage of the public ſervice."

(4) This ſeem'd to be the more extraordinary, as it followed immediately after a ſeſſion of parliament, in which an act paſs'd, to prohibit all trade and commerce, between England and France; and the motive alleg'd for it appeared as ſtrange; ſince the Engliſh could not be indulged in any trade with Spain, to which the Dutch had not an equal right.

April,

Q. Ann, An' 1705.

April, for diſſolving it; and, on the 23d, another was publiſhed for calling a new one; the writs being to bear teſte the 2d of May, and returnable the 14th of June next inſuing: and the elections were viſibly obſerved to go in favor of the Whigs.

The Queen goes to Newmarket.

The Queen, in the mean time, went to Newmarket, where ſhe was attended by dr. Ellis, vice-chancelor of Cambridge, and the heads of that univerſity, who gave her Majeſty an invitation thither, which ſhe was pleaſed to accept of. The 16th of April, ſhe was magnificently entertained in Trinity college, at the expence of the univerſity; and, the 21ſt, returned from Newmarket to St. James's.

Death of Emperor Leopold;

Emperor Leopold V dying at Vienna the 5th of May, count Gallas, the Imperial envoy extraordinary, being admited to a private audience, notified to the Queen, as well the death of this Prince, as the acceſſion of his eldeſt ſon Joſeph, King of the Romans, to the Imperial throne; and he, at the ſame time, aſſured her Majeſty, that the new Emperor would not only obſerve all the treaties concluded with his predeceſſor; but would omit nothing that might render thoſe alliances more firm. It was hereupon debated, in council, whether the Queen and the court ſhould go into mourning for the late Emperor? which (tho' at firſt the majority of the board gave their opinions for the negative) was reſolv'd upon (1). Soon after, the earl of Sunderland was ſent envoy extraordinary and plenipotentiary to Vienna, to make the compliments of condolance and congratulation to the Imperial court, and to indeavor, at the ſame time, to mediate an accommodation with the Hungarian male-contents: about the ſame time, the Queen advanced the lord Raby, her envoy extraordinary to the King of Pruſſia, to the character of embaſſador extraordinary to that court.

And acceſſion of Emperor Joſeph.

Affairs of Scotland.

The parliament of Scotland met, the 28th of June, and the duke of Argyle being appointed high commiſſioner, his commiſſion was recorded; as was, likewiſe, thoſe of James earl of Seafield, to be lord chancelor; William marquis of Annandale, and Hugh earl of Loudon, to be ſecretaries of ſtate; of David, earl of Glaſgow, to be lord-treaſurer depute; of ſir Charles Murray, to be clerk-regiſter, and of Adam Cockburn to be lord-juſtice-clerk: the duke of Queenſberry had, however, all this while, the chief management of affairs, tho' with the bare title of lord-privy-ſeal. Their commiſſions being read, and the houſe being then thin, the parliament was adjourned to the 3d of July, when her Majeſty's letter was read, in which "ſhe again earneſtly recommended the ſettling the ſucceſſion of that kingdom in the Proteſtant line, and the paſſing ſuch an act for treating of an union between the two kingdoms as had paſs'd in England. She alſo put them in mind of granting the neceſſary ſupplies for their forces, gariſons and magazines; and told them ſhe had appointed the duke of Argyle her commiſſioner; being aſſured of his capacity and zeal for her ſervice; and hoped he would be no leſs acceptable to them: that ſhe had impower'd him to declare her firm reſolutions, to maintain the government in church and ſtate, and to conſent to ſuch farther laws, as might be neceſſary for that end; as alſo for the advancement of piety, improving their manufactures, &c. in all which they ſhould have her chearful concurrence."

Her Majeſty's letter being read, the lord-commiſſioner and the lord-chancelor made each of them a ſpeech to inforce it. The two grand affairs, which chiefly imployed the time of this ſeſſion of parliament, were the ſettling of the ſucceſſion in the Proteſtant line, and the treaty with England. The Scots would, by no means be brought into the former: but for the latter, after great difficulties and debates, the act was paſs'd; tho' the duke of Athol proteſted againſt it, and his proteſt was adhered to by twenty noblemen, thirty-three barons, and eighteen boroughs.

Q. Ann, An' 1705.

The 21ſt of September, the lord high commiſſioner gave the royal aſſent, 1. to the "act for a "treaty with England; 2. an act for a ſupply; "3. an act for diſcharging the importation of "Engliſh, Iriſh and forein butter and cheeſe; "4. an act for advancing the fiſhing-trade; 5. an "act declaring linen and woolen manufactures free "of duty; 6. an act for appointing a council of "trade; 7. an act for incouraging the exportation "of beef and pork;" and to ſome private bills; which done, the parliament was adjourn'd to the 20th of December next inſuing.

Affairs of Ireland.

The parliament of Ireland met, the 10th of February; but nothing very remarkable happening during this ſeſſion, I ſhall only obſerve, in general, that ſeveral beneficial laws received the royal aſſent; and, among others, "an act for the improvement "of the hempen and flaxen manufactures." The 14th of June, the commons unanimouſly reſolved to return their thanks, both to the Queen, for the many good bills tranſmited this ſeſſion, and to the lord-lieutenant, for his good adminiſtration, and his being inſtrumental in obtaining thoſe bills. The 16th, the duke of Ormond gave the royal aſſent to ſeveral public and private acts; and then the parliament was prorogued to the 13th of June 1706. His grace imbark'd ſoon after for England, leaving the adminiſtration of the government of Ireland, in the hands of ſir Richard Cox, lord-chancelor, and of the lord Cutts, commander in chief of her Majeſty's forces, who were appointed lords-juſtices, during the duke's abſence. I proceed now to maritime affairs.

I have already given an account of ſir John Leake's having ſeveral times relieved Gibraltar from the attempts of the French and Spaniards to retake it; I ſhall now continue my relation, and ſhew in what manner that important fortreſs was totally freed from their attacks, and ſecured in the hands of the confederates.

Farther ſupplies arrive at Gibraltar.

The 29th of January, the Tartar-pink and the Newport came into the bay of Gibraltar, with freſh ſupplies; and, the 5th of February, were followed by the Roebuck and Leopard, with ſix companies of Dutch, and about two hundred of the Engliſh guards, with other Engliſh troops, and ſeveral neceſſaries, from Liſbon. The 7th, the Tyger with a tranſport, arrived, with a farther ſupply of men and ammunition.

Monſ. Ponti, with a French ſquadron comes before it.

The 14th, monſ. Ponti came into the bay of Gibraltar, with fourteen men of war, and two fire-ſhips; notice whereof having been given to ſir John Leake, at Liſbon, who, in the mean time, had been joined by ſir Thomas Dilkes, with five third-rates, with which he had convoyed a great number of merchant ſhips from England, he ſet ſail from thence the 6th of March. He had then under his command twenty-three Engliſh, four Dutch, and eight Portugueſe men of war, having on board an Engliſh and a Portugueſe regiment, with a Dutch battalion of freſh troops. The 10th, at half an hour paſt five in the morning, being within two miles of Cape Cabrette, he diſcovered five ſail making out of the bay; to which he gave chaſe, and they afterwards proved to be five French men of war. At nine, ſir Thomas Dilkes, in the Revenge, with the Newcaſtle, Antelope, Expedition, and a Dutch man of war, got within half gun-ſhot of the Arrogant, which they took, after ſome reſiſtance: and the Newcaſtle's boat firſt boarded her, after ſhe ſtruck. Before one, two of the Dutch ſhips took the Ardent and the Marquis. The other two, the Magnanimous and the Flower de Luce, in the firſt of which monſ. Ponti himſelf was, made a ſtout reſiſtance, and in ſpight of the Engliſh, runing aſhore, to the weſtward of Marbella, were burnt by the French themſelves. Sir John, ſuppoſing the remainder of monſ. Ponti's ſquadron, which had been driven from their anchors out of Gibraltar-bay, to be in Malaga-road, looked in there; but they, having heard the firing, thought that no ſecure harbor, and had, as it was believed, cut their cables, and were retired to Toulon. Off of Malaga, three of her Majeſty's ſhips, the Kent, the Oxford, and the Eagle join'd; and three of our frigats having driven aſhore two merchant-ſhips, one of 300 tons, richly laden from the Weſt-Indies, near Malaga, and the other of 250, outward-bound to the Weſt-Indies near Almeria, they were burnt by the French; and the Aſſurance and Bedford took two Sattees. Sir John Leake, having thus relieved Gibraltar, a ſecond time, by his appearance only, tho' he could not afterwards reach the bay, 'till the 19th, he returned to Liſbon, where he arrived, the 1ſt of April, and where we ſhall leave him, and return to England (1).

(1) The occaſion of this debate was becauſe the Emperors of Germany were not uſed to go into mourning for other Monarchs of Europe, whom they look'd unon as an inferior claſs of Princes: but count Gallas having, in his maſter's name, promiſed, that, for the future, the Emperor would mourn for the Kings and Queens of England, her Majeſty took the reſolution.

men

Q. Ann, An' 1705.

Five men of war taken and deſtroyed.

Two merchant-ſhips burnt.

Sir John Leake returns to Liſbon.

I have mentioned above, that ſir Cloudeſly Shovel was appointed admiral and commander in chief of the fleet, but it was in conjuction with the earl of Peterborough and Monmouth, who was named firſt in the commiſſion. Sir George Byng was likewiſe nominated to command in the Soundings, and ſir Thomas Dilkes off of Dunkirk; I ſhall therefore give an account of the proceedings of each of the two former, and the ſucceſs which attended them; but for the latter, I find nothing material of him till he came to Liſbon.

The earl of Peterborough put in joint commiſſion with ſir Cloudeſly Shovel.

Sir George ſailed, the latter end of January, from Plymouth, with a ſquadron of cruiſers, and a great fleet of rich outward-bound merchant-ſhips. As ſoon as he had ſeen the latter in ſafety, out of the Soundings, he diſpoſed of his ſquadron as he thought would be moſt convenient to annoy the enemy's privateers, which had very much infeſted the Soundings, and the mouth of the channel. By this good diſpoſition, he was ſo fortunate to take from the enemy a man of war of forty-four guns, call'd the Thetis, twelve privateers, and ſeven merchant-ſhips, moſt of which were richly laden from the Weſt-Indies. The number of men taken on board the prizes was 2070, and of guns 334.

A great number of French prizes taken.

Sir Cloudeſly Shovel repairing on board the Britannia, at the Nore, gave orders, on the 17th of April, to ſir John Jennings, to proceed to Spithead, with three firſt-rates, two ſecond-rates, and as many third-rates. The 13th of May, he arrived at Spithead, where he was joined by the men of war from the Downs, and the ſhips with the ordnance-ſtores; and, the 22d, the earl of Peterborough arrived at Portſmouth. The ſame day, the troops deſigned for the expedition being likewiſe on board, the fleet ſailed to St. Helens; and, the next, the earl went on board. The 24th, the fleet ſet ſail again, and the 25th came off of Plymouth, where they lay by for ſome men of war and tranſports, which were to join them there, and, two days after, they arrived at their firſt rendezvous, which was ſeven leagues ſouth from the Lizard.

Departure of the grand fleet.

Q. Ann, An' 1705.

The 9th of June, the fleet arrived in the river of Liſbon, where the Dutch admiral Allemonde, with his ſquadron, was arrived a week before. Here the admirals likewiſe found ſir John Leake, with his ſquadron; but in great want of proviſions; they were therefore all ſupplied out of thoſe brought from England.

Their arrival at Liſbon.

The line of battle being now formed, conſiſted of two firſt-rates, four ſecond-rates, twenty-two third-rates, ten fourth-rates, and twenty Dutch ſhips of the line, together fifty-eight of the line, beſide ſmall frigats, bomb-veſſels, fire-ſhips, hoſpital-ſhips, and other ſmall veſſels. Sir Cloudeſly got out of the river of Liſbon, with part of the fleet, the 22d, and the ſame day met with the ſhips from Ireland. The deſign was to cruiſe off of Cape Spartel, till the earl of Peterborough, who ſtaid at Liſbon with the remainder of the fleet to take in the forces, ſhould join him. The earl having prevailed upon the earl of Galloway, to ſpare him two regiments of dragoons, in which, as well as in ſupplying them in forrage and other neceſſaries, he met with great oppoſition and delay from the Portugueze; and the men of war detach'd from the ſquadron under admiral Byng being arriv'd the 15th, with the tranſports and other ſhips under their convoy, having on board ſeveral things neceſſary for the expedition, he prepared to depart. King Charles, who was reſolved to try his fortune with the earl and ſir Cloudeſly, being therefore imbarked with the former, on board the Ranelagh, they put to ſea the 17th of July, the troops on board, deſigned for a deſcent, being by ſome computed to be 12000 men. They arrived, in a few days, at Gibraltar, where his Catholic Majeſty, under protection of the confederate fleet, firſt took poſſeſſion of his kingdom of Spain, and was received there as lawful ſoverein (2).

King Charles II. imbarks on board the confederate fleet:

And arrives at Gibraltar.

The battalion of Engliſh guards, and the three old regiments, which had ſo valiantly defended Gibraltar, being imbark'd, and two new raiſed battalions left in gariſon there, the fleet ſailed, the 5th of Auguſt, and came to anchor, the 11th, in Altea-bay, in order to water there. As ſoon as they came into the bay, the people came to offer their ſervice to his Catholic Majeſty, and to implore his protection: bringing with them all manner of proviſions and refreſhments, for which they were liberally paid. However, his Catholic Majeſty ordered a body of foot to be landed, as well to ſecure the fleet's watering, as to hinder the ſailors from commiting any diſorders: and the earl of Peterborough

Proceeds to Altea-bay;

(1) After this unlucky accident (ſays the marſhal de Theſſe, in his letter to the French King, concerning monſ. Ponti's misfortune) ſeing the place was ſupplied anew, with refreſhments and all other things, I gave orders for an intrenchment to be made; and I diſpatch'd the ingenier Renaud to repreſent to your Majeſty, as alſo to the Catholic King, the impoſſibillty of continuing the ſiege. The troops are fatigued, a great many ſick, and ammunition begins to be wanted. Accordingly the ſiege was raiſed the 22d, after it had laſted about five months.

(2) The firſt deſign of this expedition was concerted with the duke of Savoy, and the forces they had on board were either to join him, or to make an attempt on Naples or Sicily, as ſhould be found moſt adviſeable. There were agents imployed in different parts of Spain, to give an account of the diſpoſition people were in, and of what ſeemed moſt practicable. A body of men roſe in Catalonia, about Vich; upon the knowledge King Charles had of this, and upon other advertiſements which were ſent to our court, of the diſpoſitions of thoſe of that principality, the orders which King Charles deſired were ſent by a runner, which was diſpatch'd from the Queen to the fleet; ſo the fleet ſteered to the coaſt of Catalonia, to try what could be done there. The earl of Peterborough, who had ſet his heart on Italy, and on Prince Eugene, was not a little diſpleaſed with this, as appeared in a long letter from him, which my author ſays, the lord treaſurer ſhewed him. Burnet's hiſtory of his own times.

Q. Ann, An' 1705. caused a manifesto to be dispersed in the Spanish tongue (1).

And takes Denia. While the fleet was in the bay, certain advice was brought, that 800 or 1000 of the inhabitants of the towns and places in the neighborhood, who were assembled in the mountains, had declared for King Charles, and seized the town of Denia; upon which general Ramos was appointed governor of that place, and a garison of 400 men put into it.

The fleet arrives at Barcelona. The 11th of August, the fleet arrived in the bay of Barcelona; where, as soon as they had anchored, the Spaniards began to fire from the mole, and a battery they had near the sea, upon some of the transport-ships which stood in for the shoar. The next day, the Prince of Darmstadt having joined the fleet, the forces began to land in very good order, and without any opposition, between the town and a place call'd Badelona, at about three quarters of a league distance from the former, the inhabitants lending them all possible assistance. The 13th, all the troops being landed, the city was invested, and as it was so large, that the forces from the fleet could not guard all the posts, the inhabitants assisted them in securing all the avenues.

The King of Spain goes on shoar. The 17th, his Catholic Majesty went on shoar, the whole fleet having saluted him at his departure; and, at his landing, he was not only welcomed by the loud acclamations of the people of the country, who came in throngs to receive him, but by a treble discharge of the small arms, from the camp on shoar. The 27th, it was resolved, that 2400 seamen, well armed, should assist in the attempt against Barcelona. The generals, however, found the place so well provided, that they almost despaired of success. The sea-officers, on their side, were, indeed, for bombarding and canonading the place, from the fleet, while the approaches were made by land: but, as the King of Spain would by no means consent to this, the undertaking was thereupon very near being laid aside, and the resolution almost taken to leave the place, and try their fortune at Terragona (2).

Montjuy attack'd. The Prince of Hesse, whose reputation was most at stake, as he advised the expedition, proposed, at length, the surprizing of the citadel and castle of Montjuy, which, the earl of Peterborough, upon examination, finding feasible, approved of. The attack was made on the 2d of September (3), with undaunted bravery, and wish'd for success; but with the loss of the gallant Prince of Hesse, who being shot by a musket-ball thro' the thigh, such an effusion of blood followed, that he expired before his wound could be dress'd. After his death, the assailants began to lose ground, till the earl of Peterborough, being informed that the forces had orders from the commanding officer to retreat, went, in person, and rallied them (4). The 6th, the citadel, with all the works belonging to it, surrendered, and colonel Southwell, who commanded the first attack with great bravery, and had contributed very much to the taking of it, was made governor of that fortress. Q. Ann, An' 1705. And taken.

Barcelona surrender'd. After this success, the siege was push'd with great vigor; the trenches were open'd the 9th, and batteries raised for thirty guns and twenty mortars. And his Catholic Majesty having, at length, consented to it, our bomb-vessels threw 412 shells into the town, and eight English and Dutch ships, under the command of sir Stafford Fairborn, being appointed to canonade it from the sea, while the canon from the batteries and fort continued to do the like on shoar; the viceroy desired to capitulate, the 23d, and the capitulation (which is of too great a length to find place here) being signed, the 28th, the gate and bastion of St. Angelo was delivered up the same day, and the whole city in a few days after. The surrender of this capital of Catalonia so strengthened King Charles's party, that the whole kingdom, Roses only excepted, submited soon after.

The King of Spain makes his entry into the city. The King of Spain having made his entry into Barcelona, and received the oath of fidelity of his subjects; and his Majesty having declared, that he would venture his person with them; a council of the general and flag-officers was held, on the first of October, where it was resolved, that the earl of Peterborough should continue with that Prince, with the land-forces, and all the marines that could be spared from the service of the ships; and that a winter-squadron being appointed, under the command of sir John Leake, and baron Wassenaer, the rest of the fleet should make the best of their way home (5).

The fleet returns to England. Pursuant to this resolution, sir Cloudesly set sail, and

(1) The substance of this manifesto was, to assure the Spaniards, that the confederate fleet was not come to take possession of any place, in an hostile manner, for the use of her Majesty of Great-Britain, or the States-general, nor to bring into that country the usual calamities of war: but to defend and protect those who would submit, in due obedience to their lawful soverein.

(2) When a council of war was held on this occasion, at which the King of Spain himself was present, both English and Dutch officers were of opinion, the siege could not be undertaken with so small a force, the garison being near as strong as they were. The debate lasted some hours; in conclusion, the King himself spoke near half an hour: he answered all the objections which were made against the siege, and treated every one of those who had made them, as he answered them, with particular civilities. He supported the truth of what the Prince of Hesse had asserted (concerning the good affections of many in the town) as being known to himself. He said, that in the state in which this affair then stood, nothing could be proposed, but what would be attended with great difficulties; all was doubtful, and much must be put to the hazard; but this seemed less dangerous, than any thing else that was proposed. Many of his subjects had come and declared for him, to the hazard of their lives; it became him, therefore, to let them see, that he would run the same hazard with them. He desired that they would stay so long with him, 'till such attempts should be made, that all the world might be convinced, that nothing could be done: he added, that if their orders did oblige them to leave him, yet he could not leave his own subjects; upon which they resolved to sit down before Barcelona: and happy it was that they took this resolution; for it came afterwards to be known, that the Catalans and Miquelets who had joined them, hearing that they were resolved to abandon them, and go back to their ships, had resolved, either out of resentment, or that they might merit their pardon, to murder as many of them as they could. When this small army sate down before Barcelona, they found they were too weak to besiege it, for they could scarce mount their canon. When they came to examine their stores, they found them very defective, and far short of the quantities, which by their lists they expected to find: whether this flowed from treachery or carelessness, I will not (continues my author) determine; there is much of both in all our offices. Burnet's hist. of his own times.

(3) De Larrey says, that the Prince of Hesse expected no resistance, the officer who commanded in the place having agreed with him to deliver the fort into his hands: but that the viceroy having discovered the design, had hanged the officer, and placed another in his room, and that, therefore, he was obliged to attempt by force, what he was in hopes to have obtained by stratagem. Hist. de France sous Louis XIV.

(4) His lordship being justly transported with indignation at the orders which had been given for the troops to draw off; immediately countermanded those orders, and drawing his sword, threw away the scabbard, saying: "he was sure all brave "men would follow him." With that he put himself at the head of the detachments which were retreating, and so animated them by his example, that they soon regained all the ground they had quited, his lordship exposing himself all the while to the greatest danger.

(5) The whole fleet was divided as follows: to proceed to England, with sir Cloudesly, one first-rate, three second-rates, thirteen third-rates, two fourth-rates, four fifth-rates, one sixth-rate, three bomb-vessels, four fire-ships, and one yacht.

To

Q. ANN, AN' 1705.

and having put the governor of Barcelona, with about 1000 men of the garison of that place (the rest having listed in the service of King Charles) ashoar at Malaga and Alicant, and staid three days at Gibraltar, appointed some ships to convoy the trade home from Lisbon, and himself arrived, the 26th of November, at Spithead, and a few days after came to London, where he was received, by the Queen and Prince, with those marks of esteem which his signal services deserved.

Scheme and preparations for the campain.

I come now to the affairs on the continent. The duke of Marlborough, having the preceding summer delivered the Empire, by the ever-famous victory of Blenheim, had a long time considered how to improve that success, this campain; and having communicated his several projects to the cabinet council, none seemed so judiciously laid, as the making an incursion on the frontiers of France: the design, therefore, was, that the Mosel should be the scene of action, and care had been taken to lay up magazines of all sorts, in Triers, for that purpose. To carry on this design, two things were absolutely necessary; first, the concurrence of the cautious Dutch, who seemed unwilling to let their troops go so far from their frontiers, lest they should lose, in one campain, the barrier they had been forming in two or three; and, secondly, the quickening the slowness of the Germans, without whose joint assistance the duke could not act there, with probability of success. The States, however, consented, that he should carry the greatest part of their army to the Mosel, and resolved to ly on the defensive upon their own frontiers; for they reckoned, that how strong soever the Elector of Bavaria's army was at that time, yet, when France should be press'd with so great a force, as they reckon'd would be on the Mosel, he would be ordered to send such detachments thither, that his army would be quickly diminished, and so would not have the superior strength long.

The duke of Marlborough goes to Holland.

This being the duke's scheme, in order to put it in execution, his grace set out, the 26th of March, from St. James's, towards Harwich; where he imbark'd, the 30th, on board one of her Majesty's yachts, and set sail for Holland, together with several other yachts and transport-ships, under convoy of a squadron of men of war, commanded by the marquis of Carmaerthen, vice-admiral of the red. They were put back, the next day, by contrary wind; but, as it was favorable, the 1st of April, in the morning, his grace then put to sea again, and landed safely in Holland, the next day, in the afternoon.

The Dutch approve his project.

The duke, upon his arrival at the Hague, had several conferences with the pensionary, and other members of the assembly of the States-general, who were soon made sensible of the plausibleness of this project: but the greatest difficulty was yet behind; and, in order to remove it, his grace resolved to have a conference with Prince Lewis of Baden; to which end he sent brigadier-general Cadogan to his highness, to manage an interview with him. The 12th of May, the brigadier met the duke at Maestricht, and informed his grace, that Prince Lewis had appointed to meet him the 20th at Creutznach: however, the duke being, the 18th, at Coblentz, baron Forstner, counsellor to that Prince, came to acquaint his grace, that his highness was very much indisposed, and could not meet him, at Creutznach, as he had promised: he likewise seem'd, by his message, to decline concuring with the duke in the designs he had laid: nevertheless his grace, who had set his heart on opening the campain in those parts, would not put up with these excuses; but resolved to go and confer with him at Rastadt.

Q. ANN, AN. 1705.

The duke confers with Prince Lewis.

He therefore departed from Coblentz the 19th, and came, that night, to Schlangenbade, where he found the landgrave of Hesse, with his whole court, by whom he was very honorably received. He set out again, the next morning, and the day following, in the afternoon, arrived at Rastadt. He was received by Prince Lewis with all appearance of friendship and esteem: but it was observed by several in the duke's retinue, that the Prince was not so much indisposed, as not to have been able to meet his grace at Creutznach. The two generals had a private conference together, in which it was resolved, "to leave a sufficient "number of Germans, for the security of the lines "of Lauterberg and Stolhoffen, under the com-"mand of general Thungen, and that Prince "Lewis of Baden should march with a great "detachment towards the Saar, to act in concert "with the duke.

Result of their conference.

Motions of the confederate army thereupon.

The 22d, his grace went to view the lines of Biehl and Stolhoffen, and came to Manheim, the next day, in his way to Triers, where he arrived, the 26th. The duke having assembled all the troops in the neighborhood of that place, the English and Dutch forces, which were incamp'd near Igel, on the other side the Mosel, pass'd that river, the 3d of June, over several bridges; and, from thence, march'd to those prepar'd for them over the Saar, which river they, likewise, pass'd at Consaarbruck. The Hessians, Danes and Lunenburghers pass'd the Saar, at the same time; and so all the troops joined.

The duke incamps near the enemy;

After a long march of near eight hours, they lay on their arms all night, and incamp'd, the next morning at Elst, within sight of the enemy's army. Upon the approach of the allies, the day before, the enemy immediately prepared for a retreat, which they now put in execution, with great precipitation, and marched from Sirk towards Coningsmacheren, possessing themselves of a very advantageous camp, which they made yet stronger, by casting up intrenchments, and felling down trees: so that there was no possibility of attacking them, in that post, with the least probability of success.

Who retreat and intrench themselves.

The duke's real design.

This, indeed, was no disappointment to the duke, his advancing so far being with no other design, than to cover the intended siege of Saar-Louis; the taking of which place was esteem'd of so great importance, that the success of the whole campain, on that side, was thought to depend on it. The duke therefore sent frequent expresses, to quicken the march of the Imperialists, and other troops, and to exhort the Princes who had promised to furnish artillery, horses and waggons, to send them with all possible expedition; but all in vain: for the Imperialists kept their usual slow pace, and Prince Lewis, who had promised to come in person, either fell, or pretended to fall sick at Creutznach; upon which he left his troops to use the wells at Schwalbach, and the bath at Schlangenbade. There were not wanting those who accused the Prince of treachery on this account: because it plainly appeared, that the French knew what he intended to do, and their management shewed they had a dependance on it. Be this as it will, it is certain, that Rendered abortive by Prince Lewis of Baden.

To remain with sir John Leake; two second-rates, eight third-rates, four fourth-rates, three fifth-rates, two bomb-vessels, two fire-ships, one hospital-ship, and one yacht.

With the earl of Peterborough: two fourth-rates, three fifth-rates, and one sixth-rate.

Left at Gibraltar; two sixth-rates.

To cruise for the Brasil-fleet, one third and one fourth-rate.

the

Q. Ann, An' 1705.

the duke was ill uſed, and that this ill uſage was the occaſion of his deſign proving abortive.

Motions of the army under monſieur d'Auverquerque.

The forces of the States-general being, in the mean time, very much weakned, by the detachments ſent to the Moſel, it was thought fit, that their army, under monſieur d'Auverquerque, conſiſting only of thirty battalions and ſeventy-two ſquadrons, ſhould ſtand on the defenſive. For this end, they intrench'd themſelves, on the hill of St. Peter, near Maeſtricht, not doubting but the Elector of Bavaria, and the duke de Villeroy, who commanded the French and Spaniſh army in the Netherlands, would ſend a ſtrong detachment towards the Moſel. They were however deceived in their expectations; and this increas'd the ſuſpicions of Prince Lewis's conduct: for the enemy, being informed how things paſs'd on the Moſel, reſolved to take the advantage of their ſuperiority on the Maeſe.

Huy taken by the French.

They came out of their lines, the 21ſt of May, and marched to Val Notre Dame, near Huy, which place they inveſted the 28th, and took it, together with the ſeveral forts and the caſtle belonging to it, within the ſpace of about fourteen days: the gariſons being obliged to ſurrender priſoners of war.

They inveſt the citadel of Liege.

The 15th of June, the French army march'd from Huy to Horrion, and, the next day, inveſted the citadel of Liege.

Repreſentation of the deputies of the States hereupon.

The news of the taking of Huy, having reach'd the duke of Marlborough's army, the deputies of the States repreſented to his grace; "That it was "impoſſible to ſubſiſt any longer in his camp; "that the Germans having, by their delays, fruſ-"trated the deſign of beſieging Saar-Louis, and "defeated all the other projects on the Moſel, it "was to no purpoſe to continue any longer in "thoſe parts, when their forces might be im-"ployed in the Netherlands, in ſtopping the "progreſs of their enemies." The duke was as ſenſible of that melancholy truth, as the deputies themſelves could be; but being willing to ſtay till the laſt extremity, "That the Imperialiſts might "have no manner of excuſe for diſappointing "him," he did not decamp from Elſt, his head-quarters, till the 17th of June, N. S. The French ſaw the confederate army retire with greater tranquility, than they had expreſs'd when they firſt advanc'd that way; and the duke of Marborough, when he arrived at Triers, held a great council of war. It was there reſolved; "That the forces under his "command, ſhould march back to the Maeſe, "except 7000 Palatines, in the pay of England "and Holland, who were unfortunately left for the "ſecurity of Triers, and other poſts, on that ſide, "under the command of lieutenant-general Au-"bach. They were to be join'd by part of the "troops of Weſtphalia; and the 12,000 Pruſſians, "with the 4000 men of Wirtemberg, were order-"ed to march to Lauterberg, to reinforce Prince "Lewis of Baden." According to this reſolution, his grace, after having ſpent ſome weeks in this fruitleſs attempt, march'd for the Netherlands, by the ſhorteſt way, very much mortified, at this ill uſage of the Germans; and the Imperial troops, the Pruſſians and Wirtemberghers, moved towards the Upper-Rhine.

The duke of Marlborough decamps from Elft.

A council of war.

The reſult of it.

The duke returns towards the Netherlands.

The marſhal de Villars, having now no enemy before him, made a detachment to re-inforce the Elector of Bavaria; another, for the army under the marſhal de Marſin, in Alſace, and advanced, with the reſt, towards the Saar. Upon the firſt notice of his approach, the Palatine general ſent precipitate orders to the governor of Saarbruck, to quit that caſtle, and blow up the fortifications, as ſoon as the enemy ſhould appear, which was punctually performed. This overſight was but a preliminary to the unpardonable blunder, commited by monſieur d'Aubach; who, to compleat the ill conduct of the Germans, on the 25th of June, even before any enemy appeared in ſight, deſtroy'd all the magazines the Engliſh and Dutch had, at a vaſt expence, erected at Triers; blew up the fortifications; burnt the boats deſign'd to make bridges, and, in a ſcandalous manner, quited that important poſt. The French who did not expect ſo eaſy a conqueſt, took poſſeſſion of it, four days after, and the marſhal de Villars march'd to join the marſhal de Marſin, and in conjunction with him, beat the Imperialiſts from the lines of Crone-Weiſſemberg. General Thungen had enough to do to maintain the lines of Lauterburg; the German troops being diſperſed, as if it were with deſign to give the French an opportunity of beating him over the Rhine, and retaking Landau (1).

Q. Ann, An' 1705.

Ill conduct of the Germans.

Conſequences of it.

Expeditious march of the confederate army.

The duke of Marlborough's march, in order to join monſieur d'Auverquerque time enough to ſave the city of Liege, or to give the marſhal de Villeroy battle, before he could draw off his cannon, was ſo expeditious, that he thereby intirely changed the whole face of affairs in the Netherlands, to the advantage of the allies: for the enemy, upon advice of his approach, ſent back their artillery to Namur, and, the 27th of June in the morning, quited the city of Liege, and retired to Tongeren. The confederate army continued the purſuit, and the French, with as great aſſiduity retreated before them, till the 2d of July, when they retired with great precipitation into their lines, having ſent away moſt of their baggage the day before.

The French retreat within their lines.

Huy retaken.

The confederate generals, hereupon, reſolved to retake Huy, before they proceeded farther: and they were ſo ſucceſsful in the enterprize, that they became maſters of that place, with its caſtle and forts, by the 11th, on the ſame terms as the French had taken it from the Dutch a month before.

The duke of Marlborough propoſes to force the French lines.

The diſappointment on the Moſel ſiting very heavy on the duke of Marlborough's mind, his grace reſolved to recover that misfortune, by undertaking ſomething worthy of himſelf, on the Maeſe; and as no enterprize appeared more difficult in it ſelf, and more advantageous in its conſequences than the attack of the enemy's lines, his grace ſent general Hompeſch to propoſe it to the States-general. That general ſoon returned with the anſwer of their High-mightineſſes, which was, "That having an intire confidence in the "conduct and prudence of his grace, they left it "intirely to him, to do whatever he ſhould think fit "for the good of the common cauſe." The duke, hereupon, held a council of war, wherein the generals of his army, and thoſe of monſieur d'Auverquerque's, were preſent. The debate was the forcing of the enemy's lines: but nothing being reſolved upon, the firſt time, a ſecond council was called.

Some Dutch generals oppoſe it.

Some generals, in the ſervice of the States, oppoſed the duke's project, but monſieur d'Auverquerque, the hereditary Prince of Heſſe-Caſſel, count de Noyelles, and ſome others, declared, it was their opinion, that neither the enterprize was dangerous, nor the ſucceſs of it improbable, if the judicious meaſures propoſed by the duke Marlbo-

(1) The Prince of Baden's conduct, throughout this whole affair, lay very open to cenſure; and he was almoſt generally believed to be corrupted by the French; while others, who were for puting the beſt conſtruction they could upon it, were obliged to attribute his acting as he did, to his haughtineſs, and an envy of the duke of Marlborough's ſucceſs. Lediard's life of Marlborough, Vol. I. p. 483.

rough,

Q. ANN. AN' 1705.

rough, were put in execution: whereupon the reſolution was taken. The enemy were poſted along the lines, with near one hundred battalions, and 146 ſquadrons; the confederate army on the other hand, conſiſted of ninety-two battalions, and 160 ſquadrons; ſo that they were pretty equal in force.

The duke's opinion prevails.

A ſtratagem put in practice;

The enemy having therefore the advantage of being ſtrongly intrench'd, with a like number of troops, it was reſolved to make a feint, to divide them: and, accordingly, the army, under monſ. d'Auverquerque decamped from Vignamont; the 17th of July, N. S. at three in the morning, and march'd towards Bourdine, on the other ſide of the Mehaigne, and the duke of Marlborough made a motion, at the ſame time, as if he intended to ſupport monſieur d'Auverquerque, in the attack of the lines, about Meffelen, where they were not ſo ſtrong as in other parts. This ſtratagem ſucceeded to wiſh; for thoſe motions, particularly the paſſing of the Mehaigne, having given great jealouſy to the French, they beſtow'd their attention, on the ſide of the Gerbiſe, towards Namur, whereupon the duke of Marlborough made the diſpoſition, in order to march, with the whole army, in the night, between the 17th and 18th.

Which ſucceeds.

Diſpoſitions made for attacking the enemy's lines.

The guides which conducted the detachments, were ſomewhat at a loſs, on occaſion of the extream darkneſs of the night; and this ſo retarded their march, that it was half an hour paſt four, in the morning, and broad day, when they arrived before the poſts they deſign'd to attack, which, according to the information they had before received, they found but thinly guarded.

Proceedings thereupon.

The lines forc'd.

The count de Noyelles caus'd the caſtle of Wangh, which defended a ſtone bridge that was there on the Geete, to be attack'd; but the enemy immediately abandon'd that poſt, and gave an opportunity to the grenadiers, who were ordered on that ſervice, to march forwards, and attack the barrier of the line; which the guard there did not defend much better; and ſo the troops enter'd the line, on that ſide, with little or no oppoſition; tho' the enemy had twelve ſquadrons of dragoons incamp'd behind Coſtmalen (within cannon ſhot of them) who immediately mounted their horſes, but durſt not advance to defend their barriers. At the ſame time, three battalions poſſeſs'd themſelves of the bridge and village of Heiliſheim, a quarter of a league from Wangh, on the left, which was done with as little oppoſition: nor did lieutenant-general Scholten meet with greater reſiſtance, at the villages of Ober-heſpen, and Neer-heſpen: ſo that being maſters of thoſe bridges and barriers, and having made ſeveral other bridges, the horſe went over the ſame, and immediately form'd themſelves on the eminence, extending their right towards the village of Hachendoren; and ſome battalions drew up along the line, and behind the horſe.

While the pioneers were buſy in making paſſages through the lines, ten of the enemy's ſquadrons, and four battalions, were perceived between the villages of Gouchancourt and Eſmalè; but they gave time for the confederate forces to extend themſelves, indeavoring only to advance to the village of Elixheim. The count de Noyelles cauſed all the troops he had with him to go over, as faſt as poſſible: and the duke of Marlborough arriving, with the whole army, his horſe went over the line, with the ſame expedition as the reſt had done: thus they all advanc'd towards the enemy, who, by this time, were re-inforc'd to the number of fifty ſquadrons, and twenty battalions, and advanc'd with great reſolution, behind the hollow way, going up from Elixheim to Tirlemont.

This obliged the confederate horſe to ſtop a few minutes, 'till ſome battalions advancing lined the hollow way, and firing upon the enemy's horſe, obliged them to retire beyond the reach of their muſkets, and to form themſelves before their infantry. This gave an opportunity to the confederate horſe to paſs the hollow way. In the mean time, the enemy cauſed eight pieces of canon, with treble barrels, to advance, with which they began to fire briſkly upon them: but the duke of Marlborough being come in perſon, at the head of his horſe, and ſeing that the enemy were continually receiving freſh re-inforcements, and that their infantry was going to join them, his grace was reſolved to charge them with the horſe only. This was done with ſuch vigor and courage, that the enemy's cavalry being ſoon broken, and put to the rout, they indeavor'd to rally themſelves behind their infantry, while the victorious horſe of the allies poſſeſs'd themſelves of their cannon and ammunition-wagons.

Q. ANN. AN' 1705.

The enemy being re-inforced with ſome ſquadrons, and having interlined ſome infantry with them, mov'd again towards the allies: but the latter, being likewiſe re-inforced, and ſuſtained by their infantry, advanced to meet them. The right of the confederate horſe coming too near the hedges of the village of Eſmalè, which were lined with ſome of the enemy's foot, were ſomewhat diſorder'd by their fire, and obliged to ſhrink back: but having, ſoon after, extended themſelves more towards the right, to make way for ſome battalions that marched againſt the enemy's foot, they both charged, with that bravery and briſkneſs, that the enemy's horſe was ſoon defeated, and cut in pieces; and their infantry being abandoned in the plain, had much ado to get away, in great diſorder, between the villages of Heiliſheim and Gotſhoven, where they met with the reſt of their army, and formed themſelves as well as they could. In the mean time, the duke of Marlborough cauſed all the reſt of his troops to enter the lines, and extended the right of his army, towards the great Geete, before Tirlemont, where the enemy had left the battalion of Monluc, which, upon the firſt ſummons, ſurrendered priſoners at diſcretion.

Priſoners taken.

In this action, the marquis d'Alegre and the count de Horn lieutenant-generals, a major-general, two brigadier-generals, and a great number of other officers of all ranks, beſide abundance of private men, were taken priſoners. All the troops of the allies behaved themſelves with great bravery and reſolution, but among the horſe, the regiment of brigadier Cadogan diſtinguiſh'd themſelves, having had the honor to charge firſt; which they did with ſuch ſucceſs, that they defeated four ſquadrons of Bavarian guards, drove them thro' two battalions of their own foot, and took four ſtandards; and all this only with the loſs of lieutenant Auſtin, and ſome few men. Nor was the loſs of the other troops greater in proportion. The duke of Marlborough, having very much expos'd himſelf in the action, was in great danger of his life: for, as he was leading on ſeveral ſquadrons, a French or Bavarian officer quited his poſt, and advanc'd ſword in hand, to attack his grace; but as he was raiſing himſelf upon his ſtirrups, to reach him, he flung himſelf off of his horſe, and was preſently kill'd. Monſ. d'Auverquerque, in his account of this action, ſays the Bavarian horſe, which conſiſted of twenty-four ſquadrons, offering to oppoſe the confederates, was almoſt intirely ruined, as was likewiſe the two regiments of Alſace and la Marque.

Retreat of the Elector of Bavaria, and the marſhal de Villeroy.

The body of troops, under the command of monſ. d'Alegre, being thus defeated, the Elector of Bavaria, and the marſhal de Villeroy, conſulted for the ſafety of the reſt of the army, and decamping, in the ſight of the confederates, they paſs'd the great great Geete and the Deule, with all imaginable diligence, and poſſeſs'd themſelves of the ſtrong camp at Parck.

Q. Ann, An' 1705.

Motions of the confederate army.

The next day, the confederate army moved; and, in their march, thro' the plain of Parck, took above 1200 priſoners, who could not follow the precipitate retreat of the enemy's army. In the evening, the duke of Marlborough incamp'd near the abby of Vlierbeck (1).

The duke of Marlborough receiving information, in his camp at Vlierbeck, that ſeveral poſts on the Deule, between Louvain and the village of Neer-Yſche, were ſlenderly guarded, reſolved, with the advice of the generals, to indeavor to force them, in order to the paſſing of that river. A detachment was made for that purpoſe, on the 29th of July, about five in the afternoon, with the pontons and ſome artillery, the army following at eleven at night. They arrived at thoſe poſts about three the next morning, and paſs'd the river in two places. They repuls'd, with great vigor, the guards which made a ſhow to oppoſe them, and obliged them to retire: but not being timely ſupported, they were ordered to repaſs it, which they did in very good order, bringing away their bridges, having had only a few officers wounded, and about fifty private ſoldiers kill'd and wounded. After this ſucceſsleſs attempt, the confederate army march'd, and incamp'd, with the right at Meldert and the left at Boſſu.

The duke forms a project.

The impoſſibility of attacking the enemy, on that ſide, being now very apparent, the duke of Marlborough diſpatch'd lieutenant-general Hompeſch, to propoſe a new project to the States-general. This their High-mightineſſes approved of, and, on the 5th of Auguſt, paſs'd a reſolution, directing their deputies, in monſ. d'Auverquerque's army, to permit the duke, to make two or three marches, without calling a council of war, to execute ſome deſign formed by his grace. To favor that expedition, baron Spar, who commanded a ſmall body of Dutch troops in Flanders, march'd, the third of Auguſt, N. S. from Riemen, with all his grenadiers, and a ſufficient number of fuſiliers, to ſupport them, being followed by the reſt of the forces under his command; and, in that march, defeated a party of the enemy. He came, in the night, to Raboth, on the canal that leads from Bruges to Ghent, where his men made a bridge, and having paſs'd over the anal, they attack'd the enemy's lines which were defended by ſeveral forts, at a ſmall diſtance from each other. Notwithſtanding this, they forced thoſe lines at Lovendegen, and in leſs than three quarters of an hour, were maſters of four of thoſe forts; in which action, they took priſoners three captains, three lieutenants, three enſigns, and near 300 private men, with no other loſs, on their ſide, than that of a colonel, a lieutenant, and five private ſoldiers wounded, and two private men killed. Baron Spar, then march'd towards Bruges; but receiving advice, that the enemy was marching againſt him, with a ſuperior force, which they had got together from ſeveral gariſons in the French and Spaniſh Flanders, he retired, the 7th, to Meldegem, carrying away with him ſeveral hoſtages, for the ſecurity of the payment of contributions, having firſt deſtroyed ſeveral forts, and corps de guarde, along the French lines, on that ſide.

Baron Spar's ſucceſs.

Q. Ann, An' 1705.

The 15th, the duke of Marlborough march'd with his army from Meldert, and incamp'd at Corbais: monſ. d'Auverquerque, with the Dutch troops, advancing, at the ſame time, to St. Martins. They united, the next day, into one body, at Genap, and the day following advanced to Fiſchermont. In this laſt day's march, a detachment commanded by lieutenant-general Dompre, beat the enemy from one of their poſts, called Waterlo, and purſued them about a league, in the wood of Soignies. This ſudden march of the confederates kept the enemy under great apprehenſions, and gave them an equal fear for ſome places in Brabant and Flanders.

Farther motions of the duke's army.

Conſternation of the enemy.

The 18th, by break of day, the confederate army filed off, with the right wing, in two columns, and paſs'd the long narrow road of the lane, near Hulpen, where they were not a little ſurpriz'd to find no enemy to defend that difficult paſs. About noon, the whole army was drawn up in ſight of the enemy, whom the duke of Marlborough and monſ. d'Auverquerque having view'd, they were both of opinion to attack them immediately, before they had time to recover the conſternation which was apparent enough in their army. But the artillery not being come up (as it has been ſaid) thro' general Schlangenburg's fault; and that general, who had a pique againſt the duke (becauſe the attempt upon the lines was undertaken without either his privity or conſent) having perſuaded ſome other Dutch commanders to join with him in oppoſing his grace; they made their unanimous report to the deputies of the States, that the enterprize was neither adviſable nor practicable, upon which the deputies poſitively refuſed to comply with it.

The confederates march up to them.

The duke's deſign oppos'd.

The duke ſubmited, tho' with a great deal of reluctance, as appears by an expoſtulatory letter he wrote the next day to the States-general, juſtly complaining of a want of that confidence which they had repoſed in him, the year before, in Germany, and of which they had experienced ſo advantageous an effect. This letter, being made public at the Hague, occaſioned great murmurings among the people, who juſtly thought the duke was too hardly dealt with, and that the common cauſe ſuffered by it.

He ſubmits with reluctance.

On the other hand, the Dutch deputies and generals uſed all the indeavors they could to juſtify their conduct, and to throw off the odium, which they ſoon perceived was going to be thrown upon them; to which end they wrote ſeveral letters to the States-general (2).

The Dutch indeavor to juſtify themſelves.

It muſt be ſaid, in the duke's favor, for juſtification, I think, he needs none, that he had an army ſuperior to the enemy; and a great part of it,

(1) By this ſucceſs, the enemy were, indeed, forced to abandon Dieſte, Sichem, Arſchot, and ſome other ſmall places: however, the ſuffering them to poſſeſs themſelves of the ſtrong camp at Parck, whereby they ſecured Louvain, Bruſſels and Antwerp, was beyond diſpute, a very great overſight: but on whom, in particular, to change it, is not eaſy to determine. Some will have it, that the troops were too much fatigued, to march to that camp the ſame day, after the action: while others pretend, that ſome of the Dutch generals were againſt that march. Lediard's life of Marlborough Vol. I. p. 502.

(2) Biſhop Burnet (hiſtory of his own times, vol. II. p. 415.) ſays a great deal in vindication of the Dutch, on this occaſion; but he chances to be miſtaken in almoſt all his facts, as well as the time of them. See his miſtakes rectified, in Lediaad's life of Marlborough, vol. I. p. 512. ſeq.

The lord Haverſham (in a memorable ſpeech) ſays; "by the conduct of the duke of Marlborough, we had a fair "opportunity of putting an end to the war at once. The Dutch held our hands, and would not let us give the deciſive "blow.

"Thoſe who command your army are men of that bravery, and every common ſoldier has ſo much courage, that no equal "number of men in the world, I think can ſtand before them; but let our ſupplies be never ſo full and ſpeedy, yet if it be "our misfortune to have allies, that are as ſlow and backward as we are zealous and forward, that hold our hands, and ſuffer "us not to take any opportunity that offers, that are coming into the field, when we are going into winter-quarters, I cannot "ſee what it is we are reaſonably to expect.

beſide

Q. Ann, An' 1705.

beſide, fluſh'd with the victory of Blenheim, and the whole with the late advantage, at the forcing the French lines; and tho', as Burnet obſerves, there was a difference of opinion, even among the officers of the army, yet far the greater number, and in particular the officers of the horſe, were for the attack.

The deputies did, indeed, purſuant to their inſtructions, ſuffer the duke of Marlborough, to make two or three marches, without calling a council of war: but, in their inſtructions, it is added, "for the execution of ſome deſign formed by his "grace;" which they did not comply with; for when the deſign, which was the occaſion of theſe marches, and without which they might as well have continued where they were, came to be put in execution, they obſtructed it (1).

The duke of Marlborough's project being thus defeated, the confederate army march'd, the 19th of Auguſt, and the 26th incamp'd, with their right near la Romce, and their left at Perwitz. The 29th Sout-leewe, a little town, in the middle of a moraſs, and the chief defence of the enemy's lines, was inveſted by a detachment under lieutenant-general Dedem, and was taken, about a week after, the gariſon ſurrendering priſoners of war, before the batteries had begun to fire.

The enemy's lines levell'd.

The duke of Marlborough having cauſed the lines to be levell'd, from Waſſeigue to Sout-Leewe, and Tirlemont to be diſmantled, his grace paſs'd the Demer, and incamp'd, the 19th of September, at Arſchot. Upon his approach, the enemy quited their old lines, between that river and the Nethe, and retired into the new ones, between Boeſchet, on the Nethe, and Werchteren on the Demer, where they could not be attack'd.

Monſ. Buys ſent from the States-general to the duke of Marlborough.

The 21ſt, his grace went to Turnhout, to meet monſ. Buys, penſionary of Amſterdam, who was ſent to confer with his grace on the part of the States-general. This was the effect of the expoſtulatory letter which the duke wrote to them, concerning the uſage he had met with from their deputies (2).

Sandvliet inveſted.

While the neceſſary preparations for the ſiege of Sandvliet were making, the duke took a turn to the Hague, and had ſeveral conferences with the penſionary. The count de Noyelles inveſted that place the 24th of October; and, the next day, the duke of Marlborough went thither, from Calmpthout, to view the ſeveral poſts, and to give his directions for the ſiege. This place made no long reſiſtance; for, on the 29th, the count de Noyelles gave advice of its having ſurrendered, in a letter to monſ. Fagel.

And taken.

The duke of Marlborough having had ſeveral preſſing invitations from the Emperor to come to Vienna, in order to concert the operations of the next campain, and ſeveral other concerns of the greateſt importance, his grace, having the Queen's leave, left the army, for that end, the 26th of October. He was magnificently entertained by ſeveral German Princes, in his way, and arrived at Vienna the 12th of November. He was received, at his arrival, by the earl of Sunderland, who had been there ſome time, and mr. Stepny, who conducted him to the houſe of the Prince of Longueval. The Imperial court intended to have defray'd his expences, and the palace of the Prince of Dietrichſtein was fited up for his reception; but his grace was pleas'd to decline both.

Q. Ann, An' 1705.

The duke of Marlborough ſets out for Vienna.

The duke had audience of their Imperial Majeſties, and the archducheſſes, the day after his arrival; and, the two following days, he received and returned ſeveral viſits. The 16th, his grace had a conference with the Prince of Salms, and other public miniſters, at which the Emperor was preſent. In this conference, he was treated with great freedom and confidence, and he had all the aſſurance given him, that could be expreſs'd in words. He plainly ſaw, that the Emperor was highly diſſatisfied with Prince Lewis of Baden; but he had ſuch credit in the Empire, eſpecially with the circles of Suabia and Franconia, that there was a neceſſity of bearing with what could not be remedied. The ſame evening, he was, a long while, in converſation with their Imperial Majeſties; when the Emperor was graciouſly pleaſed to declare, "that his grace's ſervices to "the common cauſe, in general, and to his family, "in particular, were ſuch as ſhould never be for-"gotten by him, nor his poſterity." His grace was afterwards ſeized with a fit of the gout, which confined him three days to his chamber; during which time, he was viſited by all perſons of the greateſt diſtinction at court. The 22d, the duke went to ſee the famous chamber of rarities, where the Emperor was pleaſed to meet him, and preſented him, in a very obliging manner, with a ring of great value. The ſame evening, his grace had his audience of leave of the whole Imperial court, and the 23d departed from Vienna, being accompanied by the earl of Sunderland, for the court of Berlin; having firſt concerted proper meaſures with the Imperial miniſters, for carrying on the war with more vigor than ever, renew'd our treaties made with the Emperor Leopold, and provided for the ſecurity of the duke of Savoy (3).

Has audience of their Imperial Majeſties.

Departs for the court of Berlin.

He arrived, the 30th, at Berlin, where he renewed

And returns, by the way of Hanover, to the Hague and England.

(1) Agreeable to this, is an obſervation of the ſame nobleman I juſt mentioned, in the vindication of his ſpeech: "Did "not the Dutch deputies (ſays he) march near three days, in company with the duke of Marlborough, and in all that time, "did they ever make any exception againſt the deſign. Yet, when it came to be put in execution, when a fair opportunity "offer'd, and victory in a manner courted us, there not being half the difficulty nor danger there as at Blenheim, could "any arguments perſuade them to conſent to venture a battle."

(2) What paſs'd in this interview, was not clearly known; but there were reaſons to believe, that monſ. Buys aſſured his grace of the readineſs of their High-mightineſſes, to give him all reaſonable ſatisfaction for the diſguſt he had taken at ſome proceedings at Ober Yſche, and to make him, for the future, more eaſy in his command, by removing thoſe who ſhew'd the greateſt inclination to contradict him. This conjecture will appear the more probable, if we conſider, that the Engliſh court, and, indeed, the nation in general, did, at this time, ſo warmly eſpouſe the duke of Marlborough's reſentment, that a pamphlet call'd, the Dutch politicians, in which ſevere reflections were made on the Hollanders, in general, and, in particular, on the deputies of the States, for not ſuffering his grace to fight the enemy, was publicly ſold, and eſcaped uncenſured; and what is more, the earl of Pembroke, lord preſident of the council, was named to go envoy extraordinary to Holland, in order, as it was ſuppoſed, to expoſtulate the matter with the States; but their High-mightineſſes prevented his lordſhip's journy, by giving ſatisfaction to the duke of Marlborough, and removing general Schlangenburg. Lediard's life of Marlborough. Vol. I. p. 521.

(3) In conſideration of the ſignal ſervices done by his grace to the houſe of Auſtria, and to the Empire, his Imperial Majeſty was pleaſed to make him a grant of the lordſhip of Mindelheim, in Suabia, not far from Augsburg, lately poſſeſs'd by duke Maximilian, uncle to the elector of Bavaria, which fief was now erected into a principality of the holy Roman Empire, and was, in ſuch manner confer'd upon the duke, "that his grace, and the heirs-male of his body, lawfully begotten, and "their heirs-male, and poſſeſſors of that principality, ſhould be ſummoned to all the diets of the Empire, and circle of Suabia, "there to appear in perſon, or by their plenipotentiary, as other Princes of the Empire do: and ſhould alſo injoy all other "advantages, immunities, rights, prerogatives and pre-eminences, as Princes of the Empire have." From whence his grace was, from that time, diſtinguiſhed throughout the Empire, by the ſtile and title of Prince of Mindelheim. While the duke was at Vienna, the two envoys and plenipotentiaries of the States-general came, by expreſs orders from their maſters, from Tyrnau, to wait on his grace, and receive his advice and directions about the negociation with the Hungarians. Lediard's life of Marlborough, Vol. I. p. 526.

all

Q. Ann, An' 1705.

all treaties with the King of Pruſſia, and particularly that concluded the foregoing year, for 8000 men, to be imployed in Italy, for one year longer. Having ſettled theſe affairs, and adjuſted ſome other difficulties, his grace ſet out, the 3d of December, and arrived at Hanover, the 6th, where he gave that court full aſſurances of the Queen's adhering firmly to their intereſts, in maintaining the ſucceſſion to the crown, in their family, with which the Elector ſeemed fully ſatisfied. The 14th, the duke arrived at the Hague, where having ſettled ſeveral important matters with the States-general, particularly the taking 10,000 men more into the pay of England and Holland, to re-inforce Prince Eugene's army in Italy, his grace went on board the Peregrine yacht, the 27th, and arrived, the 30th, at St. James's.

The campain in Germany.

The army of the Empire was, as uſual, not brought together, till the month of Auguſt. It was, indeed, then a fine one, and much ſuperior to the French; but yet performed very little. The French gave way, and retired before them; Haguenau, and ſome other places, were abandoned by them, and taken poſſeſſion of by the Imperialiſts, who afterwards block'd up fort Lewis; but nothing was attempted by that army, equal to their number or ſtrength; or, indeed, what might have been expected from the reputation which the Prince of Baden had formerly acquired; for thus the campain ended on that ſide, without any conſiderable action.

Campain in Italy.

In Italy, Prince Eugene had again a melancholy campain. His army was weak, ill provided, and worſe paid. The French were far ſuperior in number and forces, and he was long ſhut up within the country of Bergamo. I have already mention'd, how bravely Verue held a ſiege of five months, before it ſurrender'd to the French; but Nice and Villa Franca were eaſier conqueſts. The duke of Savoy had ſcarce any thing left of all his dominions in Italy, but his capital of Turin. Prince Eugene made ſeveral attempts to come to his relief; but was ſo narrowly watch'd by the duke de Vendôme, and the grand prior of France, his brother, that he found it very difficult to effect. At length, the neceſſity of the duke of Savoy's affairs requiring his making a bold puſh to join his royal highneſs, he found means to divide the French army, by a ſtratagem, and they ſent a ſtrong detachment towards the Adda, which was led by Vendôme himſelf. The Prince, hereupon, advanc'd, to attack the body under the grand prior: but Vendôme, being aware of his deſign, was not march'd ſo far but he ſoon returned and joined his brother: and a ſharp ingagement inſued, on the 16th of Auguſt, N. S. in which, great numbers were killed and wounded on both ſides; and both ſung Te Deum for the victory. The French boaſted they had gained their point, in preventing the conjunction of Prince Eugene with the duke of Savoy, and the Prince was very well ſatisfied, that he had prevented the ſiege of Turin, for this campain. In the whole, Prince Eugene ſeem'd, however, to have the cleareſt title to the victory; becauſe the duke de Vendôme repaſs'd the river, and left the Imperialiſts maſters of the field of battle.

The campain in Portugal and Spain.

In Portugal, the allies opened the campain with the ſiege of Alcantara; which being inveſted, the 2d of May, the gariſon, conſiſting of 700 men, ſurrendered priſoners of war in a few days. The confederates then laid ſiege to Albuquerque, another town of no great ſtrength, which ſurrender'd the 22d. They afterwards made themſelves maſters of the little town of Salvaterre, and then went into quarters of refreſhment, during the heats. As for the campain in Spain, as far as our fleet was concerned in it, I have already given the reader an account: I ſhall now add a word or two of what happen'd ſeparate from the fleet. The Catalans, who, during the ſiege of Barcelona, had ſubdued, took all proper meaſures for ſecuring Tarragona, Tortoſa, Lerida, Gironne, &c. and they alſo raiſed ſix regiments for the ſervice of King Charles, beſide the regiment his Majeſty had formed out of the gariſon of Barcelona, which took ſervice under him, for his guard, and which was commanded by count Sinzendorf. At the ſame time, Don Raphael Nebot, a Catalan, who had already three brothers in Charles's ſervice, came over to him likewiſe, with his whole regiment, conſiſting of 500 horſe, beſide 150 horſe which came to him by the way. Theſe being joined by general Ramos, and a great number of Miquelets, publiſh'd a declaration, inviting all true Spaniards to come over to them; upon which deputies came from ſeveral towns in Valencia, to make their ſubmiſſion to King Charles. Incouraged by theſe ſucceſſes, they marched with 1000 horſe and 500 foot, together with a body of Miquelets, to Valencia, the capital of that kingdom, where, by the aſſiſtance of the inhabitants, they made themſelves maſters of that place, and took the viceroy and archbiſhop priſoners; whereupon, the whole kingdom of Valencia, except Alicant and Peniſola, revolted to King Charles, and he appointed the conde de Ciſuentes, who came over to him, ſoon after his landing, to be viceroy of that province. Matters had now a very fair aſpect, and had the Portugueſe made a diverſion as they promiſed; or but permited their allies, the Engliſh and Dutch, to have advanced to the frontiers of Spain, at this time, it is not improbable but all that Monarchy had ſubmited to King Charles: for the grandees were ſo diſguſted at the influence they ſaw the French councils had in all their affairs, and of ſome promotions of the ſubjects of that nation, that when King Philip called them together, to conſult with them, in this exigence, they refuſed to aſſiſt him with their purſe, and even with their advice. But notwithſtanding all the repreſentations, the earl of Galway and the other confederate generals could make, the Portugueſe could not be drawn out of their quarters, till the begining of October, when they laid ſiege to Badajox: and, then, if we may be allowed to judge by appearances, only with a deſign to raiſe it again: for they ſuffered themſelves to be ſurprized by the marſhal de Theſſe, who threw a ſupply of troops and proviſions into the town, after they had made ſome progreſs in the ſiege; whereupon the beſiegers drew off their batteries, and marched into winter-quarters. In this ſiege it was, the earl of Galway loſt his right hand by a cannon ball.

Q. Ann, An' 1705.

The province of Valencia, as I have already obſerved, having followed the example of Catalonia, the Spaniards were preparing to beſiege the capital of that name, when the earl of Peterborough marched, with incredible diligence to their relief, diſperſed the Spaniſh army, with a handful of men, and entered Valencia in triumph, before the end of the year; where he was received as their guardian-angel (1). Having thus given a brief account of forein affairs, I return to England.

(1) Never any forein nobleman gained the eſteem and affection of the Spaniards to that degree the earl did: the ſtrict diſcipline he kept his troops under, his generous behaviour to the natives, his care to protect them, his bravery, good conduct and unparallel'd ſucceſs, had ſo indeared him, and the troops he commanded, to the Spaniards, that the diſorders at Port St. Mary's were intirely forgot; and they appeared ready to join the allies, and run all hazards with them, to drive the French and their adherents (whoſe yoke they were no longer able to bear) out of the kingdom. Salmon's modern hiſt. Vol. XXV. p. 276.

Upon

Q. Ann, An' 1705.

Upon the account being brought of the duke of Marlborough's having entered the French lines, by colonel Durel, who arrived at Windſor (where the Queen and Prince then were) the 14th of July, O. S; a week after, her Majeſty's proclamation was publiſhed, appointing the 23d of Auguſt, for a day of public and general thankſgiving, throughout England and Wales: and when the day came, it was uſhered in as uſual, and her Majeſty celebrated it by repairing to St. Paul's, with the ſame ſtate, and ſolemnity, as ſhe had done the year before, after the battle of Hochſtadt.

Domeſtic occurrences.

The memorial of the church of England.

The 1ſt of September, a pamphlet, call'd the "memorial of the church of England," was preſented at the Old-baily, and ordered by the court to be burnt by the common hangman.

The aim of it was to prove, that the miniſtry were contriving the deſtruction of the church of England, and countenanc'd it's greateſt enemies. The 10th of October, the Queen and his royal highneſs left Windſor, and came to Kenſington, where, the next day, her Majeſty, in council, was pleaſed to commit the cuſtody of the great ſeal to William Cowper, eſq; one of her Majeſty's learned council in the law, with the title of lord-keeper of the great ſeal of England; and the uſual oaths being adminiſtred to him, his lordſhip took his place at the board accordingly. About the ſame time, her Majeſty thought fit to remove the earl of Abington, from being lord-lieutenant of Oxfordſhire, and conſtable of the Tower of London.

William Cowper, eſq; made lord-keeper.

The parliament meets.

The 25th of October, the parliament met, purſuant to the laſt prorogation, and the houſe of commons being directed to chuſe a ſpeaker, the candidates for that important ſtation were William Bromley, eſq; and John Smith, eſq; the firſt put up by the High-church, the other by the Low-church-party, who carried it by a majority of 248 againſt 205. Mr. Smith being preſented to the Queen, the 27th, her Majeſty approved the choice, and then made the following ſpeech to both houſes.

My lords and gentlemen,

The Queen's ſpeech to both houſes.

"I have been very deſirous to meet you as "early as I thought you might be called toge- "ther, without inconvenience to your ſelves, and "it is with much ſatisfaction I obſerve ſo full an "appearance at the opening of the parliament, be- "cauſe it is a ground for me to conclude you are "all convinced of the neceſſity of proſecuting the "juſt war in which we are ingaged; and, there- "fore, are truly ſenſible, that it is of the greateſt "importance to us to be timely in our prepa- "rations.

"Nothing can be more evident, than that, if "the French King continues maſter of the Spaniſh "Monarchy, the balance of power in Europe is "utterly deſtroyed; and he will be able, in a ſhort "time, to engroſs the trade and the wealth of the "world.

"No good Engliſhman could be content, at any "time, to ſit ſtill, and acquieſe in ſuch a proſpect; "and, at this time, we have great grounds to hope, "that, by the bleſſing of God, upon our arms, "and thoſe of our allies, a good foundation is laid "for reſtoring the monarchy of Spain to the houſe "of Auſtria; the conſequence of which will not "only be ſafe and advantageous, but glorious for "England.

"I may add, we have learnt, by our own ex- "perience, that no peace with France will laſt "longer, than the firſt opportunity of dividing "the allies, and attacking ſome of them with ad- "vantage.

"All our allies muſt needs be ſo ſenſible this is "the true ſtate of the caſe, that I make no doubt "but meaſures will ſoon be ſo concerted, as that "if we be not wanting to ourſelves, we ſhall ſee "the next campain begin offenſively on all ſides, "againſt our enemies, in a moſt vigorous manner. Q. Ann, An' 1705.

"I muſt, therefore, deſire you, gentlemen of "the houſe of commons, to grant me the ſupplies "which will be requiſite for carrying on the next "year's ſervice, both by ſea and land; and, at "the ſame time, to conſider, that the giving all "poſſible diſpatch will make the ſupply itſelf much "more effectual.

"The firmneſs and conduct which the duke of "Savoy has ſhewn, amidſt extream difficulties, is "beyond example

"I have not been wanting to do all that was "poſſible for me, in order to his being ſupported.

"I ought to take notice to you, that the King "of Pruſſia's troops have been very uſeful to this "end: your approbation of that treaty, laſt "ſeſſion, and the incouragement you gave upon "it, leave me no doubt of being able to renew for "another year.

"I take this occaſion to aſſure you, that not only "whatever ſhall be granted by parliament, for bear- "ing the charge of the war, ſhall be laid out for "that purpoſe, with the greateſt faithfulneſs and "management; but that I will continue to add, "out of my own revenue, all I can reaſonably "ſpare, beyond the neceſſary expences for the "honor of the government.

My lords and gentlemen,

"By an act of parliament paſs'd the laſt winter, "I was inabled to appoint commiſſioners for the "kingdom to treat with commiſſioners to be im- "power'd, by authority of parliament, in Scot- "land, concerning a nearer and more compleat "union between the two kingdoms, as ſoon as an "act ſhould be made there for that purpoſe; I "think it proper for me to acquaint you, that "ſuch an act is lately paſs'd there; and I intend, "in a ſhort time, to cauſe commiſſions to be made "out, in order to put the treaty on foot; which "I heartily deſire may prove ſucceſsful; becauſe I "am perſuaded, that an union of the two king- "doms will not only prevent many inconveniences, "which may otherwiſe happen, but muſt conduce "to the peace and happineſs of both nations; and "therefore, I hope, I ſhall have your aſſiſtance, in "bringing this great work to a concluſion.

"There is another union I think my ſelf obliged "to recommend to you, in the moſt earneſt affectio- "nate manner, I mean an union of minds and "affections amongſt our ſelves: it is that which "would, above all things, diſappoint and defeat "the hopes and deſigns of our enemies.

"I cannot but with grief obſerve, there are "ſome amongſt us, who indeavor to foment ani- "moſities; but, I perſuade my ſelf, they will be "found to be very few, when you appear to aſſiſt "me in diſcountenancing, and defeating ſuch "practices.

"I mention this, with a little more warmth; "becauſe there have not been wanting ſome, ſo "very malicious as even in print to ſuggeſt the "church of England, as by law eſtabliſhed, to be "in danger, at this time.

"I am willing to hope, not one of my ſub- "jects can really entertain a doubt of my affection "to the church, or ſo much as ſuſpect, that it "will not be my chief care to ſupport it, and leave "it ſecure after me; and therefore, we may be "certain, that they who go about to inſinuate "things of this nature, muſt be mine, and the "kingdom's enemies, and can only mean to cover "deſigns which they dare not publickly own, by "indeavoring to diſtract us with unreaſonable "and groundleſs diſtruſt and jealouſies.

"I muſt be ſo plain as to tell you, the beſt

Q. Ann, An' 1705.

" proofs we can all give at preſent, of our zeal " for the preſervation of the church, will be to " join heartily in proſecuting the war againſt an " enemy, who is certainly ingaged to extirpate " our religion, as well as to reduce this kingdom " to ſlavery.

" I am fully reſolved, by God's aſſiſtance, to " do my part.

" I will always affectionately ſupport and coun- " tenance the church of England, as by law eſta- " bliſhed.

" I will inviolably maintain the toleration.

" I will do all I can to prevail with my ſubjects, " to lay aſide their diviſions, and will ſtudy to " make them all ſafe and eaſy.

" I will indeavor to promote religion and virtue " amongſt them, and to incourage trade, and every " thing elſe that may make them a flouriſhing and " happy people.

" And they who ſhall concur zealouſly with " me, in carrying on theſe good deſigns, ſhall be " ſure to find my kindneſs and favor."

This pathetic and comprehenſive ſpeech, pened, as it was ſuppoſed, by the new lord-keeper, was received with great applauſe, by the generality of the people, and the majority of both houſes of parliament. The 1ſt of November, the lords attended the Queen with an addreſs, wherein having taken notice of what had been delivered from the throne, they aſſured her; " that they concur'd in " theſe her Majeſty's wiſe and noble ſentiments; " and that no dangers ſhould deter, nor any arti- " fices divert them, from doing all that was in " their power, to aſſiſt her Majeſty in carrying " on the war, 'till ſhe ſhould be inabled to pro- " cure ſuch a peace for Europe, as ſhe had men- " tioned in her ſpeech:"

Addreſs of the lords.

They commended, or, as they expreſs'd it, " admired in her Majeſty, that tender and indul- " gent affection to her people, which ſhe had " ſhewn from the begining of her reign; that " earneſt deſire to unite them among themſelves, " and to make them all eaſy, ſafe and happy; that " ſteady zeal for the church of England, and that " compaſſion for thoſe who were ſo unhappy as to " diſſent from her: and promiſed to do all they " could to diſcountenance and defeat the deſigns " and practices of thoſe who fomented animoſities " among her people; ever to ſhew the utmoſt de- " teſtation of thoſe ungrateful and wicked men, " who labored to diſhonor her Majeſty's reign, " and diſtract her ſubjects, with unreaſonable and " groundleſs jealouſies of dangers to the church " of England: and to be ready to concur in all " meaſures requiſite to put a ſtop to the malice of " thoſe incendiaries."

The Queen's anſwer.

The Queen returned their lordſhips " her hearty " thanks for this addreſs; aſſured them it was a " great ſatisfaction to her, to find they were ſo " ready to concur in thoſe things ſhe had recom- " mended to them."

Addreſs of the commons.

The 6th, the commons waited on her Majeſty with their addreſs, in which they alſo " repeated, " and concurred in all the eſſential parts of her " ſpeech:" the Queen told them; " ſhe took " very kindly the confidence expreſs'd in her care " of the public, and their concern for the occaſion " ſhe had to complain, and returned them her " hearty thanks, for the aſſurance of their ſupport " and aſſiſtance, which ſhe would always indeavor " to improve for the advantage and happineſs of " her people."

Her Majeſty's anſwer.

A ſupply voted.

The 9th of November, the commons, in a grand commitee, voted a ſupply to her Majeſty, which reſolution wa , the next day, reported and approved; and it was ordered, " That eſtimates of the " ſea-ſervice, land-forces, and office of ordnance; as " alſo accounts of other particular expences; of " the number of ſhips and men imployed in the " ſea-ſervice, from the 1ſt of November 1704, " to the ſame day 1705; of the ſums of mony " that had ariſen by prizes, &c. might be laid be- " fore the houſe, which was readily complied " with."

Q. Ann, An' 1705.

Addreſs of the commons about the union.

The 13th, the commons having taken the Queen's ſpeech into conſideration, reſolved to " addreſs her " Majeſty, to return her thanks for her tender " regard to the good and welfare of both her " kingdoms of England and Scotland; for her " great care and indeavor to ſettle the ſucceſſion " of the kingdom of Scotland, in the houſe of " Hanover; for preſerving the peace, and pro- " moting the union of the two kingdoms; and to " aſſure her Majeſty, that this houſe would, to " the utmoſt of their power, aſſiſt her Majeſty, to " bring this great work to a happy concluſion: " and, likewiſe, that ſhe would be graciouſly pleas'd " to direct, that the whole proceedings of the " laſt ſeſſion of parliament, in Scotland, relating " to the union of the two kingdoms, and the ſet- " tlement of the ſucceſſion of Scotland, in the " houſe of Hanover, be laid before this houſe."

The Queen's anſwer.

The 15th, mr. ſecretary Harley acquainted the houſe; that this addreſs having been preſented to her Majeſty, ſhe was pleaſed to give an anſwer, in theſe words: " I take very kindly the " ſenſe you expreſs of my indeavors to promote " the Proteſtant ſucceſſion, and the treaty of union, " in Scotland. I have given direction for com- " plying with your addreſs; and you ſhall have " the ſtate of that matter as ſoon as it can con- " veniently be ſent you.

Addreſs of the lords, on the ſame account.

The 12th, the lords took her Majeſty's ſpeech into conſideration; and, after a long debate, a commitee was ordered to ſit the next day, to draw up an addreſs to the Queen, to deſire; " that her " Majeſty would be pleaſed to order all papers, " relating to the proceedings of the laſt ſeſſion of " the parliament of Scotland, to be laid before " that houſe:" which orders the Queen gave accordingly.

Lord Haverſham's ſpeech.

The 15th, their lordſhips went upon the ſtate of the nation, her Majeſty being preſent: and the lord Haverſham, upon that occaſion, made a remarkable ſpeech, of which I have already made ſome mention, when I ſpoke of the oppoſition made by the Dutch, to the deſign laid by the duke of Marlborough to ingage the French, after he had forced their lines; and ſhall now add a paragraph or two. Having taken notice of the backwardneſs of the Imperialiſts and the Dutch, the next thing he hinted at was the decay of our trade. " There is a word " (ſaid he) we are fond of, which we call the " balance of power: but the Dutch, who are a " very wiſe people, have a double view, and take " as much care of the balance of trade, as they do " of the balance of power, and are as much afraid " of our power by ſea, as of the power of France " by land. Trade begets wealth, as wealth be- " gets power; and it is very hard for England, " that while the Dutch live at peace, under the " protection of our arms, if we will have any " part of trade with them, we muſt have it under " the protection of French paſſes. The Dutch, " indeed, complain they are poor, but I do not " ſee (continued his lordſhip) how they have been " out of pocket one ſhilling ſince the war; for " they have had more by remitances and mony " from England, than all the mony ſent out of " their country to Portugal, Savoy, and the Ger- " man Princes."

He likewiſe animadverted on a paragraph in her Majeſty's ſpeech to the laſt parliament, wherein ſhe told them, of ſome heats in the houſe, and this

Q. Ann, An' 1705.

this he insinuated was "unparliamentary, and "hoped her Majesty would never give ear to any "secret and private information, but as it came "to her in a parliamentary way, by the houses "themselves:" but his principal aim, in this speech, seems to have been to procure an invitation of the Princess Sophia to come to England, and, to that end, he concluded with a motion: "that an humble address be presented to her Ma- "jesty by this house, that she will be graciously "pleased to invite the presumptive heir to the "crown of England, according to the acts of "parliament made for settling the succession of the "crown, in the Protestant line, into this kingdom, "to reside here."

Motion for inviting the Princess Sophia.

Carried in the negative.

This motion was, indeed, back'd by some lords; but it was opposed by a great majority; and, after a debate of four hours, the question being about to be put upon the motion, the previous question, whether it should be put, was carried in the negative; whereupon the lords, who were for the affirmative, entered their protests (1). However, to shew their zeal for the security of the Hanover-succession, the lords appointed the 19th of that month, to take the same into consideration. After that day's debate, at which the Queen was present, it was carried without dividing; "that a "bill be brought in for the better security of her "Majesty's person and government, and of the "succession to the crown of England in the Pro- "testant line: and that for continuing the admi- "nistration of the government, in the name of "the next Protestant successor (that may happen "to be out of this kingdom, at the time of her "Majesty's demise) until her or his arrival, the "archbishop of Canterbury, the chancellor, or "lord-keeper of the great seal, the high-treasurer, "the president of the council, the lord privy-seal, "the high-admiral, and the lord chief-justice of "the Queen's-bench, at that time being, be con- "stituted lords-justices of England, and impower- "ed, in the name of the successor, to act, as if "present." This bill was brought in the 21st, and, at the same time, the lords ordered another bill to be brought in, for naturalizing the house of Hanover, being Protestants.

Bill for the security of the Hanover succession.

The 22d, the lord Haversham moved, "that "the miscarriages of the last campain, occasioned "by the allies, might be look'd into;" which being put to the vote was carried, by a great majority, in the negative. The next day, their lordships went upon the Scotish affairs, the Queen being present, and, after a long debate, resolved; "that, in order to come to an union with the "kingdom of Scotland, the act pass'd the last "session of the preceding parliament, intitled, an "act for the effectual securing the kingdom of "England, from the apparent dangers which may "arise from several acts lately pass'd in the parlia- "ment of Scotland, should be repeal'd, except "the clause which impowers her Majesty to ap- "point commissioners to treat of an union with "that kingdom; ordered, that the judges bring "in a bill for that purpose, and that a commitee "should sit thereon: and resolved, that the thanks "of the house be given to her Majesty, for her "care about Scotland, and for her promoting the "interest of that kingdom, by the succession to "the crown, in the Protestant line.

A bill for an union with Scotland.

The commons, in the mean time, proceeded with great unanimity and chearfulness, in the dispatch of the public business, and voted the several branches of the supply, which, in general, were but a confirmation of those of the foregoing year: but this is observable, that the question being proposed and put; "whether it should be "refered to the commitee to consider, that in "the clause for adding 10,000 men, to act in "conjunction with the Dutch, it should be pro- "vided, that they be obliged to leave off trading "with France;" it was carried in the negative, by a majority of 184 voices, against 117.

The several branches of supply voted.

Q. Ann, An' 1705.

The 22d of November, captain Norris (of the Britannia) arrived at St. Helens, on board the Canterbury; being sent express from Barcelona to bring the welcome news of the reduction of that city, as I have above related. In the same ship came the lord Shannon, and brigadier-general (late earl) Stanhope, who brought letters to the Queen, from the King of Spain, the Junta of the military arm of Catalonia, the city of Barcelona, the city of Vich, and the earl of Peterborough: upon the receit of which, her Majesty went to the house of peers, and the commons being sent for up, she was pleas'd to make the following speech to both houses:

Advice of the successes in Catalonia.

My lords and gentlemen,

"Having newly received letters from the King "of Spain, and the earl of Peterborough, which "contain a very particular account of our great "and happy successes in Catalonia, and shew- "ing, at the same time, the reasonableness of "their being immediately supported, I look upon "this to be a matter of so much consequence in "it self, and so agreeable to you, that I have or- "dered a copy of the King of Spain's letter to "myself, a letter from the Junta of the military "arm of Catalonia; and another letter from the "city of Vich, as also an extract of the earl of "Peterborough's letter to me, to be communi- "cated to both houses of parliament.

The Queen's speech thereupon.

"I recommend the consideration of them to "you, gentlemen of the house of commons, very "particularly, as the speediest way to restore the "Monarchy of Spain to the house of Austria: "and therefore, I assure my self, you will inable "me to prosecute the advantages we have gained, "in the most effectual manner, and to improve "the opportunity, which God Almighty has "pleased to afford us, of puting a prosperous end "to the present war."

My lords and gentlemen,

"I must not lose this occasion, of desiring you "to give as much dispatch to the matters before "you, as the nature of them will allow; that so "our preparations for the next year may be early, "which cannot fail of being of great advantage "to us."

The commons being return'd to their house, mr. secretary Hedges laid before them the letters mentioned in her Majesty's speech, after the reading of which, it was unanimously resolved: that that an humble address be presented to her Majesty "to congratulate the glorious success of her "arms, and those of her allies in Catalonia, and "to assure her Majesty, that this house would, "to the utmost of their power, inable her Ma- "jesty to prosecute the great advantages already "obtained there." And this address being presented, the same day, her Majesty "returned "them many thanks, for the assurances they "had given, which she did not doubt would "have a good effect, at home and abroad."

The commons congratulate the Queen thereupon.

The 29th, both houses attended the Queen

Address to cultivate a good understanding with the allies.

(1) Their protest was entered in the following words: "we humbly conceive, that having a presumptive heir to the "crown residing in the kingdom, will be a great strenthening to her Majesty's royal hands, in the administration of the "government, and security of her Majesty's royal person, and of the succession to the crown, in the Protestant line, as by "law establish'd."

with

Q. Ann, An' 1705.

with an addreſs; importing: "that being juſtly "alarmed by the many artifices, which the "emiſſaries of France had put in practice the laſt "year, in order to raiſe jealouſies, and create "miſunderſtandings amongſt the allies; and being "apprehenſive leaſt ſuch malicious inſinuations, if "they ſhould paſs unobſerved, might, in time, "ſo far take place, as to abate the ſpirit, and "ſlacken the zeal of the confederacy, they moſt "humbly beſought her Majeſty, to uſe all poſſible "indeavors to preſerve a good correſpondence "amongſt all the confederates, and, in a moſt "particular manner, to maintain and cultivate a "ſtrict friendſhip, with the States-general of the "United-provinces, as alſo, by all proper means, "to excite the whole confederacy, to make early "and effectual preparations, and to exert their "utmoſt vigor, in the proſecution of the war "againſt France."

The Queen's anſwer.

To this addreſs, the Queen anſwered; "that "their joining in this addreſs was a very particular "ſatisfaction: that their opinion would always be "of the greateſt weight with her; that ſhe would "readily comply with their deſire; and that ſhe "made no queſtion but it would meet with a juſt "regard from all their allies.

Farther ſupplies voted.

The commons being, the ſame day, in a grand committee, on the ſupply, voted, among ſeveral other ſums, as in the foregoing year, an additional ſupply of 250,000 l. for her Majeſty's proportion of the charge, of proſecuting the ſucceſſes already gained by King Charles III. for recovery of the monarchy of Spain to the houſe of Auſtria.

The Princeſs Sophia naturalized.

The 3d of December (1), the Queen went to the houſe of peers, with the uſual ſtate, and gave the "royal aſſent to "An act for exhibiting a bill in "this preſent parliament, for naturalizing the "moſt excelent princeſs Sophia, electreſs and du-"cheſs dowager of Hanover, and the iſſue of "her body."

The next day, the houſe of commons, in a grand commitee, took into conſideration the "papers "communicated to their houſe, relating to the pro-"ceedings of the parliament of Scotland, concern-"ing the union of the two kingdoms, and the ſuc-"ceſſion of the crown of Scotland, in the houſe of "Hanover." Upon this occaſion, ſir Thomas Hanmer made a motion, conformable to that which had been made in the houſe of lords, "for invi-"ting the Princeſs Sophia to come to England. "This motion was ſeconded by mr. Benſon, and "ſupported by mr. Bromley, and other gentle-"men:" but another motion being made, and the queſtion put, "that the chairman leave the chair," it was carried in the affirmative, and ſo ſir Thomas Hanmer's motion drop'd (2)

Debates about the church of England's being in danger.

The reader will remember, that her Majeſty was pleas'd, in her firſt ſpeech to this parliament, to declare that a great many people made it their buſineſs to inſinuate, "That the church of England was "in danger:" therefore, to juſtify her Majeſty's aſſertion, that it was not, and to remove all unreaſonable and ill-grounded jealouſies, or, as the other party would have it, in order to condemn and fix a brand on all thoſe who ſuggeſted, that the then miniſtry had any treacherous deſigns againſt the church; the lord Hallifax moved the houſe of peers, that a day might be appointed to inquire into that pretended danger. The 6th of December was appointed, accordingly, when, after the matter had been very warmly debated, in the Queen's preſence, the chief ſpeakers, being the earl of Rocheſter, the lord Hallifax, the biſhops of Lincoln and Sarum, the archbiſhop of York, the biſhops of Ely, Litchfield and Coventry, and Bath and Wells, the duke of Leeds, and the lord Sommers, the queſtion was put, "Whether the church of "England was in danger?" Which, upon a diviſion, was carried in the negative, by a majority of ſixty-one voices againſt thirty. And then their lordſhips made the following vote, viz. "Reſolved, by the lords ſpiritual and temporal, that "the church of England, as by law eſtabliſhed, "which was reſcued from the extreameſt danger, "by King William III. of glorious memory, "is now, by God's bleſſing, under the happy reign "of her Majeſty, in a moſt ſafe and flouriſhing "condition; and that whoever goes about to ſug-"geſt and inſinuate, that the church is in danger, "under her Majeſty's adminiſtration, is an enemy "to the Queen, the church and the kingdom:" againſt which reſolution, ſeveral lords entered their proteſts, for the reaſons alledg'd in the debate.

Reſolution of the lords thereupon.

The next day, the lords ſent a meſſage to the commons, to acquaint them with their proceedings, and deſire their concurrence with their reſolution, in relation to the church: upon which, the day following, the queſtion was put, "Whether they "ſhould conſider of that meſſage in a commitee, "or in a full houſe?" And it was carried for the latter, by 222 voices, againſt 161. After a long debate (3), the commons agreed with the reſolution of the lords; but divided upon the latter part; (viz. "is now in a moſt ſafe, &c.") 212 for the affirmative againſt 162 for the negative.

The commons concur in it.

The 14th, the commons agreed, likewiſe, with the lords, in an addreſs to the Queen, containing the aforementioned reſolution, relating to the church: "beſeeching, withal, her Majeſty, to take effec-"tual meaſures for making the ſaid reſolution pub-"lic, and alſo for puniſhing the authors and "ſpreaders of the ſeditious and ſcandalous reports "of the church being in danger:" to this the Queen anſwered: "That ſhe ſhould freely com-"ply with their addreſs, and was very well pleas'd "to find both houſes ſo forward to join with her,

Addreſs of both houſes thereupon.

The Queen's anſwer.

(1) The ſame day, the duke of Argile, of the kingdom of Scotland, was introduced into the houſe of peers, as baron and earl of the kingdom of England, by the ſtile, name and title, of baron of Chatham, and earl of Greenwich, in the county of Kent, as was, ſome time before, the duke of Mountague, in that quality.

(2) It was matter of wonder and ſurprize to many, that this motion was made and ſupported by gentlemen of the party call'd tories, and the motives aſſign'd for this conduct varied as much, as the parties by whom they were propagated. The tory-party pretended, that they made it "to demonſtrate, that they were not in the pretender's intereſt, as their enemies ſuggeſted, and "that ſhe might be acquainted with the true intereſt of the nation, and not rely upon the partial repreſentations of the whigs, "in forming a judgment of the ſeveral parties, and, in ſhort, to ſhew that illuſtrious family, that the tories were no leſs zea-"lous for their ſucceſſion than the whigs, who repreſented them as enemies to it, and much better friends to monarchy, than "that party could pretend to be." The whigs, on the other hand, pretended; "That the motion for inviting the Princeſs "Sophia was made by the tories, to put a ſlur upon it, being well aſſured, that the court-party would not come into it; "which could not fail of being of ſome uſe to the Jacobites."

(3) The chief arguments in this debate, in both houſes, to prove the church in danger, were: "The power of the preſby-"terians in Scotland, where the church of England was not ſo much as tolerated: the abſence of the next proteſtant ſucceſſor, "in caſe of the Queen's demiſe; the want of an act againſt occaſional conformity: the increaſe of preſbyterian ſchools and "ſeminaries: prophaneneſs, immorality and irreligion; the act of ſecurity in Scotland: the abuſe and ill diſpenſation of her "Majeſty's late bounty to the clergy: the licentiouſneſs of the preſs, and the great numbers of libels, which were daily pub-"liſh'd againſt the church: the increaſe of preſbyterian conventicles; and, in the houſe of commons, even the reſolution of "the lords was urged, to prove the church's being in danger."

"in

Q. ANN, AN' 1705. " in putting a ſtop to theſe malicious reports: and, according to the deſire of both houſes, the 20th, her Majeſty ordered a proclamation to be iſſued, for making their reſolution public; " and for " diſcovering the author of the memorial of the " church of England; and apprehending David " Edwards, a profeſs'd Papiſt, charged upon oath " to be the printer and publiſher of that libel.

Charles Cæſar eſq; ſent to the Tower.

The 19th of December, an ingroſs'd bill from the lords, intitled an " act for the better ſecurity of " her Majeſty's perſon and government, and of " the ſucceſſion to the crown of England, in the " Proteſtant-line," being read a ſecond time, a debate aroſe, thereupon, in which Charles Cæſar, eſq; member for the borough of Hertford, among other things, ſaid: " there was a noble lord, with- " out whoſe advice the Queen did nothing, who, " in the late reign, was known to keep a conſtant " correſpondence with the court of St. Germains." This reflection, upon a great favorite, was ſo highly reſented by the houſe, that, having order'd the words to be taken down in writing, at the table, they voted them to be " highly diſhonorable to " her Majeſty's perſon and government, and that " Charles Cæſar, eſq; be, for his ſaid offenſe, com- " mited priſoner to the Tower."

Acts paſs'd.

The 21ſt the Queen came to the houſe of lords, and gave the royal aſſent to; 1ſt " the land-tax- " act (of four-ſhillings in the pound) for the year " 1706; 2d, an act to repeal ſeveral clauſes in " the ſtatutes made in the third and fourth year " of her preſent Majeſty's reign, for ſecuring the " kingdom of England from ſeveral acts lately " paſs'd in the parliament of Scotland; 3d, an " act for the naturalization of the moſt excellent " Princeſs Sophia, electreſs and ducheſs-dowager " of Hanover, and the iſſue of her body;" and to three private bills.

The Queen's ſpeech to both houſes.

This done, her Majeſty made a ſpeech to both houſes, in which ſhe took notice of the " unani- " mity of their proceedings, and of the good diſpo- " ſition they had ſhewn towards an union with " Scotland; and returning the commons thanks " for the great diſpatch of this ſeaſonable ſupply; " not doubting but, after the receſs, they would " return, with the ſame good diſpoſition, to give all " poſſible diſpatch to the public affairs ſtill depen- " ding." The commons reſolved to preſent an addreſs of thanks, for this ſpeech, and then adjourn'd themſelves to the 7th of January. The laſt day of this year, died at Liſbon, Queen Katherine, dowager of King Charles II.

AN' 1706. Thanks given to the duke of Marlborough by the houſe of commons.

The duke of Marlborough being returned to England, as I have already ſaid, at the concluſion of the laſt year's tranſactions, and the parliament being then ſiting, the houſe of commons reſolved, on the 7th of January, " that the thanks of their " houſe be given to his grace the duke of Marl- " borough, for his great ſervices performed to " her Majeſty, and the nation, in the laſt cam- " pain, and for his prudent negociations with " her Majeſty's allies;" and appointed a commitee, for that purpoſe, who having attended the duke accordingly, his grace's anſwer was:

His anſwer.

" I am ſo ſenſible of the great honor which is " done me by this meſſage, that I cannot have the " leaſt concern at the reflections of any private " malice, while I have the ſatisfaction of finding " my faithful indeavors to ſerve the Queen, and " the kingdom, ſo favorably accepted by the houſe " of commons."

Q. ANN, AN' 1706.

Theſe reflections of private malice the reader has already partly ſeen, in what I have mentioned above: but the chief were, as it was believed, ſome aſperſions caſt upon his grace's conduct, laſt campain, in ſeveral pamphlets, and eſpecially in a libel, intitled: a letter to the author of the memorial of the church of England. Mr. Stephens, rector of Sutton in Surry, being found to be the author of that ſcandalous pamphlet, was ſent for up, and examin'd before a ſecretary of ſtate. He, at firſt, ſeem'd obſtinate in maintaining what he had advanced; but, upon better thoughts, being ſenſible of his error, he publiſhed a recantation, by way of letter to the duke of Marlborough.

Aſperſions thrown upon the duke.

Eſpecially by mr. Stephens.

But this malice, which the duke of Marlborough takes notice of, was not confined to pamphlets alone; an attempt was formed againſt him, as it was believed, even in the houſe of lords, tho' he was, upon all occaſions, ſpoken of with great reſpect. Complaints were made of the errors commited the laſt year, in the conduct of the war. The anti-miniſterial party laid, indeed, the blame of the miſcarriage of the deſign on the Moſel, on the Prince of Baden, and the errors commited in Brabant, on the States and their deputies; but, they pretended, they could not be judges of theſe things, nor be able to give the Queen ſuch advice, as might be fiting for them to offer her, unleſs they were made acquainted with the whole ſeries of thoſe affairs: their propoſal, therefore, was, that, by an addreſs, they might pray the Queen to communicate to them, all ſhe knew concerning thoſe tranſactions, during the laſt campain (1). This attempt, however, failed, and tended rather to the duke's honor than diſgrace.

An attempt ſaid to be formed againſt the duke, in the houſe of lords.

About the ſame time, his grace had the honor of the Queen's commands, to treat with the duke of Savoy, concerning an attempt upon Toulon, which, tho' it miſcarried in the execution, was thought one of the moſt effectual means of finiſhing the war. Having treated about it, with the duke's miniſters, he made overtures to the Dutch, of going to his royal highneſs's aſſiſtance: but the States-general ſet too great a value upon his conduct to part with him ſo eaſily, and fearing they might be expoſed by his abſence, prevailed upon him to make the campain in Flanders. But to return to the parliament.

The duke of Marlborough concerts an attempt on Toulon.

The 8th of January, the commons reſolved; Ways and means.

" that towards raiſing the ſupply, a tax be laid " upon all grants of lands, tenements, hereditaments " and penſions, made ſince the 6th day of February " 1684. That the ſaid tax be a fifth part of the " value of the grant, at the time of the grant made; " that the duties upon malt, mum, cyder and perry, " be farther continued from the 23d of June " 1706, until the 24th of June 1707, and a far- " ther duty be laid upon all low-wines, or ſpirits " of the firſt extraction, from any forein materials:" and ordered a bill to be brought in upon the ſaid reſolution.

The 18th the commons voted, " that the duty " upon coals, culm and cinders, which were to

(1) They reckoned, that if all particulars ſhould be laid before them, " they would find ſomething in the duke of Marl- " borough's conduct, on which a cenſure might be fix'd. To this, it was anſwered, that if any complaint was brought againſt " any of the Queen's ſubjects, it would be reaſonable for them to inquire into it, by all proper ways: but the houſe of lords " could not pretend to examine, or to cenſure the conduct of the Queen's allies: they were not ſubject to them, nor could they " be heard to juſtify themſelves: and it was ſomething extraordinary if they ſhould paſs a cenſure, or make a complaint of them: " It was one of the truſts that was lodg'd with the government, to manage all treaties and alliances; ſo that our commerce with " our allies was wholly in the crown. Allies might ſometimes fail, being not able to perform what they undertook: they are " ſubject both to errors and to accidents, and are ſometimes ill-ſerved. The entring into that matter was not at all proper for " the houſe, unleſs it was intended to run into raſh and indiſcreet cenſures, on deſign to provoke the allies, and, by that means " to weaken, if not break the alliance. The Queen would no doubt indeavor to redreſs whatſoever was amiſs, and that muſt " be truſted to her conduct." Burnet's hiſtory of his own times, vol. II. p. 436.

Q. Ann, An' 1706.

" continue until the 15th of May 1708, ſhould be farther continued 'till the 30th of September, 1708."

About the ſame time, Edwards, who printed the libel, call'd a " memorial of the church of " England," for the apprehending of whom a proclamation, with a promiſe of a reward had been iſſued, ſurrender'd himſelf upon aſſurance of a pardon, if he diſcovered the author of it, and named mr. Pooley, mr. Ward, and ſir Humphrey Mackworth, three members of the houſe of commons: but the copy being brought him by a third hand, he was not able to make good the charge, and ſo the matter dropp'd.

Acts paſs'd.

The 16th of February, the Queen came to the houſe of peers, and gave the royal aſſent to the " malt-bill, to an act for continuing an aditional " ſubſidy of tonage and poundage, certain duties " on coals, &c. and additional duties of exciſe, " for payment of annuities;" and to ſome other public and private acts; after which her Majeſty made a ſpeech to both houſes, in which ſhe particularly " thank'd the commons, for perfecting " ſo great ſupplies, in ſo ſhort a time."

The 27th, the commons took into conſideration the accounts of the revenues and debts, ever ſince her Majeſty's acceſſion to the crown, and reſolved: " that it appear'd to this houſe, that the public " revenues, granted, or ariſen, ſince her Majeſty's " happy acceſſion to the crown, had been duly ap- " plied to the advancement of the public credit, " and for the advantage and honor of the nation." The ſame day, they unanimouſly reſolved, to addreſs her Majeſty; " that ſhe would be pleaſed to " iſſue out her royal proclamation, for puting in " execution the laws in force againſt all ſuch per- " ſons as had or ſhould indeavor to pervert her " Majeſty's ſubjects to the Popiſh religion:" and ordered a bill to be brought in, " for making more " effectual the act of the eleventh year of his late " Majeſty's reign, for the farther preventing the " growth of Popery." A bill was brought in accordingly, the next day; but, at the third reading, it was rejected, by a majority, of one hundred and nineteen, againſt forty-three. The lords had likewiſe brought a bill into their houſe againſt Popery; but upon the commons rejecting theirs, that was dropp'd likewiſe, and they were contented with addreſſing the Queen, on the 14th of March; " that a more watchful eye ſhould be had over " the Romiſh prieſts, and Papiſts for the future, " and, for the ſame purpoſe, that a diſtinct and particular account ſhould be taken of all Papiſts, and " reputed Papiſts, in the kingdom, with their reſpective qualities, eſtates, and places of abode, " and that the ſeveral accounts of theſe inquiries be " laid before their houſe, at the next ſeſſion of " parliament."

Bills againſt Popery dropp'd.

Addreſs of the lords againſt Papiſts.

The Queen's anſwer.

To this addreſs, her Majeſty anſwered; " ſhe " was fully convinc'd, that the inſolent behavior " of the Papiſts had made, what their lordſhips " adviſed, neceſſary to be done, for the ſafety of " her perſon and government, and the welfare " of her people, and that ſhe would give the neceſſary " orders for every thing their lordſhips deſired."

Sir Rowland Gwyn's letter to the earl of Stamford cenſur'd.

The debates, which had been in both houſes, about inviting the Princeſs Sophia to come to England, having made a great noiſe, mr. Charles Gildon handed to the preſs a letter from ſir Rowland Gwyn, to the right honorable the earl of Stamford, dated at Hanover, Jan. 1. O. S. 1705-6, on that ſubject. This letter giving great offenſe to the miniſtry, on the 8th of March, a complaint was made of it to the houſe of commons, who voted it a ſcandalous, falſe and malicious libel, and, together with the lords, addreſs'd the Queen, " that " ſhe would be pleaſed to give order for the diſ- " covery and proſecuting of the author, with the " printer and publiſher, of the ſaid pamphlet." Accordingly mr. Gildon being apprehended for it, was afterwards tried, at Guild-hall, and fined 100 l. for publiſhing it.

Q. Ann, An. 1706.

Differences between the two houſes of convocation.

The differences which had ariſen four years before, between the two houſes of convocation, concerning the manner of ſynodical proceedings, and principally about the " right claimed by the " lower-houſe of holding and continuing their aſ- " ſemblies in the intervals of the ordinary proro- " gations," which the upper-houſe would never allow, maintaining, " that the archbiſhop has the " ſole and undoubted right of proroguing the " whole convocation of the upper and lower houſe, " with conſent of his ſuffragans;" theſe differences, I ſay, were, at this time, unhappily renewed: but the convocation being prorogued, ſome time after, to the firſt of March, the Queen, who was apprehenſive that theſe differences might ariſe to a greater height, if they were ſuffered to meet again, ſent a letter to the archbiſhop, on the 25th of February, wherein ſhe told him; " ſhe was ſurpri- " zed at the unhappy ſtate of things; but was re- " ſolved to maintain her ſupremacy, and the due " ſubordination of preſbyters to biſhops, as funda- " mental parts thereof; and if the biſhops acted con- " formably to this reſolution, they might be ſure of " the continuance of her protection and favor; and " directed him to adjourn the convocation to ſuch " farther time as ſhould appear convenient."

The archbiſhop being, at this time, indiſpoſed, appointed the biſhop of Norwich to act for him, as metropolitan, and as ſuch, he firſt communicated her Majeſty's letter to the convocation, to prorogue them. The upper-houſe being accordingly met, the 1ſt of March, in the Jeruſalem-chamber, the biſhop of Norwich ſent for dr. Bincks, dean of Litchfield, and prolocutor of the lower-houſe, who attended, with ſome other members of that houſe: but while the biſhop was reading the Queen's letter, dr. Atterbury, taking the prolocutor by the ſleeve, deſired him to be gone, telling him they had no buſineſs there. Upon this, the biſhop of Saliſbury roſe from his ſeat, and, ſtepping to them, told them: " it was the " greateſt piece of inſolence he ever ſaw, thus to " refuſe hearing the Queen's order," and bid the prolocutor " go at his peril;" whereupon he ſtaid and heard part of the Queen's letter read. Dr. Atterbury, and ſome others, return'd in the mean time, to the lower-houſe, and dr. Bincks being alſo come thither, they adjourned themſelves to the Wedneſday following.

Acts paſs'd.

The laſt thing of moment, which the two houſes of parliament took ſeverally under their conſideration, this ſeſſion, was the great want of ſeamen to man the fleet, and the commons having come to ſeveral reſolutions thereupon, ordered the ſame to be formed into a " bill, for the incourage- " ment and increaſe of ſeamen" &c. which being perfected and paſs'd both houſes, in four days, the Queen came to the houſe of peers, the 19th of March, and gave the royal aſſent to that act; " 2. to an act for the better ſecurity of " her Majeſty's perſon and government, and of " the crown of England in the Proteſtant line (1): 3. an

(1) By this act, the act of ſucceſſion received very material alterations, particularly in the appointing a regency, after the demiſe of her Majeſty; and whereas it was provided by the former act of ſettlement, that all matters relating to the goverment ſhould be tranſacted in the privy-council, and ſigned by the privy-counſelors, this clauſe was now repeal'd, as was likewiſe, that by which every perſon in office was diſqualified from being a member of parliament. The laſt alteration met with great oppoſition in the houſe of commons, and, at length, the matter was agreed to in the following manner, viz. " That after the " diſſolution

Q. Ann, An' 1706.

"3. an act for the amendment of the law, and the "better advancement of juſtice; 4. an act to pre- "vent frauds commited by bankrupts;" with ſeveral others of leſs moment, in all to the number of ſeventeen public, and fifty-three private bills.

The Queen's ſpeech to both houſes.

After this, her Majeſty made a ſpeech to both houſes, in which ſhe told the commons in particular; "ſhe was extreamly ſenſible of the diſ- "patch they had given to the ſupplies; aſſuring "them, ſhe would be very careful, that they might "be applied for the common intereſt." She likewiſe took notice of the "unanimity and zeal, which "ſhe had obſerved in both houſes, with great "ſatisfaction, throughout this whole ſeſſion, againſt "every thing that tended towards ſedition." The lord-keeper then, by the Queen's command, prorogued the parliament, to the 21ſt of May, next inſuing.

The parliament prorogued.

The Electoral Prince of Hanover choſen knight of the garter.

The 5th of April, a chapter of the moſt noble order of the garter was held at Kenſington, where the ſoverein, and ten knights-companions being preſent, his highneſs, George Auguſtus, Electoral Prince of Brumſwick Lunenburg (his preſent moſt gracious Majeſty) was elected a knight companion of that moſt noble order.

According to the order I have hitherto obſerved, I ſhould now proceed to an account of the affairs of Scotland: but as the union was the grand affair this year, of the parliament of that kingdom, I choſe rather to poſtpone it, that I may give an account of what paſs'd, in that matter, in Scotland, with what was tranſacted in that affair, in the parliament of England, in one connexion. And as our maritime affairs, this year, had a great connexion with the campains in Italy and Spain, I ſhall, therefore, poſtpone my account of them, likewiſe, and proceed firſt to a relation of the campain in Flanders.

The campain in Flanders.

The duke of Marlborough, who imbark'd for Holland the begining of April, continued at the Hague, 'till the 9th of May, N. S. during which time, he had repeated conferences, with the deputies of the States, and their generals. His grace departed, that day, and, being accompanied by Veltmarſhal d'Auverquerque, arrived at Maeſtricht the 12th. Monſ. d'Auverquerque departed the ſame night, and the duke followed him, to the army of the States, which was drawn together near Tongeren; and both repaired, the 17th, to Liege, to view the citadel, and the new works about that place. The Engliſh forces having received orders, in the mean time, to take the field, general Churchill ſet out from Breda, with the troops which were there, and the artillery, the 8th, and march'd to Wallwick; and, the ſame day, the reſt of them march'd out of their reſpective gariſons, in order to join at the Boſch, which they did, the 9th. The 11th, they march'd to Carnock, and from thence continued with long marches, till they arrived at Bilſen, the 19th of the ſame month. The 20th the army of the States marched from Tongeren, to Borchlaem, and, the ſame day, the Engliſh joined them, between that place, and Groſz-Waren (1).

The confederate army takes the field.

Q. Ann, An' 1706.

Deſigns and motions of the French.

The court of France, in the mean time, had information, that the confederate army, in the Netherlands, was not yet compleat; that the Danes refuſed to ſtir from their quarters, till their arrears were paid; and that the Pruſſians, for other reaſons, were yet ſo far behind, that they could not join the duke of Marlborough in ſeveral weeks. It was confidently ſaid, that the French King had penſioners in the courts of Denmark and Pruſſia, who had promiſed him to uſe their utmoſt indeavors to retard the march of their reſpective maſter's forces (which were in the pay of England and Holland) to the general rendezvous; upon the confidence of which they proceeded, as we ſhall preſently find they did (2). Be this as it will, the army of the two crowns, under the command of the Elector of Bavaria and the marſhal de Villeroy, conſiſting of 70,000 men, being intirely aſſembled, they flattered themſelves, that they might keep up the ſinking credit of their arms, by a conſiderable action in the Netherlands. In this fond imagination, ſuch poſitive orders were ſent to the marſhal de Villeroy, to fight the allies, that the duke of Bavaria, who was then at Bruſſels, had but juſt time enough to take poſt-horſes, to join the army, which paſſed the Deule, the 19th of May, and poſted themſelves at Tirlemont, with the Gheet before them.

The confederates are deſirous of ingaging.

The confederates on their ſide were no leſs eager for an ingagement; but could hardly flatter themſelves with the hopes of having ſo early, and ſo fair an opportunity for it. The duke of Marlborough, being apprehenſive, that the French would play the ſame game over again, and keep behind the Deule, as they had done the year before, had ſeveral times expreſs'd his concern and uneaſineſs about it, to thoſe who were intimate with him; and, by a wiſe forecaſt, was already laying ſchemes, to put the enemy beſide their cautious meaſures, when providence threw into his hands an unexpected occaſion of ſignalizing again his courage and conduct.

Motions of their army, in order thereunto.

Upon the enemy's paſſing the Deule, the duke of Marlborough ſent orders to the Daniſh horſe, who were coming from their gariſons, to haſten their march; and that their might not be the leaſt pretence of delay, he ingaged his promiſe, with the field-deputies of the States, that their arrears ſhould be duly paid them. The duke of Wirtemberg, who commanded thoſe troops, and was well affected to the common cauſe, ſeing every thing was complied with, that the King of Denmark inſiſted on, thought he needed not to ſtay till he ſent to that court, nor wait for expreſs orders. He, therefore, commanded his troops to march, and they made ſuch expedition, that the 22d of May, N. S. being the day before the battle, they came up within a league of the rear of the confederate army.

The French come out of their lines.

About the ſame time, the French having been join'd by the horſe of the marſhal de Marſin's ar-

---

"diſſolution of the then parliament, no perſon, in any new office, to be erected by the crown; or any commiſſioner, ſecretary, "or receiver of prizes; comptroller of accounts of the army; commiſſioners of tranſports, or ſick and wounded; or agents "of regiments; governors of plantations; commiſſioners of the navy; of the out-ports, or any perſons having penſions from "the crown during pleaſure, ſhould be capable of being choſen members of the houſe of commons: and that if any perſon, "choſen a member, ſhould afterwards accept any place of profit from the crown, his election ſhould be void; but that the ſame "perſon might be rechoſen for that, or any other county or borough. It was farther provided, that there ſhould be no more "commiſſioners appointed, for the execution of any office, than there had been before that ſeſſion: and laſtly, it was inacted, "that if any perſon, declared incapable of being elected, by this act, ſhould preſume to ſit or vote in the houſe, he ſhould "forfeit 500 l. to him that would ſue for the ſame."

(1) The confederate army then conſiſted of ſeventy-four battalions of foot, and 123 ſquadrons of horſe and dragoons, having with them 100 canon, twenty hawitzers, and 42 pontons.

(2) Others ſay, the court of France being ſenſible, that a defenſive war would, at length, terminate in their irrecoverable ruin, reſolved to make an extraordinary effort, and to act every where offenſively. In order hereunto, a great council of war, (ſay they) was held at Verſailles, where moſt of the generals aſſiſted, and form'd ſeveral projects, to raiſe the glory of their grand Monarch's arms, and recall fortune, which ſeem'd to have abandon'd them in the preceeding campain.

my

Q. Ann, An' 1706.

my, and confiding in their ſuperiority of number, came out of their lines, and incamp'd between Tirlemont and Judoigne.

The two armies meet.

The next day, being Whitſunday, about four o'clock, in the morning, the confederate army march'd in eight columns, towards Ramellies, a village near which the Gheet takes it ſource; that they might avoid the inconveniency of paſſing that river. They ſoon had information, that the enemy's army, having decamp'd from Tirlemont, was likewiſe on their march to meet them, their baggage and heavy cannon being left at Judoigne. The duke of Bavaria, and the marſhal de Villeroy, not in the leaſt ſuſpecting that the Danes had already join'd the confederate army, were fully bent upon ingaging them, either that day or the following; being apprehenſive the duke of Marlborough had formed the deſign of inveſting Namur.

Force of the enemy's army.

The enemy's army then conſiſted of ſeventy-ſix battalions of foot, and 132 ſquadrons of horſe, having ſixty-two cannon, twelve mortars, and thirty-ſix pontons. Their immediate deſign was to poſſeſs themſelves of Ramellies, and the ſtrong camp thereabouts, to prevent the confederates doing the ſame; and in this they ſo far ſucceeded, that being nearer, they got thither firſt; but had the mortification to be ſoon beat out of it again, as the reader will ſee below.

The fears of the enemy were however, groundleſs concerning Namur; for the duke of Marlborough had no ſuch deſign. His reſolution was the ſame with theirs, and had not they offered him battle that day, he would certainly have attack'd them the next.

The famous battle of Ramellies.

The two armies met near the village of Ramellies, from whence the battle took its name (1). When the confederate army was advanced near this place, they found the enemy geting into the camp of mount St. André, and placing their right to the Mehaigne, where they had poſted a brigade of foot, and filled the ſpace between that and Ramellies, which is about half a league, an open and level ground, with near one hundred ſquadrons, among which were the troops of the French King's houſhold. They had likewiſe above twenty battalions of foot, with a battery of about twelve pieces of cannon, at Ramellies.

Preparations on both ſides, for the ingagement.

A little after eight o'clock in the morning, the advanc'd guard of the confederates, which conſiſted of 600 horſe, and had been ſent with all the quarter-maſters of the army to view the ground, arrived at the height of Merdop, (or Merdau) from whence they perceiv'd, that the enemy were in motion, and march'd in the plain of mount St. André, extending themſelves as far as the tomb of Hottomont, towards the Mehaigne. Hereupon they halted, and ſent intelligence to the duke of Marlborough, and monſieur d'Auverquerque, who being advanc'd, about ten, to view the enemy, they could not, at firſt judge, whether thoſe ſquadrons they ſaw were only to cover their march, into their lines, or whether they were the van of the enemy, that came to offer battle. His grace therefore, gave orders to the horſe to haſten their march, reſolving, if thoſe he ſaw had been only covering ſquadrons, to attack them with his cavalry only. But the fog being ſoon after diſpers'd, and the army being then in full view of the enemy, the duke found their whole army approach with an apparent reſolution to fight, upon which he made all the neceſſary diſpoſitions to receive them.

Q. Ann, An' 1706.

The enemy ſeing the confederates ſo near them, poſſeſs'd themſelves of a very ſtrong camp; placing their right near the tomb of Hottomont, againſt the Mehaigne; and their left at Anderkirk, or Autregliſe; and poſted a good deal of their infantry in the villages of Autregliſe, Offuz, and Ramellies, which laſt was near their center; beſide which they put five battalions, near the hedges of the village of Franquenies, which was on their right. The confederate army, was, at the ſame time, drawn up in order of battle, the right wing being poſted near Foltz, on the rivulet Yauſe, with a little moraſs in front; and the left near the village of Franquenies on the Mehaigne; where, beſide the number of the horſe belonging to that wing, the duke of Marlborough ordered the Daniſh ſquadrons, being twenty-one in number, to be poſted; rightly judging, by the ſituation of the ground, that the ſtreſs of the action would be on that ſide. All things being thus diſpoſed, it was reſolved to attack the village of Ramellies, which was the enemy's principal poſt; in which as I have ſaid above, they had poſted twenty battalions, who had intrenched themſelves, with a battery of about twelve pieces of treble cannon: and from thence to Autregliſe they had form'd a line of foot, along the Gheet, and a line of horſe behind them. In order to this attack, twenty pieces of cannon, of twenty-four pounders, and ſome hawitzers, were brought up; and twelve battalions, who were to be ſupported by the whole line, were order'd to make the firſt onſet, under the command of lieutenant-general Schultz.

The battle begins.

About half an hour paſt one, the artillery of the confederates began to play: it was immediately anſwer'd by the enemy's cannon, and both continued firing, with conſiderable execution, while the duke of Marlborough was at the head of the lines, to give the neceſſary orders every where, velt-marſhal d'Auverquerque repaired to the left, where perceiving, that the enemy's foot, poſted in the hedges of Franquenies, gall'd the horſe of that wing, he commanded four battalions, with two pieces of cannon, under colonel Wertmuller, to diſlodge them from thence: which they perform'd, with great vigor and reſolution. Hereupon the enemy detach'd two battalions, and fourteen ſquadrons of dragoons, on foot, to regain that important poſt; but monſieur d'Auverquerque commanded, at the ſame time, the whole wing of the Dutch horſe to attack the enemy, which not only prevented their deſign, but put thoſe dragoons into ſuch a diſorder, that they were not able either to reach the village, or to recover their horſes, which they had left a good way behind the tomb of Hottomont; and ſo were, moſt of them, cut in pieces, and taken priſoners. The Dutch cavalry charg'd with a great deal of bravery, ſword in hand, and ſoon after the ingagement was ſuſtain'd by the Daniſh ſquadrons; but having to deal with the French King's houſhold, viz. the muſquetaires, gens d'arms, gard de corps, horſe-grenadiers, and other choice troops, which were in the enemy's right, the conflict was obſtinate, and the ſucceſs doubtful for above an hour. The Daniſh horſe, which fought on the left of all, behaved themſelves with ſuch gallantry, that they forced the enemy to give ground, and broke ſeveral

(1) This place, which is render'd famous to all poſterity, by this auſpicious day, is but a village, ſurrounded by a ditch, in the diſtrict of Louvain, on the borders of the province of Namur. It is ſituated at the ſource of the Gheet, about a mile and a half north from the ſide of the Mehaigne, that interval being the narrow aperture, where this glorious battle was fought. The Gheet runs from Ramellies to Autreglize, thro' a marſhy ground, and beyond Autreglize, the river grows wide, and the ground is unpaſſable. Ramellies is ſix miles almoſt South from Judoigne, twelve South from Tirlemont, fourteen W. N. W. from Huy, and eleven North from Namur. Lediard's life of Marlborough, Vol. II. p. 13.

of

Q. Ann. An' 1706.

of their ſquadrons, but, at the ſame time, the French had almoſt an equal advantage againſt the the Dutch horſe of the right of the left wing, whom they put into great confuſion. To remedy this, the duke of Marlborough, who was advanc'd that way, ſent for twenty ſquadrons of horſe from the right wing, where they could not ingage the enemy's left, by reaſon of a moraſs which ſeparated them: and with theſe he re-inforced his left, adding to them his body of reſerve (1).

The duke of Marlborough twice in great danger.

The duke of Marlborough, while theſe troops were advancing from the right, rallied ſome of the broken ſquadrons, and gave his orders for others to charge: in this place his grace was in the extremity of danger: for being ſingled out by ſeveral of the reſoluteſt of the enemy, and having the misfortune, as he was leaping a ditch, to fall from his horſe, he had either been kill'd or taken priſoner, if ſome of the confederate foot, that were near at hand, had not come, very ſeaſonably, to his aſſiſtance (2). After this his grace had ſtill a narrower eſcape, a cannon ball taking off the head of colonel Briendfield, his grace's gentleman of the horſe, as he was holding the ſtirrup for the duke to remount.

The advantage begins to declare in favor of the confederates.

The twenty ſquadrons his grace had ſent for from the right, to re-inforce the left, had but little ſhare in the defeat of the enemy's right: for by that time they were come up, the Dutch and Danes, having charg'd them both in front and flank, had almoſt compleated that ſignal piece of ſervice, cuting in pieces the beſt part of the French King's houſhold; inſomuch that they could never be fully re-eſtabliſhed during the remainder of the war. In the mean time, the village of Ramellies was vigorouſly attack'd by general Schultz, with the twelve battalions under him: the enemy having the advantage of the ground, defended themſelves with great reſolution and obſtinacy, till ſeeing the whole line of the confederate infantry in motion, to ſupport general Schultz, and the Dutch and Daniſh horſe advancing to ſurround them, they bethought themſelves of making their retreat: but they found it was too late: for they were intercepted by the victorious horſe, and moſt of them either killed or taken priſoners.

The enemy flee on all ſides.

The reſt of the enemy's infantry indeavor'd, likewiſe, to make their eſcape, which they did in better order, being favor'd by the horſe of their left wing, who being cover'd by a rivulet and moraſs, had not yet been attack'd, and form'd themſelves in three lines, between Offuz and Autregliſe: but the Engliſh horſe having found means to paſs the rivulet, charg'd the enemy with ſuch unparallel'd briſkneſs and courage, that they intirely abandon'd their foot; and our dragoons puſhing into the village of Autregliſe, made a terrible ſlaughter of them. The reſt of the enemy, who were, at the ſame time, attack'd by the Engliſh and Dutch foot, with equal bravery, gave way on all ſides. Their horſe rallied again, in the plains, to cover the diſorderly retreat of their foot; but they were ſo cloſely purſued, by the confederate cavalry, that they were forced to divide themſelves into three ſmall bodies, that they might fly the better, three different ways. Thoſe that took to the left, were purſued by the Dutch and Danes, who made great ſlaughter among them, and took abundance of priſoners: thoſe that fled to the right, were chas'd by the regiments of Lumley, Hay and Roſs; which two laſt fell in with the foot regiment du Roy, of whom having kill'd many, the reſt threw down their arms and begg'd quarter, which was generouſly granted; upon which they delivered their arms and colors to the lord John Hay's dragoons: but when the dragoons faced about, in order to purſue the enemy, they treacherouſly attempted to take up their arms again; in which, however, they were prevented, and ſuffer'd ſeverely for their perfidy.

Q. Ann, An' 1706.

The headmoſt regiments of the Engliſh horſe, that purſued the enemy's center, were that of lieutenant-general Wood, commanded by himſelf, and Wyndham's (afterwards Palm's) carabineers, headed by major Petry. When they came upon a riſing ground, they eſpied ſeven ſquadrons of the Spaniſh and Bavarian guards, among which were the Elector himſelf and the marſhal de Villeroy, who hoped, with theſe few choice troops, to make good their retreat, and ſave their cannon, which was marching in a line before them. General Wood galloped with his own regiment upon the enemy's left, and charg'd them ſo vigorouſly, that he broke them all to pieces, killing many of them, and taking not a few priſoners, among whom were two lieutenant-colonels, one major, four captains, and ſeveral ſubaltern officers. He alſo took the ſtandard of the Elector's guards, two of his own trumpets, and kill'd his kettle drummer; the Elector himſelf, and the marſhal de Villeroy, very narrowly eſcaping. Major Petry, at the head of Wyndham's carabineers, fell upon the enemy with equal briſkneſs and reſolution, put many of them to the ſword, and took ſeveral priſoners, particularly the major of the Spaniſh guards, mr. de la Guertiere, and mr. de Bruan, cornet of the ſame; beſide four officers, and forty-ſix private men of the royal bombardiers, with their colors. The Engliſh horſe and dragoons followed the chace thro' and by Judoigne, till two o'clock in the morning, as far as Meldert, being five leagues from the place where the action happened, and two from Louvain. During this retreat, a misfortune happened to the enemy, which contributed not a little to compleat the victory. Several waggons of their vanguard, breaking down, ſtopp'd the way, ſo that their baggage and artillery, which follow'd, could not paſs; nor could their troops defile in good order: perceiving that the confederate horſe, having got intelligence of this accident, purſued them cloſe, they threw down their arms, that they might retreat with the greater eaſe, which they did, without any order, and in the utmoſt confuſion. Here it was that the moſt priſoners were taken; for in the action little or no quarter was given, the confederate horſe having been highly provok'd by the idle gaſconnades of the French musketeers and gens d' armes, of which they were very full when they came to the attack; but paid dearly for it in the ſequel. In ſhort, never was victory more compleat; the confederates made themſelves maſters of all the enemy's cannon, excepting two or three, to the number of about fifty pieces; moſt of their baggage; about 120 colors or ſtandards, and ſeveral pairs of kettle drums. The enemy's loſs of men, according

The confederates gain a compleat victory.

(1) French writers, who have given an account of this battle, allow this to have been a very prudent part of the duke of Marlborough's conduct: but to cover the diſgrace of their favorite troops, pretend his grace ſent for fifty, and not twenty ſquadrons from the right, and made four lines of them, beſide a column compoſed of his body of reſerve. Thus (ſays Father Daniel) the whole weight of the battle fell upon the right wing of the French army, where the troops of his Majeſty's houſhold were plac'd. This body (continues he) which had hitherto been invincible (he forgets Blenheim) entered the enemy's troops, and overthrew the three firſt lines: but finding a fourth, and the column abovementioned beſide, which was moving to fall upon them in the flank, they were obliged to give way: and juſt in the ſame ſtrain the marquis de Quincy argues.

(2) Thus the relation printed by authority in England has it; but it has been ſaid by ſome officers, who were in the ingagement, that the duke was born down by ſome of the diſordered Dutch horſe. It is not impoſſible but both might be true.

Q. Ann, An' 1706.

cording to the moſt general computation, amounted to 8000 ſlain, and among them, Prince Maximilian and Prince Monbaſon; and about 6000 private ſoldiers, and near 600 officers taken priſoners; which, with their deſerters and wounded, made their loſs not leſs than 20,000 men. Some accounts make the number of deſerters ſo great, as to aver, that hardly half of their troops ever returned to their colors. The perſons of note among the priſoners, were meſſieurs Palavicini and Meziere, major-generals; the marquis de Bar, brigadier-general of horſe; the marquis de Nonan, brigadier-general of foot; the marquis de la Baume, ſon of the marſhal de Tallard; monſ. de Montmorency, nephew to the late duke of Luxemburgh; a nephew of the lord Clare, and ſeveral others (1).

Juſt praiſes of the generals.

This compleat and memorable victory, next to the bleſſing of Heaven, was principally owing to the great courage, prudence, vigilance, and experience of the duke of Marlborough, who was perſonally preſent in the hoteſt of the action, and gave his orders, with wonderful ſedateneſs and preſence of mind. The ſecond honors of this glorious day were undoubtedly due to monſieur d'Auverquerque, velt-marſhal of the Dutch troops, who acted with all the valor, conduct, and vigor, that became a great and experienc'd general. The other generals, likewiſe, diſtinguiſhing themſelves, and, among the reſt, none more than his grace the duke of Argyle, who expos'd his perſon to the greateſt danger, and received ſeveral ſlight wounds; nor were the inferior officers leſs worthy of commendation, every one behaving, in their reſpective ſtations, as became men who were reſolved to conquer or die.

Q. Ann, An' 1706.

Officers.

And troops.

All the troops, that ingaged, fought likewiſe with the greateſt bravery and reſolution, and like men who were reſolutely bent to maintain the reputation they had acquired at Schellenberg and Bleinheim. Each had their part of this glorious victory, tho' in different manners (2).

The French abandon Louvain.

The Elector of Bavaria, and the marſhal de Villeroy, with the greateſt part of the remains of their army, continued their precipitate flight,

(1) Having given the moſt circumſtantial account I have been able to collect of this remarkable action, from the ſeveral relations publiſh'd here and in Holland, and from other authentic papers; I ſhall now add a word or two, of what the French have ſaid to leſſen their misfortune. Their terror and amazement was, beyond all queſtion, very great; however, they put the beſt face upon it they could, and at firſt indeavor'd to conceal their loſs, by giving only a very ſlight and general account of the battle. One of their prints ſays no more, than that, "On the 23d, the King's army advanc'd from "Goſſencourt to the Mehaigne, and was attack'd by the confederate army. That the confederates were poſſeſs'd of ſeveral "poſts, out of which they were driven by their foot, who for about an hour and a half fought the enemy's foot with advan- "tage, at the villages of Ramellies and Jandrenouille; ſo that, for a long time, there was ground to hope the victory would "have been theirs; but that, while moſt of the troops were ingag'd in the center, one of the enemy's battalions attack'd and "forced the village of Taviers. That their horſe attack'd the French horſe, on the right; who not ſuſtaining their effort, "with like vigor, gave the confederates ſuch advantage, as obliged their army to retire, after a pretty equal loſs, on both "ſides: that the retreat was made at firſt, in good order; but the difficult ways occaſioning a confuſion, ſome troops betook "themſelves to flight, which was the cauſe of farther loſs, and obliged their army to abandon part of their cannon, and ſe- "veral waggons."

In the Mercure-Galant, the reader is amus'd with pompous accounts of the ſuperior valor of their troops; tho', in the very ſame periods, they are oblig'd to allow they were beaten. I ſhall mention only one or two inſtances of theſe gaſconades, from the Mercure-Galant of that month; "The duke of Marlborough (ſays this author) having ſeen with what valor the "French had fought, could not forbear ſaying, that, with 30,000 ſuch men, he could go to the end of the world." What muſt not we then ſuppoſe he could do with thoſe troops, who beat and triumph'd over theſe more than men, if we will believe them? In another place, ſpeaking of the troops of the King's houſhold, he makes our brave general own; "That "they were more than men: and that he knew them, as well as what they were capable of doing, ſo well, that he judg'd it "proper to order ſix to one to oppoſe them." The Paris Gazeteer, however, tho' not the moſt modeſt of news-writers, is oblig'd to own, that the troops of the houſhold did not behave themſelves very well: "The cavalry, on the right (ſays he) "where the troops of the King's houſhold were poſted, did not withſtand the enemy's attack with the ſame vigor that the "reſt did."

But to leave theſe triflers, let us hear what an author of ſomething more credit and reputation, tho' not the moſt impartial on that ſide, ſays. I mean the marquis de Quincy, who begins the fifth volume of his hiſtory, and his relation of this campain, in the following words.

"I am now to give an account of the moſt diſadvantageous campain, for France, that has ever happen'd during this "King's reign, which brought on ſuch a chain of terrible conſequences, as chang'd the very face of affairs in this kingdom. "And yet never was there more reaſon to believe, that the Prince, who directed it (viz. the French King) would have "brought his enemies to reaſon, and would have obliged them to acquieſce in a peace, ſuch as his Majeſty was willing to "give to Europe, which began to ſtand in need of it.

"At the concluſion of the preceding campain, orders were immediately given to recruit the troops, and raiſe freſh ones; "and uncommon diligence was uſed, during the whole courſe of the winter, as well in this, as in filling the magazines, in "thoſe places where the ſeveral armies were to aſſemble; that they might be early in a condition to execute thoſe great pro- "jects which the King himſelf had form'd, with infinite pains, and for which he had put his armies in ſuch a ſtate, that they "might triumph, in every place, whereſoever he had any enemies.——— I may very well ſay, that the court never form'd "ſuch well laid deſigns, as thoſe which were intended to be put in execution this campain; and that never meaſures were "better taken, nor purſued with greater ſecreſy, to carry ſo many great points at one and the ſame time." (Here my author gives an account of theſe vaſt projects, and then proceeds). "Theſe were the deſigns which were to have been exe- "cuted during the courſe of this year, which, if they had ſucceeded, as it was reaſonable to hope, would have produced "the advantages France expected from them; but we ſhall ſoon ſee, by the relations I am going to give, that the events were "ſo far from anſwering the expectations ſo juſtly conceived, that never campain was ſo diſadvantageous to the two crowns. "——— Of all the fatal accidents of this campain (continues my author) the loſs of the battle of Ramellies, which, if "I may be allow'd to ſay it, was hazarded without any neceſſity, was that which was moſt ſenſibly felt; becauſe the conſe- "quence of it, was the loſs of a great number of places, in the Low-countries." Here our author goes on to give an account of this battle, in which he confirms almoſt every circumſtance I have mention'd in my relation; excepting that he affirms the confederate army to have been far ſuperior to that of the French, and aſſerts, that there were not above 6000 kill'd on both ſides, of which he reckons but a third part on theirs, and two thirds on that of the allies, a ſuppoſition ſo monſtrouſly ridiculous, that it refutes it ſelf. He likewiſe runs into the ſame abſurd rhodomontades, which I have mention'd above, with regard to the more than human courage of the troops of the King's houſhold, againſt whom he, with the reſt of his country-men affirms, the duke of Marlborough, knowing what ſort of people he had to do with, oppoſed ſix to one. But, as (if there be any truth in this aſſertion) the duke muſt, for this purpoſe, have weakned ſome other part of his army, why did not they take that advantage, and fall upon the weaken'd part. He has no other way to come off, but by pretending that a too great dependance on theſe troops brought this misfortune on the whole army. Lediard's life of Marlborough, Vol. II. p. 25

(2) The honor of this day was the greater to the confederates, as the Elector of Bavaria had been heard to ſay, the French army was the beſt he had ever beheld: and as they loſt not only their camp, baggage and artillery, but all that they had left in Judoigne; to which we may add, "That this victory decided the fate of the Low-countries, as the battle of Hochſtadt "did that of Bavaria" Lediard's life of Marlborough, Vol. II. p. 27.

Biſhop Burnet ſpeaking of this battle, ſays, the duke of Marlborough had told him, "The French army look'd the beſt "of flight, till they were got to Louvain; where having held a ſort of a tumultuous council of war, by torch-light, in the market place, they reſolved to abandon it, and retire towards Bruſſels. This was immediately put in practice; but the Elector of Bavaria thought himſelf ſo little ſecure there, that he ſpent the whole night in cauſing his papers, jewels, plate, and valuable furniture, to be pack'd up, and ſent away for Ghent, whither he himſelf follow'd, with all imaginable precipitation. On the other hand, the victorious confederates, having purſued the fugitives, till two in the morning, reſted a little near Meldert, and, at break of day, the duke of Marlborough ordered the army to incamp at Bavechien, for the refreſhment of the troops. In the mean time, his grace diſpoſed all things for their march early the next morning, in order to force the paſſage of the Deule; but he received advice, in the night, that the enemy had quited their camp, and abandon'd Louvain; upon which, bridges being laid over that river, a detachment of 500 men was ſent to take poſſeſſion of that city; and the whole army paſs'd the river, the next day, about noon, and took the camp of Bethlem.

Q. ANN, AN' 1706.

Precipitate flight of the Elector of Bavaria.

The confederates take poſſeſſion of Louvain.

Loſs of the confederates.

The loſs of the confederates, in ſo bloody and obſtinate a conflict, could not but be great; yet did not much exceed 1000 kill'd, and about double that number wounded, moſt of them in the Dutch ſervice. Among the ſlain were reckoned Prince Lewis of Heſſe Caſſel, colonel of foot: colonel Van Driebergen; colonel Leerſe; colonel Gammel; colonel Van Schoonheyde; colonel Brouck; colonel Bortwigh; colonel Hirſel; colonel Murray, junior; colonel Biſberg; colonel Fabricius; lieutenant colonel Baker; major Boncour; major Roer; major Noorman; count Van Warfuze, a major; meſſieurs Bentingh, Piper, Smirſer, Tullekins, and Strater, captains of horſe; meſſieurs Schimmelpennigh, Beckman, de Ozallier and Clerc, captains of foot; monſieur Winterkamp, a cornet; monſieur Roer, and Croonbrieker, enſigns; and adjutant Piper. Among the wounded were reckon'd colonel la Rocque Servier; major count Vander-nat; major St. Pol, who died of his wounds; major Swerin, who was alſo taken priſoner; major Larny, mortally wounded; major Cunningham; monſieur Van Berghem; captain of horſe; and monſieur Sutherland, captain of foot; colonel Schravemore was taken priſoner, but came back upon his parole. Monſieur d'Auverquerque, who purſued the flying enemy, till one the next morning, was like to have been ſtab'd by a baſe Bavarian captain, to whom he had generouſly given quarter, and ſuffered him to keep his ſword; but the villain was prevented by one Violette, a Frenchman, groom to that general, who ſhot the Bavarian dead upon the ſpot.

The conſequences of the battle of Ramellies.

After the battle of Ramellies, a general revolution followed, throughout the Low-countries, and the allies were bleſs'd with a continued chain of conqueſts. The inhabitants of thoſe provinces (weary of the French government) received the confederate generals every where as their deliverers, who had redeem'd them from ſlavery, and recover'd their ancient liberty.

Q. ANN, AN' 1706.

The French having abandoned Louvain, and being retired over the canal of Bruges, the duke of Marlborough purſued them, without loſs of time, and having decamp'd from Bethlem, advanced, the 26th of May, to Dighem. In this march, the duke received a letter from the marquis de Deynſe, governor of Bruſſels, acquainting him, that the magiſtracy of that city had reſolved to ſend deputies to his grace, and deſired him to ſend a trumpeter to conduct them in ſafety to a place where he ſhould think fit to receive them.

The deputies of Brabant, &c. wait on the duke of Marlborough.

The duke hereupon ſent colonel Panton, one of his aids de camp, with a compliment to the marquis, and the ſtates of Brabant, to let them know he ſhould be glad to ſee them, in the afternoon. According to this invitation, they came to his grace's quarters, near Dighem, with two other deputations, one from the ſoverein council of Brabant, the other from the burgo-maſters, and city of Bruſſels. They all expreſs'd, as well their ſatisfaction at their being delivered from the French yoke, as their deep ſenſe of the obligation they owed to the Queen of Great Britain and the States-general. As ſoon as they were gone, his grace, in conjunction with the field-deputies of the States, wrote a letter to the States of Brabant, declaring, "that the Queen of England, and the "States-general, had ſent them to maintain the "juſt rights of his Catholic Majeſty, Charles III, "to the kingdom of Spain; not doubting but "they were convinced of his right, and would "imbrace this opportunity of ſubmiting to him, "as faithful ſubjects; and that the King would "maintain them in the intire injoyment of their "rights, liberties and religion; and aſſured them, "from themſelves, that the army ſhould be im-"ployed every where for their protection (1)."

The States of Brabant acknowlege King Charles III.

His grace ſent two other letters, to the ſame effect, to the ſoverein council of Brabant, and the city of Bruſſels; and received an anſwer from each, declaring their ſubmiſſion to his Majeſty, King Charles III. There came alſo deputies from each of theſe bodies, who declared the great ſenſe they had of the Queen's goodneſs, in delivering them from the oppreſſion of the French government. In the evening, the magiſtrates of Mechlin came into the camp and made their ſubmiſſion, and colonel Durel, adjutant-general, was detach'd with 200 horſe, to take poſſeſſion of that place.

Mechlin ſubmits.

An order for ſtrict diſcipline.

The duke of Marlborough being deſirous to give all the ſecurity and ſatisfaction he poſſibly could to the ſeveral towns and countries which had ſubmited to the obedience of their lawful ſoverein, King Charles III; and that they might have an intire dependance upon the aſſurances given them by his grace and the deputies of the States general, thought fit to publiſh an order, at the camp at Beaulieu, for ſtrict diſcipline.

The duke of Marlborough makes his entry into Bruſſels.

The duke having ſent his brother, general Churchill, with four battalions of foot, and two ſquadrons of horſe, to command in Bruſſels, cauſed the army to paſs the canal of that city, the 27th, and to incamp at Grimberg. And, the

---

"of any he had ever ſeen; but that their officers did not do their parts, nor ſhew the courage that had appeared among "them, on other occaſions." Hiſtory of his own times, Vol. II. p. 451.

To this, we may add, and account it as a very great error on their parts, that they placed ſo intire a dependance on the troops of the King's houſhold, as was, in a great meaſure, their ruin. For had they been as vigilant to ſupport them with a re-inforcement of horſe from their left, which was in the mean time idle, as the duke of Marlborough was in ſupporting his cavalry, who attack'd them, by a ſupply of freſh troops, from his right, the victory would probably have been more doubtful, or, at leaſt, would have been bought, by the allies, at a dearer rate. Thus the high idea the French officers had conceiv'd of the valor and conduct of theſe troops, turn'd to their own diſadvantage. Le Clerc Hiſt. des Provinces Unies.

(1) His grace judged it neceſſary to write this letter to the States of Brabant, not only to inable them to aſſemble, but likewiſe to prompt them to declare immediately for King Charles III, before the enemy had recovered their conſternation, and could make a ſtand. Lediard's life of Marlborough, vol. II. p. 45.

Q. Ann, An' 1706.

next day, his grace made his public entry into Bruſſels, with great ſtate.

The army incamps near Aloſt:

The 29th, the duke of Wirtemberg was detach'd, with 2000 grenadiers, 1000 horſe, and ſix pieces of cannon, to take poſt at Aloſt; that place having declared for King Charles III two days before. The 30th, the army march'd from Grimberg, and incamp'd near Aloſt, the duke of Wirtemberg advancing, with his detachment, towards Gavre, with the pontons, for laying bridges over the Scheld, near that place, in order to intercept the enemy's retreat, towards their own frontiers: but as ſoon as they heard of the confederate army's motion, they quited their camp between St. Dennis and Ghent, and march'd, the 31ſt, at three o'clock in the morning towards Courtray. The duke being adviſed of this, and that the enemy had evacuated Ghent (leaving only a Spaniſh battalion in the caſtle, with the duke de Vintemille, governor of the town) his grace advanc'd near that city, and pitch'd his camp, the ſame day, at Meerlebeck. Brigadier Cadogan approaching Ghent, with ſome horſe, when the laſt battalion of French were marching out of it, the inhabitants appeared, in great numbers, on the walls, and calling out, with great joy, welcome, welcome! would have let him into the town; telling him, there were in the caſtle only ſome few Spaniſh ſoldiers, who were inclin'd to lay down their arms: but the brigadier contented himſelf with making his report to the general, and the deputies of the States, who were ſoon after attended by the magiſtrates of that city.

And marches to Meerlebeck.

A thankſgiving celebrated.

The 1ſt day of June being appointed, by the duke of Marlborough, as a day of thankſgiving to Almighty God, for the late compleat victory, at Ramellies, and the great advantages that had attended it, the ſame was obſerved with as much devotion as could be expected in a camp.

The caſtle of Ghent ſurrenders.

His grace ſent, the ſame day, major-general Roſs, with a detachment of 600 horſe to Bruges, with letters to invite the magiſtrates of that city, and the Franc, to the obedience of King Charles III. And, at the ſame time, brigadier Dewitz was detached, with ſix ſquadrons, to ſummon the governor of Oudenard. The ſame day, likewiſe, the magiſtrates of the city of Ghent came again to the confederate camp, to compliment his grace, who exhorted them to follow the example of the cities of Brabant, and acknowlege their lawful ſoverein King Charles III. Count Corneille of Naſſau, ſon to monſ. d'Auverquerque, with two battalions, marched into that city; upon which, the next day, early in the morning, the Prince de Vintemille, after making ſome difficulties, gave up the caſtle, and the regiment of the marquis de los Rios, which was in gariſon there, ſurrender'd themſelves priſoners of war.

The duke of Marlborough makes his entry into that city.

The duke of Marlborough went, about noon, to the city, and was met, at the gate, by the magiſtrates, who preſented to him the three keys, which his grace returned, and was afterwards entertained, at dinner, by the count de Naſſau. In the evening, the magiſtrates again attended his grace, at his quarters, and made their formal ſubmiſſion to King Charles. Brigadier Dewitz ſent to acquaint his grace, at the ſame time, that, at his coming before Oudenarde, he had ſummoned the gariſon, conſiſting of one Spaniſh and two French battalions, who refuſed to ſurrender; but that he had intelligence, if a ſmall body of foot, with cannon, appeared before the place, they would certainly capitulate. Upon this, lieutenant-general Scholten marched, with ſeven battalions, four pieces of cannon, and two mortars, upon whoſe appearance, the gariſon ſurrendered, the next morning, being permited to march out.

Oudenard ſurrenders.

The ſame morning early, his grace received letters from major-general Roſs and brigadier Cadogan; the firſt adviſing, that, upon his approaching Bruges, the French battalion, which was retired thither, and the magiſtrates, were deſirous to ſubmit themſelves to King Charles III. The latter, acquainting his grace, that there were ten battalions, in the city and caſtle of Antwerp, who ſeem'd willing to ſurrender upon honorable terms; upon which, the duke ſent the brigadier an authority to treat with them. The ſame day, likewiſe, about nine o'clock, the magiſtrates of Bruges and of the Franc, waited on his grace to deſire his protection, and to make their ſubmiſſion in form to King Charles. His grace alſo received notice, that the enemy had quited Damme, and that fifty dragoons of major-general Roſs's detachment had taken poſſeſſion of that place, who were relieved by a Dutch regiment out of Flanders; and another marched into Bruges. In the afternoon, his grace ſent colonel Durel, with a detachment of 150 horſe, and a letter, to the governor of Dendermonde, to ſummon that place to acknowlege King Charles III. And a letter was likewiſe ſent to major-general Roſs, for the governor of Oſtend, to the ſame purpoſe.

Bruges, and the Franc, ſubmit to King Charles.

Damme abandon'd by the enemy.

The army incamps at Arſeele.

The 5th, the army, having paſſed the Scheld and the Lys, incamp'd at Arſeele: and the 7th, at noon, the duke of Marlborough received advice from brigadier Cadogan, who had been ſent with a detachment to beſiege Antwerp; that, the day before, the governors of that caſtle and city had ſign'd a capitulation, by which the gariſon, conſiſting of ſix French and ſix Spaniſh regiments, was allowed to march out, and were to be conducted to le Quenoy (1). But almoſt the whole gariſon entered into the ſervice of the allies.

The gariſon of Antwerp capitulates.

At the ſame time, another expreſs arrived, from major-general Roſs, with the governor of Oſtend's anſwer, to the ſummons made him to ſurrender, which was: "that he had ſent to the Elector of "Bavaria, and hoped he would be excuſed, if "he defended the place, as became him, till "farther orders:" upon which a detachment was commanded to march, and poſſeſs itſelf of Plaſſendael, a ſtrong fort upon the canal, a ſmall

(1) The marquis de Quincy gives us the following account of the ſurrender of this important place. "The troops (ſays he) "ſent by the duke of Marlborough, for that end, having ſeized all the avenues to this place, the officer who commanded "them, ſummon'd the city to ſurrender. The gariſon conſiſted of ſix French and ſix Spaniſh battalions. The marquis de "Teraſena, to whom the King of Spain had confided the government of the citadel, whether of his own motive, or gain'd "by the citizens, who were unwilling to expoſe their houſes to the fatal events of a ſiege, gave evident proofs to the French "troops, that he was not inclin'd either to defend the place himſelf, or to leave it to the care of monſ. de Pontis, captain of the "guards, who commanded them; ſo that, as he was maſter of the citadel, monſ. de Pontis was obliged to capitulate, without "ſtanding an attack. It was ſtipulated in the capitulation, that the French troops ſhould march out, with their arms and "baggage, and all other marks of honor, with four pieces of cannon, two mortars, and each ſoldier ammunition for twelve "diſcharges. They were conducted to Quenoy and Landrecy. As for monſ. de Taraſena, it was agreed, that he, and his "Spaniſh troops, ſhould keep poſſeſſion of the citadel, till farther orders from the archduke (King Charles III) an evident "proof of the governor's treachery, and that he had made his agreement with the allies, before they ſent their troops thither." Hiſt. Mil. de Louis XIV. tome V. p. 12. Thus within the ſpace of fourteen days, the duke of Marlborough intirely defeated and diſperſed one of the moſt gallant and beſt appointed armies that ever France brought into the field, and recover'd the whole Spaniſh Brabant; the marquiſate of the holy Empire, with its capital, the famous city of Antwerp; the lordſhip and city of Mechlin, and the capital city, with the beſt part of Spaniſh Flanders: an event which can hardly be parallel'd. Lediard's life of Marlborough, vol. II p. 76.

league

Q. Ann, An' 1706.

league from Oſtend, to facilitate the ſiege of that place.

Both armies re-inforced.

The French and Bavarians retired, in the mean time, to Courtray, where their army was re-inforced by the marſhal de Marſin, with a body of foot which he brought out of Germany, his horſe having joined the marſhal de Villeroy before the battle of Ramellies. They were, likewiſe, joined by ſeveral other detachments, by which means their army was again very numerous: and in hopes of better ſucceſs, in the ſequel of this campain, their moſt proſperous general, the duke de Vendôme, was ſent for out of Italy, to ſtop the progreſs (as they vainly flattered themſelves) of the duke of Marlborough's conqueſts in Flanders. Upon this, the confederates alſo ordered twenty battalions from the neighboring gariſons, together with the troops of Hanover and Pruſſia, to join them, and hereupon it was reſolved to inveſt Oſtend immediately.

Oſtend beſieg'd;

The trenches before that place were open'd, the 28th of June, ſir Stafford Fairborn blocking up the harbor, at the ſame time, with nine large Engliſh men of war, beſide bomb-veſſels and fire-ſhips. The ſiege was carried on with ſuch ſucceſs, both by ſea and land, that, on the 6th of July, the gariſon beat a parly, and, on the 7th, ſurrendered, being permited only to march out with their ſwords and baggage, and promiſing not to ſerve againſt King Charles, or any of his allies, for the ſpace of ſix months. The greater part of the gariſon (which conſiſted of two Spaniſh battalions, four French regiments, and four troops of dragoons) entered into the ſervice of the allies. In the harbor was found two men of war, one of eighty and the other of fifty guns, and about forty-five ſmall veſſels, which were not comprized in the capitulation (1). This important conqueſt did not coſt the allies above 500 men, killed and wounded: they found, in the place, twenty-four colors and one ſtandard, fifty pieces of braſs, and forty iron cannons, ammunition in abundance, and 300,000 l. of powder.

And taken.

Courtray abandoned by the French.

The army before Oſtend, having level'd the approaches, and left a conſiderable gariſon in that place, joined the duke of Marlborough at Rouſſelaer. About the ſame time, his grace commanded the Prince of Holſtein-beck, with eight battalions, to take poſſeſſion of Courtray, which the enemy, notwithſtanding their boaſts, had abandon'd.

Menin beſieged.

The 25th of July, the allies inveſted Menin (2), but the artillery not being come up, the trenches were not opened till the 4th of Auguſt. During this ſiege, on the 16th of Auguſt, brigadier Cadogan, who commanded a body of horſe, appointed to cover the foragers, was ſurpriſed by a detachment of the enemy's cavalry, and carried priſoner into Tournay: but, on the 18th, was ſent back by the duke de Vendôme, upon his parole; whereupon the duke of Marlborough releaſed baron Palavicini, a major-general in the French ſervice, who was taken at Ramellies, by way of exchange. The town of Menin beat a parly the 22d, and, on the 23d, the duke of Argyle, who had diſtinguiſh'd himſelf, in a particular manner, at the ſtorming of the counterſcarp, took poſſeſſion of the gate of Bruges; the 25th, the gariſon, conſiſting of 4300 men, march'd out with the uſual marks of honor, and were conducted to Douay. They were allowed to carry away four pieces of cannon, and two mortars, were provided with waggons and boats, and permited to have eight covered waggons. In this town, the duke found fifty-five braſs and ten iron-cannon, ſix mortars, 810 double barrels of powder, 387 double barrels of muſket-balls, and a great quantity of all ſorts of proviſions. Among the artillery were four pieces of cannon, with the arms of England upon them, that were taken by the French at the battle of Landen, and theſe his grace ordered to be ſent to England,

Q. Ann, An' 1706.

And taken.

The loſs of the confederates, in this ſiege, according to a liſt ſent by general Saliſch, who commanded it, to mr. ſecretary Fagel, conſiſted of 583 officers and men kill'd, and 2045 wounded. And the loſs of the enemy, according to a writer of reputation (3) of their own, conſiſted of 1532 officers and men, kill'd, wounded and ſick (4).

Loſs on both ſides.

The duke having giving directions for levelling the approaches, and repairing the fortifications of Menin, gave orders, on the 29th, to his brother Churchill, to beſiege Dendermond (5), which had been blockaded ever ſince the battle of Ramellies. Three days after, his grace arrived in the camp before that place, when, a breach being made in a redoubt that covered the town, it was carried by ſtorm.

Dendermond beſieged.

The enemy, hereupon, beat a parley, but were allowed no better terms, than to keep their ſwords and baggage, and to be made priſoners of war. The gariſon conſiſted of two French regiments, a

And taken.

(1) The taking of this place, in ſo ſhort a time, was ſo much the greater honor to the confederates; becauſe, in the year 1601, 2, 3. it held out a ſiege againſt the Spaniards thoſe three years; during which the beſiegers loſt near 80,000 perſons before it: whereas now, the ſame place, tho' defended by a ſtrong gariſon, commanded by two generals, one a Frenchman, the other a Spaniard, and provided with artillery and ammunition in abundance, ſurrender'd to the allies, after having been batter'd no more than three days and ſome few hours.

The French, to juſtify monſ. de la Mothe, their governor, from any imputation, for delivering up this important place in ſo ſhort a time, ſay, that the place being intirely ruin'd by above 10,000 bombs, which were thrown into it, the menaces of the inhabitants to revolt, the miſunderſtanding between the French and Spaniſh gariſons, and the want of arms for the ſoldiers, oblig'd him to capitulate; F. Daniel. To all which, monſ. de Quincy adds, that the place was very ill provided with every thing, and that the gariſon, which conſiſted only of eight battalions, and four regiments of dragoons, were all either new levies, or diſaffected Walloons. Hiſt. Mil. tome V. p. 16. How little truth there was in ſome of theſe aſſertions, was too well known to need any refutation.

(2) This place, which is ſituated on the river Lys, five miles S. W. of Courtray, nine almoſt N. of Liſle, and twelve almoſt S. E. of Ipres, was reckoned a key to the French conqueſts in the Netherlands: it was built after the peace of Nimeguen; the celebrated monſieur de Vauban had beſtowed his utmoſt ſkill upon it; and nothing that art could invent was wanting to render it impregnable. As it was, beſide, defended by a numerous gariſon, under the command of the marquis de Bully, who had under him lieutenant-general Caraman, with monſieur de Valloris, chief ingineer, and two other ingineers of note, it was thought by many too bold an undertaking; but, on the other hand, it was conſidered, that the reduction of ſo conſiderable a place, would not only add great reputation to the arms of the allies, but would be a great help to ſecure their late acquiſitions: and upon theſe, and ſome other conſiderations, it was that the ſiege was reſolved on. Lediard's life of Marborough, Vol. II. p. 99.

(3) Hiſt. mil. de Louis le grand, par monſieur le marquis de Quincy. Tome V. p. 43.

(4) The duke de Vendôme having aſſembled an army of 155 ſquadrons, and ſeventy-three batalions, it was thought he would have made ſome motion to diſturb the progreſs of the confederate arms: but he had the mortification to be only a ſpectator of the ſiege, and ſurrender of Menin, and continued quiet in his camp, behind the Deule. Lediard's life of Marlborough, Vol. II. p. 108.

(5) Dendermond is a ſtrong town, in the earldom of Flanders, on the rivers Scheld and Dender, from the latter of which it has its name. It is ſituate twelve miles E. of Ghent, fourteen S. W. of Antwerp, and ſeventeen N. W. of Bruſſels.

Q. Ann, An' 1706.

Spaniſh batalion of 700 men, and 200 dragoons (1). After ſo many conqueſts, the confedeate army might very well have ended the campain, crowned with more glory than could almoſt be aimed at in one ſummer: but the ever victorious duke of Marlborough, thought it yet too ſoon to ſtem the torrent of their ſucceſs He therefore ordered them to turn their arms againſt Aeth (2), which was, accordingly inveſted, the 16th of September, by forty batalions and thirty ſquadrons, under the command of monſieur d'Auverquerque: the duke himſelf being incamp'd at Gramez, to cover the ſiege, and the enemy lying between Condé and Mortaigne. The trenches were opened the 22d, in the night, with very little loſs; and the ſiege was carried on with ſuch ſucceſs, that the town ſurrendered (3), the 3d of October, the gariſon being allowed no better terms than that of Dendermond.

Aeth beſieged.

And taken.

The duke of Marlborough remained, all this while, incamp'd at Gramez, to cover the ſiege of Aeth; and the duke de Vendôme contented himſelf to look on the taking of that place, with the ſame tranquility as he had, before, that of Menin: but being apprehenſive that the allies might have a deſign either upon Mons or Charleroy, he cauſed the gariſons of thoſe two places to be re-inforced (4).

The campain ended.

With this ſiege, the allies finiſh'd their glorious campain in Flanders, and, ſoon after, the army broke up and went into winter-quarters. The duke of Marlborough returned to the Hague, where he arrived the 9th of November, and monſ. d'Auverquerque, being appointed to command in chief, in the Netherlands, took up his reſidence at Bruſſels.

The duke of Marlborough returns to the Hague.

The affairs of Germany.

The affairs of the allies in Germany were not ſo ſucceſsful as in the Low-countries; tho' the French did not make all the advantage, which their grand Monarch might reaſonably have expected from the ſuperiority of his army, under the command of the marſhals de Villars and de Marſin, to that under the command of Prince Lewis of Baden.

Their ſucceſs went no farther than regaining from the fatal ſlowneſs of the Germans, what they had loſt the foregoing compain: for when they hoped to have made ſome conqueſts on that ſide, they were diverted from acting any longer offenſively, by the duke of Marlborough's ſucceſs in the Netherlands, which obliged thoſe marſhals to ſend ſtrong detachments thither, as I have already obſerved above.

Prince Lewis's melancholy ſituation, and the reproaches (deſerved or undeſerved I ſhall not pretend to determine) which he was ſenſible he lay under of favoring France, inclined him, when he ſaw he could do no more ſervice at the head of the Imperial army, to retire to the baths of Schlangenbad; and, in all probability, did not a little contribute to the lingring ſickneſs of which he died, at Radſtadt, the 4th of January, N. S.

Q. Ann, An' 1706.

Before I leave Germany, I muſt not omit mentioning, that the Emperor having erected the county of Mindelheim, into a principality of the Empire, and confer'd the ſame on the duke of Marlborough, and her Majeſty having been pleaſed to allow mr. Stepney, her envoy extraordinary and plenipotentiary at the Imperial court, to take poſſeſſion thereof, the ceremony of the inveſtiture was peformed, at the town of that name, on the 24th and 25th of May: and his grace being, thereby, intitled to ſit and vote in the college of Princes of the Empire, the duke's miniſter was accordingly introduced into that college, at the diet, in November following, with all marks of reſpect.

I come now to maritime affairs, with which I ſhall occaſionally combine thoſe of Italy and Spain.

Maritime affairs.

We left ſir John Leake, with a ſquadron of Engliſh and Dutch ſhips, on the coaſt of Catalonia: after a tedious paſſage of thirteen weeks, he arrived in the river of Liſbon, pretty much ſtreightened for proviſions, till he met with a ſupply coming from England off of cape St. Vincent. At Liſbon, ſir John got intelligence, that the gallions were about to ſail from Cadiz for the Weſt-indies; whereupon he ſet ſail, the 25th of February, to indeavor to intercept them: but to his great ſurprize, when he came to the bar of the river, he found himſelf ſtopp'd by the fort of St. Julian, from whence ſeveral ſhot were fired at the fleet, which obliged them to come to an anchor; the commanding officer declaring, he had orders from court to ſtop all ſhips, without diſtinction. And tho', upon complaint made, he was ſuffered to depart the next morning, it was then too late, the gallions were eſcap'd, and it was in vain he purſued them; he could only come up with two ſhips, that had ſtaid behind, which he took, and by them had ſuch intelligence, as convinced him it was to no purpoſe to continue the purſuit (5); he Suppoſed treachery of the Portugueſe.

(1) Thus the troops of the allies made themſelves maſters, in a ſiege of ſeven days, of this important place, which being ſtrongly ſituated among moraſſes, had formerly baffled the army of the French King, who beſieged it in perſon, and which was now defended, as I have ſaid above, by two French regiments of foot, a Spaniſh batalion of 700 men, drawn out of ſeveral other regiments, and 200 dragoons unmounted.

The French, according to cuſtom, to leſſen the honor gain'd by the beſiegers, pretend the gariſon might have held out longer, had it not been for a miſunderſtanding between the governor and the officer who commanded the French troops.

(2) Aeth is a ſtrong frontier-town, and a place of ſome conſideration, in the earldom of Hainault, ſituate on the Dender at the place where the brook of Cambron empties itſelf into that river, fourteen miles almoſt North-Weſt of Mons, twenty-two almoſt South-Weſt of Bruſſels, and twenty-four South of Ghent. The French took it in 1697. But reſtor'd it the ſame year by the peace of Ryſwick. It is a pretty regular fortification, and all the works were at this time in good repair. Monſieur de Spinola was governor of it, and the brigadier de St. Pierre commanded the troops, to the number of about 2000 men. The enemy had time to provide every thing that was neceſſary for a long and vigorous defenſe: but men were chiefly wanting. Lediard's life of Marlborough, Vol. II. p. 112.

(3) According to the accounts, the French themſelves give of their loſs, at this ſiege, they had but 800 men left of the gariſon, when they ſurrender'd; and they aſſign that as a reaſon for the governor's being obliged to ſurrender on ſo hard, conditions; becauſe he had not men enough to beſet all the poſts, and had for that reaſon abandon'd the ſalliant angles of the cover'd way. De Quincy, Hiſt. mil. de Louis le grand, Tome V. p. 48.

(4) This lukewarmneſs of the duke de Vendôme was highly diſtaſteful to the Elector of Bavaria. He wanted to be in action again; tho' he ſaw a ſeries of ill fortune attended him in whatever he took in hand; but the French did not care to hazard any thing under his conduct. "They were (ſays a late author) jealous of the Elector's heat, and tho' he defired to "command an army apart, yet it was not thought fit to divide their forces, tho' now grown to be very numerous. Deſerters "ſaid, the panic was ſtill ſo great in the army, that there was no appearance of their venturing on any action. Paris it-"ſelf was under a high conſternation; and tho' the King carried his misfortunes with an appearance of calmneſs and com-"poſure; yet he was often let blood, which was thought an indication of a great commotion within; and this was no doubt "the greater; becauſe it was ſo much diſguiſed. No news was talked of at that court, all was ſilent and ſolemn, ſo that "even the ducheſs dowager of Orleans, knew not the true ſtate of their affairs; which made her write to her aunt the "Electreſs of Hanover, to learn news of her." Burnet's hiſtory of his own times, Vol. II. p. 452.

(5) There was a very ſtrong ſuſpicion of foul play, on this account, in Portugal: for tho' an embargo was laid, at the deſire of mr. Methuen, that ſo no advice might be given to the enemy; and, by a pretended miſtake, ſir John himſelf was unfortunately ſtop'd, under color of this embargo, yet five ſhips were ſuffered to go over the bar, after the embargo was laid, two of which were Danes, by whom it was ſuſpected the deſign was diſcovered: and this was confirmed by the maſters of the two prizes, who ſaid, they had certain intelligence at Cadiz, of ſir John Leake's deſign, and had taken care to fruſtrate it. Annals of Queen Ann.

there-

Q. Ann, An' 1706.

therefore made away for the Streights; but could not reach Gibraltar till the 30th of March. He was there joined, the 3d of April, by a ſquadron of twelve Engliſh and Dutch men of war, commanded by commadore Price, having ſome land-forces on board: whereupon it was reſolved to ſail to the relief of Barcelona, which was then diſtreſs'd by ſea and land.

The ſiege of Barcelona raiſed.

The fleet ſailed accordingly, the 13th, and, the 18th, arrived off Altea. The 20th, ſir George Byng joined them with another ſquadron from England; as did commadore Walker, with his ſquadron, the 23d. The fleet now conſiſting of fifty-three ſhips of the line, and ſix frigats, beſide tranſports, it was reſolved, that every ſhip ſhould make the beſt of their way, without ſtaying for one another.

The 26th, the earl of Peterborough came off from Tarragona, with diverſe barks, on board of which were 1400 land-forces. His excellency went on board the Prince George, and hoiſted the union-flag, taking upon him the command of the fleet, as admiral. The ſame day, letters came from King Charles, of the 23d, with very preſſing inſtances for relief; and, within two hours after, a freſh and fair gale happily ſprung up, which brought the fleet, with all the forces and recruits, from England and Ireland, to an anchor before Barcelona, the 27th, in the afternoon, to the inexpreſſible joy of the inhabitants, who expected a ſtorm that very night. Sir George Byng, and ſir John Jennings, with ſome others of the beſt ſailers, who got thither a few hours before the reſt, diſcover'd the rear of the French fleet making off in great diſorder (1).

The land-forces and marines were immediately put on ſhoar, and the admirals waited on the King, who received them in a manner ſuitable to the imminent danger they had juſt reſcued him from. The French continued the ſiege, the 28th and 29th; but the 30th, in the afternoon, they raiſed it, with great noiſe and precipitation, ſeting fire to, and deſtroying whatever they could of their camp and ſtores. They were terribly harraſs'd in their retreat, as well by ſeveral volunteers from the city, as the miquelets and peaſants from the mountains, who ſkirmiſh'd with them till eleven at night, and the beſt part of the next day, when they took from them two field-pieces, and ſome waggons; while thoſe from the town pillaged the enemy's abandon'd camp (2). The accounts publiſhed of this retreat at Paris, pretend, it was in very good order, and that they always beat thoſe who purſued them. But how came they then to part with their field-pieces and waggons?

Troops landed at Valencia,

Barcelona being thus relieved, the fleet ſailed from thence, the 7th of May, with what forces could be ſpared from the ſervice of Catalonia, and arrived on the coaſt of Valencia, the 13th, where the earl of Peterborough being put on ſhoar, they were landed the next day. The 19th, it was reſolved, in a council of war, to proceed to Alicant; but being got the length of Altea, two gentlemen came off, and acquainted the admiral, that the inhabitants of Carthagena were diſpoſed, upon the appearance of the fleet, to declare for King Carthagena, Charles III. It was thereupon reſolved to proceed thither; and the fleet arriving, the firſt of June, the place was ſurrender'd the next day.

Q. Ann, An' 1706.

The 26th, ſir John Leake arrived, with the fleet, before Alicant, which they found had a numerous gariſon, commanded by brigadier Mahoni, an Iriſhman, who defended the place, with great bravery, till the 28th of July, when it was taken by ſtorm; Mahoni, with his gariſon, retiring into the caſtle, where he continued to make a gallant defence, till (if we may believe father Daniel) a want of water, and other neceſſaries, obliged him to ſurrender, upon honorable terms.

And Alicant ſurrender.

While our fleet was thus victorious on the coaſt of Spain, the affairs of King Charles, in the inward parts of Spain, had been ſucceſsful beyond expectation, and an intire ſubmiſſion of thoſe extenſive dominions ſeemed to be out of all doubt, when his Catholic Majeſty, by the advice of his German miniſters, and contrary to that of his friends and allies, took the fatal reſolution of going thro' Arragon to Madrid, and ſtopping at Saragoſſa, in his way thither, which overthrew all the meaſures concerted in his favor, and was alone the cauſe of all the misfortunes which inſued, and, in the end, loſt him the Monarchy.

The campain in Portugal and Spain.

But to deſcend to ſome farther particulars: the confederate forces in Portugal, being much ſuperior to thoſe under the duke of Berwick, began the campain, on that ſide, with the ſiege of Alcantara, before which town they ſate down the 10th of April, N. S. and, on the 14th, the gariſon, to the number of 3282 men, beſide officers, ſurrendered priſoners of war. The earl of Galway, hereupon, advanced farther into Spain, and publiſhed a manifeſto; declaring, "that he did not come into Spain "as an enemy; but to deliver them from the "French yoke; and whatever officers would re-"turn to the obedience of their lawful ſoverein, "King Charles III, ſhould injoy the ſame poſts "they held, under the duke d'Anjou."

Alcantara taken.

The court of Spain was hereupon apprehenſive, that the allies would have marched directly to Madrid, and, King Philip being abſent, on his expedition for the recovery of Barcelona, his Queen ſummon'd the grandees and magiſtrates to attend her, and made them the following ſpeech:

Speech of King Philip's Queen to the grandees of Spain.

"I have ſent for you to acquaint you what "diſtreſs the ſtate is in: I cannot conceal it from "you, while the King is expoſing his life in your "defence; heaven bleſſes his arms in Catalonia, "and we hope that rebellious province will ſoon be "reduced; but affairs do not go ſo well in Eſtra-"madura. The Portugueſe advance; will you "tamely ſee ſuch enemies approach you? do you "not think of exerting your utmoſt efforts to "make them repent of their audaciouſneſs? the "preſervation of the Monarchy is now the point "in queſtion: you ought, in this preſſing neceſſity, "to ſhew your loyalty and zeal, by ſacrificing "your all for the King, for me, and yourſelves; "powerful and ſpeedy ſuccors are neceſſary. I "am the firſt Queen, who has appear'd in this "place, on ſuch an occaſion: when I give you "ſuch extraordinary marks of my affection, I "well deſerve you ſhould do ſomething for me, "and appear in my defence."

This ſpeech, pathetic as it was, had very little

(1) According to de Larrey, the French gave ut, to ſalve their honor, that they retired with their fleet, becauſe a contageous diſtemper began to ſhew itſelf among themen. Hiſt de Fr. ſous Louis XIV. Cowardice and fear are often contageous, and ſo the allegation may perhaps have been juſt

(2) The French had been thirty-five days before the place. Their army conſiſted, at firſt, of 20,000 men, of which they loſt 5000. The gariſon, on the contrary, till the earl of Peterborough found means to throw in a ſupply, was but 800 men ſtrong. The allies found in the enemy's camp, upwards of 100 large braſs-cannon; twenty-ſeven mortars; 5000 barrels of gun powder; 40,000 cartridges ready fill'd; 500 barrels of muſket ſhot, with a great quantity of lead; 2000 bombs; 10,000 great royal grenadoes; 12,300 hand-grenades; 40,000 cannon-balls, 78,000 ſpades and ſhovels; 13,000 ſacks of meal; vaſt quantities of rye, oats and wheat; 10,000 pair of ſhoes; ſeveral iron mills, and other warlike utenſils; beſide 1500 ſick and wounded men. Lediard's naval hiſtory, vol. II. p. 807.

effect

Q. Ann, An. 1706.

effect on the Spaniards. They were oppreſs'd by the French, inſulted and trampled on by a people whom they heartily deſpis'd and hated; they, therefore feared no alteration for the worſe: this favorable juncture was, however, unhappily loſt, thro' the abundant caution or obſtinacy of the Portugueſe, who, notwithſtanding all the remonſtrances of the confederate generals to induce them to advance towards Madrid, during the ſiege of Barcelona, perſiſted in their reſolution, not to leave their own frontiers, till the fate of Barcelona was determined; they therefore march'd towards Cividad Rodrigo, which they inveſted the 21ſt of May, and took the 26th. The next day, upon the news of the raiſing the ſiege of Barcelona, it was unanimouſly agreed to march to Madrid.

Cividad Rodrigo taken.

King Philip quits Madrid.

The 7th of June, the confederate army arrived at Salamanca; and, on the 18th, incamp'd at Eſpinal, whither deputies came, from the Eſcurial, to make their ſubmiſſion. King Philip, in the mean time, was ſo hard preſs'd by the earl of Peterborough, after his raiſing the ſiege of Barcelona, that he was forced to retire to the frontiers of France, where he left his army, and went, by the way of Navarre, to Madrid; but receiving intelligence that the Portugueſe were advancing thither, he again retired, with his court, to the confines of France.

King Charles proclaim'd there.

The 24th, the marquis das Minas and the earl of Galway, took poſſeſſion of that capital, and cauſed King Charles III to be proclaimed there, the 27th. This had ſuch an influence on the Spaniards, that Toledo immediately declared for him; cardinal Portacarero himſelf, wrote to the marquis das Minas, aſſuring him of his ſubmiſſion to King Charles III, and even the courts of judicature adminiſtered juſtice in his name. Upon this ſucceſs, the confederate generals ſent expreſs after expreſs to King Charles, to haſten his march and join them, before King Philip could be re-inforced, with all the forces he could aſſemble: but the province of Arragon declaring for him, at the ſame time, he marched into Saragoſſa, where he received the ſubmiſſion of the ſeveral towns of that province, who ſwore allegiance to him. Here he unhappily ſpent ſo much time, partly in bull-feaſts and other diverſions, and partly in an ill-tim'd fit of devotion, that King Philip aſſembled an army ſuperior to that of the allies, and obliged them to quit Madrid.

King Charles joins the allies too late.

Toledo, Salamanca, and the reſt of the towns in Caſtille, which had declared for King Charles, were forced to return to the obedience of King Philip, and when it was too late, the former, with the earl of Peterborough, joined the marquis das Minas and the earl of Galway, at Guadalaxara, the 6th of Auguſt, with ſix or ſeven regiments. Their retreat to Portugal was now cut off; and Alcantara, which, as we have ſeen above, was taken by the Portugueſe, in the begining of the campain, was retaken by the Spaniards, as was likewiſe Carthagena, which had been taken by admiral Leake. There was therefore now no other remedy but to retire into Valencia, and take up winter-quarters there: and thus the campain in Spain, which begun ſo gloriouſly, ended unhappily.

Death of the King of Portugal.

Before I leave theſe parts, I muſt juſt mention, that in the begining of December died don Pedro, King of Portugal, in the 58th year of his age, and was ſucceeded by his eldeſt ſon, don Juan the IVth, who, on his acceſſion, declared, that he would punctually obſerve all his father's ingagements with the allies: but to return to the fleet.

Q. Ann, An' 1706.

Ivica ſubmits to King Charles.

Sir John Leake having, according to his orders, detach'd ſir John Jennings, with twelve men of war, and a fireſhip, for Liſbon, and watered in Altea-Bay, ſailed from thence, the 26th of Auguſt, towards Ivica. He arrived there, the 29th, and found the governor and inhabitants of that place ſo well diſpoſed for King Charles III, that upon the firſt appearance of the fleet, they ſent deputies on board to make their ſubmiſſion.

Majorca reduced.

The 2d of September, the fleet ſailed from Ivica, and was the next day before Majorca, where the Conde de Alcudia, the viceroy, with ſome few who favored the duke of Anjou's intereſt, offered to reſiſt; but two bomb veſſels being ſent into Palma, the capital of the iſland, upon their throwing in three or four ſhells, the inhabitants obliged the vice-roy to retire to the palace, and deſire a capitulation, which was concluded the 7th.

Sir John Leake returns home.

Sir John having left a gariſon of a hundred marines, with a captain and lieutenant, in the caſtle of Porto-Pin, and two men of war to tranſport the viceroy and his adherents, who were deſirous to remove, ſailed the 12th, from Majorca, and paſs'd thro' the Streights the 21ſt. The 23d, being off the ſouthward cape, he detached ſir George Byng, purſuant to orders he had received from the lord high admiral, with a ſquadron, towards Liſbon, and with the reſt of the fleet, proceeded on his voyage home. He arrived, the 6th of October, at St. Helens, came ſome days after to London, and, having waited on the Queen, and her royal conſort, received from them both that gracious and generous reception, which his long, eminent, and ſucceſsful ſervices, had ſo well merited.

A deſcent upon France deſign'd, but fruſtrated.

The confederates had formed a deſign, this year, of making a deſcent upon France, by way of diverſion, and to ſupport the Proteſtants, whom a ſevere perſecution had prepared for a general revolt: to this end, the grand fleet, under the command of ſir Cloudeſly Shovel, ſail'd from England, with 10,000 land-men on board, about the middle of Auguſt, but being detained a conſiderable time, by contrary winds, that deſign was laid aſide (1), and the earl of Rivers, with the land-forces on board, ſail'd for the river of Liſbon, where they arrived, the 18th of October. The earl propoſed the joining a body of the Portugueſe troops, and marching directly for Madrid: but the Portugueſe being ill provided for ſuch an expedition, and the earl inſiſting, that he would be commanded by none but the King, they did not think fit to come into thoſe meaſures. His lordſhip hereupon ſail'd for Alicant, and having landed the troops there, he returned to England, the inſuing ſpring, together with the earl of Eſſex, brigadier Gorges, and ſeveral other officers, who imbark'd on the firſt deſign, leaving the fleet, under the command of ſir Cloudeſly Shovel, at Liſbon.

The campain in Italy.

In Italy, the French had ſome ſucceſs, in the begining of the campain; for having attack'd the Imperialiſts at Calcinnato, in the abſence of Prince Eugene, they drove them from their poſts, and obliged them to quit the Breſcian, with the loſs

(1) The 10th of Auguſt, the wind being eaſterly, and a briſk gale, ſir Cloudeſly, with the whole Engliſh fleet, ſet ſail in the morning, believing the Dutch could not be far off, the wind having been fair the night before: but, whatever was the cauſe, they did not come to St. Helens till the 12th in the morning, which fatal delay proved the overthrow of the whole deſign; and was the occaſion of the project of a deſcent being laid aſide. When the Dutch arrived at St. Helens, the 12th, in the morning, they anchor'd a tide to get intelligence of ſir Cloudeſly, and to take in freſh water, the Engliſh fleet, in the mean time, appeared off of Plymouth, that ſame day, about noon, and lay by till the evening; but was not joined by the Dutch till the 14th in the morning, when the whole fleet, being come near the mouth of the channel, was forc'd into Torbay, by a ſtrong weſterly wind, which continuing ſeveral weeks, the firſt and ſecond-rate ſhips were laid up, and the whole deſign dropp'd. Lediard's naval hiſt. Vol. II. p. 811.

of

Q. ANN, AN' 1706.

of 3000 men kill'd or taken, beſide their cannon and baggage. This ſucceſs incourag'd the French King to order the duke de la Feuillade to beſiege Turin. Accordingly, the French begun to batter the town and citadel the 8th of June, and the 15th the beſiegers fired red-hot bullets, many of which falling near the duke of Savoy's palace, his royal Highneſs ſent the royal family to Quieraſco, and followed himſelf two days after, leaving a numerous gariſon under command o the Imperial general Thaun. Soon after, his royal Highneſs received advice from Prince Eugene, that he had paſs'd the Adige, and was advancing to join him. About the ſame time, the duke de Vendôme was called out of Italy to command the French army in Flanders, and the duke of Orleans took upon him the command of the army in Italy, which was intended to oppoſe Prince Eugene's march: but the Prince appear'd to be the greateſt general; for, notwithſtanding all the duke could do to prevent it, he joined the duke of Savoy the firſt of September.

The city of Turin was, by that time, reduced to great diſtreſs, moſt of their powder being ſpent; and the enemy, having made a lodgment on the counterſcarp, afterwards attack'd a half moon and two counter-guards, which they carried. The Imperialiſts indeed beat them out again; but as they were in ſo great want of ammunition, it would have been impoſſible for them to reſiſt many ſuch attacks. His royal Highneſs and Prince Eugene found themſelves therefore under a neceſſity of marching immediately to the relief of Turin. This they did accordingly, and, on the 7th, happened that memorable battle which changed the whole face of affairs in Italy. The confederates march'd by break of day towards the enemy, and by noon the victory was intirely theirs, and the city delivered; for the enemy abandoned the attack, and their camp, with the greateſt precipitation, retiring, with the remains of their army, on the other ſide of the Po. The reſt of the day was ſpent in taking ſeveral caſſines and redoubts poſſeſs'd by the enemy, who all ſurrender'd themſelves priſoners of war, and his royal Highneſs enter'd triumphantly his capital the ſame evening. As a ſmall allay however to this ſucceſs, the French, under the command of count Medavi, defeated the Prince of Heſſe, and a body of Germans, two days after the battle of Turin, near Medoli, in the Milaneſe. This was nevertheleſs but a trifle, if compared with the numerous loſſes which France ſuſtain'd in theſe parts, about this time: for the duke of Savoy and Prince Eugene, in order to improve their late victory, march'd immediately into the Milaneſe, where almoſt all the towns ſurrendered to them at their approach. The 24th of September, the city of Milan itſelf ſent a deputation, offering to ſubmit to his Imperial Majeſty and the houſe of Auſtria, and, on the 26th, Prince Eugene made his triumphant entry into that city. The duke of Savoy, having reduced Piccighitone, Tortona, Alexandria, Modena, and ſeveral other places of leſs note, appeared on the 16th of November, before Caſal, which ſurrendered the 6th of December, the gariſon, which conſiſted of near 2000 men, being made priſoners of war. In this place, his royal Highneſs found ſeventy-ſix pieces of cannon, with a great quantity of ammunition and proviſions. Thus the campain in Italy ended very gloriouſly for the allies, and all the troops, except a body under the Prince of Heſſe-Caſſel, who were left to block up Cremona, were ſent into winter-quarters. The 14th of December, Prince Eugene went to Milan, of which duchy he was made governor for King Charles III, his Imperial Majeſty having granted the inveſtiture thereof to the King of Spain. The caſtle continued however in the poſſeſſion of the enemy till the next ſpring, when the marquis de St. Pater arrived there with the ratification of a treaty, by the French King, for the quiting of all places, which he or King Philip held in the Milaneſe, Mantuan, Cremoneſe, and Montſerrat, on condition that their troops ſhould be ſafely conducted to Suza.

Q. ANN, AN' 1706.

As to the affairs of the North, I have hitherto paſs'd them by, as having no immediate connexion with our hiſtory; but I ſhall be obliged now to make ſome mention of them, becauſe the proceedings of the King of Sweden begining to raiſe a jealouſy in the allies, they were obliged to take ſome ſteps which might prevent the evil conſequences that might poſſibly attend them. The northern Hero, who was reſolutely bent upon dethroning his ſworn enemy, Auguſtus, King of Poland, obſerving that he ſhould never be able to do it effectually, unleſs he could cut off the ſupplies which he conſtantly received from Saxony, marched thro' Sileſia and Luſatia, into that Electorate, plundered the open country, and obliged the rich city of Leipzick, and other towns, to pay him contribution, and took up his winter-quarters there, to the great terror of the reſt of the Empire, as well as Saxony: but of this I ſhall have occaſion to ſay more, in my relation of the tranſactions of the inſuing year. Affairs of the North.

Her Majeſty and the States-general continued, in the mean time, their mediation between the Emperor and the malecontents in Hungary; but to very little purpoſe: the negociations were broken off, and each ſide again prepared to renew the war. And of Hungary.

I come now to the grand affair of this year, and indeed of this reign; I mean the union between the two kingdoms of England and Scotland; a work of ſo great importance, that it had been attempted, tho' in vain, in almoſt every reign from that of Henry VIII, down to the glorious reign of Queen Ann, for which it ſeem'd reſerv'd. Her Majeſty, ſoon after the riſing of the parliament, in purſuance of ſeveral acts paſs'd in each kingdom, iſſued a commiſſion, under the reſpective great ſeals, conſtituting a certain number of lords, and others, of either kingdom, commiſſioners, to treat of an union between the two kingdoms of England and Scotland. Theſe commiſſioners met, the firſt time, at the Cock-pit, at Whitehall, the 16th of April, and their commiſſion being read, the lord-keeper Cowper made a ſpeech, in the name of the Engliſh commiſſioners, as the earl of Seafield, lord-chancellor of Scotland, did on behalf of the commiſſioners of that nation, and then they adjourn'd to the 22d. The treaty of union begun.

The commiſſioners, on both ſides, being met again on that day, the lord Cowper, in the name of the lords-commiſſioners of England, deliver'd to the board the following preliminary articles, which were read: Preliminary articles.

1. "That all propoſals, made by either ſide, "be made in writing, and every point, when "agreed, ſhall be reduced into writing.

2. "That no point, tho' agreed on, and re- "duced into writing, ſhall be obligatory, on ei- "ther ſide, till all matters be adjuſted in ſuch man- "ner as will be proper to be laid before the "Queen, and the two parliaments, for their ap- "probation.

3. "That there be a commitee appointed, con- "ſiſting of a certain number of each commiſſion, "to reviſe the minutes of what paſſes, which are "not to be inſerted by the ſecretaries in their re- "ſpective books, but by order of the ſaid com- "mitee, having firſt made report thereof to the "reſpective commiſſioners, and received their ap- "probation of the ſame.

Q. Ann, An. 1706.

effect on the Spaniards. They were oppreſs'd by the French, inſulted and trampled on by a people whom they heartily deſpis'd and hated; they, therefore feared no alteration for the worſe: this favorable juncture was, however, unhappily loſt, thro' the abundant caution or obſtinacy of the Portugueſe, who, notwithſtanding all the remonſtrances of the confederate generals to induce them to advance towards Madrid, during the ſiege of Barcelona, perſiſted in their reſolution, not to leave their own frontiers, till the fate of Barcelona was determined; they therefore march'd towards Cividad Rodrigo, which they inveſted the 21ſt of May, and took the 26th. The next day, upon the news of the raiſing the ſiege of Barcelona, it was unanimouſly agreed to march to Madrid.

Cividad Rodrigo taken.

King Philip quits Madrid.

The 7th of June, the confederate army arrived at Salamanca; and, on the 18th, incamp'd at Eſpinal, whither deputies came, from the Eſcurial, to make their ſubmiſſion. King Philip, in the mean time, was ſo hard preſs'd by the earl of Peterborough, after his raiſing the ſiege of Barcelona, that he was forced to retire to the frontiers of France, where he left his army, and went, by the way of Navarre, to Madrid; but receiving intelligence that the Portugueſe were advancing thither, he again retired, with his court, to the confines of France.

King Charles proclaim'd there.

The 24th, the marquis das Minas and the earl of Galway, took poſſeſſion of that capital, and cauſed King Charles III to be proclaimed there, the 27th. This had ſuch an influence on the Spaniards, that Toledo immediately declared for him; cardinal Portacarero himſelf, wrote to the marquis das Minas, aſſuring him of his ſubmiſſion to King Charles III, and even the courts of judicature adminiſtered juſtice in his name. Upon this ſucceſs, the confederate generals ſent expreſs after expreſs to King Charles, to haſten his march and join them, before King Philip could be re-inforced, with all the forces he could aſſemble: but the province of Arragon declaring for him, at the ſame time, he marched into Saragoſſa, where he received the ſubmiſſion of the ſeveral towns of that province, who ſwore allegiance to him. Here he unhappily ſpent ſo much time, partly in bull-feaſts and other diverſions, and partly in an ill-tim'd fit of devotion, that King Philip aſſembled an army ſuperior to that of the allies, and obliged them to quit Madrid.

King Charles joins the allies too late.

Toledo, Salamanca, and the reſt of the towns in Caſtille, which had declared for King Charles, were forced to return to the obedience of King Philip, and when it was too late, the former, with the earl of Peterborough, joined the marquis das Minas and the earl of Galway, at Guadalaxara, the 6th of Auguſt, with ſix or ſeven regiments. Their retreat to Portugal was now cut off; and Alcantara, which, as we have ſeen above, was taken by the Portugueſe, in the begining of the campain, was retaken by the Spaniards, as was likewiſe Carthagena, which had been taken by admiral Leake. There was therefore now no other remedy but to retire into Valencia, and take up winter-quarters there: and thus the campain in Spain, which begun ſo glorioufly, ended unhappily.

Death of the King of Portugal.

Before I leave theſe parts, I muſt juſt mention, that in the begining of December died don Pedro, King of Portugal, in the 58th year of his age, and was ſucceeded by his eldeſt ſon, don Juan the IVth, who, on his acceſſion, declared, that he would punctually obſerve all his father's ingagements with the allies: but to return to the fleet.

Q. Ann, An' 1706.

Ivica ſubmits to King Charles.

Sir John Leake having, according to his orders, detach'd ſir John Jennings, with twelve men of war, and a fireſhip, for Liſbon, and watered in Altea-Bay, ſailed from thence, the 26th of Auguſt, towards Ivica. He arrived there, the 29th, and found the governor and inhabitants of that place ſo well diſpoſed for King Charles III, that upon the firſt appearance of the fleet, they ſent deputies on board to make their ſubmiſſion.

Majorca reduced.

The 2d of September, the fleet ſailed from Ivica, and was the next day before Majorca, where the Conde de Alcudia, the viceroy, with ſome few who favored the duke of Anjou's intereſt, offered to reſiſt; but two bomb veſſels being ſent into Palma, the capital of the iſland, upon their throwing in three or four ſhells, the inhabitants obliged the vice-roy to retire to the palace, and deſire a capitulation, which was concluded the 7th.

Sir John Leake returns home.

Sir John having left a gariſon of a hundred marines, with a captain and lieutenant, in the caſtle of Porto-Pin, and two men of war to tranſport the viceroy and his adherents, who were deſirous to remove, ſailed the 12th, from Majorca, and paſs'd thro' the Streights the 21ſt. The 23d, being off the ſouthward cape, he detached ſir George Byng, purſuant to orders he had received from the lord high admiral, with a ſquadron, towards Liſbon, and with the reſt of the fleet, proceeded on his voyage home. He arrived, the 6th of October, at St. Helens, came ſome days after to London, and, having waited on the Queen, and her royal conſort, received from them both that gracious and generous reception, which his long, eminent, and ſucceſsful ſervices, had ſo well merited.

A deſcent upon France deſign'd, but fruſtrated.

The confederates had formed a deſign, this year, of making a deſcent upon France, by way of diverſion, and to ſupport the Proteſtants, whom a ſevere perſecution had prepared for a general revolt: to this end, the grand fleet, under the command of ſir Cloudeſly Shovel, ſail'd from England, with 10,000 land-men on board, about the middle of Auguſt, but being detained a conſiderable time, by contrary winds, that deſign was laid aſide (1), and the earl of Rivers, with the land-forces on board, ſail'd for the river of Liſbon, where they arrived, the 18th of October. The earl propoſed the joining a body of the Portugueſe troops, and marching directly for Madrid: but the Portugueſe being ill provided for ſuch an expedition, and the earl inſiſting, that he would be commanded by none but the King, they did not think fit to come into thoſe meaſures. His lordſhip hereupon ſail'd for Alicant, and having landed the troops there, he returned to England, the inſuing ſpring, together with the earl of Eſſex, brigadier Gorges, and ſeveral other officers, who imbark'd on the firſt deſign, leaving the fleet, under the command of ſir Cloudeſly Shovel, at Liſbon.

The campain in Italy.

In Italy, the French had ſome ſucceſs, in the begining of the campain; for having attack'd the Imperialiſts at Calcinnato, in the abſence of Prince Eugene, they drove them from their poſts, and obliged them to quit the Breſcian, with the loſs

(1) The 10th of Auguſt, the wind being eaſterly, and a briſk gale, ſir Cloudeſly, with the whole Engliſh fleet, ſet ſail in the morning, believing the Dutch could not be far off, the wind having been fair the night before: but, whatever was the cauſe, they did not come to St. Helens till the 12th in the morning, which fatal delay proved the overthrow of the whole deſign; and was the occaſion of the project of a deſcent being laid aſide. When the Dutch arrived at St. Helens, the 12th, in the morning, they anchor'd a tide to get intelligence of ſir Cloudeſly, and to take in freſh water, the Engliſh fleet, in the mean time, appeared off of Plymouth, that ſame day, about noon, and lay by till the evening; but was not joined by the Dutch till the 14th in the morning, when the whole fleet, being come near the mouth of the channel, was forc'd into Torbay, by a ſtrong weſterly wind, which continuing ſeveral weeks, the firſt and ſecond-rate ſhips were laid up, and the whole deſign dropp'd. Lediard's naval hiſt. Vol. II. p. 811.

of

Q. Ann, An' 1706.

of 3000 men kill'd or taken, beſide their cannon and baggage. This ſucceſs incourag'd the French King to order the duke de la Feuillade to beſiege Turin. Accordingly, the French begun to batter the town and citadel the 8th of June, and the 15th the beſiegers fired red-hot bullets, many of which falling near the duke of Savoy's palace, his royal Highneſs ſent the royal family to Quieraſco, and followed himſelf two days after, leaving a numerous gariſon under command o the Imperial general Thaun. Soon after, his royal Highneſs received advice from Prince Eugene, that he had paſs'd the Adige, and was advancing to join him. About the ſame time, the duke de Vendôme was called out of Italy to command the French army in Flanders, and the duke of Orleans took upon him the command of the army in Italy, which was intended to oppoſe Prince Eugene's march: but the Prince appear'd to be the greateſt general; for, notwithſtanding all the duke could do to prevent it, he joined the duke of Savoy the firſt of September.

The city of Turin was, by that time, reduced to great diſtreſs, moſt of their powder being ſpent; and the enemy, having made a lodgment on the counterſcarp, afterwards attack'd a half moon and two counter-guards, which they carried. The Imperialiſts indeed beat them out again; but as they were in ſo great want of ammunition, it would have been impoſſible for them to reſiſt many ſuch attacks. His royal Highneſs and Prince Eugene found themſelves therefore under a neceſſity of marching immediately to the relief of Turin. This they did accordingly, and, on the 7th, happened that memorable battle which changed the whole face of affairs in Italy. The confederates march'd by break of day towards the enemy, and by noon the victory was intirely theirs, and the city delivered; for the enemy abandoned the attack, and their camp, with the greateſt precipitation, retiring, with the remains of their army, on the other ſide of the Po. The reſt of the day was ſpent in taking ſeveral caſſines and redoubts poſſeſs'd by the enemy, who all ſurrender'd themſelves priſoners of war, and his royal Highneſs enter'd triumphantly his capital the ſame evening. As a ſmall allay however to this ſucceſs, the French, under the command of count Medavi, defeated the Prince of Heſſe, and a body of Germans, two days after the battle of Turin, near Medoli, in the Milaneſe. This was nevertheleſs but a trifle, if compared with the numerous loſſes which France ſuſtain'd in theſe parts, about this time: for the duke of Savoy and Prince Eugene, in order to improve their late victory, march'd immediately into the Milaneſe, where almoſt all the towns ſurrendered to them at their approach. The 24th of September, the city of Milan itſelf ſent a deputation, offering to ſubmit to his Imperial Majeſty and the houſe of Auſtria, and, on the 26th, Prince Eugene made his triumphant entry into that city. The duke of Savoy, having reduced Piccighitone, Tortona, Alexandria, Modena, and ſeveral other places of leſs note, appeared on the 16th of November, before Caſal, which ſurrendered the 6th of December, the gariſon, which conſiſted of near 2000 men, being made priſoners of war. In this place, his royal Highneſs found ſeventy-ſix pieces of cannon, with a great quantity of ammunition and proviſions. Thus the campain in Italy ended very gloriouſly for the allies, and all the troops, except a body under the Prince of Heſſe-Caſſel, who were left to block up Cremona, were ſent into winter-quarters. The 14th of December, Prince Eugene went to Milan, of which duchy he was made governor for King Charles III, his Imperial Majeſty having granted the inveſtiture thereof to the King of Spain. The caſtle continued however in the poſſeſſion of the enemy till the next ſpring, when the marquis de St. Pater arrived there with the ratification of a treaty, by the French King, for the quiting of all places, which he or King Philip held in the Milaneſe, Mantuan, Cremoneſe, and Montferrat, on condition that their troops ſhould be ſafely conducted to Suza.

Q. Ann, An' 1706.

Affairs of the North.

As to the affairs of the North, I have hitherto paſs'd them by, as having no immediate connexion with our hiſtory; but I ſhall be obliged now to make ſome mention of them, becauſe the proceedings of the King of Sweden begining to raiſe a jealouſy in the allies, they were obliged to take ſome ſteps which might prevent the evil conſequences that might poſſibly attend them. The northern Hero, who was reſolutely bent upon dethroning his ſworn enemy, Auguſtus, King of Poland, obſerving that he ſhould never be able to do it effectually, unleſs he could cut off the ſupplies which he conſtantly received from Saxony, marched thro' Sileſia and Luſatia, into that Electorate, plundered the open country, and obliged the rich city of Leipzick, and other towns, to pay him contribution, and took up his winter-quarters there, to the great terror of the reſt of the Empire, as well as Saxony: but of this I ſhall have occaſion to ſay more, in my relation of the tranſactions of the inſuing year.

And of Hungary.

Her Majeſty and the States-general continued, in the mean time, their mediation between the Emperor and the malecontents in Hungary; but to very little purpoſe: the negociations were broken off, and each ſide again prepared to renew the war.

The treaty of union begun.

I come now to the grand affair of this year, and indeed of this reign; I mean the union between the two kingdoms of England and Scotland; a work of ſo great importance, that it had been attempted, tho' in vain, in almoſt every reign from that of Henry VIII, down to the glorious reign of Queen Ann, for which it ſeem'd reſerv'd. Her Majeſty, ſoon after the riſing of the parliament, in purſuance of ſeveral acts paſs'd in each kingdom, iſſued a commiſſion, under the reſpective great ſeals, conſtituting a certain number of lords, and others, of either kingdom, commiſſioners, to treat of an union between the two kingdoms of England and Scotland. Theſe commiſſioners met, the firſt time, at the Cock-pit, at Whitehall, the 16th of April, and their commiſſion being read, the lord-keeper Cowper made a ſpeech, in the name of the Engliſh commiſſioners, as the earl of Seafield, lord-chancellor of Scotland, did on behalf of the commiſſioners of that nation, and then they adjourn'd to the 22d.

Preliminary articles.

The commiſſioners, on both ſides, being met again on that day, the lord Cowper, in the name of the lords-commiſſioners of England, deliver'd to the board the following preliminary articles, which were read:

1. "That all propoſals, made by either ſide, "be made in writing, and every point, when "agreed, ſhall be reduced into writing.

2. "That no point, tho' agreed on, and re- "duced into writing, ſhall be obligatory, on ei- "ther ſide, till all matters be adjuſted in ſuch man- "ner as will be proper to be laid before the "Queen, and the two parliaments, for their ap- "probation.

3. "That there be a commitee appointed, con- "ſiſting of a certain number of each commiſſion, "to reviſe the minutes of what paſſes, which are "not to be inſerted by the ſecretaries in their re- "ſpective books, but by order of the ſaid com- "mitee, having firſt made report thereof to the "reſpective commiſſioners, and received their ap- "probation of the ſame.

Q. Ann, An' 1706.

4. " That all proceedings of the commiſſioners " of both kingdoms, during the treaty, be kept " ſecret."

With theſe, the lord-keeper likewiſe delivered the following propoſal, which was read ;

A previous propoſal.

" That the two kingdoms of England and " Scotland be for ever united into one kingdom, " by the name of Great-Britain : that the united " kingdom of Great-Britain be repreſented by " one and the ſame parliament, and that the ſuc- " ceſſion of the Monarchy of the united king- " dom of Great-Britain, in caſe of failure of heirs " of her Majeſty's body, be according to the li- " mitations mentioned in an act of parliament, " made in England, in the twelfth and thirteenth " year of the reign of the late King William, " intitled, an act for the farther limitation of the " crown, &c."

To theſe preliminaries, the commiſſioners for Scotland agreed, with this proviſo only ; " That " all the ſubjects of the united kingdom of Great- " Britain, ſhould have full freedom and intercourſe " of trade and navigation, to or from any part " or place, within the ſaid united kingdom, and " plantations thereto belonging ; and that there be " a communication of all other privileges and ad- " vantages, which do or may belong to the ſub- " jects of either kingdom." This the commiſ- ſioners for England acquieſc'd in, under ſuch terms, as in the farther progreſs of this treaty ſhould be found for the common advantage of both kingdoms. Theſe generals being agreed on, the commiſſioners proceeded to particulars.

I ſhall not detain the reader, with the ſeveral propoſals and anſwers on every head ; but only obſerve, that after fourty-four ſeveral days of meeting, at two of which the Queen was perſonally preſent, the articles of this treaty were brought to maturity, and ſign'd by the reſpective commiſſioners, on the 22d of July. The next day, they were preſented to the Queen, and were of the following tenor :

The particular articles of the union agreed on.

An abſtract thereof.

I. " That the two kingdoms of England and " Scotland ſhall, from the firſt of May 1707, " be united into one kingdom, by the name of " Great-Britain.

II. " That the ſucceſſion be to the Princeſs " Sophia and her heirs, and that all Papiſts, and " perſons that marry Papiſts, ſhall be for ever ex- " cluded inheriting the crown.

III. " That the united kingdom ſhall be repre- " ſented by one parliament.

IV. " That the ſubjects of the united kingdom " ſhall have freedom of trade and navigation to all " places within the ſame, and plantations belonging " to it, and a communication of all other ad- " vantages.

V. " All ſhips belonging to Scotſmen, at the " time of the union, to be deem'd ſhips of Bri- " tiſh built, the owners making oath that the ſame " belong to them,

VI. " All parts of the united kingdom to be " under the ſame regulations of trade, and liable " to the ſame cuſtoms and duties.

VII. " The united kingdom to be liable to the " ſame exciſe, except that a barrel of ale in Scot- " land ſhall not pay above two ſhillings, on ac- " count of the preſent exciſe in England.

VIII. " Foreign ſalt, in Scotland, ſhall pay " the ſame duty as in England ; but ſalt made in " Scotland ſhall be exempted, for ſeven years, " from the Engliſh duty ; ſeveral conditions re- " lating to the ſalt duty, were likewiſe inſerted in " this article.

IX. " When 1,997,765 l. ſhall be inacted to " be raiſed in England, on land, Scotland ſhall add " a farther ſum of 48,000 l.

X. " Scotland is exempted from ſtamp duties, " now in force.

Q. Ann, An' 1706.

XI. " As alſo from the duty on windows ; " and,

XII. " From the duties on coals and culm.

XIII. " Scotland ſhall not pay the malt-duty, " which expires June 24 1707.

XIV. " Scotland ſhall not be charged with " any other duties, impoſed by the parliament of " England, before the union, except thoſe con- " ſented to in this treaty ; and if the parliament, " in their proviſion for the ſervice of the year " 1707, ſhall lay any farther cuſtoms, Scotland " ſhall have an equivalent for the ſhare there- " of they will be liable to : malt made in Scot- " land not to be charged during this war.

XV. " Scotland ſhall have an equivalent for " what ſhe ſhall be charged towards payment of " the debts of England, the ſum of 398,085 l. " for the cuſtom and exciſe they will be liable " to, towards paying the ſaid debts : and an equi- " valent ſhall be farther allowed, for the propor- " tion Scotland ſhall hereafter pay, by reaſon of " the increaſe of the cuſtoms, by the increaſe of " trade (which ſhall be the happy effect of this " union) and alſo for the ſalt-duty, which they " ſhall be obliged to pay after ſeven years. The " ſaid 398,085 l. to be applied to the paying the " public debts of Scotland ; to the refunding to " the African company their principal ſtock, and " the intereſt of it ; to ſatisfy ſuch as may be " loſers by the alteration of the coin, and ſuch " other uſes as commiſſioners appointed by her " Majeſty ſhall think fit : the African company to " be diſſolved as ſoon as an act paſſes in England " for paying the equivalent,

XVI. " The coin to be of the ſame ſtandard, " throughout the united kingdom, as now in Eng- " land, and a mint to be continued in Scotland, " under the ſame rules as in England.

XVII. " The ſame weights and meaſures to be " uſed as now in England, and ſtandards to be " kept in the burghs, agreeable to the ſtandard in " the exchequer.

XVIII. " The laws for the regulation of trade, " cuſtom, and ſuch exciſes to which Scotland is " liable, to be the ſame with England : other " laws in Scotland to remain as before, but alter- " able by parliament. Laws which concern the " public and civil government may be the ſame " throughout the united kingdom ; but no altera- " tion may be made in the laws which concern pri- " vate right, except for evident utility of the ſub- " jects of Scotland.

XIX. " The court of ſeſſion, and other courts, " ſhall remain in Scotland, with ſuch regulations " as are therein mention'd.

XX. " All heritable offices, and offices for life, " are reſerv'd to the owners, as rights of pro- " perty.

XXI. " The rights of the royal burghs in Scot- " land ſhall remain intire.

XXII. " Sixteen of the peers in Scotland ſhall " ſit and vote in the houſe of lords, and forty-five " repreſentatives of Scotland in the houſe of com- " mons, of the parliament of Great-Britain ; the " choice whereof to be according to the act paſs'd " in Scotland to that purpoſe : in caſe her Ma- " jeſty ſhall, on the 1ſt of May, declare this pre- " ſent parliament to be the firſt parliament of " Great-Britain, the preſent parliament of Eng- " land may be ſo, on the part of England, and " the ſixteen peers, and the forty-five commoners, " for Scotland, to ſit with them ; ſuch parliament " to continue no longer than the Engliſh parlia- " ment is by law allowed to continue.

XXIII. " The ſixteen peers of Scotland ſhall

" have

Q. Ann, An' 1706.

" have all privileges of parliament, which the " peers of England have, and, in caſe of trials of " peers, when no parliament is in being, the peers " of Scotland, who ſat in the laſt parliament, ſhall " be ſummon'd; and all the peers of Scotland " ſhall be peers of Great-Britain, and ſhall injoy " all privileges, as fully as the peers of England, " except ſiting in the houſe of lords, and upon " trials of peers.

XXIV. " There ſhall be one great ſeal for the " united kingdom; a ſeal to be ſtill uſed in Scot- " land, in things relating to private right, as " uſual: that the privy-ſeal, ſignet, caſſet, &c. " now uſed, be continued; and that the crown, " ſcepter, ſword of ſtate, records, rolls and re- " giſters, public and private ſhall be ſtill in Scot- " land. Laſtly,

" All laws and ſtatutes, inconſiſtent with the " terms of theſe articles, to be void.

Upon preſenting theſe articles to her Majeſty, the lord-keeper, in the name of the commiſſioners for England, and the lord-chancellor of Scotland, for thoſe of that nation, made each a ſpeech to her Majeſty, ſuitable to the occaſion; and her Majeſty made the following ſpeech to the commiſſioners:

My lords,

The Queen's ſpeech to the commiſſioners on preſenting them.

" I give you many thanks, for the great pains " you have taken in this treaty; and am very well " pleaſed to find your indeavors and applications " have brought it to ſo good a concluſion: the " particulars of it ſeem ſo reaſonable, that I hope " they will meet with approbation, in the parlia- " ments of both kingdoms. I wiſh, therefore, " that my ſervants of Scotland may loſe no time " in going down to propoſe it to my ſubjects of " that kingdom: and I ſhall always look upon it, " as a particular happineſs, if this union (which " will be ſo great a ſecurity and advantage to both " kingdoms) can be accompliſh'd in my reign."

News of the duke of Marlborough's ſucceſs arrives in England.

The firſt news of the ever-memorable victory of Ramellies, was brought to England by colonel Richards, aid de camp to the duke of Marlborough, who arrived in London, the 16th of May; and his account was confirmed, the 21ſt, by captain Pit, another of his grace's aids de camp, with a farther relation of the glorious progreſſes of her Majeſty's arms, and thoſe of her allies. Her Majeſty having at the ſame time, received an account of the ſucceſs of her fleet and forces in Spain, the ſame day captain Pit arrived at Kenſington, a proclamation was ordered, in council, to be publiſhed, for a public thankſgiving, to be held the 27th of June. At the ſame time, another order was made in council, and publiſh'd, to open a free trade with the Spaniſh Netherlands, which was another happy conſequence of the ſucceſs of her Majeſty's arms, under the wiſe conduct of his grace the duke of Marlborough.

Proclamation for a thankſgiving.

A free trade with the Spaniſh Netherlands open'd.

The Dutch Envoy congratulates with her Majeſty on account of the victory.

The ſame day, monſieur Vrybergue, envoy extraordinary from the States-general, had, ſeverally, private audiences of the Queen and Prince, to congratulate with them, in the name of their High-mightineſſes, upon the ſignal victory obtained by the arms of her Majeſty, and her allies in Brabant. Two days after, her Majeſty and her Royal-conſort, went to Windſor, where her Majeſty was attended by congratulatory addreſſes, from moſt parts of her dominions. Among the reſt the loyal city of London, as on all other, ſo on this occaſion, was moſt forward to expreſs their zeal and affection to her Majeſty's auſpicious government, by an addreſs.

Congratulatory addreſſes from all parts.

Particularly from the city of London.

The 27th of June, the day appointed for a public thankſgiving, was celebrated with the uſual ſolemnities; and her Majeſty repair'd, for that end, to the cathedral of St. Paul's, with the ſame ſtate as ſhe had done, upon the like occaſions, in preceding years.

Q. Ann, An' 1706.

France makes offers for a peace.

While the duke of Marlborough was at the Hague, after his return from the campain, it was reſolved to communicate to the allies ſome propoſals, that had been made to the States, by monſ. d'Alegre, in order to remove all ſuſpicions of clandeſtine negociations, and incourage the ſeveral members of the grand alliance to redouble their efforts againſt the next campain. The States having therefore deſired the miniſters of the allies, reſiding at the Hague, to be preſent, the 21ſt of November, at an extraordinary congreſs, their deputies for forein affairs made a notification to them, which gave great ſatisfaction.

" They own'd, that France had formerly, by " ſome private perſons, made general intima- " tions of their willingneſs to treat of peace; and " that, laſt winter, the marquis d'Alegre had " preſented to the States a formal memorial, on " the ſame ſubject, the ſubſtance of which was " read to the congreſs: that they had given no ear " to theſe advances, nor communicated them to " the allies; becauſe they did not judge them " worth imparting. But that in October paſt, " the Elector of Bavaria, had writen a let- " ter to the duke of Marlborough, and another to " the field-deputies of the States, which two let- " ters, and the anſwers that had been returned to " them, were alſo communicated to the congreſs.

Theſe pieces being read, the deputies of the States made a ſpeech to the congreſs, purſuant to the inſtructions given them by their principals, for that purpoſe, in which they repreſented: " That their " High-mightineſſes were firmly reſolved to obſerve " their alliances, in every part, and to do nothing " contrary thereunto: That a peace would be ex- " treamly agreeable to them, and without doubt " to all the other allies, provided it could be on " ſuch terms, as might reaſonably promiſe its being " firm and laſting. But that the conferences pro- " poſed by France, without a more particular de- " claration of her intentions, did not ſeem to be " a proper means for attaining it, but would " tend much rather to divert the thoughts of " war, and of the great preparations the enemy " make; and to lull ſome of the allies aſleep by " the hopes of peace. That their High-mighti- " neſſes, for their parts, were reſolved to abide, " by the meaſures they had taken, and the al- " liances they had made, which God had hitherto " ſo wonderfully bleſs'd, and therefore would not " enter into any negociation, but jointly with their " high allies, expecting that they would do no " leſs, on their part."

Reaſons why the French ſued for a peace.

The French had very ſubſtantial reaſons, to induce them to ſue for a peace, at this time: the raiſing of the ſiege of Barcelona; the loſs of the battle of Ramellies, and the conſequences that attended it; the total defeat of their army, before the walls of Turin, by the duke of Savoy, and Prince Eugene, which, as I have ſaid above, intirely chang'd the face of affairs in Italy; the ſtreights to which the King's treaſury was reduced, and which were but ill remedied, by forcing and impoſing mint-bills, upon the nation, inſtead of ready mony: all theſe, I ſay, concur'd to caſt the court of France into the utmoſt conſternation and perplexity, and obliged them to make theſe public advances towards a peace. The allies did not however think them ſo ſincere as to enter into any negociation thereupon (1).

The

(1) Theſe overtures towards a peace on the ſide of France, being look'd on to be too general to ground a treaty upon, and being, for that reaſon rejected; reflections were caſt upon the principal perſons concern'd, on the ſide of the allies, as if they acted rather with private views, than for the public good. It was no wonder (ſays a French author) " that theſe advances made " by

Q. Ann, An' 1706.

The duke of Marlborough arrives at London.

The duke of Marlborough having ſetled ſeveral important affairs with the States, particularly (at the inſtances of the duke of Savoy) the continuation of the Heſſian troops in Italy, his grace ſail'd from the Maeſe, the 26th of November, N. S. and, three days after, came to London. But to return to the affair of the union.

The Queen's letter to the parliament of Scotland.

The parliament of Scotland meeting, the 3d of October, her Majeſty's letter was read, in which ſhe acquainted them: "that the treaty of "union was concluded by the commiſſioners of "both nations, and ſaid ſhe hop'd the terms of "it would be acceptable to them; for ſhe ſhould "eſteem it the greateſt glory of her reign to ſee "it perfected, being perſuaded it muſt prove the "greateſt happineſs of her people." Upon this occaſion, ſhe likewiſe "renewed her aſſurances "of maintaining the government of their church, "as by law eſtabliſh'd; declaring, they had now "an opportunity of doing what was neceſſary for "ſecuring their church, after the union, within "the limits of Scotland; and obſerved, that there "was no reaſon to doubt, but the parliament of "England would do what was neceſſary, on "their part, after the readineſs they had ſhewn, "to remove what might obſtruct the entering on "that treaty. She alſo deſired, that they would "provide the neceſſary ſupplies, till the parlia-"ment of Great-Britain could provide for theſe "matters, and recommended to them calmneſs "and unanimity in this great and weighty af-"fair."

Proceedings concerning the union.

The duke of Queenſberry, as lord high commiſſioner, and the earl of Seafield, as lord-chancellor, made each a ſpeech to inforce what her Majeſty had inſiſted on in her letter, and then the treaty of union was ordered to be read and printed, together with the proceedings of the lords commiſſioners of both kingdoms, in relation thereunto: which done, the parliament was adjourned for a week. At their next meeting, on the 15th, it being put to the vote; "Whether they ſhould "proceed preſently to the conſideration of the ar-"ticles of the union, or refer it." It was carried to proceed, 116 voices againſt fifty-two. In this, the ſtrength of the court-party appeared, and, notwithſtanding the clamor from the other ſide, they proceeded with all the ſedateneſs imaginable. The duke of Roxburg, who in former parliaments had expreſs'd a great averſion to an union, was now at the head of a party which went over to the court, and this was the occaſion of ſome ſevere reflections upon him, in the debates, and particularly by duke Hamilton.

Tumults on that account.

The articles of the union met with ſo bad a reception, without doors, that the mob at Edinburg was raiſed, and aſſaulted the houſe of ſir Patrick Johnſton, provoſt of that city, and one of the commiſſioners, and the privy-council were obliged to call in the foot-guards for their ſecurity, at midnight, and a proclamation was iſſued againſt tumults. The averſion of a good part of the commonalty to an union was farther evident, by their inſtructions to their reſpective members, and the petitions and repreſentations againſt it, from moſt parts of the kingdom, in which they inſiſted; "that by devolving the power of the Scotiſh par-"liament, into the hands of a ſmall number of "lords, barons and burgeſſes, allowed to ſit and "vote with all the lords and commons of England, "in the parliament of Great-Britain, was diſho-"norable and prejudicial to the kingdom of Scot-"land, tending to the deſtruction of their ancient "conſtitution, and all their rights and privileges, "as a free people, in general, and to every indi-"vidual perſon and ſociety in the kingdom, in "particular: that they ſhould intirely loſe their "ſovereinty and independency, and give up the "birth-right of the peers, and the privileges of "the barons and burghs: that the rights and "intereſts reſerved to them, by the articles of "union, were capable of no ſecurity, ſeing the "plurality of voices, in the parliament of Great-"Britain, muſt determine whatever was brought "before them: that their being let into the trade "of England, would be little or no advantage "to them, under the regulations and reſtrictions "the Engliſh trade was at preſent, in the ſeveral "companies, and they were under great apprehen-"ſions of danger to their kirk, from the twenty-"ſix biſhops, who were to ſit in the Britiſh parlia-"liament; whereas their kirk would have none to "repreſent them. They objected alſo to the ſa-"cramental teſt being the condition of acceſs to "all places of profit or truſt; and it was a farther "grievance, that the ſoverein was obliged to be "of the communion of the church of England." The aſſembly of the kirk alſo petitioned againſt the "making the ſecurity of the church of England, "a fundamental article of the union; for hereby, "they ſaid, they would involve the whole nation "in great guilt, by conſenting to the eſtabliſh-"ment of the hierarchy, and ceremonies of a "church, which they held to be ſinful and abo-"minable (1)."

Q. Ann, An' 1706.

Petitions againſt the union.

Reaſons alledged.

The articles of union, burnt in Scotland.

At Dumfreis, the articles of the union were publicly burnt, and the people cried aloud, that their commiſſioners muſt either be ſimple, ignorant or treacherous, if not all together; and that the ratification of this treaty would bring them and their poſterity to be tributary and bond-ſlaves to their neighbors. Even in Edinburg, the lord high commiſſioner was inſulted, and ſtones thrown at him in his coach, while he was ſurrounded

"by France, however ſincere, had no effect; becauſe the three principal powers, on whom this accommodation depended, "were govern'd by three perſons, whoſe private intereſt it was to continue the war, that is Prince Eugene, the duke of "Marlborough, and penſionary Heinſius. It is well known (continues my author) that Prince Eugene, beſide the particular "enmity he had conceived againſt France, his native country, was intirely in the ſentiments of the Emperor, who contri-"buting little or nothing to this war, which was begun in his favor, and in which he could loſe nothing, but had a pro-"ſpect of gaining much, it was his intereſt to ſee it continued; that the duke of Marlborough had an abſolute power over "the minds, not only of the Queen, but of the parliament, and the more, as the principal offices of the kingdom were filled "with his creatures; and laſtly, that penſionary Heinſius, being ſubſervient to the wills of Prince Eugene and the duke of "Marlborough, was ſo intirely maſter of the republic of Holland, that it was, as it were, wholly rob'd of its former liber-"ty; and the good of the public ſacrific'd to his private intereſt." De Quincy, Hiſt. mil. de Louis le grand, Tome V. p. 273.

Here, indeed, is a direct charge of private intereſt againſt the penſionary, tho' not ſupported by th e leaſt ſhadow of proof; but for our two warriors, I find nothing like it alledg'd in particular or circumſtantially.

(1) It may not, however, be improper to obſerve, in order to ſet this matter in a true light, that tho' the numerous addreſſes againſt the union in Scotland, ſeem'd to ſhew a great averſion to it, in that nation; yet this oppoſition was far from being the general ſenſe of the nation, as was inſinuated by many: for it is remarkable, that of thirty-four ſhires in Scotland, only thirteen addreſs'd, and of all theſe the better and more ſubſtantial part of the gentlemen refuſed to join with the reſt: That of ſixty-ſix boroughs only, ſeventeen ſent up addreſſes, and moſt of theſe not abſolutely againſt the union, but only for rectification of the articles: that of ſixty-eight preſbyteries, only three, and of 938 kirks and pariſhes, only ſixty addreſs'd againſt an union, by the viſible influence of the great men who thwarted it in the ſenate-houſe. Boyer's reign of Queen Ann, p. 271.

with

Q. Ann, An. 1706.

with the guards; and, on the 30th of November, the mob entered the parliament close, with loud clamors for rejecting the articles of union, all which circumstances gave the government such apprehensions, that it was thought convenient to march several regiments of horse and dragoons, to the north of England, to be in a readiness to protect the ministry.

The articles of the union ratified in Scotland.

However, notwithstanding all the opposition and clamor that was made, the act for the ratification of the union pass'd, on the 16th of January, by a majority of 110, against sixty-nine. But tho' all the articles were, at length, agreed to, it was with some explanations and alterations (1), and an act pass'd, at the same time, for the security of their kirk, as a fundamental and essential condition of the union. They afterwards proceeded to an act, prescribing the manner of electing the members of Scotland to be their representatives in the first parliament of Great-Britain. An act of supply likewise pass'd this session, by which an eight months cess was granted, amounting to 576,000 l. 15 s. and 4 d. Scots. The remainder of the session, which was continued till the 25th of March of the insuing year, was spent in several other public and private affairs, and then the lord high commissioner, having given the royal sanction to twenty other public and private acts, and made a speech, the parliament was adjourn'd to the 22d of April.

The parliament adjourn'd.

Having thus given a brief account of the proceedings of the parliament of Scotland, with regard to the union, let us now return to England, where we shall soon see what reception that treaty met with there.

The English parliament meets.

The 3d of December, the parliament of that kingdom met, pursuant to its last prorogation, and was open'd by the following speech from the throne.

The Queen's speech to both houses of parliament.

My lords and gentlemen,

"I hope we are all met together, at this time, "with hearts truly thankful to Almighty God, "for the glorious successes with which he has "bless'd our arms, and those of our allies, thro' "the whole course of this year; and with serious "and steady resolutions, to prosecute the advan- "tages we have gained, till we reap the desired "fruit of them, in an honorable and durable "peace.

"The goodness of God has brought this happy "prospect so much nearer to us, that, if we be "not wanting to ourselves, we may, upon good "grounds, hope to see such a balance of power "established in Europe, that it shall no longer be "at the pleasure of one Prince, to disturb the "repose, and indanger the liberties of that part of "the world,

"A just consideration of the present posture "of affairs, of the circumstances of our enemies, "and the good disposition of our allies, must "needs excite an uncommon zeal, and animate "us to exert our utmost indeavors, at this critical "juncture."

Gentlemen of the house of commons,

"As I am fully persuaded you are all of this "mind, so I must earnestly desire you, to grant "me supplies sufficient for carrying on the war "next year, in so effectual a manner, that we "may be able to improve every where the advan- "tages of this successful campain; and I assure "you, I shall make it my business to see all you "give, applied to those ends, with the greatest "care and management."

Q. Ann, An' 1706.

My lords and gentlemen,

"In pursuance of the power vested in me, by "acts of parliament, both in England and Scotland, "I have appointed commissioners to treat of an "union between the two kingdoms; and tho' this "be a work of such a nature, as could not but be "attended with great difficulties; yet such has "been the application of the commissioners, that "they have concluded a treaty, which is at this "time before the parliament of Scotland: and I "hope the mutual advantages of an intire union of "the two kingdoms will be found so apparent, "that it will not be long before I shall have an op- "portunity of acquainting you with the success "which it has met with there.

"Your meeting at this time being later than "usual, I cannot conclude without earnestly re- "commending to you, to give as much dispatch "to the public affairs, as the nature of them will "admit, it being of the greatest consequence, "that both our friends and our enemies should be "fully convinced of your firmness, and the vigor "of your proceedings."

This speech met with an uncommon applause, both within doors and without; and, on the 5th, the two houses, each in a body, attended the Queen with their congratulatory addresses.

Addres of the lords.

The lords, after having congratulated her Majesty on the great success of her arms this wonderful year; observed, "That nothing could be "more glorious, than the opening the campain "by the ever-memorable victory gained at Ra- "mellies, under her wise and valiant general, the "duke of Marlborough, and nothing more sea- "sonable, at the close of the campain, than the "compleat victory gain'd by the duke of Savoy "and Prince Eugene, before the walls of Turin: "and if they should not do all that lay in their "power, towards improving the advantages divine "providence had given her Majesty and her allies, "they should be inexcusable: nor could they suf- "ficiently express the universal satisfaction of the "people, on the declaration her Majesty and the "States had made to the ministers of the rest of "the allies; that no negociations of peace should "be entered upon, but in junction with all the "members of the grand alliance. That the ex- "ample of her Majesty and the States ought to "inspire the rest of the allies, with a noble emu- "lation of acting with the like vigor. If any of "them had failed formerly, they hoped her Ma- "jesty would find proper means to let them see, "that the only right amends they could make to "the cause of liberty, was by doubling their ef- "forts at this important juncture, which was the "true way to obtain such a peace, as might secure "the Protestant succession; the advantages of trade "and commerce; restore the whole Mouarchy of "Spain to King Charles III; fix a barrier for the "States-general as might be to their satisfaction, "and procure such terms for the rest of the allies, "as might be just, safe, and honorable; con-

(1) There was a small alteration in the fifth article: several additions and explanations in the sixth. An amendment to the fourteenth, importing that, during the present war, Scotland should be exempt from the malt-tax. Some alterations and amendments in the fifteenth and sixteenth. An amendment to the nineteenth, with respect to qualifications: an addition of the word superiorities: some amendments to the second paragraph of the twenty-second, relating to the calling the representatives of Scotland, to the parliament of Great-Britain: and an explanatory clause to the twenty-fourth. All which explanations and alterations were not so very essential, but that the lord high commissioner and the court party, readily come into them, and thereby, gradually brought over several to that side, who, in the begining, shewed a total aversion to the union.

Q. Ann, An' 1706.

" cluding with their thanks, for her Majeſty's in" deavors to compleat the union of the two king-
" doms."

Addreſs of the commons.

The commons, beſide their congratulations, aſſured her Majeſty, " that as her allies had ſhewn " their firmneſs and good diſpoſition to carry on " the war vigorouſly, ſo they were determined, " that no ſpecious pretences of peace ſhould di- " vert them from their ſteady reſolution of inabling " her Majeſty to improve, in all places, the ad- " vantages of this ſucceſsful campain. The ex- " perience they had of the prudent adminiſtra- " tion, and the great care and management in the " application of the public treaſure, incouraged " them to aſſure her Majeſty, they would chear- " fully give ſuch ſpeedy and effectual ſupplies, " as by God's bleſſing might eſtabliſh the balance " of power in Europe, by a ſafe, honorable and " laſting peace: and they returned her Majeſty " their thanks for her care in promoting the union " of the two kingdoms."

The duke of Marlborough coming, the ſame day, to the houſe of peers, the lord-keeper, by direction from their lordſhips, made the following ſpeech to his grace:

The lord-keeper's ſpeech to the duke of Marlborough.

My lord duke of Marlborough,

" I am commanded by this houſe, to give your " grace their acknowledgments and thanks for the " eminent ſervices you have done, ſince the laſt " ſeſſion of parliament, to her Majeſty and your " country, together with their confederates, in " this juſt and neceſſary war.

" Tho' your former ſucceſſes againſt the power " of France, while it remain'd unbroken, gave " moſt reaſonable expectation that you would not " fail to improve them, yet what your grace has " performed, this laſt campain, has far exceeded all " hopes, even of ſuch as were moſt affectionate and " partial, to their country's intereſt, and your " glory; the advantages you have gain'd againſt " the enemy, are of ſuch a nature, ſo conſpicuous " of themſelves, ſo undoubtedly owing to your " courage and conduct, ſo ſenſibly and univerſally " beneficial in their conſequences, to the whole " confederacy, that to attempt to adorn them, " with the coloring of words, would be vain and " inexcuſable, and therefore I decline it, the ra- " ther, becauſe I ſhould certainly offend that " great modeſty which alone can and does add " luſtre to your actions, and which, in your grace's " example, has ſucceſsfully withſtood as great trials, " as that virtue has met with in any inſtance what- " ſoever; and I beg leave, to ſay, that if any " thing could move your grace to reflect, with " much ſatisfaction on your own merit, it would " be this, that ſo auguſt an aſſembly does, with " one voice praiſe and thank you: an honor, which " a judgment, ſo ſure as that of your grace's, to " think rightly of every thing, cannot but prefer " to the oſtentation of a public triumph."

His grace's anſwer to this ſpeech was:

His grace's anſwer.

" I eſteem this a very particular honor, which " your lordſhips are pleaſed to do me; no body in " the world can be more ſenſible of it than I am, " nor more deſirous to deſerve the continuance of " your favour and good opinion."

The commons had, the day before, unanimouſly voted;

The commons vote thanks to the duke.

" That the thanks of this houſe be given to his " grace the duke of Marlborough, for his eminent " ſervices to her Majeſty, and this kingdom, in " the great and glorious victories, and ſucceſſes " obtain'd over the common enemy, in the laſt " campain." And the commitee appointed by the commons having, this day, attended the duke, with the thanks of that houſe, his grace made the following anſwer. " If any thing could add

His anſwer.

" to my ſatisfaction, in the ſervices I have indea- " vored to do the Queen and my country, it would " be the particular notice, which the houſe of " commons is pleaſed to take of them, ſo much " to my advantage."

Q. Ann, An' 1706.

At the begining of this ſeſſion, the houſe of commons came to the following reſolutions, in relation to their privileges.

Reſolution of the commons as to their privileges.

1. " That no peer has a right to give his vote " at the election of a commoner.

2. " That where the houſes judge a petition, " touching an election, to be frivolous and vexa- " tious, they will order ſatisfaction to be made to " the perſon petition'd againſt.

3. " Where a perſon procures himſelf to be " elected, by bribery or corruption, they will " proceed with the utmoſt ſeverity againſt him.

4. " That where any perſon ſhall tamper with " the witneſſes, or deter any from appearing as " witneſſes, at a controverted election, they are " guilty of a miſdemeanor, and ſhall be proſe- " cuted with the utmoſt ſerverity.

5. " That if any perſon give falſe evidence " to the houſe, he ſhall be proſecuted with the ut- " moſt ſeverity.

6. " That for any peer, or lord-lieutenant of a " county, to concern himſelf in the election of a " member, is a high infringement of the liberties " and privileges of the commons."

Supplies voted.

The commons were likewiſe not only juſt to themſelves, but as good as their words to her Majeſty, in voting the neceſſary ſupplies, with all the diſpatch and unanimity that could be wiſh'd. I ſhall give the reader a liſt of them in one view, without regard to the particular days on which they were voted, and they were as follows: " For " 40,000 men in the ſea ſervice, including the " 8000 marines, at 4 l. per man, per month, " for thirteen months. For the ordinary of the " navy, 120,000 l. For guards and gariſons, " 357,000 l. For 40,000 land-men, to act in con- " junction with the allies, 893,706 l. For the ad- " ditional 10,000 men, and for her Majeſty's " proportion of 3000 Palatines, 211,762 l. For " paying a years intereſts of unſatisfied deben- " tures, 49,000 l. For the wharf and ſtore-houſe, " at Portſmouth, 10,000 l. For the ordnance for " land-ſervice, 120,000 l. For tranſport-ſervice, " 144,000 l. For circulating exchequer-bills, " 3500 l. For the Queen's proportion of ſubſides, " to the King of Denmark, for the year 1707, " 37,000 l. For the Queen's proportion of the " charges of 13,000 men, in the ſervice of the King " of Portugal, for the year 1707, 150,000 l. For " the Queen's proportion of ſubſidies to the duke " of Savoy, 160,000 l. For ſubſidies to the Land- " grave of Heſſe-caſſel, 5952 l. For ſubſidies to " the Elector of Triers, 5952 l. For ſubſidies to " to the Elector-Palatine, 4761 l. For the Queen's " proportion of the charge of 8000 men, ſent " to the aſſiſtance of the duke of Savoy, 50,000 l. " For the charge of maintaining 20,562 men, " part of her Majeſty's forces to be imployed in " Spain and Portugal, next year, and for the " gariſon of Gibraltar; for general officers, hoſ- " pitals and contingencies, 445,350 l. For 8833 " men, additional forces, to ſerve next year in " Spain, and Portugal, 186,296 l. For ſo much " advanced by the Queen to the duke of Savoy, " for the better defence of Turin, laſt year, " 50,000 l. For her Majeſty's ſhare of a loan to " the Emperor, for the ſervice in Italy, laſt " year, 47,500 l. For the expence of levying, " paying, and contingencies of the forces, in the " expedition under the earl of Rivers, 63,661 l. " For the pay of the general officers, of the " 13,000 men, in Portugal, 3014 l. For her

" Majeſty's

Q. ANN, AN' 1706.

" Majeſty's ſhare of the pay of 3000 Palatines, " in the laſt year, 26,692 l. For the agio, bread " and forage-mony of the Pruſſians, in the " Queen's ſervice in the Netherlands, 37,012 l. " For an additional ſubſidy to the Landgrave " of Heſſe-Caſſel, and for defraying diverſe ex- " pences, on his troops, for next year, 20,000 l. " For the agio and bread-mony of the Pruſſians, " for the year paſt, 19,755 l. For the Queen's " proportion of extraordinary expences, on the " Heſſe-Caſſel troops, in the laſt year, 11,780 l. " or levy-mony to recruit horſes of the forein " troops, in our pay, kill'd laſt year in Flanders, " 34,607 l. For the ſame recruit for the Engliſh " troops, 1140 l. For the horſes of the Engliſh " troops, which died in 1705, 7532 l. For the " ſame in the year 1706, 11,298 l. For the " horſes of the Danes, in thoſe two years, 16,055 l. " For the Hanover horſe, 1775 l. For proſecuting " the ſucceſſes of King Charles, for recovering " the monarchy of Spain, 150,000 l. In all, " 5,540,131 l. not reckoning 398,085 l. for the " equivalent allowed the Scots, by the union, " which was likewiſe granted this ſeſſion."

Ways and means.

To raiſe this vaſt ſum, the parliament gave a land-tax of four ſhillings in the pound, and the duty upon malt, for one year. The duties upon low-wines, the ſtamp-duty, and that upon hawkers, which had been continued to 1710, were now continued for ninety-ſix years, to be a fund for 1,155,000 l. to be taken in for annuities, at ſixteen years parchaſe. The duty upon houſes was continued, for circulating exchequer-bills, by which 1,500,000 l. was raiſed. The old tonage and poundage, and ſeveral other duties at the cuſtom-houſe, which were already continued to 1710, for paying off deficiences, were now continued for two years more, for a loan of 822,381 l. at ſix per cent. intereſt.

Creations and promotions.

About this time, her Majeſty was pleaſed to make the following promotions among the nobility: Henry, earl of Kent, was created viſcount Goderick, earl of Harold, and marquis of Kent: Robert, earl of Lindſey, was created marquis of Lindſey, in the county of Lincoln; Evelin, earl of Kingſton, marquis of Doncaſter, in the county of Dorſet; Thomas lord Wharton, viſcount Winchindon, in the county of Bucks, and earl of Wharton, in the county of Weſtmorland; John, lord Poulet, of Hinton St. George, viſcount Hinton St. George, in the county of Sommerſet, and earl of Poulet; Sidney, lord Godolphin, viſcount Rialton, and earl of Godolphin, in the county of Cornwall; Hugh lord Cholmondley, viſcount Malpas, and earl of Cholmondley, in the county of Cheſter; Henry, lord Walden, ſon and heir of the earl of Suffolk, baron of Cheſterford, in the county of Eſſex, and earl of Bindon, in the county of Dorſet; the lord keeper Cowper, lord Cowper, and baron of Wingham, in the county of Kent; and ſir Thomas Pelham, lord Pelham, and baron of Laughton, in the county of Suſſex.

The 17th of December, the houſe of lords preſented the following addreſs to the Queen, in favor of the duke of Marlborough.

The lords addreſs in favor of the duke of Marlborough.

" We your Majeſty's moſt dutiful and obedient " ſubjects, the lords ſpiritual and temporal in par- " liament aſſembled, having, with much ſatiſ- " faction, conſider'd the many great actions which " the duke of Marlborough has performed in your " Majeſty's ſervice, to the honor of his country, " and for the good of the common cauſe of Eu- " rope (ſuch actions as the wiſeſt and greateſt " people have rewarded with ſtatues and triumphs) " are extreamly deſirous to expreſs the juſt ſenſe " we have of his merit, in a peculiar and diſtin- " guiſhing manner, and in order to perpetuate the " memory thereof, to ſettle and continue his titles " and honors, with his right of precedence in his " poſterity, by act of parliament, as the method " moſt effectual for that end, and beſt ſuiting ſo " great an occaſion: but yet having always a juſt " regard for the prerogatives of the crown (your " Majeſty being the ſole fountain of honor) we " thought it our duty, in the firſt place, to have " recourſe to your Majeſty, for your royal allow- " ance, before any order given for bringing in " a bill of ſuch nature, and, at the ſame time, to " deſire your Majeſty would be graciouſly pleaſed, " to let the houſe know, in what manner it will " be moſt acceptable to your Majeſty, that the " ſaid titles and honors ſhould be limited."

Q. ANN, AN' 1706.

Her Majeſty's anſwer to this addreſs ran thus.

ANN R.

The Queen's anſwer.

" Nothing can be more acceptable to me than " your addreſs; I am intirely ſatisfied with the " ſervices of the duke of Marlborough, and there- " fore cannot but be pleaſed you have ſo juſt a " ſenſe of them.

" I muſt not omit to take notice, that the re- " ſpectful manner of your proceeding, in deſiring " my allowance for bringing in the bill, and my " direction for the limitation of the honors does " give me great ſatisfaction.

" My intention is, that after the determination " of the eſtate, which the duke of Marlborough " now has in his titles and honors, the ſame ſhould " be limited to his eldeſt daughter, and the heirs " male of her body, and then to all his other " daughters ſucceſſively, according to their priority " of birth, and the heirs male of their reſpective " bodies, and afterwards, in ſuch manner, as may " effectually anſwer my deſign, and yours, in " perpetuating the memory of his merit, by conti- " nuing, as far as may be done, his titles and " name to all his poſterity.

" I think it would be proper, that the honor " and manor of Woodſtock, and the houſe of " Blenheim, ſhould always go along with the " titles, and therefore I recommend that matter " to your conſideration."

Then the duke of Marlborough, on this occaſion, ſpoke to the Lords in theſe words:

My lords,

The duke of Marlborough's ſpeech on that occaſion.

" I cannot find words ſufficient to expreſs the " ſenſe I have of the great and diſtinguiſhing " honor which the houſe has been pleaſed to do " me, in their reſolution, and their application to " her Majeſty. The thoughts of it will be a con- " tinual ſatisfaction to me, and the higheſt in- " couragement; and the thankful memory of it " muſt laſt as long as any poſterity of mine.

" I beg leave to ſay a word to the houſe, in " relation to that part of her Majeſty's moſt gra- " cious anſwer, which concerns the eſtate of Wood- " ſtock and the houſe of Blenheim; I did make " my humble requeſt to the Queen, that thoſe " might go along with the titles; and I make the " like requeſt to your lordſhips, that after the " ducheſs of Marlborough's death, upon whom " they are ſettled in jointure, that eſtate and houſe " may be limited to go always along with the " honor."

The ſtandards and colors taken at Ramellies hung up in Guild-hall.

The 19th, her Majeſty having been pleas'd, at the requeſt of the city of London, to order, that the ſtandards and colors taken at the famous battle of Ramellies, which were lately brought from the Netherlands, ſhould be put up in Guild-hall, a detachment of her Majeſty's horſe-guards, and horſe-grenadiers, and a battalion drawn out of both regiments of her Majeſty's foot-guards, were drawn up, on the parade, in St. James's park, and having received the ſaid colors and ſtandards, which had been laid up at Whitehall, they proceeded ceeded in the following manner: firſt the troop of horſe-grenadiers, then the detachment of the three troops of her Majeſty's horſe-gards, twenty-ſix of the gentlemen in the center, carrying each a ſtandard taken from the enemy. The battallion of foot-guards cloſed the march, ſixty-three of the pike-men, inſtead of their pikes, each carrying one of the enemy's colors advanced. In this manner, they march'd thro' the Park, and St. James's Meuſe, where her Majeſty was pleaſed to ſee them paſs by, from the right honorable the lady Fitz-harding's lodgings, the guns in the Park being fired at the ſame time. Thence they proceeded down Pall-mall, the Strand, &c. to Guild-hall, where the ſtandards and colors were put up, to remain there, as trophies of that ſignal victory, wherewith it pleaſed Almighty God to bleſs the arms of her Majeſty, and her allies, under the conduct of his grace the duke of Marlborough; and as a laſting monument of the immortal honor gained by her Majeſty's arms, on that memorable day.

Q. Anne, An' 1706.

The duke of Marlborough dines with the lord-mayor.

The duke of Marlborough having been invited by the lord-mayor and court of aldermen to dine with them, in the city, his grace went thither, the ſame day, about noon, accompanied by the lord high-treaſurer, and the duke of Sommerſet and Ormond, in one of her Majeſty's coaches, and was follow'd by a train of other coaches, in which were ſeveral of the nobility, the forein miniſters, and other perſons of quality, with the generals, and other chief officers of the army. They were received, at Temple-bar, by the city-marſhal, and were conducted to Vintner's hall, where a ſplendid entertainment was provided for them, by ſir Robert Bedingfield, lord-mayor, the court of aldermen, and ſir William Benſon, and ſir Ambroſe Crawley, ſheriffs, and they were followed, both going and coming, with great acclamations from the people.

The bill in favor of the duke of Marlborough paſs'd.

The 20th, the bill from the lords, intitled; "an act for the ſettling the honors and dignities "of John, duke of Marlborough, upon his po-"ſterity, and annexing the honor and manor of "Woodſtock, and houſe of Blenheim, to go along "with the ſaid honors," was read three times, by the houſe of commons, and paſs'd, nemine contradicente; and, the next day, it had the royal aſſent.

Extract of the ſpeaker of the houſe of commons ſpeech to her Majeſty.

At the preſentation of this, together with the land and malt-tax bill, &c. the ſpeaker of the houſe of commons made a ſpeech to her Majeſty, importing; "that as the glorious victory obtain'd "by the duke of Marlborough at Ramellies was "ſo ſurprizing, that the battle was fought before "it could be thought the armies were in the "field; ſo it was no leſs ſurprizing, that the "commons had granted ſupplies to her Majeſty, "before her enemies could well know, that her "parliament was ſiting;" and the Queen, on her part, in her moſt gracious ſpeech, to both houſes, was pleaſed to expreſs herſelf, as follows, in favor of the duke:

Part of her Majeſty's ſpeech.

"The particular notice you have taken of the "eminent ſervices of the duke of Marlborough, "is alſo very agreeable to me; and I make "no queſtion, but it will be ſo to the whole "kingdom."

A general thankſ-giving.

The laſt day of the year, being appointed a general thankſgiving for the wonderful ſucceſſes of her Majeſty's arms, &c. her Majeſty went, with the uſual ſtate and ſolemnity, to the cathedral of St. Paul's; and thereby gave her ſubjects, and eſpecially the city of London, the joyful ſpectacle of two triumphs in one year.

An' 1707.

The parliament was no ſooner met again, after the Chriſtmas-holidays, than the houſe of commons having, on the 7th of January, taken into their conſideration "the eminent ſervices of John, "duke of Marlborough," that they might not be behind hand with the lords, agreed upon the following addreſs to the Queen:

Q. Anne, An' 1707.

Moſt gracious ſoverein,

Addreſs of the commons in favor of the duke of Marlborough.

"We your Majeſty's moſt dutiful and loyal "ſubjects, the commons of England in parlia-"ment aſſembled, taking into our conſideration "the many eminent ſervices of John duke of "Marlborough, whereby the glory of your Ma-"jeſty's government, the honor and ſafety of your "kingdom, and the intereſts of the common cauſe, "have been ſo highly advanced, do, with all "ſubmiſſion, addreſs ourſelves to your Majeſty's "moſt ſacred perſon, humbly to deſire, that as "your Majeſty is, at your expence, graciouſly "pleaſed to erect the houſe of Blenheim, as a "monument of his glorious actions; and the "houſe of peers, by your Majeſty's permiſſion, "have given riſe to a law for continuing his honors "to his poſterity; we, your moſt obedient com-"mons, may be permited to expreſs our ſenſe of "ſo diſtinguiſhing a merit, and our ready diſpo-"ſition to inable your Majeſty to make ſome pro-"viſion for the more honorable ſupport of his "dignity, in his poſterity, in ſuch a manner, as "ſhall be moſt agreeable to your Majeſty."

This addreſs being preſented, the next day to the Queen, by the whole houſe, her Majeſty was pleas'd to give the following anſwer:

Gentlemen,

The Queen's anſwer.

"I am very glad you have ſo juſt a ſenſe of the "repeated ſervices of the duke of Marlborough: "I will conſider of your addreſs, and return an "anſwer very ſpeedily."

Accordingly, on the 9th of January, mr. ſecretary Harley deliver'd to the houſe the following meſſage, ſign'd by her Majeſty.

Ann R.

A meſſage from the Queen to the houſe of commons in his grace's favor.

"Her Majeſty, in conſideration of the great "and eminent ſervices, performed by the duke "of Marlborough, in the firſt year of her reign, "as well by his prudent negociations, as her ple-"nipotentiary at the Hague, as by his valor "and good conduct in the command of the con-"federate armies abroad, thought fit to grant him "and the heirs male of his body, the title of a "duke, of this realm; and as a farther mark "of her favor and ſatisfaction with his ſervices, "and for the better ſupport of his dignity, her "Majeſty granted to the ſaid duke, and the "heirs male of his body, during his life, a pen-"ſion of 5000 l. per annum, out of the revenue "of the poſt office, and an act having paſs'd "this ſeſſion, for ſettling the honors and dignities "of the duke of Marlborough, upon his poſte-"rity, and annexing the honor and manor of "Woodſtock, and houſe of Blenheim to go along "with the ſaid honors, it would be very agreable "to her Majeſty, if the penſion of 5000 l. per "annum, be continued and limited, by act of "parliament, to his poſterity, for the more "honorable ſupport of their dignities, in like "manner, as his honors, and the honor and ma-"nor of Woodſtock, and houſe of Blenheim, "are already ſettled and limited," Kenſington, January 9, 1707.

A bill paſs'd thereupon.

Upon the reading of this meſſage, the houſe reſolved, "That a bill be brought in purſuant to "the tenor of the ſaid meſſage;" which having paſs'd both houſes, receiv'd the royal aſſent, the 28th: and thus this matter, which had been oppoſed, with ſo much warmth, in a former parliament, paſs'd in this, by an emulation in the houſe of commons, not to be out done by the houſe of peers, in ſhewing a true ſenſe of the duke of Marlborough's great merit.

At

Q. Ann, An' 1707.

At the ſame time that the Queen gave the royal aſſent to this bill, in favor of the duke of Marlborough, ſhe made the following ſpeech to both houſes:

The Queen's ſpeech to both houſes.

My lords and gentlemen,

"Having acquainted you, at the opening of "this ſeſſion, that the treaty for an union be-"tween England and Scotland, which had been "concluded here, by the commiſſioners appointed "for that purpoſe, in purſuance of the powers "given by the parliaments of both kingdoms, "was then under the conſideration of the par-"liament of Scotland; I can now, with great "ſatisfaction, inform you, that the ſaid treaty "has been ratified, by act of parliament, in Scot-"land, with ſome alterations and additions.

"I have directed the treaty, agreed to by the "commiſſioners of both kingdoms, as alſo the "act of ratification from Scotland, to be laid be-"fore you; and, I hope, it will meet with your "concurrence and approbation.

Gentlemen of the houſe of commons,

"It being agreed, by this treaty, that Scot-"land is to have an equivalent for what that "kingdom is obliged to contribute towards pay-"ing the debts of England, I muſt recommend "to you, that, in caſe you agree to the treaty, "you would take care to provide for the payment "of the equivalent to Scotland accordingly.

My lords and gentlemen,

"You have now an opportunity before you, "of puting the laſt hand to a happy union of the "two kingdoms; which, I hope, will be a laſt-"ing bleſſing to the whole iſland; a great addi-"tion to its wealth and power, and a firm ſecurity "to the Proteſtant religion.

"The advantages that will accrue to us all "from an union, are ſo apparent, that I will add "no more, but that I ſhall look upon it as a par-"ticular happineſs, if this great work, which has "been ſo often attempted without ſucceſs, can "be brought to perfection in my reign."

Debates in the houſe of commons about the union.

The articles of the union being ſoon after laid before both houſes, together with the Scotiſh act of ratification, and a copy of the minute-book of the proceedings of the commiſſioners, the houſe of commons took that matter into conſideration, and it was moved to addreſs her Majeſty, that the minutes of the proceedings of the commiſſioners appointed to treat of an union, in the firſt year of her reign, might be laid before them; but, upon the queſtion, it paſs'd in the negative. Sir John Packington urged, that this union, being a thing of the higheſt importance, required the moſt deliberate conſideration. That the people without doors had been, long ſince, tongue-tied, by an order of council (to forbid wagering, &c. about the union) but that ought to have no influence within thoſe walls; every gentleman ought freely to communicate his thoughts about it there; as he, for his part, ſhould: that he was abſolutely againſt this incorporating union, "becauſe it was "like marrying a woman againſt her conſent: "that this union had been carried on in Scotland, "by corruption and bribery within doors, and "by force and violence without:" but ſeveral members taking notice of this laſt bold expreſſion, as reflecting highly, not only on her Majeſty's miniſters, but on the Scotiſh commiſſioners in Scotland, he ſoftned it, by ſaying, "he was told, "that in Scotland they ſaid ſo:" adding, however, "that the promoters thereof, in thus baſely "giving up their independent conſtitution, had "actually betray'd the truſt repos'd in them; "and he appeal'd to the judgment of the houſe, "whether men of ſuch principles were fit to be "admited to ſit amongſt them; that among the "many inconveniencies and irreconcileable con-"tradictions this union was liable to, there was "this material one, that the Queen was oblig'd "by oath, to maintain the church of England, as "by law eſtabliſh'd, and bound likewiſe to main-"tain and defend the kirk of Scotland, in one "and the ſame united kingdom: that the church "of England look'd upon their eſtabliſhment as "Jure Divino, and the Scots pretended their kirk "was ſo likewiſe; and how two nations, who "claſh'd in ſo eſſential a point, could unite, he "could not ſee; and he thought it very proper to "conſult the convocation in this matter." To this it was anſwered, by colonel Henry Mordaunt, "that he did not look either upon the one "church or the other to be Jure Divino, any "farther, than that they were eſtabliſh'd by God "Almighty's permiſſion; and ſo they might "both be ſaid to be Jure Divino. As for con-"ſulting the national ſynod or convocation, in "matters of religion, this, he ſaid, any gentle-"man might do, for his private ſatisfaction; but "he thought it derogatory to the rights of the "commons of England, to adviſe, on this occa-"ſion, with an inferior aſſembly, who had no "ſhare in the legiſlature." Little was ſaid, in anſwer to this ſpeech, only ſome members moved, "that the firſt article of the treaty, which implies "a peremptory agreement to an incorporating "union, might be poſtponed; and that the houſe "ſhould proceed to the conſideration of the terms "of that intended union, contained in the other "articles." This being rejected by a great majority, ſeveral members, who were againſt the union, left the houſe; upon which the four firſt articles were read and approved, without oppoſition: and the 8th, in a commitee of the whole houſe, they went thro' and approved the remaining articles.

Q. Ann. An' 1707.

The main objection of the oppoſite party was, that the houſe was too precipitate, or, as it was expreſs'd, went poſt-haſte, in a buſineſs of the higheſt importance: to which ſir Thomas Littleton, purſuing the allegory, anſwered ſmartly enough; "that they did not ride poſt-haſte, but "a good eaſy trot; and that, for his own part, "as long as the weather was fair, the roads good, "and their horſes in heart, he was of opinion "they ought to jog on, and not take up, till they "got home.".

Proceedings thereupon in the houſe of lords.

The houſe of peers, in the mean time, brought in a bill for the ſecurity of the church of England, to be inſerted in the act of ratification, as the act for the ſecurity of the kirk of Scotland was to be, on their part. When this bill was paſs'd and ſent down to the commons, it was offer'd, by way of amendment, that ſo much of the act of the 13th Car. II. "for the well governing and re-"gulating corporations," as was not repeal'd; and alſo, that ſo much of the act of the 25th Car. II. "for preventing dangers which may happen from "Popiſh recuſants," as was unrepeal'd, might be recited in it; but it was carried againſt this amendment; as it had likewiſe with regard to the latter act, in the houſe of lords; and this was thought the harder, by the ſticklers for the church; becauſe the Scots had recited the material parts of their acts, for the eſtabliſhment of their kirk: but it was anſwered, that theſe matters were effectually and ſufficiently provided for in the bill. It was alſo propoſed, that the commitee might receive a clauſe, "that the two univerſities of this "kingdom might continue for ever, as they were "now by law eſtabliſh'd;" and another clauſe, "that the ſubjects of this kingdom ſhould be, for "ever, free of any oath, teſt or ſubſcription, within "this kingdom, contrary to, or inconſiſtent with

Q. Ann, An' 1707.

" the true Proteſtant religion, worſhip, and diſ-
" cipline of the church of England, as now by " law eſtabliſh'd;" the queſtion was put for inſerting theſe clauſes; but, notwithſtanding, it was obſerved, that the Scots had ſecured their church and univerſities in the very ſame words, they both paſs'd in the negative. Another clauſe was offer'd in favor of the convocation and clergy, but this was treated ludicrouſly, tho' the privileges of the general aſſembly of the Scotiſh kirk was expreſly reſerved and ſtipulated for. The 11th, this bill was read the third time, paſs'd without any amendment, and ſent back to the lords.

During the debates, in the commitee of the houſe of peers, the lord Haverſham made a very remarkable ſpeech, the Queen being, at the ſame time, preſent: he began by telling their lordſhips, that he hop'd it would be evident to them, with what diſpoſition he came thither, by the motion he had made laſt year, for repealing certain clauſes that were grievous to Scotland; and that he would do any thing for the benefit and good of both nations. He then obſerved, among other things;

The lord Haverſham's ſpeech.

" that theſe articles came to their lordſhips with
" the greateſt countenance of authority; and tho'
" authority, he ſaid, was the ſtrongeſt motive to " incline the will, it was the weakeſt argument in
" the world, to convince the underſtanding: that " it was the argument the church of Rome made
" uſe of for their ſuperſtitious worſhip, where there
" were ten Ave-Mary's for one Pater-noſter;
" which he thought juſt as unreaſonable, as if ten " times the application and addreſs were made to
" a ſhe-favorite as to the perſon of the ſoverein,
" which was a kind of ſtate-idolatry. He ſaid
" he was not againſt a fœderal union, an union
" in intereſt, and in the ſucceſſion: but this was " a matter of a different nature, where two na" tions, independent in their ſovereinties, that had " diſtinct laws and intereſts, and, what he could " not forget, different forms of worſhip, church-
" government and order, ſhould be united into
" one kingdom: an union, he ſaid, made up of " ſo many miſmatch'd pieces, of ſuch jarring in" congruous ingredients, that he feared it would " require a ſtanding force to keep us from falling
" aſunder, and breaking in pieces every moment."

He ſaid, by this act, " above 100 Scotiſh
" peers, and as many commoners, were excluded
" the Britiſh parliament; gentlemen, who as little " thought of being excluded a year or two ago,
" as any of their lordſhips did now; that their " rights too were as well and ſtrongly fenced and " ſecured to them, as their lordſhips preſent, by
" the fundamental laws of their kingdom, by the " claim of right, and by act of parliament; where-
" by it was made treaſon to make any alteration
" in the conſtitution of that kingdom.

" That the lords, the biſhops, had once been " voted out of the houſe by the temporal lords;
" and who knew what queſtion might ariſe here-
" after: that, for his part, he would venture his " life for the church of England, tho' he owned
" himſelf an occaſional conformiſt: but if the " lords, the biſhops, would weaken their cauſe ſo
" far, as to give up the two great points of epiſ-
" copal ordination and confirmation; if they " would approve and ratify the act, for ſecuring
" the Preſbyterian church of Scotland, as the true
" Proteſtant religion, and purity of worſhip, ac" cording to the words in the Scotiſh act; they " gave up that which had been contended for, be" tween them and the Preſbyterians, many years,
" and what had been defended by the greateſt and
" moſt learned men of the church of England;
" and he hoped their lordſhips would give ſome
" light to one who deſired inſtruction, that he " might not ignorantly do any thing to their pre" judice in this matter."

Q. Ann, An' 1707.

His lordſhip added; " that the act for ſecuring
" their Preſbyterian church-government, and ge" neral aſſemblies of their kirk, ſeemed to him
" like thoſe little clouds, in a warm calm ſummer's
" day, that were generally the ſeeds and attrac-
" tives of approaching tempeſts and thunder. That " he ſaw no neceſſity for this incorporating union,
" ſince Scotland had offered to come into the ſuc-
" ceſſion without it; and he thought it a very " dangerous experiment to both nations."

Notwithſtanding theſe and other oppoſitions, in both houſes, which however were not very conſiderable, the " act of ratification of the union," including an act " for ſecuring the Proteſtant reli" gion, and Preſbyterian church-government in " Scotland," and an act " for ſecuring of the " church of England, as by law eſtabliſhed," paſs'd both houſes, in a very ſhort time: ſeveral lords having nevertheleſs entered their proteſts, in the houſe of peers, ſome againſt all the articles in general, and others againſt ſome in particular only. This act having, I ſay, paſs'd both houſes, received the royal aſſent, together with ſeveral other acts, on the 4th of March, on which occaſion her Majeſty made the following ſpeech to both houſes:

The act of ratification of the union paſſes both houſes:

And receives the royal aſſent.

My lords and gentlemen,

" It is with the greateſt ſatisfaction that I have " given my aſſent to a bill for uniting England
" and Scotland, into one kingdom.

" I conſider this union as a matter of the great-
" eſt importance to the wealth, ſtrength and
" ſafety of the whole iſland, and, at the ſame
" time, as a work of ſo much difficulty and
" nicety, in its own nature, that, till now, all at" tempts which have been made towards it, in " the courſe of above a hundred years, have " proved ineffectual: and therefore I make no " doubt, but it will be remembered, and ſpoke of " hereafter, to the honor of thoſe who have been
" inſtrumental in bringing it to ſuch a happy con-
" cluſion. I deſire and expect from all my ſub-
" jects of both nations, that from henceforth they " act with all poſſible reſpect and kindneſs to one
" another; that ſo it may appear to all the world,
" they have hearts diſpoſed to become one people."

The Queen's ſpeech to both houſes, on that occaſion.

" This will be a great pleaſure to me, and will " make us all quickly ſenſible of the good effect
" of this union.

" And I cannot but look upon it as a particular
" happineſs, that, in my reign, ſo full a proviſion
" is made for the peace and quiet of my people,
" and for the ſecurity of our religion, by ſo firm
" an eſtabliſhment of the Proteſtant ſucceſſion
" throughout Great-Britain."

Gentlemen of the houſe of commons,

" I take this occaſion to remind you of making
" effectual proviſion for the payment of the equi" valent for Scotland, within the time appointed " by this act; and, I am perſuaded, you will
" ſhew as much readineſs in this particular, as you
" have done in all the parts of this great work.

My lords and gentlemen,

" The ſeaſon of the year being now pretty far
" advanced, I hope you will continue the ſame zeal,
" which has appeared throughout this ſeſſion, in " diſpatching what yet remains unfiniſhed of the " public buſineſs before you."

The 11th, both houſes attended her Majeſty with an addreſs, in the following words:

Addreſs of both houſes, on this occaſion.

" We your Majeſty's moſt dutiful ſubjects, the " lords ſpiritual and temporal, and commons in " parliament aſſembled, return our moſt humble
" thanks to your Majeſty, for your gracious ac-
" ceptation of the ſhare we had in bringing the " treaty of an union, between your two kingdoms

" of

Q. ANN, AN' 1707.

" of England and Scotland, to a happy conclu-
" ſion: a work that, after ſo many fruitleſs in-
" deavors, ſeems deſign'd by Providence to add
" new luſtre to the glories of your Majeſty's reign.
" The ſucceſs of your arms having ſecured us from " all attempts from abroad, and the care your Ma-
" jeſty has taken of the firm eſtabliſhment of the " Proteſtant ſucceſſion, having given a great and
" laſting ſecurity to our religion, as, in the church
" of England, by law eſtabliſh'd, we beg leave
" humbly to aſſure your Majeſty, that our indea-
" vors ſhall never be wanting to ſupport your go" vernment at home, and ſo to eſtabliſh the peace
" of this iſland, that no diſpute may remain among " us, but how to acknowledge, in the moſt dutiful
" manner, the auſpicious conduct of ſo great and
" ſo renowned a Queen.

To this addreſs, her Majeſty anſwered:

Her Majeſty's anſwer.

My lords and gentlemen,

" I am glad to find your opinion ſo perfectly
" agrees with mine, concernion this union: you " cannot do me a more acceptable ſervice, than
" by uſing your utmoſt indeavors to improve all
" the good conſequences of it."

The remaining part of this ſeſſion was ſpent in voting a ſupply for the payment of the equivalent to Scotland, in finding ways and means, and in preparing bills to prevent the runing of forein goods to Scotland, and their importing them duty-free into England, after the 1ſt of May, when the union was to take place; but the houſes diſagreeing about the expedients propoſed for the latter, thoſe bills came to nothing: upon which, the Queen came to the houſe of peers, the 24th of April, and having given the royal aſſent, to ſuch acts as lay ready for that purpoſe, her Majeſty made the following ſpeech to both houſes:

The Queen's ſpeech at proroguing the parliament.

My lords and gentlemen,

" I return you my hearty thanks for the great " zeal and affection which you have ſhewn for my
" ſervice and the public good, in the ſeveral af" fairs which have been before you, eſpecially
" in that of the union with Scotland; which I " doubt not, will prove a laſting happineſs to
" this iſland.

Gentlemen of the houſe of commons,

" I am to thank you, in particular, for the great
" diſpatch you have made in providing the largeſt
" and moſt effectual ſupplies that have ever been " given to the crown, for the current ſervice, in " any one ſeſſion of parliament: I am very much " concerned, that the public occaſions require the " raiſing of ſuch great ſums from my people: I
" will take care they ſhall be applied to the uſes
" for which they are given; and, I hope, by
" GOD's bleſſing, we may obtain advantages
" from them, anſwerable to ſo great an expence.

My lords and gentlemen,

" It is proper for me, before we part, to com" municate to you, that I think it expedient, that
" the lords of parliament of England, ſhould
" be members of the reſpective houſes of the firſt
" parliament of Great-Britain, for, and on the " part of England: and therefore I intend, with-
" in the time limited, to publiſh a proclamation
" for that purpoſe, purſuant to the powers given " me by the acts of parliament of both king-
" doms, ratifying the treaty of union: and, after
" we have ſo fully compleated this great work,
" I aſſure myſelf, that, when you return to your
" ſeveral countries, you will omit no opportunity
" of making my ſubjects ſenſible of the ſecurity,
" and the other great and laſting benefits they
" may reaſonably expect from this happy union.

" This will conduce very much to make it prove
" ſo, and be a good preparation to the ſucceſs of " our next meeting; when, I hope, we ſhall all
" join our ſincere and hearty indeavors, to pro" mote the welfare and proſperity of Great-Bri" tain."

Q. ANN, AN' 1707.

The parliament prorogued.

After this, the lord-keeper, by her Majeſty's command, prorogued the parliament, till Wedneſday the 30th of the ſame month of April, that being the longeſt day they could be prorogued to as a parliament of England; and the day preceding it a proclamation was iſſued, declaring the lords and commons of the preſent parliament, to be members of the firſt parliament of Great-Britain, for England.

Acts paſſed.

The principal acts paſs'd this ſeſſion, beſide thoſe already mention'd, were, 1. " An act for the " better preventing eſcapes out of the Queen's " bench and fleet priſons. 2. An act for the " better preſervation of the game. 3. An act for " the better recruiting the land-forces and ma" rines. 4. An act for the incouragement of the " royal Luſtring company. 5. An act relating to
" bankrupts. 6. An act for diſcharging ſmall
" livings from the firſt fruits and tenths. 7. An " act for ſecuring her Majeſty's purchaſe of the " Cotton-library. 8. An act for incouraging the " diſcovery of houſe-breakers, &c. by day or " night. 9. An act for continuing an act for
" puniſhing mutiny, nd deſertion. 10. An act
" to repeal all the laws prohibiting the importation
" of forein lace made with thread. 11. An act
" for raiſing the militia for the year 1707. And,
" 12. An act for continuing ſeveral laws therein
" mention'd, relating to the poor, &c." with ſeveral other acts of leſs moment.

During this ſeſſion of parliament, the convocation was aſſembled as uſual: but upon the lower houſe ſhewing an inclination to apply againſt the union, they were prorogued, by virtue of her Majeſty's command, in a letter to the archbiſhop of Canterbury, and nothing worthy the reader's attention happen'd in that aſſembly.

Thankſgiving for the union.

The union commencing the 1ſt of May, that day was obſerved as a thankſgiving; when her Majeſty went to St. Paul's, in the uſual ſtate, and a ſermon was preach'd on the occaſion by the biſhop of Oxford. Her Majeſty likewiſe, on this account, received congratulatory addreſſes from moſt of the cities, towns and corporations in England; but it was obſervable, that tho' the univerſity of Cambridge was one of the forwardeſt on this topic, that of Oxford never addreſs'd at all; nor did hardly any thing of that nature appear from Scotland.

Promotions.

The 4th, the lord Cowper was conſtituted lord-chancellor; the 10th, there was a promotion of general officers: and, on the 20th, James duke of Montroſs, James earl of Seafield, John earl of Mar, and Hugh earl of Loudon, noblemen of North-Britain, were ſworn of the privy-council.

Proclamation for holding the firſt parliament of Great-Britain

The 5th of June, her Majeſty's proclamation was publiſh'd, declaring her pleaſure for holding the firſt parliament of Great-Britain, at Weſtminſter, on the 23d of October. And, the next day, commiſſioners were appointed for managing the equivalent due to Scotland, according to the treaty of union.

The 23d, at a council held at Windſor, her Majeſty was pleas'd to make a new appointment (on occaſion of the union) of the lord chancellor, and lord-high treaſurer, who, for ſome time, had left their places of poſt, at the council-table, and ſat only according to their rank of peerage; but now, her Majeſty was pleas'd, after reading a public inſtrument, to re-inveſt them with the titles of lord-chancellor, and lord-high treaſurer of Great-Britain, and new patents paſs'd the ſeal for that purpoſe. In like manner, his Royal-Highneſs Prince

Q. Ann, An' 1707.

Prince George of Denmark, took a new oath, in the court of chancery, as lord-high admiral of Great-Britain, &c. and, by a new commiſſion, appointed his council.

Affairs of Ireland.

Before I proceed to give an account of forein affairs, I ſhall juſt mention thoſe of Ireland. The earl of Pembroke, lord-preſident of the council, having been appointed, on the 27th of April, lord-lieutenant of Ireland, his excellency arrived at Dublin the 24th of June. The 7th of July the parliament met, and his excellency made a ſpeech to them, in which among other things, having recommended unanimity among themſelves, as the means to attain to the bleſſing of a future poſterity and ſecurity, he told them, "that her Majeſty conſidering the number of "Papiſts in Ireland, would be glad of any ex-"pedient for ſtrengthening the intereſt of her "Proteſtant ſubjects in that kingdom; and that "he did not doubt but they would make proviſion "of the neceſſary ſupplies for payment of the "army, as well as for defraying the charges of "the government." The lords and commons having preſented their reſpective addreſſes of congratulation, on the accompliſhment of the union between England and Scotland, and of thanks to the lord-lieutenant, on the 10th of July, the commons ordered heads of a bill to be brought in "for explaining and amending an act to pre-"vent the farther growth of Popery:" which bill was however afterwards rejected, and another preſented in the room of it, "for the better ſe-"curing the Proteſtant religion and intereſt in "that kingdom, againſt Popery. The 14th they appointed a commitee to inſpect the public accounts, and the next day unanimouſly voted a a ſupply. The 28th, the commitee of the whole houſe went on the ſupply, and reſolved, 1. "That "the funds formerly granted by parliament, and "the revenue of the kingdom, were ſufficient to "ſupport the government, and diſcharge the public "debts, to and for Michaelmas, 1707. 2. That "the ſupply granted to her Majeſty, be a ſum "ſufficient to make good the neceſſary branches "of the eſtabliſhment, from Michaelmas 1707, "to and for Midſummer 1709." The 4th of Auguſt, the commons reſolved "to grant 135,000 l. to "her Majeſty, for the ſupport of the neceſſary bran-"ches of the eſtabliſhment, from Michaelmas, "1707, to Midſummer, 1709." Till the 24th of October, was ſpent in the preparing ſeveral as well public as private acts, and in ſundry interruptions and adjournments, occaſion'd by ſeveral bills being ſent to England, for the royal approbation. That day, the lord-lieutenant went in ſtate to the houſe of peers, and having given the royal aſſent to ſuch acts as were ready, made a ſpeech to both houſes, in which he told them; "That he had ſeen, with "great ſatisfaction, their chearfulneſs in the pro-"ſecution of her Majeſty's ſervice, and, in par-"ticular, the unanimity of the commons, in "granting the neceſſary ſupplies for the eſtabliſh-"ment."

The 30th, the lord-lieutenant came again to the houſe of peers, and having given the royal ſanction to the remaining public and private acts, made a ſpeech to both houſes. This done, the lord-chancellor prorogued the parliament to the 6th of May next inſuing, and, about a month after, the lord-lieutenant returned to Great-Britain. I come now to forein affairs.

The conſtant ſeries of prodigious ſucceſſes, in almoſt all parts, with which the confederate arms were attended, the laſt campain, made it generally believed, that the King of France would never be able to retrieve ſo many and ſo great misfortunes, and would ſoon be obliged to lay aſide his pre-tenſions to Spain, to obtain a peace, which his ſubjects ſtood in great need of, and which they implor'd of him, in the moſt ſolemn manner; but, notwithſtanding the great hopes conceived, at this time, the year I am now entering upon will not furniſh us with ſo much matter for triumph as the foregoing; on the contrary, we ſhall ſee the enemy, who was look'd upon as totally overwhelm'd, raiſing his head again, and triumphing, at leaſt in ſome places, in his turn.

Q. Ann, An' 1707.

The duke of Marlborough goes to Holland.

The duke of Marlborough, who, in the foregoing years of her Majeſty's reign, made ſo ſhining a figure by his glorious military atchievements, beſpeaks our attention this year, chiefly by his important negociations. For which he had as happy a talent, and as much ſkill and ſagacity, as conduct and bravery when at the head of an army. The plan for the operations of the campain being concerted, as far as they could be at London, his grace departed thence for Holland; but having been detained nine or ten days, by contrary winds, at Margate, he imbark'd there, the 2d of April in the evening, deſigning to reach Oſtend; the wind however changing, he landed at the Briel, the 16th, N. S. at night.

Acquaints the States with his deſign of going into Saxony.

The next day, the duke arrived at the Hague, where he had ſeveral conferences with the forein miniſters and the deputies of the States, on the affairs of the preſent juncture, and, among other things, he told the latter; "That the troubles of "Saxony occaſioning a great diſtraction in the "Empire, which brought infinite prejudice to the "common cauſe, the Queen, his miſtreſs, had "thought fit, to ſend him thither, to pay a com-"pliment to the King of Sweden, and indeavor "to ingage him to remove the juſt jealouſies, his "long ſtay, in the heart of Germany, gave to "ſome of the high allies. For which purpoſe, "he had the neceſſary powers from her Majeſty, "and deſired to have the ſame from the States."

Which they approve of.

The penſionary having, the next day, acquainted the States of Holland and Weſt-Friezland, with the neceſſity of the duke of Marlborough's journey, the matter was thought of ſo great importance to the common cauſe, that they readily concur'd in thoſe meaſures, and his grace ſet out the ſame evening for Leipſick, by the way of Hanover: while monſ. d'Auverquerque, in the mean time, went for Bruſſels, to aſſemble the confederate troops againſt the duke's return.

The eyes of all Europe on the King of Sweden.

The eyes of all Europe were now on the King of Sweden, who had, with his victorious army, poſſeſs'd himſelf of Saxony, reduced Auguſtus to the neceſſity of making an inglorious peace, with the loſs of his crown, which he had been obliged to renounce in favor of King Staniſlaus. The King of Sweden was in the heart of Germany, in a formidable poſture, with an army fluſh'd with ſucceſs; which, tho' he had concluded a peace with Auguſtus, and had only the Muſcovites, and a ſmall party of Poles to incounter with, he was recruiting in all the neighboring provinces of the Empire, and equiping, in the moſt powerful manner, with the ſpoils of Saxony. This gave great apprehenſions to the allies, and indeed their jealouſies ſeem'd to be but too well-grounded.

The allies under apprehenſions of him.

The 26th, in the morning, his grace arrived at Hall, a famous univerſity belonging to the King of Pruſſia, about five German miles diſtant from Leipſick. Here his grace was met by mr. Robinſon, her Majeſty's envoy-extraordinary, by count Zinzendorf the Imperial envoy, and by monſieur Cranenburg, the Dutch miniſter. After dinner, his grace received the compliments of the magiſtrates and of the univerſity; and then proceeded, accompanied by mr. Robinſon, and monſ. Cranenburg, to Alt-Ranſtadt, about two German miles

Q. ANN. AN' 1707.

The duke of Marlorough arrives at the King of Sweden's quarters near Leipſick.

miles from Leipſick, where the King of Sweden had his head-quarters. He went directly to count Piper's quarters, which were not far from thence, where he had a conference with that prime miniſter, for about an hour, and then retired to the quarters the King of Sweden had ordered to be prepared for him, at Tauche, a village about two German miles diſtant from Leipſick, and not far from thoſe of the King's.

Has audience of the King of Sweden.

The 27th of April, in the morning, the duke of Marlborough was complimented on his arrival, by the miniſters and general officers; at half an hour paſt eight, he went in a coach of count Piper's to Alt-Ranſtadt, and, about ten, had his firſt audience of the King, which laſted about two hours; when his Majeſty received him with all demonſtrations of eſteem and honor. He preſented to his Swediſh Majeſty a letter from the Queen of Great-Britain, and, at delivering it, made him the following compliment:

His compliment to the King.

Sir, "I preſent to your Majeſty a letter, not "from the chancery; but from the heart of the "Queen, my miſtreſs, and written with her own "hand. Had not her ſex prevented it, ſhe would "have croſs'd the ſea, to ſee a Prince admired by "the whole univerſe. I am, in this particular, "more happy than the Queen; and I wiſh I could "ſerve ſome campains under ſo great a general "as your Majeſty, that I might learn what I yet "want to know, in the art of war."

Some authors call the genuineneſs of this ſpeech in queſtion, and think it too mean an adulation to proceed from the mouth of one of the duke of Marlborough's rank and experience: but I rather take it to be an evidence of his ſkill in mankind. He knew the character of Charles, and his foible, and could not have ſuited his words more to the purpoſe. They pleas'd not only the King, but his whole army, who ador'd him, as much as ever Frenchman did his grand Monarch. At leaſt, I heard the very words in the mouths of his officers, for many months afterwards.

Very acceptable to his Majeſty.

This well-timed compliment, I ſay, was exceeding agreeable to the King of Sweden, and, no doubt, contributed not a little to incline him in favor both of the duke's perſon and errand.

The ſubſtance of the King's anſwer to his grace's ſpeech was as follows:

The King's anſwer.

"The Queen of Great-Britain's letter, and your "perſon, are both very acceptable to me, and I "ſhall always have the utmoſt regard for the in"terpoſition of her Majeſty of Great-Britain, and "the intereſts of the grand alliance. It is likewiſe "much againſt my will, if I have been obliged to "give the leaſt umbrage to any of the parties in"gaged in it: but your excellency cannot but be "convinced, that I had juſt cauſe to come into this "country with my troops. On the other hand, "you may aſſure the Queen, my ſiſter, that my "deſign is to depart from hence, as ſoon as I have "obtained the ſatisfaction I demand; but no ſooner. "However I ſhall do nothing that can tend to "the prejudice of the common cauſe, in general, "or to the Proteſtant religion in particular; of "which I ſhall always glory to be a zealous pro"tector."

The duke had the honor to dine with his Majeſty in public; and after dinner he had a ſecond audience on buſineſs, at which were preſent count Piper, and monſieur Harmelin, the two chief of his Swediſh Majeſty's miniſters, together with mr. Robinſon. And the audience being over, the duke ſpent the evening in viſits.

Q. ANN, AN' 1707.

The duke has his audience of leave.

The duke having had ſeveral conferences with the Swediſh and other miniſters, and having waited on King Auguſtus, at Leipſick, had, on the 29th, his audience of leave of the King of Sweden. At this audience, the duke had ſufficient aſſurances of what had been before concerted with count Piper, and therefore left the King, extreamly well ſatisfied, not only with his reception at that court, but with his negociations. During this audience, King Staniſlaus came in, and was complimented by his grace, who however could enter into no farther conference with him; becauſe the Queen had not acknowledg'd him as King of Poland. The duke ſoon after took his leave, and went to Leipſick, from whence, without making any ſtay, he proceeded on his journey to Berlin.

Succeſs of his negociation.

Has an opportunity of complimenting King Staniſlaus.

The ſucceſs of the duke of Marlborough's negociations, at the court of Sweden, was generally thought to be owing, not only to the perſonal eſteem which the King expreſs'd to have for his grace, or to the ſoothing and cheriſhing his natural inclination, which luckily happen'd to chime with the duke's wiſhes; but likewiſe to a large ſum of mony, opportunely given to count Piper, who, in return, perſuaded his maſter to that march, which remov'd him to ſo great a diſtance, as freed the allies from any farther apprehenſions on his account (1).

The campain in Flanders,

The duke of Marlborough having, in his return from Saxony, been at the courts of Berlin and Hanover, and having given an account of the ſucceſs of his negociation, to the States-general at the Hague, joined the confederate army, the 21ſt of May, it being then incamp'd, with the right at Bellingen, and the left at Lembeck, having Hall in the rear. Upon advice that the French, who had been drawing together about the ſame time, continued quiet in their lines, the duke of Marlborough advanced nearer to them, in order to meet them half way, for a battle, which they had given out they would offer the confederates; or, if they declined it, to lay ſiege, either to Mons or Charleroy: but, on the 24th, his grace received unexpected information, that the enemy were come out of their lines, and were incamp'd at Haine, St. Paul and Peronne, where the Elector of Bavaria, and the duke de Vendôme, took a review of their army, the 25th. The confederate army, hereupon advanced towards them. The 27th, the duke of Marlborough, accompanied by ſeveral generals, advanced with twelve ſquadrons of horſe and dragoons, to view the ground, and the avenues to the enemy's camp: and, upon intelligence, that they were incamp'd in the plain of Flerus, a council of war was held, in which it was reſolved to march to Nivelle, in order to attack them. Accordingly, a detachment was ſent to view the paſs at Ronquieres, thro' which they were to march. The generals, who were ſent thither reported, that the enemy ſuſpecting the deſign of the allies, had made a detachment to ſecure that important poſt, and would undoubtedly advance, upon the firſt motion of the confederates, to hinder them from marching thro' it; or elſe, would charge the firſt troops which ſhould paſs, with ſo much advantage, that it was not thought adviſable to move that way.

The confederates reſolve to attack the enemy.

(1) This, as well as ſome other circumſtances above mention'd, are either flatly contradicted, or otherwiſe related, in Voltaire's hiſtory of Charles XII. It may therefore be neceſſary to obſerve, that what is here alledg'd is on the beſt authority, and chiefly on perſonal knowledge, I having been an eye-witneſs to moſt of theſe tranſactions. And for the ſum of mony ſaid to be given to count Piper, the ſuppoſition is grounded upon a much better foundation than common fame. To enter into a diſcuſſion of theſe matters cannot be expected here: but thoſe who are curious to be farther inform'd, will find a very exact and circumſtantial account of this whole negociation, in Lediard's life of Marlborough. Vol. II. from p. 161. to p. 179. inclusive.

Q. Ann, An' 1707.

But they prevent it.

This report being maturely weigh'd, in a council of war, and, beſide, the generals wiſely conſidering, that the enemy had drain'd all their gariſons, and got together all their forces, probably with no other view, but to plunder the open, great and wealthy cities of Brabant, particularly Louvain and Bruſſels, as ſoon as they ſhould find the confederates ingaged in any ſiege; which they might have done in leſs time than the bringing up of the heavy artillery and ammunition would require; all theſe things, I ſay, conſidered, it was reſolved to march back to Bruſſels.

This prudent reſolution was executed with ſo much aſſiduity, that the 1ſt of June, the army was poſted at Meldert, the enemy not daring to venture an ingagement, tho' they were ſuperior by thirty-four ſquadrons and twenty-four battalions; and ſo both armies continued above two months, in their reſpective camps, during which time, no action paſs'd between them worth mentioning.

The duke of Marlborough reſolves to attack the enemy.

At length, upon certain advice that the French had detach'd thirteen battalions, and twelve ſquadrons, from their army, towards Provence, the duke of Marlborough, in concert with monſ. d'Auverquerque, and the deputies of the States, reſolved to march from Meldert, towards Genap, in order to attack the enemy, with leſs diſadvantage, in their fortified camp at Gemblours. Accordingly, the 9th of Auguſt, N. S. the diſpoſition was made for the army to paſs the Deule, at the abby of Florival; and, late the ſame evening, orders were given for the march of the heavy baggage towards Bruſſels, and the laying of four bridges over the Deule. At the ſame time, the troops which were incamp'd near Louvain, under major-general Week, and the regiment of Bothmar, were ordered to march to Florival, and the battalions in Bruſſels, to advance to Waterloo. The 10th, in the morning, the artillery was commanded to paſs the Deule at St. Joriſwert, and, about three in the afternoon, the duke of Wirtemberg march'd, with fourteen ſquadrons, to Pieterbais, with orders to ſtay there till morning, to obſerve the enemy, and afterwards to make the rear-guard. At four, the whole army decamp'd from Meldert, and, according to the diſpoſition that had been made, paſs'd the Deule at Florival; and, marching all night, arrived, the 11th, at break of day, about the heights of Waveren, where they made a ſhort halt, and then continued their march towards Genap, where they incamp'd, having made a march of ſeven leagues. The enemy no ſooner received advice that the duke of Wirtemberg was advancing with his detachment to Pieterbais, and that the army of the allies was in motion, than they were extreamly alarm'd, and immediately ordered their troops to arms. They likewiſe cut down ſeveral trees in the roads and paſſages which led to their camp. About midnight, they got certain information which way the allies were moving; whereupon, they begun their march, with all imaginable precipitation, towards Flerus and Heſpenay, intending to be that evening at Goſſeliers, and take poſſeſſion of the ſtrong camp at Pieton. The 12th, in the morning early, the confederate generals received advice, that the French army had made but a ſhort halt at Goſſeliers, and were advanced to Seneff about midnight, the Elector of Bavaria having taken his head-quarters in the caſtle of Vanderbeck, and the duke de Vendôme in the farm-houſe of Rel, between Vanderbeck and Seneff, having the river Pieton before them.

Diſpoſitions made for that purpoſe.

The confederate army decamps.

The enemy retires with precipitation.

The duke of Marlborough and monſ. d'Auverquerque, having confer'd together, upon the receit of this advice, it was reſolved to march directly to Nivelle, in order to attack the enemy; and accordingly the army march'd about one in the afternoon, and came into that camp the ſame evening. It was too late to attack the enemy that night, the neceſſary diſpoſitions were therefore made to do it in the morning; and as they had reaſon to believe that the enemy would attempt to retire, in the night, in order to gain the camp at Cambron, all poſſible diligence was uſed to prevent their effecting it. To this end, count de Tilly, with forty ſquadrons of horſe and dragoons, which were commanded, under him, by the earl of Albermarle, and the major-generals count d'Erbach and Roſs, and a detachment of between five and 6000 grenadiers, commanded by lieutenant-general Scholten and major-general Zoutland, was ordered to poſt himſelf between the two armies, with the left at Corneliz, and the right towards the road from Bink to Nivelle; and, in caſe the enemy decamp'd, to fall upon their rear, and keep them in play, till the whole army could come up. Theſe troops, notwithſtanding they march'd with all poſſible diſpatch, could not reach their reſpective poſts before midnight. The French, in the mean time, foreſeeing what was the duke of Marlborough's deſign, and perceiving that it would not be poſſible for them to avoid an ingagement if they continued in their camp till the morning, reſolved to decamp in the night; that they might, if poſſible, avoid coming to any action with the army of the allies, the valor and experience of whoſe generals, and the courage and activity of their ſoldiers, they very well knew and dreaded.

Q. Ann, An' 1707.

The duke of Marlborough purſues them.

Thus the confederates continued to purſue, and the enemy to retreat before them, till the latter, at length, retired under the cannon of Liſle, and into their lines: and thus was the remainder of the campain ſpent in fruitleſs attempts to bring the enemy to a battle.

The campain ends without any ſucceſs.

The duke of Marlborough finding it therefore impoſſible to bring the cautious duke de Vendôme to an ingagement, their camp being cover'd with the Scheld, and with their intrenchments, his grace left the camp at Helchin, the 4th of October, N. S. and went for the Hague. He arrived there the 6th, at nine in the morning, and immediately made a viſit to the grand penſionary, and monſ. de Slingerland, ſecretary of the council of ſtate. The ſame afternoon his grace had a conference with the deputies of the States-general, wherein he communicated the orders he had received from the Queen of Great-Britain, his miſtreſs, to repair to Franckfort, and to confer with the Electors of Mentz and Hanover, about the operations of the next campain. The next morning his grace had another conference with thoſe deputies, and, in the evening, ſet out for the army, to give the neceſſary orders for their marching into winter-quarters, which they, as well as the French army, did very ſoon after.

The duke of Marlborough goes to the Hague.

Confers with the deputies of the States.

Returns to the army.

The 15th, the duke of Marlborough ſet out on his journey to Germany, and the 21ſt reach'd Franckfort. His grace found the Elector of Hanover (our late moſt gracious ſoverein King George I.) who had been prevailed upon to command the army on the Rhine, this ſummer, and at whoſe inſtances this interview was appointed, arrived before him, as was likewiſe the Elector of Mentz.

Arrives at Frankfort.

They had ſeveral conferences together, but nothing could be concluded till count Wratiſlau, the Emperor's plenipotentiary, arrived there the 27th; nor indeed then neither; becauſe the latter declared he was not fully inſtructed: whereupon the conferences broke off, and, on the 29th, the two Electors

Has ſeveral conferences with the Electors of Mentz and Hanover.

Q. Ann, An' 1707.

tors of Mentz and Hanover ſet out from Frankfort, the firſt for his reſidence, and the ſecond for the Imperial army; the duke of Marlborough departing, at the ſame time, for the Hague, whither he was attended by count Wratiſlau, and arrived there the 3d of November.

Returns to the Hague.

The duke, during his ſtay at the Hague, communicated to the States-general what paſs'd at Franckfort; and their deputies having had ſeveral conferences with the Imperial miniſters, their High-mightineſſes reſolved to uſe all poſſible means to ingage the Empire to make greater efforts for the future than they had hitherto done. In order to this, they wrote a preſſing letter to the diet of Ratiſbon, wherein, after having repreſented the great deficiencies and delays of the Germanic body, from time to time, in the performance of what they were by treaty bound to, and the evil conſequences which had hitherto attended them, they concluded by ſaying; "that their High-mightineſſes would continue to contribute their utmoſt, "towards bringing about the great work they "had, jointly with them, undertaken; but that "they expected the like from his Imperial Ma-"jeſty, and the Empire, ſeeing they were obliged "to it by their alliances and common intereſt; "and in caſe of non-performance, their High-"mightineſſes proteſted againſt all the ill conſe-"quences thereof."

And returns to England.

The duke of Marlborough having concluded ſeveral weighty affairs with the States-general, imbark'd for England, and came to St. James's the 7th of November, O. S.

Having thus given a brief account of the little ſucceſs we had this year in Flanders; let us now ſee how matters went in other parts, and we ſhall find that none was more ſenſible of this fatal turn of affairs as Spain, by the loſs of the battle of Almanza. The grand deſign of the allies, in the ſouthern parts of Europe (excepting that of Naples, which ſucceeded, and for which the Imperial court neglected every thing elſe) was the ſiege of Toulon: but as all theſe tranſactions had ſome connection with our maritime affairs, I ſhall interſperſe them with the account I am now going to give of them.

Proceeedings of the confederate fleet.

The confederate fleet, under the command of ſir Cloudeſly Shovel, ſailed the 11th of January, with the land-forces on board, from Liſbon to Alicant, where they arrived the 28th; and the troops (which having been expoſed to all the inconveniencies that attend long voyages, for above ſix months, were reduced to ſeven thouſand men) being landed, left Alicant again the 17th of February, and returned to Liſbon the 11th of the next month.

Sir George Byng detached with ſupplies for the army

There being, at this time, great want of mony, cloaths, proviſions, and other neceſſaries, in the army in Spain, the admiral ordered ſir George Byng to proceed to Alicant with ſupplies, who accordingly ſailed the 30th of March. When he came off of cape St. Vincent, he received the melancholy news of the defeat of our army at the battle of Almanza; and therefore, purſuant to the lord Galway's deſire, he proceeded for Tortoſa in Catalonia (whither his lordſhip propoſed to retreat with the poor remains of his army) taking with him the ſick and wounded men, at Denia, Gandia and Valencia, which imployed almoſt the whole month of April; after which he proceeded for Barcelona, where ſir Cloudeſly Shovel joined him the 20th of May: but before I proceed to give a farther account of the tranſactions of our fleet, it will be neceſſary to relate the ill ſucceſſes of our land-forces in Spain.

Sir Cloudeſly Shovel joins him.

The campain in Spain.

It had been reſolved, in a general council of war, held at Valencia in December 1706, on the operations of the inſuing campain, that the allies ſhould unite all their forces, and act in one body, in order to penetrate into Caſtile again, by the way of Arragon, where the paſſage of the Tagus was moſt practicable. King Charles however receiving intelligence of the great re-inforcements that either had joined, or were about to join the duke of Berwick from France, alter'd his mind, and march'd, with two or three regiments of the army, into Catalonia, in order to defend that province from the attacks of the French from Rouſillon. He, at the ſame time, propos'd it, as his advice to the earl of Galway and the marquis das Minas, to diſpoſe the army in ſuch a manner as to cover the frontiers of Arragon and Valencia, from the inſults of the enemy, till ſupplies came from Italy or England. But theſe generals not reliſhing this advice, aſſembled their army, which ſcarce amounted to 16,000 men, and marched to the frontiers of Caſtile, where they deſtroyed ſome of the enemy's magazines; after which they returned and laid ſiege to the town of Villena in Valencia. Before they had made any great advances in this ſiege, they got intelligence, that the duke of Berwick had aſſembled his army near Almanza, being at leaſt one third more numerous than the allies, and that he expected to be joined, in a few days, by the duke of Orleans, with 8000 men more from France; upon which it was reſolved, in a council of war, the 24th of April, to raiſe the ſiege of Villena, and advance to fight the duke of Berwick at Almanza, before he ſhould be joined by the duke of Orleans. Accordingly, the earl of Galway and the marquis das Minas immediately began their march, and arrived in the plains of Almanza the next day about noon, where they found the enemy drawn up in battalia, ready to receive them; whereupon the confederate generals formed their line of battle alſo, about a mile from the enemy, and, to ſupply their want of cavalry, interlined a brigade of foot with each wing of horſe. The earl of Galway was ſo complaiſant (for which he was afterwards cenſured) to ſuffer the Portugueze to take the right (or poſt of honor) from the Engliſh; and having placed himſelf at the head of the Engliſh dragoons, on the left, marched, about three in the afternoon, to attack the enemy's right wing of horſe. The Portugueſe were ordered to take the charge, as it ſhould come to them gradually from the left, but not before the Engliſh and Dutch were actually ingaged, who preſſing on to come to a cloſe ingagement, little execution was done on either ſide by the cannon. As ſoon as the left wing was advanced within one hundred paces of the enemy's horſe, they likewiſe advanced out of their line to meet the charge, and the conflict on both ſides was obſtinate and bloody. The enemy, by the weight of their ſquadrons, forced the allies to retreat fifty paces, but Southwell's and Wade's regiments of foot coming up, gave fire upon the enemy's flank and rear, and the cavalry renewing, at the ſame time, their charge in the front, drove them, in diſorder, thro' their own lines, with a very great ſlaughter. By this time, the Engliſh and Dutch foot, under the command of lieutenant-general Erle and baron Freſhem, were ſharply ingaged in the center, and broke thro' the enemy's firſt and ſecond lines, bearing down all before them as far as the walls of Almanza; but this ſucceſs did not laſt long; for the enemy's ſquadrons of the ſecond line fell in upon their flank, and forced back the infantry of the allies with great loſs: and colonel Hill's and the lord Mark Ker's regiments, who had been interlined with the horſe of the ſecond line, marched up and attacked ſome Spaniſh regiments, to favor their retreat.

Q. Ann, An' 1707.

The battle of Almanza.

The enemy obſerving that the cavalry of the confederate's

Q. Ann, An' 1707.

confederate's right did not advance with their left wing, detached ſome ſquadrons, who marched boldly to attack the right of the Portugueſe, and their line followed ſlowly to ſuſtain them, but did not come time enough to ingage; for the detached ſquadrons, with their firſt charge, broke the Portugueſe, and the whole right wing made off and left their infantry, who were ſurrounded, and moſt of them either killed or taken priſoners. Two Portugueſe battalions, which were poſted at ſome diſtance, when their cavalry was retiring, gave them a volly, and killed and wounded ſeveral of their own men, miſtaking them for the enemy. The Spaniſh forces continued charging on the left, with freſh ſquadrons, but without ſucceſs; for the horſe, both Engliſh and Portugueſe, favored by the fire of the Engliſh battalions which were interlined, broke the enemy, and drove fifteen or ſixteen of their ſquadrons in the rear of their line, whence they could not be brought to charge again.

At length, finding their indeavors to break the left of the confederates with horſe only, fruitleſs, they ſent for nine battalions, and drew them up before their front line of horſe, in oppoſition to the Engliſh brigade of foot, which conſiſted of Southwell's, Blood's, Wade's, and Mountjoy's regiments, and were re-inforced by lieutenant-general Steward's regiment, from the rear-line. They brought up, at the ſame time, ſeveral freſh ſquadrons, to make another charge, on the left wing of the confederate horſe, which had ſuffered very much, brigadier Carpenter being the only commanding officer who remained unhurt. In this condition they were not able to ſupport the charge, but gave way; and, at the ſame time, the nine French battalions charged the Engliſh brigade of foot, in front and flank, and intirely broke them. The two French regiments who fell in upon their flank, being too far advanced, the lord Tyrawly ordered colonel Roper, who commanded major-general Harvey's horſe, to attack them, which was done with ſo much vigor, that they broke thro' them, and made them beg for quarter, before the enemy's cavalry could come to their aſſiſtance.

The enemy had now nothing remaining but to ſurround the confederate foot, which were broke on the plain: and to whom for ſome time they gave no quarter. In this ſtate of deſpair, major-general Shrimpton, brigadier Macartney, colonel Britton, colonel Hill, with ſeveral other officers, who had ingaged in the center, took a bold reſolution, and having aſſembled the ſtragglers of the Engliſh regiments, into a body, join'd ſome of the Dutch and Portugueſe, who had been rallied by count de Dhona and don Juan Emanuel, and form'd a body of near 2000 men, who retreated two leagues, the enemy's horſe ſtill purſuing, tho' often repuls'd by the fire of the confederate infantry. Being tired with the fatigues of the day, and wanting both ammunition and proviſions, the men were unable to march farther than the hills of Caudetta, and, the next morning, being ſurrounded by two lines of foot, the commanding officers agreed to the ſame capitulation that was granted the French at Blenh eim

During the action, the enemy's loſs was much greater, than that of the confederates (1): but the infantry of the latter, being at length broken, and expoſed to the enemy's cavalry, were moſt of them kill'd, wounded, or taken priſoners. The earl of Galway, who during the whole action, ſhew'd more bravery than conduct, was ſo cloſely ingaged with the enemy's horſe, that he received two cuts in the face, near the right eye. Brigadier Killigrew being wounded, in the firſt aſſault, ſtill kept the field, and was killed in a ſecond. The colonels Dormer, Roper, Lawrence, Green and de Loche, were killed, at the head of their ſquadrons, after a gallant behavior. Colonel Pierce, and mr. Hara, ſon to the lord Tyrawly, were wounded. Of the foot, the colonels Hamilton, Woollet, and mr. Neal, who commanded regiments, were killed, the lord Mark Ker and colonel Clayton wounded.

This unfortunate battle being thus loſt, the earl of Galway fled, with the cavalry, conſiſting of 3500 men, to the frontiers of Catalonia, to join King Charles; and the duke of Orleans, arriving in the French army, the day after the battle, march'd into Valencia, and before the middle of May, reduced almoſt all that province, as he did afterwards the whole kingdom of Arragon; of all which places, he diſarmed the inhabitants, and made them not only ſubſiſt his army with proviſions, but buy their peace with great ſums of mony. I return now to the confederate fleet.

The attempt on Toulon concerted.

And now an attempt upon Toulon having been concerted by the duke of Savoy and Prince Eugene, and their troops being actually on their march towards that important city, ſir Cloudeſly Shovel, who was to aſſiſt with the fleet in this expedition, ſet ſail for the coaſt of Italy, and the begining of June appeared off of Genoa. The 5th, the fleet came to on anchor before Final, and the ſame day a council was held at Turin, from whence ſir John Norris (who had been ſent thither with diſpatches from King Charles, to the earl of Galway and ſir George Byng) ſet out two days after, and brought word to ſir Cloudeſly Shovel, that Prince Eugene was coming to confer with him. The latter end of this month, the fleet anchored between Nice and Antibes, at the former of which, the admiral had his firſt interview with the duke of Savoy. The paſſage of the Var, where the enemy had intrenched themſelves, being reſolved upon, the laſt of June, four Britiſh men of war, and one Dutch, under the command of ſir John Norris, attended by about 600 ſeamen and marines, in open boats, ſail'd into the mouth of that river, and being advanced within muſket-ſhot of the enemy's works, made ſuch a terrible fire upon them, that their cavalry, and many of their foot, who expected no attack on that ſide, quited their intrenchments. Sir Cloudeſly himſelf followed ſir John Norris to the place of action, and obſerving the diſorder of the enemy, commanded him to land with the ſeamen and marines, and flank them in their intrenchments. This ſervice ſir John performed with ſo much conduct, and his men advanced with ſuch valor and reſolution, that the French fled in confuſion from their works, of which ſir John took poſſeſſion, and open'd a way for the duke of Savoy, who paſſed the river, about half an hour after, without any oppoſition, where he expected to have found a moſt obſtinate reſiſtance, and march'd towards Toulon. This brave action, I ſay, opened a paſſage for the duke's march, which, it was generally believed, would otherwiſe have been effectually ſtopp'd, by the works the French had raiſed on that river.

The fleet anchors before Final.

Sir Cloudeſly Shovel confers with duke of Savoy and Prince Eugene

A brave action under the conduct of ſir John Norris.

This ſervice being done, the fleet ſailed to the iſles of Hyeres, and, the 15th of July, the army came to la Valette, the admiral having promis'd, if occaſion required, or he could not retreat by land, to convoy the duke and his army away by ſea.

The confederate army comes before Toulon.

(1) This the French writers themſelves, who, in their accounts, vary very little from what I have ſaid above, in a great meaſure own; adding only, that they took all our cannon, with 105 ſtandards and colors.

The

Q. ANN, AN' 1707.

The French deſtroy their own ſhips in the harbor.

The enemy being now juſtly apprehenſive of a bombardment, were in ſuch a conſternation, that they ſent away their gallies, the 21ſt, for Marſeilles, and, to prevent their whole fleet, which conſiſted of forty-ſix men of war, from 110 to fifty-ſix guns, and twenty-nine frigats and other ſmaller veſſels, being fired, they ſunk about twenty of their men of war, ten or more of which were of three decks, in the harbor, in ſuch manner as render'd them unfit for ſervice ever after.

The fleet comes into the road of Toulon.

The 2d of Auguſt, the batteries on both ſides began to play; and the ſame day the confederate fleet came to an anchor in the road, where they met with ſome ſucceſs, as well that day as the following: particularly a ſquadron under rear-admiral Dilkes forced the enemy to abandon a battery of ten guns, which the French having nailed up, and rendered uſeleſs, the allies threw them into the ſea. The next day, ſome ſhips of the fleet advanced farther into the road, to ſhut up the harbor cloſe, and fort Lewis was battered with ſuch ſucceſs, that all the guns which defended it were ſilenced. The 4th early, the beſieged made a vigorous ſally, forced moſt of the confederates out of their works, and took poſſeſſion to the right, where they continued all day, and upon going off deſtroyed them, drawing ten guns into the town. In this action, William Prince of Saxe-Gotha, uncle to her Royal-Highneſs the Princeſs of Wales, one of the braveſt of the confederate-generals, was kill'd. He was not timely ſupported, and choſe rather to die on the ſpot, than to quit his poſt.

The ſame day, the wind was ſo violent that the ſhip on board of which ſir George Byng had hoiſted his flag, loſt her anchors, and fell foul of a Dutchman of war, which received ſome damage thereby. Notwithſtanding the confederates had ſome ſucceſs after this, yet the duke and Prince Eugene were now convinc'd of the impoſſibility of carrying on the ſiege with ſucceſs, and therefore began to withdraw ſome cannon, in order to be ſhip'd again, and made the neceſſary diſpoſitions to imbark their ſick and wounded.

The town and harbor of Toulon bombarded.

The 10th, the neceſſary diſpoſitions were made for the march of the army; and, at the ſame time, the fleet drew as near the place as poſſible, and five bomb-veſſels, ſupported by the light frigats, and the boats of the men of war, under the command of rear-admiral Dilkes, advanced into the creek of fort St. Lewis, and, notwithſtanding the enemy's great fire, bombarded the town and harbor, from that day at noon till the next morning five o'clock, with great ſucceſs. They ſet fire to the great magazine of cordage, quite ruin'd ſeveral ſtately buildings, and deſtroy'd or made unfit for ſervice, eight men of war, from ninety-two, to fifty-ſix guns. But the enemy, at length, brought ſo many guns and mortars againſt thoſe veſſels, as obliged them to retire, not a little damaged. The ſame night, the confederate army quited the camp at la Vilette, and marched away in five columns, taking the ſame rout as they did when they came to Toulon.

The ſiege of Toulon raiſed.

The retreat was made in ſo good order, that nothing was left in the camp at la Vilette that could be of any uſe to the enemy; and altho' the marſhal de Teſſe, who commanded in the town, could not but judge that the allies were upon the point of decamping, yet he did not think fit to purſue them, till the 12th, and then only at a diſtance, and either durſt not, or could not come up with them.

Q. ANN, AN' 1707.

Thus ended this chargeable expedition againſt the moſt conſiderable poſt the French have in the Mediteranean: but tho' it was not attended with all the ſucceſs which was expected from ſo great preparations, it was far from being fruitleſs: beſide the great damage the enemy ſuſtained in their ſhiping; the burning of above 160 houſes in Toulon, and the devaſtations commited in Provence by both armies, to the value of thirty millions of French livres, this enterprize brought the farther advantage to the common cauſe, that it gave a great diverſion to the enemy's forces, whereby their army in Germany was weakned; the duke of Orleans's progreſs, after the battle of Almanza, was retarded in Spain; the ſuccouring of Naples was prevented, and the conqueſts of the allies in Italy, were ſecured.

Sir Cloudeſly returns for England.

Sir Cloudeſly, being however not a little mortified at the miſcarriage, bent his courſe homewards, with the beſt part of the fleet, leaving ſir Thomas Dilkes with a ſquadron for the ſervice on the coaſt of Italy, who dying at Leghorn, that ſquadron returned to Liſbon the begining of the inſuing year.

Is loſt among the iſlands of Scilly.

Sir Cloudeſly coming into the Soundings, the 23d of October, he had ninety fathom water in the morning, and in the afternoon he brought the fleet to, and lay by, with a very freſh gale, at S. S. W. but hazy weather. At ſix that night, he made ſail again, and ſtood away under his courſes, E. and by N. believing, as it was preſumed, that he had the chanel open, and ſaw the light at Scilly: ſoon after which, ſeveral of the ſhips made the ſignal of danger, as he himſelf did. Sir George Byng was not then half a mile to windward of him, who ſaw the breaches of the ſea, and in a little time the rocks of Scilly above water; on one of which, known by the name of the Biſhop and his Clerks, the admiral ſtruck, and in leſs than two minutes, there was not any thing of his ſhip ſeen. Beſide the Aſſociation (in which ſir Cloudeſly with many officers and gentlemen and eight or 900 ſeamen periſhed) the Eagleman of war, commanded by captain Hancock, with all her company, underwent the ſame fate. The Phœnix was loſt, but all her crew ſaved; and two fireſhips ſtruck, but came off with ſome loſs.

Thus (ſays biſhop Burnet) one of the greateſt ſeamen of the age was loſt, by an error in his own profeſſion: for, as I have already obſerved, he had lain by all the afternoon before, and ſet ſail at night, believing he would have time enough next morning to guard againſt running on thoſe rocks. The body of this brave commander being taken up, inbalmed and brought to London, was magnificently inter'd in Weſtminſter-abby, at the Queen's expence. I ſhall not detain the reader with a relation of other tranſactions at ſea, of leſs moment; but only in general obſerve, that as the royal navy had no great ſucceſs to boaſt of this year, ſo great complaints were made of the vaſt loſſes our merchants ſuſtain'd for want of due and regular convoys (1).

Suſa taken by Prince Eugene.

Notwithſtanding the confederates were diſappointed, in their expectations before Toulon, they were ſtill in condition to attack Suſa, which ſur-

(1) France (ſays biſhop Burnet) ſet out no fleet this year; and yet we never had greater loſſes at ſea. The Prince's council was very unhappy, in the whole conduct of the cruiſers and convoys. The merchants made heavy complaints, and not without reaſon. Convoys were ſometimes denied them, and when they were granted, they were often delayed, beyond the time limited for the merchants to get their ſhips ready; and the ſailing orders were ſometimes ſent them ſo unhappily (but, as many ſaid, ſo treacherouſly) that a French ſquadron was then laying in their way to interrupt them. This was liable to many ſevere reflections: for many of the convoys, as well as the merchant-ſhips were taken. Hiſtory of his own times.

Q. Ann, An' 1707.

render'd to Prince Eugene within a fortnight after he came before it, and then the army went into winter-quarters.

The kingdom of Naples reduced by the Imperialists.

When the grand army of the allies, in Italy, entered Provence, in order to beſiege Toulon, count Thaun was diſpatch'd to Naples, with a body of 15,000 men, to reduce that kingdom to the obedience of King Charles; and this expedition was reſolved upon, and undertaken, by the Imperialiſts, notwithſtanding the repeated repreſentations of all the other allies, that ſo great a detachment would, in all probability, break all their meaſures, and ruin their deſigns in Provence, as indeed it happen'd: for the want of thoſe troops may truly be ſaid to have been the occaſion of their precipitate retreat from Toulon, and that the vaſt expence the confederates had been at, both by ſea and land, was, in a great meaſure loſt. The kingdom of Naples was found a very eaſy conqueſt, the people in general being well affected to the houſe of Auſtria. The viceroy retired to Gaeta, the only place that made any reſiſtance; but it was taken by ſtorm, and the caſtle, in which the grandees who were in King Philip's intereſt had retired, ſurrendered at diſcretion ſoon after. Thus was this kingdom reduced with very little bloodſhed: but it was urged by the allies, that it would have fallen of itſelf, had they ſucceeded in other places; and the making ſuch a detachment, at that time, was the occaſion of their ill ſucceſs every where elſe (1).

The campain on the Rhine.

On the Rhine, the marſhal de Villars having ſurpriz'd the Germans, and paſs'd that river, and their lines, laid the circles of Suabia and Franconia under contribution; and had penetrated into Bavaria, if he had not been obliged to weaken his army, and ſend large detachments into Provence: after which he repaſs'd the Rhine, and notwithſtanding things took a better appearance on that ſide, upon the Elector of Hanover's taking the command of the army of the Empire, there happened no farther action. The Emperor had indeed enough to do to defend his hereditary dominions: for the Hungarians were ſtill in arms; and, at the ſame time, the King of Sweden began to call the Emperor to an account for incroaching upon the Proteſtants of Sileſia. The Bavarians were alſo ready to revolt, and give a farther diverſion to his troops: and, in theſe circumſtances, it was no wonder the Imperial army did not purſue the French, in their turn, over the Rhine; they were happy in being able to defend the frontiers of Germany from any farther inſults.

The firſt parliament of Great-Britain meets.

The firſt parliament of Great-Britain met, according to their ſummons, on the 23d of October, when they were directed to chuſe a ſpeaker; and the choice falling upon mr. Smith, ſpeaker of the then late houſe of commons of England, he was preſented to and approved by her Majeſty the 30th, after which both houſes adjourned to the 6th of November, when the Queen made the following ſpeech to them:

Q. Ann, An' 1707.

The Queen's ſpeech to both houſes.

My lords and gentlemen,

"It is with all humble thankfulneſs to Almighty God, and with intire ſatisfaction to "my ſelf, that I meet you here in this firſt parliament of Great Britain, not doubting but you "come with hearts prepared, as mine is, to make "this union ſo proſperous, as may anſwer the "well-grounded hopes of all my good ſubjects, "and the reaſonable apprehenſions of our enemies.

"To this end, nothing is ſo immediately material as to convince, as ſoon as poſſible, both "our friends and our enemies, that the uniting "of our intereſts has not only improved our abilities, but our reſolutions alſo, to proſecute this "juſt and neceſſary war, till we obtain a ſafe "and honorable peace for ourſelves, and for our "allies.

"In ſo great and extenſive a war as this, many "things may be uſefully undertaken, which are "not fit to be communicated before hand: the "attempt upon Toulon was of this nature; and "tho' it had not wholly its deſired effect, has "nevertheleſs been attended with many great and "and obvious advantages to the common cauſe, in "this year, and has made our way eaſier, I hope, "to greater in the next.

"As the French have gained ground upon us "in Spain, ſo they have been wholly driven out "of Italy; by which it is become more eaſy for "all the allies to join their aſſiſtance next year, "for inabling the King of Spain to recover his "affairs in that kingdom, and to reduce the whole "Spaniſh Monarchy to his obedience.

"The weakneſs and ill poſture of affairs upon "the Rhine, in the begining of the year, has "given an opportunity to the French to make "themſelves ſtronger in all other parts; but this "defect ſeems in a very promiſing way of being "fully remedied againſt next campain, by the "conduct and authority of the Elector of Hanover, whoſe ſeaſonable acceptance of that command has ſtrengthened and obliged the whole "confederacy.

Gentlemen of the houſe of commons,

"The juſt application of the ſupplies given me "by former parliaments; the plain neceſſity of "continuing this war, the reaſonable proſpect of "puting a good end to it, if we be not wanting "to ourſelves, and the honor of the firſt parliament of Great-Britain, are, I make no doubt, "ſufficient arguments to incite you to provide "the neceſſary ſupplies, which I am obliged to "deſire of you, for the inſuing campain, in all

(1) It is hardly poſſible to paſs over the unaccountable events of this campain without reflection. A late author ſpeaking of the year 1706, being called a year of wonders, will needs have it, that the year 1707 was evidenly a year of blunders, of which he fears ſome were willful. Certain it is, our misfortunes in Spain might have been prevented, had we remained upon the defenſive there till re-inforcements could have been ſent thither from Italy or England, which both King Charles and the earl of Peterborough inſiſted upon, as it appears by a letter, written by the latter the winter before the battle of Almanza, to the Portugueſe embaſſador at King Charles's court, and by a memorial preſented to the Queen, by count Gallas, the Imperial miniſter at London, afterwards. It is as certain, that there was no neceſſity of fighting at this time; for they had forces enough to defend the territories of Valencia and Arragon, and might have been ſupplied with proviſions from the Engliſh fleet. But, to excuſe theſe generals, it is ſaid, that brigadier Stanhope, her Majeſty's miniſter, declared in a council of war, that it was her Majeſty's poſitive orders, they ſhould ſeek the enemy. The obſtinacy of the Imperial court in perſiſting upon dividing their forces, to reduce Naples, when they were wanted intirely elſewhere, proved fatal, as I have already obſerved, to the deſign on Toulon. The duke of Marlborough was not free from cenſure, on account of his pacific campain in Flanders: can we imagine (are the words of the ſame author) "that the duke of Marlborough, at the head of the fineſt army the world ever ſaw (100,000 veteran "troops) who had beaten the enemy the year before, deſtroyed and taken 20,000 of their beſt troops, and taken towns "before their faces, without number, either wanted courage or ſtratagems this campain, to alarm and diſtreſs his baffled "enemy, who fled before him the laſt, and were not yet recovered from their panic? Had the duke of Marblborugh (continues "my author) acted with the ſame vigor he had done hitherto, and the duke of Savoy enter'd Provence at the ſame time, with "60,000 men, inſtead of 40,000, as he might have done, the French King would probably have been brought upon his knees, "and readily have yielded up Spain and the Weſt Indies, as well as the reſt of the Spaniſh territories, notwithſtanding his "victory at Almanza." Salmon's Modern hiſt. Vol. XXV. p. 402 and 409.

"parts;

Q. ANN, AN' 1707.

" parts; and particularly for the timely ſupport " of the King of Spain, and the making good " our treaty with Portugal; as alſo for ſtrengthen- " ing the confederate army, under the command " of the duke of Savoy. All which ſervices I " don't doubt but you will think ſo neceſſary, " that they ought not to be neglected, even tho' " they ſhould require an augmentation.

" The ſums already expended in this war have " been very great, and they are ſufficient proofs " how well ſatisfied my ſubjects have always been " with the ends of my government; of which I " am ſo ſenſible, as never to aſk any ſupplies of " them but what are abſolutely neceſſary for the " preſervation of their religion and liberty; and " I look upon it as my great happineſs, that " I have not the leaſt intereſt ſeparate from that " of all my good ſubjects.

My lords and gentlemen,

" In a work ſo great and new in its kind as " that of the union, it is impoſſible but that ſome " doubts and difficulties may have ariſen; which " however, I hope, are ſo far overcome, as to " have defeated the deſigns of thoſe who would " have made uſe of that handle to foment di- " ſturbances.

" There are ſeveral matters expreſly made " liable, by the articles of the union, to the con- " ſideration of the parliament of Great-Britain; " which, together with ſuch others, as may rea- " ſonably produce thoſe advantages that with " due care muſt certainly ariſe from that treaty, I " earneſtly recommend to your ſerious conſidera- " tion.

" On my part, nothing ſhall be wanting to " procure to my people all the bleſſings which can " follow from this happy circumſtance of my " reign; and to extinguiſh, by all proper means, " the leaſt occaſions of jealouſy, that either the " civil or religious rights of any part of this my " united kingdom can ſuffer, by the conſequences " of this union.

" Such a ſuggeſtion ſhall never, in my time, " have any foundation, how reſtleſs ſoever our " enemies may be, in their indeavors and arti- " fices, to diſturb our peace and happineſs; thoſe " great and valuable bleſſings cannot but be al- " ways ſecure to us, if we heartily indeavor to " confirm and improve our preſent union: I hope " therefore you will ſuffer nothing to prevail with " you to diſunite among yourſelves, or abate your " zeal in oppoſing the common enemy."

Addreſs of the commons.

This ſpeech had a various effect on the two houſes: the commons, on the 10th, readily and unanimouſly voted and preſented an addreſs of thanks, in which they aſſured the Queen; " that " no diſappointments ſhould diſcourage them from " making their utmoſt efforts to inable her Ma- " jeſty, in conjunction with her allies, to reduce " the whole Spaniſh Monarchy to the obedience " of King Charles, &c." They concluded, by telling her; " that her Majeſty, thro' her whole " reign, had ſhewn ſhe had no intereſt ſeparate " from her people, and they were ſo ſenſible of " it, as never to be wanting on all occaſions to " expreſs their gratitude to the beſt of Queens; " promiſing all unanimity and diſpatch in the " public buſineſs and ſupply."

Q. ANN, AN' 1707.

The lords fall upon the grievances of the nation.

The lords, inſtead of addreſſing her Majeſty, fell upon grievances, and particularly, among other things, the decay of trade, occaſioned by the want of cruiſers and convoys. After ſome debate on this topic, the 12th, it was ordered, that the ſtate of the nation ſhould be taken into conſidera- tion on the 19th, in a commitee of the whole houſe. The lord Henry Herbert of Cherbury be- ing choſen chairman of the commitee that day, and the Queen preſent, incognito, a petition given in by the two ſheriffs of London, and ſubſcribed by about 200 conſiderable merchants, was read, complaining of their loſſes at ſea, and deſiring ſome ſpeedy remedy. This petition, which was preſented by the earl of Wharton, being read, his lordſhip began the debate, with laying open the miſerable condition of the nation, and the great decay of trade. Several other peers ſpoke to the ſame effect: and, among the reſt, the lord Haver- ſham made a ſpeech, on this occaſion, in which he obſerved; " that our ſhips had been taken " by the enemy, as the Dutch take herrings, by " ſhoals, upon our coaſts, and that the royal " navy it ſelf had not eſcap'd: that by theſe " misfortunes our merchants were beggar'd, our " commerce broke, our trade was gone, our ma- " nufactures ruin'd, the Queen loſt her cuſtoms, " and the parliament muſt make good the defi- " ciencies; while our allies had an open and flou- " riſhing trade, and the enemy made uſe of our " ſhips and ſeamen againſt us: that they were " now upon the inquiry, who brought them into " this miſerable condition; but wherever they " began, if they did not end with the miniſtry, " they ſhould be in a worſe condition, than they " were before: that he took the root of all their " misfortunes to ly in the miniſtry, and without " a change of miniſtry, in his opinion, no other " remedy would be effectual. He ſaid, if he was " not confident he ſtood upon ſure grounds, " he ſhould not have ventured to have ſaid ſo " much; but he had his juſtification in his hand: " the Prince he excuſed, and ſaid he thought " the navy ſafer in his hands, than any man's, " as not being capable of being influenced by " any great miniſter; but if his council had " been faulty, it was fit they ſhould have what " they deſerved: nor did he lay any blame " upon the Queen; he ſaid ſhe was a Princeſs of " too conſummate wiſdom to act without the " advice of her miniſtry; that their lordſhips had " long ſince addreſs'd her Majeſty, that particular " care might be taken of theſe points, and none " but they who had her Majeſty's ear could pre- " vail to the contrary; and the want of following " their lordſhips advice had coſt the nation near " ten millions, and therefore it evidently followed, " that the miniſtry had been the occaſion of all " theſe loſſes.

Lord Haver- ſham's ſpeech on that oc- caſion.

" In ſhort, ſaid he, to conclude, let our miſ- " fortunes be ſkinned over as they will, if they " feſter and throb, and are foul at bottom, they " will certainly break out with incredible rage " and fury."

Thus was the old queſtion revived; " whether " the land or ſea-ſervice ought to be moſt attended " to" (1). But the debate growing high, ſome members indeavor'd to allay it, by propoſing ways

Debates thereupon

(1) Tho' our fleet and our trade (ſays a late author) is univerſally acknowleged to be of the greateſt importance to the nation, and tho' we were maſters at ſea, yet the enemy domineer'd in the Soundings, and in the Channel, and hardly ſuffer'd a merchant to eſcape them, and, as the lord Haverſham obſerved, even our men of war fell into their hands; and the Prince, bearing the title of admiral, the miniſtry thought themſelves ſufficiently ſcreen'd againſt any complaints, on this head: but the nation could no longer be blinded by the glittering and eclat of our arms in Flanders: The merchants grew clamorous, our manufactures were ruin'd, the workmen and their families were ſtarving, and even the name of the Prince, her Majeſty's deareſt royal conſort, whom the people ſo much adored, could no longer ſtop the mouths of that multitude of ſufferers. Salmon's Modern hiſtory, Vol. XXV. p. 420.

and

Q. Ann, An' 1707.

and means to retrieve our losses at sea; and, among the rest, the lord Hallifax moved; that a committee be appointed to receive proposals for incouraging of trade and privateers in the West-Indies; which motion, being back'd by the lord-treasurer, was carried in the affirmative: after which their lordships appointed that day sevennight, to hear, in a grand commitee, what the merchants had to alledge, to prove the suggestions of their petition.

Supplies voted.

The commons, in the mean time, made good their assurances to the Queen, and chearfully voted the necessary supplies; the particulars of which, to the 22d of December, I shall again give the reader in one connexion, without regard to the particular days they were granted on; viz.

	l.	s.	d.
For 40,000 seamen ——	2,080,000	00	00
The ordinary of the navy ——	120,000	00	00
The 40,000 men in Flanders	894,272	03	06
The additional 10,000 men	177,511	03	06
The proportion of the Palatines	34,251	13	04
The proportion of the Saxons	43,251	12	06
The proportion of Bothmar's dragoons	9,269	16	06
The forces in Spain and Portugal	586,671	12	06
The subsidies to the allies ——	494,689	08	06
The duke of Savoy's augmentations	500,000	00	00
The guards and garisons, invalids, and 500 men on board the fleet	511,734	08	06
The duke of Savoy's special service in 1707	100,000	00	00
Compleating the payment of the Hessians	22,957	02	00
The fortifications at Gibraltar	12,284	19	06
The payment of 1 ½ years interest on debentures	60,334	19	06
A store-house and wharf at Portsmouth	10,000	00	00
Circulating Exchequer-bills	3,500	00	00
Transporting land-forces ——	144,000	00	00
The land-ordnance ——	120,000	00	00
For a debt to captain Roch	2,126	18	06
In all	5,933,657	17	04

Ways and means.

The ways and means for raising these large sums were, the land-tax of four shillings in the pound; the malt-duty; upon the several duties granted last year for annuities, a farther sum was now inacted of 640,000 l. for like annuities of 40,000 per ann. at the same price; customs laid for ninety-five years, on which one million was to be taken in for purchasing more annuities at sixteen years purchase. The East-India-company proposed to advance 1,200,000 l. for the service of the war, if they might have their time inlarg'd to 1726, contenting themselves with the same interest they already received, for the two millions they formerly advanced, which was complied with and inacted accordingly; and the general mortgage, as it was call'd (that is diverse duties at the custom-house) was continued from 1712 to 1714, for a loan of 729,067 l.

Resolution of the commons about the sea-service.

Notwithstanding this, the commons, upon a petition of several merchants of London, complaining of the want of cruisers in the Channel and Soundings, resolved, on the 19th of November, to address her Majesty for an account of all monies annually granted by parliament, for the sea-service, and annually issued for the same, since the commencement of the war: as also, an account of what number of ships were imployed at sea every month the last year, and on what stations. The 27th the commons, in a grand committee, took into consideration the state of the navy and trade of the nation, and several merchants who were admited into the house to make good the allegations of their petition, made long and bold speeches against the admiralty, whom they charg'd with frauds, malice and ignorance: but after all this, the farther inquiries in both houses, into past mismanagements were dropp'd for the present, and the whole affair ended in a bill, "for the future well government "of the navy, in relation to cruisers and convoys, "whereby forty-four ships of war were appointed "to be imployed as cruisers and convoys to mer-"chant-ships, between the coast of England and "Cape Finisterre in Spain; and an account was "to be laid before the parliament annually how "those cruisers were imployed." It was likewise farther inacted; "That all ships taken from the "enemy during the war, and condemn'd as prize, "should be the property of the captors, that is, "the commanders, officers, and seamen; and "that a bounty should be given to the said cap-"tors of 5 l. for every man that should be found "on board such prizes when taken, and 10 l. for "every gun the prize carried.

Q. Ann, An' 1707.

Resolutions concerning Scotland.

About the same time, several resolutions were taken with regard to the Scots, and the union; as "an address from the commons to her Majesty, "for the relief of several merchants in Scotland, "who had brought French wines and other goods "to England, after the 1st of May, which had "been seized; a bill was order'd to be brought "in, to repeal the acts passed in Scotland, for "security of that kingdom, and about peace and "war, and another to make the union more com-"pleat.

Acts pass'd

The 18th of December, the Queen came to the house of lords, to give the royal assent, 1. "To "the act for a land-tax; 2. An act for repealing "two acts pass'd in Scotland, for security of the "kingdom, and anent peace and war; and, "3. An act for better securing the duties of East-"India goods:" On which occasion, her Ma-"jesty made the following speech to both houses:

The Queen's speech to both houses

My lords and gentlemen,

"I am very well pleased with the occasion of "my coming hither at this time, and desirous of "taking this opportunity of expressing to you, "the satisfaction I have in seeing so good a pro-"gress made in the public business.

Gentlemen of the house of commons,

"I am extreamly sensible of the readiness and "affection with which you have provided so con-"siderable a part of the supplies.

"As I am fully persuaded it must give the "greatest satisfaction to all our allies, so I look "upon it as a sure pledge of your being disposed "to make good those hearty assurances which you "gave me in the begining of the session.

"I told you, at the opening of this parlia-"ment, that I did hope you would look upon the "services relating to Spain, Portugal, and the "army under the command of the duke of Savoy, "to be of so much importance in the prosecution "of this war, that they might deserve an aug-"mentation; which I cannot but think will be "of the greatest use to the common cause; both "with regard to those particular services, and "to the puting ourselves in a condition to improve "such favorable opportunities as may arise in the "insuing year.

My lords and gentlemen,

"I shall only add, that as nothing is more es-"sential to my own quiet, and the happiness of "all my good subjects, than the bringing this war "to a safe and honorable conclusion, so I must think

Q. ANN. AN' 1707.

"think myself obliged to look upon all those who "are willing and desirous to support me in it, "for attaining that end, as the most proper ob- "jects of my favor and incouragement.

"I cannot conclude, without once more repre- "senting to you, to confirm and improve the ad- "vantages of our happy union, not doubting but, "at the same time, you will have a due regard to "what shall be found necessary for preserving the "public peace throughout the whole island of Great- "Britain."

This speech, as it was supposed, to be occa- sion'd by a suggestion, that some persons, in the house of commons, had, by their whispers and in- trieques, slacken'd their forwardness in granting some parts of the supplies then not determined, was very much resented by some members, in both houses, and the next day occasion'd a long and memorable debate in the house of lords, in relation to the affairs of Spain, the Queen being present, incognito, till five of the clock in the afternoon. The earl of Rochester spoke first, and, having com- mended the earl of Peterborough's courage and conduct, and inumerated his services, said it had been a constant custom, that when a person of his rank, who had been imployed abroad in so emi- nent a post as his lordship had, return'd home, he had either thanks given him, or was called to an account: urging that the same ought to be done in relation to the earl of Peterborough. The lord Hallifax, who spoke next, inlarg'd likewise on the earl of Peterborough's successful services, but dex- trously put off the returning him thanks till the whole tenor of his conduct had been examin'd, than which the earl himself profess'd he had nothing more at heart: the lord Haversham was not silent; but having highly extolled the earl of Peterbo- rough's labor, skill and successes, made a side- wind reflection on the earl of Galway, saying, "It was no wonder our affairs in Spain went so ill, "since the management of them had been intrusted "to a foreiner." Hereupon, several members shew'd the necessity of carrying on the war, till the whole Monarchy of Spain was recover'd, and King Charles setled on his throne; and, among the rest, the earl of Peterborough said, "That "they ought to give the Queen nineteen shillings "in the pound, rather than to make peace upon "any other terms; adding, that if it was thought "necessary, he was ready to return to Spain, and "serve even under the earl of Galway." This na- turally brought on the consideration of ways and means to retrieve the affairs of Spain, in relation to which the earl of Rochester said: "That we "seemed to neglect the principal business, and "mind only accessaries;" adding, he remembred the saying of a great general, the old duke of Schomberg, viz. "That the attacking of France "in the Netherlands, was like taking a bull by the "horns." And therefore his lordship proposed, "That we should stand on the defensive in "Flanders, and send from thence fifteen or 20,000 "men into Catalonia."

Debate about the affairs of Spain.

That noble peer was seconded by the earl of Nottingham, who complain'd of Spain being in a manner abandon'd; but the duke of Marlborough shew'd, with some warmth, the danger of such an indigested council, and the necessity of augmenting rather than diminishing our forces in Flanders. The two chief reasons his grace urg'd were, first, "That most of the enemies strong places there "might be kept with one battalion in each; "whereas the great towns of Brabant we had con- "quer'd, requir'd twenty times that number of "men for their preservation. Secondly, that if "our army in the Netherlands was weakened, and "the French, by their great superiority, should "gain any considerable advantage, which it was "not improbable they might, the discontented "party in Holland, who were not a few, and bore "with impatience the necessary charges of the "war, would not fail crying aloud for peace." Hereupon the earl of Rochester said, "He won- "der'd that noble peer, who had been ever con- "spicuous for his calmness and moderation, should "now be out of his temper; adding, that there "being an absolute necessity to succor Spain, his "grace would oblige their lordships, if he would "let them know, where they might get troops to "send thither; and the more, because the earl of "Peterborough had that very day assur'd them, "that he had heard Prince Eugene say, that the "German soldiers had rather be decimated than "sent into Spain." The duke of Marlborough wisely answered the reproach of having shewed some warmth, by saying, "The thing was of "too great importance to be spoken of without "concernment." And as for the question propo- sed by the earl, he added, "That altho' it was "improper to disclose secret projects in so great "an assembly (to which that day many strangers "had been admited by the favor of the Queen's "presence) because the enemy would not fail being "inform'd of them; yet, to gratify their lord- "ships, he might assure them, that measures had "been already concerted with the Emperor, for "the forming an army of 40,000 men (whom "he specified under the command of the duke of "Savoy) and for sending powerful succors to "King Charles; adding, it was to be hoped, "that Prince Eugene might be prevailed with to "go and command in Spain, in which case "the Germans would gladly follow him thither. "The only difficulty which his grace said might "be objected against this scheme, was the usual "slowness of the court of Vienna, to which pur- "pose he took notice, that if the 7000 German "recruits, which the Emperor had promised for "the army in Piedmont, had arrived time enough; "the enterprize against Toulon, might have been "attended with success; but that it was to be "hoped, and he durst ingage his word for it, that, "for the future, his Imperial Majesty would punc- "tually perform his promises."

This put an end to the debate, and a commitee was appointed to draw up an address to the Queen, which was presented the same day, and in which they "thank'd her for her most gracious speech, "and the spirit and resolution she had been plea- "sed to express for the vigorous carrying on the "war in Spain and Portugal, and strengthning the "army of the duke of Savoy; assuring her, they "would do all that lay in their power for supporting "her Majesty in this just war, till brought to a "safe and happy conclusion." And so zealous were both houses, at this time, in profecuting the war, till the whole Spanish Monarchy was reco- vered, that they joined in a farther address to her Majesty, on that subject, in which they offered it as their opinion; "That no peace could be ho- "norable or safe for her Majesty, or her allies, "if Spain, the West-Indies, or any part of the "Spanish Monarchy, was suffered to remain under "the power of the house of Bourbon:" they took occasion, at the same time, to observe; "that if "some of our allies, who seemed principally con- "cerned, and had reaped the most immediate ad- "vantage, had seconded her Majesty, with a vi- "gor equal to the efforts of Great-Britain, a much "greater impression might have been made on the "enemy: they besought her Majesty to make "the most pressing instances on this head, to the "Emperor; concluding, that they believed no- "thing could be refused to the earnest interposi-

Addres of the lords.

Addres of both houses.

Q. Ann, An' 1707.

" tions of her Majeſty, who had done ſuch great " things for the houſe of Auſtria, in which aſſu- " rance they hoped, by God's aſſiſtance, the next " would prove a glorious and happy campain." To both which addreſſes the Queen gave moſt gracious and ſuitable anſwers: and, the next day, her Majeſty came to the houſe of peers, and paſs'd the act " for continuing the duties upon malt."

Gregg executed for treaſonable practices.

The laſt day of the year, mr. William Gregg, a clerk in mr. ſecretary Harley's office, whoſe extravagancies had run him in debt, and who to ſupply his neceſſities had entered into a treaſonable correſpondence with the court of France, which was diſcovered by the poſt-maſter of Bruſſels, was firſt taken into cuſtody of a meſſenger, and, after ſeveral examinations, commited to Newgate: from whence he was afterwards carried to his trial at the Old-bailey, condemn'd and executed for high-treaſon, taking upon himſelf the whole guilt, and, to the laſt moment of his life, acquiting every body elſe from having any knowledge of his crime.

An' 1708.

Situation of the court, at this time.

Before I reſume the proceedings of parliament, at the begining of the new year, I ſhall take this opportunity to make a brief obſervation or two on the ſituation of the court of Great-Britain at this time. The miniſtry continued ſtill the ſame, tho' ſeveral attempts were made to ſupplant it. Beſide what was level'd at the duke of Marlborough, in the memorable debate I have mentioned above, complaints were alſo made of his grace for continuing the war; tho' it was ſaid, that, at the concluſion of the year 1706, the French had offered to yield up Spain and the Weſt-Indies: but this (ſays biſhop Burnet) was a falſe ſuggeſtion. Whether France did actually make that offer or no, I ſhall not pretend to ſay: but if Spain had not been neglected (by whom it is not for me to determine) in the winter of 1706, nothing is more probable, than that the grand Monarch muſt have condeſcended to ſeek peace on thoſe terms. Be this as it will, the duke of Marlborough, and his friends had, at this juncture, ſeveral uneaſineſſes to incounter with; for the better underſtanding whereof, I muſt previouſly inform the reader of ſome things, which were, as I may ſay, a prelude to what infued.

The ducheſs of Marlborough declines in the Queen's favor.

The ducheſs of Marlborough, who hitherto had almoſt ingroſs'd the Queen's favor, began now very much to decline in her Majeſty's eſteem, and in the credit ſhe had formerly held. Her grace had introduced a relation of hers, one mrs. Maſham, into the Queen's ſervice (1); and this lady had found means to inſinuate herſelf ſo far into the Queen's good graces, that ſhe began to eclipſe the ducheſs, and to become almoſt her Majeſty's only favorite. She had this advantage of her predeceſſor, that while ſhe began to ſlight her Majeſty's favors, and inſiſt much on the duke's merit, claiming a kind of right to direct the Queen in diſpenſing of her favors; mrs. Maſham, on the contrary, aſſumed no ſuch liberty, but was all obedience and ſubmiſſion. Mr. Harley (afterwards earl of Oxford) then ſecretary of ſtate, and at the head of the party which oppoſed the duke and his adherents, and was indeavoring to ſupplant them at court, began likewiſe to grow daily in the Queen's favor, and to have great influence over her meaſures; in which he was ſupported by the new ſhe-favorite.

Q. Ann, An' 1708.

Mrs. Maſham and mr. Harley gain her eſteem.

It has been ſaid, that the Prince begining to be jealous of the too great power of the miniſtry, obſerved that he was in a manner excluded from the adminiſtration, and therefore concured with mr. ſecretary Harley in indeavoring to procure a change in the miniſtry; which the two great ſtateſmen, who yet managed every thing, diſcovering, reſolved to be before-hand with him, and, if poſſible, to drive him from court. Biſhop Burnet gives us the following account of their management of this affair.

The duke of Marlborough and the lord Godolphin make complaints againſt mr. Harley,

" The duke of Marlborough and the lord-treaſurer (ſays the biſhop) having diſcovered " many of mr. Harley's practices, laid them be- " fore the Queen: ſhe would believe nothing " that was ſuggeſted to his prejudice; nor would " ſhe enter into any examination of his ill con- " duct; but was uneaſy when ſhe heard it ſpoke " off: ſo theſe lords wrote to the Queen, that " they could ſerve her no longer, if he was con- " tinued in that poſt. The Sunday following, " when they were ſummoned to a cabinet-council; " they both went to the Queen, and told her, " they muſt quit her ſervice, ſince they ſaw ſhe " was reſolved not to part with Harley. She " ſeemed not much concerned at the lord Godol- " phin's offering to lay down, and it was believed " to be part of mr. Harley's new ſcheme to re- " move him; but ſhe was much touched with the " duke of Marlborough's offering to quit, and " ſtudied, with ſome ſoft expreſſions, to divert him " from that reſolution; but he was firm, and ſhe " did not yield to them; ſo they both went away, " to the wonder of the whole court. Immediate- " ly after, the Queen went to the cabinet-council, " and mr. Harley opened ſome matters relating " to forein affairs: the whole board was very " uneaſy; the duke of Somerſet ſaid, he did not " ſee how they could deliberate on ſuch matters, " ſince the general was not with them; he repeated " this, with ſome vehemence, while all the reſt " looked ſo cold and ſullen, that the cabinet-coun- " cil was ſoon at an end; and the Queen ſaw, " that the reſt of her miniſters, and the chief offi- " cers, were reſolved to withdraw from her ſervice, " if ſhe did not recall the two that had left it. It

And offer to lay down their places.

(1) This mrs. Maſham, afterwards lady Maſham, having had a great ſhare in the univerſal change of the miniſtry, which the reader will find in the ſequel of this hiſtory, it may be proper to give a brief account here who ſhe was, and by what means ſhe came to have ſo great an influence over her Royal Miſtreſs. The ducheſs of Marlborough, either weary of a conſtant and cloſe attendance at court, or, as ſome would have it, thinking herſelf, as a Princeſs of the Empire, above it, had prefer'd mrs. Abigail Hill, her kinſwoman, to be one of her Majeſty's dreſſers and chamber-women, thinking ſhe might ſecurely eaſe herſelf, by leaving a dependant and relation, in whom ſhe intirely confided, near the Queen. Mrs. Hill diſcharg'd her duty with great obſequiouſneſs, and having a tolerable ſhare of wit and good humor, made herſelf ſo agreeable, that, as the ducheſs of Marlborough let ſometimes whole months paſs, without waiting on the Queen, ſo her Majeſty very eaſily diſpenſed with her abſenſe. On the other hand, the growing favorite as eaſily forgot her benefactreſs, and reſolved to ſet up for herſelf. Her principal adviſer was mr. ſecretary Harley, who judging her a proper inſtrument for his deſigns, apply'd himſelf to her, with all the cunning and addreſs he was maſter of; ſhew'd her more regard than ſhe had reaſon to expect from a perſon in his poſt, and infuſed ſuch notions into her as ſoon taught her to ſet a ſuperior value on herſelf. At length, there grew ſuch an intimacy and confidence between them, that mrs. Hill being ſmiten with mr. Maſham, a comely youth, formerly a page to the Queen, but afterwards gentleman of the bed-chamber to Prince George, ſhe did not ſcruple to diſcloſe the ſecret to mr. Harley, by whoſe means the match was made. Mrs. Hill (now mrs. Maſham) having thus her wiſhes, became, out of gratitude, intirely devoted to the perſon to whom ſhe was indebted for obtaining them; ſo that, by her means, mr. Harley had freer acceſs to the Queen, than any other miniſter. This advantage he improved ſo dextrouſly, by entertaining her Majeſty with diverting ſtories of the town, that, on pretenſe of buſineſs, he was, at laſt, admited into her pleaſurable retirements; where he had opportunities, not only to ſtudy and humor her inclinations, but alſo to inſinuate ſuch hints of perſons and things as were agreeable to his deſigns: and thus was the foundation laid to thoſe great and unexpected events, which will be the ſubject of the concluſion of this hiſtory.

" was

Q. ANN, AN' 1708.

"was ſaid, that ſhe would have put all to the hazard, if mr. Harley himſelf had not apprehended "his danger (or, as his friends ſaid, finding the torrent run ſo ſtrong againſt him, deſired her Majeſty's leave to reſign his poſt and retire, rather than her affairs ſhould ſuffer any prejudice by her indeavoring to protect him unſeaſonably) and, "reſolved to lay down. The Queen ſent the "next day for the duke of Marlborough, and "after ſome expoſtulations, told him, Harley "ſhould immediately leave his poſt, which he did "within two days; but the Queen ſeem'd to carry "a deep reſentment of his and the lord Godolphin's behavior, on this occaſion; and tho' they "went on with their buſineſs, they found they had "not her confidence (1). The ducheſs of Marlborough abſtained for ſome weeks, from court; "but afterwards that breach was made up, in "appearance, tho' it was little elſe but appearance. "As mr. Harley laid down, ſir Simon Harcourt "then attorney-general, ſir Thomas Manſel "comptroler of the houſhold, and mr. St. John, "ſecretary of war, went and laid down with him. "The Queen took much time to conſider, how "ſhe ſhould fill up ſome of their places, but mr. "Boyle, uncle to the earl of Burlington, was, the "next day, made ſecretary of ſtate."

Mr. Harvey and ſeveral others lay down their places.

Mr. Boyle made ſecretary of ſtate.

The 19th of January, a proclamation was publiſhed for incouraging ſeamen and landmen to enter themſelves on board her Majeſty's ſhips of war; and, on the 26th, his royal highneſs Prince George appointed the commanders of her Majeſty's fleet, who were as follows: ſir John Leake, admiral of the white, and admiral and commander in chief of her Majeſty's fleet; ſir George Byng, admiral of the blue; ſir John Jennings, vice-admiral of the red; ſir John Norris, vice-admiral of the white; the lord Durſley, vice-admiral of the blue; ſir Edward Whitaker, rear-admiral of the red; and John Baker, eſq; rear-admiral of the white.

Promotion of admirals.

As ſoon as the commons ſat again, they went upon the affairs of Spain, and after having called for ſeveral papers and accounts, they reſolved, "that it appeared to them, that of near 30,000 "men, provided for by parliament for the ſervice "of Spain and Portugal, in the year 1707, there "were but 8,669 men, beſide officers and ſervants, in Spain and Portugal, at the time of the "battle of Almanza." This they repreſented to the Queen in an addreſs, on the 5th of February, and, at the ſame time, deſired her Majeſty, that ſhe would be pleaſed to uſe her utmoſt indeavors, that the war in Spain might be vigorouſly and effectually proſecuted. To this her Majeſty anſwered: "that what they deſired ſhould be care-"fully examined, and ſhe would ſend them an "anſwer in a ſhort time." The Queen being about this time indiſpoſed with the gout, a commiſſion under the great ſeal was granted to ſeveral lords, for giving the royal aſſent to ſuch bills as had been agreed to by both houſes, which they did accordingly on the 13th. The 18th, the lord Coningſby delivered the anſwer her Majeſty had promiſed to the houſe; which proving unſatisfactory (2), they ordered, that their former addreſſes to her Majeſty be renew'd: however, a motion being made, and the queſtion put, on the 24th, "that the deficiency of the Engliſh troops, in "Spain and Portugal, at the time of the battle of "Almanza, had been chiefly occaſioned by the "want of timely and effectual recruits being ſent "thither." It paſs'd in the negative; and, on the contrary, it was reſolved; "that an addreſs "be preſented to her Majeſty, returning her the "thanks of the houſe, for her taking meaſures to "reſtore the affairs in Spain, and for providing "forein troops for that ſervice."

Q. ANN, AN' 1708.

To this addreſs, her Majeſty was pleaſed to return an anſwer, importing, "that ſhe had always "look'd upon the war of Spain to be of ſo great "importance to us, that ſhe could never fail of "continuing her utmoſt application to ſupport it "in the moſt effectual manner; and that the ſatiſfaction they had expreſs'd, in their addreſs, for "her indeavors, in this matter, was extreamly acceptable to her."

The 23d, the Queen went in perſon to the houſe of peers, with the uſual ſtate, and gave the royal aſſent to ſeveral bills.

The lords had, all this while, the ſame matter, together with the grievances of the merchants, under their conſideration, and, in reference to the firſt, they beſtowed ſeveral ſittings on the examination of the earl of Peterborough's conduct, which appearing to be altogether blameleſs (3), his lordſhip's friends labored to have the thanks of the houſe returned him, which however they could not carry. The firſt of March, the lords preſented a long addreſs to her Majeſty (4) about the miſ-

Proceedings in parliament about the affairs of Spain.

(1) In this manner were the ſeals taken from mr. Harley; however, by the good offices of his truſty friend mrs. Maſham, he had ſtill privately the Queen's ear and favor, which he continued to injoy, till, at length, he defeated and triumph'd over all his enemies, and put himſelf at the head of a triumvirate, who govern'd as abſolutely as their predeceſſors had done before them, the latter years of this reign.

(2) The ſubſtance of her Majeſty's anſwer was: that the number of officers and ſervants, which were included in that provided for by parliament, made a full fourth of the whole, according to the eſtabliſhment allowed: that the forces under the earls of Peterborough and Galway had been reduced by death, ſickneſs, &c. before that battle to 8207 men, beſide 1792 priſoners with the enemy: that the regiments under the earl of Rivers, which, when they went from Torbay were 8297 men, when they arrived at Valencia were reduced to 4500, and the battle happened ſo ſoon after the vote of parliament for imploying 29,395 men in Spain and Portugal, that it was impoſſible more of the intended number could be there: but that the Queen compleated four regiments, which were on the Iriſh eſtabliſhment, and ſent them to Portugal, in April, 1707; and three regiments more were ſent thither ſoon after. That to ſupply the loſs at Almanza, the Queen had hired 7000 Palatines, 3000 Germans, and 12000 Italians, which were imbark'd for Barcelona, in her Majeſty's pay; and that ſhe was treating for 6000 Germans more: tho', it has been obſerved, that if theſe forces were taken into the Queen's pay, they were not ſent to Spain till a great while after.

(3) Biſhop Burnet, who would gladly have had the earl of Peterborough thought criminal, gives a very whimſical proof of it. "The earl (ſays he) brought ſuch a number of papers, and ſo many witneſſes, to juſtify his conduct, that after ten or "twelve days ſpent in reading papers, and examining witneſſes, both houſes (without paſſing one vote againſt him) thought "fit to let the charge brought againſt him fall." Hiſt. of his own times, Vol. II. p. 492.

(4) This addreſs, which, when printed, made a large pamphlet, is too long to be either inſerted or abridged here: but the concluſion of it gives ſo glorious an idea of the illuſtrious body which preſented it, that I muſt not omit it. "It is a moſt "undoubted maxim (ſay their lordſhips) that the honor, ſecurity, and wealth of this kingdom does depend upon the pro-"tection and incouragement of trade, and the improving and right managing the naval ſtrength Other nations, who were "formerly great and powerful at ſea, have by negligence and miſmanagement loſt their trade, and ſeen their maritime ſtrength "intirely ruined. Therefore we do, in the moſt earneſt manner, beſeech your Majeſty, that the ſea-affairs may always be "your firſt and moſt-peculiar care. We humbly hope, that it ſhall be your Majeſty's chief and conſtant inſtruction to all who "ſhall have the honor to be imployed in your councils, and in the adminiſtration of affairs, that they be continually intent "and watchful in what concerns the trade and fleet; and that every one of them may be made to know, it is his particular "charge to take care that the ſeamen be incouraged, the trade protected, diſcipline reſtored, and a new ſpirit and vigor put into "the whole adminiſtration of the navy."

managements

Q. Ann, An' 1708.

managements of the navy: to which ſhe anſwered; "that ſhe would make the moſt uſeful obſervations "upon the ſeveral particulars of it: that it was "always her opinion, that the incouragement of "trade and ſeamen, and the good management of "the navy, were of the greateſt importance to the "proſperity of the kingdom; and therefore ſhe "would uſe her utmoſt indeavors to incourage all "thoſe whoſe duty it was effectually to perform "thoſe ſervices."

Great Britain threatned with an invaſion.

While theſe things were tranſacting, the nation was ſuddenly alarmed with the threats of an invaſion (1). Great preparations were carrying on for this expedition at Dunkirk, with all imaginable diligence, and with ſuch ſecrecy, that the deſign was rather gueſs'd at than known, till the Pretender himſelf ſet out from St. Germains the 24th of February; but then it was no longer a ſecret that he intended a deſcent upon Scotland.

The 4th of March, mr. ſecretary Boyle acquainted the houſe of commons with the advices the Queen had received: upon which both houſes addreſs'd her Majeſty, promiſing to ſtand by her with their lives and fortunes; as they did afterwards more fully on the 13th of the ſame month. The 6th, her Majeſty iſſued her royal proclamation, declaring the pretended Prince of Wales, and all his accomplices, adherents and abettors, to be traitors and rebels, and for apprehending them, and requiring all Popiſh recuſants not to depart above five miles from their dwellings; and baniſhing Papiſts ten miles from London and Weſtminſter. A bill was alſo brought in for ſuſpending the Habeas-corpus act, by impowering her Majeſty to ſecure and detain ſuch perſons as ſhe ſhould ſuſpect were conſpiring againſt her perſon and government. But to return to the fleet.

Sir George Byng ſent out with a ſquadron.

The admiralty, in the mean time, had fited out a fleet with ſuch incredible diligence, that (without diminiſhing the convoy provided for the Liſbon-fleet) ſir George Byng and the lord Durſley, ſailed from Deal, towards the coaſt of Dunkirk, the 27th of February, in the morning, with twenty-three Engliſh, and three Dutch men of war. The ſame day, about noon, ſir George came to an anchor in Graveling-pits, and immediately after went into a ſmall frigat, and ſailed within two miles of Flemiſh road for intelligence. The French were ſurprized when the Britiſh fleet appeared off of Mardyke, and put a ſtop to the imbarkation of their troops; but their King was ſo fully bent on the deſign, that he ſent poſitive orders to re-imbark the troops, and put to ſea with the firſt fair wind.

To be likewiſe prepared to reſiſt all attempts on ſhoar, and deſigns of landing, not only ten battalions were ſent from Oſtend to Tinmouth, but the firſt and ſecond troops of horſe-guards, and ſeveral other regiments, march'd to the north of England, and the earl of Leven, governor of Edinburg-caſtle, and commander in chief of the forces in Scotland, was ſent thither, and ſeveral regiments in Ireland were commanded to the North, to ly ready to be tranſported to Scotland: but all theſe wiſe precautions by land proved altogether needleſs, by the diſappointment of the enemy's deſign at ſea, as the reader will ſoon find.

Q. Ann, An' 1708.

The 6th of March, at four in the afternoon, the French fleet ſailed from the road of Dunkirk; but the wind changing about ten, they were obliged to come to an anchor in Newport-pits, where they continued till the 8th in the evening, when, the wind chopping about, they ſet ſail again, ſteering their courſe for Scotland.

The enemy fails from Dunkirk.

Sir George Byng, who in the mean time had been driven from his ſtation by contrary winds, and was come back with his fleet into the Downs the 2d of March, being conſiderably re-inforced, ſet ſail again the 6th; and, on the 9th, at ten in the morning, being between Dunkirk and Calais, he received intelligence, by major-general Cadogan from Oſtend, of the ſailing of the Dunkirk ſquadron from the pits of Newport. He immediately purſued them, leaving rear-admiral Baker, with his diviſion, and four other men of war, to convoy ſuch troops as might be thought neceſſary to ſend from thence to Scotland or England; and, the 13th, ſaw the French fleet in the mouth of the Firth, off of which place he anchored the night before.

Sir George purſues them.

Diſcovers them on the coaſt of Scotland.

Monſ. Forbin, who commanded the French ſquadron, heard, it ſeems, the ſignal for our ſhips to come to anchor, and knowing the meaning of it, immediately ſent a boat on board of every ſhip in his ſquadron, ordering them to put out their lights, and to ſail, one by one, out of the Firth, and ſteer a north-eaſt courſe, till they ſhould come off of the town of St. Andrews (2). This they did; but both wind and tide being againſt them, ſir George diſcovered them in the morning, and purſuing, took the Saliſbury, in which was a great number of French, Engliſh and Iriſh officers, and, among others, the lord Clermont, mr. Middleton, and the lord Griffin. When there was no farther proſpect of coming up with the enemy, they returned to Leith, where they remained till ſir George was informed of their return to Dunkirk (which was on the 25th of March) and then, purſuant to orders ſent him, returned to the Downs; from whence he came to London, and was graciouſly received by the Queen and his royal highneſs.

Continues the purſuit; and takes the Saliſbury.

The French return to Dunkirk.

The priſoners taken in the Saliſbury being brought to London, the lord Griffin, together with the lord Clermont and Charles Middleton, eſq; (two ſons of the earl of Middleton) and colonel Wauchope were commited to the Tower, and about twenty Iriſh officers to Newgate, for high-treaſon. Several priſoners of note were likewiſe brought from Scotland; particularly duke Hamilton and the lord Belhaven; but moſt of them, after examination, were admited to bail (3).

The priſoners brought to town and commited.

The parliament having, by this time, finiſh'd the

(1) What incouraged France to ſuch an attempt, at this time, was the report, that the Scots were ſo highly diſcontented, on account of the union, as to be ripe for a revolt, and ready to declare for the pretended Prince of Wales, on his arrival among them. De Larrey ſays, that while the preparations were making at Dunkirk, the chevalier de Nangis, captain of a French man of war, was privately ſent to Edinburgh, with credentials and inſtructions to ſound the nobility and people; that he was received by the malecontents with great joy, and found every thing ripe for a revolution: that he landed ſome arms and ammunition; and that he was made to hope there were 30,000 Scots ready to receive the Pretender as ſoon as he ſhould land in Scotland. Hiſt. de France ſous Louis XIV.

(2) Monſ. de Forbin ſays, that while they were in the Firth of Edinburg, they put out ſignals, lit up fires, and fired cannon, to give notice to the friends of the Pretender to riſe in his favor; but to no purpoſe, not a ſoul appear'd. Memoires de Forbin.

F. Daniel will have it, the Pretender did not want friends, at that time, in Scotland; but they were awed by the Britiſh fleet, and the numerous body of troops which were there. Hiſt. de France.

(3) When the news firſt came to London of ſir George Byng's having fight of the French ſquadron, near the Firth at Edinburg, it was thought every ſhip of them would be deſtroyed; but theſe too early hopes being diſappointed, the admiral was blamed and railed at, as if he had been deficient in his duty; others pretended to ſay, that he had actually taken the Pretender, and might have taken the whole fleet; but that he had private orders from the Queen to let both him and them the buſineſs before them, the Queen who had been at the houſe, the 11th and the 20th of March, and had given the royal aſſent to ſeveral public and private bills, came again to the houſe of peers, the 1ſt of April, and having given the royal ſanction to the bills which lay ready for it, made the following ſpeech to both houſes:

Q. Ann, An' 1708.

The Queen's ſpeech to both houſes.

My lords and gentlemen,

" I cannot conclude this ſeſſion, without acknowledging the wiſe and ſpeedy proviſions " which you have made for the public ſecurity.

Gentlemen of the houſe of commons,

" I am alſo to thank you in particular, for the " large and timely ſupplies which you have provided for the effectual proſecution of the war. I " aſſure you, they ſhall be carefully and punctually " applied to the uſes for which they are appointed.

My lords and gentlemen,

" I take theſe, eſpecially at this juncture, to be " ſuch undeniable proofs of your zeal and affection to my ſervice, as muſt fully convince every " body of your doing me the juſtice to believe, that " all which is dear to you is perfectly ſafe under " my government; and muſt be irrevocably loſt, " if ever the deſigns of a Popiſh Pretender, bred " up in the principles of the moſt arbitrary government, ſhould take place.

" I am ſatisfied, that every falſe repreſentation " of the true inclinations and intereſts of my people " muſt have been made by ſome of my ſubjects, " who have given incouragement to this deſperate " attempt; ſince, without ſomething of that nature, it ſeems very little conſiſting with the " uſual precautions of our enemies, to hazard the " expence and diſappointment of ſo vain and ill-grounded an undertaking.

" However, it is certain, we muſt be all inexcuſable if we do not take warning, from " this attempt, to compleat what may be neceſſary " for our ſecurity at home, and the diſcouraging " the like for the future; to which, by God's " bleſſing, nothing ſhall be wanting on my part.

" And, to the ſame end, I muſt recommend to " you, at your return into your ſeveral countries, " to uſe your utmoſt care and diligence, in puting " the laws in execution againſt Papiſts, and all " others diſaffected to my government; and in " making them pay towards the public taxes, to " the full of what the law requires of them; nothing being more reaſonable, than that they, " who by their principles and practices incourage, " if not actually foment, ſuch diſturbances, ſhould " doubly contribute to the charge of quieting " them, and ſecuring the kingdom's peace, and " ſhould know themſelves, on all ſuch occaſions, " to be reſponſible for the many inconveniencies " that may inſue."

Q. Ann, An. 1708.

The parliament was then prorogued to the 30th of the ſame month.

The parliament prorogued.

The principal acts paſs'd this ſeſſion, beſide thoſe relating to taxes, which I have mentioned already, were: " 1. An act to repeal two acts " made in Scotland, one for the ſecurity of the " kingdom, and the other anent peace and war. " 2. An act for rendring the union of the two " kingdoms more intire and compleat. 3. An " act for the ſecurity of her Majeſty's perſon and " government, and of the ſucceſſion of the crown " in the Proteſtant line (1). 4. An act for the " better ſecuring the trade of this kingdom by " cruiſers and convoys. 5. Another act for the " better ſecuring her Majeſty's perſon and government (2). 6. An act for raiſing 1,200,000 l. " by extending the term of the privileges of the " Eaſt-India-company. 7. An act to make farther proviſion for electing and ſummoning " ſixteen peers of Scotland to ſit in the Britiſh " houſe of peers, and for the farther regulating of " voters in election of members, &c. 8. An act " for the farther directing the payment of the equivalent mony in Scotland. 9. An act for eſtabliſhing a court of Exchequer in Scotland. 10. An " act for aſcertaining the rate of forein coins in her " Majeſty's plantations in America. 11. An act " for the better preventing miſchiefs that may " happen by fire; and, 12. An act for the incouragement of the trade to America."

Promotions.

After the riſing of the parliament, major-general Stanhope was appointed envoy extraordinary and plenipotentiary to King Charles III, and commander in chief of the Britiſh forces in Spain; and the earl of Cholmondley was made comptroler of her Majeſty's houſhold. The Queen was likewiſe pleaſed to make ſeveral promotions of general-officers, and John Smith, eſq; was made chancellor of the Exchequer. Purſuant to the act for rendering the union of the two kingdoms more compleat, a privy-council was alſo conſtituted for the whole united kingdom.

A new parliament called.

The 15th of April, a proclamation was iſſued for diſſolving the preſent parliament, and, the 22d, another for the calling of a new parliament, to meet the 8th of July next inſuing.

The 15th of May, the lord Griffin was brought to the bar of the Queen's-bench, and a rule made for his execution on his former outlawry: but tho' her Majeſty ſign'd the warrant, he was reprieved for a fortnight, and afterwards from month to month, till he died a natural death in the Tower.

Campain in Flanders.

The ſtorm which threatned Great-Britain being happily diſpel'd, as I have ſhewn above, and the them eſcape. But the houſe of commons, after having examin'd into the number and condition of the ſhips imployed in this expedition, laying nothing to his charge, ſufficiently removed all objections againſt his conduct. It is certain, and monſ. Forbin himſelf owns it, that the French fleet conſiſted of the beſt ſailing runners and privateers that could be found in Dunkirk. Compleat Hiſt. of Europe.

---

Lewis XIV had conceived vaſt hopes from this undertaking: he imagined, that as ſoon as his fleet had ſet the Pretender on ſhoar, in Scotland, the whole kingdom would riſe in his favor; and that the leaſt advantage gain'd on this ſide would ſoon have brought about a ſuperiority of his troops in Flanders; for he fondly believed Queen Ann would ſoon be oblig'd to draw, at leaſt, thirty battalions out of thoſe parts; and this he concluded would quickly oblige the States-general to accept of the terms he ſhould propoſe them, to quit the grand alliance, and to make a ſeparate peace. But this vaſt project vaniſh'd into air. Contrary winds prevented their fleet puting to ſea till the whole matter was diſcover'd. An ague hinder'd the Pretender from imbarking when he ſhould have done; and he imbark'd afterwards, when it was too late, and when all reaſonable hopes of affecting any thing to the purpoſe were loſt; inſomuch that it was next to a miracle, that he, together with his little fleet, did not fall into the hands of the Engliſh; all which gave occaſion to a report, that Lewis XIV would willingly have loſt his ſhips to have been rid, at the ſame time, of his gueſt; and that this ſquadron was fited out with that view, if it ſhould fail of ſucceſs: but if this was the deſign, the officers of the fleet do not ſeem to have been in the ſecret. Lediard's life of Marlborough, Vol. II. p. 234.

(1) It was, among other things, hereby inacted; " that the parliament ſhould not be diſſolved by the death of the Queen, " or her ſucceſſors; but ſhould continue to act ſix months, unleſs prorogued or diſſolved by the ſucceſſor: if ſuch parliament " were prorogued or adjourn'd, it ſhould immediately meet, and in caſe there ſhould be no parliament, on the demiſe of the " crown, the preceding parliament ſhould meet and act. A regency was alſo appointed, in caſe of a demiſe, and all officers " and miniſters impower'd to act ſix months, unleſs removed by the ſucceſſor, as in the former acts of ſettlement.

(2) By this act, all officers, civil and military, in Scotland, were required to take the abjuration-oath, and the other oaths mentioned in this act.

Q. Ann. An' 1708.

necessary measures for the security of the government taken, the duke of Marlborough left London, the 29th of March, and arrived the next night late at the Hague, where he found Prince Eugene arrived before him. They had several conferences with the deputies of the States, the result of which were then kept a secret; but afterwards appear'd to be:

Resolutions taken thereupon.

"That most of the Imperialists imployed, the "year before, on the Upper-Rhine, with the "Saxons and Hessians, in the pay of Great-Britain "and Holland, and the troops which the Elector "Palatine was to furnish, in consideration of his "Imperial Majesty's restoring him to the pos-"session of the Upper-Palatinate, with the prero-"gatives injoy'd by his ancestors, should march "into the Netherlands, to act there under Prince "Eugene, in concert with the British and Dutch "forces, commanded in chief by the duke of "Marlborough, and, under him, by Velt-marshal "d'Auverquerque." As by these resolutions, the army on the Upper-Rhine, under the command of the Elector of Hanover, would be extreamly weakned, and obliged to act on the defensive only, that Prince's consent to this scheme was absolutely necessary; to obtain which, both our generals went to that court, and having, with some difficulty, brought the Elector into their measures, Prince Eugene went for Vienna, and the duke returned to the Hague; where it was industriously reported, and every where believed, that the former was to command a separate army on the Mosel, which obliged the enemy to send a considerable number of forces that way.

Dispositions of the French.

The French King had given the command of his army in Flanders, this year, to the duke of Burgundy, as generalissimo, to be assisted by the duke de Vendôme, and accompanied by the duke of Berry and the Pretender. The Elector of Bavaria was to command on the Rhine, with the duke of Berwick under him; the marshal de Villars being recall'd, and appointed to command in Dauphiny.

Force of both armies.

The confederate army was formed by the latter end of May, and incamp'd at Billinghen and Hall; within three leagues of the enemy's army, which was incamp'd near Soignies; the former consisting of 112 battalions and 180 squadrons, and the latter of 124 battalions and 197 squadrons.

The enemy take Ghent and Bruges by treachery.

Notwithstanding this superiority in number, it soon appear'd that the French had no inclination to ingage, but indeavored to post themselves on the banks of the Deule, to prevent the allies from passing that river, and to seize Louvain, in which the duke of Marlborough prevented them by an expeditious march. However, tho' they were defeated in this enterprize, they succeeded in another, which was the taking of Ghent and Bruges (where the confederates had left no garisons but the militia and burghers) by treachery; the former opening their gates to the French brigadiers la Faille and Pasteur, and the latter to the count de la Motte.

Damme attempted by them in vain.

This done, the count de la Motte march'd immediately to Damme, hoping to meet with the same success there; but as this place was fortified and garison'd, the governor open'd the sluices, and put the whole country under water, which oblig'd the count to retire. From thence he march'd to Plassendahl, a little fort on the canal which leads from Bruges to Ostend, and is a security to the communication of these two places. The officer, who commanded in it, refus'd to surrender, upon which the count attack'd and took it sword in hand.

Q. Ann, An' 1708.

Fort Plassendahl taken.

The duke of Marlborough was too sensible of the importance it would be to recover Ghent and Bruges not to be thoughtful of the speediest methods to effect it; but none seem'd to him so conducive thereunto, as to bring the enemy to a battle, the happy success of which must of course be attended with the recovery of those places; he therefore directed all his measures to this end: which he afterwards attain'd to, in the famous battle of Oudenarde. I shall not detain the reader with an account of the several marches and countermarches, which preceded this memorable action, but only observe, that the French, flush'd with this success, had the vanity to lay siege to Oudenarde, the only pass the allies had left on the Scheld, and intended to have taken possession of the advantageous camp of Lessines: but having before received intelligence that Prince Eugene was bringing a re-inforcement, of about 30,000 men, with all expedition from Germany, and finding now that he advanc'd too quick upon them to think of taking Oudenarde, as they had flatter'd themselves, before he could join the confederate army, they were glad to quit that siege, with precipitation. They were likewise disappointed of taking the camp of Lessines, by an almost incredible march of the duke of Marlborough's army, which made five leagues in a very close country, where they had their ways to make, and pass'd the Dender in less than twenty-four hours. The enemy perceiving themselves disappointed of this camp, left their road towards it, in which they had march'd several hours, and advanced towards Gavre, in order to pass the Scheld there.

Oudenarde attack'd by the enemy in vain.

The battle of Oudenarde.

The 11th of July, in the morning, upon intelligence that the enemy had quited Oudenarde, major-general Cadogan was sent, with sixteen battalions and eight squadrons, to make the ways and bridges to that town. The army began to march at eight, in four columns; and after the news came that the enemy were still passing at Gavre, the duke of Marlborough and Prince Eugene (who had left his detachment on the march, which did not arrive till after the battle) resolved, if possible, to bring them to an ingagement. In order to this, they continued their march with such diligence, that by two in the afternoon the head was at the bridges, over which major-general Cadogan's sixteen battallions were then passing.

Major-general Rantzau, with eight squadrons, and the quarter-masters, being posted on an eminence, behind a narrow but marshy rivulet, which runs into the Scheld, saw several French squadrons drawn up on the plain, on the other side the rivulet; and the march of the French army being directed towards the right, they had thrown seven battalions into the village of Heynem, thro' which the highway runs along the Scheld (1). By these appearances they could not judge, with any certainty, whether the true design of the enemy was to op-

(1) The design of the duke de Vendôme in placing the seven battalions in the village of Heynem, and the squadrons that the confederates had discover'd on the plain, which were to the number of twelve, was to have advanced towards the bridge, over which the allies were passing, to a certain distance, to have waited till half their troops were pass'd, and then to have attack'd them, with all the advantage which his superiority of number could have given him, not doubting but he should easily have defeated them before the other half of their army could come to their assistance. It was with that intent these troops were advanc'd, and the duke would soon have follow'd with the whole army; but happily the duke of Burgundy did not approve of this project. He had all along shewn an inclination to retire towards Ghent, and this propensity appear'd now stronger than ever; he order'd the troops to stop short in their march at Gavre, in the greatest perplexity, not knowing which way to move. He even recall'd the squadrons which were in the plain, and prepar'd to retire: and to this the French attribute their misfortune which insued. Lediard's life of Marlborough, Vol. II. p. 260.

pose

Q. Ann, An' 1708.

poſe the duke of Marlborough's paſſage over the Scheld, or to gain their own lines between Liſle and Tournay, which they might reaſonably think they had time enough to do.

Miſconduct of the enemy before the battle.

It would have been an eaſy matter for the French, either to have cut off the detachment of the allies, which had advanced, and laid bridges over the Scheld, or, at leaſt to have deſtroy'd thoſe bridges, before the whole confederate army could come up; and if then they had ſupported their left at Heynem, poſted their horſe behind the caſtle of Beveren, towards the mill of Oycke, and placed their center on the height between Wertigem and Heurne, they would undoubtedly have had all the advantage the moſt difficult ground could give them; and perhaps the choice would have been on their ſide, whither to ingage in a general action or not? But the dukes of Burgundy and Vendôme, who had been at variance for ſome days before, what courſe they ſhould take, ſtill differed in their opinions, and were both yet ſtrangely at a loſs what meaſures they ſhould reſolve upon, and what diſpoſitions to make. This irreſolution laſted till three in the afternoon, when moſt of the young commanders in the French army, who had more fire than prudence, and who, to make their court to the duke of Burgundy, thwarted all that was adviſed by the duke of Vendôme, declared loudly for an ingagement, which, in a great meaſure, determined the duke of Burgundy; and the duke of Vendôme was obliged to ſubmit.

Diſſentions among their generals.

The enemy prepare to begin the attack.

Major-general Grimaldi was therefore ordered by the duke of Burgundy, with the horſe of the King's houſhold, to begin the attack on the right, and diſlodge major-general Rantzau from the eminence on which he was poſted; but when they came to the rivulet, and found it marſhy, they were diſcouraged from attempting the paſſage, and retired towards their own right. Tho' their army had 12,000 men more in number, than the confederates, and ſeveral other advantages (1).

But are diſcouraged.

Upon this, major-general Cadogan, who had paſs'd the river with twelve of his ſixteen battalions, between three and four o'clock, attack'd the village of Heynem, with ſuch reſolution (brigadier Sabine, with his brigade being at the head) that they ſoon made themſelves maſters thereof, and found ſeven French battalions in it, three intire, and the greater part of the other four were taken priſoners.

M. Gen. Cadogan begins the attack.

Immediately after, major-general Rantzau, with the eight ſquadrons, and the quarter-maſters, paſs'd the rivulet, and advanced into the plain, where the French horſe had been drawn up, between the villages of Singhem and Mullem. Several of the ſquadrons of their rear-guard (French authors ſay four) being ſtill paſſing thro' the plain, the eight ſquadrons, with the quarter-maſters, attack'd them with great vigor, and drove them into the cloſe ground, and the highway, which led into the march of their own army.

And is ſeconded by M. Gen. Rantzau.

Bravery of his preſent Majeſty of Great-Britain.

In this action, the Electoral Prince of Hanover, (his preſent Majeſty of Great-Britain) who had joined the army, the 22d of June, to ſerve as a volonteer, gave diſtinguiſh'd proofs of his early courage and activity. He charg'd, ſword in hand, at the head of a ſquadron of Bulau's dragoons; his Highneſs's horſe was ſhot under him, and colonel Luſchki, who commanded the ſquadron, was kill'd fighting bravely by him. Lieutenant-general Schulenburg, and ſeveral other volunteers, behaved with great reſolution, and led up the ſquadrons. Here the French regiment of la Bretêche, and ſeveral other regiments, were intirely broken; and the colonel himſelf, being dangerouſly wounded, was taken, together with a great many other officers, and twelve ſtandards and kettle-drums.

Q. Ann, An' 1708.

Part of the French army defeated.

The confederate army continued, in the mean time, to paſs the bridges, with all imaginable diligence. The Pruſſian horſe formed themſelves upon the right, in the ſame plain, where the advanced guard was, and the reſt of the horſe as they paſs'd, followed the Pruſſians, thro' the village of Heurne, into the plain; but the foot, becauſe of the length of the march, and the horſe having galloped a good part of the way, came later to the bridges; ſo that none but the above mentioned ſixteen battalions were there till five o'clock.

All the confederate horſe paſs the Scheld.

The duke of Marlborough and Prince Eugene, being at the head of the horſe, which were forming in the plain, and obſerving the great want there was of infantry, ſent orders to the foot, which had been imployed in attacking the village, to leave their poſt there, and fling themſelves into the hedges, on the other ſide of the plain, whither the enemy ſeemed to be marching with great diligence. On that ſide of the plain were no more than two battalions, of major-general Colliar's and brigadier Grumko's, and thoſe the enemy attack'd with great fury, but they maintained their poſt with equal bravery, till more foot came up to their aſſiſtance.

The ingagement continued.

The duke of Marlborough hereupon diſpatched orders after orders to the foot, to preſs their march, the enemy being then forming and ready to attack the infantry which was already there, with very unequal numbers. In the interim, the duke of Argyle arrived, with twenty battalions; which were ſcarcely placed, when the French attack'd them very briſkly, and drove ſome Pruſſian battalions from their poſt; but, notwithſtanding the inequality of numbers, about ſix in the evening, they retook it again, ſword in hand. By this time, count Lottum was coming up, to ſuſtain this attack, with the remainder of the foot of the right; and the duke perceiving that the great ſtreſs of the battle would ly on the right, ſent to the left for twenty battalions. The left wing arrived ſomething later than the right, and having paſs'd their horſe thro' Oudenarde, and their foot on bridges below the town, had formed themſelves into two lines, with the village of Moreghem behind them.

The confederate infantry comes up.

The ſucceſs which the confederates had already obtained in the ſeveral ingagements near the villages of Heynem, Mullem and Heurne, made the French generals ſenſible they ſhould ſoon be attack'd on all ſides: they therefore found themſelves under a neceſſity of making a ſtand, to which end they poſted their foot very advantageouſly, before the villages of Wanigen, Lede and Huyſe, having in their front ſeveral defilees, fenced with incloſures of hedges, ditches or thickets, and placed moſt of their cavalry on their right, near the villages of Oycke and Wertegem.

The enemy at a ſtand.

And ſeek ſhelter.

As ſoon as the confederate foot arrived, they formed themſelves into two lines before the horſe, and then attack'd, in very good order, the incloſures and villages in their front, where the French were poſted; inſomuch that about ſeven o'clock, the fire grew general, both on the right and on the

The attack general.

(1) This attack the duke of Vendôme diſapprov'd of; and, therefore ſent monſieur Jennet, his aid de camp to the left, to attack the allies on that ſide. But the duke of Burgundy countermanded it upon information, as it was ſaid, that there was an unpaſſable moraſs on that ſide; which, however, the duke of Vendôme had paſſed over but an hour before. The marquis de Quincy, to clear the duke of Burgundy from the imputation of this miſcarriage, pretends, that monſieur Jennet was kill'd, going from the right to the left of their army; and that therefore the duke of Vendôme's orders, not being delivered, could not be executed, which (continues he) gave the allies a great advantage. Hiſt. mil. de Louis le Grand.

left

Q. Ann, An' 1708.

left; and tho' the enemy gave way in moſt places, yet being ſuſtained with freſh troops, the action was maintained very obſtinately a good while after.

The fight very obſtinate.

There was before the left of the left wing, a kind of an opening, thro' which run a road that led into the plain, on the top of the hill, and which the Prince of Orange-Naſſau, at the head of the Dutch foot, cleared, with great vigor and reſolution. At the ſame time, the duke of Marlborough diſpatch'd orders to the velt-marſhal d'Auverquerque, and the count de Tilly, who were on the top of the hill near Oycke, to preſs the enemy as much as poſſible, on that ſide. Theſe orders were punctually obeyed, and monſieur d'Auverquerque order'd major-general Weck to march, with the brigades of Waſſenaer and Oudenburg, which being ſupported by count Tilly, with the Daniſh cavalry under his command, paſſed thro' a narrow defilee, into a field, where all the French houſhold were drawn up. The confederate troops no ſooner approach'd, than the French, who did not in the leaſt apprehend being attack'd on that ſide, retired, and indeavored to ſhelter themſelves under the hedges, between Wertigem, and the caſtle of Beveren, or Broan, towards the main body of their army, where the fire was very hot: but the Prince of Orange-Naſſau, with count Oxenſtiern, coming up with four brigades of infantry, led them on with great gallantry, paſs'd ſome defilees, attack'd the enemy in flank, and obliged them to give way. Thoſe who were thus retiring being forced back into the incloſures, in great diſorder; and it growing dark, many battalions, and more ſquadrons flung themſelves out, in a deſperate manner; ſome of them, piercing thro' others, were cut in pieces; others paſs'd thro' unperceived, and again others deſired to capitulate, Bravery of the Prince of Orange-Naſſau.

The French houſhold retires,

And is drove to deſpair.

During theſe tranſactions, on the left, the duke of Marlborough who, till then, had been the whole time in company with Prince Eugene, viſiting the field of battle, leading on, poſting and ranging the reſpective bodies of troops, but thinking now it would be more advantageous to ſeparate, and direct in different places, arrived there; having left the care of the right to Prince Eugene, who ſhewed great pleaſure and ſatisfaction in leading on the Engliſh troops, whom he ſaw perform wonders; inſomuch that at laſt, the enemy finding themſelves charg'd, and born down on all ſides, by the confederate forces, retired in the utmoſt confuſion, leaving great numbers of priſoners behind them. Their dragoons favor'd their retreat, and to ſave the troops of the houſhold, receiv'd ſeveral diſcharges from the confederate infantry, and were moſt of them either kill'd or taken.

The enemy's army retires, in the utmoſt confuſion.

Their dragoons almoſt all cut off, or taken.

The night coming now on, and the fire being directed ſo many ſeveral ways at once, that it was impoſſible to diſtinguiſh friends from foes, the confederate generals gave poſitive orders to their troops to give over firing, and to let the routed enemy eſcape, rather than to venture puting themſelves into diſorder. This put an end to the ſlaughter, and ſaved the remainder of the enemy's army: for had there been but two hours more of day-light, in all probability, their whole body of foot, and their right wing of horſe, would have been intirely cut off, they being ſurrounded almoſt on every ſide.

Night puts an end to the ſlaughter.

During this whole memorable action, the duke of Marlborough and Prince Eugene, diſpens'd their orders, with ſo much compoſedneſs of mind, and clearneſs of judgment, as ſeem'd peculiar alone to thoſe two heroes of the age. They expoſed their perſons to the greateſt dangers, when neceſſity required it; and yet had both the good fortune to come off unhurt: nor did the Electoral Prince of Hanover (now our moſt gracious ſoverein) come far ſhort of their glory, conſidering his youth. At the head of his father's cavalry, he charged the celebrated troops of the French King's houſhold, bearing down all that oppos'd his career of glory. Next to him, hiſtory muſt juſtly commemorate the due praiſe of the young Prince of Orange-Naſſau, ſtadtholder of Friezland, and father of the Prince of Orange, now ſo nearly allied to the crown of Great-Britain, by his marriage with our illuſtrious Princeſs Ann, who diſtinguiſh'd himſelf equally by his martial ardor, bravery and conduct. The brave velt-marſhal d'Auverquerque, tho' worn out with the fatigues of above thirty campains, and in a languiſhing condition, exerted his expiring vigor, and was on horſeback at the head of his troops, in the hoteſt of the fire. Count Tilly, the Prince of Wirtemberg, lieutenant-general Rantzau and Natzmer, major-generals Webb and Cadogan, brigadier Sabine, and in ſhort, all the generals and officers, animated the ſoldiers every where, by their own brave example. Nor were the different troops, of which the confederate army conſiſted, leſs worthy of the greateſt applauſe.

Q. Ann, An' 1708.

Juſt encomiums of the confederate generals, officers and troops.

If we may believe ſome of the French writers, the dukes of Burgundy and Berry, and the Pretender, had a great ſhare in this battle: but if the Dutch accounts are to be credited, they, or at leaſt the two latter, only beheld the ingagement, from the ſteeple of an adjacent village; and conſulted betimes for their ſafety, by a retreat.

The French indeavored, by their partial relations, to palliate their defeat, and make a drawn battle of it; for which they had only one poor pretence, that of having ſaved their baggage, as well they might, ſince they left it behind them, as they did likewiſe their artillery, having only made uſe of four or five pieces of cannon, during the whole action. But the field where the battle was fought, of which the confederates remained maſters, with ſix or 700 of the enemy's officers, and about 6000 (ſome accounts ſay 7000) private ſoldiers, that were taken priſoners, together with ten kettle-drums, and above one hundred ſtandards and colors taken, were all evidences of an indiſputable victory, on the ſide of the great duke of Marlborough, and his companion in glory, Prince Eugene.

The victory indiſputable, on the ſide of the allies.

The enemy retired, under favor of the night, by the road which leads thro' the village of Huyſe, from Oudenarde to Ghent. And no ſooner was the word given for a general retreat, than every one, as well general and other officers as ſoldiers, fled with the utmoſt precipitation. The confederates, in the mean time, continued under arms, hoping to renew the ingagement the next morning; and impatient for day, to have a true information, how far their victory had extended: but, when morning appear'd, they found they had nothing to do, but to purſue a flying enemy; which they did, tho' to no great purpoſe.

The enemy retreat in the night.

As to the killed and wounded on either ſide, the allies reckoned among the firſt, major-general Berenſdorf, the colonels Adercaſz and Bolzen, count Rantzau, and ſir John Matthews, with captain Dean of the Britiſh guards, and about 800 private men; and among the wounded, lieutenant-general Natzmer, major-generals Gaudecker and Berner, the colonels Groves, Pennyfeather, and four others, 160 other officers, and about 2000 private ſoldiers: which loſs was abundantly repair'd by deſerters and priſoners, Germans, Switzers, and Savoyards, who liſted themſelves voluntarily in the ſervice of the allies. The French indeavored to conceal their loſs with all poſſible induſtry; but that it was infinitely greater than that of the allies, is beyond diſpute. The largeſt account I have ſeen makes their loſs to have been 9800 priſoners (including two lieutenant-generals, two major-generals, five brigadiers brigadiers, about thirty colonels, above 100 officers of the ſtate-major, and 400 ſubalterns) 4200 killed and wounded, 2400 deſerted, together 19400, beſide ten pieces of cannon, fifty-ſix pair of colors, fifty-two ſtandards, eight pair of kettle-drums, and 4500 horſes taken: on the other hand, the loweſt computation I have ſeen on our ſide, amounts together to 14,700 killed, wounded and priſoners, without mentioning deſerters, and the loweſt calculations given by the French themſelves, allows their loſs to have been upwards of 10,000 men.

Loſs on both ſides.

Q. ANN, AN' 1708.

The French lines level'd.

The confederates, having gained this advantage, level'd the French lines between Ipres and the Lys, and raiſed contributions in Artois and Picardy, and a detachment took poſſeſſion of Lens, which was abandon'd by the French: and to demonſtrate their ſuperiority, as well as to ſhew the contempt they had of the French, as ſoon as they had receiv'd their heavy artillery, they reſolved upon the ſiege of Liſle (1).

The ſiege of Liſle.

Prince Eugene ſat down before this important place, the 13th of Auguſt, N. S. while the duke of Marlborough covered the ſiege with the reſt of the army, and, on the 22d, the trenches were open'd. The dukes of Burgundy and Vendôme, having join'd the duke of Berwick, who was come with a re-inforcement from the Moſel, march'd towards the duke of Marlborough's camp, which they cannonaded for ſeveral days together, whereupon Prince Eugene joined him, with a conſiderable body of horſe and foot, from the ſiege: but the allies finding the deſign of the French was only to retard the ſiege, the duke of Marlborough intrench'd himſelf, and Prince Eugene returned to Liſle, where the ſiege went on but ſlowly, the French diſputing every inch of ground, with the greateſt obſtinacy. The two warmeſt actions which happen'd at this ſiege, were the attack of the counterſcarp, on the 7th of September, and of the outworks, on the 21ſt, at the former of which the allies had near 2000 officers and men, with ſixteen ingineers, kill'd or wounded, and at the latter, in which Prince Eugene himſelf was wounded in the head, by a muſket-ball, about half the number. The deputies of the States diſcouraged at the great difficulties which attended this ſiege, were for raiſing it; but Prince Eugene ſtrenuouſly perſiſting in the continuance of it, they at length acquieſced, and while the Prince was confined to his tent, by his wound, the duke of Marlborough commanded at the ſiege.

The marſhal de Bouflers having informed the duke of Vendôme, that ammunition begun to be wanting in the town, the duke detach'd the chevalier de Luxembourg, with 2000 horſe and dragoons, each of them carrying a fuſee and a bag with ſixty pound of powder behind him, to indeavor to break thro' the lines of circumvalation, and throw themſelves into Liſle: accordingly having put green boughs in their hats (the ſign whereby the allies diſtinguiſh'd themſelves in an ingagement) they advanced along the cauſway which leads from Douay to Liſle, and meeting with ſome of the out-guards, they pretended to be Germans belonging to the duke of Marlborough's army, who were carrying ſome priſoners to the camp; but an officer being about to examine them more ſtrictly, they rode full gallop along the cauſway, and got into the line of circumvalation. Upon this the guard fired, and the confederate troops, taking the alarm, purſued them to the barrier of the town, where, by ſome accident, ſeveral bags of powder took fire, and about ſixty of the enemy were blown up with their horſes. However 1200 (tho' ſome accounts make them but 300, and others again ſay 1800) of them got into the town (2), and the reſt, by the favor of the night, and the confuſion the beſiegers were in, retired to Douay, except thirty who were blown up by their own powder that was ſcattered on the cauſway, and took fire by their horſes trampling on it.

Q. ANN, AN' 1708.

The diſtreſs of the beſiegers, for want of ammunition, was not leſs than that of the beſieged, for their communication with Bruſſels was, in a manner, cut off by the duke of Vendôme: the duke of Marlborough therefore found himſelf under a neceſſity of geting ſupplies by the way of Oſtend, where a body of Engliſh troops, under the command of general Erle, being lately landed, who had been imploy'd in alarming the coaſt of France, very much favored that deſign: and the duke of Marlborough ſent 700 waggons, under a ſtrong guard to Oſtend, which, with the troops already there, were thought ſufficient to protect the carriages: but the French underſtanding, that the ſucceſs of this ſiege depended on theſe ſupplies, detach'd the count de la Motte, with a great body of horſe and foot, to intercept the convoy: of which the duke of Marlborough having notice, commanded major-general Webb, to march with twelve battalions more, and join the other detachments on the road, whereupon inſued the memorable battle of Wynendale, in which general Webb, and the Engliſh nation, gained immortal honor. Of this battle, I ſhall give the reader an account, as written by major-general Webb himſelf; interſperſing however in parentheſes, and adding, at the concluſion of it, ſuch other circumſtances and obſervations, as I ſhall find elſewhere.

Some reflections on the battle of Wynendale.

Before I proceed to give this account, it may not be amiſs to obſerve, that the Prince of Heſſe, in a letter to the States-general, aſcribes the whole

(1) The city of Liſle, which the confederate generals had reſolved to beſiege, is a large, rich and well fortified place, with a very ſtrong citadel; the capital of French Flanders, the ſtaple of all the trade between the Netherlands and France, and, next to Paris, was reckon'd the chief place of his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty's dominions. It is ſituate among pools and marſhes, about fifteen miles Weſt of Tournay, twenty-eight North of Douay, thirty-ſix South-Weſt of Ghent, thirty-ſeven South-Eaſt of Dunkirk, and thirty-eight almoſt Weſt of Mons. The merchants of that place were of conſiderable ſervice to the grand Monarch, and a great annoyance to his enemies, eſpecially the maritime powers, as they were the principal owners of the Dunkirk privateers, which, without their aſſiſtance, could not have been fited out in near ſo great numbers. As they were rich, they generally ſupplied the wants of the French King's armies, and the cuſtoms they paid him were a conſiderable part of his revenue. Liſle was the firſt and faireſt of all Lewis XIV conqueſts, and one of the principal keys of France; and as his Majeſty always expreſs'd a more than ordinary value for this place, the famous ingineer, monſieur de Vauban, had exerted his utmoſt ſkill in the fortifications of it, and, at an immenſe charge, rendered it almoſt impregnable. The reduction of a place every way ſo important, could not but redound very much to the honor as well as the advantage of the confederates: and, on the other hand, this great importance of it made the French uſe all humane means for its preſervation. Beſide the preſence of the marſhal de Bouflers, governor of all French Flanders, the lieutenant-generals de Surville, Lee, and other officers of diſtinction, they threw into the place twenty-one battalions, of the beſt troops of France, beſide ſix ſquadrons of dragoons, 140 horſe, and ſeven or 800 invalids, who were yet in a condition to ſerve; a little army rather than a garriſon. Lediard's life of Marlborough, Vol. II. p. 303.

(2) The marquis de Quincy, in his account of this action, makes the number of troops, which enter'd the town, to have been, as F. Daniel ſays, 1800, but adds, that they carried into the place with them, 80,000 l. of powder, and 1200 muſkets. Be this as it will, the attempt was bold, and well conducted; and the chevalier de Luxembourg was rewarded for it, by the French King, with the imploy of lieutenant-general.

Q. Ann, An' 1708.

honor of this glorious action to major-general Cadogan, without ſo much as mentioning major-general Webb; and the London-gazet, of the 20th and 23d of September, O. S. by wrong information, has the ſame miſtake. This induced major-general Webb to come over to England, to ſet this matter in a true light; and, the 6th of October, he had the honor to preſent to her Majeſty the relation I am now about to give, which was afterwards publiſh'd, by authority, in the Gazet. Reflections were, on this account, caſt on a great man, who was eſteem'd a friend and patron of major-general Cadogan, as if done deſignedly to advance his glory and reputation, by eclipſing that of his competitor; but this report ſeems to have been more the effect of malice and envy, than grounded on any reaſonable foundation. Wynendale, which gave name to this remarkable action, is an inconſiderable place in Spaniſh Flanders, adjoining to a wood, call'd the wood of Wynendale, hardly worthy of notice, but on account of this memorable battle. It is eleven miles South-weſt of Bruges, and twenty-eight North of Liſle.

An account of the battle and victory.

" After that the detachments, which were ſent " to cover the march of the waggons from Oſtend " to the ſiege of Liſle, had joined at Turout, the " 27th of September, general Webb (who, as " eldeſt major-general, commanded in chief) received advice, that major Savory, of the regiment of Gethem, had poſſeſs'd himſelf of the " poſt at Oudenburg; whereupon he ſent 600 " grenadiers, under the command of colonel Preſton, a battalion of Orkney's, under the command of colonel Hamilton, with that of Fune, " commanded by colonel Vogt, the whole under " the command of brigadier Landſberg, to reinforce that poſt. The 28th, at eight in the " morning, all the horſe (under the command of " major-general Cadogan) were ordered to Hoglede, to wait the arrival of the convoy there, " except 150 horſe, which were ſent, the night " before, under the command of count Lottum, " to Oudenburg, to carry orders to the two battalions, and 600 grenadiers, to guard the convoy " to Cocklaer, and afterwards to rejoin the foot " at Turout. About noon, count Lottum returned to Turout, with advice, that, in his way " to Ichtegem, he met with an advanced guard " of the enemy, which he puſhed into the plain, " where he obſerved ſixteen ſquadrons, mounting " in great haſte, on the alarm, which their advanced guard gave them; hereupon he thought " it neceſſary to return, in all haſte, to give the " general an account of it.

" On this advice, all the foot, conſiſting of " twenty-two battalions, count Lottum, with his " 150 horſe, making the advanced guard, with " the quarter-maſters, and grenadiers that were " not detach'd, were ordered to march immediately to gain the village of Ichtegem, by the way " of Wynendale. As ſoon as the advanced guard " got to Wynendale, they perceived the enemy in " the opening of the plain; whereupon the quarter-maſters and grenadiers were drawn up in " order of battle. Major-general Webb, and " count Naſſau-Woudenburg, at the head of the " 150 horſe, advanced, to reconnoitre the enemy, " giving orders, at the ſame time, to the foot, to " advance and form themſelves, as faſt as poſſible, " in the plain. The 150 horſe were left, at the " opening of the plain, under the command of " count Lottum, to amuſe the enemy; and to " imbarraſs them the more, the quarter-maſters " and grenadiers were poſted in a low coppice, on " that ſide of the plain where the enemy were expected to paſs.

" As ſoon as our troops paſs'd out of the defilee, into the plain, major-general Webb drew " them up in battle, poſting them in the opening, " between the wood of Wynendale, and the coppice, on the other ſide, where the quarter-maſters and grenadiers were poſted. We had " ſcarce got ſix battalions into the opening, when " the enemy began to cannonade us with forty " pieces of cannon, whereof ten were of three " bores." (A relation printed at the Hague, by the printer in ordinary to the States, from which monſ. Rouſſet has likewiſe copied, ſays only nineteen pieces; nine whereof were of a triple bore) " But notwithſtanding the great fire of the enemy, " the 150 horſe kept their ground, which produced the deſired effect, in giving the general " time to form his foot in two lines. The left " wing was extended beyond the low coppice, as " well to prevent the enemy from paſſing that " way, as to cover our flank. On our right " flank was poſted, in the wood of Wynendale, " the regiment of Heukelum; and, on our flank, " on the left, the regiment of the hereditary Prince " of Pruſſia, commanded by colonel Rhader, with " orders not to diſcover themſelves, nor fire, till " they could take the enemy in flank. Some platoons of grenadiers were advanced forty paces " upon the right and left, with the ſame orders; " and the quarter-maſters were alſo poſted in a " road, on the left, that croſſed thro' the aforemention'd low coppice.

" The enemy, after three hours cannonading, " advanced towards us, on the plain, in twelve " lines, ſix whereof were foot, and ſix horſe." (The Hague relation, which I have mentioned above, ſays only four lines of foot, and as many of horſe) " Count Lottum was hereupon ordered " to retire, and poſt himſelf 300 paces behind the " foot, which he did in very good order. The " French continued to march ſtrait up to us, with " forty battalions and ſixty ſquadrons (the Hague " relation ſays only forty-eight ſquadrons) but " the general perceiving they extended themſelves " to the right, in the coppice, he ſent count " Naſſau to obſerve their motion, who immediately ordered thither the regiment of Grumkau, commanded by colonel Beſchefer; and " brigadier Eltz being come up with the laſt regiment, was poſted, on the right, in the wood " of Wynendale.

" About half a quarter of an hour before the ingagement began, brigadier Landſberg, with the " two battalions, and 600 grenadiers that had " been detached, having advice that the enemy " advanced to attack us, rejoined us juſt time " enough to form a third line. Some minutes " after, the enemy began the attack, marching " within 150 paces (the Hague relation ſays fifteen) of our flank, on the right, where the " battalions who hid themſelves (another account " ſays they lay flat on the ground) according to " the general's order, and who were not to fire " till the French flank came oppoſite to them, " gave them ſuch a warm welcome, that their left " wing gave into their center; and the regiment " of the hereditary Prince, which was poſted on " the flank, on our left, much about the ſame " diſtance, did not miſs the opportunity of their " diſorder, to give them a very vigorous diſcharge, which put their whole line in confuſion. Nevertheleſs, the enemy puſh'd on, and " put two of our battalions in diſorder; but the " Swiſs regiment of Albemarle, under the command of colonel Hertzell, advancing upon their " horſe, that were indeavoring to penetrate, ingaged them long enough to give time to the " general, and count Naſſau, to bring up the regiments of Bernſdorf, Gauvain, and Lindeboom (the

Q. Ann, An' 1708.

Q. ANN, AN' 1708.

(the Hague relation does not mention Gauvain's regiment) "to ſupply the room of thoſe that "were preſs'd, which was done in a moment. "However, the enemy, ſupported by ſo many "lines, made another attempt to penetrate; but "our battalions rather advanced than gave way; "tho' the general gave orders againſt advancing, "fearing leſt that might render the fire of our "flanks uſeleſs. This precaution had all the de-"ſir'd ſucceſs; the regiments and grenadiers ma-"king ſuch a continual fire, as forced their two "wings upon their center, and obliged the whole "to retire in the greateſt confuſion, notwithſtand-"ing all the efforts their officers could make, by "incouragement, or violence, to keep them up; "ſo that they only fired, at a great diſtance, on "our lines, which ours returned, advancing by "platoons, as at their exerciſe, with all the order "imaginable.

"Major-general Cadogan, who came up ſome "time after the action began, offered to charge "the enemy, in their diſorder, with two ſqua-"drons of horſe, the other four, which he had "ſent for, not being arrived till near ſeven at "night; but it was not thought adviſable to ex-"poſe ſo ſmall a number to charge the enemy, "who had brought up all their horſe to favor "their retreat. The battle laſted two hours, and "was very hot, in which we had 912 officers and "ſoldiers kill'd or wounded." (According to a liſt ſent to the States-general, the allies had three colonels, and two lieutenant-colonels, wounded; two majors killed, and one wounded; four captains killed, and eighteen wounded; four lieutenants killed, and thirty-eight wounded; 111 private men killed, and 680 wounded) "The ene-"my, as we were aſſured by letters from Ghent "and Bruges, and by report of priſoners and "deſerters, loſt between ſix and 7000 men (the "Hague account ſays only three or 4000) They "made their retreat in ſo great confuſion, that "they left moſt of their cannon in a wood, which "they did not carry off till next day at eleven "o'clock, after hearing that our convoy were "paſs'd Rouſſelaer. We remained on the field of "battle till two o'clock the next morning, having "firſt carried off all our wounded, and ſeveral of "the enemy. This victory is the more ſurprizing, "that, by reaſon of ſeveral detachments, we had "not above 6000 men in the action, and the "enemy, by their own accounts, had 24,000." (The Hague account ſays between ſix and 7000, and the enemy between twenty-three and 24,000.)

The French and Spaniards lay the blame on each other.

The Spaniſh troops were the greateſt ſufferers in this action; and they made terrible complaints of the French, who form'd the left wing of the enemy's detachment, for not having ſupported them, as they might, or ought to have done; but the French, on their ſide, were as forward in complaining of the Spaniards, and laid the ill ſucceſs of this enterprize on their want of courage and conduct.

The marquis de Quincy, who allows the French detachment to have been far ſuperior to that of the allies, and gives general Webb the honor of the victory, pretends this misfortune was owing to the orders given by monſ. de la Motte not having been duly executed: and leſſens the number of the kill'd and wounded, on their ſide, to about 2500 men. But even this account, partial as it is, does great honor to our brave Britiſh officers, and the troops under their command.

Q. ANN, AN' 1708.

Major-general Webb's juſt praiſe.

Notwithſtanding this great ſuperiority of the enemy, major-general Webb made this bold and noble ſtand with ſo much preſence of mind, poſted his men ſo advantageouſly, aſk'd the advice of the officers under him with ſuch modeſty (a rare and commendable virtue in ſo young a commander!) and ſuſtained the enemy's repeated efforts with ſo much bravery, reſolution and conduct, as will tend to his immortal honor: and as this critical victory, which prevented the raiſing of the ſiege of Liſle, was owing chiefly to his prudent management, and other military abilities; ſo that eminent ſervice was afterwards deſervedly acknowledg'd, not only by the unanimous thanks of the commons of Great-Britain, but alſo, in a diſtinguiſhing manner, by the King of Pruſſia, who beſtowed upon him the Order of Generoſity. To give this brave and prudent commander the honor juſtly due to him; tho' he could not venture, being ſo inferior in number, to leave the advantageous ground he was in, to purſue the enemy, which, in the conſternation they were in, might probably have ended in the total deſtruction of their whole detachment; yet ſo unequal an action, and ſo ſhameful a flight of the enemy, with ſuch a conſiderable loſs, was look'd upon as one of the moſt extraordinary things which had happened during the whole war.

His eminent ſervice publicly acknowledg'd.

The convoy under his command arrives ſafe in the army.

While major-general Webb ingaged the enemy, with ſo unequal a force, at Wynendale, the convoy march'd on undiſturb'd, arrived that night, in ſafety, at Rouſſelaer, the next day at Menin, and, on the laſt of September, N. S. paſs'd thro' the duke of Marlborough's army (which, the day before, moved from Lanoy to Roncq, with the right at Pont à Marque, and the left at Menin) in its way to the camp before Liſle.

The duke of Vendôme being convinced of what importance it was to cut off the communication of the beſiegers with Oſtend, marched himſelf towards Bruges, with a ſtrong detachment, and cauſed the dykes to be cut, and laid the country under water; inſomuch that it was with infinite hazard and difficulty, that the allies brought over their ammunition afterwards in boats, to the places where the waggons waited to carry it to the camp: but the allies having ſurmounted all theſe difficulties, on the 23d of October N. S. the town of Liſle ſurrendered upon articles, and, on the 25th, the garriſon march'd into the caſtle (1). Some days before, the velt-marſhal d'Auverquerque died in the ſixty-ſeventh year of his age, very much lamented by every one; by whoſe death, the command of the Dutch troops fell proviſionally on the count de Tilly.

Liſle ſurrender'd.

A fruitleſs attempt on Bruſſels.

The caſtle of Liſle ſtill continued to make a vigorous defenſe, and, while the allies lay before it, the Elector of Bavaria made an attempt to reduce Bruſſels, which he had very near executed: but the duke of Marlborough march'd himſelf to its relief, with the army (2). The 8th of December,

(1) Many cauſes were aſſigned for the length of this ſiege, beſide the ſtrength of the place, and the brave reſiſtance of the gariſon. Much blame was laid on the conduct of ſome of the chief ingineers, which fell very ſhort of what had been experienced in Cohorn. It was ſuſpected that there was treachery among ſome of the officers of the allies. It was openly ſaid, that the city was attack'd in the very ſtrongeſt part of it. It was aſſured, that the beſieged had always intelligence of the time and place, when and where any attack was to be made; becauſe they were always found in a perfect good poſture of defenſe. It was even affirm'd, that the fire of the beſieged was more ready and more violent, than that of the beſiegers; and that many of the bombs of the latter had but very little effect; becauſe they frequently went quite over the town; and that in attacks, the beſieged were ſo prepar'd for their defenſe, that they fired upon the aſſailants, from ſeveral places, and made them indure a greater fire, than was that from without. Le Clerc Hiſt. des Prov. Unies.

(2) Biſhop Burnet mentions upon this occaſion a ſtratagem of the duke of Marlborough's, which, tho' I do not find it mentioned elſewhere, I ſhall relate, as it perfectly anſwers the character of our great commander. "The duke of Marlborough (ſays ber, N. S. the citadel of Liſle beat a parley, and the 10th, the marſhal Bouflers marched out with the gariſon, with the uſual marks of honor, and was conducted to Douay.

Q. Ann, An' 1708.

The citadel of Liſle ſurrender'd.

The 18th, the duke of Marlborough inveſted Ghent, where the count de la Motte commanded, with thirty battalions; the 24th, the trenches were opened, and notwithſtanding the numerous gariſon, the town ſurrender'd the 30th. The 2d of January, the magiſtrates of Bruges came to Ghent to make their ſubmiſſion, and acquainted his grace, that the French march'd out of that place the day before. About the ſame time, they abandon'd Plaſſendael and Leffinghen, and retreated within their own limits.

Ghent taken.

Bruges and other places abandon'd by the French.

Prince Eugene ſet out, the 3d in the morning, for Bruſſels, whither he was follow'd, the next day, by the duke of Marlborough; and having there ſettled the winter quarters, for the confederate troops, the command of which was given to count Tilly, they ſet out together, the 9th of January, from thence for the Hague. Thus theſe two great commanders put an end to their glorious campain, which, for its lengh, and the variety of critical turns, as well as important ſucceſſes of it, is hardly to be parallel'd in hiſtory; and proved as much to the advantage, as well as glory of the confederates, as themſelves cou'd have wiſh'd or deſired.

The duke of Marlborough ends his glorious campain;

And goes to the Hague.

The campain on the upper Rhine was this year inconſiderable, and produced nothing very material, or, at leaſt, nothing that occaſion'd any alteration in the general affairs of Europe; I ſhall therefore paſs them by without any farther notice. In Piedmont, the duke of Savoy obtained ſeveral advantages over the marſhal de Villars, who commanded on that ſide. In Italy, the moſt remarkable incident of this year was the differences between the courts of Rome and Vienna, the Pope having, by his manifeſt partiality for the houſe of Bourbon, ſo far incur'd the indignation of the Emperor, that he was reſolved to curb the haughtineſs and pride of his ſpiritual father. The old gentleman, in the mean time, buoy'd up by the vain promiſes of the French, talked of chaſtizing his rebellious ſon, with temporal as well as ſpiritual ſcourges, and began to raiſe an army for that purpoſe: but count Thaun having invaded the Papal territories; and the Holy-father being apprehenſive of a bombardment at Civita Vecchia, from the Engliſh fleet, his ſtomach came down.

Campain on the Rhine.

And in Italy.

I have reſerved my account of the maritime tranſactions of this year to the laſt, in order to combine them with thoſe of Spain. Sir John Leake ſet ſail from England, with the fleet under his command, the begining of March, and arrived the 27th at Liſbon, where he found a ſquadron under commadore Hicks. Having there provided what tranſports he could get, he ſet ſail the next day, with the Dutch vice-admiral Waſenaer, from thence for the Streights. His fleet then conſiſted of one ſecond-rate, twelve third-rates, two fourth-rates, a fire-ſhip and ſome bomb-veſſels, together, with as many tranſports as would carry 1500 horſes, and twelve Dutch ſhips of the line; having firſt appointed cruizers off of the Terceras and Streights mouth, and ordered thoſe ſhips which were not ready, to follow him.

Maritime Affairs,

Sir John Leake ſent to the Mediteranean.

Q. Ann, An' 1708.

The 11th of May, being on the coaſt of Catalonia, he had the good fortune to intercept a French convoy of about ninety Sattees and Tartanes, bound with wheat, oil, and barley to Peniſcola, for the uſe of the enemy's army, of which he took about ſeventy, and ſo diſpers'd the reſt, that few arrived at their port. King Charles having received this welcome news, ſent a felucca with letters to the Britiſh and Dutch admirals, congratulating their arrival and ſucceſs, and deſiring that the corn and other proviſions might be diſpoſed of for his Magazines, which was granted. The 15th, in the morning, the fleet came to an anchor before Barcelona, where they found four more of her majeſty's ſhips. The admirals going on ſhoar, were received with great marks of eſteem by his Catholic Majeſty.

Takes a large convoy of proviſions.

Arrives at Barcelona;

King Charles having lately married the Princeſs of Wolfembuttel, by proxy, and ſhe being arrived at Milan, in her way to Barcelona, ſir John Leake was appointed, as well to convoy that Princeſs, as to bring the troops from Italy, which were to reinforce the army in Spain. To this end, the fleet ſail'd again, from Barcelona, the 19th, and arrived the 28th off of Vado.

And Vado.

The 17th of June, ſir John Leake having left his fleet at Vado, to take in the troops, arrived at Milan, where he was received with all poſſible marks of eſteem by her Catholic Majeſty, who, at his preſſing inſtances, ſet out the 24th; and, the 2d of July, imbarking on board the Albemarle, near Genoa, for Catalonia, arrived at Mataro, near Barcelona, the 14th. The Queen landed the next day, received the firſt viſit from King Charles, the 17th, and, the 21ſt, having made her public entry into Barcelona, the marriage was the ſame day ratified, in the church of St. Mary, by the archbiſhop of Terragona.

Convoys the Queen of Spain to Barcelona:

Admiral Leake having concerted matters at Barcelona for the reduction of the iſland and kingdom of Sardinia, and, for that purpoſe, taken a few troops on board the fleet, commanded by the conde de Ciſuentes, arrived before Cagliari, the capital of the iſland, the 1ſt of Auguſt, which, with the whole iſland, ſoon ſubmited to the Conde, who had been declared viceroy for King Charles.

Subdues the Iſland of Sardinia;

Sir John, with the aſſiſtance of lieutenant-general Stanhope, was no leſs ſucceſsful in the reduction of the iſland of Minorca. He left Cagliari, the 18th of Auguſt, and arrived before Port-mahon the 25th; from whence he ſent two third-rates to Majorca, to haſten the imbarkation of the troops which were to be furniſh'd from that iſland. They returned the 1ſt of September, with a ſmall number of Satties, laden with materials of war, for the army; and, the 3d, the Milford, and three Dutch men of war, with the lieutenant-general, arrived, being followed by five third-rates and fifteen tranſports, with the land-forces. That and the following day the troops were all landed; upon which the

And Minorca.

" (ſays he) hearing of the Elector of Bavaria's deſign to attack Bruſſels, made a ſudden motion towards the Scheld; but, to " deceive the enemy, it was given out, that he deſign'd to march towards Ghent, and this was not only believed by the whole " army, but was probably carried to the enemy; for they ſeem'd to have no notice nor apprehenſion of his deſign on the Scheld. And what the biſhop adds, is no leſs remarkable: " The lines (ſays he) were ſo ſtrong, that it was expected, the breaking " thro' them muſt have been a very hot action. Some of the general officers (continues he) told me, that they reckoned it " would have coſt them 10,000 men; but to their great ſurprize, as ſoon as they paſs'd the river, the French ran away, without " offering to make the leaſt reſiſtance. Their conduct was a ſurprize to all the world: their counſels ſeem'd to be weak, and the " execution of them was worſe; ſo that they, who were ſo long the terror, were now become the ſcorn of nations." Hiſt. of his own times, Vol II. p. 510.

The Elector of Bavaria was inraged at this diſapointment, and complained loudly of the court of France, which, he ſaid, ſacrificed him in the midſt of his enterprize,, when they might have ſupported him, by puting a ſtop to Prince Eugene's and the duke of Marlborough's paſſage over the Scheld: and he had the more reaſon to be diſſatisfied, if, as the marquis de Quincy ſays, he was put upon this enterprize, by the French, againſt his will: Memoires du Prince Eugene, Tom. II.

inhabitants

Q. ANN, AN' 1708.

inhabitants declared for King Charles: but the enemy had yet three ſtrong holds in their hands.

Sir John returns to England.

It being ſoon after reſolved, in a council of war, that ſir John Leake, with part of the fleet, after they had landed what was neceſſary for the ſiege, ſhould return to England, he ſet ſail the 6th, leaving ſir Edward Whitaker, with his ſquadron, before Port-mahon. Being informed, off of Gibraltar, that ſome French men of war from Cadiz had taken ſome of our merchant-men, near cape Spartel, and carried them into that port, he left a ſquadron to cruiſe in that ſtation, and, purſuing his voyage, arrived at St. Helens the 19th of October.

Port-mahon taken.

Sir John Leake being departed, ſir Edward Whitaker made preparation for attacking the caſtles of Port-mahon: but while the artillery and all things neceſſary were puting on ſhoar, he ordered captain Butler, in the Dunkirk, and captain Fairborn, in the Centurion, to go and batter fort Fornelle, that the tranſports might ſafely ride in the harbor of that name. They anchored before it the 9th; and, after ſome reſiſtance, obliged the gariſon, of about fifty men, to ſurrender priſoners of war. They found in the harbor a Tartan laden from Marſeilles, and a good quantity of corn. The 11th, at the ſight of a detachment of our troops, and two of our men of war, the gariſon of Ciutedella, conſiſting of 100 French-men and 100 Spaniards, ſurrender'd likewiſe. The 17th, they began to play from their batteries on the two middlemoſt towers, and the line they ſupported; and having beat down the former, and made ſome breaches in the latter, they attacked and took the lines by ſtorm, notwithſtanding the enemy's fire from the three forts, with the loſs only of captain Stanhope, of the Milford-galley, the general's brother, and about forty men kill'd and wounded. The enemy beat a parley the next morning, and the capitulation being agreed to, the general took poſſeſſion of this important place the 19th (1).

Campain in Spain and Portugal.

Port-mahon being thus reduced, we ſhall leave ſir Edward Whitaker, with the ſquadron under his command, continuing his ſervices for his Catholic Majeſty; who however was not very fortunate in his affairs on land. The duke of Orleans preſs'd the allies in Catalonia, and beſieged Tortoſa, which ſurrender'd the 11th of July, as did, afterwards, the towns of Denia and Alicant in Valencia. Count Stahremberg had indeed been ſent from Italy to Catalonia, with a ſmall re-inforcement of troops, the begining of the year, which inabled him to ſave the remainder of Catalonia; but he was not in a condition to act offenſively till the latter end of it; for the marquis das Minas, the Portugueſe general, and the earl of Galway, with the Portugueſe forces in Catalonia, had been tranſported from thence to Portugal, to defend that kingdom, which was now become neceſſary: the troops, which were afterwards tranſported from Italy to Catalonia, might indeed have inabled the allies to act offenſively there, in the autumn-campain, the forein troops being commanded by count Stahremberg, and the national troops by general Stanhope; but his Catholic Majeſty was ſo taken up with the ſolemnity of his wedding, and the feſtivals which inſued, that there was no farther action in Catalonia this campain.

Succeſs of commadore Wager in the Weſt-Indies.

Before I return to England, I muſt not omit mentioning a glorious action perform'd this ſummer by commadore (now ſir Charles) Wager, who had the good fortune to meet with the Spaniſh gallions off of Carthagena: but tho' he did all that could be expected from a brave and ſkilful commander, being ill ſeconded by captain Bridges in the Kingſton, and captain Windſor in the Portland, moſt of them eſcaped. However, the Spaniſh admiral, which was the richeſt among them, computed to be worth three millions of pieces of eight, blew up, while the commadore was ingaged with him. He was ſo fortunate afterwards to take the rear-admiral with a conſiderable booty; and tho', by the neglect of thoſe two commanders, a much greater eſcap'd, yet the loſs ſuſtain'd by the Spaniards, in this action, as well as the benefit and honor which accrued thereby to the nation, was very great.

Q. ANN, AN' 1708.

Promotions at court.

Having thus given an account of the principal occurrences abroad, I ſhall now take notice of ſome few which happen'd, in the mean time, at home. In the begining of October, the earl of Cholmondley was appointed treaſurer of the houſhold, in the room of the earl of Bradford, deceaſed, and ſir Thomas Felton was made comptroler of the houſhold; ſir James Montague was made attorny-general, in the room of ſir Edward Northey, and Roberty Eyres, eſq; was made ſollicitor-general.

Death of Prince George.

The ſame month, his royal highneſs, Prince George of Denmark, having been long afflicted with an aſthma, was taken very ill; his aſthma increaſed, and was attended with a cough, a ſpiting of blood and a coma or ſleepineſs, which, being followed by convulſions, ended his life the 28th, to the unſpeakable grief of her Majeſty and the whole nation. The Queen conſtantly attended her royal conſort in his laſt illneſs, and they were allowed to have been the moſt illuſtrious inſtance of conjugal affection that ever adorn'd a court. His corpſe was brought from the palace of Kenſington, where he died, on the 11th of November, and laid in ſtate, in the Painted-chamber, till the 13th, when it was privately interr'd in Weſtminſter-abbey.

Other promotions at court.

The 25th of the ſame month, the earl of Pembroke was conſtituted lord-high admiral; the lord Sommers, preſident of the council; the earl of Wharton, lord-lieutenant of Ireland; and the earl of Dorſet, conſtable of Dover-caſtle, and lord-warden of the Cinque-ports.

The new parliament meets.

The 16th, being the day appointed for the meeting of the new parliament, purſuant to the laſt prorogation, her Majeſty was pleaſed to appoint commiſſioners to repreſent her perſon: accordingly the lord-chancellor Cowper, in the name of the commiſſion, after the ſpeaker (ſir Richard Onſlow) was choſen and preſented, open'd the parliament, with the following ſpeech, on the 18th:

My lords and gentlemen,

The lord chancellor's ſpeech.

" In purſuance of the authority given us by her " Majeſty's commiſſion, under the great ſeal, a- " mong other things, to declare the cauſes of her " Majeſty's calling this parliament;

" We are, by her Majeſty's command, in the " firſt place, to obſerve to you, that the extra- " ordinary length of this year's campain hath " obliged her Majeſty to defer your meeting longer " than otherwiſe ſhe would have done, that you " might be inform'd, with the greater certainty, " of the ſtate and poſture of the war, in order to " take your reſolutions for the inſuing year.

" This neceſſary delay has now ſo far ſhewn us " the ſucceſs of affairs abroad, as that, whether " you conſider the places acquired by the allies,

(1) In the caſtles and forts they found about 100 pieces of cannon, 3000 barrels of powder, and all things neceſſary for a good defence. The gariſon, conſiſting of about 1000 men, half French, half Spaniards, were to be tranſported to their reſpective countries; but the former were detained by way of reprizals for the gariſon of Xativa, treated by the French in the ſame manner. Thus we became poſſeſs'd of Port-mahon, the advantage of which to our fleets, when in the Mediterranean, we have ſufficiently experimented, and ſhall do more, ſhould the happy peace we have ſo long injoyed, ever be turned into a war with France and Spain, ſince we are ſtill in poſſeſſion of it. Lediard's naval hiſtory, Vol. II. p. 832.

Q. Ann, An' 1708.

" or the farther and continued proofs, given this " laſt year, of their ſuperior courage and conduct " (which, as to the future part of the war, is " equal to all other advantages) we may, with " thanks to God, and juſtice to thoſe he has been " pleas'd to uſe as inſtruments of this great work, " conclude, that, upon the whole, we are brought " much nearer than we were, the laſt ſeſſion, to " the end of our undertaking this war, the re- " ducing the dangerous power of France, and " ſettling ſuch a peace as may ſecure itſelf from " being violated.

" Her Majeſty therefore commands us to aſſure " you, ſhe has not the leaſt doubt, but that this " parliament will be of the ſame opinion with her " laſt, as to the vigorous proſecution of the war, " and the ends of it; believing it impoſſible the " repreſentatives of the Britiſh nation can indure " to think of loſing the fruits of all our paſt in- " deavors, and the great advantages we have " gain'd (particularly in this preſent year) by ſub- " miting at laſt to an inſecure peace.

" And therefore, ſince probably nothing can " hinder our ſucceſs abroad, for the time to come, " but miſunderſtandings among ourſelves at home, " we have in command to conjure you, by your " duty to God and to her Majeſty, your zeal for " the Proteſtant religion, your love for your " country, and the regard you cannot but have " for the liberty of Europe in general, to avoid " all occaſion of diviſions, which are ever hurtful " to the public; but will more eſpecially be ſo " at this juncture, when the eyes of all our neigh- " bors are upon you, with a very particular con- " cern, and your unanimity and good agreement " will be the greateſt ſatisfaction and incourage- " ment to all our allies.

Gentlemen of the houſe of commons,

" You cannot but be convinced, that the ſe- " veral parts of the war, which were provided " for by the laſt parliament, will require your " ſupport, at leaſt, in the ſame degree; but in " Flanders the nature of the war is much alter'd, " by the great advances made there towards en- " tering into France, which has ſo far alarm'd our " enemies, that they are drawing more troops " daily to that ſide, for the defence of their own " country: and therefore her Majeſty hopes you " will have ſo right a ſenſe of our preſent advan- " tages, as to inable her Majeſty to make a con- " ſiderable augmentation for preſerving and im- " proving them; which, by the continuance of " God's bleſſing on our arms, muſt ſoon put a " glorious period to this long and expenſive war.

" As to the condition of the fleet, we have it " in command from her Majeſty to acquaint you, " that the conſtant and remote ſervices, in which " the ſhips have been imployed, have made a " greater ſum requiſite than uſual, as well for the " extraordinary repairs, as the building of new " ſhips: and the taking of Port-mahon, as it has " afforded the means of having a part of the fleet " operate, with more readineſs and effect on the " enemy, or wherever it may be uſeful to the " common cauſe in thoſe parts; ſo the making " ſuch proviſions, at ſo great a diſtance, as will " be proper for that ſervice, muſt of neceſſity " cauſe ſome extraordinary expences. All which, " her Majeſty recommends to your ſerious con- " ſideration, deſiring you to provide timely and " effectual ſupplies for thoſe ends; and likewiſe, " for the carrying on ſuch fortifications, for the " ſecurity of our ports, and extinguiſhing the " enemy's hopes of profiting by diſturbances in " Scotland, as you ſhall think fit.

Q. Ann. An' 1708.

My lords and gentlemen,

" The union is eſteem'd by her Majeſty to be " ſo happy and great a part of the ſucceſſes of her " reign, and her Majeſty has ſo much at heart " the confirming and improving it, that ſhe is " pleaſed to command us to remind you of pre- " paring ſuch bills as ſhall be thought conducing " to that end; and particularly to make the laws " of both parts of Great-Britain agree as near as " may be for the common intereſt of both people, " eſpecially as to thoſe laws which relate to cri- " minal caſes and proceedings, and ſettling the " militia on the ſame foot throughout the united " kingdom.

" Her Majeſty is graciouſly pleaſed we ſhould " alſo aſſure you, that if you can propoſe any " means for the improvement of our trade or " manufactures, or better imploying of the poor, " her Majeſty will take the greateſt ſatisfaction " in inacting ſuch proviſions, there being nothing " ſhe ſo earneſtly deſires, as that God would bleſs " her with more and more opportunities of doing " all poſſible good to ſo well-deſerving a people, " ſo firm and affectionate to her intereſt.

" And as her Majeſty does not doubt, by " God's bleſſing, and your good affections, to " continue to defeat the deſigns of the Pretender, " and his open and ſecret abettors; ſo her Majeſty " will always indeavor, on her part, to make her " people happy to ſuch a degree, as that none " (except of deſperate fortunes) ſhall enter into " meaſures for the diſturbance of her government, " the Union, or the Proteſtant ſucceſſion, as by law " eſtabliſh'd, without acting, at the ſame time, " manifeſtly againſt their own true and laſting in- " tereſt, as well as their duty."

The 20th, the houſe of peers preſented an addreſs to her Majeſty, in a private manner, by the earl of Dorſet, in which they ſaid; " they could " not forbear condoling her Majeſty, upon the " great loſs ſuſtain'd in the perſon of the Prince, " whoſe eminent virtues muſt render his memory " ever dear to them and the whole kingdom: but " they beged ſhe would moderate her grief, and " take care of her health; upon which the hopes of " her people, and the ſafety of Europe ſo much " depended. Addreſs of the lords.

" They congratulated her Majeſty on the ſucceſs " of the campain, and promiſed her their aſſiſtance " in proſecuting the war; being (they ſaid) con- " vinced, that no peace could be ſafe or honorable " till the whole Monarchy of Spain was reſtored " to the houſe of Auſtria: and as her own ſubjects " made ſuch extraordinary efforts, they deſired ſhe " would preſs her allies, who were more nearly " concerned, to ſhew an equal vigor.

" That they ſhould do every thing, on their " parts, towards perfecting the union; and that " they would ſupport her Majeſty and the Prote- " ſtant ſucceſſion, againſt all pretenders, and all " her enemies."

To this addreſs her Majeſty anſwered: " that " ſhe thanked the houſe of peers very kindly for " their addreſs, as well as for the manner of ſend- " ing it to her on that occaſion." Her Majeſty's anſwer.

The clergy of the province of Canterbury met likewiſe in convocation, but, the 19th, before the divine ſervice and ſermon, which were to precede the choice of a prolocutor, they were unexpectedly prorogued, by the metropolitan, purſuant to the Queen's writ to him directed (1). The convocation meets, but is prorogued.

(1) This ſudden diſmiſſion was generally aſcribed to the late indeavors of the lower-houſe, to withdraw themſelves from the legal and ancient authority of their metropolitan; and to the bold attempts of ſome of their members, who, to maintain their pretended right and privilege of adjourning themſelves, and holding intermediate ſeſſions, invaded her Majeſty's royal ſupremacy.——— It was obſerved, that, inſtead of entertaining the thoughts of peace, ſome time before the new parliament was to meet, great intereſt was uſed in making a party for the chuſing dr. Atterbury prolocutor, which (ſays my author) look'd like a new inſult upon the archbiſhop and biſhops, and an expreſs defiance to them. Boyer's reign of Queen Ann, p. 360.

The

Q. ANN, AN' 1708.

The commons having ſpent three or four days in qualifying themſelves by taking and ſubſcribing the oaths, voted two addreſſes to her Majeſty, one of condolance, and the other of congratulation, which, according to her deſire, were preſented the 25th, by ſuch members of that houſe as were of the privy-council, and very graciouſly received.

Addreſſes of the commons.

In their addreſs of condolance, "They bewail'd the loſs her Majeſty and the kingdom had "ſuſtained in the death of the Prince, whoſe tender affection to her Majeſty, and love to this "kingdom, had gained him the hearts of all her "ſubjects. They beſought her Majeſty, not to "indulge her juſt grief, and aſſured her of their firm "reſolution to ſupport her againſt all her enemies."

In their addreſs of congratulation they tell her, "That thoſe ſignal advantages, which had been ſo "wonderfully obtain'd, and ſo vigorouſly proſe-"cuted and improved, were repeated inſtances, "that no difficulties were inſuperable to her great "commanders, and that no force of the enemy "was able to ſtop her victorious arms.

"That they had ſeen ſuch fruits of their former "zeal, that they ſhould never be wanting to give "ſuch ſupplies as might be moſt effectual for re-"ducing the power of the common enemy, and "force him to accept ſuch a peace as her Majeſty "and her allies ſhould think honorable and laſting; "that they would do every thing on their parts, to "improve and ſtrengthen the union, but above all, "it ſhould be their utmoſt care to defend her Ma-"jeſty's perſon, to ſupport her undoubted title to "the crown, to diſappoint the hopes and deſigns "of the Pretender and his abettors, and to main-"tain the Proteſtant ſucceſſion."

Proceedings on the ſupply.

The ſame day, the commons unanimouſly voted a ſupply, and having called for ſeveral accounts and eſtimates, the next day went upon ſome of the ſeveral ſums for the reſpective ſervices of the inſuing year, of which, with what were afterwards voted, at different times, I ſhall here give the reader a liſt, in one view.

	l.	s.	d.
For 40,000 ſeamen, at 4 l. per man, per month	2,080,000	00	00
The ordinary of the navy	120,000	00	00
For 40,000 landmen	901,827	00	00
For 10,000 additional forces	177,511	00	00
For her Majeſty's proportion of 3000 Palatines	34,251	00	00
For her Majeſty's proportion of 3,439 Saxons	43,251	00	00
For her Majeſty's proportion of Bothmar's regiment	9,269	00	00
For augmenting the troops that were to act in Flanders with the allies	220,000	00	00
For guards, gariſons, and invalids, including 5000 men to ſerve on board the fleet	549,235	00	00
For the ordnance for land-ſervice	180,000	00	00
For a year's intereſt of unſatisfied debentures	49,310	00	00
For circulating old exchequer bills	3,500	00	00
For maintaining the forces in Spain and Portugal	1,081,083	00	00
For tranſport-ſervice	144,000	00	00
For ſubſidies to the allies	553,845	00	00
For extraordinary ſervices already incur'd	310,748	00	00
In all	6,457,830	00	00

To raiſe theſe ſums they gave, at ſeveral times, the land-tax of four ſhillings in the pound, the malt-tax, and 2,500,000 l. by exchequer-bills: for the bank of England propoſed to add 400,000 l. upon the old fund granted to them, and upon condition of their being continued a corporation for twenty-one years longer, they propoſed to receive ſubſcriptions for doubling their ſtock, to inable them to circulate 2,500,000 l. in exchequer-bills; praying that a fund be appointed for paying off and cancelling the ſaid bills, in ſome certain time; and that a fund be granted for paying 150,000 l. yearly, being the intereſt for the ſaid ſum, at ſix pound per cent, with ſome other conditions relating to the iſſuing the ſaid bills: which propoſal was received by the parliament, and inacted accordingly.

Q. ANN, AN' 1708.

Ways and means.

Votes againſt the eldeſt ſons of the peers of Scotland.

The 3d of December, the queſtion being put in the houſe of commons, "That the eldeſt ſons "of the peers of Scotland were capable, by the "laws of Scotland, at the time of the union, to "elect, or be elected as commiſſioners of ſhires or "burghs to the parliament of Scotland; and there-"fore, by the treaty of union, were capable to "elect, or be elected, to repreſent any ſhire or "burgh of Scotland, to ſit in the houſe of com-"mons of Great-Britain? It paſs'd in the nega-"tive."

Land-tax act paſs'd.

The 23d, the Queen having granted a commiſſion under the great ſeal for paſſing the royal aſſent to a "bill for granting an aid to her Majeſty, "to be raiſed by a land-tax in Great-Britain, for "the ſervice of the year 1709," the lords-commiſſioners gave the royal aſſent to that bill accordingly, after which, both houſes adjourned to the 10th of January. Before they adjourned, they had agreed on an addreſs to the Queen, which was preſented the ſame afternoon, by the lord-chancellor, and the ſpeaker of the houſe of commons. In this addreſs, "They congratulated her ſucceſs in "the reduction of Ghent, the laſt great effort of "this glorious year, which (they ſaid) would be "ever famous in hiſtory; as well for the intire "diſappointment of all the attempts and hopes of "her enemies, as for the many wonderful ſucceſſes "with which GOD had bleſs'd her arms. That "the unuſual length of the campain, the variety "of events, and the difficulty and importance of "the actions, had given many opportunities to her "Majeſty's general, the duke of Marlborough, "to ſhew his conſummate ability, and all the great "qualities neceſſary for ſo high a truſt."

Addreſs of both houſes on the reducing of Ghent.

The 30th, the Queen ſign'd proclamations for a public thankſgiving, on the 17th of February, throughout the whole united kingdom.

Proclamations for a thankſgiving.

AN' 1709.

Two days after the meeting of the parliament again, viz. the 12th of January, a complaint was made to the houſe of a printed pamphlet, intitled, "Of the ſacramental teſt; to a member of this "parliament, who was for the occaſional bill in "the former, when that bill was on foot, &c." and the ſame being delivered in at the table, where the title and ſeveral paragraphs were read, it was unanimouſly reſolved, "that the ſaid pamphlet "was a ſcandalous and malicious libel, and tended "to create miſunderſtandings among her Majeſty's "ſubjects:" ordered, "that the ſaid libel be burnt "by the hands of the common hangman, and a "commitee was appointed to examine, who was the "author and printer of the ſaid libel."

A printed pamphlet cenſured.

Lord Haverſham's ſpeech concerning the invaſion.

The ſame day, the houſe of peers, having ſummon'd their members to attend, took into conſideration the ſtate of the kingdom, in reſpect to the late intended invaſion of Scotland. The lord Haverſham open'd the debate with a long ſpeech; which he concluded by moving; "That her Majeſty "will pleaſe to order, that there may be laid be-"fore this houſe, at what time her Majeſty "received

Q. Ann. An' 1709.

" received the first account of the intended invasion? What orders were thereupon issued into Scotland, with relation either to the forces or garisons? What was the number of regular troops there, at the time of this intelligence? What was the state of the garisons there at that time? What augmentation was made, or forces sent thither, from the time of the intelligence to the time of the invasion? What orders had been given with relation to the garisons, and when, both before and since the invasion, from the time of the first intelligence?"

Papers relating thereunto call'd for.

The lord Haversham having ended his speech, several other peers spoke, tho' with more temper, on the same subject. The house, hereupon appointed a commitee to inquire into the state of the nation, with respect to the intended invasion; and ordered an address to be presented to her Majesty, to desire that the papers concerning that affair might be laid before them, which was readily complied with.

The 22d, the house of commons resolved to address the Queen, for a "list of the ships of war "which were imploy'd upon account of the late "intended invasion, under the command of vice-admiral Byng and rear-admiral Baker; and of "the names of the captains who were imployed in "that expedition, and what journals had been deliver'd in relation to the same. As also for such "treaties or agreements as had been made, in relation to contributions:" which papers were accordingly laid before the house.

The commons vote their solemn thanks to the duke of Marlborough.

The same day likewise they unanimously resolved, "That the commons of Great-Britain, "being truly sensible, not only of the great and "eminent services, perform'd by his grace, the "duke of Marlborough, the last successful cam-"pain, so much to the honor of Great-Britain, "and the advantage of all Europe, but also the in-"defatigable zeal he persevered in, for the service "of the common cause abroad, while he might "with reason, expect to be receiv'd with all the "marks of honor and satisfaction at home, did "with a just regard to his glorious actions, return "him the thanks of the house." And order'd their speaker to transmit the same to his grace; which being done accordingly, the duke of Marlborough was pleased to return the following answer:

Brussels, February 13, 1709.

Sir,

His grace's answer.

"I am extreamly sensible of the great honor "which the house of commons have done me, in "the vote you have been pleased to transmit to "me by their order; nothing can give me more "satisfaction than to find the services I indeavor "to do the Queen, and my country, so acceptable "to the house of commons: and I beg the favor "of you to assure them, I shall never think any "pains or perseverance too great, if I may (by "God's blessing) be instrumental in procuring a "safe and honorable peace for her Majesty, and "my fellow-subjects. I am with truth,

SIR,

Your most faithful
Humble Servant,
Marlborough.

The parliament address her Majesty to marry again.

An order having been made, on the 13th of January, by the privy-council, pursuant to her Majesty's pleasure to them signified, "That in the "form of prayer, with thanksgiving, to be used "every year, on the 8th of March, the words, "for making her a happy mother of children, &c. "be left out;" this occasion'd an address from "both houses; "That she would not indulge "her just grief, so much as to decline the thoughts "of a second marriage;" she thank'd them for the frequent marks they gave her of their duty and and affection; and said, "the provision she "had made for the Protestant succession would be "always a proof how much she had at heart "the future happiness of the kingdom: but the "subject of that address was of such a nature, "that she was persuaded they did not expect a "particular answer."

Q. Ann, An' 1709.

Acts pass'd.

The 26th of January, the lords-commissioners gave the royal assent to the "act for the speedy "and effectual recruiting of the land-forces and "marines."

The 17th of February, the thanksgiving was observed with the usual solemnities; and the 24th, the lords-commissioners, impower'd by the Queen for that purpose, gave the royal assent to the malt-bill, and some private acts. The 25th, the lord Haversham again made a long and memorable speech, concerning the Scotish invasion, and the ill-state that part of Great-Britain was then in, to resist the attempts of the enemy, concluding with the following words:

Part of lord Haversham's speech.

"I will not trouble you farther: I think this "matter is now very plain before your lordships; "I could wish I had not said one word of truth, in "what I have said to you: but the vouchers shew "it to be so; and if all this be true, it is a very "strange, a very surprizing, and a very astonishing "truth.

"I shall not move any thing to your lordships "farther in this matter: I believe there has been "enough now said, to justify those lords for "moving this inquiry, and shall add but this "word; that if there be no greater care taken "for the future, than there was at this time, of "such imminent danger, it will be the greatest "miracle in the world, if without a miracle, "the Pretender be not placed on the throne."

Debates on this matter.

The duke of Buckingham, and several other peers, spoke to the same purpose, and some observations were made upon the papers communicated by the ministry, at the desire of their lordships: upon which it was ordered, that this important affair should be considered in a full house. Accordingly, on the 1st of March, their lordships debated the dangers to which this kingdom had been exposed, by the Pretender's attempt to land in Scotland, with French forces; and, thereupon resolved to address her Majesty: "That she would "be pleas'd to cause an account to be laid before "them of the stores, garisons and fortifications, in "that part of the united kingdom; as also of its "revenues since the union, and of the distribution "of the equivalent mony."

The duke of Marlborough arrives in England.

The same day, the duke of Marlborough, who had staid longer than usual in Holland, on account of some negociations for a peace, which had been set on foot privately, arrived at London. The house of lords being then siting, and it being generally believed, that he brought over with him proposals made by the enemy for a peace, which the miseries and necessity of France seem'd to drive them to; the lord Sommers, president of her Majesty's council, moved for an address to be made to the Queen, "That her Majesty would be pleas'd "to take care, at the conclusion of the war, that "the French King might be oblig'd to own her "Majesty's title, and the Protestant succession; "that her Majesty's allies might be guarantees of "the same; and that the Pretender might be re-"moved out of the French dominions:" this motion was unanimously approved of, and a commitee thereupon appointed to draw up the address. This done their lordships ordered the lord-chancellor to return the thanks of their house to his grace the the duke of Marlborough, for the eminent services performed by his grace, the last campain.

Accordingly,

Q. ANN, AN' 1709.

Accordingly, his grace having the next day taken his ſeat in the houſe of peers, the lord chancellor return'd him the thanks of that illuſtrious and auguſt aſſembly, in the following words:

Thanks of the houſe of peers return'd to the duke of Marlborough.

My lord duke of Marlborough,

"I have the honor to be again commanded by "this houſe, to give your grace their hearty and "unanimous thanks, for the great and eminent "ſervices you have perform'd this laſt campain; "particularly to her Majeſty and her kingdoms, "and in general to all the allies.

"When I laſt obey'd the like commands, I "could not but infer from your grace's former "ſucceſſes, we had ſtill moſt reaſonable expecta- "tions, you could not fail to improve them.

"I beg leave to congratulate your grace, that "the obſervation then made has proved, as it was "indeed intended, perfectly true.

"I hope, I ſhall not be thought to exceed my "preſent commiſſion, if, being thus led to con- "template the mighty things your grace has done "for us; I cannot but conclude, without acknow- "leging, with all gratitude, the providence of "GOD, in raiſing you up to be an inſtrument of "ſo much good, in ſo critical a juncture, when it "was ſo much wanted."

To which compliment his grace made the following anſwer:

My lords,

The duke of Marlborough's anſwer.

"I hope you will do me the juſtice to believe, "there are very few things could give me more ſa- "tisfaction than the favorable approbation of my "ſervice by this houſe.

"And I beg leave to aſſure your lordſhips, it "ſhall be the conſtant indeavor of my life to de- "ſerve the continuation of your good opinion."

Addreſs of both houſes to the Queen.

The ſame day, the lords ſent down their addreſs to the commons, for their concurrence: whereupon, mr. ſecretary Boyle repreſented, "That the Britiſh "nation having been at a vaſt expence of blood "and treaſure, for the proſecution of this neceſſary "war, it was but juſt they ſhould reap ſome bene- "fit by the peace: and the town of Dunkirk, being "a neſt of pirats, that infeſted the ocean, and did "infinite miſchief to trade, he therefore moved, "that the demoliſhing of its fortifications and har- "bor be inſiſted upon, in the inſuing treaty of "peace, and inſerted in the addreſs;" which, with that amendment, being unanimouſly approved of, it was carried back to their lordſhips, by mr. ſecretary Boyle, and preſented to her Majeſty, the next day, accordingly. Her Majeſty received and anſwered it very very favorably; and this addreſs was highly acceptable to the whole nation, and to all our allies.

The commons approve the conduct of the government.

The 10th, the commons took into conſideration the papers relating to the deſign'd invaſion in Scotland, and the proceedings thereupon, and againſt the lord Griffin, and others taken in rebellion; as alſo relating to the perſons taken up on ſuſpicion, and to the gariſons in Scotland, and, thereupon approved the conduct of the government on that occaſion: notwithſtanding, when the ſame papers which had been laid before the houſe of lords, were, by their deſire, laid before them likewiſe, they produced the like obſervations there, as had been made in the houſe of lords, by the lord Haverſham, and others.

Acts paſs'd.

The 23d, the lords-commiſſioners, impower'd thereunto by the Queen, gave the royal aſſent to ſeveral public and private acts. The 24th, the commons took into conſideration the report from the commitee, to whom it was refer'd, to examine the accounts, which had been laid before the houſe, of what ſhips had been imploy'd as cruizers and convoys, over and above the ſhips for the line of battle, and for convoys to remote parts; and alſo the eſtimate of the debt of her Majeſty's navy, as it ſtood on the heads mentioned in the ſaid eſtimate, the 30th of September, 1708. whereupon it was reſolved; "That an addreſs be preſented "to her Majeſty, that ſhe would be pleaſed to "give directions to the proper officers, to lay be- "fore the houſe, an account of all ſums of "mony granted or voted, ſince her Majeſty's ac- "ceſſion to the crown, and how far the ſame had "proved deficient;" and ordered, "That the "commiſſioners of the navy do lay before this "houſe, the cauſes of the increaſe of the debt of "the navy:" but no anſwer was return'd to that addreſs.

Q. ANN, AN' 1709.

An addreſs of the commons not anſwer'd.

All the other buſineſs of parliament being finiſh'd, the lords-commiſſioners, impower'd by the Queen, gave the royal aſſent to twenty-two public, and thirty-one private bills, and then the lord chancellor, in the name of them all, made the following ſpeech to both houſes:

My lords and gentlemen,

The lord chancellor's ſpeech to both houſes.

"Being now, by the Queen's directions, to put "an end to this ſeſſion, we have it in command "from her Majeſty, to aſſure you, ſhe is extreme- "ly ſenſible of the zeal and affection you have "ſhewn for her ſervice, and the good of her "people, and of the prudence and diſpatch with "which you have compleated the important buſi- "neſs of this ſeſſion.

"The vigor and firmneſs of your proceedings "have already had a very good effect on affairs "abroad, and there is ground to hope, by GOD's "bleſſing on her Majeſty's indeavors, that this "will every day appear more evident.

Gentlemen of the houſe of commons,

"We are to return you, in particular, her Ma- "jeſty's thanks, for your having provided, ſo "timely and ſo effectually, the ſupplies found ne- "ceſſary to the proſecution of this war; with an "augmentation of thoſe forces, which, in con- "junction with our allies, have, by GOD's aſſi- "ſtance, procured us the preſent advantages over "the common enemy.

"Your chearfulneſs, in giving ſuch large ſup- "plies, at this juncture, and the ready advances "which have been made for their being effectual, "with ſo little burden to the people, ſhew you "perfectly underſtand how to make a right uſe of "our paſt ſucceſſes, and that nothing is too diffi- "cult for ſo dutiful and affectionate ſubjects, acting "in defenſe of ſo good a cauſe.

My lords and gentlemen,

"Her Majeſty, thro' the whole courſe of her "reign, having ever been deſirous to ſhew all poſ- "ſible inſtances of goodneſs and clemency to her "ſubjects, has now, for the ſtrengthening the union, "and quieting the minds of all her ſubjects, "throughout the united kingdom, thought fit to "grant them an act of grace and free pardon, in "a more full and beneficial manner, than has been "formerly uſed; not doubting but all her people "will make a right uſe of, and ſuitable returns, on "their parts, for ſo extraordinary an indulgence.

"Her Majeſty having alſo been graciouſly plea- "ſed to give the royal aſſent to the ſeveral bills you "have preſented during this ſeſſion, commands us "to obſerve to you, on that occaſion, that the life "and benefit of all laws, how wiſely ſoever they "are framed, do chiefly conſiſt in a due and re- "gular execution of them; and therefore to exhort "you, that when you return to your countries, "you would think it indiſpenſably your duty, to "ſet a good example towards an impartial and "ſteady obſervation of the many good laws "which have been inacted (eſpecially ſince the laſt "revolution) and which fall within your provinces "to execute; it being but too evident, that the "defect at preſent attending us, is not ſo much

Q. Ann, An' 1709.

" the want of new laws, as the neglect and dif-
" regarding of thoſe already made."

The parliament prorogued.

After this, the lord chancellor declared, it was her Majeſty's royal will and pleaſure, that this parliament ſhould be prorogued to the 19th day of May next enſuing.

Acts paſs'd.

The moſt important acts, which received the royal aſſent this ſeſſion, beſide thoſe already mentioned, were: " 1. An act for the naturalization " of forein Proteſtants: 2. Two acts for inlarging " the powers of commiſſioners of Sewers in Lon- " don, and elſewhere: 3. An act for preſerving " the privileges of embaſſadors, and other public " miniſters of forein Princes and States (1): 4. " An act for the better preſervation of parochial " libraries, in that part of Great-Britain call'd " England: 5. An act to prevent laying wagers " relating to the public: 6. An act for making " more effectual the act for the better preventing " miſchiefs that may happen by fire: 7. An act " for the public regiſtring of deeds, wills, and " other incumbrances on lands, &c. in the county " of Middleſex, after the 29th of September 1709. " 8. An act for improving the union of the two " kingdoms: 9. An act for the Queen's moſt " gracious, general and free pardon: 10. An act " for incouraging the bringing in of forein coins " and plate to be coined, and for making provi- " ſion for the mints in Scotland: 11. An act for " appointing commiſſioners to agree for ſuch lands " and tenements as are proper to be purchaſed, " for the better fortifying of Portſmouth, Cha- " tham and Harwich: 12. An act for inlarging " the capital ſtock of the bank of England, and " for raiſing a farther ſupply to her Majeſty, for " the ſervice of the year 1709: 13. An act for " circulating a farther ſum in exchequer-bills, &c. " 14. An act for raiſing the militia for the year " 1709, &c."

Occurrences out of parliament.

Having thus finiſh'd my account of parliamentary proceedings, I ſhall juſt mention ſome occurrences out of parliament, during this time.

The 11th of January, George Brudenel, earl of Cardigan, renounced Popery, and qualified himſelf to ſit in the houſe of peers.

The 3d of February, the Queen, in council, was pleaſed to declare; " that the public buſineſs in- " creaſing, her Majeſty had thought fit to ap- " point a third ſecretary of ſtate of Great-Britain; " but that her Majeſty intended, nevertheleſs, to " continue the forein affairs, for the preſent, in " the courſe of diſpatch they were now in: where- " upon James, duke of Queenſberry and Dover, " was ſworn into that office, and the province " aſſign'd him was Scotland;" and, at the ſame time, John duke of Argyle was ſworn of her Majeſty's privy-council, as were, the 3d of March, the dukes of Marlborough and Roxburg.

The begining of April, the following promotion of general officers was made: His grace the duke of Argyle and major-general Webb, were made lieutenant-generals; the lord North and Gray, ſir Richard Temple, and the earl of Stair, major-generals, and colonel Lalo brigadier-general; and, the begining of May, the major-generals Cadogan, Mordaunt and Palmes were made lieutenant-generals; and brigadier Ogilby major-general.

There being a great ſcarcity of corn in France this year, occaſioned by the preceding hard winter, the Dutch, in order to diſtreſs the enemy, publiſhed a placart, prohibiting all neutral ſhips to carry any corn to France, or the dominions of Spain, in the poſſeſſion of King Philip: and, on the 28th of April, an order of council, of the ſame tenor, was publiſhed in England; declaring, that all corn, which ſhould be taken by the ſhips of the confederates going thither, ſhould be ſeized, and condemn'd as lawful prize.

Q. Ann, An' 1709.

Negociations for a peace.

As I have mention'd above, that his grace the duke of Marlborough remain'd ſome time in the Low-countries, on account of propoſals made by the French for a peace; it may not be amiſs to give a brief account of that matter, as being neceſſary to give a better idea of what will follow. The reader will remember, that ſoon after the battle of Ramellies, the Elector of Bavaria gave out hopes of a peace; and that the King of France would come to a treaty of partition, by allowing Spain and the Weſt-Indies to go to King Charles, provided the dominions of Italy were given to King Philip. They hoped that England and the States would agree to this, as leſs concern'd in Italy: but they knew the court of Vienna would never hearken to it; for they valued the dominions in Italy, with the iſlands near them, much more than all the reſt of the Spaniſh Monarchy. But at the ſame time that Lewis XIV was tempting us with the hopes of Spain and the Weſt-Indies, that King, by a letter to the Pope, offered the dominions in Italy to King Charles. The parliament had always declared, the ground of the war to be the reſtoring the whole Spaniſh Monarchy to the houſe of Auſtria, ſo the duke of Marlborough could not hearken to this: he convinced the States of the treacherous deſigns of the court of France, in this offer, and it was not entertained.

The court of Vienna was ſo alarm'd at the inclinations which ſome had expreſs'd towards the entertaining this project, that this was believ'd to be the ſecret motive of the treaty, the ſucceeding winter, for evacuating the Milaneſe, and of their perſiſting ſo obſtinately, the ſummer after, in their deſigns upon Naples; for by this means they became maſters of both. The French being now reduced to great extremities, by their conſtant ill ſucceſs, and by the miſeries of their people, but more eſpecially by the general decline of public credit, the moſt eminent bankers of Paris and Lions having been oblig'd to ſtop payment, began to entertain ſerious thoughts of a peace, and reſolved to try the States again. When the duke of Marlborough came over to England, monſ. de Rouillé was therefore ſent to Holland, with general offers of peace, deſiring them to propoſe what it was they inſiſted on: and he offer'd them as good a barrier for themſelves as they could aſk. The States, contrary to their expectation, reſolved to adhere firmly to their confederates, and to enter into no ſeparate treaty, but to act in conjunction with their allies. However, upon the arrival of monſ. de Rouillé at Antwerp, they appointed monſ. Buys, penſionary of Amſterdam, and monſ. Vanderduſſen, penſionary of Gouda, to have a conference with him at Moerdyke. Upon the report of what paſs'd in this interview, their High-mightineſſes permited this French miniſter to come to Woerden, a place between Leyden and Utrecht, that he might be nearer at hand, for the intended negociation; and then the deputies of the States had another conference with him, in which he made ſome looſe propoſals towards a general peace, which however he refuſed to give in writing. The States-general being, as I have ſaid above, very cautious of making any advances in ſo important an affair, without the participation of their allies, gave immediate

The preſident de Rouillé comes to Holland.

Conferences with him.

(1) This law was occaſioned by the arreſting the Muſcovite embaſſador, at the ſuit of mr. Morton, a lace-man, in Covent-garden, for 50l. and his being carried to and detained in a ſpunging-houſe till he gave bail.

mediate notice of what had paſs'd to the courts of Vienna and Great-Britain. Prince Eugene, who, during this interval, was gone to Vienna, return'd, hereupon, from thence to Bruſſels, on the 27th of March, N. S. with full powers from his Imperial Majeſty; and, on the 8th of April, came to the Hague, where the duke of Marlborough likewiſe arrived the next day from England.

Prince Eugene and the duke of Marlborough come to the Hague.

The overtures made by France debated.

Theſe two Princes had a long conference with the great penſionary Heinſius, meſſieurs Buys and Vanderduſſen, and other deputies of the States, where they debated the overtures made on the part of France, which being thought inſufficient to be the ground of a treaty of peace, orders were given for carrying on the warlike preparations with all poſſible application and diligence, in order to open the campain, as ſoon as the backwardneſs of the ſeaſon would permit, and purſue the late advantages with the utmoſt vigor.

Monſ. de Roui. é, having been informed by the deputies of the States, that his overtures were not ſatisfactory, diſpatch'd an expreſs for new inſtructions, who was immediately ſent back, with directions (as it appear'd in the ſequel) to amuſe the allies, with a ſeeming compliance with all their demands; but not to ſign any thing.

The marquis de Torcy comes to the Hague.

The deputies of the States, having had a conference with monſ. de Rouilié, after the return of his courier, made a report of what had paſs'd to the duke of Marlborough, who thereupon reſolved to return to England. During his abſence, the French court ſent the marquis de Torcy, ſecretary of ſtate for forein affairs, to the Hague, but the States gave him to underſtand, by their deputies, that they could come to no reſolution till they were informed of the ſentiments of her Majeſty of Great-Britain, by the return of the duke of Marlborough. His grace, who made but a ſhort ſtay in England, returned to the Hague the 18th of May, N. S. and with him the lord Townſhend, as plenipotentiary.

The preliminaries agreed on:

To give a particular account of the tranſactions of every day, during the courſe of this memorable negociation, would carry me too far: I ſhall therefore only obſerve, that on the 27th in the morning, the laſt reſolutions of the allies being communicated to the French miniſters, and the duke of Marlborough having ſent them word, that he and Prince Eugene had determined to ſet out for Flanders, within two days, they promiſed to return a final anſwer, the ſame evening, at a conference to be held for that purpoſe. At this conference, which was held at the grand penſionary's, and laſted till two the next morning, the French, after many diſputes, ſeemed to comply with all the preliminary-articles inſiſted upon by the confederates; which being ordered to be fairly drawn in writing, and afterwards examin'd in a conference held the 28th about ten in the morning, another meeting was appointed, in the afternoon, in order to ſign theſe articles. But how great was the ſurprize of every one to find, that after the Imperial, Britiſh, and Dutch plenipotentiaries had ſign'd the articles, the French miniſters refuſed to ſet their hands to them, alleging that they had no directions to do it. However, the marquis de Torcy told the miniſters of the allies, that he would immediately ſet out for Paris, to lay the whole tranſaction before the moſt Chriſtian King, and indeavor to procure his ratification, promiſing an anſwer by the 4th of next month.

But the French miniſters refuſe to ſign them.

As theſe preliminaries ſhew the ſenſe of the allies, at that time, and are a very neceſſary illuſtration of what inſues, an abſtract of them will undoubtedly be acceptable to the reader.

Abſtract of them.

1. "That a firm and laſting peace be forthwith "treated of, &c.

2. "That, to this end, preliminary articles be "agreed on, &c.

3. That the moſt Chriſtian King ſhall acknow- "lege King Charles III King of Spain, &c.

4. "The treaty ſhall be finiſh'd in two months, "during which time Sicily ſhall be put into the "hands of King Charles, and the duke d'Anjou "ſhall evacuate Spain; which if he refuſes to con- "ſent to, the French King and the allies ſhall "enter into proper meaſures, that this article may "have intire effect.

5. "That the French King ſhall, within that "time, withdraw his troops out of Spain, &c. "and not aſſiſt the duke d'Anjou, for the future, "with troops, artillery, ammunition or mony.

6. "The Monarchy of Spain ſhall remain in- "tire in the houſe of Auſtria, and no Prince of "the houſe of France ever become ſoverein of any "part thereof.

7. "France ſhall never poſſeſs the Spaniſh "Weſt-Indies, or trade thither.

8. 9. "The French King ſhall deliver up "Straſburg, Fort-Kehl and Briſac, to the Em- "peror.

10. "The French King ſhall poſſeſs Alſace, in "the literal ſenſe of the treaty of Munſter, except "Landau, which ſhall belong to the Emperor.

11. "He ſhall demoliſh New-Briſac, Fort- "Lewis and Hunninghen.

12. "Rheinfels ſhall be poſſeſs'd by the Land- "grave of Heſſe, till otherwiſe agreed.

13. "The clauſe concerning religion, in the "treaty of Ryſwick, ſhall be refered to the ne- "gociation.

14. 15. "The French King ſhall acknowlege "the Queen of Great-Britain, and the Proteſtant "ſucceſſion.

16. "The French King ſhall reſtore to Great- "Britain what he is poſſeſs'd of in Newfoundland, "and whatever either party has taken in the In- "dies ſhall be reſtored.

17. "Dunkirk ſhall be demoliſh'd.

18. "The Pretender ſhall retire out of France.

19. A treaty of commerce ſhall be ſettled with "Great-Britain.

20. "The King of Portugal ſhall injoy all that "is ſtipulated for him by the allies.

21. "The French King ſhall acknowlege the "King of Pruſſia, and not diſturb him in the in- "joyment of Neufchattel.

22. "The French King ſhall deliver up Furnes, "Menin, Ipres, Warneton, Commines, Wer- "wick, Poperingen, Liſle, Condé and Maubeuge, "for the barrier of the States.

23. "He ſhall reſtore all the towns and forts "he has taken in the Netherlands, with the ar- "tillery and ſtores, provided the Catholic reli- "gion ſhall ſtill be profeſſed there.

24. "None of the cannon or ſtores to be re- "moved from this time.

25. "The States, as to their commerce, ſhall "have what was ſtipulated at the treaty of Ryſ- "wick, and the Tariff of 1664 only ſhall be in "force.

26. "The French King ſhall acknowlege the "9th Electorate.

27. "The duke of Savoy ſhall injoy all that "has been yielded to him by the Emperor, and "whatever has been taken from him ſhall be re- "ſtored.

28. "The French King ſhall make over to him "Exilles, Feneſtrilles and Chamont, with the "vally of Pragelas, and all on this ſide the moun- "tains, for a barrier.

"29. The pretenſions of the Electors of Ba- "varia and Cologn ſhall be refer'd to the general "negociation; but the Elector Palatine to remain "in

Q. Ann, An' 1709.

" in poſſeſſion of the Upper-Palatinate, &c. The " gariſons of the States, &c. to remain in Huy, " Liege and Bonn, till otherwiſe agreed with the " Emperor and Empire.

30. 31. 32. " The farther demands, on either " ſide, ſhall not interrupt the ceſſation of arms: " the other allies being allowed to make farther " demands at the general congreſs.

33. 34. " The negociation ſhall be finiſh'd in " two months; and in the mean time a ceſſation " of arms be made.

35. " Upon the ratification of theſe articles, " the French King ſhall evacuate Namur, Mons, " Charleroy, Luxemburg, Condé, Tournay, Mau- " beuge, Newport, Furnes and Ipres, and raze " the fortifications of Dunkirk.

36. " The French King to execute what has been " ſtipulated, with reſpect to the other allies, with- " in two months after the concluſion of the treaty.

37. " And if he executes all that is above- " mentioned, and the whole monarchy of Spain " ſhall be delivered up to Charles III, as is ſti- " pulated, within the limited time, then the ceſ- " ſation of arms ſhall continue till the ratifications " of the peace.

38. " All this ſhall ſerve as the baſis and foun- " dation of the inſuing treaties of peace.

39. " The ratification of the preliminary ar- " ticles to be performed by the French King, " the Queen of Great-Britain and the States, be- " fore the 15th of June; and by the Emperor, " by the 1ſt of July, and what is ſtipulated in " favor of each of the allies reſpectively, to be " ſet about as ſoon as they have ratified the pre- " liminaries.

40. " The congreſs to begin the 20th of " June, at the Hague, and to prevent diſputes " about the ceremonial, no embaſſador ſhall take " upon him his character 'till the day of the " ſigning of the peace."

The marquis de Torcy was punctual to his word; for on the 4th of June, Prince Eugene received a letter at Bruſſels from him, to acquaint him, that the moſt Chriſtian King could not accept of the project of peace agreed upon at the Hague; and monſ. de Rouillé upon making the ſame declaration at the Hague, ſaid he in particular, excepted againſt the 10, 11, 28, 29, and 37 (1).

The negociation broke off.

The miniſters of the allies, having hereupon held a conference, among themſelves, came to a reſolution, that no alteration ought to be admited in the preliminary articles: monſ. de Rouillé hereupon declared, " that if the allies would be contented " with the fifth article in relation to Spain, without " inſiſting on the others relating to the delivering up " of the Spaniſh Monarchy, he thought the King of " France would be induced to depart from his other " exceptions;" but the miniſters of the allies continuing firm in their reſolutions, the negociation broke off, and monſ. de Rouillé returned to Paris.

The campain in Flanders open'd.

The allies being juſtly provoked by this unfair proceeding of France, reſolved to improve their late advantages, by a vigorous proſecution of the war; and tho' the campain in Flanders, which was the principal ſcene of action, for this year, was opened pretty late, it did not (as ſome imagined) proceed from any amuſement ariſing from the negociation of peace, but from the extraordinary backwardneſs of the ſeaſon, after an exceſſive hard winter, and the great rains which inſued: for the duke of Marlborough, truſting little to the ſhews of peace, had prepared every thing for opening the campain, as ſoon as he ſaw what might be expected from the court of France, and the ſeaſon would admit.

Q. Ann, An' 1709.

The confederate troops deſign'd for this campain, to the number of above 110,000 men, being aſſembled about Courtray and Menin, form'd the army, the 21ſt of June, N. S. near the laſt place, and march'd the 22d towards Liſle, incamping between Linſelle, Turcoin and Rabax. The next day, the duke of Marlborough and Prince Eugene put themſelves at the head of the army; the right wing of which, under the command of the latter, paſſed the Lower Deule, as did, at the ſame time, the left, under the duke, the Mark, and the army incamp'd in the plain of Liſle, on both ſides the Upper Deule.

The confederate army aſſembles.

They find it impracticable to attack the French camp.

The French army was in the mean time advantageouſly poſted, between Pont à Vendin, Cambrain and Beauvrain, their right and left being covered by moraſſes, made unpaſſable by the late tedious rains, and their front by ſome villages, which they had fortified, and their intrenchments were ſtrengthen'd by numberleſs outworks, double ditches, and batteries at convenient diſtances. The 25th, the lieutenant-generals Dopf and Cadogan were ſent out with detachments, to take a narrower view of the enemy, and, upon their report of the almoſt inſuperable difficulties, which muſt neceſſarily attend the attacking the enemy, in their advantageous and fortified camp, the duke of Marlborough, Prince Eugene and the field-deputies of the States, came to the reſolution to beſiege the important fortreſs of Tournay, the gariſon whereof, as well as of ſeveral other neighboring towns, had been very much weaken'd by the marſhal de Villars, to re-inforce his army, on the approach of the confederates. The generals kept this reſolution very private, and the more to increaſe the enemy's jealouſy, the artillery was ſent for up the Lys to Menin; and a council of war was held, the 26th, to take, as it was induſtriouſly reported, proper meaſures to attack the French. The baggage was hereupon ſent to Liſle, which confirm'd the belief in the armies that there would be an action.

Tournay inveſted.

The confederate troops being prepoſſeſs'd with this opinion, decamp'd, about nine in the evening, from the banks of the Deule, and march'd part of the night, without beat of drum or ſound of trumpet, towards the enemy; but they were ſurprized, when on a ſudden, they received orders to turn to the left, and arrived, the 27th before Tournay, which was ſoon after inveſted: ſo that the enemy, having no notice, nor ſo much as a ſuſpicion of this deſign, the place was ill-provided to hold out a ſiege, and the marſhall de Villars very much blamed on that acconnt, by thoſe who envied his former ſucceſſes (2).

The trenches before Tournay were opened the 7th

(1) As to the 10th he required Landau to be reſtored to him; to the 11th he would not conſent to the demoliſhing of Hunninghen, New Briſac, and fort Louis. He excepted againſt the whole 28, and would have it refer'd to a farther diſcuſſion: and for the 29th, would have it, likewiſe refer'd to the negociations of a general peace; with the proviſo that the upper Palatinate, &c. ſhould not be confirmed to the Elector Palatine, and that the intereſt of the Electors of Bavaria and Cologn ſhould be ſettled in the preliminaries: laſtly, as to the 37th, he would have the term inlarg'd for delivering up the Spaniſh Monarchy: but conſented to recall his own troops out of Spain, by the time limited. Lediard's Life of Marlborough, Vol. II. p. 439.

(2) Thus was this great general, famous for nothing more than his ſtratagems, outdone in his own way, and caught in his own ſnare, while he was huging himſelf in his own ſecurity. He thought himſelf ſo ſecure of his intelligence, that of the three attacks which the allies made a ſhew of attempting, he pretended to conclude two feign'd and one only real, to oppoſe

Q. Ann, An' 1709.

7th of July, and the allies having taken poſſeſſion of St. Amand and Mortagne, two poſts neceſſary to cover the ſiege, and the artillery being arrived, the attacks advanced with ſucceſs. I ſhall not detain the reader with the particulars of this ſiege, which was carried on as uſual; but only obſerve, that the beſiegers making the neceſſary preparations for a general ſtorm, on the 28th, the beſieged prevented it by deſiring to capitulate; and the gariſon, according to agreement, march'd into the citadel, which held out till the 3d of September, and then ſurrender'd, on condition, that all the officers and ſoldiers ſhould retain their ſwords and baggage, and be permited to return into France, provided they did not ſerve, till a like number of officers and ſoldiers of the allies, ſhould be exchanged for them (1).

Beſiged,

And taken.

The ſiege of Mons reſolv'd on.

The important town and citadel of Tournay (which the French thought impregnable, as appeared by the lofty inſcription they had cauſed to be affix'd to one of the half moons) being ſurrendered to the victorious arms of the allies, the duke of Marlborough and Prince Eugene were immediately intent on new exploits, and reſolved upon another as important conqueſt as that of Mons, the capital of the province of Hainault. But the marſhal de Villars having poſſeſs'd himſelf of the ſtrong camp of Blaregnies or Malplacquet, in the woods of Sart or Sanſart, it was found impracticable to form the ſiege, till the French were driven from that poſt; which brought on the bloodieſt battle that ever was fought in that country (2).

Situation of the enemy's army.

The 8th of September, the duke of Marlborough, Prince Eugene, and monſ. Goſlinga, one of the field-deputies of the States, with a ſufficient guard, ſpent the whole day in viewing the ground between the two armies; and when they came over againſt Blaugies and Lamberchies, they diſcovered the enemy's whole army, which was in motion, and poſting themſelves in the plain of Blaugies. The next morning, the French made a motion as if their deſign was to march towards Boſſu: but the confederate-generals, advancing to take a narrow view of their army, ſoon perceived, that the motion of their left was only a feint to cover the march of their right, which filed off at the ſame time, and poſſeſs'd themſelves of the woods of Lagniere, la Merte, Taiſniere, and Sart, with the hedges that incompaſs them, where they placed their infantry; and, taking poſſeſſion likewiſe of the hedges of a village call'd Placquet, or Malplacquet, ranged their cavalry in the openings between theſe woods. The confederate-generals, hereupon, order'd their army to march by the left, and face the enemy, the right extending to Sart, the left to Bleron, on the edge of the wood of Blagniere, where they placed their cannon; the center being near Bleron, and the head-quarters not far from thence at Blaregnies. By this means, the left of the confederate army came ſo near to the enemy, about two in the afternoon, that they cannonaded each other till the evening. But the right wing of the allies being too far off to come up to the place of action in time, there was too little day-light left to attack the enemy. The duke of Marlborough, Prince Eugene, and the Prince Royal of Pruſſia, therefore paſs'd the night with monſ. Goſlinga, that they might be ready if the enemy ſhould make any attempt. But tho' they were much ſuperior in number, and more eſpecially in infantry; yet they were ſo far from deſigning to attack the allies, that, on the contrary, they began to fortify their camp (tho' it was, by nature, very ſtrong and advantageous) with all the induſtry and application imaginable. Beſide the thick hedges, which, like a chain, ran along their whole camp, they made deep lines to cover their foot; and, on their right, caſt up three intrenchments, one behind the other, tho' the acceſs was without that very difficult, becauſe of a marſhy ground which lay before them. Their center, which was in a little plain, was likewiſe ſecured by ſeveral intrenchments, defended, in convenient places, with a good artillery; and beſide all this, they cut down a great number of trees, which they laid a-croſs the ways to obſtruct the paſſage of the confederate-horſe: they alſo cut down the hedges, behind their lines, for the more eaſy march of their cavalry to ſupport their infantry, as occaſion might require; ſo that their camp might not be very improperly call'd a regular, fortified citadel.

Q. Ann, An' 1709.

Prince Eugene and the duke of Marlborough, on the other hand, who had, on the 9th, in concert with monſ. Goſlinga, taking the reſolution to attack the French, finding, on the 10th, that they had made uſe of the preceding night to improve the advantage of their ſituation, reſolved only, without altering their deſign, to put off the execution of it till they were re-inforced by eighteen battalions, which had been imploy'd in the ſiege of Tournay. To theſe, orders were immediately diſpatch'd, that they ſhould march, with all poſſible expedition, to join the grand army, which they did, that very night, under the command of count Lottum and baron Schulemburg.

The troops that came from Tournay, having, on the 11th of September, in the morning, joined the right wing, over-againſt the wood by Sart, where the enemy's left was poſted, Prince Eugene, the duke of Marlborough, and the field-deputies, viz. meſſieurs Rantwyck, Hooft, and Goſlinga, rode together, along the line, between the two armies, and ſeveral men were, in their preſence, kill'd by the enemy's cannon ſhot. A little after eight o'clock, the ſignal for the attack being given, by a diſcharge of fifty pieces of cannon, and the cannonoppoſe which he detach'd ſeventy-three battalions, and order'd 100 pieces of cannon to be placed on the eminences thereabouts. Nay, his vanity and ſecurity was ſo great, that a trumpeter of the confederate-army happening to be in his camp, he ſent a meſſage by him to the generals of the allies, to acquaint them, "that he wondered at their delay, and that, if his intrench-"ments were in their way, he would order them to be levell'd immediately." Rouſſet hiſt. mil. du Pr. Eugene, &c. Tome II. p. 215.

---

The marquis de Quincy, not to allow that monſ. de Villars was outwited in this manner, pretends the duke of Marlborough was obliged to undertake this ſiege to ſtop the mouths of his troops, who murmured at his not attacking the French camp, in order to beſiege Ipres, which was his real deſign, till he found it impracticable, on account of the good diſpoſitions made by the marſhal. Hiſt. mil. de Louis le grand.

(1) "The manner of fighting in this ſiege (ſays the author of the Tatler) diſcovered a gallantry in our men, unknown to "former ages; their meeting with adverſe parties under ground, where every ſtep was taken with apprehenſions of being "blown up with mines below them, or cruſhed by the fall of the earth above them, and all this acted in darkneſs, has "ſomething in it more terrible than ever is met with in any other part of a ſoldier's duty: however this was performed with "great chearfulneſs. Vol. II. p. 60.

(2) This battle was the more remarkable, in that it was, in reality, a battle between two ſeparate armies on each ſide. Prince Eugene commanded a compleat army of 50,000 men, with wings of horſe, on the right and left; and the duke of Marlborough another intire army, of which the Engliſh form'd the right, and the Dutch the left. On the other ſide, the marſhal de Villars commanded a ſeparate army of the French, on the left, drawn up againſt that of Prince Eugene, and the marſhal de Bouflers (who arrived at the French camp the 7th) another upon the right, which ingaged that under the command of the duke of Marlborough.

Q. Ann, An' 1709.

ading continuing very briſk on both ſides, Prince Eugene advanc'd with his right into the wood of Sart; and thirty-ſix battalions of that wing, commanded by general Schulemburg, the duke of Argyle, and other generals, and twenty-two other battalions, under the command of count Lottum, attack'd the enemy with ſuch bravery, that, notwithſtanding the barricadoes of fell'd trees, and other impediments they met in their way, after an hour's reſiſtance, they drove the French out of their intrenchments, in the woods of Sart, and Taiſniere. The deſign of this attack was to drive the enemy out of the wood, and then to attack them in the flank of their intrenchments on the plain; which ſucceeded very happily, and thereby all the enemy's infantry on the left wing were ruin'd. General Withers, with nineteen battalions, attack'd the enemy in another intrenchment, beyond the woods of Taiſniere and Great-Blagniere, with the like vigor and good ſucceſs. Thirty-ſix Dutch battalions, commanded by the Prince of Naſſau-Frieſeland (or Orange) and baron Fagel, who attack'd the enemy's right, poſted in the wood of la Merte, and in an opening, cover'd with three intrenchments, met with greater reſiſtance, and loſt abundance of men before they could penetrate into the intrenchments. The fight was here deſperate; but the Dutch ſoon drove the enemy from off their advantageous ground into their intrenchment, taking their colors. They likewiſe drove them out of their firſt intrenchment; but as they were marching on to the ſecond, they were charg'd with a great deal of vivacity by the enemy, and obliged to retire to their former poſts. The duke of Marlborough hereupon order'd lieutenant-general Withers, to march with the body under his immediate direction, to ſuſtain them; but, upon farther deliberation, and notice that the lieutenant-general was actually ingag'd with the enemy, and that all things went well on the right, his grace thought fit rather to preſs on the advantages there, than to hazard a new motion towards the left, in the heat of the action. As ſoon as the enemy's left went to retire, and draw off their cannon, the duke of Marlborough commanded the earl of Orkney, with fifteen battalions, to attack them, and force them from their intrenchments in the plain, between the woods of Sart and Janſart, with directions, if he ſucceeded, to poſt himſelf there, and cover the horſe, as they ſhould file off, thro' the woods into the plain, in order to charge the enemy's cavalry, which were there drawn up. This was executed with ſuch reſolution and ſucceſs, that after a ſhort diſpute, the enemy quited thoſe intrenchments; which gave the horſe an opportunity to enter them: and tho' the firſt ſquadrons, led by the Prince of Heſſe, had much ado to form themſelves, and were put into ſome diſorder by the French King's houſhold troops, yet being immediately rallied by the duke of Marlborough, and ſeconded by the ſquadrons of Prince Eugene's army, they advanced together into the plain. Being there cover'd by their own foot, and having formed themſelves into very good order, they charg'd the enemy's cavalry, who being ſoon broke and defeated, their whole army fell into diſorder, and made off towards the plain of Bavay, leaving ſome of their cannon behind them. The allies made a good uſe of the begining of the victory, and all their troops moved on with freſh reſolution. General Vinck having with the horſe ſurrounded ſeveral battalions of the enemy's right, ſummon'd them to ſurrender priſoners of war, but the French being cover'd by a moraſs, made their retreat along the edge of a wood; three regiments of Daniſh cavalry falling at the ſame time on the enemy, made a terrible ſlaughter among them, till having gain'd a ſecond wood, they found means to eſcape. Eighteen ſquadrons being detach'd to indeavor to diſperſe them in their retreat towards Quievrain, met their whole left wing on this ſide the little river Quaiſnau, conſiſting of about 100 ſquadrons, commanded by the marſhal de Bouflers in perſon, and perceiving only at firſt the enemy's rear, poſted at the corner of a wood, the dragoons made up to them, and drove them without reſiſtance. But colonel de la Lippe, and a cornet, advancing too far, were taken, without being perceiv'd by their own men. The wood being forc'd, the eighteen ſquadrons advanc'd into the plain, but perceiving before them the enemy's whole left wing, in three columns, one of which retreated in good order, the other two in ſome confuſion, they made a ſhort halt, and were ſomewhat ſurprized to ſee the enemy face about, and draw up in order of battle. However this ſmall body of the confederate horſe kept their ground, and poſted themſelves upon an eminence, with the wood of Elonge on their right, expecting to be attack'd; but they immediately perceiv'd, that the enemy made a ſtand, with no other deſign than to paſs a gutter that was in their way to a defilee, leading to Bavay, which they gained before the allies, who purſued them full gallop, could come up with them. However the latter followed the chaſe as far as the village of Quievrain, where the French having poſted a brigade of foot, and, at the ſame time, ſome of their ſquadrons poſting themſelves on an advantageous ground near the little river of Haiſnau, the confederates thought fit to give over the purſuit, and ſo the enemy paſſed that rivulet, and marched unmoleſted to Bavay. The reſt of their broken army retired in great confuſion, ſome to Maubeuge and Valenciennes, and others to Condé, leaving the allies in poſſeſſion of the field of battle, with ſixteen of their cannon, twenty colors, twenty-ſix ſtandards, and other indiſputable marks of victory; not to mention abundance of priſoners. Some of theſe were taken in the action, others in the purſuit, and the far greater number the next morning in Bavay, and other neighboring places, either their wearineſs or wounds not permiting them to follow the groſs of their army, which having that night paſs'd the rivulet of Ronelle, incamp'd with their right at Queſnoy, extending their left towards Valenciennes.

The battle of Blareignies, or Malplaquet.

The allies gain the victory.

The confederate generals upon viewing, after the battle, the advantageous poſts from whence they had driven the enemy, were themſelves aſtoniſh'd to ſee what difficulties they had ſurmounted; and indeed all the troops, as well officers as ſoldiers, ſhew'd as great reſolution, intrepidity and firmneſs, in this obſtinate action, as were ever known in theſe latter times, or ſtand recorded in ancient hiſtory. The enemy, whether incouraged by their intrenchments, or animated by the ſhame of their former defeats, fought with a bravery beyond what was expected from them, from half an hour paſt eight in the morning, 'till half an hour paſt two in the afternoon. They were however at length forced to yield to the ſuperior courage and good fortune of the allies, whoſe generals, the great duke of Marlborough, and the brave Prince Eugene, the gallant count Tilly, and the Prince of Naſſau, were, during the whole fight, continually at the head of their troops, in the hoteſt of the fire.

Bravery of the confederate troops.

Great numbers fell in this bloody action; and the allies frankly own'd, that they had above 18,000 men, either killed or wounded, according to the underwritten liſt (1)

Of

(1) "Had this ingagement, (ſays the author of the Tatler) happen'd in the time of the old Romans, and ſuch things "been acted in their ſervice, there would not be a foot of the wood, which was pierced, but had been conſecrated to ſome deity, "or

Q. Ann, An' 1709.

Loſs of the confederates.

Of Prince Eugene's army.

Nations and Bodies.	Battal.	Col. Killed	Col. Wounded	L.Col. Killed	L.Col. Wounded	Maj. Killed	Maj. Wounded	Capt. Killed	Capt. Wounded	Subalt. Killed	Subalt. Wounded	Serj. and com. Sol. Killed	Serj. and com. Sol. Wounded	Total killed and wounded
Imperialiſts.	7	0	3	1	1	0	0	2	6	4	11	183	307	518
Danes.	8	1	1	1	2	0	2	5	9	8	42	519	694	1284
Saxons.	7	1	1	1	2	0	2	3	6	10	22	184	477	709
Palatines.	7	0	0	0	2	1	2	1	9	1	7	83	253	359
Dutch.	12	2	0	2	1	1	2	7	23	16	44	683	818	1590
Heſſians.	6	0	2	0	1	1	1	1	12	5	20	128	350	527
Wirtembergers.	3	0	0	0	1	0	0	1	2	11	15	120	272	422

Q. Ann, An' 1709.

Of the duke of Marlborough's army.

Nations and Bodies.	Battal.	Col. Killed	Col. Wounded	L.Col. Killed	L.Col. Wounded	Maj. Killed	Maj. Wounded	Capt. Killed	Capt. Wounded	Subalt. Killed	Subalt. Wounded	Serj. and com. Sold. Killed	Serj. and com. Sold. Wounded	Total killed and wounded.
Britiſh.	19	4	2	4	3	0	3	13	26	13	61	541	541	1866
Pruſſians.	18	2	4	1	1	1	6	2	17	9	33	294	294	1203
Hanoverians.	12	0	1	1	2	0	4	2	12	10	44	285	285	1417
Dutch.	30	6	6	5	11	5	14	42	116	85	242	2238	2268	8463
Sum total.	129	16	20	16	27	9	36	79	238	169	441	5238	5258	18353

And of the French.

The French were very induſtrious in leſſening and concealing their loſs to the public: but ſome private accounts from their army own'd, that they had about 540 officers kill'd on the ſpot, and 1068 wounded; beſide 301 taken priſoners: and the number of their private men, killed, wounded or taken, was modeſtly computed at 15,000 (1).

The marſhal de Bouflers wrote two letters to his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty to leſſen and conceal the loſs his army had ſuſtain'd, one the day of the battle, the other two days after, thro' the vanity and adulation of which, the advantage the confederate army had over that of the enemy, was, however, ſufficiently diſcover'd: and the greater the reſiſtance on that ſide was (which the marſhal extols above the ſkies, and makes every one to

" or made memorable by the death of him, who expired in it, for the ſake of his country. It had been ſaid on ſome " monument at the entrance, Here the duke of Argyle drew his ſword, and ſaid March. Here Webb, after having an " accompliſh'd fame for gallantry, expoſed himſelf like a common ſoldier. Here Rivet, who was wounded at the begining " of the day, and carried off as dead, returned into the field, and received his death. Medals had been ſtruck for our " generals behavior when he firſt came into the plain. Here was the fury of the action, and here the hero ſtood as fearleſs " as if invulnerable. Such certainly had been the cares of that ſtate for their own honor, and gratitude to their heroic " ſubjects.

" The wood intrench'd, the plain made more impaſſable than the wood, and all the difficulties oppoſed to the moſt gallant " army, and moſt intrepid leaders, that ever the Sun ſhone on, would each have furniſh'd matter for the ableſt pens to have " recorded them in eulogiums and panegyrics

(1) In the marſhal's account of this action, we muſt make ſome allowance for the vivacity of a French genius, and the neceſſity he lay under of blinding the old King his maſter, and hiding his loſs: and indeed he trifles ſo egregiouſly, that it is difficult to account for his want of reſpect to his ſoverein; unleſs we will ſuppoſe he believed his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty in the ſtate of dotage, and that the moſt palpable falſities, when covered with glavering flattery would go down. Lediard's life of Marlborough, Vol. II. p. 533.

We have theſe letters very prettily epitomized in the Tatler, in the following words:

SIR,

" This is to let your Majeſty underſtand, that to your immortal honor, and the deſtruction of the confederates, your troops " have loſt another battle. Artagnan did wonders; Rohan perform'd miracles; Guiche did wonders, Gattion perform'd mi- " racles; the whole army diſtinguiſhed themſelves, and every body did wonders. And to conclude the wonders of the day, I " can aſſure your Majeſty, that tho' you have loſt the field of battle, you have not loſt an inch of ground. The enemy marched " behind us with reſpect, and we ran away from them as bold as lions."

have

Q. Ann. An' 1709.

have performed wonders) the greater was the glory of the allies, in ſurmounting ſuch difficulties; and obtaining a compleat victory, in ſpite of ſo much valor and conduct.

It is hard to ſay, whether theſe letters contain more inſtances of vanity and flattery, or more inconſiſtencies; but the latter are too palpable to need any illuſtration; I ſhall therefore, only aſk, "if "the French officers and troops perform'd ſuch "wonders, as even ſurpaſs'd human nature (as "monſieur de Bouflers expreſſes himſelf) what muſt "not thoſe officers and troops of the confederate "army have done, who ſubdued theſe ſupernatural "perſons, and drove them from the field of battle, "their fortified camp, and treble intrenchments? "Sure they muſt have been ſomething more than "ſupernatural!" and as for the pretended ſuperiority of the number of the confederate troops, tho' it be not ſo in fact, yet ſuppoſing it to be truth, and that they had been twice the number, the advantages of the enemy's camp, as well with regard to the ſituation as the fortifications of it, rendered the attempt very hazardous, and the glory of the victory incomparable.

Mons beſieged and taken.

After the victory of Blaregnies or Malplacquet, the confederate army march'd towards Mons, to which the retreat of the French had now left a free paſſage. That city was inveſted the 21ſt of September, and ſurrendered the 20th of the inſuing month of October (1); which finiſhed the campain in Flanders, and both armies went into winter-quarters. The duke of Marlborough, having ſetled the repartition, arrived at the Hague the 3d of November, as did Prince Eugene the 7th. The 12th their highneſſes had a long conference with ſome of the deputies of the States, in which ſeveral important affairs relating to the inſuing campain were ſetled.

France makes new advances towards a peace.

The campain in the Netherlands was no ſooner at an end, than the French court thought fit to make new advances, towards ſeting a negociation for a peace on foot again. To this end, ſignior Foſcarini, the Venetian embaſſador, who came to Holland about this time, took a turn to Amſterdam, to feel the pulſes of the Burgo-maſters of that city. On the other hand, monſieur Pettecum, reſident of the duke of Holſtein at the Hague, who had been imploy'd the laſt winter, underhand, in the negociation of peace, and had ſince continued to hold a correſpondence with the marquis de Torcy, made ſome new overtures on the ſide of France, and deſired paſſes for their commiſſioners to come to the Hague. The Imperial, Britiſh and Dutch miniſters, having taken this matter into conſideration, and a report of their conferences having been made to the aſſembly of the States-general, their High-mightineſſes refuſed the paſſes, but conſented, that monſieur Pettecum ſhould go to the French court, purſuant to their deſire, to know what farther offers they had to make. That miniſter accordingly ſet out for Paris, about the middle of November, as did, not many days after, the duke of Marlborough for London, and Prince Eugene for Vienna.

Monſieur Pettecum goes for that end, to Paris.

The duke of Marlborough departs for England.

Monſ. Pettecum was received at the court of France with more reſpect than was due to a miniſter of ſuch inferior rank; and with an affected oſtentation, to make the murmuring and half famiſh'd people believe, peace was near; not without ſome vain inſinuations, that he was ſent from the allies themſelves, to make advances towards it; tho' nothing is more certain, than that he had no ſuch power or direction given him on their parts. He confer'd for ſome days, with the marquis de Torcy, and the other French miniſters, and having received a preſent for the trouble and expences of his journey, he returned to the Hague with the anſwer, and the propoſals of the court of France.

Monſ. Pettecum returns to the Hague.

The propoſals made by France rejected.

Theſe propoſals having been examined by the States-general, were unanimouſly rejected with diſdain, and vigorous reſolutious thereupon taken for the continuation of the war.

Campain on the Rhine;

The Elector of Hanover, who commanded the Imperial army on the Rhine, having conſented to ſend large detachments, this campain, to Flanders, could not attempt any thing of moment himſelf in thoſe parts: he therefore only ſent count Merci into the Upper Alſace, to make a diverſion, but he was ſurprized by the French general, count de Bourg, and defeated.

And in the north.

The northern affairs having no immediate connexion with thoſe of the grand alliance, I have only mentioned them on occaſion of the duke of Marborough's journey into Saxony, in the year 1707. The fatal turn of affairs to the diſadvantage of the King of Sweden, which happen'd this year, being, as it were, the conſequence of the counſels and meaſures which were thought to be concerted when the duke was there, and in which, it was believed, he had no ſmall hand, I ſhall juſt hint at them. This great but unfortunate Monarch, having reſolv'd to invade Muſcovy, and being fluſh'd with the ſucceſs he had met with in Poland, thinking to dethrone the Czar with the ſame eaſe he had done Auguſtus, ingaged himſelf ſo far in the Ukraine, that there was no poſſibility of his retreating; and this brought ſuch a cataſtrophe on his affairs, that he was never able to diſintangle himſelf from, till death put a ſtop to the career of his intrepidity.

He ingaged a great body of Coſſacs to join him, who were eaſily drawn to revolt from the Czar: he had met with great misfortunes in the end of the foregoing year, but nothing could divert him from his deſigns againſt Muſcovy: he paſs'd the Nieper and beſieged Pultowa. The Czar march'd to raiſe the ſiege, with an army much ſuperior in number to the Swedes; but the King of Sweden, who had not forgoten the battle of Narva, where he triumph'd with a far greater inequality of number, reſolved to venture on a battle, in which he received ſuch a total defeat that he loſt his camp, his artillery, and his baggage: a great part of his army got off, for the preſent; but being cloſely purſued by the Muſcovites, and having neither bread nor ammunition, they were all made priſoners of war. The King himſelf, with a ſmall number about him, paſs'd the Nieper, and got into the Turkiſh dominions, where he ſettled, and was under a ſort of voluntary, tho' unavoidable confinement, at a town of Moldavia call'd Bender. This fatal day ſet Auguſtus again on the throne of Poland, and freed the allies from all apprehenſions of this enterprizing Prince's intermedling between them and the common enemy, to the ſupport of the latter.

Maritime affairs.

Our affairs at ſea this year were very inconſiderable, I ſhall therefore be as brief in my relation of them; and paſſing by thoſe in the channel and

(1) The ſpeedy reduction of this important place, after the memorable and bloody battle of Malplacquet, was a plain demonſtration, that the allies obtain'd, in that action, ſomething more ſubſtantial than the name of a victory; ſince the enemy, who had hazarded a battle to prevent the ſiege of this town, did not make the leaſt motion to relieve it; notwithſtanding the aſſurances given by the marſhal de Villars and Bouflers to his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty, that he would not loſe an inch of ground by that action; and their boaſting of marching towards the confederate army, if the King's ſervice required it. Lediard's life of Marlborough, Vol. II. p. 553.

the

Q. Ann, An.' 1709.

the Soundings, which conſiſted chiefly in ingagements between ſingle ſhips, ſhall only take notice of the ſquadron under ſir George Byng, admiral of the blue, who, towards the latter end of the year 1708, was appointed to carry the Queen of Portugal to Liſbon. Her Majeſty being arrived at Portſmoth, from Holland, under convoy of a Britiſh ſquadron, commanded by rear-admiral Baker, went on board the Royal Ann, the 6th of October; and the next morning, the fleet commanded by admiral Byng ſailed from Spithead, arrived the 14th at Caſcais, and the 16th went up the river of Liſbon, where her Majeſty was received with great ſtate and magnificence. About the middle of November, he received orders to proceed to Port-Mahon, and to winter in the Mediterranean, leaving ſir John Jennings at Liſbon. The 27th of December, he got under ſail, and the 12th of January 1709, after having ſuffered much by tempeſtuous weather, which had ſeparated his ſquadron, he arrived at Port-Mahon, where he found moſt of his ſhips arrived before him. Here he diſpatch'd orders to ſir Edward Whitaker, who was on the coaſt of Italy, to join him, which he did, on the 19th of February, with about 3500 men, land-forces, general Stanhope being arrived the 14th. With theſe troops, and the general, he put to ſea, with a deſign to relieve the caſtle of Alicant. The 5th of April, he arrived in that bay, but after ſome attempts, finding the relief of that place impracticable, the 7th the general ſent a flag of truce on ſhoar, with propoſals for ſurrendering the caſtle, which being agreed to, the gariſon was imbarked.

The admiral now proceeded towards Barcelona, and, in his way, landed general Stanhope, with the troops at Terragona; at Port Mahon, he was joined by ſir John Jennings, whom he had ordered to meet him there. Having diſpatch'd ſome ſhips for Genoa and Final, he ordered ſir John Jennings to guard the corn-ſhips to Barcelona, where ſir George joined him, the 8th of June, with the reſt of the Britiſh and Dutch men of war, and there ſir Edward Whitaker likewiſe arrived, with his ſquadron from Italy, and above 2000 recruits for the army.

The whole fleet being now together, a council of war was called to conſider how it might be imployed; and the reſolution was, that ſir John Jennings ſhould return to guard the coaſt of Portugal; and ſir George Byng ſail to a ſtation ten leagues S. of Cape-Toulon, to intercept the enemy's troops, and as much as poſſible to alarm them. They both ſailed together, and ſir George arrived before Toulon the 21ſt of June, where having cruiſed ſome time he returned to Barcelona-road.

There were now two grand ſchemes propoſed, one for the reduction of Sicily, at which ſir Edward Whitaker was to command, and the other an attempt on Cadiz, on which the admiral propoſed to proceed himſelf, with general Stanhope; but both deſigns came to nothing, partly becauſe the Dutch could not aſſiſt them for want of proviſions, and partly becauſe the ſhips were required by the King of Spain for ſo many particular ſervices, that it was impoſſible to keep a ſufficient body together. Our ſhips were however, after their being cleaned at Port Mahon, ſucceſsful in taking a great number of prizes. Among others, they took twenty-two loaden with corn, three ſhips from Turky, three from Marſeiles, and three from Carthagena, the Dutch having ſeized on three more. The Antelope and Worceſter, having been cruiſing up the Levant, took three French merchant-ſhips, and when ſir Edward Whitaker appeared, with his ſquadron, off of Roſes, he diſcovered there about forty imbarkations, which were imployed to tranſport proviſions to the enemy's army in the Ampourdan, thirty of which he took; whereby they were put to great Streights, for want of the ſupplies they hoped for by ſea: however theſe advantages were but ſmall, in conſideration of the great expence of the fleet.

Q. Ann, An' 1709.

Sir George Byng being arrived at Gibraltar, and not finding there the ſquadron he expected, under rear-admiral Baker, with the troops intended for the attempt on Cadiz, that deſign was wholly laid aſide, and it was reſolved, at a council of war, that ſir Edward Whitaker ſhould remain with a ſquadron in the Streights, and ſir George return to Great-Britain: purſuant to which reſolution, he paſs'd the Streights, the 22d of September, and arrived at Spithead the 25th of October. The troops I have mentioned above were imbark'd about the middle of Auguſt; but being long detained, on the coaſt of England, by contrary winds, did not make the coaſt of Portugal till the begining of October; and then, by the directions of the earl of Galway, ſailed directly for Barcelona.

Affairs in Spain and Portugal.

In Spain, this ſummer paſs'd over without any conſiderable action: there was indeed an ingagement on the frontiers of Portugal, in which the Portugueſe behaved themſelves very ill, and were beaten; and which occaſioned the loſs of three regiments, chiefly Engliſh-men, which were taken priſoners together with their officers: among whom were major-general Sankey, the earl of Barrimore, and brigadier Pearce. The Spaniards, however, did not purſue the advantage they had by this action; for they, apprehending that our fleet might have a deſign upon ſome part of their Southern-coaſts, were forced to draw their troops from the frontiers of Portugal, to defend them: tho' we gave them no diſturbance on that ſide.

The King of France, to make it more believed he deſign'd a peace, withdrew his troops out of Spain, but, at the ſame time, took care to incourage the Spaniſh nobility, and to ſupport his grandſon: and ſince it was viſible, that either the Spaniards or the allies, were to be deceived by him, it was much more reaſonable to believe, that the allies, and not the Spaniards, were to feel the effects of his fraudulent proceedings. The French general Beſons, who commanded in Arragon, had indeed orders not to venture on a battle, for that would have been to act too groſs and open, to be, in any wiſe, palliated; but he continued all this ſummer commanding their armies. In Catalonia, count Stahremberg, after he received re-inforcements from Italy, advanced towards the Segra, and having, for ſome days, amuſed the enemy, he paſſed the River. The Spaniards deſign'd to give him battle; but Beſons refuſed to ingage: this provoked the Spaniards ſo much, that King Philip, after having writ to monſ. Beſons, thought it was neceſſary to leave Madrid, and go to the army: Beſons produced his orders from the King of France, to avoid all ingagements, with which he ſeemed much mortified. Stahremberg advanced and took Balaguer, and made the gariſon priſoners of war; and with that the campain, on that ſide, was at an end.

In Dauphiny.

Nothing of importance paſs'd on the ſide of Dauphiny: the Emperor continued ſtill to refuſe complying with the duke of Savoy's demands, about ſome territories in the duchy of Milan, which were to have been deliver'd to him: ſo he would not make the campain in perſon, and his troops kept on the defenſive. On the other hand, the French, as they ſaw they were to be feebly attack'd, were too weak to do any thing more than to cover their own country.

Affairs of Ireland.

Before I return to England, I ſhall juſt ſay a word word or two of the affairs of Ireland. The earl of Wharton, having been appointed lord-lieutenant, arrived at Dublin the 21ſt of April. The 5th of May, the parliament met, and his excellency made a ſpeech to both houſes, in which he recommended "the conſideration of ſome new bills to prevent "the growth of Popery, and cultivate a good "underſtanding among Proteſtants, of whatever "denomination; and urged them, in her Majeſty's "name, to a perfect union and friendſhip among "themſelves, from a conſideration of the happy "union between England and Scotland."

Q. Ann, An' 1709.

The lords, in an addreſs to his excellency, took the opportunity, from this, to obſerve; "that "her Majeſty did, with juſtice, account the union "one of the greateſt glories of her reign; and, "on this occaſion, they begg'd leave to hope, in "due time, her Majeſty would perfect that great "work, by bringing her kingdom of Ireland alſo "into the union: and they depended upon his "excellency's goodneſs, that as he had been ſo con-"ſiderable an inſtrument in effecting the one, ſo "he would contribute his good offices to accom-"pliſh the other:" but his excellency anſwered, that he had no directions from her Majeſty to ſay any thing on that ſubject. Nothing remarkable having happen'd farther in this parliament, I ſhall only mention, that the lord-lieutenant came to the houſe of peers, the 30th of Auguſt, and having given the royal aſſent to the bills that were ready, prorogued the parliament to the 13th of March next inſuing.

Having thus taken a view of the moſt material tranſactions abroad, during the year 1709, I ſhall now mention ſome domeſtic occurrences which happened in the ſame ſpace of time.

The poor Palatines come to England.

This ſummer came over from Holland ſix or 7000 poor people, who were recommended as great objects of charity, having been driven, as it was ſaid, out of their own country, by the French; and to excite the benevolence of well-diſpoſed people, they called themſelves Proteſtant Palatines, and ſo probably the groſs of them were, tho' it afterwards appeared, that many Papiſts herded among them. They were, for ſome time, provided for by the government, and being furniſhed with tents from the Tower, they incamp'd on Blackheath, and in a large field near Camberwel, where the compaſſionate citizens made them charitable viſits; and afterwards a brief was procured to raiſe money for them, which moſt of the biſhops incouraged by circular letters. However, it was thought convenient in the end, to ſend ſome of them back again, and others to Ireland and the plantations.

Addreſſes of the city and lieutenancy of London.

Upon advice of the glorious action and compleat victory of Malplacquet, the lord-mayor, aldermen, and ſheriffs of the loyal city of London, in their formalities, waited on the Queen at Windſor, on the 10th of September, with an addreſs of congratulation, on that account. The 17th of the ſame month, the lord-mayor, and the reſt of her Majeſty's commiſſioners of lieutenancy for the city of London, preſented an humble addreſs to her Majeſty, on the ſame occaſion.

Proclamations for a thankſgiving.

The third of October, her Majeſty in council ordered proclamations to be iſſued, for a general and public thankſgiving, to be obſerved, on the 27d of November, for the ſignal and glorious ſucceſs of her Majeſty's arms, and thoſe of her allies, this campain.

The plague at Dantzick.

The plague being this year at Dantzick, and ſeveral other towns in the Baltick, an order of council was publiſh'd, that all ſhips, coming from thoſe parts to England ſhould perform quarentain.

Commiſſioners of the admiralty.

The begining of November, the Queen appointed Edward earl of Orford, ſir John Leake, ſir George Byng, George Dodington, eſq; and Paul Methuen, eſq; commiſſioners for executing the office of lord high-admiral of Great-Britain and Ireland, in the room of the earl of Pembroke; on whom her Majeſty was pleaſed to beſtow a penſion of 3000 l. per annum, payable out of the revenue of the poſt-office, in conſideration of his eminent ſervices.

Q. Ann, An' 1709.

Promotion of admirals.

She likewiſe appointed Matthew Aylmer, eſq; admiral and commander in chief of her Majeſty's fleet; the lord Durſley, vice-admiral; and Charles Wager, eſq; rear-admiral of the red; ſir John Jennings admiral, and ſir Edward Whitaker, vice-admiral of the white; and ſir John Norris admiral, and John Baker, eſq; vice-admiral of the blue.

The duke of Marlborough arrives at St James's.

The 8th of November, the duke of Marlborough landed at Alborough in Suffolk, from Holland, and, on the 10th, came to St. James's.

The parliament of Great-Britain meets.

The 15th of November, the parliament of Great-Britain met, and the Queen being come to the houſe of peers, and the commons ſent for up, her Majeſty made the following moſt gracious ſpeech to both houſes:

My lords and gentlemen,

The Queen's ſpeech to both houſes:

"It is a great ſatisfaction to me, that I am able "to give you ſo good an account of the progreſs "of the war, ſince the laſt ſeſſion of parliament.

"In the begining of this year, our enemies "made uſe of all their artifices, to amuſe us with "falſe appearances, and deceitful inſinuations of "their deſire of peace, in hopes that from hence, "means might be found to create ſome diviſions "or jealouſies among the allies; but they were "intirely diſappointed in their expectations, and "ſuch meaſures were taken on that occaſion, as "made it impoſſible for them long to diſguiſe "their inſincerity. The operations of the war "were not delay'd; and the campain, which, not-"withſtanding the backwardneſs of the ſeaſon "immediately followed, has been at leaſt as glo-"rious for the allies, as any of thoſe which have "preceded it.

"God Almighty has been pleaſed to bleſs us "with a moſt remarkable victory, and with ſuch "other great and important ſucceſſes, both before "and after it, that France is thereby become much "more expoſed and open to the impreſſion of our "arms, and conſequently more in need of a peace, "than it was in the begining of this campain.

"However, the war ſtill continuing, I find "myſelf obliged again to deſire you, gentlemen of "the houſe of commons, to grant me ſuch ſupplies "as you ſhall judge neceſſary for the aſſiſting our "allies in all parts, and the vigorous proſecution of "our advantages; that we may put the laſt hand "to this great work, of reducing that exorbitant "and oppreſſive power, which has ſo long threatned "the liberties of Europe.

"I aſſure you, that all you give ſhall be care-"fully applied to the uſe of the war, if it continues, "or to the leſſening of the debts it has neceſſarily "occaſion'd, in caſe of a peace, which, tho' the "many wants and diſtreſſes of our enemies may "naturally lead us to expect, yet our own late ex-"perience may fully convince us, is not to be de-"pended upon any other way, than by being in a "condition to compel them to ſuch terms as may "be ſafe and honorable for all the allies.

My lords and gentlemen,

"I think it proper to take notice to you, that "the great dearth and ſcarcity under which our "neighbors abroad have ſuffered this year, begins "to affect us, in ſome meaſure, at home, by the "temptation of profit, in carrying out too much "of our corn, while it bears ſo high a price in fo-"rein parts.

"This occaſions many complaints from the "poor; for whoſe ſake I earneſtly recommend to "you, to take this growing evil into your con-

"ſideration;

Q. Ann, An' 1709.

" ſideration; having not neglected any thing on " my part, towards the remedying of it, that the " law would allow.

" I cannot conclude, without obſerving to you, " of what great advantage it will be, at this time, " to the end we all propoſe to ourſelves, that the " greateſt diſpatch be given to the neceſſary prepa- " rations for carrying on the war."

The commons vote thanks, and a congratulatory compliment to the duke of Marlborough.

The firſt thing the commons did, on the day of their ſiting, after they had voted an addreſs to her Majeſty,, was the coming to this unanimous reſolution; " That the late victory obtained by his " grace the duke of Marlborough, and the other " great and important ſucceſſes of the laſt campain, " were ſo remarkable, that this houſe thought itſelf " obliged to expreſs how ſenſible they were of the " honor and advantage which this kingdom, and " the whole confederacy had received by his emi- " nent ſervices: and that mr. comptroler, mr. ſe- " cretary Boyle, mr. chancellor of the Exchequer, " mr. Onſlow, lord Coningſby, mr. Nevil, lord " William Powlet, mr. Craggs, mr. Compton, " mr. Walpole, mr. Dolben, ſir Charles Hedges, " lord Lumley, and ſir Charles Cox, ſhould give " his grace the thanks of this houſe, and congra- " tulate his grace's ſafety and return to Great-Bri- " tain." The commitee appointed by the commons, having on the 22d of November waited on his grace, with this reſolution, his grace was pleas'd to make the following anſwer:

His grace's anſwer.

" It is a very great honor and ſatisfaction to me, " that the houſe of commons is pleaſed to take ſo " much notice of my indeavors to ſerve the Queen " and my country.

" I cannot be juſt to all the officers and ſoldiers, " who have ſerved me, unleſs I take this occaſion " to aſſure you, that their zeal and affection for " the ſervice, is equal to the courage and bravery " they have ſhewn during this whole war."

Addreſſes of both houſes.

Both the lords and the commons took occaſion, in their addreſſes to her Majeſty, to ſhew the ſenſe they had of the great ſervices performed by his grace: the lords, in theirs, having expreſs'd their joy, in ſeeing her Majeſty ſiting on her throne again, after that great misfortune, which had depriv'd them of her preſence, during the laſt ſeſſion, and return'd their thanks for her ſpeech, ſaid; " the laſt campain was ſo very glorious, whether " they conſider'd the ſtrength of the towns which " were taken, or the difficulty and importance of " the victory, which was obtain'd, that they beg'd " leave to contragulate her Majeſty upon the con- " tinued ſucceſs of her arms, and thoſe of her " allies, under her general, the duke of Marl- " borough, whoſe conduct was worthy of the chief " command, in ſo juſt a war, and whoſe valor " was equal to the bravery of his troops." And the commons, in their addreſs, ſaid: " they beg'd " leave to congratulate her Majeſty upon the con- " tinued ſucceſſes of the laſt campain, particularly " the victory obtained near Mons, by the troops " of her Majeſty, and thoſe of her allies, under " the command of the duke of Marlborough. A " victory ſo remarkable in all its circumſtances, as " muſt convince her enemies, that the courage " and reſolution of her troops, conducted by ſo " great a general, are ſuperior to the greateſt diffi- " culties. They likewiſe took notice how much " they were obliged, by theſe glorious ſucceſſes, " to expreſs their ſenſe of the honor and advan- " tages which this kingdom, and the whole con- " federacy, had received by his eminent ſervices." And aſſured her Majeſty, " that they would inable " her to carry on the war in ſuch a manner, as " ſhould oblige the common enemy to accept a " peace, upon ſuch terms, as ſhould be a laſting " ſecurity to her Majeſty and her allies."

Q. Ann, An' 1709.

The houſe of lords having ordered the lord high-chancellor to return thanks to the duke of Marlborough, for his eminent ſervices in the laſt campain; his lordſhip, at his grace's firſt appearance in that auguſt aſſembly, this ſeſſion, diſcharg'd his commiſſion, by a ſpeech to the following effect:

The lord-chancellor returns the duke of Marlborough the thanks of the houſe of lords.

" That he was commanded by the lords, to " give his grace the thanks of that houſe, for his " continued and eminent ſervices to her Majeſty, " and the public, during the laſt campain. Of " which nothing could be greater ſaid, than what " her Majeſty (who always ſpeaks with the utmoſt " certainty and exactneſs) had declared from the " throne; that it had been, at leaſt, as glorious " as any which have preceded it: but that this " repetition of the thanks of that auguſt aſſembly, " had this advantage of the former, that it muſt " be look'd upon as added to, and ſtanding on " the foundations already laid in the records of " that houſe, for preſerving his memory freſh to " all future times. So that his grace had alſo the " ſatisfaction of ſeeing this everlaſting monument " of his glory riſe every year much higher. To " which his lordſhip added his wiſhes, that God " might continue, in a wonderful manner, to pre- " ſerve ſo invaluable a life, that he might not " only add to that ſtructure, but finiſh all with " the beauties and ornaments of an honorable " and laſting peace."

To which his grace replied,

His grace's anſwer.

" I look upon it as the greateſt mark of honor " I could receive, that your lordſhips are pleaſed " to take notice of my indeavors to ſerve the " Queen and my country. I beg leave to do " juſtice to all the officers and ſoldiers, who " have ſerved with me. It is not poſſible for " men to ſhew more zeal for her Majeſty's ſer- " vice, or greater bravery, than they done."

A ſupply voted.

The parliament, in the mean time, had not ſet a month, before they had granted all the neceſſary ſums for the ſervice of the inſuing year, amounting in all to 6,384,266l. 7s. 1d. the particulars of which being very near the ſame the reader has already ſeen in the liſts of foregoing years, I ſhall not repeat them here

Ways and means.

For raiſing this large ſum, beſide the land, malt, and other uſual taxes, a new duty was laid upon houſes, or windows, as alſo on coals, culm and cinders, for thirty-two years, to raiſe a yearly ſum of 135,000l. to pay the intereſt of 1,500,000l. to be raiſed by way of lottery.

Proſecution o dr. Sacheverel.

The greateſt part of this ſeſſion was imployed in the proſecution of dr. Henry Sacheverel, preacher at St. Saviour's, in Southwark, for two ſermons delivered by him; one at the aſſizes at Derby, the 15th of Auguſt; the other at St. Paul's, on the 5th of November, laſt preceding. Theſe being printed, the commons voted them, on the 13th of December, to be " malicious, ſcan- " dalous, and ſeditious libels, highly reflecting " on her Majeſty and her government, the late " happy revolution, and the Proteſtant ſucceſſion:" and order'd that the doctor ſhould appear before them, the next day, where he acknowleged the ſermons to be his; and ſaid he was incouraged to print the laſt, by ſir Samuel Garrard, the lord-mayor, before whom he had preach'd it: but the lord-mayor, who was a member of the houſe, denying he had ordered or incouraged the printing it, the whole weight of their reſentment fell upon the doctor. When he came before the houſe, dr. Lancaſter, vice-chancellor of Oxford, accompanied him thither, and he was met by above 100 eminent clergymen, in the court of requeſts, among whom were ſeveral of the Queen's chaplains. The commons ordered the doctor into cuſtody of their

Q. Ann, An' 1709. their ſerjeant, and, on the 15th impeach'd him, at the bar of the houſe of lords, of high crimes and miſdemeanors, refuſing to admit him to bail: but their lordſhips, upon the commons delivering him over to the black-rod, ganted him that indulgence.

The commons having proceeded thus far in order to puniſh dr. Sacheverel, ſome members took occaſion from thence, to ſpeak in favor of another divine, whoſe principles were more agreeable to the ſentiments of the majority of that houſe; I mean mr. Benjamin Hoadley (now lord biſhop of Wincheſter) who, in ſeveral writings, had vindicated the revolution; and it was hereupon reſolved; 1. "That the reverend mr. Benjamin "Hoadley, rector of St. Peter's Poor, London, for "having often ſtrenuouſly juſtified the principles "on which her Majeſty and the nation proceeded, "in the late happy revolution, had juſtly merited "the favor and recommendation of this houſe. "2. That an humble addreſs be preſented to "her Majeſty, that ſhe would be graciouſly pleaſ-"ed to beſtow ſome dignity in the church, on "the ſaid mr. Hoadley, for his eminent ſervices "both to the church and ſtate." This addreſs having been preſented to the Queen, by mr. ſecretary Boyle, her Majeſty anſwered: "That ſhe "would take a proper opportunity to comply "with their deſire." However the changes which ſoon after inſued at court, deprived mr. Hoadley of the beneſit of this favor during her Majeſty's reign.

An' 1710. The articles of impeachment being prepared, were carried up to the lords the 13th of January, and were in ſubſtance:

1. "That dr. Sacheverel, in the ſermons above "mention'd, did ſuggeſt and maintain, that the "means uſed to bring about the revolution were "odious and unjuſtifiable.

2. "That the toleration was unreaſonable, and "the allowance of it unwarantable.

3. "That the church of England was in great "peril and adverſity under her Majeſty's adminiſ-"tration; and

4. "That her Majeſty's adminiſtration, both in "eccleſiaſtical and civil affairs, tended to the de-"ſtruction of the conſtitution."

The doctor having denied the charge, in his anſwer, and the commons replied to it, he was brought to his trial, before the lords in Weſtminſter-hall, the 27th of February, at which her Majeſty was preſent, in a private apartment ſeveral days, and ſeats were provided for the whole houſe of commons, as a commitee, who attended the trial.

On this occaſion, many very learned ſpeeches were made, as well for as againſt the doctor, by the managers for the houſe of commons on one ſide, and the doctor's council on the other, for which I muſt refer to the trial at large. The queſtion was afterwards put in the houſe of peers, "that the "commons had made good their firſt article of im-"peachment, and alſo the ſecond, third and fourth "ſucceſſively;" and it was reſolved on every article, in the affirmative. The 20th of March, the lords being come down from their houſe, to the court erected in Weſtminſter-hall, the queſtion was again put to every peer, begining with the youngeſt, who having deliver'd their reſpective opinions, the lord-chancellor number'd them, and declared, that there were 120 of their lordſhips preſent; of whom ſixty-three had found dr. Sacheverel guilty of the high crimes and miſdemeanors charged on him, by the impeachment of the houſe of commons, and fifty-two had found him not guilty.

The doctor being brought to the bar, moved in arreſt of judgment; after which the lords adjourned to their houſe; and, on the 23d, the commons came up, with their ſpeaker to demand judgment; whereupon the lord-chancellor acquainted the doctor, who was again brought to the bar, that his exceptions in arreſt of judgment had been overruled; and then proceeded to pronounce the ſentence, as follows: Q. Ann, An' 1710.

"You, Henry Sacheverel, doctor in divinity, "ſhall be, and you are hereby injoined not to "preach, during the term of three years next in-"ſuing: that your two printed ſermons, refer'd "to by the impeachment of the houſe of commons, "ſhall be burnt before the Royal-Exchange, in "London, between the hours of one and two "o'clock, on the 27th of this inſtant March, by "the hands of the common hangman, in the pre-"ſence of the lord-mayor of London, and the "ſheriffs of London and Middleſex." The doctor being withdrawn, an order was made, directed to the lord-mayor and ſheriffs, to ſee the ſentence executed: but the lord-mayor inſiſting, that he was a member of the houſe of commons, he was excuſed from his attendance at burning of the ſermons, purſuant to their lordſhips ſentence, and ſo left the execution of it to the ſheriffs.

This favorable ſentence was look'd upon by the doctor's friends, rather as an acquital, than a condemnation: and that night, ſeveral of the ſtreets of London and Weſtminſter were illuminated, and bonfires made, where every one who paſs'd by was compell'd to drink the doctor's health. There were, likewiſe, during the trial, ſeveral riots and diſturbances; and that part of the mob who eſpouſed his cauſe, expreſs'd their reſentment againſt the Diſſenters: The 1ſt of March in particular they reſorted to the noted mr. Burgeſs's meeting-houſe, near Drury-lane, and having pull'd down the pulpit, pews, wainſcot, and all that was combuſtible, they carried them to Lincoln's-inn-fields, and made a bone-fire of them, crying out High-church and Sacheverel. Several other meeting-houſes alſo ſuffered; but a ſtop was put to theſe riotous proceedings, and the mob diſpers'd, by a detachment of the horſe-guards; after which the guards were doubled, and the train'd-bands commanded to their arms, while the trial laſted, to prevent farther miſchief.

Books and pamphlets burnt.

The houſe of peers ordered, that a pamphlet, intitled; "an intire confutation of mr. Hoadley's "book of the original government," ſhould be burnt, at the ſame time and place, with dr. Sacheverel's ſermon. The commons alſo ordered the following books and papers to be burnt by the hangman: viz. 1. "A collection of paſſages "refer'd to by dr. Sacheverel, in anſwer to the ar-"ticles of impeachment. 2. The rights of the Chri-"ſtian church aſſerted. 3. A defenſe of the rights "of the Chriſtian church; and 4. A treatiſe on "the word Perſon, by —— Clarendon of the Tem-"ple, eſq;" And they were burnt accordingly.

The parliament having finiſh'd the buſineſs before them, her Majeſty came to the houſe the 5th of April, and having given the royal aſſent to the bills which were prepar'd, made the following ſpeech to both houſes:

My lords and gentlemen,

The Queen's ſpeech to both houſes.

"It is with great ſatisfaction that I come hither "at this time, to return you my hearty thanks "for the many marks of duty and affection which "you have given me, thro' the whole courſe of "this ſeſſion.

"And I am to thank you, gentlemen of the "houſe of commons, in a very particular man-"ner, for the great diſpatch which you have "made, in providing, ſo early in the year, ſuch "great and effectual ſupplies for the public ſer-"vice: this cannot but make me very deſirous to "repeat the aſſurances I gave you, at the opening "of the ſeſſion, that they ſhould be very care"fully

Q. ANN, AN' 1710.

" fully applied to the uſes for which you have " deſign'd them.

My lords and gentlemen,

" I cannot ſufficiently expreſs to you my great " concern, that you have had ſo neceſſary an " occaſion of taking up a great part of your time " towards the latter end of this ſeſſion.

" I am confident no Prince that ever ſat on " the throne has been more really and ſincerely " kind to the church than myſelf, nor ever had a " more true and tender concern for its welfare and " proſperity than I have, and always ſhall con- " tinue to have.

" The ſuppreſſing immorality, and profane and " other wicked and malicious libels, is what I " have always earneſtly recommended; and ſhall " be glad of the firſt opportunity, to give my " conſent to any laws that might effectually con- " duce to that end: but this being an evil com- " plained of in all times, it is very injurious to " take a pretence from thence to inſinuate, that " the church is in any danger from my admini- " ſtration.

" I could heartily wiſh that men would ſtudy " to be quiet, and do their own buſineſs, rather " than buſy themſelves in reviving queſtions and " diſputes of a very high nature, and which muſt " be with an ill intention, ſince they can only tend " to foment, but not to heal, our animoſities and " diviſions.

" For my own part, it has pleaſed GOD to give " ſucceſs to my indeavors, for the union of my " two kingdoms, which I muſt ever eſteem as one " of the greateſt bleſſings of my reign: ſo I hope " his divine goodneſs will ſtill continue favorable, " and make me the happy inſtrument of that yet " more deſirable union of the hearts of all my " people, in the bonds of mutual affection; that " ſo there may remain no other contention among " you, but who ſhall exceed the other, in contri- " buting to advance our preſent happineſs, and " the Proteſtant ſucceſſion.

" Finding, by the advices from abroad, that " our army has not yet taken the field, and that " the plenipotentiaries of France are ſtill in Hol- " land, I think it proper, at preſent, to make the " prorogation but for a very ſhort time."

The parliament prorogued.

Her Majeſty having finiſh'd her ſpeech, the parliament was, by her orders, prorogued to the 18th of that month.

Acts paſs'd.

The moſt important acts paſs'd this ſeſſion, beſide the land, malt, and uſual taxes, were the following: 1. " An act to prohibit the exportation " of corn, for a year, occaſioned by the exceſſive " dearneſs of grain. 2. An act for granting new " duties of exciſe, for a fund for raiſing 900,000 l. " by the ſale of annuities. 3. An act for laying " certain duties upon candles, and certain rates " upon monies to be given with clerks and ap- " prentices. 4. An act for explaining and in- " larging the act 6 Ann, for the ſecurity of her " Majeſty's perſon and government. 5. An act " for the better ſecurity of rents, and to prevent " frauds commited by tenants. 6. An act for re- " gulating the price and aſſize of bread. 7. An " act for incouraging learning, by veſting the " copies of printed books in the authors or purcha- " ſers of ſuch copies. 8. An act to continue the " act for recruiting her Majeſty's land-forces and " marines, for the ſervice of the year 1710. 9. An " act for imploying the manufactures, by incou- " raging the conſumption on raw-ſilk and mohair- " yarn. 10. An act to continue the act for pu- " niſhing mutiny and deſertion, &c. and, 11. An " act for raiſing the militia for the year 1710.

During this ſeſſion of parliament, the houſe of commons being informed, that the States-general were inclin'd to grant paſſes to French plenipotentiaries to come to Holland, in order to renew a negociation of peace, they addreſs'd her Majeſty, " that ſhe would be pleas'd to ſend the " duke of Marlborough forthwith into Holland." To which ſhe was pleas'd to anſwer, " that ſhe " had already given the neceſſary directions for " his immediate departure;" accordingly he departed the very next day, and arrived the 7th of March, N. S. in Holland; where I ſhall leave him, to give a brief account of a tranſaction at home, which was, as it were, prefatory to the great change in the miniſtry which ſoon after inſued. The parliament was not long prorogued, when the Queen took a ſtep which gave occaſion to ſevere reflections: the duke of Shrewſbury had left England towards the concluſion of the foregoing reign, as it was ſaid, becauſe a warmer climate was neceſſary for his health. He ſtaid ſeveral years at Rome, where he became acquainted with a Roman lady; who, upon his return to England, followed him to Augſburg, where ſhe overtook him, and declared herſelf a Proteſtant; upon which he married her there, and came back with her to England, in 1706. Biſhop Burnet ſays, it was thought (by the party he moſt favor'd) that his leaving England, and living ſo long out of it, while we were in ſo much danger at home, added to his marriage, gave juſt cauſe of ſuſpicion (of his principles, I preſume he means). The duke of Marlborough, and the lord Godolphin, lived ſtill in friendſhip with him, and ſtudied to overcome the jealouſies ſome had of him. He ſeem'd not to be concern'd at the diſtance in which he was kept from buſineſs; but a few days after the parliament was prorogued, the Queen, without communicating the matter to any of her miniſters, took the chamberlain's white ſtaff from the earl of Kent (whom, in recompence, ſhe advanced to be a duke) and gave it to the duke of Shrewſbury. This occaſioned no ſmall uneaſineſs; it being from thence concluded, that a total change of the miniſtry would quickly follow; and it was believed (ſays biſhop Burnet) there was a ſecret management, between him and mr. Harley, with the new favorite. The Queen's inclination to the latter, and her alienation from the ducheſs of Marlborough, began now to appear more and more, and broke out upon many, tho' trivial occaſions. The ducheſs retired hereupon from court, and was ſeen no more at it in this reign. The duke of Shrewſbury (continues our prelate) gave the miniſters very poſitive aſſurances, that his principles were the ſame they had been during the laſt reign, and were in no reſpect altered; upon which he deſired to enter into conferences with them; but there was now too much ground given for ſuſpicion.

Q. ANN, AN' 1710.

The duke of Marlborough ſent ſuddenly to Holland.

The duke of Shrewſbury made lord-chamberlain.

The ducheſs of Marlborough retires from court.

Negociations for a peace.

It is now time to take a view of what was doing all this while in Holland, with regard to the negociations for a peace. Tho' all thoughts of a treaty ſeem'd to be at a ſtand, towards the concluſion of the foregoing year; yet, upon the vigorous reſolutions taken in Great-Britain and Holland, for the continuance of the war, the court of France thought fit to make farther overtures of peace. In order to this, the marquis de Torcy ſent, on the 2d of January, another project, which being rejected by the allies, the French reſolved to make farther overtures, and diſpatch'd a cabinet-courier to the Hague, with a letter from the marquis de Torcy to monſ. Pettecum, importing:

Farther overtures made by France.

Rejected by the allies.

Others propoſed.

" That the French King conſented, that the " preliminaries, which were concerted the year be- " fore, ſhould be the foundation of the future " treaty; and had appointed the marſhal d'Uxel- " les, and the abbot de Polignac, his plenipo- " tentiaries, to treat with the allies of an equiva- " lent,

Q. Ann, An' 1710.

" lent, for the thirty-ſeventh article, relating to " the evacuation of Spain; and that the ſaid " miniſters would be ready to meet thoſe of the " allies at Antwerp, or any other place, if the " allies would but ſend them the neceſſary paſſes."

This courier arrived the 2d of February, N. S. at the Hague, and his diſpatches were communicated the ſame day, by monſ. Pettecum, to the grand penſionary, who communicated them likewiſe the next day to the plenipotentiaries of the Emperor and the Queen of Great-Britain. Several conferences being hereupon held between theſe miniſters and the deputies of the States-general, in which meſſieurs Buys and Vanderduſſen aſſiſted, the French courier was ſent back the 13th of the ſame month, with an anſwer from monſ. Pettecum, to the marquis de Torcy's letter, importing:

Reſolution of the allies.

" That the laſt declaration of the court of " France being in uncertain and ambiguous terms, " the allies required his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty " ſhould declare, in plain and expreſſive words, " that he conſented to all the preliminaries, except " the thirty-ſeventh article; which done, the allies " would ſend paſſes to his miniſters, to treat of " an equivalent for the ſaid article.

The French court was not long in reſolving, ſo earneſtly did they at leaſt appear, at that time, inclinable to a peace; for, on the 20th, another courier came to the Hague, with a ſatisfactory anſwer; and, on the 23d, was ſent back, with the paſſes for the French plenipotentiaries. There now ſeemed to be ſome hopes, that the French were in earneſt; however as the States foreſaw the ill effects of ſuffering the French miniſters to come into their country, who, by their agents, were every where ſtiring up the people againſt the government, as if they were prolonging the war without a neceſſity, they therefore appointed Gertruydenburg, to be the place to which the French miniſters were to come, to treat with the deputies whom they ſhould ſend to meet them.

Paſſes granted for the French plenipotentiaries.

The 9th of March, N. S. the French plenipotentiaries came to Anwerp, where they deſired that monſ. Pettecum ſhould meet them, before they entered into conference, but this was refus'd them: they therefore went on board a yacht prepared for them at Mordyke, where meſſieurs Buys and Vanderduſſen, the deputies of the States for this treaty, ſoon after met them, and had a conference with them. The next day they had another for ſeveral hours, after which the deputies ſet out for the Hague, to make their report to their High-mightineſſes, and the French plenipotentiaries went to Gertruydenburg.

They arrive at Gertruydenburg.

To give a particular account of the ſubject-matter of debate, in every day's conference, from the 21ſt of March when they begun again, to the latter end of July, when they intirely broke off, would be too tedious; I ſhall therefore only give the reader a ſummary account of what was propoſed and inſiſted on by the plenipotentiaries of France, on one ſide, and the deputies of the States on the other, without any regard to time and order.

A ſummary account of the whole negociation.

The French propoſed, that the dominions in Italy, with the iſlands, ſhould be given to one of the competitors for the Spaniſh monarchy, without naming which; tho' it was underſtood that they meant King Philip. The deputies did not abſolutely reject this; but ſhewed that the Emperor would never conſent to part with Naples, nor give the French ſuch footing in Italy; and of this the French ſeemed to be ſenſible. The firſt conference ended upon the return of the courier whom they ſent to Verſailles. They moved for another conference, and upon ſeveral propoſitions, there were ſeveral conferences renew'd. The French King deſiſted from his demand of Naples, but inſiſted on that of the places on the coaſt of Tuſcany. However, at length, they went off from that too, and inſiſted only on Sicily and Sardinia. The partition ſeeming now to be ſettled, the deputies preſſed the French plenipotentiaries to give them ſolid aſſurances of King Philip's quiting Spain and the Weſt-Indies; to this (upon notice firſt given to the court of France) they anſwer'd, that his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty would enter into meaſures, with the allies, to force him to it. Many difficulties were ſtarted about the troops to be imployed, what their number ſhould be, and who ſhould command them; but, after all, it appear'd that the execution would be impracticable. It was then propoſed, that the French ſhould pay a ſum of mony annually during the war with Spain; but there again new difficulties aroſe, both in ſettling the ſum, and ſecuring the payment: the French offer'd, for the latter, the bankers of Paris; but theſe were no ſecurity; becauſe they would all be oblig'd to break whenever their King might have a mind they ſhould. In ſhort, it was evident, by all their proceedings, that they deſigned only to divide the allies, by this offer of a partition, to which the States conſented; and for which the French hoped the houſe of Auſtria would have been inraged againſt them. The French demanded an aſſurance of the deputies, that no other articles ſhould be inſiſted on but thoſe in the preliminaries; this the deputies abſolutely refuſed; for they had reſerved a power, by one of the preliminaries, to all the allies, to make farther demands, when a general treaty ſhould be opened: they ſaid indeed that they themſelves would demand no more; but they could not pretend to limit the reſt of the allies from their juſt demands. This was another artifice to provoke the Emperor and the duke of Savoy; as if the States intended to force them to accept of ſuch a peace as they ſhould preſcribe. In another conference the States rejected the offer of a ſum of mony for carrying on the war in Spain, and therefore inſiſted on it, that the French ſhould explain themſelves on the ſubject of evacuating Spain and the Weſt-Indies, in favor of King Charles III, before they could declare their intentions with relation to the partition; and added, that all farther conferences would be to no purpoſe till that was done.

Q. Ann, An' 1710.

The French were now reſolved to break off the negociation; and therefore thought proper to call this demand of the States a formal rupture of the treaty; and upon the return of an expreſs, which they had ſent to Verſailles, after ſeveral letters had paſs'd between them and monſ. Pettecum, for decency ſake, they wrote a long letter to the grand penſionary, in the form of a manifeſto, and ſo returned back to France.

Some remarks on this treaty.

This treaty was manag'd by the French plenipotentiaries, on the part of France, and by the Dutch deputies, on the part of the allies, without any other miniſters being concern'd in it; and the count de Sinzendorf, the Imperial miniſter, having twice deſired to be preſent at the conferences, it was refuſed by the Dutch; whereupon he ſent an expreſs to Prince Eugene, who was then in the army, to know his opinion. He adviſed him to follow the example of the Britiſh miniſters, whoſe miſtreſs was ſatisfied to leave it wholly to the wiſdom and integrity of the States-general: but for what reaſon this was done, and whether the Dutch dealt unfairly by the allies, in this negociation, as many in England had, at that time, a jealouſy they did (tho' I hope without a cauſe) I ſhall not pretend to determine.

Q. Ann, An' 1710.

mine (1). The laſt conference broke off with great heats, and monſieur Vanderduſſen having uſed ſome warm expoſtulations, the abbot de Polignac replied, in very high terms, reproaching the Dutch with ingratitude towards the crown of France (2). Whether France ever deſign'd any thing, by all this negociation, farther than to quiet their own people, and to amuſe and divide the allies, is yet a ſecret; "but if they really intended a peace, "the reaſon of their going off from it (ſays biſhop "Burnet) muſt have been the account they then "had of our diſtractions in England; which "might make them conclude, that we could not "be in a condition to carry on the war (3)."

Before I enter into a relation of the tranſactions of this campain, I ſhall juſt take a farther view of the great change in the face of affairs at home, that I may afterwards continue the affairs of war, in one connexion, to the end of the year.

A change of the miniſtry, in England begun.

The Queen's intention to make a change in her miniſtry began now to break out: the 14th of June, ſhe diſmiſs'd the earl of Sunderland, from the office of ſecretary of ſtate, without aſſigning any malverſation on his part, and gave the ſeals to the lord Dartmouth. This began to cauſe ſome uneaſineſs, both at home and abroad; but her Majeſty, to put a ſtop to, or at leaſt to leſſen it, told her ſubjects here, particularly the governor of the bank, and gave orders to her miniſters abroad, to aſſure her allies, that ſhe would make no other changes. Tho' others ſay, that ſhe told them, ſhe had ſome time before reſolved, to remove the earl of Sunderland, for particular reaſons of ſtate: but that ſhe had not yet determined to make any other change; and that when ever ſhe ſhould, ſhe would take care that the public credit might not be injured thereby. She likewiſe, ſay the former, ſaid the ſame thing herſelf, to the miniſters of the Emperor and the States reſiding here. Theſe concur'd to expreſs their joy in this reſolution of the Queen's, not to make any farther change, and added to it their advice, that ſhe would not diſſolve the parliament, as it began to be ſurmiſed ſhe would. This (ſays biſhop Burnet) was repreſented by thoſe who had never been vers'd in the negociations of Princes in an alliance, as a bold intruding into the Queen's councils; tho' nothing (adds he) is more common, than for Princes to offer mutual advices, in ſuch caſes (4).

Q. Ann, An' 1710.

About two months after the change of ſecretary of ſtate (viz. the 8th of Auguſt) the Queen diſmiſs'd the earl of Godolphin, from the poſt of lord-treaſurer, and, the next day, put the treaſury in commiſſion: lord Powlet was the firſt in form in the commiſſion, but mr. Harley, who was at the ſame time appointed chancellor and under-treaſurer of the Exchequer, was the perſon with whom the ſecret was lodged; and it was (ſays biſhop Burnet) viſible, that he was the chief miniſter: and now it appear'd, that a total change of the miniſtry, and a diſſolution of the parliament were reſolved on. To enter into a diſcuſſion of the reaſons alledged for and againſt this ſtep of the Queen's, would carry me too far: I ſhall, therefore only obſerve, that, in September, the Queen came to council, and called for a proclamation to

A total change inſues.

(1) Thoſe who think the Dutch dealt unfairly by us in this treaty, and broke it off, when it was upon the point of being concluded, aſk; "How long would Spain have been able to have reſiſted the united force of the allies, without the aſſiſtance "of France? If it could be ſuppos'd that King Philip would have refus'd to comply with what his grandfather had ſtipulated "for him, and thereby hazarded loſing even Sicily and Sardinia, as well as his other dominions? Beſide, the barrier towns, "which were agreed to be deliver'd up to the Emperor and the Dutch, would have requir'd ſome years to conquer; and had "the French been never ſo inſincere, as was pretended, the allies would have gain'd ſuch an addition of ſtrength by them, "as would have render'd France much leſs formidable than it had been. Had it been our own caſe, and the fortune of war had "reduced us to a neceſſity of abandoning King Charles, and the French had inſiſted, that the allies ſhould not only not aſſiſt him, "but turn their arms againſt the Prince they had ſet up, would it not have been thought a moſt extravagant demand? And, "if it would, was it not much more unreaſonable to deſire the French King to enter into a war with King Philip, to whom "he was ſo nearly allied, by the ties of blood, as well as all other ingagements?

"We had indeed, (ſay they) ſo long talk'd of the boundleſs ambition and exorbitant power of France, that we affected to "have a dread of it, even after that kingdom was reduced ſo low, that our own generals gave out, they could not make head "againſt us another year.

"Every propoſal that was ſaid to come from France, was ſtill condemn'd as unreaſonable before it was examin'd; and if "the reaſonableneſs was ſo conſpicuous, that it could not be denied, than we were taught to exclaim againſt their inſincerity.

"In ſhort (continue they) ſome of the powers ingag'd in the grand alliance were ſuch gainers by the war, the charge "whereof was bore by their neighbors, that any peace whatever muſt have been to their diſadvantage; and, therefore, it is "not to be thought ſtrange, if they talk loudly of the enemy's inſincerity, and rejected all their propoſals. The daily acqui-"ſition of new dominions, at the expence of others, poſſibly put ſuch a biaſs upon their judgments, that they might, in ſome "meaſure, believe what they affirm'd. Life of Queen Ann, Vol. II. p. 237.

(2) The French, who retort the inſincerity they are charg'd with upon the Dutch, ſay, it was evident they did not act ingenuouſly, becauſe they would not ſuffer the conferences to be held at the Hague. They knew the populace, who were impatient for a peace, would there have diſcover'd the inſincerity of their rulers; who yet remember'd the diſſatisfaction which appear'd in them, upon monſieur de Torcy's leaving the Hague, the foregoing year, and that they then aſſembled, in a tumultuous manner, to preſs him not to depart till a peace was concluded. For this reaſon (ſay they) the Dutch inſiſted, that the French plenipotentiaries ſhould not come farther than Gertruydenburg, till the preliminaries were concluded, which, they very well knew, France could never accept of; and then, they could inſinuate to the people, that it was France refus'd a peace, tho' very reaſonable conditions were offer'd. Till now the courts of Vienna and London were accus'd of having rais'd difficulties to obſtruct the peace; but now the public began to be undeceiv'd, and it plainly appear'd that thoſe who were at the head of the government in Holland, were not ſo weary of the war as their ſubjects. Their diſingenuity was likewiſe viſible, when they propos'd to hold conferences, which they had not ſo much at heart, as they would have had it believ'd. The intereſt of the houſe of Auſtria ſerved to countenance the ambition they had of increaſing their own power. They were for taking advantage of the troubles of Europe, and the misfortunes of France, to appropriate to themſelves the reſt of the Low-countries, and the whole trade of the Spaniſh Weſt-Indies, that they might thereby be inabled to give laws to Europe. This was the view of the Dutch, and they ſhewed it plain enough by their conduct, in the conferences at the Hague and Gertruydenburg. They open'd the eyes of all the powers concern'd, and even of their own allies. Theſe, and the like, I ſay, were the reaſonings of the partiſans of France. Lediard's life of Marlborough, Vol. III. p. 16.

(3) It was obſerved, that from this time, the French were no more ſo deſirous of a peace, and that they talk'd of it with more indifference; whether it was, that they flattered themſelves with a diverſion from the North, or whether it was, as biſhop Burnet obſerves, the diviſions which began to break out at the court of Great-Britain, that made them hope ſome happy revolution in their favor. It is certain (as father Daniel obſerves) that, as matters went afterwards, the allies had cauſe to repent their not accepting the offers made them at Gertruydenburg; but there is on the contrary (as le Clerc remarks) all the reaſon in the world to believe, that they had not repented, if it had not been for ſome unforeſeen events, which produced a ſtrange change in the face of things; and, by raiſing the forlorn hopes of the French, were the occaſion of the allies loſing the principal advantages, which they had grounds to promiſe themſelves, from the glorious ſucceſſes of the war.

(4) It was likewiſe ſaid, in excuſe of her Majeſty's allies intermedling, or giving their advice in this matter, that there ſeem'd to be a parallel caſe, in the Queen's interpoſing at the court of Vienna, in favor of ſome of the Emperor's Proteſtant ſubjects; and even, in the parliament's deſire, that application ſhould be made to the Emperor, to ſend Prince Eugene to command in Spain. Lediard's life of Marlborough, Vol. III. p. 23.

diſſolve

Q. Ann, An' 1710.

diſſolve the parliament, which ſir Simon Harcourt, (made attorney-general, in the room of ſir James Montague, who quited that poſt) had prepared: when it was read, the lord chancellor offered to ſpeak: but her Majeſty roſe up, and would admit of no debate; but ordered the writs for a new parliament to be prepared. About the ſame time, ſhe diſmiſs'd the lord Sommers, and, in his room, made the earl of Rocheſter lord preſident of the council: ſhe ſent to the duke of Devonſhire for the lord ſteward's ſtaff, and gave it to the duke of Buckingham: mr. Boyle was diſmiſſed from being ſecretary of ſtate, and mr. St. John (now lord Bolinbroke) had the ſeals: the earl of Derby was removed from being chancellor of the duchy of Lancaſter, and was ſucceeded by the lord Berkley.

Several great officers of ſtate, lay down their poſts.

Upon all theſe removes, the lord chancellor came, on the 23d of September, and deliver'd up the great ſeal; but the Queen, not looking for this, was ſurprized at it: and not knowing how to diſpoſe of it, ſhe (as biſhop Burnet ſays) with an unuſual earneſtneſs, preſs'd him to keep it one day longer; and the day following, ſhe having conſider'd the matter with her favorites, mrs. Maſham and mr. Harley, received it very readily. At firſt ſhe commited it to the cuſtody of three lords commiſſioners, viz. ſir Thomas Trevor, lord chief juſtice of the common-pleas; Robert Tracy, eſq; a judge in the ſame court, and mr. Scroop, baron of the Exchequer in Scotland; but it was ſoon after given to ſir Simon Harcourt. The earl of Wharton deliver'd up his commiſſion of lord lieutenant of Ireland; and that was given to the duke of Ormond. and the earl of Orford, with ſome of the commiſſioners of the admiralty, withdrew from that board, in whoſe room others were put. Several other changes were made, both in civil and military imploys; which for brevity ſake I paſs by.

The campain in Flanders.

Prince Eugene and the duke of Marlborough, having, as I ſaid above, left the management of the treaty at Gertruydenburg wholly to the French miniſters and the Dutch deputies, were no leſs intent on opening the campain than if no ſuch negociation had been on foot. To this end, they ſet out from the Hague, the 15th of April, N. S. for Tournay, near which place the confederate troops were ordered to rendezvous: it having been agreed, that they ſhould again act in concert this year, in the Netherlands. The French had imployed the whole winter in ſtrengthening their lines to cover Douay, and their other frontier towns, and they were now ſo vain to call them impregnable: notwithſtanding which the confederate generals reſoved their firſt attempt ſhould be on theſe impregnable lines. The neceſſary preparations being made, the army began their march, the 20th, at five in the afternoon, in two columns, the right, commanded by the duke of Marlborough, to Pont à Vendin, and the left, by Prince Eugene, to Pont-Oby on the Deule. This march, which was continued all night, was ſo ſudden and ſo well regulated, that, notwithſtanding the great preparations the French had made to fortify and defend their lines, and tho' the chevalier de Luxemburg was incamp'd for that purpoſe, near St. Amand, and the marſhal de Monteſquion (or d'Artagnan) had aſſembled about forty battalions and ſixty ſquadrons (ſome accounts ſay but thirty ſquadrons) near Lens and Bethune: yet the next day, about ſix in the morning, the Prince of Wirtemberg, and lieutenant-general Cadogan, with a detachment of fifteen battalions, and fifty ſquadrons, from the duke of Marlborough's column, enter'd theſe lines, at Pont à Vendin, without any oppoſition; the few troops, who guarded that poſt, being ſurpriz'd, and retiring at the approach of the confederates, without firing one ſhot. The French not apprehenſive that the confederate army was ſo near them, were moſtly out that morning, in queſt of forage, ſo that their generals had hardly any cavalry with them; and this likewiſe occaſion'd the loſs of a good part of their officers baggage, their ſervants being with the foragers.

Q. Ann, An' 1710.

The confederates enter the French lines.

The enemy retreats with precipitation before them.

Upon this almoſt unexpected ſucceſs, the whole confederate army paſſed the lines, the right under the command of the duke of Marlborough, at Pont à Vendin, and the left, under that of Prince Eugene, at Courieres. This ſtruck ſuch an alarm among the enemy's troops, which were aſſembled near Lens, that they retreated, with all the diligence they were able, partly toward Arras, and partly toward Douay. The allies incamp'd, that night, in the plain of Lens, and the 22d marched again very early, to diſlodge the French, who having aſſembled their troops near Vitry, behind the Scarpe, made a ſhew as if they would diſpute the paſſage of that river. The chevalier de Luxemburg, and the horſe from Arras and Bethune, had for that purpoſe, joined the marſhal de Monteſquion; but tho' they were advantageouſly poſted; yet being much inferior in number, and the ſoldiers not having yet recovered their ſurprize and conſternation, they retired with great confuſion and precipitation, towards Cambray, as ſoon as they ſaw the confederate troops approach, leaving part of their tents and baggage behind them. The allies having laid their bridges over the Scarpe, the Prince of Heſſe-Caſſel was detach'd, with twelve ſquadrons, to fall on the enemy's rear; but they retired ſo faſt, and broke down ſo many bridges, as ſoon as they had paſs'd them, that his highneſs could overtake but a ſmall number of them, and thoſe he made priſoners of war. The priſoners who were taken reported, that very hard words paſſed between the marſhal d'Artagnan, and the chevalier de Luxemburg: the latter laying the blame of the allies having paſs'd the lines on the marſhal, who would not believe they were in a condition to attempt them; while the marſhal blamed the former for not having joined him, as he had orders to do. The army under the duke of Marlborough paſs'd the Scarpe that night, his grace incamping his right near Vitry, on the ſame river, his left at Gouy, and fixing his quarters at the extremity of his left at Gouleſſin.

The ſiege of Douay reſolved on.

The army under Prince Eugene, march'd in the mean time on the other ſide of the Scarpe, between that river and the canal, in order to inveſt Douay, the ſiege of which place had been reſolved on (1).

Douay beſieged.

The 23d of April, the confederates inveſted Douay, in which was a gariſon of ſixteen battalions, beſide three ſquadrons of dragoons, and ſix other independent companies, and three battalions more in fort Scarpe, the whole commanded by general Albergotti, a brave and experienced officer. The trenches were opened in the night, between the 4th and 5th of May, at two attacks, on the north ſide of the Scarpe, between the gates of Ocre,

(1) All the troops which were to form the confederate army being now arrived in the camp, it was computed to conſiſt of 155 battalions, and 262 ſquadrons; having 262 pieces of cannon, twenty mortars and hawbitzers, and forty pontons. The enemy's army, on the other hand, was computed, at that time, to conſiſt of 204 battalions and 308 ſquadrons, having ninety-ſix pieces of cannon, ſixteen mortars and hawbitzers, and thirty-ſix pontons. Lediard's life of Marlborough, Vol. III. p. 32.

By this account, the French army was much ſuperior to that of the allies; but if we will believe their accounts, the confederate army conſiſted of 138,000 men, and was ſuperior to theirs by 40,000 men. Le marq. de Quincy, Hiſt. mil. de Louis le grand, Tome VI. p. 318. This computation is however too extravagant to gain belief.

and

Q. ANN, AN' 1710.

and Eſquerchien, the reſt of the town being covered by inundations. This ſiege proved a very warm one; the gariſon made ſeveral briſk ſallies, and killed the beſiegers a great number of men. The 29th of May, the marſhal de Villars paſs'd the Scarpe, and advanced towards the allies, as he pretended, with a reſolution to fight them; upon which twenty battalions from the ſiege, and eleven more from the intrenchments between Dechey and Fierin, join'd the grand army, and all other neceſſary diſpoſitions were made to receive them: but the marſhal having continued, for ſome time, within muſket-ſhot of the confederate army, thought fit to retire; and it now evidently appeared, that he had no other deſign, but to keep them in continual alarm, and thereby retard the ſiege: it was therefore thought fit to ſend back the troops, and, to prevent any ſurprize from the enemy, orders were given to join the ſeveral redoubts made before the front of the camp, by an intrenchment, and a detachment was ſent to ſecure the poſt of Pont à Vendin. The town held out to the 25th of June, and then the gariſon beat a parly, and agreed to ſurrender the place, together with fort Scarpe, on honorable terms, having held out a ſiege of near two months againſt an army of 100,000 men. The allies found in the place forty pieces of braſs cannon, 200 iron cannon, eight mortars, with ammunition and ſmall arms; but a very ſmall ſtore of proviſions. The loſs of the allies, in this ſiege, was 8007 officers and men; which French authors, and, in particular the marquis de Quincy, magnify to twelve or 13,000 men.

And taken,

Bethune beſieged.

The 15th of July, the allies inveſted Bethune, and, on the 23d, the trenches were opened, at two attacks. Monſieur de Villars was ſo far from attempting the relief of this place, that he intrench'd himſelf in a very ſtrong camp, from whence he frequently ſent out parties to diſturb the convoys that were coming to the confederate army, and ſometimes fell upon their foragers. In one of theſe rencounters, which happen'd the 24th of Auguſt, a great many men were kill'd, and as both armies ſent freſh troops to ſupport their detachments, it had very near brought on a general battle; but at length, the French drew off their men, and retired to their camp. Bethune, having no hopes of relief, beat a parly the 28th, and ſurrendered the next day upon honorable terms. The enemy loſt near 2000 men, in the defenſe of this place, and the loſs of the beſiegers was computed at 3365 officers and men kill'd and wounded.

And taken.

St. Venant and Aire beſieged;

The enemy continuing ſtill to decline an ingagement, the duke of Marlborough and Prince Eugene reſolved to make the beſt of the remaining part of the ſeaſon, by laying ſiege to St. Venant and Aire, at one and the ſame time, and thereby to ſecure the navigation of the Lys. Theſe two places were inveſted the 6th of September; but the French having the good fortune to ſurprize a great convoy of ammunition, which was coming up the Lys from Ghent, on the 19th, they kill'd 200 of the guard, made 600 priſoners, and took or deſtroy'd the ammunition; which loſs very much retarded the two ſieges. However St. Venant ſurrendered, on the 30th, upon honorable terms, and the gariſon was conducted to Arras. Aire made a brave defenſe, and it was the 8th of November before the gariſon beat a parly, when they likewiſe obtained honorable terms, and were conducted to St. Omers. The loſs of the allies, at this ſiege, was computed at near 7000 men. The gariſon, which, at the begining of the ſiege, conſiſted of fifteen battalions, was reduced to 3628 men, and 1500 wounded, who remain'd in the place (1).

Q. ANN, AN' 1710.

The duke of Marlborough and Prince Eugene left the confederate army, the 16th of November, having ſettled their winter-quarters, and arrived the 28th at the Hague; where having held ſeveral conferences with the grand penſionary, the deputies of the States, and the forein miniſters, they departed, the Duke for London, and the Prince for Vienna,

Campain on the Rhine.

On the Rhine, both parties being equally unable to enter upon action, the campain paſs'd without any thing conſiderable happening: the French, who in the winter threatned the Empire with a new invaſion, were obliged to weaken their forces on that ſide, to cover their own frontiers, and ſtrengthen their armies in the Netherlands; and the Germans, thro' the uſual ill management of their affairs, were not in a condition to improve that fair opportunity of invading France; and ſo both armies remain'd inactive. The Elector of Hanover wiſely laid down the command of the army of the Empire, not thinking it fit to hazard his reputation any longer, on the promiſes of ſuch as had ſo groſly deceived him in preceding campains; ſo that command was given to count Gronsfeldt.

And in Italy.

The affairs in Italy received this year no viſible alteration; for the diſputes about Comacchio, and the actual recognition of the title of King Charles, being ſtill in the ſame condition, the Imperialiſts remained in poſſeſſion of that place, and the embaſſadors of the Emperor and his Catholic Majeſty, at Rome, did not appear in public with that character; no more than did ſignor Albani, the Pope's nephew, who, in the mean time, continued at Vienna.

Campain in Spain.

In Spain, King Philip went this ſummer to his army in Arragon, in order to hazard a deciſive battle with King Charles, who was likewiſe at the head of his forces. It was however the end of July before they came to an action; but then there was one of great importance near Almanara. The main body of King Philip's horſe deſign'd to cut off a part of King Charles's foot, which was ſeparated from the cavalry commanded by general Stanhope. He drew his whole body together; and tho' he was much inferior in number, he ſent to King Charles for orders to ingage the enemy. It was not without ſome difficulty, and after re-iterated preſſing inſtances, that he got leave to fall on. As the two bodies were advancing one againſt the other, general Stanhope rode at the head of his body, and the Spaniſh general, ſuppos'd to have been lieutenant-general Amenzega, did the ſame. The two generals began the action, and Stanhope was ſo fortunate to kill the Spaniard: his troops animated with the example and ſucceſs of their general, fell on, and broke the Spaniſh horſe ſo intirely, that King Philip loſt the beſt part of his cavalry in that action; upon which he retired toward Saragoſſa; but was cloſely followed by King Charles; and, on the 20th of Auguſt, they came to a general ingagement, which ended in a total defeat: and by this means, Arragon was again in King Charles's hands. King Philip was oblig'd to quit Madrid, and King Charles haſtened thither; but found the grandees had all followed his antagoniſt. The inſincerity of the King of France appear'd now in a clear light; for, on this occaſion, he might eaſily have perform'd the obligation of the thirty-ſeventh article of the preliminaries, and have obliged his grandſon to have evacuated Spain; but inſtead thereof he ſent him aſſiſtance. King Charles continued in Caſtile till the begining of December; but not being ſufficiently ſupported then, was oblig'd to return to Catalonia for the ſecurity of that principality. The battle of Brihuega was fatal to general Stanhope, and the Engliſh under his command, who were taken priſoners; but whether this misfortune was owing to his miſconduct, by unadviſedly taking a wrong march, and ſeparating from the Imperialiſts, or the neglect of general Stahremberg to ſupport him, in time, as ſome ſay he might have done, and ſo ſacrific'd him to envy, has been matter of great debate, and a caſe too nice for me to pretend to determine. The inſtability of human proſperity appear'd in a moſt ſurprizing manner, in this campain in Spain; both parties being conquerors, and both conquer'd in their turns; but King Philip had certainly the advantage in the end, whereas King Charles's affairs, notwithſtanding he had once this ſummer triumph'd in the capital of the Spaniſh Monarchy, began to have a very diſmal aſpect; for beſide that he was now confined within the narrow bounds of the principality of Catalonia; King Philip gained this ſummer a very material advantage, by having invincible demonſtrations of the affection of the Caſtilians to his perſon and government; inſomuch that neither his two defeats at Almanara and Saragoſſa, nor his retreat from Madrid, nor the preſence of King Charles, with a veteran victorious army, were able to ſhake their loyalty to the houſe of Bourbon.

(1) Thus ended the campain in the Netherlands, which, tho' not ſo glorious as ſome of the former, was, however, of great advantage to the allies, who during the courſe of it, made themſelves maſters of two towns of vaſt importance, Douay and Aire (tho' the latter coſt them a little too dear, and almoſt as many men as Douay) and two others of leſs conſideration, Bethune and St. Venant. On the other hand, we muſt confeſs, that the enemy, after the ſurprizing of their lines, carried their chief point, which was to cover Arras, and thereby to ſtop the allies from penetrating into Picardy, which otherwiſe they might have done. Lediard's life of Marlborough, Vol. III. p. 87,

Q. Ann, An' 1710.

In Portugal.

Nothing material happen'd in Portugal this year; except that, about the begining of July, the marquis de Bay, who then commanded the Spaniſh forces in Eſtremadura, made himſelf maſter of the town of Miranda de Duero, by ſurprize, took 400 men of regular troops and militia in it; and then formed the blockade of Braganza; but this was abandon'd by the marquis de Riſbourg, upon the news of the battle of Saragoſſa; and ſoon after the Portugueſe took, from the Spaniards, Xerez-de-los Cavelleros, Barcarota, Alcanza and Puebla, places of great name, tho' of a very ſmall conſideration, being ſcarce better than villages.

In Piedmont.

Nothing paſs'd on the ſide of Piedmont, the duke of Savoy complaining ſtill of the Imperial court, and thereupon refuſing to act vigorouſly; he had beſide a very feaſible pretenſe for not puting himſelf at the head of the army, being at the very juncture indiſpoſed, as well as his two ſons, the Prince of Piedmont and the duke of Aoſta. The count de Thaun took upon him the command of the confederate army: but nothing was done worthy of notice.

Maritime affairs.

Our exploits at ſea, this year, were not very conſiderable: ſir Edward Whitaker was left the preceding winter with a ſquadron in the Mediterranean, from whence returning for England, in the month of April, he left a ſquadron there, under command of vice-admiral Baker, who joined ſir John Norris, with another ſquadron, under his command, the 24th of June, at Terragona. Sir John ſail'd from Plymouth the 12th of January, and arrived at Port-Mahon the 13th of March, from whence he afterwards ſail'd to Barcelona, and from thence to Sardinia, where he prevented a deſcent intended by the enemy on that iſland.

The deſign of the enemy, in thoſe parts, being defeated, the fleet ſet ſail again for Barcelona, where they arrived the 18th. The next enterprize was, by particular order from England, on the town of Cette, on the coaſt of Languedoc. The fleet departed from Barcelona, on this undertaking, the 9th of July, and arrived on that coaſt the 13th. They ſoon made themſelves maſters of the town and fort of Cette, and thoſe of Agde.

Q. Ann. An' 1710.

The troops, being about 700 men, beſide ſome marines, were put on ſhoar the day of their arrival, and, the next morning by break of day, marched towards the town, while ſome ſhips were appointed to batter the fort at the Mole-head, upon which the town, after a very ſmall firing, ſurrendered, as did the fort, in which were eighteen pieces of cannon mounted. A detachment of 300 men being left to ſecure this place, major-general Seiſſan, with the remainder of the troops, marched the ſame day to Agde, where, having taken a poſt which makes the iſle of Cette, the town capitulated that night, and ſurrendered without reſiſtance. But they were obliged to abandon their conqueſts in a few days: for the duke of Roquelaure, with 400 dragoons and 2000 of the militia, had formed a deſign to recover theſe places, the 15th, by croſſing the lake unexpectedly into the iſland of Cette. Sir John Norris geting intelligence of it, maned and armed all the boats of the fleet, and, going with them on the lake, prevented this attempt. However, being informed the 17th, that the duke de Noailles was arrived at Meze, and that 2000 horſe, each with a foot ſoldier behind him, were come within four miles of Agde; and beſide, the detachment which was left to ſecure the bridge of Agde, having, upon a falſe alarm, abandoned it, which poſt they now wanted time to regain, it was thought adviſeable to re-imbark the troops, and abandon their conqueſt, which they did, with the loſs only of an advanced guard of fifty men, who did not retire as they were ordered. In this all our hiſtorians agree; but F. Daniel pretends we loſt between three and 400 men in this expedition. A body of 600 of the enemy (ſays he) was defeated on the mountain of St. Clare: 100 were taken priſoners, and a great number was drowned in the re-imbarkation: on our ſide (continues he) we loſt but one grenadier and ſome horſes. De Larrey adds to this, that the confederates were obliged to leave behind them the arms and ammunition which they had landed. He allows, however, that tho' this expedition had not all the ſucceſs expected from it, this good effect for the allies, was the conſequence of it, that it favored count Stahremberg's deſigns. To which we may add, more particularly, that it hinder'd the duke de Noailles from joining King Philip, and, at the ſame time, gave the confederate troops, in the neighborhood of Gironne, an opportunity of re-inforcing King Charles, which made way for the two victories which his Catholic Majeſty ſoon after obtained. This expedition being thus ended, ſir John Norris ſailed again, the 19th, and having ſhewn himſelf off of Toulon and Marſeilles, ſtood into the road of Hyeres, where he deſtroyed a French Scanderoon-ſhip richly laden. He afterwards repaired to Port-Mahon, and remained the winter in the Mediterranean. In America, a ſquadron under the command of captain George Martin, as commadore, with ſome land-forces, under the command of colonel Francis Nicholſon, went upon an expedition againſt Port-Royal, on the coaſt of Nova Scotia, then in poſſeſſion of the French, to which, having taken it after a ſhort reſiſtance, they gave the name of Annapolis-Royal.

The parliament meets.

I return now to England, where the new parliament of Great-Britain met, the 25th of November,

Q. Ann, An.' 1710.

ber, and the Queen having directed the commons to chuſe a ſpeaker, the choice fell on William Bromley, one of the repreſentatives for the univerſity of Oxford, who being preſented and approved, the 27th, her Majeſty made the following ſpeech to both houſes:

Her Majeſty's ſpeech to both houſes.

My lords and gentlemen,

" I have, by calling this parliament, made appear the confidence I place in the duty and affection of my ſubjects; and I meet you here with the greateſt ſatisfaction, having no reaſon to doubt but that I ſhall find ſuch returns as will add new life to our friends, and intirely diſappoint the hopes of our enemies: to this end I ſhall recommend to you what is abſolutely neceſſary for our common ſafety.

" The carrying on the war, in all its parts, particularly in Spain, with the utmoſt vigor, is the likelieſt means, with God's bleſſing, to procure a ſafe and honorable peace for us and all our allies, whoſe ſupport and intereſt I have truly at heart. For this purpoſe, I muſt aſk of you, Gentlemen of the houſe of commons, the neceſſary ſupplies for the next year's ſervice; and let me put you in mind, that nothing will add ſo much to their efficacy as unanimity and diſpatch.

" I cannot, without great concern, mention to you, that the navy and other offices are burden'd with heavy debts; which ſo far affect the public ſervice, that I moſt earneſtly deſire you to find ſome way to anſwer thoſe demands, and to prevent the like for the time to come: the juſtice of parliament, in ſatisfying former ingagements, being the certain way for preſerving and eſtabliſhing national credit. I am ſenſibly touch'd with what my people ſuffer by this long and expenſive war; to which, when it ſhall pleaſe God to put an end, the flouriſhing condition of my ſubjects ſhall be as much my care, as their ſafety is at preſent.

My lords and gentlemen,

" The eyes of both friends and enemies are upon you: the way to give ſpirit to the one, and to defeat the reſtleſs malice of the other, is to proceed in ſuch a manner as becomes a Britiſh parliament.

" I ſhall, in the plaineſt words, tell you my intentions; and I do this with the greateſt ſatisfaction, becauſe I depend upon their being agreeable to you.

" I am reſolved to ſupport and incourage the church of England, as by law eſtabliſh'd; to preſerve the Britiſh conſtitution, according to the union; and to maintain the indulgence by law allow'd to ſcrupulous conſciences.

" And that all theſe may be tranſmited to poſterity, I ſhall imploy none but ſuch as are heartily for the Proteſtant ſucceſſion in the houſe of Hanover; the intereſt of which family no perſon can be more truly concern'd for than myſelf.

" Theſe are my reſolutions; and your concurrence with me, in a ſteady purſuit of them, will beſt manifeſt your zeal for our religion, for the intereſt of our country, for your own ſafety, and for my honor."

Q. Ann, An' 1710.

In anſwer to this ſpeech, the lords preſented a very dutiful addreſs to the Queen, on the 29th, in which " they thank'd her for her ſpeech, and intirely agreed with her Majeſty in the ſeveral reſolutions ſhe had declared ſo plainly and ſo affectionately to her parliament: they repeated their thanks for her Majeſty's great care for the Proteſtant ſucceſſion in the houſe of Hanover, expreſſed their ſatisfaction in the aſſurances her Majeſty had given to maintain and incourage the church of England;" and concluded with ſaying, " they had no more to add, but that they would carefully indeavor to act with unanimity and diſpatch."

Addreſs of the lords.

To which her Majeſty replied;

My lords,

" I am very glad to find I have your concurrence in the reſolutions I declared to you, and give you thanks for this addreſs, ſo full of affection to me and zeal for the public good."

Her Majeſty's anſwer.

The commons, who did not preſent their addreſs till the 2d of December, " thank'd the Queen for her moſt gracious ſpeech, and for that confidence ſhe had been pleas'd to place in their duty and affection, aſſuring her Majeſty they would make ſuch returns as would convince her that confidence had not been miſplaced. They promiſed effectually and ſpeedily to grant the neceſſary ſupplies, and to continue to do ſo till a ſafe and honorable peace ſhould be obtain'd. They told her Majeſty they would inquire into the heavy debt the nation was burden'd with, trace the ſource of that great evil, and apply a ſuitable remedy: that they heartily concur'd in all ſhe had been pleas'd to recommend to them; and particularly, as true ſons of the church, to ſecure its doctrine, diſcipline and worſhip; as fellow-Chriſtians, to let Proteſtant Diſſenters quietly injoy that indulgence which the law has allow'd them; as Britains, to preſerve the union between the two parts of Great-Britain; and as lovers of our excellent conſtitution, both in church and ſtate, ſteadily to adhere to the Proteſtant ſucceſſion in the houſe of Hanover.

Addreſs of the commons.

To this addreſs her Majeſty was pleas'd to anſwer:

Gentlemen,

" I am extreamly well pleas'd with your addreſs, and I fully depend upon the aſſurances you give me of your concuring in all the particulars I have recommended to you.

" You may depend upon my care to incourage thoſe whoſe principles are agreeable to our conſtitution in church and ſtate (1)."

The Queen's anſwer.

The commons made good their aſſurances to the Queen, and, at ſeveral times, voted 6,600,000 l.

A ſupply voted.

(1) It is remarkable, that the Queen, in her ſpeech, recommended, in general, the carrying on of the war, in all its parts, and eſpecially in Spain; but no mention was made, as had been uſual in the foregoing years, of the ſucceſſes in Flanders, or of the conduct of the duke of Marlborough: nor were they ſo much as hinted at in the addreſſes either of the lords or commons; which undoubtedly was owing to the change of the miniſtry. " The lords (ſays biſhop Burnet) made an addreſs " of an odd compoſition to her Majeſty, which ſhewed it was not pened by thoſe who had pened their former addreſſes: " inſtead of promiſing to do all that was poſſible, they only promiſed to do all that was reaſonable, which ſeem'd to import a " limitation, as if they had apprehended that unreaſonable things might be aſked of them; and the concluſion was in a very " cold ſtrain of rhetoric; for they ended with ſaying, they had no more to add: the commons (adds the ſame author) were " more hearty in their addreſſes." Hiſt. of his own times, Vol. II. p. 558. And another author ſays, the addreſs of the commons was univerſally approved; yet (adds he) it had little or no effect in relation to the public funds, which had fallen conſiderably upon the change of the miniſtry; there was ſtill an uneaſineſs among the monied men; eſpecially as they ſeemed now to be under apprehenſions that the duke of Marlborough would be either laid aſide, or reſign his command. This jealouſy was increas'd, when, on the 28th of November, the earl of Scarborough made a motion, in the houſe of peers, " that " the thanks of that houſe be returned to the duke of Marlborough;" and upon ſome objections being raiſed againſt it by the duke of Argyle, Marlborough's friends being apprehenſive, that if the queſtion were put, the negative might carry it, choſe rather to drop the motion, by ſaying it would be time enough to ſpeak of that matter when the duke was come home; upon which the houſe adjourn'd. Annals of Q. Ann, Vol. IX. p. 263.

and

Q. Ann, An' 1710.

and upwards, for the ſervice of the year 1711, of which 1,500,000 l. was for the ſervice of the war in Spain and Portugal, 103,000 l. for the relief of the inhabitants of the iſland of Mevis, which the French had almoſt deſtroy'd the preceding year: the reſt of the mony was for the ſame ſervices as as had been provided for in the preceding years.

Ways and means.

The ways and means for raiſing this vaſt ſum were by a land-tax of four ſhillings in the pound; the malt-tax of four ſhillings the quarter; a fund given for raiſing 135,000 l. per ann. for thirty-two years, to anſwer the prizes of a lottery erected for raiſing 1,500,000 l; another lottery for two millions, divided into claſſes, for which another fund was provided of 186,670 l. per ann. for thirty-two years: and ſuch diſpatch was given in forwarding the ſupply, that, on the 23d of December, the land-tax bill received the royal aſſent, after which both houſes adjourned to the 2d of January.

Mr. Hill named envoy extraordinary and plenipotentary to the States-general, &c.

The 12th of December, the Queen appointed Richard Hill, eſq; to be her envoy extraordinary and plenipotentiary to the United Provinces, and to the council of State appointed for the government of the Spaniſh Netherlands, in the room of lieutenant general Cadogan, whom her Majeſty had thought fit to recall from that imployment. About the ſame time, the commiſſions of lieutenant-general Meredith, major-general Mackartney, and brigadier Honeywood were ſuperſeded. An information was ſaid to have been laid before the Queen, that theſe three officers had, in their cups, "drank damnation and confuſion to the new mi-"niſtry, and to thoſe who had any hand in turning "out the old;" which was underſtood as an imprecation on the Queen herſelf. Some perſons who came over about that time from Flanders, undertook to extenuate their crime, by avering, that they only "drank a health to the duke of "Marlborough, and confuſion to all his enemies," a thing uſual in all armies; tho' it happened at this time, to be equivocal. Be this, as it will, mr. Granville, ſecretary at war, was directed to ſignify to them, "That the Queen had no farther occa-"ſion for their ſervice; but that, out of her gra-"cious bounty; ſhe was pleaſed to allow them to "ſell their reſpective regiments." Brigadier Honeywood, being then in London, her Majeſty's pleaſure was ſignified to him here; and the order for ſuſpending the other two was ſent to the duke of Marlborough, who was then at the Hague, who tranſmited it to them at the Briel, where they were ready to imbark for England (1).

The commiſſions of three general officers ſuperſeded.

Their ſuppoſed crime.

Extenuated by ſome.

The duke of Marlborough arrives in London.

The duke of Marlborough, having imbark'd in Holland, the 23d of December, met with contrary winds; and did not reach Solebay, till the 26th, at five in the afternoon; his grace lay that night at Chelmsford, and arrived the 28th in London. At his entrance into the city, about five in the evening, his coach was attended by a great number of people, with links and flambeaux; who, by their acclamations, expreſs'd their joy at his happy return. The duke, tho' he was very ſenſible of the inſtability and emptineſs of the applauſe of the vulgar, could not but have ſome ſatisfaction to ſee himſelf welcom'd by thoſe, who ſome months before were tumultuous in favor of a perſon who was the main occaſion, or rather pretence of the late diſtractions and alterations, which ſeemed principally intended to reach, if not himſelf perſonally, at leaſt his neareſt relations. His grace, however, who was always averſe to popularity, thought it prudence, at this juncture, to avoid the leaſt ſhew of it; and therefore ordered his coach, inſtead of driving directly to St. James's, to go to Montague-houſe, from whence, after having reſted an hour or two, he went out by a private door. Upon his arrival at St. James's, he immediately waited on the Queen, who gave him a very gracious reception, and diſcourſed with him about half an hour, after which his grace retired to his apartment.

Meets with a gracious reception from the Queen.

The duke was ſummon'd to, and aſſiſted at a commitee of the privy-council the next morning; and, the ſame and following days, received the viſits of the earl of Rocheſter, preſident of the council, the earl of Powlet, firſt lord commiſſioner of the treaſury, the ſecretaries of ſtate, and other perſons in the miniſtry. It was however, for many days, a queſtion with the public, whether his grace had any interview with mr. Harley, who had now the greateſt ſhare, both in the Queen's confidence, and in the management of affairs. Thoſe who pretended to have a near inſight into the ſecrets of the court, ſeemed perſuaded, that her Majeſty had reſolved to remove all ſtrangeneſs and coldneſs that might be between them; and the event juſtified their conjecture.

Is viſited by the new miniſters.

The Queen reſolves to reconcile the duke and mr. Harley.

The uncertainty whether the duke of Marlborough would be continued in his command in Flanders, caſt, in the mean time, a freſh damp on the public credit: it was therefore the general wiſh and expectation of the moſt wealthy and ſubſtantial citizens, that, in order to remove this fatal doubt, his grace ſhould receive the thanks, if not of both, at leaſt of either of the two houſes of parliament. But his grace's friends in the houſe of peers, having already failed in one motion for it (as I have ſaid above) were ſhy of attempting it a ſecond time; eſpecially, as they found the majority of the houſe inclin'd to paſs that compliment on the earl of Peterborough: and as for thoſe he had in the houſe of commons, they found their number too ſmall to dare attempting it at all. Thus his grace, inſtead of having the thanks of either houſe, had the mortification to ſee an invidious and ſcurrilous letter publiſhed, ſaid to have been writen to the mayor of St. Albans, and containing what the writer of it called, "Reaſons why a cer-"tain great general had not the thanks of either "of the two houſes of parliament, &c" (2).

The duke not thank'd by either houſe of parliament.

The duke of Marlborough however, who, at

(1) The general opinion was, that it was thought neceſſary to make this example, to keep the officers of the army within bounds: it having been reported that ſome, out of an exceſs of reſpect to the duke, had been ſo unwary, as to drop doubtful expreſſions of ſtanding by their general; and it was, beſide, charged upon the old miniſtry in a pamphlet, call'd faults on both ſides, ſaid to be countenanced by ſome great men, that they had formed a deſign of making a general for life: what grounds there were for theſe reports, I ſhall not pretended to determine. General Meredith had ſoon after the farther mortification of loſing his places of governor of Tinmouth-fort, and gentleman of the horſe to the Queen. Lediard's life of Marlborough, Vol. III. p. 95.

(2) This, together with ſome dubious expreſſions, ſaid to have fallen from the duke's mouth, in the ſubſequent debates, in the houſe of lords, concerning the affairs of Spain, augmented the apprehenſion of many, that his grace would gratify his private diſguſt, and lay down his commiſſion, it being thought natural for his reſentment to ſuggeſt, "That he had acquired "a ſufficient ſtock of honor and wealth to deſpiſe the frowns of fortune; that it would be derogatory to his character to ſtoop "to the authors of the diſgrace of his relations; who, whatever their pretence might be, would never heartily imbrace his "intereſt, nor contribute to the ſupport of the glory he had already gained; that the fate of war being uncertain, the leaſt di-"minution of the proſperity, that had hitherto attended the arms of the allies, might be charged on him as a crime, whereas "if any misfortune ſhould befall them under another general, the court would have reaſon to regret the loſs of ſo proſperous a "commander, and to court him to ſerve again, which would add a freſh luſtre to his reputation." Clef. du cabinet des Princes Jan. 1711, p. 56.

his

Q. ANN, AN' 1711.

his departure from Holland, had ingaged his word to the States-general, and to Prince Eugene, not to abandon the common cauſe, reſolved to concert meaſures with the new miniſtry, with the ſame confidence and hearty zeal he had done with the old: in order hereunto, his grace, on the 19th of January, made a free reſignation of his ducheſs's places at court, by delivering into her Majeſty's hands, the key of groom of the ſtole. This was ſo well taken by her Majeſty, that ſhe was pleaſed not only to renew his commiſſion, but likewiſe to make a diſpoſition of the other generals intirely to his grace's ſatisfaction (1).

The duke reſolves not to lay down his commiſſion.

Changes and promotions at court.

During theſe tranſactions ſeveral alterations and promotions were made at court: the earl of Peterborough was appointed to go to Vienna, to concert meaſures with the Imperial court, for the vigorous proſecution of the war, particularly in Spain: the earl of Rivers was appointed her Majeſty's miniſter and plenipotentiary to the court of Hanover: the dukes of Beaufort and Hamilton were ſworn of her Majeſty's council; and ſir James Wiſhart, and George Clarke, eſq; were made commiſſioners of the admiralty, in the room of mr. Methuen and mr. Dodington: Charles Whitworth, eſq; was appointed embaſſador extraordinary to the Czar of Muſcovy, as William Jefferies, eſq; was to be her Majeſty's reſident at the court of Sweden: the counteſs of Abingdon was made lady of the bed-chamber; and Conſtantine Phips, eſq; (who had been one of dr. Sacheverel's council) was knighted and made lord-chancellor of Ireland. Some time after, the duke of Argyle was named the Queen's embaſſador extraordinary and plenipotentiary to King Charles III, and commander in chief of her Majeſty's forces in Spain, and mr. Richard Hill, having declined going envoy extraordinary to the States-general, and to the council of ſtate in the Spaniſh Low-countries, in the room of lieutenant-general Cadogan, the Queen appointed the earl of Orrery for that ſtation.

Some days paſs'd before the Queen diſpoſed of the ducheſs of Marlborough's places; but, toward the latter end of January, it was made known, that the ducheſs of Sommerſet was made groom of the ſtole, firſt lady of the bed-chamber, and lady of the wardrobe to her Majeſty; and, at the ſame time, that mrs. Maſham was made privy-purſe, in the room of the ducheſs of Marlborough; who, ſome time after, removed from her lodgings in the royal palace of St. James's to Montague-houſe; retaining, of all her former places, only that of ranger of Windſor-park, which had been beſtow'd upon her grace for a certain term of years.

Continuation of the proceedings in parliament.

But to return to the proceedings in parliament; the Queen having received advice of the ill ſucceſs of King Charles's affairs in Spain, ſent meſſages to both houſes, to acquaint them with it; and that ſhe had given directions for ſending and procuring troops, to repair his loſſes; whereupon they addreſs'd her Majeſty, aſſuring her of an effectual ſupport, in the proſecution of ſuch meaſures as ſhe ſhould think proper for retrieving the loſs in Spain.

Q. ANN, AN' 1711.

The 12th of January, among other things which paſs'd in the houſe of peers, the late miniſtry was cenſured, as having contributed to all our misfortunes in Spain, and to the diſappointment of the expedition againſt Toulon: by being in a great meaſure the occaſion, that the war was carried on offenſively in thoſe parts, contrary to the opinion of the earl of Peterborough.

The late miniſtry cenſured.

"On this occaſion (ſays biſhop Burnet) it was "moved, that an addreſs ſhould be made to the "Queen, to free thoſe who were under an oath "of ſecrecy, from that ty, that a full account "might be laid before the houſe of all their con-"ſultations: the Queen granted this readily; and "came to the houſe; which was underſtood to be "on deſign, to favor that which was aimed at. "Upon this, the duke of Marlborough, the earls "of Godolphin and Sunderland, and the lord "Cowper ſhewed, that, conſidering the force "ſent over to Spain, under the lord Rivers, they "thought an offenſive war was adviſeable; that "the expence of this war was ſo great, and the "proſpect ſo promiſing, that they could not but "think an offenſive war neceſſary; and that to ad-"viſe a defenſive one, would have made them "liable to a juſt cenſure, as deſigning to protract "the war. The deſign on Toulon was no way "intermixed with the affairs of Spain; the earl of "Peterborough fancied he was in that ſecret, and "had indeed propoſed the bringing over ſome "troops from Spain on that deſign, and had of-"fered a ſcheme to the duke of Savoy, in which "that was mentioned, and had ſent that over to "England: but tho' the duke of Savoy ſuffered "that lord to amuſe himſelf with his own pro-"ject, which he had concerted for the attempt on "Toulon; that duke had declared he would not "undertake it, if it was not managed with the "utmoſt ſecrecy, which was ſacredly kept, and "communicated only to thoſe, to whom it muſt "be truſted for the execution of it. No troops "from Spain were to be imployed in that ſervice, "nor did it miſcarry for want of men. Theſe "lords farther ſaid, they gave their opinions in "council, according to the beſt of their judgment; "their intentions were ſincere, for the ſervice of "the Queen, and to bring the war to a ſpeedy "concluſion. Yet a vote paſs'd, that they were "to blame for adviſing an offenſive war in Spain, "upon which the loſs of the battle of Almanza "followed: and that this occaſioned the miſcar-"rying of the deſign upon Toulon" (2).

A memorable debate in the houſe of lords.

The earl of Peterborough receives the thanks of that houſe.

The earl of Peterborough received, on this occaſion the thanks of the houſe of peers, for his eminent

(1) The duke of Marlborough having been thus continued in the command of the Britiſh forces in Flanders, and the duke of Argyle (who had given his grace ſome uneaſineſs) being recall'd from thence, and ſent into Spain, it was the opinion of many, that a reconciliation was actually effected between the duke and the new miniſtry: but the author of four letters, written in vindication of the late miniſtry (as it was ſuppoſed by dr. Hare, now lord biſhop of Chicheſter) with regard to the management of the war, and the negociations of peace; and who, it was generally believed, received hints and inſtructions from his grace, plainly inſinuated, that little more harmony was to be expected between two rivals in power, than between a falling and a riſing favorite. Some perſons (ſays that author) would ſtill pretend to put a good face upon the matter, and do not queſtion from the duke of Marlborough's paſt ſucceſſes, but that he will yet frighten our enemies into an honorable peace: but, I am afraid, he is not likely to do ſo much, at this time, when the enemy are incouraged to take heart afreſh, the allies full of jealouſies and fears, and himſelf extreamly mortified. Things are not the ſame, any more than the uſage he meets with: when he is uneaſy in his thoughts, undermin'd in the favor of his ſoverein, and vilely miſrepreſented to the people: when his want of intereſt at home makes it impoſſible for the allies to depend upon the hopes he gives them: when he is without authority in his army, where it is made criminal to eſpouſe his intereſt, and to fly in his face is the ſureſt means to advancement; when it is meritorious in his officers to cabal againſt him, and the moſt factious will be thought the moſt deſerving. With what heart can a man in theſe circumſtances ſerve? Or, what ſucceſs can be expected from him, when he is to depend upon profeſs'd enemies for his ſupport? It is little I think we can hope for, even from him hereafter; tho' that little be more, than any body elſe could do.

(2) Here was a new and ſtrange precedent of cenſuring a reſolution taken in council; and of deſiring the Queen to order all that had paſs'd in council, to be laid before the houſe: in all the hot debates, in King Charles I's reign, in which many reſolutions eminent and remarkable ſervices in Spain; which, as the duke of Marlborough had not, this year, been honored with the ſame, could not but be a mortification to him, as were, without doubt, the cenſures which inſued, in an addreſs of their lordſhips to the Queen, with regard to the affairs of Spain, on the late miniſtry, and the earl of Galway, in whoſe favor his grace had ſpoken (1).

Q. Ann, An' 1711.

The duke of Marlborough goes to Blenheim-houſe.

The anniverſary of the Queen's birth day was obſerved, on the 6th of February, with great pomp and ſolemnity; but the duke of Marlborough did not appear at this feſtival, having, with her Majeſty's leave, ſet out four days before for Blenheim-houſe, accompanied by the marquis de Paſcal, governor of Bruſſels, who was lately come from Flanders, and monſieur de Seiſſan, who likewiſe came back with the duke to London, and, on the 18th, ſet out with him, together with the earl of Orrery, to imbark for Holland. His grace, before his departure, received poſitive aſſurances, that the payment of the troops under his command, would be as effectually taken care of, by the new miniſtry, as it had been by the old, and her Majeſty was pleaſed to write a very polite letter to the States-general, about the duke of Marlborough, whoſe conduct ſhe yet declared herſelf intirely ſatisfied with.

Returns to London, and imbarks for Holland.

Proceedings of the commons.

The commons were, in the mean time, no leſs intent on caſting an odium on the late miniſtry, in order to compliment and fix the new. With this view, mr. Robert Harley, chancellor of the Exchequer, having informed the houſe, that ſome very conſiderable abuſes had been diſcover'd in the victualing, and that a member of the houſe had been named, as concern'd therein, an addreſs was preſented to the Queen, praying, that the examination which had been taken relating to this matter, might be laid before the houſe. This being accordingly done, it appear'd, that mr. Ridge, a Brewer at Portſmouth, was the member therein mention'd; who being order'd to attend in his place, and a commitee appointed to examine the accounts laid before the houſe, upon their report, they voted, "That there had been many notorious imbezzle-"ments and ſcandalous abuſes in the management "of her Majeſty's brew-houſe, and in contracts "for furniſhing beer, to the defrauding of the "public, and injury to the ſeamen: that Thomas "Ridge, eſq; having contracted to furniſh 5513 "tun of beer, upon his own account, and 2704 "tun of beer, in partnerſhip with mr. Dixon, and "having received bills for the whole, altho' "he had deliver'd out but 3213 tun on the firſt, "and 1269 tun on the latter contract, be expell'd "the houſe; and that an addreſs be preſented to "her Majeſty, to cauſe the ſaid mr. Ridge to be "proſecuted for the ſame (2):" and ſeveral other Brewers were likewiſe ordered to be proſecuted on the ſame account. A commitee was afterwards appointed to examine into the occaſion of the coming over of the Palatines, and upon a ſuppoſition that the "act for a general naturalization," might have given them incouragement to it, a bill paſs'd the commons for repealing that act, but it was rejected by the lords, as was likewiſe another, to limit the number of officers in the houſe of commons.

Q. Ann, An' 1711.

Acts paſs'd.

The 31ſt of January, the royal aſſent was given to the malt-act, by commiſſion, her Majeſty being indiſpos'd; and, on the laſt of February, the Queen in perſon, gave the royal aſſent. 1. "To "an act for continuing the act for recruiting her "Majeſty's land-forces and marines, for the ſer-"vice of the year 1711. 2. An act for ſecuring "the freedom of parliaments, by the farther qua-"lifying the members to ſit in the houſe of com-"mons;" and to two private bills.

Monſieur de Guiſcard ſtabs mr. Harley;

The 8th of March, the marquis de Guiſcard, being ſeiz'd for high-treaſon, and carried before a commitee of the privy-council, attempted the murder of mr. Harley, while under examination, by ſtabing him in the breaſt with a penknife, which lighting on the bone, broke about half an inch from the handle, and the wound did not prove mortal; tho' it was thought deſperate for ſome weeks. Upon information, in the houſe of commons, that mr. Harley's wound was almoſt heal'd, and that he would, in a few days come abroad, they came to the unanimous reſolution; "That "when the right honorable Robert Harley, eſq; "chancellor of her Majeſty's Exchequer, attends "the ſervice of this houſe, the ſpeaker do, in the "name of this houſe, congratulate the ſaid mr. "Harley's eſcape, and recovery from the barba-"rous and villainous attempt made upon him, by "the ſieur de Guiſcard;" which was done accordingly, the 17th of April.

But the wound not mortal.

Mr. Harley is complimented by the houſe of commons.

The ſame day the parliament began to ſit, the convocation of the clergy of Canterbury alſo met, and the lower-houſe choſe dr. Atterbury, dean of Carliſle, their prolocutor: but the two houſes ſoon fell into diſputes again, which put a ſtop to their proceedings for a time: but, on the laſt of January, a letter from her Majeſty to the Metropolitan being read to both houſes, importing: "That "whereas, by her royal licence, ſhe had, among "other things, impowered and authorized them "to confer, treat, debate, conſider and agree up-"on ſuch points, matters, cauſes and things, as "ſhe, from time to time, ſhould deliver, or cauſe "to be delivered to them in writing, under her "ſign manual, or privy-ſignet;" ſhe accordingly tranſmited to them the heads of ſuch matters as ſhe thought proper to be conſidered by the reſolutions taken in council were juſtly cenſurable, yet the paſſing any cenſure on them was never attempted by men who were no way partial in favor of the prerogative: but they underſtood well what our conſtitution was in that point. A reſolution in council is only the ſoverein act, who, upon hearing his counſellors deliver their opinions, forms his own reſolution. A counſellor may indeed be liable to cenſure, for what he may ſay at that board; but the reſolution taken there has been hitherto treated with a ſilent reſpect; but, by this precedent, it may be hereafter ſubject to a parliamentary inquiry. "The Queen "(ſays my author) was ſo deſirous to have a cenſure fix'd on her former miniſtry, that ſhe did not enough conſider the wound "given to the prerogative, by the way in which it was done." Burnet's hiſtory of his own times, Vol. II. p. 561.

---

(1) I never (ſays biſhop Burnet, on concluding his account of this matter) ſaw, "any thing carried on, in the houſe of "peers, ſo little to their honor as this was; ſome, who voted with the reſt, ſeemed aſhamed of it: they ſaid ſomewhat was "to be done to juſtify the Queen's change of the miniſtry. And every thing elſewhere had been ſo well conducted, as to "be above all cenſure: ſo the misfortune of Almanza, being a viſible thing, they reſolved to lay the load there. The "management of the public treaſure was exact and unexceptionable: ſo that the ſingle misfortune of the whole war was to be "magnified. Some were more eaſily drawn to concur in theſe votes; becauſe, by the act of grace, all thoſe who had been "concern'd in the adminiſtration, were cover'd from proſecution and puniſhment: ſo this was repreſented to ſome as a compli-"ment that would be very acceptable to the Queen, and by which no perſon could be hurt." Ib.

(2) Tho' this affair made a great noiſe, and appeared very odious at firſt ſight; yet mr. Ridge was not only ſcreen'd from proſecution, but continued to be imployed, and it was alleg'd in his juſtification, that tho' the matter charg'd upon him was fact, yet he had neither wrong'd the public, nor the ſeamen, nor had he made any private advantage to himſelf: but had paid the value of the beer not deliver'd, to the captains of her Majeſty's ſhips, which were imploy'd in the Mediterranean, who laid it out there in liquors more proper and agreeable for the uſe of the ſailors in thoſe warmer climates: and this was likewiſe alleg'd in favor of other brewers.

ſaid

Q. Ann, An' 1711.

ſaid convocation: viz. 1. "The drawing up a "repreſentation of the preſent ſtate of religion "among us, with regard to the late exceſſive "growth of infidelity, hereſy and profaneneſs. "2. The regulating the proceedings in excommu- "nications, and reforming the abuſes by commu- "tation-mony. 3. The preparing a form for the "viſitation of priſoners, and particularly con- "demned perſons. 4. For admiting converts "from the church of Rome, and ſuch as ſhould "renounce other errors. 5. For reſtoring thoſe "who have relapſed. 6. The eſtabliſhing rural "deans, and rendering them more uſeful. 7. The "making proviſions for preſerving and tranſ- "miting more exact terriers and accounts of glebes, "tithes, &c. 8. The regulating licenſes for ma- "trimony, &c." Commitees were accordingly appointed by both houſes to take theſe weighty matters into conſideration, but freſh difficulties ſoon after aroſe, occaſion'd by a new licenſe granted by her Majeſty, appointing and ſetling the preſidentſhip of the convocation, and the order of the ſucceſſion of biſhops to act in that office, during the abſenſe of the preſident, or that of one or more of the biſhops appointed to act ſucceſſively in his or their abſenſe, which again put a ſtop to their proceedings for a time. And tho' the joint commitees did afterwards go upon buſineſs, nothing of importance was brought to maturity; excepting a ſcheme, which the lower-houſe laid before the houſe of commons, of the additional churches they ſuppos'd to be wanting in and near the cities of London and Weſtminſter, which was occaſion'd by a petition preſented to the houſe of commons, by the miniſter and church-wardens of Greenwich, praying relief for the re-building of their church; upon which they appointed a commitee to conſider of the great want of churches in the cities of London and Weſtminſter and ſuburbs thereof. This being likewiſe quicken'd by a ſolemn repreſentation from the Queen, the commons afterwards paſs'd a "bill "for the building of fifty new churches in the "cities of London and Weſtminſter, &c." and gave the duty of one ſhilling per chaldron on coals, from the 29th of September 1716, to the 29th of September 1719, for raiſing the ſum of 350,000 l. for that pious ſervice.

Bill for erecting fifty new churches.

Death of Emperor Joſeph.

The 17th of April, captain Powel arrived at Whitehall from the Hague, being ſent expreſs by the lord Raby, who had been appointed to ſucceed the lord Townſhend, as her Majeſty's embaſſador extraordinary and plenipotentiary to the States-general, with an account that the Emperor Joſeph I, died of the Small-pox at Vienna, the 17th of that month, N.S. upon which her Majeſty reſolved to concert meaſures with her high allies, to advance King Charles III to the Imperial throne. On the 20th, her Majeſty ſent a meſſage to the houſe of commons; "acquainting them with this her reſo- "lution, in which, ſhe ſaid, the States-general had "likewiſe concur'd; aſſuring them, at the ſame "time, ſhe had an intire confidence in the affec- "tion and duty of her parliament, that with their "aſſiſtance, under the protection and bleſſing of "Almighty God, ſhe ſhould be inabled to "make a happy concluſion of this war, in a ſafe "and honorable peace." Both houſes agreed, the ſame day, in an addreſs to the Queen, which was preſented the ſame evening; and in which "they "not only approved her Majeſty's meaſures; but "told her, they could not be diſcouraged by this, "or any other misfortunes, from ſupporting her "Majeſty, in all the meaſures ſhe in her great "wiſdom ſhould judge proper, to bring this war "to a happy concluſion by a ſafe and honorable "peace (1)."

Reſolutions taken by the Queen thereupon.

Approved by parliament.

The 2d of May mr. chancellor of the Exchequer propos'd a "ſcheme he had form'd to ſatisfy all pub- "lic and national debts and deficiences," by allowing the proprietors of thoſe debts and deficiences an intereſt of ſix per cent. per annum, redeemable by parliament, and incorporating them to carry on a trade to the South-Seas. There was, at that time, a great debt upon the navy, occaſion'd partly by the deficiency of the funds appointed for the ſervice at ſea; but chiefly by the neceſſity of applying ſuch ſupplies as were given, without appropriating clauſes, to the ſervice abroad; which it was impoſſible to carry on by credit, or without ready mony; ſo it was judg'd more convenient and conducive to the public good, to let the navy-debt run on. This had riſen up to ſeveral millions; and the diſcount on navy-bills run high. This whole debt was thrown into one ſtock, and a fund form'd by parliament for paying the intereſt at ſix per cent (2). This ſcheme was received with a pretty general applauſe, tho' there were not waning thoſe who were very free in calling it a groſs and palpable illuſion: however, the commons ordered a bill to be brought in to put it in execution, and it was obſerved, as a lucky incident for mr. Harley, that the very day he laid his ſcheme before the commons, the earl of Rocheſter, preſident of the council, and maternal uncle to the Queen, died ſuddenly; which rid him of the only competitor in the Queen's favor, from whom he had any oppoſition to apprehend, and gave him the juſt title of prime miniſter (3).

Mr. Harley's ſcheme for ſatisfying the public debts.

Mr. Harley made a peer of Great-Britain;

The Queen having reſolved to reward the many ſignal and eminent ſervices of Robert Harley, eſq; chancellor of her Majeſty's Exchequer, and one of the lords commiſſioners of the treaſury, in a moſt diſtinguiſhing manner; ſhe firſt created him baron Harley of Wigmore in the county of Hereford, and earl of Oxford and Mortimer. The patent having paſs'd the great ſeal, the 24th of May, his lordſhip was, the next day, introduced into the houſe of peers, in his robes, and after the reading of his patent took his place accordingly. The 29th, the Queen appointed the new earl of Oxford lord high-treaſurer of Great-Britain; and the 1ſt of June his lordſhip took the uſual oaths to qualify him for entering into that high poſt.

And lord high-treaſurer.

A commitee of the houſe of commons having Repreſentation of the commons to the Queen.

(1) The moſt diſcerning thought, that the Queen's meſſage gave a glimpſe of the project the new miniſtry formed, upon the death of the Emperor Joſeph, viz. to make a peace, by yielding Spain and the Weſt-Indies to King Philip; not only becauſe of the great expence it would coſt to regain them, and the inſuperable difficulties which would occur in the attempt; but alſo, becauſe, in their opinion, it would deſtroy the balance of Europe, which was the main object of the grand alliance: and both houſes of parliament having, in their addreſs, ſhewed a readineſs to approve any meaſures her Majeſty ſhould think proper to procure a peace, the miniſtry might now purſue their ſcheme under the ſanction of that authority. Lediard's life of Marlborough, Vol. III. p. 119.

(2) "The flatterers (ſays biſhop Burnet) of the new miniſters made great uſe of this to magniſy them, and to aſperſe the "old miniſtry; but a full report of that matter was ſoon after publiſhed, by which it appear'd, that the public mony had "been manag'd with the utmoſt fidelity and frugality; and it was made evident, that when there was not mony enough to "anſwer all the expence of the war, it was neceſſary to apply it to that which preſſed moſt, and where the ſervice could not "be carried on by credit: ſo this debt was contracted by an inevitable neceſſity; and all reaſonable perſons were fully ſatisfied "with this account of the matter." Hiſt. of his own times, Vol. II. p. 573.

(3) This was the begining of the South-ſea-company, which has ſince been ſo famous not only in England, but throughout all Europe: and has been the occaſion not only of ſo much good, but, at the ſame time, of ſo much evil, that the hiſtory of it will hardly paſs, in future ages, for any thing more than meer fiction and fable.

been

Q. Ann, An' 1711.

been appointed to inſpect the miſmanagements in the ſeveral offices, and having made their report, the commons, to compleat the buſineſs of this ſeſſion, reſolved, on the 24th of May, "that an "humble repreſentation be laid before her Majeſty, "of the ſeveral reports and reſolutions of the "houſe, upon the ſaid miſmanagements." A commitee being appointed accordingly, to draw up this repreſentation, it was approved by the houſe, and preſented, in a body, the 4th of June.

The inſtances of miſmanagements, in this long repreſentation, which were laid down as grievances that required to be animadverted upon, were chiefly; "the altering or inlarging the ſupplies "given by parliament, in an illegal manner, which "had been one occaſion of the national debt: "the miſapplication of the public mony: abuſes "and imbezelments in the Queen's brew-houſe, "and in victualling the navy: the public mony "having been left in the hands of the receivers "general, which had been another occaſion of the "national debt: that above thirty-five millions of "the public mony was unaccounted for: that the "public mony had been miſapplied in ſubſiſting "the Palatines, a uſeleſs people, being a mixture "of all religions, dangerous to our conſtitution in "church and ſtate; and that therefore thoſe who "adviſed the bringing them over were enemies to "the Queen and kingdom: that a new charter "had been impos'd on the corporation of Bewd-"ley: that by theſe and the like practices irre-"parable damages had accrued to the public, if "the Queen had not removed from the admini-"ſtration, the authors of them, who, by their "undutifulneſs to her Majeſty, had expoſed them-"ſelves to the indignation of the people: they "therefore, to conclude, beſought her Majeſty "to avoid ſuch miniſters, who having depreſſed "the friends of her Majeſty and the church, and "prefer'd only men of licentious and impious "principles, were the greateſt enemies to her "royal dignity and the peoples ſafety (1)."

To this repreſentation her Majeſty made the following anſwer:

The Queen's anſwer.

Gentlemen,

"This repreſentation gives me freſh aſſurances "of your zeal for my ſervice, and for the true "intereſt of your country.

"It contains many particulars; I will take them "all into my ſerious conſideration, and then give "the neceſſary directions to redreſs the grievances "you complain of.

"Be aſſured, that your advice, upon all occa-"ſions, has the greateſt weight with me."

Addreſs for inquiring into the ſtate of affairs in Spain and Portugal.

The 7th, the commons reſolved to addreſs the Queen, "to appoint perſons to inquire into the "number and quality of the forces in her Majeſty's "pay in Spain and Portugal, and to examine the "ſtate of the payments and accounts relating to "the ſaid forces; and to the gariſons and fortifi-"cations of Gibraltar and Port-Mahon; and alſo "the accounts of the agent-victuallers and com-"miſſaries of ſtores in thoſe parts." This being done accordingly, mr. ſecretary St. John acquainted them, on the 11th, that her Majeſty had readily complied with their deſires in their ſeveral addreſſes.

The 12th, the Queen came to the houſe of peers, with the uſual ſolemnity, and the commons attending, her Majeſty gave the royal aſſent to ten public and ſeven private bills, after which ſhe made the following ſpeech to both houſes:

My lords and gentlemen,

Q. Ann, An' 1711.

The Queen's ſpeech to both houſes.

"It is with great pleaſure I tell you, at the end "of this ſeſſion, that you have fully made good "all the aſſurances you gave me at the begining "of it.

"This I look upon as a farther pledge of my "ſubjects duty and affection, which is the firmeſt "ſupport of my throne.

"I thank you, gentlemen of the houſe of "commons, in a particular manner, for what you "have done; you have complied with my de-"ſire in granting a ſupply for building many new "churches; and you have not only inabled me to "carry on the war, but have made effectual pro-"viſion for paying thoſe heavy debts which were "almoſt grown an inſupportable burden on the "public: and this at a time when our enemies every "where pleas'd themſelves with the hopes that "the ſupplies for the ſervice of the current year "could not have been found. You have diſap-"pointed them in all reſpects, and by the great "ſums you have raiſed, the greateſt ever granted "to any Prince in one ſeſſion, you have reſtored "the public credit, which I will take care to "preſerve by a frugal management. The world "muſt now be ſatisfied that nothing can be too "difficult for a parliament fill'd with ſo much "zeal for the true intereſt of the nation in church "and ſtate.

My lords and gentlemen,

"The ſatisfaction I take in the power with "which God has intruſted me, is to imploy it "for the protection and good of all my people, "whoſe proſperity I have as much at heart, as "ever any of my predeceſſors had.

"You ſee the happy effects of a mutual con-"fidence between me and my ſubjects; I ſhall "look upon any attempt to leſſen it as a ſtep "towards diſſolving my government.

"The temper you have ſhewn, will, I hope, "convince thoſe who have the misfortune to differ "from our church, that their liberty is not in "danger. It is needleſs for me to repeat the aſ-"ſurances of my earneſt concern for the ſucceſſion "of the houſe of Hanover; and of my fix'd reſo-"lution to ſupport and incourage the church of "England, as by law eſtabliſh'd.

"You are now returning to your ſeveral coun-"tries, and I expect from you, that you will far-"ther recommend yourſelves to me, by ſtudying "to promote the public peace and quiet."

The parliament prorogued.

The lord-keeper then prorogued the parliament by her Majeſty's command, to the 10th day of July next inſuing.

Acts paſs'd.

The principal acts which received the royal aſſent this ſeſſion, beſide thoſe already mention'd, were; 1. "An act to oblige ſhips coming from places "infected, more effectually to perform quarentain. "2. An act for reviving, continuing and appro-"priating certain duties, &c. to raiſe 1,530,000 l. "by way of lottery. 3. An act inabling and "obliging the bank of England, for a certain "time, to exchange all Exchequer bills for ready "mony, upon demand, &c. 4. An act allowing "the importation of French wines, &c. 5. An "act to continue the acts for puniſhing mutiny and "deſertion, and falſe muſters, &c. 6. An act for "eſtabliſhing a general poſt-office, for all her "Majeſty's dominions, &c. 7, 8. Two acts for "laying certain duties on hides, ſkins, vellum, "parchment and hops. 9. An act for taking, "examining and ſtating the public accounts of the

(1) "This addreſs (ſays biſhop Burnet) was artfully ſpread thro' the nation, by which weaker minds were ſo poſſeſs'd, "that it was not eaſy to undeceive them even by the fulleſt and cleareſt evidences: the nation ſeemed ſtill infatuated beyond "the power of conviction." Hiſt. of his own times, Vol. 2. p. 573.

"kingdom.

Q. ANN, AN' 1711.

"kingdom. 10. An act for preventing exceſſive "and deceitful gaming. 11. An act making it "felony, without benefit of the clergy, to make "an attempt on the life of a privy counſellor, in "the execution of his office. 12. The South-"ſea act. 13. An act for the building fifty new "churches, in and about the cities of London and "Weſtminſter. 14. An act laying certain new "duties for ſecuring a yearly fund of 186,670 l. "for thirty-two years, for the ſatisfaction of the "2,000,000 lottery. 15, 16. Acts for the more "effectual preſervation of the game, and of the "fiſhery in the river Thames. 17. An act for "raiſing the militia for the year 1711. 18. An "act for incouraging the trade to America. 19. "An act for the incouragement of the coal trade. "And, 20. An act for the more effectual pre-"venting abuſes and frauds of perſons imployed in "certain manufactures."

Having thus given an account of parliamentary affairs, and other domeſtic occurences, I ſhall now proceed to forein tranſactions, and firſt, the campain in Flanders.

Campain in Flanders.

The duke of Marlborough, of whoſe departure from England, I have already given an account, arrived at the Hague, the 4th of March, N. S. where he continued ſome time, and was in daily conference with the deputies of the States, to concert the operations of the campain. This done, he aſſembled the confederate army the 30th of April at Orchies, between Liſle and Douay, the next day he paſs'd the Scarpe, and incamp'd between Douay and Bouchain, and the enemy poſted themſelves behind the Senſet, in a camp that was look'd upon as inacceſſible.

Prince Eugene, who was detained at Vienna on occaſion of the Emperor's death, did not join the duke till the 23d of May: and our two generals reſolved to continue in their poſts as long as poſſible, in hopes that the ſcarcity of forage would oblige the enemy to decamp. The 14th of June, the army under the duke of Marlborough march'd, and having paſs'd the canal of Arleux, and the Scarpe near Vitry, in the preſence of the enemy, incamp'd on the plains of Lens: the duke's deſign in this motion was in hopes to draw the enemy to ſome action; and they did indeed alter the ſituation of their camp, and began to lay bridges over the Scheld as if they deſign'd to paſs it: but they made no farther motion. The ſame day Prince Eugene detach'd the Imperial and Palatine troops, conſiſting of fifty ſquadrons and twelve battalions, to the Upper-Rhine, to make head againſt the French on that ſide, who had received conſiderable re-inforcements, and gave out that they intended to penetrate again into Bavaria, and imbroil the Empire while it remained without a head.

The confederate army being now fully aſſembled, conſiſted as follows: the right wing, under command of Prince Eugene, of ſixty-five battalions of foot, and 120 ſquadrons of horſe and dragoons; the left, under the command of the duke of Marlborough, of 119 battalions and 226 ſquadrons; together 184 battalions, and 341 ſquadrons, with 111 cannon, eight hawbitzers and forty pontons.

The allies take Arleux;

The duke of Marlborough was informed, that, after he had left his former camp, the enemy had repair'd the dike at Arleux, in order to ſtop the water of the Senſet from runing into the canal of Douay, and thence into the Scarpe, whereby the mills of Douay were render'd uſeleſs; and that they had likewiſe fortified the caſtle of Chanterin, and made a redoubt at the mills of Arleux to cover it: he therefore cauſed that poſt to be attack'd, the 6th of July, and took it, making a captain of grenadiers, and 125 men who defended it, priſoners of war. This poſt was judg'd of ſuch importance, that the duke thought fit to put it into a better poſture of defenſe; and the works being finiſh'd, a gariſon of 600 men were left in the place under the command of colonel Savary, and, on the 19th, the troops that covered the workmen there returned to the camp; of which the marſhal de Villars was no ſooner informed, than he ordered a detachment of 15,000 men to inveſt it. The 28th, in the morning, he raiſed a battery of ſix or ſeven pieces of cannon, and having made a ſufficient breach in the walls, by two in the afternoon, colonel Savary and his gariſon were obliged, in their turn, to ſurrender priſoners of war.

Q. ANN, AN' 1711.

And fortify it.

It is retaken by the French.

The duke of Marlborough reſolves to attempt the lines by ſtratagem.

The duke of Marlborough was now fully determined to attempt getting within the enemy's lines; of which we have the following deſcription: they began at Bouchain, on the Scheld, and were continued along the Senſet and the Scarpe, to Arras; from thence along the Upper-Scarpe, and the river to the Canche, the opening to thoſe rivers being intrench'd and fortified (with all poſſible care) by a large ditch, defended with redoubts and other works. His grace, upon a narrow view, finding that it would be too dangerous to indeavor to force them, reſolved upon a ſtratagem. That he might the better compaſs his deſigns, and make the enemy believe that he really intended to attack them, he ordered 1200 men out, to make roads and bridges in the front, and advanced with the whole army to Rebreuve, and from thence to Villars-Brulin, within two leagues of the lines. Here he ſet all his troops to work in making faſcines, but gave ſtrict orders for them not to exceed the length of four foot, that they might not tire the infantry too much to carry them, and gave out that he intended to attack the lines the next morning. The French general was ſo fully perſuaded of it, that he ſent orders to a ſtrong detachment, commanded by lieutenant-general count d'Eſtain, which had been ſent upon a ſecret expedition, to to halt at Peronne, and to the gariſons of Ipres and St. Omer, to come and join his army, which he drew all together behind the lines.

He goes to view them.

His real deſign.

The duke, to amuſe the enemy more effectually, went the 4th of Auguſt, N. S. by break of day, with ſeveral of the general officers, and 2000 horſe, to take a nearer view of the lines, and of the ſituation of the enemy's camp: but his real deſign, when he advanced from Cotê, was to indeavor to get within the enemy's lines, by attempting the paſſage of the Senſet, by Arleux, which he now believed was left unguarded (as, in effect, it happen'd to be). To this end he ordered lieutenant-general Cadogan and count Hompeſch to repair with all expedition to Douay, and aſſemble ſome troops which were left thereabouts, and, together with a detachment of that and the neighboring gariſons of Liſle and St. Amand, made a body of twenty-three battalions and ſeventeen ſquadrons. Their farther orders were to march directly with theſe troops to Arleux, and indeavor to paſs the Senſet there, while the duke himſelf would advance with the whole army to ſuſtain them: and that nothing might retard this extraordinary march, brigadier Sutton was ſent before hand with the artillery and pontons, under a good guard, to make bridges over the Scarpe, near Vitry, and over the canal of Arleux near Goulezin: and bread was ordered to be baked at Liſle for ſix days.

All theſe things were manag'd ſo privately, and the grimace carried on ſo well, that the confederate-generals themſelves had not the leaſt thought that any thing elſe was meant but the attacking of the lines the next morning. Theſe amuſements had ſo good an effect on the marſhal, that he kept his troops under arms night and day, and re-inforc'd them with all the ſtrength he could poſſibly draw draw together on that ſide, not leaving any number of troops in the poſts he had upon the Senſet.

Q. Ann, An' 1711.

The confederate army, in the mean time, were expecting orders to march, which were not given out till ſix in the Evening. The march was to begin between eight and nine, as ſoon as it was dark enough to ſtrike their tents without being diſcover'd by the enemy; but whether the march was to be to the right or left remain'd a ſecert. They were only told, that the ſeveral columns which the army was to march in, ſhould find an officer at the head of each of them, at ſuch an hour, who ſhould lead them the way they were to take when the time came.

The army marches towards Arleux.

About nine the whole army, to their great ſurprize, were ordered to march by the left, in four columns, without beat of drum, and the duke himſelf, with the horſe of the left wing, lead the van, and advanced with ſuch extraordinary expedition, that the next morning, by five, he paſs'd the Scarpe at Vitry. Here he received advice that count Hompeſch had paſſed the Senſet without any oppoſition, had taken poſſeſſion of the paſſes on that river, and on the Scheld, and was incamp'd at Oiſy; the French having, ſome time before, withdrawn the detachments they had on that ſide. His grace, upon this, haſtened his march, leſt the enemy ſhould get there before him; and, at the ſame time, diſpatch'd orders to the grand army to purſue their march with the utmoſt diligence.

Count Hompeſch paſſes the Senſet.

The duke, with his vanguard of fifty ſquadrons, having paſs'd the Scarpe, haſtened towards Arleux and Bac à Bacheul, where he arrived before eight o'clock, and the heads of the columns joined him there about ten, having march'd above ten hours, at a great rate, without halting, a diligence hardly to be parallel'd in hiſtory.

The marſhal de Villars marches to oppoſe them.

The marſhal de Villars had no ſooner notice how he had been deceived, and of this unexpected march of the confederate army, but he immediately apprehended what their deſign was. He therefore, after having waited from eleven at night till two the next morning, for certain intelligence, decamp'd with his whole army; and puting himſelf at the head of the King's houſhold, he march'd all night with ſuch diligence, that he appear'd, with the head of his line, about eleven o'clock, ſoon after the duke of Marlborough had joined count Hompeſch, and paſs'd, with twenty ſquadrons, thro' the defilee of Marquion; but when he ſaw that the duke was advancing, with his horſe drawn up, to attack him, he retreated behind a moraſs, where the reſt of his troops joined him quickly after; and 100 dragoons, with ſome few officers, whom he threw into the caſtle of Oiſy, were ſoon after made priſoners of war. Two regiments, which the marſhal de Villars detach'd under the command of the chevalier de Luxembourg, for Valenciennes, and a brigade of foot ſent to Cambray, had however better luck, and threw themſelves into thoſe places.

But comes too late.

Q. Ann, An' 1711.

The marſhal extreamly mortified.

It was, beyond all doubt, a ſenſible mortification to the marſhal de Villars to be thus viſibly out-general'd, after he had given the court of France ſuch repeated aſſurances, that he had taken ſuch meaſures as put him beyond the apprehenſions of meeting with any inſult from the allies, and after he had written to the French King, that theſe lines were the NON PLUS ULTRA of the duke of Marlborough. He therefore gave out, in order to keep up the ſpirits of his troops, that he would attack the duke of Marlborough the next morning (1).

His grace having however intelligence of the marſhal's threats, tho he had little reaſon to fear the conſequences of them, loſt no time, but drew out his troops, as faſt as they arrived, in order of battle, and they lay under their arms all night, tho' they could not but be extreamly fatigued after a march of ten leagues without halting.

The whole confederate army paſſes the French lines.

Thus the whole confederate army entered the French lines, which they had ſo vainly boaſted to be impenetrable; the moſt noble and boldeſt attempt that had been made during the whole war: and the honor of this attempt was the greater to the duke of Marlborough, as his army was not only weakened by the detachment which Prince Eugene had carried to the Rhine, but by the calling over 5000 of the beſt troops in his army, for an expedition deſign'd by ſea; ſo that the enemy were actually ſuperior to him in number (2).

The ſiege of Bouchain reſolv'd on.

Notwithſtanding this ſucceſs, the duke of Marlborough found it impracticable to bring the enemy to a general ingagement, on any tolerable equal terms; he therefore propoſed the ſiege of Bouchain, to try if that poſſibly might ingage them to hazard a battle to ſave ſo important a place. As well the Dutch deputies as the general officers thought the enterprize too daring. It ſeem'd to them next to impoſſible to take a place ſituated among moraſſes, well fortified, with a good gariſon in it, provided with all requiſites for a ſtout defenſe; and that within ſight of a ſuperior army; for the French lay within a mile of them: and beſide all this, a great deal was to be apprehended from the excurſions which the gariſons of Valenciennes and Condè might make, to cut off their proviſions which were to come to them from Tournay: however the duke perſiſting in his reſolution, the Dutch, at length, ſubmited (3).

This place was inveſted the 10th of Auguſt; but

(1) French writers pretend, that the duke of Marlborough's deſign, in this enterprize, was to have paſs'd both the Senſet and the Scheld before the marſhal de Villars ſhould be able to get to the latter to oppoſe his paſſage; but that, by the marſhal's extraordinary diligence, ſeeing the French troops before him, ready to diſpute that paſſage, he began to be very much diſcontened, and to repent of his temerity. He found he could not remain in that ſituation, and that he ſhould be obliged to paſs either the Senſet or the Scheld with his army, both which would be attended with great danger; becauſe the enemy being ſo near, it was to be fear'd, when part of his army was paſs'd either of theſe rivers, the marſhal would fall upon the other part, which would not then be in a condition to reſiſt his whole force. It will be natural now to aſk, why monſ. de Villars, having theſe advantages, did nor purſue them? Why truly (continues my author) he had his reaſons for not doing it, which tho' they could not be dived into then, were afterwards very evident. De Quincy hiſt. mil. de Louis le Grand, Tome VI. p. 516. A pretty come off! It is certain the duke was under no ſuch apprehenſions, as the reader will ſoon ſee.

(2) "This (ſays biſhop Burnet) raiſed his character beyond all that he had done formerly; the deſign was ſo well laid, and "was ſo happily executed, that in all men's opinion it paſs'd for a maſter-piece of military ſkill; the honor of it falling "intirely on the duke of Marlborough, and no other perſon having any ſhare, except in the execution." Hiſt. of his own times, Vol. II. p. 576.

It may not be forein here to make a compariſon between the conduct of the duke of Marlborough and the marſhal de Villars. The latter, blinded by the trifling conqueſt of Arleux, weakned by the great detachment he made from his army to obtain it, and puff'd up with this ſhadow of good fortune, threatens all Brabant; but is lull'd aſleep by a fond ſecurity for his own lines: the former obſerves the critical moment, lays hold of it, and ſurprizes theſe lines without the loſs of a man. The deſign, the ſecrecy, and, in ſhort, the whole management of it, were equally great and wonderful. Lediard's life of Marlborough, Vol. III. p. 155.

(3) A late author gives us a particular account of the difficulties which attended the attacking this place, ariſing as well from the ſituation of it as otherwiſe:

"Bouchain

Q. ANN, AN' 1711.

but it was not without the greateſt difficulties the lines of circumvalation were perfected; the marſhal de Villars, on his ſide, leaving no ſtratagem unattempted to prevent it, and to keep a communication open with the town; and the duke, on the other hand, imploying his utmoſt ſkill and aſſiduity to circumvent them, and to attain his end (1). All difficulties being at length overcome, the trenches were opened, the 23d at night, at three attacks; two againſt the upper town, and the third againſt the lower town. I ſhall not detain the reader with a journal of this ſiege; the approaches were carried on in the uſual manner, till all the batteries began to play on the 30th, and they continued with ſuch ſucceſs, that the cannon of the place were ſoon diſmounted, and the outworks ruined. The 12th of September, about noon, the beſiegers ſeing all things were preparing for a general aſſault, beat the chamade, and hoſtages being exchanged, the French, who were conducted to general Fagel's quarters, whither the duke of Marlborough and the deputies repaired, began to propoſe articles of capitulation; but the duke of Marlborough would not ſuffer them to be read, nor would grant them any conditions, but to ſurrender priſoners of war, which they at length conſented to, and delivered up one of the gates. with twenty-four colors, and all their arms; the gariſon being reduced from 6000 men, which they were at the begining, to half the number.

The trenches open'd.

Bouchain ſurrendered.

During this ſiege, not to mention ſeveral little attempts to interrupt or retard it, the marſhal de Villars form'd two deſigns, which might with truth have been called great, had they ſucceeded; one to poſſeſs himſelf of the communication the allies had over the moraſs, near Hordain, and the other to ſurprize Douay; but they both miſcarried, and he was oblig'd, at the head of 100,000 men, to be a bare ſpectator of the event of this ſiege (2).

Q. ANN, AN' 1711.

The French pretended, that this conqueſt, which they ſaid was very inſignificant in the conſequence, coſt more men by half, than it was worth; but it is plain, they would have willingly ſacrificed many more men, than it coſt the allies, and have thought themſelves well off too, if they could have prevented the ſiege.

As ſoon as Bouchain was put in a good poſture of defenſe, and the approaches were all level'd, both the armies began to ſeparate, having already greatly ſuffered by the continual rains, and the ſcarcity of forage. The duke of Marlborough having given the neceſſary orders for ſecuring the navigation of the Scarpe to Douay, and covering the workmen imployed in fortifying ſeveral poſts on that river, and on the Scheld, left the army, the 27th of October, arrived the 26th of November at the Hague, and the 17th of the ſame month, O. S. at Greenwich.

The campain ended.

The duke of Marlborough leaves the army.

In other parts, little happened this year worthy of our notice: the great event of it was the election of an Emperor at Francfort, in the room of Emperor Joſeph, deceas'd. This great Monarch's death, as it immediately opened to King Charles the ſucceſſion to the hereditary dominions, ſo a diſpoſition appear'd unanimouſly, among all the Electors, to chuſe him Emperor. Some came

The election of King Charles to the Imperial crown.

"Bouchain is but a little town, or rather fortreſs, ſituate at the confluence of the Senſet, and the Selle or Ruſelle, into "the Scheld. It is about nine miles north of Cambray, ten ſouth-weſt of Valenciennes, and twenty-eight almoſt weſt of "Mons. The Senſet ſeparates the Upper-town from the lower, forms an inundation between that and the Selle, and fills the "ditches which ſurround the works between the upper and the lower town. The Selle ſeparates the lower-town into two "parts, and between the lower-town and the Scheld, there is a horn-work which covers two ſeparate baſtions, and which is "cut in two by a ditch, ſupplied by the Scheld. Beſide theſe difficulties ariſing from the ſituation of the place, there were "two other very eſſential ones: The firſt, a formidable intrenchment, fenced with redoubts, and fifty pieces of cannon, "which thirty battalions commanded by the brave and vigilant monſieur Albergotti had raiſed between Wavrechin and "Pont à Wane, on the Senſet; which being but a quarter of a league from the town, and paralel to the circumvalation of "the confederates, the batteries of that intrenchment might play upon the circumvalation without interruption, there being "nothing but an inundation between them. Secondly, the communication which the enemy kept open with the town, by "means of a paſſage thro' a moraſs, which it was deem'd impracticable to cut off. To which we may add, that there were "eight battalions, and 600 Swiſs ſoldiers in the town, that the place was furniſh'd with all requiſites for a vigorous defenſe; "that monſieur de Ravignan had thrown himſelf into the town to command the troops, and taken 500 grenadiers with him; "and that monſieur de Selve, who defended St. Venant, was in the town before; ſo that the gariſon was commanded by two "major-generals, animated by the neighborhood of the whole French army." Rouſſet Hiſt. mil. Tome II. p. 306.

(1) During the whole courſe of this long war, which produced ſo many ſurprizing events, there was not ſo critical an inſtance as this, in which the reputation of two great generals was ſo nearly concern'd, and their ſkill in the art of war ſo fairly put to the teſt. The marſhal's buſineſs was, if poſſible, to prevent the ſiege, and thereby to retrieve, in ſome meaſure, the credit he had loſt by the too eaſy paſſage he had ſuffer'd the allies to find into his lines. The duke of Marlborough, on the other part, was fully reſolved not to let the advantage and honor ſlip out his hands, which he had obtain'd at ſo eaſy a rate by that paſſage; and foreſaw beſide, that it would be very difficult to make a good retreat, in the ſight of an army equal, if not ſuperior to his, and in a ſituation where he was beſet with ſeveral rivers, without having one good poſt on any of them. This was the real circumſtance of affairs, at the time the line of circumvalation was begun, which was the 12th of Auguſt. Lediard's life of Marlborough, Vol. III. p. 167.

(2) The duke's ſtratagem in paſſing the lines, without the loſs of a man; the cuting off the communication of the enemy with Bouchain; the manner of the duke's inveſting the town, with an inferior army; his caſting up lines; making regular forts; raiſing batteries; laying bridges over a river; making a moraſs paſſable, and providing for the ſecurity of his convoys; againſt a ſuperior army on the one ſide, and the numerous gariſons of Condé and Valenciennes on the other, were enterprizes truly heroic: yet his grace was cenſured by inſolent ſcriblers of his own nation, who gave out it was no more than a dove-houſe; and that the taking of it coſt the allies 16,000 men.

The marſhal de Villars is ſaid to have been ſo vain, that whenever he heard of the victories obtain'd by the allies, at Blenheim, Ramellies, Turin, Oudenarde, &c. he was uſed to ſay, Je ne ſçaurois être par tout (I cannot be every where) proudly intimating, that ſucceſs attended him every where: which vanity of his gave occaſion to the following lines.

I.
Le non plus ultra eſt ſurpris,
Villars pleurez vôtre imprudence;
Vous l'avez mis à ſi haut prix,
Que la Perte en eſt d'importance:
Mais conſolez vous aprés tout,
Vous ne ſçauriez être par tout.

II.
Prés du moulin à quatre vents,
Depuis trois nuits, ſur vôtre ligne,
Dans vos airs vains & meneçants
Vous attendiez victoire inſigne.
My Lord vous cherche à l'autre bout,
Vous ne ſçauriez être par tout.

Engliſhed thus.

I.
Thy non plus ultra's ſudden fate,
Unwary Villars, thou may'ſt mourn;
Thou priz'dſt it at ſo high a rate,
The loſs is hardly to be born:
But courage! men are ſatisfied,
Thou couldſt not be on every ſide.

II.
Safe in thy line, the other night,
Not far from yonder whirling mill,
Thy Merc'ry roſe to ſuch a height,
As promis'd vict'ry notable.
But Marlbro' knocks at t'other door,
And Villars can't be back and 'fore.

in

Q. Ann, An' 1711.

in perſon, others ſent their commiſſioners or plenipotentiaries to Francfort. They ſpent ſome weeks in preparing the capitulation. Great applications were made to them to receive deputies from the Electors of Bavaria and Cologn; but as theſe Princes were under the ban of the Empire, they were rejected. The interpoſition of the Pope's nuncio was likewiſe very diſagreable to them: he gave them much trouble; but they perſiſted in their reſolution. As Francfort was at no great diſtance from the armies on the Rhine, it was apprehended, that the French might have made an attempt that way; for, as I have ſaid above, they drew ſome detachments from their army in Flanders, to increaſe their forces on the Rhine. This obliged Prince Eugene to do the ſame, and of courſe he commanded the army of the Empire there; but without any conſiderable action. When the duke of Marlborough undertook the hazardous ſiege of Bouchain, his grace's enemies at home confidently hoped that it would miſcarry, and maliciouſly aſſerted, that his grace could do nothing without the aſſiſtance of Prince Eugene; but, as matters went, the aſſertion might rather have been inverted, and ſaid, that the Prince could do little without his friend and companion in glory, the duke of Marlborough. Prince Eugene came however in good time, to ſecure the Electors at Francfort, who being now ſafe from the fear of any inſult, went on ſlowly in all they thought fit to propoſe, previous to an election, and concluded unanimouſly to chuſe Charles, who was now declared Emperor, by the name of Charles VI, and he was crown'd accordingly at Francfort with the uſual ſolemnity.

Affairs on the Rhine.

Emperor Charles VI, crown'd.

King Charles, in his way to Francfort, ſtaid ſome weeks at Milan, where the duke of Savoy paid him a viſit, and it was ſaid, that all matters in diſpute between theſe two Princes, if any were left undetermined at the late Emperor's death, were there adjuſted between them. It was hoped, that the campain in Italy would, this year, have produced ſomething for the advantage of the common cauſe, upon the agreement made before Emperor Joſeph's death. The duke came into Savoy, and it was given out, that he was reſolved to puſh forwards: but upon what views it was not then known, he ſtop'd his courſe, and after a ſhort campain, to which he put an end on the 9th of September, repaſs'd the mountains: however, he thereby prevented the duke of Berwick's making any detachments to the Rhine or Catalonia.

Affairs in Italy.

The affairs in Spain had been ſo much preſs'd from the throne, and ſo much inſiſted on during the ſeſſion of parliament (not to mention the great ſums granted for that ſervice, far beyond what had been ever granted before) that it was expected matters would have been carried there much otherwiſe than in former years. The duke of Argyle was ſent to command the Queen's troops there; but for what reaſons, it is not my province to determine, all thoſe great expectations came to nothing. The duke of Argyle, indeed, was ſeiz'd with ſuch a violent fever, that he was forc'd to leave the army and come back to Barcelona; from whence, after having recovered his health, he return'd with the Queen's leave to England. Count Stahremberg had indeed ſome advantage over the duke of Vendôme, towards the concluſion of the year, and it was ſaid, that if he had received the aſſiſtance he expected from England, he would have pierced far into Spain; but this is more than I ſhall pretend to affirm: I ſhall therefore leave this matter undetermined.

Spain.

Q. Ann, An' 1711.

The Portugueſe were as inactive as formerly, and, inſtead of enterprizing any thing againſt the enemy, were diſcovered to be carrying on a ſecret negociation with the French and Spaniards, with which being charg'd by the earl of Portmore, they did not deny it, but ſaid this was in order to procure a general peace.

And Portugal.

A pacification was this year likewiſe concluded between the Emperor and the malecontents of Hungary.

Pacification in Hungary.

Our affairs at ſea this year afford very little matter for a general hiſtory: ſir John Leake, rear-admiral of Great-Britain, was appointed admiral and commander in chief of her Majeſty's fleet, in the room of Mathew Aylmer, eſq; ſir Thomas Hardy was made rear-admiral of the blue ſquadron of her Majeſty's fleet, and, ſome time afterwards, ſir George Byng was named admiral of the white. Sir John Leake commanded the body of the Britiſh fleet in the channel; but, as the French ſent no fleet to ſea this year, nothing remarkable happen'd. Sir Thomas Hardy commanded a ſquadron off of Dunkirk and the Soundings, but without any thing extraordinary occurring. In the Mediterranean, ſir John Jennings commanded a ſquadron, of whoſe proceedings I find very little worthy remark, except that he convoy'd Charles III, King of Spain, ſoon after Charles VI, Emperor of Germany, from Barcelona to San Pietro di Arena, a ſuburb of Genoa, where he landed on his way to Germany.

Maritime affairs.

In America, a ſquadron under commadore Littleton, being in ſearch of monſieur du Caſſe's ſquadron, had the good fortune to meet with the vice-admiral of the gallions, being the ſame that had eſcaped from admiral Wager, which he took; but monſieur du Caſſe had before taken moſt of the mony out of her; and with her was taken another ſhip of leſs burden and importance.

Another ſquadron, under ſir Hovendon Walker, was leſs ſucceſsful in an expedition deſign'd on Quebec in Canada (1). This ſquadron, with a number of tranſports, having land-forces on board, under the command of brigadier-general Hill, ſet ſail in the begining of May for New-England, where they arrived the 24th of June, and the land-forces being put on ſhoar there to refreſh themſelves, the fleet continued at Boſton till the 30th of July, when the troops being re-imbark'd, they ſet ſail again for the river of Canada, whither general Nicholſon alſo march'd, at the ſame time, with the forces of New-York, Connecticut, and New-Jerſey, together with ſome Palatines, and about 1000 Indians. The fleet arrived on the river of Canada, which is 130 leagues long from the mouth up to Quebec: on the 22d, being a thick fog, and hard gale, having neither ſoundings nor ſight of land to ſteer by, nor any anchorage within ſixty leagues, they drove upon the north ſhoar, among rocks and iſlands, where the whole fleet had like to have been loſt. All the men of war eſcap'd, tho' with extream hardſhips and difficulties; but eight tranſports

(1) This project was at firſt form'd upon colonel Nicholſon's arrival from New-England with the four Indian Chiefs or Kings: and his return, with a lieutenant-general's commiſſion, and the taking of Port-Royal, were the fore-runners of it. That ſir Hovendon Walker was not previouſly let into the ſecret is plain from many circumſtances; and mr. Burchett tells us, "The then lords-commiſſioners of the admiralty were ſo far from it, that the deſign on which this fleet was bound, was "rather induſtriouſly hid from them, and that a certain perſon ſeemed to value himſelf very much, that a deſign of this na- "ture was kept a ſecret from the admiralty. It was an expedition (ſays the ſame gentleman) very chargeable to the nation, "and from which no advantage could reaſonably be expected, conſidering how unadviſedly it was ſet on foot, by thoſe who "nurſed it up, upon falſe ſuggeſtions and repreſentations."

ſports

Q. Ann, An' 1711.

ſports were caſt away, and almoſt 900 men, officers, ſoldiers and ſeamen loſt (1). After this diſaſter, it was reſolved, in a council of war, as they had but ten weeks proviſions on board, to return home; accordingly they ſet ſail from the Spaniſh river-bay, the 10th of September, and arrived at St. Helens, the 9th of October, nothing remarkable having happened in their paſſage, but the taking of a French banker from Rochel.

This was the tragical ſucceſs of this expedition, and to compleat the misfortune of it, the 15th, the admiral's own ſhip, the Edgar, was unhappily blown up at Spithead, with about 400 men, and ſeveral of the inhabitants of Portſmouth, who happened to be on board, and all periſh'd (2).

The biſhop of Briſtol made lord privy-ſeal.

Having thus finiſh'd my account of forein and military affairs, I return to England, where, upon the death of the duke of Newcaſtle, the privy-ſeal was given to dr. Robinſon, lord biſhop of Briſtol, dean of Windſor, and regiſter of the order of the garter.

Negociations for a peace renew'd.

The rumors of peace began now to prevail every day more and more, and very different were the opinions for and againſt it: ſome thought the continuance of a war inſupportable; others were by no means for finiſhing it, till the main point, for which it was enter'd upon, was fully obtained. The latter inſiſted on the juſtice and reaſonableneſs of carrying on the war, as well with regard to ourſelves as our allies, eſpecially in conſideration of the advantagious ſituation it was in. The former, on the contrary, among other things pretended, England was now ſo exhauſted, that it was impoſſible to carry on the war any longer; and more eſpecially ſince King Charles was choſen Emperor, that he would be too great and too dangerous to all his neighbors, if Spain were join'd to the Empire, and his hereditary dominions (3). That there was a negociation on foot, no one queſtion'd; but few could tell where to fix it; and opinions were as various when and where this negociation begun. Some have inſinuated, that the firſt overture was made from this ſide of the water (4): Others (and ſeemingly with more probability) ſuppoſe it to have come from France, ſoon after (others again think before) the breaking off of the treaty of Gertruydenburg, and ſent from the marquis de Torcy, to the earl of Jerſey.

Q. Ann, An' 1711.

The report of the commitee of ſecrecy, made June 9, 1715, gives us the following account of this matter:

"The firſt material paper we find, is intitled: "the firſt propoſitions of France, ſign'd by "monſieur de Torcy, April 22, 1711, N. S. To "whom theſe propoſitions were directed; what "previous ſteps had been made on the part of "France; or what incouragement had been given "on the part of England, does not appear; but "it is evident, that they are conceived in very "looſe and general terms; that, from the be-"gining, the deſign of France was to ſecure "Spain and the Weſt-Indies to King Philip; to "create jealouſies among the allies; and that "France offered to treat with England and Holland, "either by themſelves, or jointly with the reſt "of the allies, which is left to the choice of "England."

Theſe propoſitions we however find, by the ſame report, were tranſmited, a week afterwards, to the lord Raby, the Queen's embaſſador at the Hague, with orders to communicate them to the penſionary; but the commitee adds; "They

(1) This misfortune, as well as the diſappointment, was ſurely very great; but, as ſir Hovendon Walker well obſerved, muſt have been far greater, if they had got in ſafely to Quebec; nay, even if they had found the place deſerted, as probably would have been the caſe, they would have found a barren and uncultivated region, and the French would have taken with them or deſtroyed their proviſions. Our peoples proviſions would have been reduced to eight or nine (perhaps to ſix weeks) at ſhort allowance; no relief could poſſibly be hoped for in leſs than ten months, if ſo ſoon, the Feverſham, and three ſtore-ſhips laden with the proviſions deſigned for their ſupply, being caſt away in their paſſage: ſo that, if they had eſcaped ſhipwreck, which would have been a very great chance, between 10 and 12000 men muſt inevitably have periſhed with hunger and cold, and the ſhips have become a prey to the returning enemy: on the other hand, had the enemy held out, till our people had ſpent all their proviſions, they muſt have laid down their arms, and have ſurrendered to the French at diſcretion, to avoid death in its moſt frightful ſhape, famine; or, if they had taken the place, either by ſtorm or capitulation, the remaining proviſions of a ſmall gariſon would not have gone far towards ſubſiſting ſo large a number; nor could they, at that ſeaſon of the year have march'd thro' the country, in ſearch of more. And this would have been the caſe, had they afterwards attempted Placentia. Lediard's naval hiſtory, Vol. II. p. 854.

(2) An anonimous author, who indeavors to lay the blame of the miſcarriage of this expedition on the new miniſtry, ſays; it was plain, by the account given of it, that it was not meerly an accident, or any treachery, which was the cauſe of the miſcarriage; but a complication of many difficulties; for firſt (continues he) we are told, that the river St. Laurence is navigable, only at one time of the year. "We let that ſlip." But if we had nicked the time, we could not have ſailed up that river without very able pilots; "We had none." If we had taken the proper time, and been provided with good pilots, none but ſhips of a certain burden can go up the river; "all our men of war were too big," but if time, pilots, and ſhips had been the moſt proper for the interprize, we ſhould have had proviſions for more months than we had weeks, to ſubſiſt the fleet, and the troops, during the winter, "To keep the deſign ſecret, the miniſtry victualed the fleet greatly ſhort of what "was neceſſary, leaving them to take in a freſh ſupply in New-England, for which they would not before-hand give direction "for the ſame reaſon. This, indeed preſerved the ſecrecy; but it deſtroyed the deſign; and their being ſo ſhortly provided "was the occaſion, that when they failed in the main deſign on Quebec, they were not able to ſuceeed in the under-plot, againſt "Placentia, in which otherwiſe they apprehended no difficulty.

(3) It was apprehended, that the re-union of the two Monarchies, in the perſon of King Charles, might render the houſe of Auſtria as mighty, and as formidable, as it had been in former times, and might again plunge Europe into the ſame inconveniences, for the avoiding of which the war was begun, that is, to prevent Spain being annex'd to the houſe of Bourbon. This was an argument the Britiſh miniſters ſtrenuouſly inſiſted upon, to juſtify the change of their conduct, and to oblige the allies to deſiſt from their demand of the reſtitution of Spain, which was the principal cauſe of the war, and be contented with ſome of the exterior provinces of that Monarchy, and with a ſimple renunciation of King Philip for himſelf, and his deſcendents for ever, to all title and right to the crown of France. Lediard's life of Marlborough, Vol. III. p. 198.

(4) Of this opinion was biſhop Burnet, and he gives us the following account of it:

"The earl of Oxford (ſays he) being made lord-treaſurer, became the chief, if not ſole miniſter; for every thing was di-"rected by him: it ſoon appeared, that his ſtrength lay in managing parties, and ingaging weak people, by rewards and "promiſes, to depend upon him; but that he neither thoroughly underſtood the buſineſs of the treaſury, nor the conduct of "forein affairs; but he truſted to his intereſt in the Queen, and in the favorite."

(Here, however, our author's zeal ſeems to have out run his prudence.)

"He ſaw the load, (continues he) which the carrying on the war muſt bring upon him; ſo he reſolved to ſtrike up a peace, as "ſoon as poſſible. The earl of Jerſey had ſome correſpondence in Paris, and at St. Germains; ſo he truſted the conduct of "the negociation to him:" but, upon his ſudden death, mr. Matthew Prior, a gentleman, who by his natural abilities and pregnant genius, improved by aſſiduous ſtudy, had gain'd a name among the wits of the age, and found means to raiſe himſelf to ſeveral imployments, who, likewiſe had been the lord Jerſey's ſecretary, was imployed to proſecute what his maſter did not live to finiſh. He was ſent to the court of France in September, to try on what terms we might expect a peace. His journey was carried on ſecretly; but upon his return, he was ſtop'd at Dover; and a packet which he brought, was detain'd, till an order came from court to ſet him free: and by this accident the ſecret broke out. Hiſtory of his own times, Vol. II. p. 579.

Q. Ann, An' 1711.

" were ſurprized to find, after mutual aſſurances " had paſs'd, on this occaſion, between England " and Holland (to take no ſtep but in mutual " concert) not the leaſt communication was made " to the States, of the negociations that were " carrying on, for above five months together, be- " tween England and France, till after the ſpecial " preliminaries were ſign'd, and the ſeven general " preliminaries were concluded and ſent to them."

The perſon firſt ſecretly imployed in this affair, was ſuppoſed to be monſieur Gaultier, formerly chaplain to marſhal Tallard when he was embaſſador in England, and the marſhal was likewiſe ſaid to have had a great ſhare in promoting this affair. How long this buſineſs was in agitation, before any ear was given to it, is yet a ſecret; but monſieur de Torcy inſiſting, that ſome truſty perſon might be ſent over, to whom he might freely open his mind, mr. Prior was pitch'd on, as being well acquainted with that miniſter, and likewiſe for his perſonal qualifications.

Be this as it will, monſieur Meſnager, and the abbot du Boſc, were ſoon after ſent over from France, with preliminaries; but very different from thoſe that had been concerted at the Hague, two years before.

The ſeven preliminaries as communicated to the forein miniſters.

The ſeven preliminary articles, which were communicated to the miniſters of the forein powers, who were parties in the grand alliance, were as follows:

1. " The King being willing to contribute all that " is in his power, to the re-eſtabliſhment of the " general peace; his Majeſty declares: that he " will acknowledge the Queen of Great-Britain, in " that quality, as alſo the ſucceſſion of that crown, " according to the preſent ſettlement.

2. " That he will freely, and bona fide, conſent to the taking all juſt and reaſonable meaſures, for preventing the crowns of France and " Spain being ever united on the head of the ſame " Prince. His Majeſty being perſuaded, that this " exceſs of power would be contrary to the good " and quiet of Europe.

3. " The King's intention is, that all the parties ingag'd in the preſent war, without excepting " any of them, may find their reaſonable ſatisfaction, in the treaty of peace, which ſhall be made: " that commerce may be re-eſtabliſh'd and maintain'd for the future, to the advantage of Great-Britain, of Holland, and of the other nations, " who have been accuſtomed to exerciſe commerce.

4. " As the King will likewiſe maintain exactly " the obſervation of the peace, when it ſhall be " concluded: and the object the King propoſes to " himſelf being to ſecure the frontiers of his kingdom, without diſturbing in any manner whatſoever, the neighboring ſtates, he promiſes to " agree by the treaty which ſhall be made, that " the Dutch ſhall be put in poſſeſſion of the fortified places, which ſhall be mentioned, in the Netherlands, to ſerve hereafter for a barrier, which " may ſecure the quiet of the republic of Holland, " againſt any enterprize from the part of France.

5. " The King conſents likewiſe, that a ſecure " and convenient barrier ſhould be form'd for the " Empire, and for the houſe of Auſtria.

6. " That notwithſtanding Dunkirk coſt the " King very great ſums, as well to purchaſe it, as " to fortify it, and that it is farther neceſſary to " be at a very conſiderable expence for raiſing the " works; his Majeſty is willing however to in- " gage, to cauſe them to be demoliſh'd, imme- " diately after the concluſion of the peace, on " condition, that, for the fortifications of that " place, a proper equivalent, which may be ſa- " tisfactory, be given him: and as England cannot " furniſh that equivalent, the diſcuſſion of it ſhall " be refer'd to the conferences to be held for the " negociation of the peace.

Q. Ann, An' 1711.

7. " When the conferences for the negociation " of the peace ſhall be form'd, all the pretenſions " of the Princes and States, ingag'd in the preſent " war, ſhall be therein diſcuſs'd bona fide and " amicably; and nothing ſhall be omited to re- " gulate and terminate them, to the ſatisfaction " of all the parties.

" By virtue of a full power from the King, we " the underwriten knights of his order of St. Mi- " chael, deputy of the council of commerce, have " concluded, in the name of his Majeſty, the pre- " ſent preliminary articles. In witneſs whereof, " we have ſign'd, done at London, September 27. " O. S. and the 8th of October, N. S. 1711."

Mesnager.

Great murmurings occaſion'd thereby.

Theſe preliminary articles, as they were called, tho' they were only offers ſign'd by the French agent alone, being ſo very different from what had been propoſed, when monſieur de Torcy was ſent to Holland but two years before, ſurprized every one, and occaſioned great murmurings among the generality of the people of both parties. They were look'd upon as captious, inſidious, and inſufficient to ground a treaty upon; nay, many would hardly believe them to be genuine (1).

Means uſed to calm them.

To calm, in ſome meaſure, the minds of the people, and to put a ſtop to theſe murmurings, an addition of ſix other preliminary articles, were the ſame day made public in the news-paper, call'd the Poſt-boy, which were ſaid to be agreed to by France, tho' they were not yet ſign'd, nor communicated to the miniſters of the allies. Theſe were in ſubſtance:

1. That the kingdom of Naples, Sicily, Sardinia, and the duchy of Milan, with the fortreſſes of Tuſcany, which belonged to the crown of Spain, and all Flanders, ſhould remain, for ever, to the houſe of Auſtria.

2. That King Philip ſhould have all Spain, with the iſlands of Majorca and Minorca, and the Weſt-Indies.

3. That the Engliſh ſhould have a gariſon in Cadiz, and the South-ſea-company a ſettlement on that continent, according to the act of parliament.

4. That Dunkirk ſhould be demoliſhed, and the harbor deſtroy'd.

5. That the Dutch ſhould appoint commiſſaries, to treat with other commiſſaries, to be appointed by France, concerning a neceſſary barrier.

6. That ſatisfaction and ſecurity ſhould be given to the other allies at the general congreſs.

The ſeven propoſals, or preliminary articles were no ſooner made public, than ſwarms of pamphlets appear'd, arraigning the Queen's conduct; and, on the other hand, as many were publiſh'd, to beſpeak a favorable reception of theſe articles. Some of the forein miniſters were likewiſe alarm'd at the apprehenſions of an approaching peace. Count Gallas, the Emperor's miniſter, is ſaid to have treated theſe offers with much ſcorn, and

(1) It was natural, ſays monſieur le Clerc, for people to aſk, what advantages France had gain'd, during the two laſt campains? What victories the French had gain'd over the allies? that they could have the aſſurance to make offers now, ſo vaſtly diſtant from thoſe the allies had reaſon to expect, and France, itſelf, had been upon the very point of accepting. Hiſt. des Prov. Unies.

cauſed

Q. ANN, AN' 1711.

caused the preliminaries to be printed in one of our News-papers. He could not, as it has been reported, contain himself upon this occasion, within the bounds of decency; but let fall such expressions, with regard to her Majesty's administration, as were not thought very becoming the minister of a Prince who had so great obligation to the Queen and nation. Her Majesty therefore thought she could do no less than forbid him her court; but she had still so much affection for his Imperial Majesty, as to let him know, that any other minister from him, would be agreeable to her (1).

The French negociators return.

Monsieur Mesnager, and his partner, the abbot du Bosc, having continued some time between London and Windsor, and having had several conferences with the ministry, took their leave, the 4th of October, in order to return home, highly satisfied with the honors done them in England. It was not then known, how far our court had carried the negociations with France; whether they accepted of these preliminaries only as a foundation for a treaty, or if any private promise or treaty was sign'd; the latter of which was positively and industriously given out, both in France and Spain: and the report of the commitee of secrecy mentions special preliminaries being sign'd, before the seven general ones were communicated to the States. When, where and how these matters were treated, is likewise a secret (2).

Numberless were the pamphlets which were publish'd on this account likewise, on both sides of the question; of which but to give the bare titles would carry me too far. I shall therefore lay aside the controversy and come to facts.

The Emperor sends circular letters to the Princes of the Empire:

The new Emperor, having seen the offers made by France, wrote circular letters to the several Electors and Princes of the Empire, to signify his disapprobation of them, and to exhort them, not to give any ear to them: declaring at the same time, that for his part, he had taken an irrevocable resolution to suffer whatever might be the event, rather than give his consent to a negociation, which would be absolutely destructive to the Empire, and a prejudice to the liberties of all Europe.

And writes to the States-general,

He likewise sent a letter to the States-general, wherein, among other things, he observ'd the fatal consequences which must necessarily attend the giving up the Spanish Monarchy, and the augmentation of power, which would thereby accrue to the enemy. His Imperial Majesty thought it likewise proper to take notice, in this letter, that France was not in a condition to withstand the army of the allies, neither in the field, nor in their fortified towns; and said he could not help being irritated at those, who, having so often experienced the illusions of France, would again have a reliance on that good faith, which they always promis'd, but never kept. He continued to assure them, that he depended upon their concurrence with him, to indeavor, at least, to induce the Queen of Great-Britain, to reject these offers, and to continue the war: protesting, that for himself, whatever might be the consequences, he absolutely rejected them, and would never impower his embassadors to assist at the conferences, which were propos'd for treating upon them.

Q. ANN, AN' 1711.

To dissuade them from accepting the offers made by France.

The earl of Strafford sent to the Hague.

The earl of Strafford, was, in the mean time, dispatch'd for the Hague, to know the sentiments of the States-general, and to use his indeavors to induce their High-mightinesses to consent to a general congress. His lordship arrived there the 10th of October; and, eight days after, monsieur Buys, pensionary of Amsterdam, whom the States appointed on this occasion as their envoy extraordinary to the court of Great-Britain, arrived at London. To pass by the several previous transactions negociated at London and the Hague, I shall only observe, that the States-general, at length consented to a congress, and that, on the 19th of November, at a commitee of council held at the Cockpit, where the lord-treasurer and monsieur Buys assisted, the time and place was fixed to the 1st of January, O. S. in Utrecht: whereupon, the next day, circular letters were sent, by her Majesty's order, to all the forein ministers residing here, to notify the same to their respective masters, that they might likewise send their plenipotentiaries, at the time and place appointed.

The States consent to a congress.

The time and place of the congress fix'd.

A memorial from the Elect. of Hanover presented.

With the duke of Marlborough, who arrived at Hampton-court the 18th, came over baron Bothmar, envoy extraordinary from his Electoral Highness of Hanover, who, about a week after, had a private audience of her Majesty, and the next day presented that famous memorial, which, at that time, made a great noise, and was liable to much censure: tho' it was receiv'd with great applause, by all well-wishers to the Protestant succession, who highly commended the Elector for his seasonable interposition, in an affair that so nearly concern'd him, tho' it gave no small offence to some persons.

The duke of Marlborough visits the ministers.

The duke, for his part, spent several days after his arrival, in visiting the chief of the ministry, among whom, to shew that he entertained no personal dissatisfaction, he paid his compliments to the earl of Oxford (3). Peace was now the subject of every conversation, her Majesty having named her plenipotentiaries, and given commission to the bishop of Bristol, lord privy-seal, and the earl of Strafford, for that purpose, for whom instructions were actually drawing up (4).

Plenipotentiaries named.

After

(1) "This proceeding (says bishop Burnet) was severe and unusual; for the common method, when a provocation is given "by a public minister, is to complain of him to his master, and to desire him to be recalled: It was not then known upon "what this was grounded; the surmise was, that his secretary, monsieur Gaultier (who was a Priest) betrayed him, and dis- "covered his secret correspondence; and the advertisements he sent the Emperor, to give him ill impressions of our court; for "which treachery, he was rewarded with an abby in France; but of this (adds my author) I have no certain information." History of his own times, Vol. II. p. 580.

(2) "That monsieur Mesnager (says the same report) upon his arrival here, frequently conser'd with the Queen's ministers, "appears by many instances: but the subject matter of these conferences, the times, places, and particular persons, with whom "he treated, or by what authority, the commitee find no account, till the 20th of September, when there was a meeting be- "tween them, at mr. Prior's, at which he delivered the secret preliminary articles, betwixt Great-Britain and France, that "were sign'd as such, the 27th, the same day the general preliminaries were sign'd by monsieur Mesnager."

(3) The duke of Marlborough (says bishop Burnet) upon his coming over, spoke very plainly to the Queen, against the steps which were made: but he found her so possess'd, that what he said made no impression: so he desired to be excused from coming to council; since he must oppose every step which was made in that affair. History of his own times, Vol. II. p. 582.

(4) Bishop Burnet, speaking of these matters, has an odd paragraph, which, for the singularity of it, I shall insert: the Queen (says he) said, "She hoped Bishops would not be against the peace. I said (continues he) a good peace was what we "daily pray'd for; but the preliminaries offered by France, gave no hopes of such a one; and the trusting to the King of "France's faith, after all that had pass'd, would seem a strange thing. She said, we were not to regard the preliminaries; "we should have a peace upon such a bottom, that we should not at all rely on the King of France's word; but we ought to "suspend our opinions, till she acquainted us with the whole matter. I ask'd leave to speak my mind plainly; which she "granted; I said any treaty, by which Spain and the West-Indies were left to King Philip, must, in a little while, deliver up "all Europe into the hands of France; and, if any peace should be made, she was betrayed, and we were all ruined; "in

Q. Ann, An' 1711.

After ſeveral prorogations, both houſes of parliament met, the 7th of December, when the Queen made the following ſpeech from the throne:

The parliament meets.

My lords and gentlemen,

The Queen's ſpeech to both houſes.

" I have called you together as ſoon as the " public affairs would permit, and I am glad that " I can now tell you, that notwithſtanding the " arts of thoſe who delight in war, both place " and time are appointed for opening the treaty of " a general peace.

" Our allies, eſpecially the States-general, whoſe " intereſt I look upon as inſeparable from my " own, have, by their ready concurrence, ex- " preſs'd their intire confidence in me; and I have " no reaſon to doubt, but that my own ſubjects " are aſſured of my particular care for them.

" My chief concern is, that the Proteſtant re- " ligion, and the laws and liberties of theſe na- " tions, may be continued to you, by ſecuring " the ſucceſſion to the crown, as it is limited by " parliament, to the houſe of Hanover.

" I ſhall indeavor, that after a war which has " coſt ſo much blood and treaſure, you may find " your intereſt in trade and commerce improved " and inlarged by a peace, with all other advan- " tages, which a tender and affectionate ſoverein " can procure for a dutiful and loyal people.

" The Princes and States which have been in- " gaged with us in this war, being by treaties " intitled to have their ſeveral intereſts ſecured at a " peace, I will not only do my utmoſt to procure " every one of them all reaſonable ſatisfaction, but " I ſhall alſo unite with them, in the ſtricteſt in- " gagements, for continuing the alliance, in order " to render the general peace ſecure and laſting

" The beſt way to have this treaty effectual " will be to make early proviſion for the cam- " pain: therefore I muſt aſk of you, gentlemen of " the houſe of commons, the neceſſary ſupplies " for the next year's war; and I do moſt earneſtly " recommend to you to make ſuch diſpatch there- " in, as may convince our enemies, that if we " cannot obtain a good peace, we are prepared " to carry on the war with vigor.

" Whatever you give will be ſtill in your own " power to apply, and I doubt not but in a little " time after the opening of the treaty we ſhall be " able to judge of its event.

My lords and gentlemen,

" As I have had your chearful aſſiſtance for the " carrying on this long and chargeable war, ſo I " aſſure myſelf that no true Proteſtant, or good " ſubject, will envy Britain or me the glory and " ſatisfaction of ending the ſame, by a juſt and " honorable peace for us and all our allies.

" Such a peace will give new life to our forein " trade, and I ſhall do my utmoſt to improve " that happy opportunity to incourage our home- " manufactures, which will tend to the eaſing of " my ſubjects in that exceſſive charge they now " ly under in maintaining the poor, and to cor- " rect and redreſs ſuch abuſes as may have crept " into any part of the adminiſtration during ſo " long a war.

Q. Ann, An' 1711.

" I cannot conclude without earneſtly recom- " mending to you all unanimity, and that you " will carefully avoid every thing which may " give occaſion to the enemy to think us a people " divided among ourſelves, and conſequently pre- " vent our obtaining that good peace of which " we have ſuch reaſonable hopes, and ſo near a " view.

" I pray God direct your conſultations to this " end, that being deliver'd from the hardſhips of " war, you may become a happy and a flouriſhing " people."

Her Majeſty having diveſted herſelf of her royal robes, return'd incognito to the houſe of lords to hear the debates, which were that day very warm. An addreſs of thanks to her Majeſty, for her moſt gracious ſpeech, being voted, the earl of Nottingham, after a long and elaborate introductory ſpeech (1), moved, " that a clauſe " might be added to the addreſs: That it was " the humble opinion and advice of the houſe, " that no peace could be ſafe or honorable to " Great-Britain, or Europe, if Spain or the Weſt- " Indies ſhould be alloted to any branch of the " houſe of Bourbon." This occaſioned a warm and earneſt debate, and many ſpeeches: the miniſters very much oppoſed it, and moved the refering that debate to another opportunity, in which it might be fully debated; but ſaid it was not proper to clog the addreſs with it. The lord Guernſey ſaid (2), " this clauſe was in a manner forein to " an addreſs of thanks; that in all probability few " of the members of the houſe were prepared to " ſpeak to it; but that it might be debated at a " more convenient time, when, according to cuſ- " tom, the houſe ſhould take into conſideration " the ſtate of the nation." Some went ſo far to add, " that ſince peace and war belonged as pre- " rogatives to the crown, it was not proper to " offer any advice in thoſe matters till it was " aſked: but this (it has been ſaid) was rejected " with indignation; ſince it was a conſtant prac- " tice, in all ſeſſions of parliament, to offer ad- " vices; no prerogative could be above advice; " this was the end ſpecified in the writ, by which " a parliament was ſummoned."

Warm debates concerning the peace.

The earl of Angleſea, who arrived but that very day at London, together with the duke of Ormond, from Ireland, repreſented the inſufferable burthen under which the nation groan'd, and the neceſſity there was of making a peace, the concluſion of which ought, in his opinion, to be left intirely to her Majeſty's wiſdom; and added, " that we might have injoyed the bleſſing of peace

" in leſs than three years, ſhe would be murdered, and the fires would be again raiſed in Smithfield: I purſued this long, till " I ſaw ſhe grew uneaſy: ſo I withdrew." Ib.

How far the biſhop then might, or might not have juſt cauſe to form ſuch harſh conjectures, I ſhall not ſay: but muſt wonder, that as he lived to find matters did not happen to fall out quite ſo bad as he had foretold, why he did not expunge this prophecy out of his manuſcript. Lediard's life of Marlborough, Vol. III. p. 216.

(1) " He ſet forth the inſufficiency of the late preliminaries, made a lively repreſentation of the danger of treating upon ſo " precarious a foundation; urged the expreſs ingagements Great-Britain had enter'd into with the high allies, to reſtore the in- " tire monarchy of Spain to the houſe of Auſtria, and the neceſſity of carrying on the war with vigor, till theſe ingagements " were made good:" adding, " that tho' he had a numerous family, he would readily contribute half his income towards it, " rather than acquieſce in a peace, which he thought unſafe and diſhonorable to his country, and to all Europe."

(2) To the objection made by ſome lords, that they were not prepar'd to ſpeak to that motion, the earl of Sunderland anſwer'd ſmartly; " What my lords, is it poſſible, that any member of this illuſtrious houſe ſhould be unprepar'd to debate an " affair, which, for theſe ten years paſt, has been the principal ſubject-matter of our conſultations? do not we ſit in the " ſame houſe? and are we not the ſame peers, who have conſtantly been of opinion, and have often repreſented to her " Majeſty, that no ſafe and honorable peace can be made, unleſs Spain and the Weſt-Indies be recover'd from the houſe of " Bourbon? It is true, I ſee ſome new faces among us; but even that lord, who ſits on the wool-pack (meaning the lord- " treaſurer) may well remember, that, in the late reign, four lords were impeach'd for having made a partition-treaty.

" ſoon

Q. ANN, AN' 1711.

" ſoon after the battle of Ramellies, had it not " been deſignedly put off by ſome perſons whoſe " intereſt it was to prolong the war."

The duke of Marlborough, who could not but perceive that this ſuggeſtion was levell'd at him, made a long and pathetic ſpeech, in his own juſtification, wherein " he appeal'd to GOD and " the Queen, that he was ever deſirous of a ſafe, " honorable and laſting peace, and that he was " always very far from having any deſign of pro- " longing the war for his own private advantage: " yet he could by no means give into the meaſures " that had been taken to enter into a negociation " of peace, with France, upon the foot of the " ſeven preliminaries; ſince his opinion was the " ſame with that of the allies, that the leaving " Spain and the Weſt-Indies to the houſe of " Bourbon would be the intire ruin of Europe, " which he had, with all fidelity and humility, " declared to her Majeſty, when he had the " honor to wait on her, a little after his return: " and therefore he was for inſerting the clauſe " offer'd by the earl of Nottingham."

The debate continued very warm till ſeven at night; when a motion being made, whether the queſtion for inſerting the clauſe offered by the earl of Nottingham ought to be put, it was carried in the affirmative by that earl's ſingle caſting vote. The queſtion itſelf for inſerting the clauſe was alſo carried by a majority of ſix votes; and ſeveral lords enter'd their proteſt againſt it. In the houſe of commons, the miniſterial party had a much greater majority: for a motion being made there, for a clauſe of the ſame nature with that in the lords addreſs, it was rejected by a majority of above two to one: and they " expreſs'd their implicit " ſatisfaction in what her Majeſty had been pleas'd " to declare of the juſt and honorable peace ſhe " had in view." The Queen was highly pleaſed with, and returned moſt hearty thanks for this addreſs to the commons: whereas in her anſwer to the lords addreſs, ſhe only ſaid: " ſhe took the " thanks they gave her kindly, and ſhould be very " ſorry any one could think ſhe would not do her " utmoſt to recover Spain and the Weſt-Indies " from the houſe of Bourbon."

Addreſſes of both houſes.

The Queen's anſwers.

The occaſional conformity bill having, as the reader has ſeen above, miſcarried three times, lay dormant almoſt ſeven years, but now a noble peer, who had all along ſtickled for it, prevailed upon ſome lords of the party which had till then oppoſed it, to concur with him in bringing in and carrying thro' his darling bill, tho' under another title, and with ſuch clauſes as, he pretended, would inlarge the toleration, and be a farther ſecurity to the Proteſtant ſucceſſion. With this laſt bait, many were unwarily drawn in; and accordingly, on the 15th of December, the earl of Nottingham having brought into the houſe of peers, a " bill for pre- " ſerving the Proteſtant religion, by better ſe- " curing the church of England, as by law eſta- " bliſhed, and for confirming the toleration " granted to Proteſtant Diſſenters, by an act in- " titled, an act for exempting their Majeſty's Pro- " teſtant ſubjects diſſenting from the church of " England, from the penalties of certain laws, " and for ſupplying the defects thereof, and for " the farther ſecuring the Proteſtant ſucceſſion, " by requiring the practiſers of the law, in North- " Britain, to take the oaths, and ſubſcribe the " declaration therein mentioned"; his lordſhip was back'd by the earl of Scarborough, the earl of Wharton, and ſeveral other lords, ſo that the bill was received, and met with an eaſy paſſage thro' both houſes.

The occaſional conformity bill paſs'd, by a new title.

Q. ANN, AN' 1711.

The 17th of December, the act for a land-tax of four ſhillings was brought into the houſe, and had ſo quick a paſſage, that it received the royal aſſent a few days after. The ſame day the commons reſolved to preſent an addreſs to her Majeſty, that ſhe would pleaſe to give directions, that the treaty whereby her Majeſty was obliged to furniſh 40,000 men, to act in conjunction with the forces of the allies, in the Low countries, might be laid before the houſe: and, on the 20th, mr. ſecretary St. John reported, that her Majeſty had given directions accordingly, and that purſuant thereunto, ſearch had been made, but no footſteps could be found of any convention made for that purpoſe. Then the houſe addreſs'd her Majeſty, that an account might be laid before them of the quota's and proportions of her Majeſty and her allies, by ſea and land, during the preſent war (including ſubſidies) and what agreement or conventions had been made for the ſaid quota's and proportions, and alſo how the ſame had been obſerved.

Addreſſes of the commons.

The 21ſt, mr. Lockhart, from the commiſſioners for taking the public accounts, made a report of ſome practices which had been diſcovered in their examinations, relating to the affairs of the army. This report was chiefly level'd againſt the duke of Marlborough (1); and contain'd an information againſt him; that, upon the depoſition of ſir Solomon Medina, a Jew, who had been imployed to ſerve the army with bread, and upon that of mr. Cardonnel, the duke's ſecretary, they could prove, that the duke had taken great ſums of mony, on account of the contracts for ſupplying bread and bread-waggons to the forces in the Low-countries.

Report of the commiſſioners for ſtating the public accounts.

Theſe depoſitions being taken while the duke was yet abroad, he no ſooner had an account thereof, than he wrote the following letter to the commiſſioners:

Gentlemen,

" Having been informed, on my arrival here, " that ſir Solomon de Medina has acquainted you " with my having received ſeveral ſums of mony " from him; that it might make the leſs im- " preſſion on you, I would loſe no time in leting " you know, that this is no more than what has " been allowed, as a perquiſite to the general, " or commander in chief of the army, in the " Low-countries, even before the revolution, and " ſince; and I do aſſure you, at the ſame time, " that whatever ſums I have received on that " account, have been conſtantly imployed for the " ſervice of the public, in keeping ſecret corre- " ſpondence, and geting intelligence of the e- " nemy's motions and deſigns; and it has fallen " ſo far ſhort, that I take leave to acquaint you, " with another article that has been applied to the " ſame uſe, and which ariſes from her Majeſty's " warrant, whereof the incloſed is a copy. Tho' " this does not properly relate to the public ac- " counts, being a free gift of the forein troops,

A letter from the duke of Marlborough to the commiſſioners.

(1) The miniſtry (ſays an anonymous author) reſolved to make a puſh at the duke of Marlborough; for as their views were now altogether to enter upon negociations of peace, ſo it behooved them to have one placed at the head of the army, who ſhould act conformably to their meaſures: and therefore, as their agents had begun with perſonal calumny, and had, by that means, daily increaſed the number of the duke's enemies, ſo it was abſolutely neceſſary, in order to confirm all the falſe reports that were ſpread concerning him, alſo to advance certain facts againſt him; being ſenſible that whatever had been ſuggeſted by private hands, would not anſwer their end effectually, without a public reprehenſion. Memoirs of Queen Anne, page 127.

Q. Ann, An' 1711.

" you will have obſerved, by the ſeveral eſtabliſh-
" ments, that before the late King's death, when
" the parliament voted 40,000 men for the quota
" of England, in the Low-countries, 21,612 were " to be foreiners, and the reſt Engliſh; for theſe
" laſt they gave 10,000 pounds a year for in" telligence, and other contingences, without ac" count. But his Majeſty being ſenſible, by the " experience of the laſt war, that this ſum would " not any ways anſwer that ſervice, and un-
" willing to apply for more to the parliament,
" he was pleaſed to order, that the forein troops
" ſhould contribute two and a half per cent. to" wards it; and being then his embaſſador and " commander in chief abroad, he directed me to
" propoſe it to them, with an aſſurance that they
" ſhould have no other ſtoppage made from their " pay: this they readily agreed to, and her Ma-
" jeſty was afterwards pleaſed to confirm it by " her warrant, upon my acquainting her with the
" uſes it was intended for; and it has been ac" cordingly applied, from time to time, for in" telligence and ſecret ſervice, with ſuch ſucceſs,
" that next to the bleſſing of God, and the bra-
" very of the troops, we may, in a great mea-
" ſure, attribute moſt of the advantages of the " war in this country, to the timely and good ad-
" vices procured with the help of this mony;
" and now, gentlemen, as I have laid the whole
" matter fairly before you, and that I hope you
" will allow I have ſerved my Queen and country
" with that faithfulneſs and zeal which becomes " an honeſt man; the favor that I intreat of you
" is, that when you make your report to the " parliament, you will lay this part before them
" in its true light; ſo that they may ſee this
" neceſſary and important part of the war has " been provided for, and carried on, without " any other expence to the public than 10,000
" pounds a year; and I flatter myſelf, that when
" the accounts of the army in Flanders come
" under your conſideration, you will be ſenſible
" the ſervice on this ſide has been carried on with " all the oeconomy and good huſbandry, to the " public, that was poſſible. I am,

Gentlemen,

Your moſt obedient humble ſervant,

Marlborough.

Ann R.

Copy of her Majeſty's warrant.

" Right truſty and right well-beloved couſin
" and counſellor, we greet you well: whereas
" purſuant to the direction you have received in " that behalf, you have agreed with the perſons,
" authorized to treat with you, for the taking into
" our ſervice a certain number of forein troops,
" to act in conjunction with the forces of our " allies, that there be reſerved two and a half " per cent. out of all monies payable to and for
" the ſaid troops, as well for their pay and enter" tainment, as on any other account, towards de-
" fraying ſuch extraordinary contingent expences,
" relating to them, as cannot otherwiſe be pro" vided for. Now, we do hereby approve and " confirm all ſuch agreements as you have, or " may hereafter make, for reſerving the ſaid two " and a half per cent. accordingly: and do like-
" wiſe hereby authorize and direct the pay-maſter-
" general of our forces, for the time being, or his " deputy, to make the ſaid deduction of two and " a half per cent. purſuant thereunto, out of all " monies he ſhall be directed to iſſue for the uſe of
" the forein troops in our pay; and thereupon to " pay over the ſame, from time to time, accord" ing to ſuch warrants, or ſuch proportions, as " you ſhall direct; for which this ſhall be to " you, and to all others whom it may concern, a
" ſufficient warrant and direction.

" Given at our court, at St. James's, the 6th " day of July 1702, and in the firſt year of our " reign. By her Majeſty's command,

C. Hedges.

Q. Ann, An' 1711.

" To our right truſty, and right
" well-beloved couſin and counſellor,
" John earl of Marlborough, our
" embaſſador extraordinary, and pleni-
" potentiary to the States-general of " the United Provinces, and captain-
" general of our land-forces.

His farther vindication.

This letter, and warrant annex'd, the commiſſioners inſerted in their report; and we ſee the duke not only owned the mony he had received upon theſe contracts; but acquainted them alſo voluntarily of another perquiſite he had received of two and a half per cent. deducted out of the pay of the forein troops, in the ſervice of Great-Britain, ſhewing, at the ſame time, how, and in what ſervice, the mony had been imploy'd for the public utility. Upon the duke's return, he clear'd himſelf very fully, in a ſpeech which he deſign'd to have made in the houſe of commons; but when he was going to aſk their leave to pronounce it, he was prevented by ſome of his friends, who thought it might be an ill precedent, and adviſed only to have it printed, which was accordingly done, ſome time afterwards, and, in the mean while, ſeveral written copies of it were handed about. In this ſpeech, or vindication, his grace gave an account of all his tranſactions, ſo far as related to the diſcharge of the confidence and truſt that had been repos'd in him, as commander in chief of the army, by which it appear'd he had acquited himſelf with great faith and integrity.

An' 1712. The houſe of commons proceed againſt the duke of Marlborough.

Notwithſtanding all this, on the 24th of January, the houſe of commons proceeded to take into conſideration the above report of the commiſſioners for taking the public accounts, &c. which, with ſeveral papers relating thereunto, being read, a violent debate aroſe, that laſted above eight hours, and many vehement ſpeeches were made for and againſt his grace. The queſtion propos'd to be put was, " whether the taking ſeveral ſums of mony
" annually, by the duke of Marlborough, from
" the contracters for furniſhing the bread and
" bread-waggons, for the army in the Low-coun" tries, was warrantable and legal:" to which the duke's friends, in the firſt place inſiſted, that theſe words ſhould be added; " and a cuſtomary per-
" quiſite allowed to the general, or commander in " chief, in the Low-countries." To ſupport this addition, ſir John Germain, who had ſerved in the former wars in Flanders, was called in, and being examin'd at the bar, ſaid, in behalf of the duke of Marlborough, " that the allowance given " his grace by the contracters for the bread and " bread-waggons was a cuſtomary perquiſite of " the commander in chief in Flanders, and as ſuch
" allowed to the Prince of Waldeck, under whom
" ſir John had ſerved, as aid de camp." Biſhop Burnet ſays, " that it was proved, both by wit-
" neſſes and by formal atteſtations from Holland,
" that ever ſince the year 1672, the Jews had " made the like preſent to the general of the army
" of the States, and it was underſtood as a per-
" quiſite belonging to that command. No bar" gain (adds he) was made with the Jews for the " Engliſh troops; but that made by the States
" was applied to them; ſo that it appear'd, that
" the making ſuch a preſent to the general was
" cuſtomary."

But notwithſtanding all theſe evidences, and all that the duke's friends could do or ſay, the queſtion being put, " whether the ſaid words ſhould
" be added?" it was carried in the negative by a great majority. Then the former queſtion was debated till near eleven at night, when it was reſolved,

Q. Ann, An' 1712.

Reſolutions againſt him;

reſolved, by a majority of above one hundred votes, "That the taking ſeveral ſums of mony "annually by the duke of Marlborough, from "the contracters for furniſhing the bread and "bread-waggons in the Low-countries, was un- "warrantable and illegal."

A motion was hereupon made, and the queſtion put, that the houſe do adjourn, it paſſed in the negative: after which it was alſo reſolved, by a great majority; "That the two and a half per cent. "deducted from the forein troops, in her Ma- "jeſty's pay, is public mony, and ought to be ac- "counted for: and that the ſaid reſolutions be laid "before her Majeſty, by the whole houſe."

Laid before the Queen.

The 26th of January, the houſe of commons, with their ſpeaker, laid theſe reſolutions before her Majeſty, who was thereupon pleas'd to make them the following anſwer:

Gentlemen,

Her Majeſty's anſwer.

"I have a great regard for whatever is repre- "ſented to me by my commons, and will do my "part to redreſs what you complain of.

The houſe of commons contented themſelves, however, with paſſing the above-mentioned reſolutions, and preſenting the ſame to her Majeſty, not offering any impeachment, or deſiring the concurrence of the lords; well knowing, that their lordſhips had greater reſpect for the duke's perſon and ſervices, than they themſelves thought fit to expreſs at that time.

The duke of Marlborough diſmiſs'd from all his imployments.

The Queen, in the mean time, being preſent in council, the 30th of December, declared; that "ſhe being informed, that an information againſt "the duke of Marlborough was laid before the "houſe of commons, by the commiſſioners of "the public accounts, ſhe thought fit to diſmiſs "him from all his imployments, that the matter "might take an impartial examination:" and this declaration was enter'd in the council-book. The next day, her Majeſty was pleas'd to notify to the duke, by a note written with her own hand, her intention to reſume all the imployments ſhe had intruſted him with. The duke received the meſſage with an heroic reſignation, and wrote a dutiful anſwer to her Majeſty, which he ſent by the counteſs of Sunderland, one of his daughters.

Twelve new peers created.

The ſame day, it being apparent that the court-party had not ſo certain a majority in the houſe of peers, as in the lower houſe, twelve new peers were created at once, and call'd up by writ, to take their places in that houſe; which gave occaſion to very bold and ſevere reflections, as well in print as in moſt converſations; and, among other things, it was ſaid, "that tho' the Queen had an undoubted "right to create as many peers as ſhe pleaſed, yet "her miniſters might be called to account for "adviſing her to abuſe that right."

Prince Eugene comes to England.

During theſe tranſactions, the new Emperor diſpatch'd Prince Eugene into England, to expoſtulate with her Majeſty concerning the meaſures which were taken to enter into negociations of peace with France. And it was the opinion of many, that this accelerated the duke of Marlborough's diſgrace, on a ſurmiſe, that if he continued in his imployments, that Prince's repreſentations would receive no ſmall weight from the reciprocal confidence, which had grown into an intire friendſhip, between them; whereas when his grace was diveſted of all his public characters, he could not converſe with the Prince otherwiſe than as a private man: tho' others thought his diſgrace was owing to the counſels he was ſaid to have entered into, to thwart the ſchemes of the preſent miniſtry towards a peace.

Is unſucceſsful in his negociations.

Prince Eugene was highly careſs'd by the miniſtry, and by the nobility, as well thoſe in favor, as thoſe out of favor; and was preſented with a ſword by her Majeſty, of the value of 5000 l. but did not meet with that ſucceſs in his negociations as he expected; the court was but too much convinc'd already, by experience, how little dependance was to be had on Imperial promiſes, and would not therefore be moved to make any alterations in the meaſures they were taking. The Prince continued, however, his negociations till about the middle of March, and then, deſpairing of ſucceſs, imbark'd again for Holland.

Q. Ann, An' 1712.

Promotions.

Upon the duke of Marlborough's diſgrace, the duke of Ormond was made commander in chief of her Majeſty's forces, within the kingdom of Great-Britain, and of thoſe imployed abroad, in conjunction with the troops of the allies; the duke of Northumberland was appointed captain of the ſecond troop of horſe-guards; the earl of Rivers was made maſter of the ordnance; and the duke of Beaufort, captain of the band of penſioners, in the room of the duke of St. Albans: brigadier Hill, brother to the lady Maſham, was made lieutenant of the Tower, in the room of lieutenant-general Cadogan; the duke of Somerſet was removed from his place of maſter of the horſe; and the counteſs of Sunderland and the lady Rialton, two of the duke of Marlborough's daughters, reſign'd their places of ladies of the bed-chamber to the Queen. But to return to the parliament.

The 17th of January, the Queen (the Britiſh plenipotentiaries being now arrived at Utrecht) ſent the following meſſage to the houſe of commons:

Ann, R.

The Queen's meſſage to the houſe of commons.

"Her Majeſty not having recovered ſtrength "enough, ſince the return of the gout, to be pre- "ſent this day in perſon, and being unwilling that "the public buſineſs ſhould receive any delay, "thinks fit to communicate to this houſe the ſub- "ſtance of what ſhe intended to have ſpoke.

"At the opening of this ſeſſion, her Majeſty "acquainted her parliament, that both time and "place were appointed for the meeting of the "plenipotentiaries of all the confederates, to treat "with thoſe of the enemy, concerning a general "peace; and alſo expreſs'd the care which ſhe in- "tended to take of all her allies, and the ſtrict "union in which ſhe propoſed to join with them, "in order to obtain a good peace, and to gua- "ranty and ſupport it, when obtained.

"Her Majeſty can now tell you, that her pleni- "potentiaries are arrived at Utrecht, and have "begun, in purſuance of their inſtructions, to "concert the moſt proper ways of procuring a "juſt ſatisfaction to all in alliance with her, ac- "cording to their ſeveral treaties, and particularly "with relation to Spain and the Weſt-Indies.

"You may depend on her Majeſty's communi- "cating to her parliament, the terms of peace, "before the ſame ſhall be concluded.

"The world will now ſee how groundleſs thoſe "reports are, which have been ſpread abroad, by "men of evil intentions, to ſerve the worſt deſigns, "as if a ſeparate peace had been treated of; for "which there has not been the leaſt color given.

"Her Majeſty's miniſters have directions to pro- "poſe, that a day may be fix'd for the finiſhing, "as was done for the commencement of this trea- "ty, and, in the mean time, all the preparations "are haſtening for an early campain.

"The zeal which this houſe has already ex- "preſs'd, is a ſure pledge that they will proceed, "in giving the neceſſary diſpatch to the ſupplies "which have been aſk'd of them.

"Her Majeſty finds it neceſſary to obſerve, "how great licenſe is taken in publiſhing falſe "and ſcandalous libels; ſuch as are a reproach "to any government: this evil ſeems to be "grown too ſtrong for the laws now in force;

"it

Q. Ann, An' 1712.

" it is therefore recommended to you to find a " remedy equal to the miſchief."

St. James's, 17th of February 1711-12.

And to the lords.

The ſame meſſage was ſent to the houſe of lords, only, inſtead of the ſeventh paragraph, about the ſupply, the following words were inſerted:

" There is one thing, in which her Majeſty's " ſubjects, of the north part of this kingdom, are " extreamly concern'd; the diſtinction ſuch of " them, who were peers of Scotland before the " union, muſt ly under if the prerogative of the " crown is ſtrictly barred againſt them alone. " This is a matter which ſenſibly affects her Ma- " jeſty; and ſhe therefore lays it before this houſe, " earneſtly deſiring their advice and concurrence " in finding out the beſt method of ſettling this " affair to the ſatisfaction of the whole kingdom."

Addreſſes of thanks from both houſes.

The commons, after reading this meſſage, readily voted an addreſs of thanks, " for her Ma- " jeſty's great goodneſs and condeſcenſion, in pro- " miſing to communicate to her parliament the " terms of peace, before they ſhould be con- " cluded, whereby thoſe groundleſs and ſeditious " reports muſt be ſilenced, which had been in- " duſtriouſly ſpread abroad, to the diſhonor of her " Majeſty, and to ſerve deſigns which the authors " of them had not dared publicly to own: and " to aſſure her Majeſty, they would give the ne- " ceſſary diſpatch to the ſupplies, and take the " moſt effectual courſe to put a ſtop to the pub- " liſhing thoſe falſe and ſeditious libels which had " expos'd her Majeſty's government to danger " and reproach."

The lords likewiſe preſented an addreſs of thanks, in which having repeated her Majeſty's expreſſion, " particularly with relation to Spain " and the Weſt-Indies;" they added, " which " are of ſo great concern to the ſafety and com- " merce of your Majeſty's kingdom."

The 4th of February, the commons, taking into conſideration the ſtate of the war, came to the following reſolutions:

Reſolutions of the commons on the ſtate of the war.

1. " That the States-general have been deficient " in their quotas for ſea-ſervice, in proportion to " the number of ſhips provided by her Majeſty, " ſome years, two thirds, and generally more " than half of their quota.

2. " That towards carrying on the war in Spain, " in order to reduce that Monarchy to the houſe " of Auſtria, neither the late Emperors, nor his " preſent Imperial Majeſty, have ever had any " forces on their own account there till the laſt " year, and then only a regiment of foot conſiſt- " ing of 2000 men.

3. " That the forces ſupplied and paid by her " Majeſty, for carrying on the war in Spain, from " the year 1705 to the year 1711 incluſive, a- " mounted to 57,973 men, beſide thirteen batta- " lions and eighteen ſquadrons, for which her " Majeſty has paid a ſubſidy to the Emperor.

4. " That the forces ſupplied by the States- " general, for the ſervice of the war in Spain, " from the year 1705 to the year 1708, both in- " cluſive, have amounted to no more than 12,200, " and that from the year 1708, to this preſent " time, they have ſent no forces thither at all.

5. " That her Majeſty has not only furniſh'd " her proportion of 12,000 men, according to " the treaty enter'd into for the ſervice of the war " in Portugal, but has taken upon her the Em- " peror's proportion, by furniſhing two thirds, " when the States only furniſhed one third for " that ſervice.

6. " That by the treaty with the King of " Portugal, there were to be furniſhed 12,000 " foot and 3000 horſe at his own expence; and, " in conſideration of a ſubſidy to be paid him, " 11,000 foot and 2000 horſe more; notwith- " ſtanding which it appears, that the King of " Portugal did not furniſh 13,000 men in the " whole.

Q. Ann, An' 1712.

7. " That ſince the year 1706, when the " Engliſh and Dutch march'd into Caſtille, and " returned no more into Portugal, her Majeſty " has replac'd more than her ſhare, according to " her proportion, and the States-general have not " had any troops in Portugal.

8. " That the firſt proportion of three fifths " to two fifths, agreed upon between his late Ma- " jeſty King William and the States-general, for " the ſervice of the war in Flanders, has not been " obſerved by the States-general.

9. " That the States-general, during the courſe " of the war, have furniſh'd leſs than their pro- " proportion in Flanders 20,837 men.

10. " That the condition for prohibiting all " trade and correſpondence between Holland and " France, on which the troops of augmentation " were granted in 1703, and afterwards continued, " has not been obſerved by the States-general.

11. " That at the begining of this war the " ſubſidies were paid in equal proportions by her " Majeſty and the States-general; but her Ma- " jeſty has ſince paid more than her proportion " 3,155,000 crowns."

A repreſenta- tion to the Queen grounded thereupon.

Theſe reſolutions were alſo laid before the Queen, in a long repreſentation, with many other abuſes and connivances, which they ſaid had been between her Majeſty's late miniſters and her allies; parti- cularly that the perſons whom ſhe had of late in- truſted with the management of her affairs, had been ſo far from conſulting her true intereſt, and the intereſt of their country, that, on the contrary, they had, to ſerve their own private ends, per- mited the war to be carried on, without obliging the allies to perform their ſeveral ſtipulations; and to make this appear, ſeveral eſtimates were in- ſerted of men and mony, furniſh'd by this nation (the latter amounting to upwards of nineteen mil- lions ſterling) over and above what was agreed to by treaty with the allies, and the States-general were in particular repreſented as not having con- tributed their ſhare neither by ſea nor land.

Debates in parliament on that ac- count.

This repreſentation was the cauſe of many warm ſpeeches in the houſe of commons. Thoſe mem- bers who had been in imployment during the late adminiſtration, made it their buſineſs to clear them- ſelves, and thoſe who had been concerned in the public affairs with them, of the imputation of in- juſtice towards their country, by ſhewing that the utmoſt indeavors had been uſed to oblige the allies to perform their ſtipulations; but they allowed, that notwithſtanding all the remonſtrances which had been made, both publicly and privately, as well to the Imperial court, as the diet of the Em- pire, and the courts of ſeveral other Princes, the Germans were either deficient in their quota's, or ſo late in furniſhing them, that the operations of war were, by that means, often retarded. They allowed the ſame of the Portugueſe, but indeavored to ſhew reaſons why there was a neceſſity of winking at them. As for the Dutch they ſoon took up the cudgels themſelves, and ſent over a very long memorial, a tranſlation of which was printed here, and ſaid ſo much in their vindication, that the genuineneſs of it was call'd in queſtion, and the publiſher and printer thereof taken into cuſtody: however, an anſwer was ſoon after made to it, in the Queen's name, and ſign'd by mr. ſecretary St. John, and conceived in ſuch terms as could beſt incenſe the nation againſt them.

The barrier- treaty cen- ſur'd.

The 14th of February the commons reſolved, " that in the treaty between her Majeſty and the " States-general, for ſecuring the ſucceſſion to the " crown

Q. Ann, An' 1712.

" crown of Great-Britain, and for the ſetling a " barrier for the States-general againſt France, " there were ſeveral articles deſtructive to the " trade and intereſt of Great-Britain, and highly " diſhonorable to her Majeſty: and that it appear'd, " the lord-viſcount Townſhend, who negociated " and ſign'd, and all thoſe who adviſed the rati- " fying the ſaid treaty, were enemies to the Queen " and kingdom."

The application of the two and a half per cent, deduction, from the pay of forein forces voted.

The 29th of February, the houſe of commons being conſidering of ways and means to raiſe the ſupply, among other particulars, reſolved; " That " the deduction of two and a half per cent, which " had, or ought to have been made from the pay, " ſubſidies, or other allowances, for forein forces, " in her Majeſty's ſervice, be continued for the " year 1712, and applied for the ſervice of the " war, in aid of the proviſion made, or to be " made, in this ſeſſion of parliament, for that " purpoſe: which reſolution was deſign'd to co- " lor the cenſure already paſs'd on the duke of " Marlborough." Tho' it had a very different effect, eſpecially when afterwards, notwithſtanding this reſolution, the duke of Ormond inſiſted upon, and was allowed to take the ſame perquiſite.

A repreſentation of ſome forein Princes in the duke of Marlborough's favor.

In the mean time, ſeveral forein Princes who had troops in her Majeſty's pay, order'd their miniſters to repreſent, " that the ſaid two and a half " per cent. was their own mony, but that they " were willing to allow it as a free gift to the duke " of Ormond, as they had done before to the duke " of Marlborough." This ſeemed to be a full juſtification of the latter, and was no ſmall mortification to his grace's implacable enemies, who after a great deal of noiſe and clamor, could not fix any thing criminal upon him. And tho' orders were given to the attorney-general, to proſecute his grace, and a bill was afterwards exhibited againſt him in the court of Exchequer, I do not find that this proſecution ever came to any thing.

Preparations for opening the campain.

The Queen having declared, at the opening of this ſeſſion, that ſhe intended to carry on the war vigorouſly, till ſhe ſhould obtain honorable terms of the enemy, and having, by that means, got a ſupply of near ſeven millions, all the uſual preparations for the inſuing campain were made, and the duke of Ormond had orders to make ready, with all poſſible expedition, to go over to the army; things being got in ſufficient forwardneſs, that they might take the field betimes. The duke went accordingly to Holland, and arrived at the Hague, ſome time before the campain was opened. He was received, by the States-general, with the ſame outward marks of diſtinction, which they had uſually ſhewn to the duke of Marlborough; and he, on his ſide, gave the States aſſurances, in the Queen's name, that he would act in concert with the allies. The army was in a very good condition, and all things in great forwardneſs; for the Germans, when they underſtood that the duke of Marlborough was in total diſgrace, had uſed more than ordinary diligence, and were got into the field much ſooner than uſual. They were likewiſe very advantageouſly poſted, having all the country behind them in full poſſeſſion, with fine navigable rivers, and a vaſt number of barks and ſmall veſſels to ſupply them with all manner of neceſſaries. The French, who were commanded by the marſhal de Villars, lay very open, with their right at Caſtelet, and their left near Cambray, having indeed the Scheld before them, but the country all open between the ſpring-head of that river and the Somme. This gave no ſmall jealouſy to the confederate generals, that there might be ſome under-hand dealings between the Engliſh and the French; for they knew monſieur de Villars did not uſe to be ſo negligent. However Prince Eugene made all the neceſſary diſpoſitions to give him battle: but when he came to confer with the duke of Ormond, he found him very backward to ingage. This made the Prince and the confederate generals preſs the matter home upon him; ſo that, after ſeveral indirect anſwers, he told them, he had received poſitive orders, from the Queen, not to conſent to a battle; but that he was not reſtrained from ingaging with them in a ſiege. The generals were hereupon in a very great confuſion, and ſome time was ſpent in conſulting what reſolution to take under this diſappointment; but they at laſt agreed to inveſt Queſnoy, and having got all things ready for that purpoſe, the duke of Ormond took upon him to cover the ſiege.

Q. Ann, An' 1712.

The duke of Ormond's conduct.

Debate in the houſe of lords, about the duke of Ormond's orders.

Upon the duke of Ormond's declaration of his being reſtrained from acting offenſively againſt the French, and news of it coming to England, a motion was made, the 28th of May, in the houſe of peers, for addreſſing the Queen, " that her Ma- " jeſty's orders to the duke of Ormond might be " laid before the houſe;" but, after a very warm debate, the queſtion was put to adjourn; which was carried by ſixty-eight votes againſt forty.

During this debate, the duke of Devonſhire, who was for addreſſing, ſaid, " That by the " proximity of blood, he was more concerned for " the duke of Ormond's reputation, than any " other; and, therefore he could not forbear de- " claring, he was ſurpriſed to hear any one dare to " make uſe of a nobleman of the firſt rank, and " of ſo diſtinguiſh'd a character, as an inſtrument " of ſuch a proceeding." The earl of Powlet ſaid, on the ſide of the court, " That no body " could doubt of the duke's bravery; but that he " was not like a certain general, who led troops to " the ſlaughter, to cauſe a great number of officers " to be knock'd on the head in a battle, or againſt " ſtone-walls, in order to fill his pocket, by diſ- " poſing of their commiſſions."

The earl of Powlet reflects on the duke of Marlborough.

The duke reſents it.

This invidious reflection was too plain not to be underſtood by the duke of Marlborough, who was ſenſible that a ſuggeſtion of that nature was not fit to be anſwer'd by any ſolid arguments drawn from right reaſon; and yet that no others were proper to be offer'd by him in that place; he therefore thought it not convenient to make any reply at that time. His grace could not however ſo far ſtifle his reſentments; but that he ſent the lord Mohun to the earl of Powlet, to tell him that the duke of Marlborough was willing to have an eclairciſſement with his lordſhip, about ſome expreſſions he had uſed, in that day's debate, and therefore deſired him to go into the country: however by the interpoſition of friends, and her Majeſty's authority, the lord-treaſurer likewiſe uſing his good offices between the two parties, the quarrel was at leaſt ſeemingly compos'd.

The matter made up.

Declaration of the biſhop of Briſtol.

The field-deputies of the States had, in the mean time, ſent two expreſſes, one to their plenipotentiaries at Utrecht, and another to the Hague, with an account of the duke of Ormond's conduct. The Dutch miniſters at Utrecht delay'd no time to acquaint the biſhop of Briſtol with the advices they had received, and as they could not forbear doing it with ſome reſentment, it provok'd the biſhop ſo much, that he told them with a great deal of warmth, he had orders to let them know, " the " Queen his miſtreſs looked on herſelf to be looſed " from all ingagements and alliances with their " ſtate." So unexpected a declaration, at ſo critical a juncture, could not but very much alarm the States-general, and was the occaſion of their ſending immediately a letter to the Queen, wherein they ſet forth the many ill conſequences which might attend her preſent meaſures, and how her Majeſty's late

Letter from the States-general to the Queen.

Q. Ann, An' 1712.

late orders had already loſt the allies the faireſt opportunity they ever had, or perhaps might have for the future, of giving a deciſive blow, but that theſe orders had not given them ſo much ſurprize as the biſhop of Briſtol's declaration to their miniſters at Utrecht. In the ſame letter, they alſo gave their reaſons, why they had not hitherto acquieſced to treat upon the French propoſals, and likewiſe charged the Queen with a breach of promiſe, in not proſecuting the war in conjunction with her allies, as the duke of Ormond had declared to them in her name. This letter ſo gaul'd the miniſtry, that they drew up a very ſharp anſwer to it, in the Queen's name, wherein they laid the whole blame on the obſtinacy of the States, and, as their letter was in print, almoſt as ſoon as it was communicated to her Majeſty, they ſhew'd their reſentment in the Queen's anſwer, by ſtyling it, "an appeal to the people, rather than an addreſs "to the ſoverein, and ſaid that her Majeſty's ho- "nor would not permit her to give an anſwer to "any which ſhould come in the like manner for the "future."

Her Majeſty's anſwer.

A vote of the houſe of commons concerning it.

This was corroborated by a vote of the houſe of commons, declaring, "That the printing of the "ſaid letter, before it had been preſented to the "Queen, was a great indignity offer'd to her "Majeſty, and ordered an addreſs to be drawn "up, beſeeching her Majeſty, to give no anſwer, "for the future, to any letters or memorials ſent "from the States-general, in that manner."

Their reſolution concerning the peace.

And indeed this houſe, upon every occaſion, ſhewed a great readineſs to concur with the miniſtry, in promoting the meaſures they were taking: for, upon an attempt being made to procure their cenſure of the orders given to the duke of Ormond, not to act offenſively, it was not only rejected by a majority of 203 againſt thirty-ſeven, but they came alſo to the reſolution, "That they had an intire "confidence in her Majeſty's moſt gracious pro- "miſe, to communicate to her parliament the "terms of the peace, before they ſhould be con- "cluded, and that they would ſupport her Ma- "jeſty, in obtaining an honorable and ſafe peace, "againſt all ſuch perſons, either at home or abroad, "who had indeavor'd, or ſhould indeavor, to "obſtruct the ſame."

This reſolution being laid before her Majeſty, the 30th of May, ſhe ſaid;

Gentlemen,

"I thank you moſt heartily for this reſolution, "which is dutiful to me, honeſt to our country, "and very ſeaſonable at this time, when ſo many "artifices are uſed to obſtruct a good peace, or to "force one diſadvantageous to Great-Britain."

The conferences were all this while carrying on at Utrecht, where, on the 11th of February, N. S. the French plenipotentiaries deliver'd in their propoſals, to which they gave the following title.

"A particular explication of the offers of France, "for a general peace, to the ſatisfaction of all the "parties concerned in the preſent war."

The French make propoſals for a general peace.

Theſe propoſals were received by the Dutch with great indignation; and occaſion'd ſeveral conferences between the plenipotentiaries of the allies.

They are receiv'd with indignation.

They being likewiſe tranſmited to London, by the Britiſh plenipotentiaries, were received with almoſt as general an indignation there. The 15th of February, O. S. the lord Hallifax made a motion in the houſe of peers, for preſenting an addreſs to the Queen, about theſe offers of France, which he call'd, "Trifling, arrogant, and injurious to "her Majeſty and her allies." Upon the debate, ſome noble members of that auguſt aſſembly gave it, as their opinion, "that they ought to be re- "jected, with the utmoſt indignation, and that it "plainly appear'd, France had no other view, "than to amuſe and divide the allies:" others ſaid, "it was derogatory to her Majeſty's ho- "nor, to enter into any negociations with that "crown, till her Majeſty's title was acknow- "ledg'd." And, upon a diviſion, it was reſolved, in an addreſs to her Majeſty, "to expreſs the juſt "indignation they had of the diſhonorable treat- "ment of her Majeſty by France, and their ut- "moſt reſentment at the terms of peace offer'd by "the French plenipotentiaries at Utrecht." It has even been ſaid, that ſome lords, who bore no great good will to the duke of Marlborough, and the late miniſtry, ſpoke againſt them.

Q. Ann, An' 1712.

The 5th of March, N. S. the allies deliver'd, to the plenipotentiaries of France,

Her Majeſty makes her ſpecific demands.

"The ſpecific demands of her Majeſty, the "Queen of Great-Britain, for what relates to "France."

All the members of the grand alliance having likewiſe given in their reſpective demands, the French plenipotentiaries promiſed to explain themſelves on the demands of the allies, the ninth.

To this end, a general conference was held that day; but the French then declared, that the ſaid demands being very extenſive, they could not give in the explanation they had promiſed, till they had received new inſtructions from the courts of Verſailles and Madrid: and therefore deſir'd a farther time of three weeks, which was agreed to. The plenipotentiaries met accordingly, the 30th. When thoſe of France declar'd; "that as they had com- "municated in writing, the ſpecific offers of the "moſt Chriſtian King; and, that the allies like- "wiſe, had given theirs in writing, it was unne- "ceſſary to continue treating that way: but that "they were ready to treat with the plenipoten- "tiaries of the allies, by way of conference." The miniſters of the allies declared hereupon; "that they expected an anſwer in writing, as they "had promis'd." This they inſiſted on again, the 2d and 6th of April, and declared, that they were unanimouſly in the ſame opinion: and the French return'd the ſame anſwer they had done before.

A difference ariſes concerning the manner of treating.

The general conferences thereby ſuſpended.

The general conferences, which were to have been held twice every week, were upon this account ſuſpended, till the 13th of April, when the French declared, that they had not yet received any farther inſtructions, and perſiſted in their refuſal of giving any anſwer in writing. Whereupon the general conferences remain'd ſtill ſuſpended; and the public knew nothing of the farther ſteps made towards a treaty, till the 6th of June, O. S. when her Majeſty, the Queen of Great-Britain, was pleas'd to communicate to her parliament the terms upon which a general peace might be made, in the following ſpeech:

The terms for a general peace open'd to the parliament of Great-Britain.

My lords and gentlemen,

"The making peace and war, is the undoubted "perquiſite of the crown; yet ſuch is the juſt "confidence I place in you, that, at the opening "of this ſeſſion, I acquainted you, that a nego- "ciation for a general peace was begun, and "afterwards by meſſages, I promiſed to commu- "nicate to you the terms of peace, before they "ſhould be concluded.

"In purſuance of that promiſe, I now come to "let you know upon what terms a general peace "may be made.

"I need not mention the difficulties which ariſe "from the very nature of this affair; and it is "but too apparent, that theſe difficulties have "been increas'd by other obſtructions, art- "fully contriv'd to hinder this great and good "work.

"Nothing however has moved me from "ſteadily

Q. ANN, AN' 1712.

" ſteadily purſuing, in the firſt place, the true " intereſts of my own kingdoms; and I have " not omited any thing which might procure to " all our allies, what is due to them by treaties, " and what is neceſſary for their ſecurity.

" The aſſuring of the Proteſtant ſucceſſion, as " by law eſtabliſh'd, in the houſe of Hanover, " to theſe kingdoms, being what I have neareſt " at heart, particular care is taken not only to " have that acknowledged in the ſtrongeſt terms, " but to have an additional ſecurity, by the re- " moval of that perſon, out of the dominions of " France, who has pretended to diſturb this ſettle- " ment.

" The apprehenſion that Spain and the Weſt- " Indies might be united to France, was the chief " inducement to begin this war; and the effectual " prevention of ſuch an union was the principle " I laid down at the commencement of this treaty. " Former examples, and the late negociations, " ſufficiently ſhew how difficult it is to find means " to accompliſh this work. I would not content " myſelf with ſuch as are ſpeculative, or depend " on treaties only; I inſiſted on what was ſolid, " and to have at hand the power of executing " what ſhould be agreed.

" I can therefore now tell you, that France, " at laſt, is brought to offer, that the duke " d'Anjou ſhall, for himſelf, and his deſcendants, " renounce for ever all claim to the crown of " France; and that this important article be ex- " poſed to no hazard, the performance is to ac- " company the promiſe.

" At the ſame time, the ſucceſſion to the crown " of France is to be declared, after the death of " the preſent Dauphin, and his ſons, to be in the " duke of Berry, and his ſons, in the duke of " Orleans, and his ſons, and ſo on to the reſt of " the houſe of Bourbon.

" As to Spain and the Indies, the ſucceſſion " to thoſe dominions, after the duke d'Anjou, " and his children, is to deſcend to ſuch Prince " as ſhall be agreed upon at the treaty, for ever " excluding the reſt of the houſe of Bourbon.

" For confirming the renunciations and ſettle- " ments before-mentioned, it is farther offered, " that they ſhould be ratified in the moſt ſtrong " and ſolemn manner, both in France and Spain; " and thoſe kingdoms, as well as all the other " powers ingaged in the preſent war, ſhall be " guarantees to the ſame.

" The nature of this propoſal is ſuch, that it " executes itſelf; the intereſt of Spain is to ſup- " port it; and in France, the perſons to whom " that ſucceſſion is to belong, will be ready and " powerful enough to vindicate their own right.

" France and Spain is now more effectually " divided than ever; and thus, by the bleſſing " of GOD, will a real balance of power be fixed " in Europe, and remain liable to as few acci- " dents, as humane affairs can be exempted from.

" A treaty of commerce between theſe king- " doms and France has been entered upon; but " the exceſſive duties laid on ſome goods, and " the prohibition of others, make it impoſſible " to finiſh this work ſo ſoon as were to be de- " ſired: care is however taken, to eſtabliſh a " method of ſettling this matter, and, in the " mean time, proviſion is made, that the ſame " privileges and advantages, as ſhall be granted " to any other nation by France, ſhall be granted " in like manner to us.

" The diviſion of the iſland of St. Chriſtopher " between us and the French, have been the " cauſe of great inconveniency and damage to " my ſubjects; I have demanded to have an ab- " ſolute ceſſion made to me of the whole iſland, " and France agrees to this demand.

Q. ANN, AN' 1712.

" Our intereſt is ſo deeply concerned in the " trade of North America, that I have uſed my " utmoſt indeavors, to adjuſt that article, in the " moſt beneficial manner. France conſents to " reſtore to us the whole bay and ſtreights of Hud- " ſon; to deliver up the iſland of Newfoundland, " with Placentia, and to make an abſolute ceſſion " of Annapolis, with the reſt of Nova Scotia or " Arcadia: the ſafety of our home-trade will be " better provided for, by the demolition of Dun- " kirk.

" Our Mediterranean trade, and the Britiſh in- " tereſt and influence in thoſe parts, will be ſe- " cured by the poſſeſſion of Gibraltar and Port- " Mahon, with the whole iſland of Minorca, " which are offered to remain in my hands.

" The trade to Spain and the Weſt-Indies may " in general be ſettled as it was in the time of the " late King of Spain, Charles II, and a particular " proviſion that all advantages, rights or privi- " leges, which have been granted, or may here- " after be granted by Spain to any other nation, " ſhall be, in like manner, granted to the ſub- " jects of Great-Britain. But the part which we " have born in the proſecution of this war, in- " titling us to ſome diſtinction in the terms of " peace; I have inſiſted and obtained, that the " Aſſiento, or Contract for furniſhing the Spaniſh " Weſt-Indies with negroes, ſhall be made with " us for the term of thirty years, in the ſame " manner as it has been injoy'd by the French for " ten years paſt.

" I have not taken upon me to determine the " intereſts of our confederates, theſe muſt be ad- " juſted in the congreſs at Utrecht, where my beſt " indeavors ſhall be imployed, as they have hither- " to conſtantly been, to procure to every one of " them, all juſt and reaſonable ſatisfaction: in the " mean time I think it proper to acquaint you, " that France offers to make the Rhine the barrier " of the Empire; to yield Briſac, Fort Kehl and " Landau, and to raze all the fortreſſes, both on " the other ſide of the Rhine and in that river.

" As to the Proteſtant intereſt in Germany, " there will be, on the part of France, no ob- " jection to the reſettling thereof on the foot of " the treaty of Weſtphalia.

" The Spaniſh Low-countries may go to his " Imperial Majeſty: the kingdoms of Naples and " Sardinia, the duchy of Milan, and the places " belonging to Spain on the coaſt of Tuſcany, " may likewiſe be yielded, by the treaty of peace, " to the Emperor.

" As to the kingdom of Sicily, tho' there re- " mains no diſpute concerning the ceſſion of it, " by the duke d'Anjou, yet the diſpoſition thereof " is not yet determined.

" The intereſts of the States-general, with re- " ſpect to commerce, are agreed to, as they have " been demanded by their own miniſters, with " the exception only of ſome very few ſpecies of " merchandize; and the intire barrier, as de- " manded by the States in 1709, from France, " except two or three places at moſt.

" As to theſe exceptions ſeveral expedients are " propoſed; and I make no doubt but this barrier " may be ſo ſettled, as to render that republic " perfectly ſecure againſt any enterprize on the " part of France, which is the foundation of all " my ingagements upon this head with the States.

" The demands of Portugal depending on the " diſpoſition of Spain, and that article having " been long in diſpute, it has not been yet poſſible " to make any conſiderable progreſs therein; but " my plenipotentiaries will now have an oppor- " tunity to aſſiſt that King in his pretenſions.

" Thoſe of the King of Pruſſia are ſuch as I " hope

Q. Ann, An' 1712.

" will admit of little difficulty on the part of " France, and my utmoſt indeavors ſhall not be " wanting to procure all I am able to ſo good an " ally.

" The difference between the barrier demand- " ed for the duke of Savoy, in 1709, and the " offers now made by France is very inconſidera- " ble: but that Prince having ſo ſignally diſtin- " guiſhed himſelf in the ſervice of the common " cauſe, I am indeavoring to procure for him ſtill " farther advantages.

" France has conſented that the Elector Pala- " tine ſhall continue his preſent rank among the " Electors, and remain in poſſeſſion of the Upper " Palatinate.

" The electoral dignity is likewiſe acknowledg'd " in the houſe of Hanover, according to the ar- " ticle inſerted, at that Prince's deſire, in my de- " mands.

" And as to the reſt of the allies, I make no " doubt of being able to ſecure their ſeveral in- " tereſts."

My lords and gentlemen,

" I have now communicated to you not only " the terms of peace, which may, by the future " treaty, be obtained for my own ſubjects; but " likewiſe the propoſals of France for ſatisfying " our allies.

" The former are ſuch as I have reaſon to ex- " pect to make my people ſome amends for that " great and unequal burden which they have " laid under thro' the whole courſe of this war; " and I am willing to hope that none of our con- " federates, and eſpecially thoſe to whom ſo great " acceſſions of dominion and power are to accrue " by this peace, will envy Britain her ſhare in the " glory and advantage of it.

" The latter are not yet ſo perfectly adjuſted as " a little more time might have rendered them; " but the ſeaſon of the year making it neceſſary to " put an end to this ſeſſion, I reſolved no longer " to defer communicating theſe matters to you.

" I can make no doubt but you are all fully " perſuaded, that nothing will be neglected on my " part in the progreſs of the negociation, to bring " the peace to a happy and ſpeedy iſſue; and I " depend on your intire confidence in me, and " your chearful concurrence with me."

Debates in the houſe of peers about the peace.

The duke of Marlborough's ſenſe of the matter.

The next day the houſe of lords took this ſpeech into conſideration; when very hot debates ariſing about the ſame, the duke of Marlborough, among others, repreſented to the houſe, " that the mea- " ſures enter'd into, and purſued in England, for " this year paſt, were contrary to her Majeſty's " ingagements with her allies, did fully the " triumphs and glories of her reign, and would " render the Engliſh name odious to all other " nations. Upon this the earl of Strafford ſaid, " that ſome of the allies (meaning the Dutch) " would not ſhew ſuch backwardneſs to a peace " as they had hitherto done, but for a member of " that illuſtrious aſſembly (meaning the duke of " Marlborough) who maintain'd a ſecret corre- " ſpondence with them, and indeavor'd to per- " ſuade them to carry on the war, feeding them " with hopes that they ſhould be ſupported by a " ſtrong party here." The lord Cowper anſwer'd this ſpeech, and becauſe the earl of Strafford had not expreſs'd himſelf in all the puriry of the Engliſh tongue, he took occaſion from thence to ſay; " that this noble lord had been ſo long abroad, " that he had almoſt forgot not only the language, " but the very conſtitution of his own country. " That, according to our laws, it could never be " ſuggeſted as a crime in the meaneſt ſubject, " much leſs in any member of that auguſt aſſem- " bly, to hold correſpondence with our allies: " ſuch allies eſpecially whoſe intereſt her Ma- " jeſty had declared to be inſeparable from her " own, in her ſpeech at the opening of this ſeſ- " ſion: whereas it would be a hard matter to " juſtify and reconcile either with our laws, or the " laws of honor and juſtice, the conduct of ſome " perſons, in treating clandeſtinely with the com- " mon enemy, without the participation of the " allies."

Q. Ann, An' 1712.

The duke's aſſertion was back'd by ſeveral ex- cellent ſpeeches of the lords Nottingham, Cowper and others, yet they had, at that time, no effect, the majority was too great againſt them; and both lords and commons waited on her Majeſty with their addreſſes of thanks for communicating to them the terms on which a peace might be made, and expreſſing their intire confidence in her Majeſty's wiſdom to finiſh ſo great and good a work.

Reſolution of the commons;

The 17th, mr. Hampden propoſed to addreſs the Queen, " that ſhe would give inſtructions to " her plenipotentiaries, that the ſeveral powers in " alliance with her Majeſty might be guarantees " of the Proteſtant ſucceſſion;" but this was car- ried in the negative by a great majority, and, on the contrary, it was reſolved;

1. " That this houſe has ſuch an intire con- " fidence in the repeated declarations her Majeſty " has been pleaſed to make of her concern for " aſſuring to theſe kingdoms the Proteſtant ſuc- " ceſſion, as by law eſtabliſh'd, in the houſe of " Hanover, that they can never doubt her Ma- " jeſty's taking the proper meaſures for the ſecu- " rity thereof; and that this houſe will ſupport " her Majeſty againſt faction at home, and her " enemies abroad; and that this houſe does hum- " bly beſeech her Majeſty, that ſhe will be pleaſed " to diſcountenance all thoſe who ſhall indeavor " to raiſe jealouſies between her Majeſty and her " ſubjects, eſpecially by miſrepreſenting her good " intentions for the welfare of her people.

2. " That the ſaid reſolution be laid before her " Majeſty."

At the preſenting of it the Queen was pleaſed to anſwer:

Her Majeſty's anſwer at preſenting it.

Gentlemen,

" I return you hearty thanks for this reſolution, " which is very becoming you, who truly repre- " ſent all my commons.

" You have ſhewn yourſelves honeſt aſſerters " of the Monarchy, zealous defenders of the Con- " ſtitution, and real friends to the Proteſtant ſuc- " ceſſion.

" What I have ſaid and done is ſufficient to " ſatisfy any perſon, who is in earneſt for the ſuc- " ceſſion, as by law eſtabliſh'd, in the houſe of " Hanover, that I need not be put in mind of " doing any thing which may contribute to render " that ſucceſſion ſecure."

All the other affairs of parliament being finiſh'd, the Queen came to the houſe of lords, the 21ſt, and put an end to this long ſeſſion, with the fol- lowing ſpeech:

The Queen's ſpeech at the riſing of the parliament.

My lords and gentlemen,

" The laſt time I was here, I ſpoke ſo fully, " and afterwards received from both houſes ſuch " ſatisfactory addreſſes, that there remains little " more for me to ſay, at the cloſe of this meeting " of parliament, but to repeat my hearty thanks " for your late ſolemn aſſurances. They will give " me the ſtrength to ſtruggle with any difficulties " which may yet be raiſed; and I hope that nei- " ther they who envy the making a good peace, " nor thoſe who think it their intereſt to continue " the war, will be able to defeat our joint indea- " vors for the honor and advantage of Britain, " and the ſecurity of all our allies.

Gentlemen

Q. Ann, An' 1712.

Gentlemen of the houſe of commons,

" At the ſame time that I thank you moſt kindly " for the ſupplies you have chearfully granted, " I cannot but let you know my ſatisfaction in the " near view I have of a peace, ſince it will in ſome " meaſure recompence my ſubjects for the vaſt ex- " pences, and alſo lighten the heavy burden they " have borne during the war.

My lords and gentlemen,

" You have expreſs'd how ſenſible you are of " the advantage and ſecurity which accrue to Bri- " tain and our allies, by the terms propoſed for a " peace; and I need not mention to you the miſ- " chiefs which muſt follow the breaking off this " treaty: our burdens would be at leaſt continued " if not increaſed: the preſent opportunity would " be irrecoverably loſt, of Britain's eſtabliſhing a " real balance of power in Europe, and improving " our own commerce; and if any of our allies " ſhould gain ſomething by ſuch a proceeding, " the reſt would ſuffer in the common calamity, " but I hope, by God's bleſſing, ſuch fatal de- " ſigns will be diſappointed.

" You are now returning into your reſpective " countries, and I perſuade myſelf you will not " be wanting in your indeavors, to obviate the " deſigns of any ill-minded perſons, who may at- " tempt to ſow ſedition amongſt my ſubjects; " and, under ſpecious pretences, carry on deſigns " they dare not own.

" I hope, at your next meeting, there will be " an opportunity of perfecting what I have recom- " mended to you, which you have left unfiniſhed " in this ſeſſion.

" I cannot conclude without aſſuring you, that " nothing ſhall move me from ſteadily purſuing " the true intereſt of ſo dutiful and affectionate a " people."

The parliament adjourned.

And then the parliament was adjourned to the 8th of July.

The principal acts paſſed this ſeſſion were: 1. " The land-tax act at four-pence in the pound. " 2. The malt-tax act. 3. An act for preſerving " the Proteſtant religion, into which the occaſional " conformity-bill was grafted. 4. An act for ſet- " tling the precedence of the houſe of Hanover. " 5. An act to repeal the act of naturalization. " 6, 7, 8. Three acts relating to the epiſcopal " communion, the right of preſentation of mi- " niſters, and the obſervance of Chriſtmas in Scot- " land. 9. An act for recruiting her Majeſty's " land-forces and marines, for the ſervice of the " year 1712. 10. An act for puniſhing mutiny " and deſertion, &c. 11. An act for raiſing the " militia for the year 1712. 12. An act for the " incouragement of woolen manufactures. 13, " 14. Two acts for laying ſeveral duties and addi- " tional duties on certain merchandizes, &c."

The campain in Flanders.

Before I return to the congreſs at Utrecht, I ſhall give a brief account of the remainder of the campain in Flanders. The ſiege of Queſnoy having been reſolved upon, the two armies made a motion, the 7th of June, and paſs'd the river Selle, the duke of Ormond extending his left to Chateau-Cambreſis, and Prince Eugene his right to Haſpre, all along the ſaid river, which they had in front. General Fagel was detach'd, in the mean time, with thirty battalions, and as many ſquadrons, to inveſt Queſnoy, which was effected the 8th of June, tho' with many difficulties. The trenches were not however open'd till the 19th at night, after which the ſiege was carried on with ſo much vigor and ſucceſs, that on the 1ſt of July, the counterſcarp was taken, ſword in hand. The gariſon hereupon, beat a parly the 3d, and ſurrender'd the 4th.

Queſnoy taken by the allies.

The duke of Ormond however open'd a new ſcene before this ſurrender; for, on the 27th of June, he declared, that he had received orders from the Queen, to publiſh, within three days, a ſuſpenſion of arms, for two months, between his army and the French, in order to facilitate the concluſion of a treaty for a general peace, which was then on foot. His grace, at the ſame time, told Prince Eugene, and the field-deputies of the States, that he had poſitive orders to propoſe, that the like ſuſpenſion of arms ſhould be publiſh'd in the confederate army. And that, in the mean time, he had directions to ſend ten battalions, to take poſſeſſion of Dunkirk, which the French King had offer'd to put into the hands of the Queen, his miſtreſs, for the ſecurity of the performance of the offers he had made.

The duke of Ormond propoſes a ceſſation of arms.

Prince Eugene, and the deputies of the States, deſiring ſome time to write about it, to their reſpective maſters, the duke of Ormond anſwered, that was not in his power to grant, and that if they perſiſted to carry on the ſiege of Queſnoy, he could cover it no longer, but muſt march off, with his troops, within three days. His grace likewiſe, acquainted the generals of the forein troops, in the Britiſh pay, that they muſt obey his orders, otherwiſe they ought not to expect to have bread, pay, or their arrears: however, his grace ſuſpended the march of his troops, ſome days beyond the term he had limited, to give time to the reſt of the allies to come into the ceſſation of arms.

The Imperialiſts and the Auxiliaries ſeparate from the duke of Ormond's army.

The allies not being able to agree on this ſubject, Prince Eugene decamp'd, the 16th, from the neighborhood of Queſnoy, and incamp'd at Hartre, near Landrecy, being join'd, in his march, by all the auxiliary troops, belonging to the Princes of the Empire, which were in the duke of Ormond's army, their generals declaring, they had orders from their ſeveral maſters, not to ſeparate themſelves from the Emperor's forces, and thoſe of the States; ſo that none remain'd with the Engliſh, but ſome battalions of Holſtein-Gottorp, and the regiments of dragoons of Waleff.

A ceſſation of arms publiſh'd by the Engliſh and French.

This was the fatal day in which the forces of the allies were divided, who, while they remained united, were always victorious; but they were ſoon after ſenſible, that they were not now an equal match for the French.

The 17th, the duke of Ormond, having cauſed a ſuſpenſion of arms, for two months, to be publiſh'd in the camp, as the marſhal de Villars had done in his, march'd back to Aveſnes le Sec, repaſs'd the Scheld and the Scarpe, and came to Ghent, where the Britiſh army continued all the reſt of the campain.

The allies beſiege Landrecy, but abandon the ſiege.

The allies, under the command of Prince Eugene, did indeed inveſt Landrecy, on the 16th, but were afterwards obliged to abandon the ſiege, and to be eye witneſſes, that the French, as reduced as they had been before, were now every where victorious, in their turn.

The French force the confederates lines;

In order to cover their convoys againſt the French gariſons of Cambray and Valenciennes, the allies had drawn lines from the Scheld to the Scarpe; and to poſſeſs himſelf of theſe lines, together with the camp of Denain, and the magazines of the allies, monſieur de Villars cauſed ſeveral detachments to march privately, on the 23d in the evening, and follow'd himſelf with the whole French army The lines being but weakly guarded, were forced with little or no reſiſtance, and 500 waggons, loaded with bread, taken; their guard, conſiſting of 500 horſe, and as many foot, being either kill'd or taken. The camp of Denain was defended by ſeventeen battalions, under the command of the earl of Albemarle, with ſeveral other general officers, and covered by an intrenchment of between fifteen and twenty foot high, mounted with twelve pieces of cannon. The French were however ſo ſucceſsful in their attack of this camp, that after ſome reſiſtance, they enter'd it, cuting down all that came in their way. The reſt retir'd into the village and the abby; but they were ſo cloſely purſued by the French, that whole battalions threw themſelves into the Scheld; and thus the confederate troops were intirely defeated, before Prince Eugene could come to their aſſiſtance. The caution which monſieur de Villars had taken, to conceal his march and deſign, ſucceeded ſo well, that Prince Eugene had no intelligence of them, till the 24th in the morning, when the enemy were laying bridges over the Scheld, and ſo could not arrive with his troops, till the ingagement was over. This action proved a very unhappy one, and the Dutch loſt many brave officers in it.

Q. Ann, An' 1712.

And defeat the allies at Denain.

Dunkirk deliver'd into the hands of the Engliſh.

During theſe tranſactions, the French King, to ſhew his intentions for a peace were ſincere, declared his readineſs to deliver up Dunkirk, into the hands of the Engliſh: ſir John Leake was hereupon order'd to convoy a body of troops from England, to take poſſeſſion thereof: for as the auxiliaries had refus'd to march with the duke of Ormond, it was not thought adviſable to weaken the body of Engliſh troops under his command, by ſending a detachment of them to Dunkirk, as at firſt was intended. Therefore, on the 7th of July, ſir John Leake, with brigadier Hill, who commanded the land-forces, ſet ſail from the Downs, and, at two the ſame afternoon, they came to an anchor before Dunkirk. The next day, the troops being landed, the French march'd out of the citadel, fort Lewis, the Riſbank, and all the other forts; of which the Engliſh took poſſeſſion, and placed guards at all the gates: but the French ſhips and gallies were permited to remain in the harbor, with two or three battalions of marines in the town, on pretence of guarding the ſtores. The privateers were alſo indulg'd the liberty of coming in and out, provided they brought in no Engliſh prizes.

The duke of Ormond, continuing his march, as I have ſaid above, arriv'd, together with the earl of Strafford, the 23d of July, N. S. at Ghent, the troops incamping about a mile and a half from the city. The duke having put four battalions of the Britiſh troops into Ghent, and the like number into Bruges, detach'd ſix battalions, to re-inforce the gariſon of Dunkirk, with a train of artillery and ammunition.

The French take ſeveral important places;

After the action of Denain, monſieur de Villars order'd the count de Broglio to inveſt Marchiennes on the Scarpe, where the allies had lodg'd the chief of their ſtores, with upwards of 150 bilanders (a ſort of large long-boats or barges) laden with artillery, and all ſorts of ammunition and proviſions for a whole campain. He commanded at the ſame time count Albergotti to attack St. Amand, and other detachments were order'd to take poſſeſſion of the reſt of the poſts on the Scarpe.

The 26th, 200 men of the allies, who were in the abby of Anchin, and at Pont-à-Rache, yielded themſelves priſoners of war. The ſame day, the count de l'Eſparre made himſelf maſter of the abby of Haſnon, where he took 100 priſoners. Count Albergotti poſſeſs'd himſelf that day likewiſe of Mortagne, at the mouth of the Scarpe, where he took 100 men, and then of St. Amand, which was defended by 800 men, who alſo ſurrendred priſoners of war.

Farther ſucceſs of the French.

This chain of ſucceſs ſo animated the French, that they now began to think no attempt too great for them; and indeed, fortune continued to favor them in ſuch manner, that they ſucceſſively took Marchiennes, Fort-Scarpe, Douay, Queſnoy and Bouchain. And tho' the allies, while the French were before Bouchain, ſurpriſed and took fort Knocque, a ſtrong and important place; yet this was but a poor amends for the loſs of ſo many places of greater conſequence.

Q. Ann, An' 1712.

The ſuſpenſion of arms twice renewed.

Theſe were the chief tranſactions of the campain in the Low-countries: and while theſe things were paſſing there, the lord Bolingbroke, having been ſent into France by her Majeſty, to ſettle ſome important point ſtill depending between the two courts, concluded another ſuſpenſion of arms, between Great-Britain and France, for four months, viz. from the 22d of Auguſt to the 22d of December. This ſuſpenſion was proclaim'd at Paris, the 24th of Auguſt, N. S. and at London the 19th of the ſame month, O. S. And before that time was expired, it was continued for four months longer.

Ceſſation of arms in Catalonia.

In Catalonia, there was little action this year, and, on the 8th of September, brigadier Pierce, who commanded the Engliſh troops there, notified to count Stahremberg, that a ceſſation of arms having been agreed upon between England and France, he ſhould ſeparate from the army with his troops, and accordingly he march'd to Sitias, on the coaſt between Barcelona and Terragona: and ſoon after the Germans, as well as the Spaniards, went into winter-quarters.

The Engliſh troops ſail to Port-Mahon.

The 19th of November, the Engliſh troops in Catalonia imbark'd at Barcelona, and ſailed to Port-Mahon, where the duke of Argyle cauſed the Emperor's colors to be taken down, and the Engliſh colors to be hoiſted upon the ſeveral caſtles and forts: and the governor of Minorca, for the Emperor, was given to underſtand, that he muſt take the oaths to her Majeſty, if he thought fit to remain in the iſland; which he refuſing to do, had leave to retire to Barcelona; but the reſt of the magiſtrates took an oath of fidelity to the Queen of Great-Britain.

The duke of Marlborough leaves England.

The duke of Marlborough, in the mean time, having met with the ſenſible affliction to loſe the earl of Godolphin, who died in September, of the ſtone, reſolved to make other people eaſy, and himſelf more ſecure, by retiring out of the kingdom. His grace having open'd his deſign to the earl of Oxford, by mr. Maynwaring, and demanded a paſs, about the latter end of October, the ſame was granted and delivered to him about a fortnight after; when having ſettled his domeſtic affairs, he ſubmited to a voluntary exile, and continued abroad during the remainder of this reign.

A duel between duke Hamilton and the lord Mohun.

The 15th of November, a duel was fought between duke Hamilton and the lord Mohun, principals, and the colonels Hamilton and Maccartney, their ſeconds. The two principals died upon the ſpot, but their ſeconds not receiving much hurt, Maccartney thought fit to fly for it, and afterwards went beyond-ſea, but colonel Hamilton, ſurrendering himſelf to a commitee of council, made a depoſition of the circumſtances of the duel, in which he accus'd Maccartney of foul play with regard to the duke, inſinuating, as if he gave him his death's wound, by making a puſh at him, while the colonel was raiſing him up: tho' he was afterwards acquited of that accuſation. But to return to the treaty at Utrecht.

The Queen's ſpeech communicated to the miniſters at Utrecht.

The 27th of June, the lord biſhop of Briſtol communicated to the miniſters of the allies at Utrecht, the Queen's ſpeech, and conſequently the terms which the French King had been prevail'd upon to make to the allies; to which thoſe miniſters made no other anſwer, than that they would acquaint their reſpective maſters therewith, and wait for new orders. The ſame day, his excellency had a private conference with the plenipotentiaries of the States, and repreſented to them the neceſſity of a ſuſpenſion of arms in the Netherlands, therlands, in order to facilitate the concluſion of the treaty.

Q. ANN, AN' 1712.

It was then believed, and commonly reported, that the French plenipotentiaries would make new overtures for a general peace, and for a ſuſpenſion of arms: but the negociations at Utrecht remain'd at a ſtand, and an unlucky difference that happen'd ſome time after, between the ſieur Meſnager, one of the plenipotentiaries of France, and the count de Rechteren, one of thoſe of the States, which for ſome time made no ſmall diſturbance, was the occaſion, or at leaſt pretence, of ſuſpending the general conferences; the French having declar'd, that they could not renew the ſaid conferences, till their King had received ſatisfaction upon that affair, which he preſcrib'd in ſuch terms, as the States did not think fit to ſubmit to.

The French, to color their refuſal of giving their anſwer in writing, which was inſiſted upon by the allies, induſtriouſly kept up this diſpute, the whole remainder of the year.

King Philip renounces his claim to France.

In this interval, the lord Lexington was ſent to Madrid, where he was preſent at the ſolemn renunciation, which King Philip made, of all the claims and pretenſions that he had, or might have for the future, to the crown of France, for himſelf, and his ſucceſſors. This renunciation was made the 5th of October, and confirm'd by the general Cortez (or States) of the kingdom of Spain, which was ſummon'd for that purpoſe. As this is the foundation on which the whole fabric of the peace ſtands, it was made in the ſtrongeſt terms poſſible.

This neceſſary preliminary being concluded, in the form and manner as deſired by the Queen of Great-Britain; and King Philip having long before given to the Elector of Bavaria the propriety and ſovereinty of the Netherlands, whereby he, at once extricated himſelf from all the difficulties relating to the barrier of the States-general in thoſe provinces, it was believed, that his miniſters would have been admited into the congreſs; but the allies would not conſent to it: ſo that King Philip had no miniſter at Utrecht, at the time when the negociations for a peace ſeemed to draw towards a concluſion.

A ſuſpenſion of arms concluded between France and Portugal.

The affairs of Portugal, being in the mean time reduced to great extremities, and their forces not being able to make head againſt the Spaniards, as they were deprived of the aſſiſtance of the Britiſh troops; there was a treaty for a ſuſpenſion of arms, for four months, concluded at Utrecht, between the miniſters of the moſt Chriſtian King, and thoſe of Portugal, which was ſigned, the 7th of November 1712.

The earl of Strafford returns to Holland.

The earl of Strafford, who had made a tour to England, ſtaid there till the latter end of November, when having obtain'd a new plan, containing her Majeſty's laſt intentions about peace, his excellency imbark'd for Holland, and arrived at the Hague, the 6th of December, N. S. and, the next day, made a viſit to the grand penſionary. Having communicated the new plan for a peace, to the States, he deſir'd a poſitive anſwer to it, as being the utmoſt conceſſions that were to be expected from France, and which her Majeſty had not obtain'd but with great difficulty.

The States conſent to the new plan.

This new plan being communicated to the reſpective provinces of the republic, and the States-general ſhewing an inclination to comply with the Queen's meaſures, ſome explanations and reſtrictions were only inſiſted upon: and, on the 29th of December, the States-general came to a reſolution, to comply with the Queen's meaſures, of which they gave her Majeſty notice in a very ſubmiſſive letter.

AN' 1713. Her Majeſty was pleaſed to ſhew her ſatisfaction, in her anſwer of the 7th of January, O. S. which very much contributed to the ſucceſs of the negociations: and ſeveral conferences were thereupon held, to concert a new treaty for the guaranty of the ſucceſſion of the crown, in the Proteſtant line of Hanover, and the barrier to be granted to the States, which was concluded and ſign'd the 30th of January, N. S. and ſent to England for its ratification, and to the reſpective provinces of the republic, for the ſame end. After the ſigning of this treaty, the negociations were carried on with greater expedition than before, and ſeveral important preliminaries ſettled, which had till then obſtructed a general treaty. The miniſters of the Emperor and France, enter'd into a negociation for evacuating Catalonia, and the neutrality of Italy. The States-general were likewiſe prevail'd upon to grant paſſports for the miniſters of Spain; and likewiſe thoſe which the French deſir'd for the Electors of Cologn and Bavaria. The affair of monſieur Meſnager and count Rechteren was alſo adjuſted: and in ſhort, all the difficulties which obſtructed the general conferences were removed.

Q. ANN, AN' 1713.

A new ſucceſſion and barrier treaty ſign'd.

The plenipotentiaries of Spain, Cologn and Bavaria admited.

Matters having this favorable appearance, in a conference held the 13th of March, the Britiſh miniſters fix'd the 25th of that month, as the laſt day to which they were inſtructed to defer the ſigning of the peace; which however was afterwards poſtponed to the 11th of April, N. S.

Inſtruments for the evacuation of Catalonia, and neutrality of Italy, ſign'd.

In the mean time, the ſeveral inſtruments, relating to the evacuation of Catalonia, and neutrality of Italy (to which the Queen was guaranty) were ſign'd, between her Majeſty's plenipotentiaries, and thoſe of the Emperor, France and Savoy.

The dukes of Berry and Orleans renounce their pretenſions on Spain.

Theſe difficulties being removed, the French court agreed, that the dukes of Berry and Orleans ſhould make a ſolemn renunciation of the crown of Spain, in the parliament of Paris, which was performed accordingly, with great ceremony; being ſo inſiſted upon by the court of Great-Britain, as the moſt effectual means to prevent the union of France and Spain, under one ſoverein.

Count Sinzendorff proteſts againſt the peace.

Count Sinzendorf went in the mean time to the Hague, where he uſed all poſſible means to perſuade the States to put off the ſigning of the peace, till he had received an anſwer to the expreſs he had diſpatch'd to Vienna: and declar'd, that if the States ſign'd before his maſter, his Imperial Majeſty would immediately withdraw his troops out of the Netherlands: but finding his reaſons and repreſentations ineffectual, he proteſted againſt the peace, as he had done before at Utrecht; whither he return'd, the ſame evening, and found that the Dutch plenipotentiaries had adjuſted ſeveral articles, in relation to their commerce with France.

The peace concluded.

The 11th of April, N. S. the miniſters of the Proteſtant Princes met together in the morning, and drew up a repreſentation, in favor of the poor Proteſtants of France, which they deliver'd to the Britiſh miniſters, and deſired them to deliver it to thoſe of France, which was done accordingly. The Britiſh plenipotentiaries went afterwards to count Sinzendorff, told him they were going to ſign the peace, and ſhew'd him the plan they had ſtipulated with the French for the Emperor, and the Empire, till the 1ſt of June. They proceeded from thence, to the houſes of the other miniſters of the allies, to whom they made the ſame declaration. At two in the afternoon, the miniſters of France came to the houſe of the lord biſhop of Briſtol, where the treaties of peace and commerce, between her Majeſty and the moſt Chriſtian King, were ſign'd. The miniſters of the duke of Savoy ſign'd the treaty about four, and about eight, thoſe of Pruſſia did the like. The Portugueſe ſign'd the treaty about twelve at night; and it was paſt one in the morning, when the plenipotentiaries of the States ſign'd their treaties of peace and commerce.

And ſign'd.

The

Q. Ann, An' 1713.

The Germans resolve to continue the war.

The Imperial and German miniſters expreſs'd great reſentment that the allies ſhould conclude a peace without their conſent, and pretend to preſcribe conditions to them: they gave out, that they would ſtill carry on the war, and hazard all rather than ſubmit to ſuch uſage.

The peace being concluded between France and all the allies, except the Emperor and Empire; I ſhall give the reader an abſtract of the moſt material articles in the treaty between Great-Britain and France, ſeting aſide matters of form, and keeping to ſuch particulars as have an immediate relation to the intereſt of Great-Britain.

Abſtract of the treaty between Great-Britain and France.

Abſtract of the treaty of Utrecht.

" By the fourth and fifth articles, the French " King, for himſelf and ſucceſſors, acknowledges " and approves the act of limitation of the ſuc- " ceſſion to the kingdom of Great-Britain: and " whereas the Pretender is lately gone, of his " own accord, out of the kingdom of France; " the ſaid moſt Chriſtian King, his heirs and ſuc- " ceſſors, will take all poſſible care, that he ſhall " not, at any time hereafter, or under any pre- " tence whatſoever, return into the kingdom of " France, or any of the dominions thereof.

" In the ſixth article, the King of Spain's re- " nunciation of the crown of France, and the " dukes of Berry and Orleans of the crown of " Spain, with the French King's letters-patent, " admiting and confirming the ſaid renunciations, " being inſerted, the Queen of Great-Britain, " and the moſt Chriſtian King, ingage to each " other ſolemnly, and on their royal words; that " nothing ever ſhall be done by them, or their " heirs and ſucceſſors, or allowed to be done by " others, whereby the ſaid renunciations, and the " other tranſactions afore-mention'd, may not " have their full effect.

" By the ſeventh, that there ſhall be a free uſe " of all navigation and commerce, as heretofore, " in time of peace, and before the declaration " of the laſt war.

" By the ninth, the moſt Chriſtian King ſhall " demoliſh the fortifications of Dunkirk, at his " own expence, within five months after the con- " cluſion of the peace.

" By the tenth, the moſt Chriſtian King o- " bliges himſelf to reſtore to Great-Britain, the " bay and ſtreights of Hudſon, with the lands, " ſeas, ſea-coaſts, rivers, and places ſituate in " the ſaid bay and ſtreights, with the fortreſſes " there erected, in the condition they now are, " with all the cannon and cannon-ball therein, " with a proportionable quantity of powder, and " other proviſions of war, uſually belonging to " cannon.

" By the eleventh, ſatisfaction ſhall be given to " the Engliſh company, trading to Hudſon's " bay, for all depredations of the French in time " of peace: and ſatisfaction ſhall alſo be given to " the French for any damage done them by the " Britiſh ſubjects in time of peace.

" By the twelfth, the iſland of St. Chriſtophers, " Nova Scotia, or Arcadia, Port Royal, or An- " napolis Royal, with their lands and dependances, " are intirely yielded and made over to Great- " Britain, in ſuch ample manner, that the ſubjects " of France ſhall be hereafter excluded from all " kind of fiſhing in the ſaid ſeas, bays, and other " places, on the coaſts of Nova Scotia.

" By the thirteenth, the iſland of Newfound- " land, with the adjacent iſlands, ſhall belong, of " right, wholly to Great-Britain: but the ſub- " jects of France ſhall be allowed to catch fiſh, " and dry them on the land, in that part only of " the ſaid iſland, and no other, which ſtretches " from the place call'd Cape-Bonaviſta to the " northern point of the ſaid iſland, and from " thence runing down by the weſtern ſide, reaches " as far as the place call'd point Riche. Q. Ann, An' 1713.

" By the fourteenth, the ſubjects of France are " to have the ſpace of a year to remove them- " ſelves, and their effects, from the places and " colonies yielded by France: but thoſe who " chuſe to remain, and be ſubject to Great-Britain, " may injoy the exerciſe of the Romiſh religion, " as far as the laws of Great-Britain allow the " ſame.

" By the fifteenth, the French inhabiting Ca- " nada, and other countries in America, ſhall " give no diſturbance to the five nations of Indians, " ſubject to Britain, or to the other natives of " America, their friends: and the Britiſh ſub- " jects ſhall behave themſelves peaceably towards " the Americans, who are ſubjects or friends of " France: and there ſhall be a free intercourſe of " trade between the French and Engliſh, and the " natives of thoſe countries.

" By the twentieth, juſt and reaſonable ſatiſ- " faction ſhall be given to all and ſingular the " allies of Great-Britain, in thoſe matters which " they have a right to demand of France.

" By the twenty-firſt, the French King agrees, " that in the treaty with the Emperor and Empire, " the ſtate of religion ſhall be ſettled, in the " Empire, conformable to the treaty of Weſt- " phalia.

" By the twenty-ſecond, ſatisfaction ſhall be " given to the family of Hamilton, the duke of " Richmond, and Charles Douglas, as to their " ſeveral demands in France.

" By the twenty-fourth, the treaty between " France and Portugal is confirm'd; and her " Britiſh Majeſty takes upon her the guaranty of " the ſame.

" By the twenty-fifth, the ſame is done as to " the treaty between France and the duke of " Savoy.

" By the twenty-ſixth, the King of Sweden, " the duke of Tuſcany, the republic of Genoa, " and the duke of Parma, are included in this " treaty.

" By the twenty-ſeventh, the Hanſe-towns are " alſo comprehended in the treaty, and are to " injoy the ancient advantages they had in point " of trade.

Dated March 31, / April 11, } 1713.

Sign'd,
(L. S.) John Briſtol, L. P. S.
(L. S.) Strafford.
(L. S.) Huxelles.
(L. S.) Meſnager.

Treaty between France and Savoy.

The chief articles of the treaty between the French King and the duke of Savoy were the third, by which the duchy of Savoy and the county of Nice, with their appurtenances and dependences, and in general all the other dominions taken from him, during this war, were reſtored; the fourth, by which the boundaries between France and Savoy were fix'd; the fifth, by which the ceſſion of Sicily to the duke of Savoy is confirm'd; as is likewiſe the ſucceſſion to the crown of Spain and the Indies, upon failure of deſcendants from King Philip; by the ſixth and ſeventh, that the ceſſions made to the duke of Savoy by the late Emperor Leopold ſhould remain in full force.

And between France and the States-general.

By the treaty between France and the States-general, the former delivers up to the latter, in favor of the houſe of Auſtria, the Spaniſh towns in Flanders, to be gariſoned by the Dutch, at the charge of the country, under the reſtrictions, and upon the terms therein mentioned.

The

Q. Ann, An' 1713.

The parliament meets.

The peace being thus concluded, the parliament met at Weſtminſter the 9th of April, O. S. when her Majeſty made the following ſpeech to both houſes:

The Queen's ſpeech to both houſes.

My lords and gentlemen,

"I ended the laſt ſeſſion with my hearty thanks "for the ſolemn aſſurances you had given me, by "which I have been inabled to overcome the diffi- "culties contrived to obſtruct the general peace.

"I have defer'd opening the ſeſſion till now, "being deſirous to communicate to you, at your "firſt meeting, the ſucceſs of this important af- "fair: it is therefore with great pleaſure I tell "you the treaty is ſign'd, and, in a few days, the "ratifications will be exchanged.

"The negociation has been drawn into ſo great "a length, that all our allies had ſufficient oppor- "tunity to adjuſt their ſeveral intereſts, tho' the "public charge has been thereby much increaſed; "yet I hope my people will be eaſy under it, ſince "we have happily obtained the end we propoſed.

"What I have done for ſecuring the Proteſtant "ſucceſſion, and the perfect friendſhip there is "between me and the houſe of Hanover, may "convince ſuch who wiſh well to both, and de- "ſire the quiet and ſafety of their country, how "vain all attempts are to divide us; and thoſe "who will make a merit by ſeparating our in- "tereſts, will never attain their ill ends.

Gentlemen of the houſe of commons,

"As great a progreſs has been made, in re- "ducing the public expence, as the circumſtances "of affairs would admit.

"What force may be neceſſary for ſecuring our "commerce by ſea, and for guards and gariſons, "I leave intirely to my parliament.

"Make yourſelves ſafe, and I ſhall be ſatisfied.

"Next to the protection of the Divine Provi- "dence, I depend upon the loyalty and affection "of my people.

"I want no other guarantee.

"I recommend to your care thoſe brave men "who have ſerved well by ſea or land this war, "and cannot be imployed in time of peace.

"I muſt deſire you to provide the ſupplies you "ſhall judge requiſite; and to give ſuch diſpatch "as may be neceſſary for your own eaſe and the "public ſervice.

My lords and gentlemen,

"The many advantages I have obtained for my "own ſubjects, have occaſion'd much oppoſition "and long delay to this peace.

"It affords me great ſatisfaction, that my peo- "ple will have it in their power, by degrees, to "repair what they have ſuffered during ſo long "and burthenſome a war.

"The eaſing our forein trade, as far as is con- "ſiſtent with national credit, will deſerve your "care.

"And to think of proper methods for improving "and incouraging our home trade and manufac- "tures, particularly the fiſhery, which may be "carried on to imploy all our ſpare hands, and "be a mighty benefit even to the remoteſt parts "of this kingdom.

"Several matters were laid before you laſt "ſeſſion, which the weight and multiplicity of "other buſineſs would not permit you to per- "fect: I hope you will take a proper opportunity "to give them due conſideration.

"I cannot however but expreſly mention my "diſpleaſure, at the unparallel'd licentiouſneſs, in "publiſhing ſeditious and ſcandalous libels.

"The impunity ſuch practices have met with "has incouraged the blaſpheming every thing "ſacred, and the propagating opinions tending to "the overthrow of all religion and government.

"Proſecutions have been ordered, but it will "require ſome new law to put a ſtop to this "growing evil, and your beſt indeavors, in your "reſpective ſtations, to diſcourage it.

"The impious practice of duelling requires ſome "ſpeedy and effectual remedy.

"Now we are entring upon peace abroad, let "me conjure you all to uſe your utmoſt indea- "vors for calming mens minds at home, that the "arts of peace may be cultivated.

"Let not groundleſs jealouſies, contrived by "a faction, and fomented by party rage, effect "that which our forein enemies could not

"I pray God to direct all your conſultations "for his glory and the welfare of my people."

Q. Ann, An' 1713.

Both houſes congratulate her Majeſty on the peace.

The two following days both houſes waited on her Majeſty with their congratulatory addreſſes; which were ſoon after followed by thoſe of ſeveral corporations.

Sir John Jennings convoys the Empreſs to Italy.

In purſuance of the convention for evacuating Catalonia, ſir John Jennings was commanded to convoy the Empreſs from Barcelona to Italy: accordingly he ſet ſail with her Imperial Majeſty from that place, and arrived at Vado the 28th of March, landed her at Genoa the 3d of April, and the 10th ſhe came to Milan. Thither admiral Jennings likewiſe followed, and having had ſeveral conferences with the miniſters there, about the tranſportation of the German troops from Catalonia, he took his leave, the 19th, of the Empreſs, who continued her journey by land to Vienna.

The peace proclaim'd.

The ratifications of the treaties of peace and commerce, which met with ſome oppoſition at the council board, having been exchang'd at Utrecht, and brought to London, the Queen, on the 4th of May (being the ſame day of the month on which the war was proclaim'd eleven years before) ſign'd a proclamation for publiſhing the peace, which was accordingly perform'd, at London, the next day, with the uſual ceremonies, and ſoon after in all the cities and market-towns of Great-Britain and Ireland.

The treaties communicated to the parliament.

The 9th of May, the Queen communicated the ſeveral treaties of peace and commerce, between Great-Britain and France, to the houſe of commons, which occaſioned another addreſs of thanks from that houſe.

The treaty of commerce was, in a great meaſure, left to be perfected by the parliament of Great-Britain; it being requiſite to repeal and alter ſeveral laws before it could take effect; and the many debates which aroſe hereupon, was the occaſion of that treaty's never being fully ſettled.

The Scots attempt to diſſolve the union.

During this ſeſſion of parliament, the Scots made an attempt in the houſe of lords to diſſolve the union; and the Engliſh peers ſhew'd ſo much indifference in the matter, that they loſt their point but by four votes.

The 25th of June the Queen ſent the following meſſage to the houſe of commons;

Ann R.

Meſſage for a ſupply for the civil liſt.

"Her Majeſty thinks fit to acquaint her loyal "houſe of commons with the difficulties, which, "in a particular manner, ſhe lies under, by the "debts contracted in her civil government, occa- "ſioned by ſeveral extraordinary expences former- "ly incured; ſo that her Majeſty thinks herſelf "obliged, in juſtice to many creditors, to order "an eſtimate to be laid before this houſe of what "was owing on the civil liſt in 1710.

"Her Majeſty has uſed unexampled parſimony "to remove, if poſſible, this burden from herſelf, "but the granting away, and leſſening ſome part "of her revenue, by parliament, has made that "impracticable; therefore her Majeſty hopes "that this houſe of commons, which on all occa- ſions

Q. Ann, An' 1713.

"sions have shewn themselves so well affected to "her, will not be unwilling to impower her to "raise such a sum of mony, on the civil list-funds, "as may inable her to discharge the debts, and "settle the expence, to be regularly paid for the "future."

Resolution of the commons thereupon.

Upon this message the house resolved, that her Majesty be impower'd, by letters patent, to appropriate a sum, not exceeding 55,000 l. per annum, for any term not exceeding thirty-two years, to be made a fund for security of raising, by way of lottery, the said sum.

The treaty of peace between Great-Britain and France, having been, as I have said above, ratified, the duke of Shrewsbury, lord-chamberlain of her Majesty's household, and her embassador extraordinary in France, made his public entry at Paris the 11th of June, N. S. As did the duke d'Aumont, embassador extraordinary from the most Christian King, the 1st of July, in London.

Addresses concerning the Pretender.

The begining of July, the chevalier de St. George having resided some time in Lorrain, the lords and commons severally address'd her Majesty, that she would use the most pressing instances with the duke of Lorrain, and with all Princes and States in amity with Great-Britain, that they would not receive or suffer the Pretender to her crowns to continue in any of their dominions; which, in answer, she promised should be done.

The 16th of July, her Majesty, having given the royal assent to several bills, made the following speech to both houses:

My lords and gentlemen,

The Queen's speech at the rising of the parliament.

"I come now to put an end to this session, "with great satisfaction, and return you all my "hearty thanks for the good service you have "done the public.

Gentlemen of the house of commons,

"I must particularly thank you for the supplies "you have now given: I will take care to apply "them, as far as they will reach, to satisfy the "services you have voted.

"I hope, at the next meeting, the affair of "commerce will be so well understood, that the "advantageous conditions I have obtained from "France will be made effectual for the benefit of "our trade.

"I cannot part with so good and so loyal a "house of commons, without expressing how sen-"sible I am of the affection, zeal and duty, with "which you have behaved yourselves; and I "think myself therefore obliged to take notice of "those remarkable services you have performed.

"At your meeting, you found a method, with-"out farther charge to my people, to ease them "of the heavy load of more than nine millions, "and the way of doing it may bring great ad-"vantage to the nation.

"In this session you have inabled me to be just "in paying the debts to my servants.

"And as you have furnished supplies for carry-"ing on the war, so you have strengthened my "hands in obtaining a peace.

"Thus you have shewed yourselves the true "representatives of my loyal commons, by the "just regard you have paid to the good of your "country, and my honor: these proceedings will, "I doubt not, preserve the memory of this par-"liament to posterity.

My lords and gentlemen,

"At my coming to the crown, I found a war "prepared for me: God has blessed my arms "with many victories, and, at last, has inabled "me to make them useful by a safe and honorable "peace.

"I heartily thank you for the assistance you "have given me therein, and I promise my-"self, that with your concurrence, it will be "lasting.

Q. Ann, An' 1713.

"To this end I recommend it to you all, to "make my subjects truly sensible what they gain "by the peace; and that you will indeavor to "dissipate those groundless jealousies which have "been so industriously fomented amongst us, that "our unhappy differences may not weaken, and, "in some sort, indanger the advantages I have "obtained for my kingdoms.

"There are some (very few I hope) will never "be satisfied with any government; it is necessary "therefore that you shew your love to your coun-"try, by exerting yourselves, to obviate the ma-"lice of the evil-minded, and to undeceive the "deluded.

"Nothing can establish peace at home; no-"thing can recover the disorders that have hap-"pened during so long a war, but a steady ad-"hering to the constitution in church and state.

"Such as are true to these principles are only "to be relied on; and as they have the best title "to my favor, so you may depend upon my "having no interest nor aim but your advantage, "and the securing of our religion and liberty.

"I hope, for the quiet of these nations, and the "universal good, that I shall, next winter, meet "my parliament, resolved to act upon the same "principles, with the same prudence, and with "such vigor, as may inable me to support the "liberties of Europe abroad, and reduce the spirit "of faction at home.

The parliament prorogued.

And then the lord-chancellor, by her Majesty's command, prorogued the parliament to the 28th of August.

Acts pass'd.

The principal acts which pass'd this session, beside the land and malt taxes, and other acts for raising mony, were: "An act for the better re-"gulating the elections of members to serve in "parliament for that part of Great-Britain call'd "Scotland. 2. An act for the more effectual "preventing and punishing robberies that shall be "commited in houses. 3. An act to inable such "officers and soldiers as have been in her Majesty's "service to exercise trades. 4. An act for raising "the militia for the year 1713. 5. An act for "the better regulating the forces to be continued "in her Majesty's service, and for the payment "of the said forces and of their quarters. 6. An "act for the better incouragement of the making "sail-cloth in Great-Britain, &c."

A new parliament call'd.

The 8th of August a proclamation was issued for dissolving the parliament, on the 17th another for calling a new parliament, and a third, requiring all the peers of Scotland to meet at Holyrood-house in Edinburg, on the 8th of October, to chuse their representatives to sit in the next parliament.

Promotions.

About the same time there were the following promotions at court; viz. the earl of Dartmouth was constituted lord-privy seal; the bishop of Bristol was nominated bishop of London; the right honorable William Bromley, esq; succeeded the earl of Dartmouth as secretary of state; the right honorable the lord Lansdown was made treasurer of her Majesty's household, and sir John Stonehouse comptroler; sir William Wyndham was made chancellor of the Exchequer, and Francis Gwyn, esq; secretary of war; the earl of Portmore was made governor of Gibraltar; the duke of Shrewsbury was constituted lord-lieutenant of Ireland; the earl of Mar to be a third principal secretary of state in Great-Britain, and the earl of Finlater and Seafield lord chancellor of Scotland.

Her Majesty taken ill.

The 24th of December her Majesty was taken ill of an ague, of which she had two fits, but proper remedies being administer'd, she soon appeared abroad again; but towards the latter end of

Q. Ann, An' 1714.

of the insuing month, being then at Windsor, her ague return'd, and the people were under great apprehensions, from some reports which had been spread, that she was dangerously ill. Whereupon her Majesty sent a letter to the lord-mayor of London, dated the 1st of February, contradicting these reports, and intimating that she continued determined to open the parliament, the 16th of that month.

The treaty of peace between Great-Britain and Spain, being likewise ratified, and the ratification brought over to England, an abstract of it may not be unacceptable to the reader.

Abstract of the treaty between Great-Britain and Spain.

" By this treaty, his Catholic Majesty acknowledges the Protestant succession, and declares " and ingages, on the faith and word of a King, " and on the pledge of his and his successors ho- " nor, that the same is, and shall for ever be " approved, and accepted by him, his heirs and " successors; and does promise, that no person, " beside the Queen of Great-Britain and her suc- " cessors, according to the act of succession, shall " ever be acknowledg'd or reputed by him, his " heirs or successors, to be King or Queen of " Great-Britain; nor will he or they, at any " time give aid, succor, favor or council, direct- " ly or indirectly, to any person or persons, who, " on any cause or pretence, shall hereafter indea- " vor to oppose the said succession,

" The said Catholic King does also for himself, " his heirs and successors, yield to the crown " of Great-Britain, the full and intire propriety " of the town, and castle of Gibraltar, together " with the port, fortifications, and forts thereunto " belonging, to be held and injoyed absolutely, " with all manner of right for ever, without any " exceptions or impediments whatsoever; but " without any territorial jurisdiction, and without " any communication by land, with the country " round about, saving the liberty to purchase for " ready mony, in the neighboring territories of " Spain, provisions, and other things neces- " sary for the use of the garison, the inhabitants, " and the ships which ly in the harbor; and her " Majesty on her part, doth promise, that the " free exercise of their religion shall be indulg'd " to the Roman Catholic inhabitants of the afore- " said town; and in case the crown of Great- " Britain should think fit to sell, or alien the said " town of Gibraltar, it is agreed, that the crown " of Spain shall have the refusal thereof.

" The Catholic King doth, in like manner, for " himself, his heirs and successors, yield to the " crown of Great-Britain the whole island of Mi- " norca, and doth transfer thereunto for ever all " right, and the most absolute dominion over the " said island, and in particular over the town, " castle, harbor and fortifications of the bay of " Minorca, commonly called Port-Mahon; to- " gether with the other ports, places and towns " situated in the aforesaid island: and it is like- " wise thereby stipulated, that if the crown of " Great-Britain shall hereafter think fit to alien " the said island, the preference thereof shall be " given to the crown of Spain; and her Majesty " ingages, that all the inhabitants of the said " island, both ecclesiastical and secular, shall in- " joy all their estates and honors, and that the free " use of the Catholic religion shall be permited " them.

" The King of Spain, by this treaty, also " grants to Great-Britain, the benefit of the Af- " fiento, or supplying his Majesty's dominions in " America with negroes, for thirty years, com- " mencing the 1st of May 1713, with the same " conditions on which the French injoyed, or at " any time might, or ought to injoy the same; Q. Ann, An' 1714. " together with a tract or tracts of land, to be " aloted by the said Catholic King, and to be " granted to the English company, commonly " call'd, la Compania de el Assiento, in some " convenient place on the river of Plata; no du- " ties or revenues being payable by the said com- " pany, during the time of the said contract; " and this settlement of the said company, or " those tracts of land, shall be proper and suffi- " cient for planting and sowing, and for feeding " of cattle, for the subsistence of those who are " in the service of the said company, and of their " negroes; and that the said negroes may be there " kept till they are all sold: but it shall be lawful " for the Catholic King to appoint an officer in " the said place of setlement, who may take " care that nothing be done or practised contrary " to his interest; and the Assiento-contract con- " cluded at Madrid the 26th of March 1713, is " hereby confirmed.

" After this follows the article for indemnifying " the Catalans, and securing to them their honors " and estates, together with the privileges of the " inhabitants of both Castiles, whereby they have " the benefit of trading to the Spanish dominions in " America, from which they were before excluded.

" The treaty with the duke of Savoy, con- " cerning the cession of Sicily to his Royal High- " ness, &c. is hereby confirmed; as also the se- " veral renunciations of King Philip to the crown " of France."

The new parliament meets.

The 16th of February, the new parliament met at Westminster; and the lords-commissioners appointed by her Majesty having directed the commons to proceed to the choice of a speaker, they unanimously elected sir Thomas Hanmer, who was approved by the Queen, and, on the 2d of March, her Majesty came in person to the house of lords, and made the following speech to both houses:

The Queen's speech to both houses.

My lords and gentlemen,

" I have much satisfaction in being able, at the " opening of this parliament, to tell you, that the " ratifications of the treaties of peace and of " commerce with Spain, are exchanged; by which " my subjects will have a greater opportunity than " ever, to improve and extend their trade. Many " advantages, formerly injoyed by connivance, and " procured by such methods, as made a distinc- " tion between one British merchant and another, " are now setled by treaty, and an equal rule is " established.

" It has pleased God to bless my indeavors, " to obtain an honorable and advantageous peace " for my own people, and for the greatest part of " my allies: nothing I can do shall be wanting to " render it universal: and I persuade myself, that " with your hearty concurrence, my interposition " may at last prove effectual, to compleat the setle- " ment of Europe. In the mean while, I congra- " tulate with my own subjects, that they are de- " livered from a consuming land-war, and enter'd " on a peace, the good effect whereof nothing " but intestine divisions can obstruct.

" It was the glory of the wisest and greatest of " my predecessors, to hold the balance of Europe, " and to keep it equal, by casting in their weight, as " necessity required. By this conduct they inrich'd " the kingdom, and render'd themselves dread- " ful to their enemies, and useful to their friends; " I have proceeded on the same principles; and I " doubt not but my successors will follow these " examples.

" Our situation points out to us our true interest; " for this country can flourish only by trade, and " will be most formidable by the right applica- " tion of our naval force.

Gentlemen,

Q. Ann, An' 1714.

Gentlemen of the houſe of commons,

" I have ordered ſuch accounts to be prepared " and laid before you, as will ſhew you, at the " concluſion of the war, the true ſtate of your con- " dition; whereby you will be better able to " judge what aids are neceſſary; and I only aſk of " you ſupplies for the current ſervice of the year, " and for the diſcharging of ſuch debts as you " ſhall find, on examination, to be juſt and rea- " ſonable.

My lords and gentlemen,

" The joy which has been generally expreſs'd " on my recovery from my late indiſpoſition, and " on my coming to this city, I eſteem as a return " to that tender affection which I have always had " for my people.

" I wiſh that effectual care had been taken, as I " have often deſired, to ſuppreſs thoſe ſeditious " papers, and factious rumors, by which deſigning " men have been able to ſink credit, and the inno- " cent have ſuffered.

" There are ſome who are arrived to that height " of malice, as to inſinuate that the Proteſtant ſuc- " ceſſion in the houſe of Hanover is in danger, " under my government.

" Thoſe who go about thus to diſtract the minds " of men, with imaginary dangers, can only " mean to diſturb the preſent tranquility, and to " bring real miſchiefs upon us.

" After all I have done to ſecure our religion and " your liberties, and to tranſmit both ſafe to po- " ſterity, I cannot mention theſe proceedings with- " out ſome degree of warmth, and I muſt hope " you will agree with me, that attempts to weaken " my authority, or to render the poſſeſſion of the " crown uneaſy to me, can never be proper means " to ſtrengthen the Proteſtant ſucceſſion.

" I have done, and ſhall continue to do, my " beſt, for the good of all my ſubjects: let it be " your indeavors, as it ſhall be mine, to unite our " differences; not by relaxing from the ſtricteſt ad- " herence to our conſtitution, in church and ſtate, " but by obſerving the laws yourſelves, and in- " forcing a due obedience to them in others.

" A long war has not only impoveriſhed the " public (however ſome particular men may have " been gainers by it) but has alſo greatly affected " the government itſelf.

" Let it be your care, ſo to improve the preſent " opportunity, as to lay the foundation of re- " covering us from thoſe diſorders.

" I had the concurrence of the laſt parliament, " in making the peace: let it be the honor of this, " to aſſiſt me in obtaining ſuch fruits from it, as " may not only derive bleſſings on the preſent age, " but even down to the lateſt poſterity."

Addreſſes of both houſes.

The lords attended her Majeſty the next day, with an addreſs of " thanks for her ſpeech, con- " gratulating her recovery, aſſuring her of their " utmoſt gratitude; that they were by her Ma- " jeſty's great wiſdom and goodneſs, at laſt de- " liver'd from a conſuming land-war, and that " they would uſe their utmoſt indeavors, to diſcou- " rage and diſcountenance all attempts to weaken " her Majeſty's authority, or to render the poſſeſ- " ſion of the crown uneaſy to her."

That of the commons with which they attended her Majeſty the 5th, ran much upon the ſame topics.

The duke of Argyle, and the earl of Stairs laid aſide.

The begining of April, the duke of Argyle was removed from all his places; and the earl of Stairs was ordered to ſell his regiment, as was ma- jor-general Davenport his poſt of lieutenant of the firſt troop of her Majeſty's life-guard.

About the ſame time, baron Schutz, the Hano- verian miniſter, demanded of the lord-chancellor a writ for calling the Electoral Prince of Hanover to the houſe of lords: this her Majeſty thought fit to comply with; but ſo far reſented it, that baron Schutz was forbid the court, upon which he left the kingdom; and ſeveral other attempts having been made, to bring over the Electoral Prince of Hanover, during the Queen's life, her Majeſty thought fit, the 19th of May, to explain herſelf on that head, in two letters, one to the Princeſs Sophia, and the other to the Electoral Prince, which were accompanied by a third, from the earl of Oxford to the Elector.

Q. Ann' An' 1714.

A writ demanded to call the Electoral Prince of Hanover to the houſe of peers.

Addreſſes of both houſes approving the peace.

The 24th of April, the parliament, after many and long debates about the ſtate of the nation, which had laſted in both houſes, near three weeks, at- tended her Majeſty with an addreſs, in which they beg'd leave to expreſs the juſt ſenſe they had of her Majeſty's goodneſs to her people, in " de- " livering them, by a ſafe, honorable and advan- " tageous peace with France and Spain, from the " heavy burden of a conſuming land-war, un- " equally carried on, and become at laſt imprac- " ticable."

The miniſters having gained this point, thought themſelves now ſecured from any farther inquiries concerning the peace.

I might now proceed to ſhew what objections have been laid againſt theſe treaties, and, on the contrary, what has been ſaid in the defenſe of them, but as that has been ſo amply done by ſeveral hiſto- rians, who have gone before me, I ſhall, inſtead thereof, only obſerve; that, notwithſtanding they had the ſanction of being approv'd by both houſes of parliament, in this addreſs to the Queen, which the miniſterial party call'd the united voice of the people, an almoſt general diſguſt and murmuring againſt them appear'd throughout the whole nation.

Death of the Princeſs Sophia.

The 29th of June, baron Bothmar, envoy-ex- traordinary of the Elector of Hanover, arrived at London, and having a private audience of her Ma- jeſty, notified the death of the Princeſs Sophia; who being walking in the gardens of Herrenhau- ſen, near Hanover, the 8th of June, being the late King's birth-day, in the evening, was taken with an apoplectic fit, and died in the arms of the Elec- toral Princeſs (now our moſt gracious Queen Ca- roline) and the counteſs of Pickenburg, before any one could come to her aſſiſtance.

This excellent Princeſs, whom I have frequently had the honor of ſeing, with great ſatisfaction, and who was, to the very day of her death, I think, the fineſt woman I ever ſaw of her age, was the fourth and youngeſt daughter of Frederic, the un- fortunate King of Bohemia, and Elizabeth, his Queen, only daughter of King James I; ſhe was born at the Hague, the 3d of October, 1630, and conſequently liv'd to the age of 84.

The ninth of July, the Queen prorogued the parliament, and, on that occaſion, made her laſt ſpeech to both houſes, in the following remarkable words:

The Queen's laſt ſpeech to the parlia- ment.

My lords and gentlemen,

" The progreſs which has been made in public " buſineſs, and the ſeaſon of the year, render it " both convenient and neceſſary, that I ſhould put " an end to this ſeſſion.

Gentlemen of the houſe of commons,

" I return you hearty thanks for all your good " ſervices to me, and to your country, and parti- " cularly for the ſupplies you have given me, as " well to defray the expences of the current year, " as towards the diſcharge of the national debts.

" In our preſent circumſtances, it could not be " expected that a full proviſion ſhould be made on " both theſe heads.

" What you have granted, ſhall be laid out " with the beſt huſbandry, and to the greateſt ad- " vantage.

My

Q. ANN, A'N' 1714.

My lords and gentlemen,

" I hope early in the winter, to meet you again, " and to find you in ſuch a temper, as is neceſſary " for the real improvement of our commerce, and " of all the other advantages of peace.

" My chief concern is, to preſerve to you, " and to your poſterity, our holy religion, and " the liberty of my ſubjects, and to ſecure the pre- " ſent and future tranquility of my kingdoms: " but I muſt tell you plainly, that theſe deſirable " ends can never be attain'd; unleſs you bring the " ſame diſpoſitions on your parts, unleſs all ground- " leſs jealouſies, which create and foment divi- " ſions amongſt you, be laid aſide; and unleſs you " ſhew the ſame regard for my juſt prerogative, " and for the honor of my government, as I have " always expreſs'd for the rights of my people.

Acts paſs'd.

The principal acts which paſs'd this ſeſſion, were, " 1. The land-tax act of two ſhillings in the " pound. 2. The malt-act as uſual. 3. An act " for the better regulating the forces to be " continued in her Majeſty's ſervice, and for the " better payment of their quarters. 4. An act " to prevent the growth of ſchiſm, and for the ſe- " curity of the churches of England and Ireland. " 5. An act to prevent the liſting her Majeſty's " ſubjects to ſerve as ſoldiers, without her Majeſty's " licenſe. 6. An act for providing a public re- " ward for ſuch perſons as ſhould diſcover the lon- " gitude at ſea. 7. An act to reduce the rate of " intereſt, without prejudice to parliamentary ſe- " curities. 8. An act for the preſervation of " wrecks. 9. An act for reducing the laws re- " lating to rogues, vagabonds, ſturdy beggars and " vagrants, into one act of parliament, &c."

Ill ſucceſs of of the Germans.

Let us now look back, and obſerve what a figure the Germans made, in their oppoſition to the whole power of France, which was anſwerable to the expectations every one muſt neceſſarily have, who had an eye to their former conduct, during this war: they were ſoon obliged to retire into their fortified towns, and behind their lines, while the marſhal de Villars reduced one place after another, and made them begin to think of peace in earneſt. A treaty was accordingly ſet on foot this winter, which was managed ſolely by the two generals, Prince Eugene of Savoy, and the marſhal de Villars, at the caſtle of Alt-Raſtadt, and was brought to a concluſion and ſign'd the 16th of March.

Peace between the Emperor and France.

By this treaty, the Emperor was obliged to quit his pretenſions to Landau, which he might have kept, had he ſign'd the peace with the reſt of the allies. The Rhine was agreed to be the barrier, between the Empire and France, and the other articles were conformable to the peace of Ryſwick.

Behavior of the Catalans.

It will be neceſſary now to ſay a word or two with reſpect to the Catalans, and their behavior, on the Emperor's evacuating that country. On the 22d of June, of the foregoing year, every thing was adjuſted for that end, and it was provided, that all perſons who deſired to retire into Italy ſhould be tranſported thither. The ſtates of Catalonia having been ſummoned on this occaſion, cardinal de Sala, biſhop of Barcelona, exhorted them to ſubmit to King Philip, and aſſured them that the Queen of Great-Britain had obtained a general pardon for them, and that they would injoy equal privileges, with the reſt of the ſubjects of Spain: he was back'd by ſeveral other members of that aſſembly; but the majority choſe rather to hazard every thing. Accordingly, they form'd an army, named their generals, and by the connivance of count Stahremberg, ſeized the principal poſts about Barcelona, and gariſon'd fort Montjuy. The count, with the Imperial troops, ſoon after imbark'd, and were convoyed by ſir John Jennings to Genoa, where they arrived about the middle of July.

Upon their departure, the Catalans proclaimed war againſt France and the duke d'Anjou, and refuſed to accept the amneſty he offered them, declaring they would rather die free, than live ſlaves to him. In the mean time, the whole principality of Catalonia was laid waſte, and the duke de Popoli, not having troops enough to lay ſiege to Barcelona, block'd it up the whole winter. The next ſpring, the Catalans received letters from his Imperial Majeſty, that he had been obliged to conclude a peace with France, but that he had preſerved his rights, titles and pretenſions to the crown of Spain, and gave them aſſurance that he would aſſiſt them with all his might, in order to procure them the advantages they deſerved for their fidelity, their conſtancy, and glorious actions. Upon this, they were ſo elate, that tho' King Philip again offered them the confirmation of their ancient privileges, they would hear of no terms, but choſe rather to ſee the beſt part of the city, with ſeveral churches and monaſteries, reduced to a heap of aſhes; and held out till the 11th of September, when they withſtood a general ſtorm, till four the next morning, and being at length compel'd to retire into the new city, notwithſtanding their deſperate condition, they were allow'd to capitulate, and ſurrendered upon terms.

Q. ANN, AN' 1714.

The miniſtry of Great-Britain divided.

During theſe tranſactions, there was a miſunderſtanding among the Britiſh miniſters, which gave occaſion to various conjectures, tho' many of them perhaps groundleſs. All that can be ſaid, with any certainty is, that the Queen's life being thought very precarious, ſome courtiers were diſcovered making their applications privately to the ſucceſſor, and to the duke of Marlborough; among whom, the late earl of Oxford was ſaid to be one, which drew on him the reſentment not only of his brethren, but even of the Queen herſelf; inſomuch that ſhe diſmiſs'd him, the 27th of July, from his poſt of lord-treaſurer.

As the ſtaff was taken from the earl of Oxford, with ſome mortifying circumſtances, he could not forbear ſhewing his reſentment to the authors of it, which he is ſaid to have done in the following, or the like words: " I have been wrong'd and " abuſed, by lies and miſrepreſentations; but I " ſhall be reveng'd, and leave ſome people as low " as I found them."

The removal of the treaſurer was ſo ſudden, and occaſioned ſo much confuſion, that there was great difficulty to determine how to ſupply his place, or to fill up ſuch other vacancies as naturally attended his diſgrace.

The 29th of July, the cabinet-council was to have ſat on this affair: but their meeting was put off to the next day, on account of the Queen's illneſs, which probably if not occaſion'd, was at leaſt increas'd, by theſe uneaſineſſes: and ſhe is ſaid to have intimated to one of her phyſicians: " That ſhe ſhould not outlive it."

The diſpute between the earl of Oxford and his antagoniſts, to which her Majeſty was an earwitneſs, and the conſultation that was held thereupon, and laſted till near two in the morning, certainly occaſion'd ſo violent an agitation in the Queen's ſpirits, as could not but add to her indiſpoſition: which increas'd ſo much upon her, that, the next morning, ſhe was believ'd to be in great danger.

The Queen's laſt ſickneſs.

The dukes of Sommerſet and Argyle having advice of the deſperate condition of the Queen's life, their graces repair'd with ſpeed to Kenſington, and, without being ſummon'd, went into the council-chamber, where the lord-chancellor, the dukes of Shrewſbury and Ormond, the three ſecretaries of ſtate, the biſhop of London, and ſome others, were aſſembled in a commitee. The duke of Shrewſbury return'd their graces thanks for their readineſs to give the council their aſſiſtance on ſo critical an occaſion. One of the council then repreſented how neceſſary it was, in caſe of the Queen's demiſe, that the place of lord-treaſurer ſhould be fill'd: the whole board aſſenting to this, the duke of Shrewſbury was propoſed, and unanimouſly approved of, as the moſt proper perſon for ſo high a truſt: and the phyſicians having aſſured the council that the Queen was then ſenſible, and might be ſpoke to, the lord chancellor, the duke of Shrewſbury, and ſome others, were appointed to attend her Majeſty, and acquaint her with the unanimous opinion of the council: upon which her Majeſty ſaid, "they could not recommend a "perſon ſhe liked better than the duke of Shrewſ-"bury," and giving him the treaſurer's ſtaff, bid him "uſe it for the good of the people." The duke would thereupon have return'd her Majeſty the lord chamberlain's ſtaff, but it was her deſire he ſhould keep both: ſo that his grace was, at the ſame time, poſſeſs'd of three of the higheſt places of truſt, honor and profit, in the whole kingdom, being lord-treaſurer, lord-chamberlain, and lord-lieutenant of Ireland.

Q. Ann, An' 1714.

The duke of Shrewſbury made lord treaſurer.

The duke of Shrewſbury's advancement made an immediate and great change in the face of affairs; daſh'd the tow'ring ambition of the lord Bolingbroke, and at the ſame time it baffled whatever undigeſted ſchemes he may have had to the prejudice of the Proteſtant ſucceſſion gave a new life and vigor to all who were well-affected to the illuſtrious houſe of Hanover. The coming of the dukes of Sommerſet and Argyle ſo opportunely into the council, had a farther good effect: for, upon their motion, it was reſolved, that all privy-counſellors who were then in and about London, without diſtinction, ſhould be deſired to attend, which the lord Sommers, and ſome other ſtaunch friends of the houſe of Hanover, did the ſame day.

Great prudence of ſome privy-counſellors.

About three in the afternoon, the Queen relapſed into a kind of lethargic or apoplectic fit, and ſoon after the phyſicians acquainted the council, that her Majeſty's life was in extream danger. The council hereupon provided, with wonderful prudence and diſpatch, for the ſecurity of the cities of London and Weſtminſter, of the maritime towns, and of Scotland and Ireland. Orders were immediately diſpatch'd to four regiments of horſe and dragoons, which were quarter'd in remote countries, to march up to the villages near London, to keep the Jacobites and diſaffected in awe, and to ſeven of the ten battalions of Britiſh forces, that were then in Flanders, to imbark at Oſtend, and ſail for England with all imaginable expedition. The lords of the Admiralty, in the mean time, laid an embargo on all ſhiping, and gave orders for fiting out ſuch men of war as could be ſooneſt got ready: ſo that, by theſe excellent orders, the public tranquility remain'd undiſturbed, and no ſign of conſternation appear'd, unleſs in the faces of thoſe who were avowed friends of the Pretender, and who, by the prudence and foreſight of theſe truly noble patriots, found themſelves intirely diſappointed in the hopes the great approaching change might otherwiſe have buoy'd them up with.

The Queen continued all night in a kind of lethargic doſing (1), which increas'd to ſuch a degree, about ten the next morning, that all her phyſicians deſpair'd of her life. The privy-council ſent hereupon orders to the heralds at arms, and a troop of the life-guards, to be ready to mount, in order to proclaim the Elector of Brunſwick, immediately upon the Queen's demiſe. Their lordſhips, at the ſame time, cauſed a letter to be written to his Electoral Highneſs, to acquaint him "with the extream danger the Queen's life was "in, with the meaſures they had taken to ſecure "the crown to him, and to deſire his Electoral "Highneſs to repair with all convenient ſpeed to "Holland, where a Britiſh ſquadron, which was "fiting out with all expedition, would attend "him, and bring him over, in caſe it pleaſed "God to take the Queen to his mercy." This letter was ſent expreſs by James Craggs, eſq; jun. and by him orders were diſpatch'd to the earl of Strafford, to urge the States-general to be in a readineſs to perform the guaranty of the Proteſtant ſucceſſion, if need ſhould require.

Q. Ann, An' 1714.

All this being done, the indefatigable lords of the privy-council reſumed the conſideration of the ſtate of the ſea-ports, and order'd a ſtrong re-inforcement to be forthwith ſent down to Portſmouth. At the ſame time, rightly judging, that if the partiſans of the Pretender made any diſturbance in Great-Britain, it would be in Scotland, their lordſhips order'd major-general Whetham thither, to aſſiſt major-general Wightman, and appointed the brave earl of Berkley to command the fleet.

Between twelve and one the Queen gave ſome ſigns of life, and took ſome ſpoonfuls of broth; and then continued in a dozing heavy condition till about ſix in the evening. Her pulſe then beat ſomewhat higher, which gave ſome hopes; but it proved but a lightning before death: for the remedies the phyſicians applied, and particularly the bliſters, not having the wiſh'd-for effect, her Majeſty expir'd the next morning, being the 1ſt of Auguſt, a little after ſeven o'clock, in the fiftieth year of her age, and thirteenth of her reign (2).

Death of Queen Ann.

Thus died the great and excellent Princeſs, Ann Stuart, Queen of Great-Britain, who poſſeſs'd as many virtues as ever adorn'd a private life, and who, in her public capacity, tho' ſhe may have been miſled into ſome prejudices and miſtakes in the latter part of her reign, may reaſonably be ſuppos'd to have had an upright intention for the good and happineſs of her people, and therefore may juſtly be pronounced to have been a Great and Excellent Princess: but to be more particular as to her perſon and character.

Her general character.

This excellent Queen was of a moderate tallneſs, her ſhape and complexion, when in the bloom of youth, admirable; tho' ſhe loſt ſomething of the former after child-bearing, and the latter, as ſhe advanc'd in years, was ſomewhat too ſanguine and ruddy. She had no blemiſh in her face, but a certain contraction in her upper-eye-lids, which gave a cloudy air to her countenance. Her preſence was however, at all times, exceeding graceful: but when ſhe ſpoke, and addreſs'd herſelf to her people, on any public occaſion, ſhe diſplay'd ſuch a mixture of Majeſty, and ſweetneſs of countenance, as

Her perſon.

(1) If we will believe the continuator of Rapin in French; "She paſs'd this night in violent agitations of mind, and con-"tinual tears, crying out frequently; O my dear brother, how I lament thy fate!" He ſeems, however, aſham'd of this ridiculous aſſertion (probably a child of his own brains) and throws it off from himſelf, upon the whole body of a party. Book XXVII. p. 627.

(2) I cannot but with abhorrence take notice of a vile and malicious inſinuation or two of the French continuator of Rapin, on this occaſion: "Thus (ſays he) died Ann Stuart, &c. not without ſome ſuſpicion, which did little honor to the party of her "ſucceſſor;——Her tender affection to her royal conſort, probably drew this Princeſs into a fault, which caſt ſome blemiſh up-"on her excellent qualities. Her compliance with his inclinations gave her a liking to ſtrong waters, to which ſhe accuſtomed "herſelf inſenſibly.——It would be in vain to ſeek for any other cauſe of her death; this was the poiſon which occaſion'd her "premature end." Book XXVII. p. 627, 628.

well

Q. Ann, An' 1714.

well as voice, that ſhe commanded the attention of the audience. Her eyes were a light grey, her hair a dark brown, her features ſtrong, but juſt and regular, and in her whole perſon, there appear'd an exact ſymmetry and proportion, till towards the latter end of her life, when ſhe grew ſomething corpulent, and was afflicted with the gout.

And particular character.

She had an excellent ear, which gave her a great reliſh for muſic; ſhe had alſo a good taſte of poetry, painting, and all the liberal arts. Good nature was predominant in her, even to a fault: for it was a compound of benevolence, generoſity, indolence and timidity: and this compound, as it was the ſource of many of her virtues, ſo it was the cauſe of all her uneaſineſſes: and particularly of her giving up her heart, and truſting her ſecrets, without any reſerve, to her favorites, which ſhe had reaſon more than once to repent.

She was fam'd for her oeconomy, and the prudent management of her revenue, as well before as after ſhe came to the crown: before ſhe came to it, ſhe was ſerved by all her officers and dependants with the greateſt alacrity and chearfulneſs, under a ſenſe of being uſed with all the goodneſs and tenderneſs imaginable: and her change of condition afterwards made no alteration, unleſs to increaſe that goodneſs and tenderneſs, in proportion as ſhe had more frequent and greater opportunities of exerciſing it.

She was bred in a court too much abounding in luxury and libertiniſm, and yet never had the leaſt imputation on her virtue: and tho', in her father's palace, ſhe was converſant with thoſe of another communion, and their prieſts could not want frequent opportunities of recommending their religion to her; yet ſhe adhered ſteadily to the religion ſhe was educated in. When her father reſided in Flanders, filial duty prompted her to follow him; and even there, where the Romiſh religion was eſtabliſh'd, ſhe remained firm to her principles, and had the ſervice of the church of England perform'd by her own chaplains, while her father, and the reſt of the family, went conſtantly to maſs.

She was the moſt illuſtrious inſtance of conjugal affection that has appeared in any age. No domeſtic jars or jealouſies ever approach'd the apartments of this Princeſs. The inviolable faith, and mutual love, between her and her royal conſort, were the admiration of the world; and her well-temper'd government of, and affection towards her children, commanded at once their reverence and love.

Her regular and conſtant devotion and attendance at divine ſervice, and diſcountenancing vice and infidelity, are ſufficient teſtimonies of her concern for religion, and if the piety of Princeſſes is to be meaſured by the many religious foundations, in their reſpective reigns, none ever excell'd hers, who not only paſs'd, but recommended an act for the building fifty new churches at once, in and about the cities of London and Weſtminſter; add to this the incouragement ſhe gave to the erecting ſuch numbers of charity-ſchools, and thereby reſcuing the common people from atheiſm and ignorance; her countenancing the univerſities, thoſe fountains of learning, and her unparallel'd bounty to her people in general, in annually applying 100,000 l. of her own revenue, and her ſhare of the prizes, to the ſervice of the war; and her generous bounty to the clergy, in aſſigning the firſt fruits and tenths for their ſupport. If we reflect on theſe illuſtrious inſtances of her piety, regard for religion and unbounded liberality, where ſhall we find a Princeſs equal to her in hiſtory?

She has indeed been charged with an unſteadineſs of mind, ſaid to be apparent in the change of her miniſtry; tho' of this we find much frequenter inſtances, in the reigns of ſome of her predeceſſors: this, at leaſt may be ſaid in her juſtification, and is manifeſt to all the world, that whatever counſels ſhe ſeem'd to be inclin'd to, ſhe never alter'd her principles. I believe her enemies muſt do her that juſtice to acknowledge, that ſhe was ever a faſt friend to the church of England; and that ſhe had, at the ſame time, a moſt tender compaſſion for all her ſubjects, of whatever perſuaſion. Her aims were always for the advancement of religion, and the happineſs of her people: and if ſhe was ſometimes deceived, in the means of attaining thoſe ends, by the falſe repreſentations of crafty ſtatesmen and treacherous friends (for this is the turn, which both parties give to her conduct at different times) let us lament her falling into ſuch hands, but never reflect upon her memory, when we are well aſſured her heart was always with us. If ſhe ever entered into any meaſures, to the diſadvantage of her people, it was (as lord Clarendon ſays of King Charles I) when they were ſo diſguis'd, that ſhe believed them to be juſt.

Q. Ann, An' 1714.

She never exerted her prerogative to the prejudice of her ſubjects, or ſeized any man's eſtate under a color of law, to gratify her creatures with. And as ſhe knew herſelf intirely poſſeſs'd of the affections of her people, ſhe often rejoiced them with her royal preſence: on which occaſions, whatever part of her dominions ſhe was pleaſed to viſit, ſhe never fail'd to meet the loud acclamations, and hearty congratulations of her ſubjects. She was conſcious, that ſhe always made the intereſt of the people her own, and therefore look'd upon their affections to be her ſtrongeſt guard.

She maintained the war, which ſhe found herſelf obliged to enter into at her acceſſion to the throne, with great ſtedfaſtneſs and reſolution, till ſhe was at leaſt perſuaded to believe, not only her own, but the reſt of the kingdoms of Europe were ſecured, and then ſhe as paſſionately labour'd to obtain a general peace, which ſhe was made to think advantageous to herſelf and her allies.

The worſt that could be ſaid of this great Queen, even by thoſe who moſt exclaim againſt her conduct, during the laſt four years of her reign; is, "that "ſhe had doubtleſs many excellent virtues, mix'd "with very few foibles, and theſe owing to her "eaſineſs of temper, which gave her too much up "to thoſe, into whoſe hands ſhe put herſelf. When "they happen'd to be good, as in the period of "her war with France, ſhe was as much beloved, "and even adored, for her piety and conſtancy, "her affection and zeal for the common cauſe, her "regard to her allies, her love and her tenderneſs "to her ſubjects, as ever Prince was. After ſhe "was, by ſeveral indirect ſteps, led into the Utrecht "peace, and reduced to the neceſſity of doing "whatever her new miniſters would have her, to "ſupport that peace, and that againſt the ſenſe of "all nations not in league with the French, ſhe "ſtill had the juſtice done her, that no body im"puted the miſgovernment that was complained "of, to her Majeſty, whoſe will every body be"lieved to be good, but to her miniſters." Her intentions were, as ſhe declared them to be, always for the good and happineſs of her people, tho' ſhe may, as I have ſaid above, have been miſguided, and led into ſome prejudices and miſtakes.

To ſum up her character in a few words: ſhe was a moſt affectionate wife, a fond and tender mother; an eaſy and indulgent miſtreſs, and a moſt gracious ſoverein. She retain'd, to the laſt, the principles of true religion, which he had early imbibed; being always devout without affectation, and charitable without oſtentation: and we may ſay of her, what can hardly be ſaid of any of her predeceſſors, ſhe she was admired and adored by both parties, not only when in their turns, she favor'd their wishes, but even when they most blamed her conduct.

Q. Ann, An' 1714.

Her marriage and issue.

This Princess was married to his Royal Highness, Prince George, brother to the then King of Denmark, on the 28th of July 1683, by whom she had, 1. A daughter still-born, the 12th of May 1684. 2. Lady Mary, a second daughter, born the 2d of June 1685, and died in February 1690. 3. Lady Ann Sophia, born the 12th of May 1686, and died the February following. 4. William duke of Glocester, born the 24th of July 1689, and lived to be eleven years of age. 5. Lady Mary, born in October 1690, and lived only long enough to be baptiz'd; and, 6. George, another son, who also died soon after he was born.

Her funeral.

What remains is, that we do the last office to this great Queen, and attend her funeral.

On the 19th of August, the lords-justices having received orders from the late King George, that she should be inter'd in such manner as was consistent with a private funeral, the lord-marshal issued an order for the lords, peeresses, and lords sons, the privy-counsellors and the judges, to meet in the house of peers, the 24th of August, at six in the evening, the maids of honor, and the bed-chamber-women in the robing-room, adjoining to the lobby, next the painted chamber, and all others, whose attendace was required, in the painted chamber, in order to be marshal'd by the officers of arms.

Accordingly, on the 24th of August, the lords, the peeresses, the lords sons, privy-counsellors, judges and others, who were to attend this solemnity, met about seven in the evening, in the house of peers, the painted chamber, and other rooms adjoining; where being call'd out in order, by the officers of arms, they proceeded about ten o'clock, thro' the Prince's chamber, into the Palace-yard, and thence unto the south-east door of the abby, one of the great guns at the Tower firing every minute, until her Majesty was inter'd.

Q. Ann, An' 1714.

The royal corps was borne under a canopy of purple-velvet, preceded by a great number of her late Majesty's servants, the judges, privy-counsellors, lords spiritual and temporal, and the great officers. The pall was supported by six dukes, her grace the duchess of Ormond (in the absense of the duchess of Sommerset, who was indispos'd) was chief mourner, supported by the dukes of Sommerset and Richmond, in long cloaks, wearing their collars of the order; her train borne by two duchesses, assisted by the King's vice-chamberlain, and followed by two other duchesses, at the head of fourteen countesses, as assistants, all in long veils of black crape; and after them, the ladies of the bed-chamber, and the maids of honor, in like veils, then the bed-chamber-women, and the gentlemen pensioners closed the procession.

At the entrance into the church, the dean, prebends and choir, received the royal body with an anthem, and marching before Norroy King of arms, who carried the crown and a cushion, they proceeded singing into King Henry VII's chapel, where being arrived, the body was deposited on tressels, while the service of the church was performed by the bishop of Rochester, dean of Westminster; and afterwards inter'd in the same vault, with their late Majesties King Charles II, King William and Queen Mary, and his Royal Highness, Prince George of Denmark.

BRITISH 20 AU 75 MUSEUM

FINIS.

A MAP OF THE KING OF GREAT EUROPE, AFRICA, AM

The French by the Treaty of Utrecht are allowed to catch Fish, and to dry them on land, in that part only, and no other of Newfound land, as extends — from Cape Bonavista to y^e^ Northern point of the Island; and from thence down on the Western side to Point Riche.

Polar Circle

HUDSONS BAY

NEW BRITAIN

ISLAND

Forbisher's Straits

Cape Farewell

Fort Nelson

James's Bay

Albany R.

Fort Louis

R. Rupert

NORTH AMERICA

LOUISIANA

Straits of Bell I.

Cape de Grat

Quebec

R. St. Lawrence

THE GREAT FISHING BANK of NEW-FOUND LAND

PENNSILVANIA

MARYLAND

NEW ENGLAND

NOVA SCOTIA

NEW FOUNDLAND

VIRGINIA

NORTH CAROLINA

SOUTH CAROLINA

GEORGIA

NEW YORK

NEW JERSEY

Long I.

C. Cod

Sable I.

Canseau

Placentia

Mississipi R.

C. Charles

Chesapeak B.

Hatteras

C. Look out

Cape Fear

C. Carteret

Charles Town

St. Helena Sound

Savanah R.

Matanabe R.

St. Augustine

C. Florida

G. of MEXICO

Florida

Bahama

The Southward Boundary of Carolina by y^e^ last Charter.

Bermudas or Summer Islands

THE WEST

OR

ATLANTICK

Tropick of Cancer

Lucayos

BAHAMA I.S

Providence

Long I.

Cat I.

Hoguana I.

CUBA I.

St. Iago

JAMAICA I.

Port Royal

St. Iago

HISPANIOLA

Porto Rico

Anguilla

St. Christophers

Barbuda

Nevis

Antego

Monserat

NORTH SEA

C. Con

CARIBEE ISLANDS

Dominica

St. Lucia

St. Vincent

Barbados

TERRA FIRMA

Trinidad I.

Oronoque R.

SOUTH AMERICA

Surinam

310

320

330

340

The Equinoctial Line.

The Island of St. Helena lyt: in Lat: 15 South in the Ethiopick Ocean belongs to G. Britain, where a Governor & other Officers in y^e^ service of y^e^ English East India Company reside, in order chiefly, to supply their Homeward bound Ships w^th^ Fresh water & Provisions.

T BRITAIN'S DOMINIONS IN ND AMERICA.

Explanation.

The Countries colour'd Yellow are now possessed by the King of Great Britain.

Those colour'd Green did anciently belong to the Crown of England.

Small Islands, Cities, Towns Settlements Factories &c belonging to Great Britain, are distinguished by a fine black stroke drawn under their respective Names; and such as formerly belong'd to England by a fine peck'd Line under them in like manner.

The Dutchies of Bremen and Verden were subject to the Crown of Sweden till Conquer'd by the Danes 1712, and made over by them in 1715 to his late Majesty King George 1st as Elector of Hannover; to whom they were confirm'd by Treaty with Sweden in 1720.

Factories and Settlements belonging to the English in Asia.

Gamberoon in Persia. Moco in Arabia.

The 14 following are in India viz.t

Baroch, Swalley-hoole, Surat, Bombay, Dabul, Carwar, Tellechery, Anjengo, Fort St. Davids — Conymere, Fort St. George, Masulapatan, Vizagapatan, and Ballasore. —— The 4 following are in Bengal, viz.t

Fort William, Hugly, Dacca, and Malda.

The 7 following are in the Island of Sumatra.

Mocho, Bantal, Ippo, Cattoun, Bencoolen, Marlborough Fort and Sillebar.

Jan: Bowen Sculp.t

BRITISH
20 AM 78
MUSEUM

A GENERAL

INDEX

TO

Rapin's Hiſtory of England.

N. B. Emp. ſtands for Emperor. K. for King. Q. for Queen. El. for Elector. d. for duke. e. for earl. marq. for marquis, and viſc. for viſcount. i, ſignifies Vol. I. ii, Vol. II. and iii, Vol. III.

A

ABBIES, ſee monaſteries.
ABBY-LANDS reſtored by Q. MARY. ii, 241. annexed to the crown, 254.
ABBOTS, of their election, i, 172.
ABBOT [George] made archbiſhop of Canterbury, ii. 414. inſtructs Villiers how to behave, 425. adviſes the El. Palatine to accept the crown of Bohemia, 439. deemed a Puritan, 414, 451. kills a man accidentally, and retires from court, 451. letter to K. JAMES againſt toleration of Popery, 470. ſuſpended for refuſing to ſign Sibthorp's and Manwaring's ſermons, 518. character of Laud, 543. dies, 559.
ABDICATION of K. James II. debates concerning it in the convention, iii, 297—308, 343.
ABHORRERS, what, iii, 195. expelled the houſe of commons, 197.
ABUSES in the ſoldiery inquired into, iii. 377. in Ireland examined into, 428.
ACRE [town of] beſieged by the Chriſtians, i, 286. deſcribed, ib. n.
ACTS [public] to be in Engliſh only, i, 490. See Parliament.
ACT of pardon, indemnity, and oblivion, iii. 355. for the ſecurity of K. WILLIAM's perſon and government, 476. for preventing the inconveniencies that might ariſe from the privileges of parliament, acceptable to the people, 530.
ADELSTAN, baſtard ſon of Ethelwolph, made K. of Kent, i. 102.
ADDESSERS, what, iii. 195.
ADDRESSES of the Quakers, Independents, &c. to K. JAMES II. iii. 237, 259, 261.
ADDRESSES [remarkable] of Carliſle, iii. 337. [loyal] of both houſes of parliament, 352. in favor of the church of England, 357. of the officers of the fleet to Q. MARY, 390. of the ſame, on another occaſion, 418. of condolance on the death of Q. MARY, 442. concerning the exorbitant price of coals, 456. congratulatory on the peace of Ryſwick, 496. againſt impiety, immorality and prophaneneſs, 498. againſt Papiſts, 508. [national] from Scotland preſented, 518. [loyal] on the Pretender's being proclaim'd in France, 534. of condolance and congratulation on the death of K. WILLIAM, 542. of both houſes of parliament, that the Dutch may break off all correſpondence with France, 576. on account of a violent ſtorm, 598. of the houſe of lords concerning the navy, 603. [congratulatory] on account of the ſucceſs at Schellenberg and Hockſtadt, 625. on the battle of Ramellies, 663. of both houſes of parliament on the ratification of the union, 670. long one of the lords, about the miſmanagements of the navy, 683. the concluſion of it, n. 1. ib. of both houſes of parliament to her Majeſty to marry again, 696. for the demoliſhing of Dunkirk, 697. of the houſe of commons not anſwered, ib. congratulatory on account of the victory at Malplacquet, 706. of the commons for inquiring into the ſtate of affairs in Spain and Portugal, 720. congratulatory on the peace of Utrecht, 741. concerning the Pretender, 742. of both houſes of parliament approving the peace of Utrecht, 744.
ADELARD, K. of Weſſex, i. 71.
ADELARD, archbiſhop of Canterbury, i. 82.
ADELWALCH, K. of Suſſex, i. 68.
ADELFRID, K. of Northumberland, demoliſhes the convent of Bangor, and maſſacres the monks, i. 52.
ADELWALT, K. of Deira, i. 56.
ADELWALT, K. of Eſtanglia, i. 64.
ADJOURNMENT, difference between that and a prorogation, iii. 110.
ADMIRAL [French] neglects advantages at Bantry-bay fight, iii. n. 2. 364.
ADRIAN, the Emp. paſſes into Britain, and erects a rampart croſs the country, i. 14.
ADRIAN IV, Pope, [alias Nicholas Breakſpear, an Engliſhman] dies, i. 262. a a ſchiſm follows, ib. and n. 2. letter to K. Henry, ii. 271. See Pope.
AETH beſieg'd and taken, iii. 654. a deſcription of the place, n. 2. ib.
AFRICAN company regulated by parliament, iii. 509.
AGDE taken by ſir John Norris, but abandon'd again, iii. 714.
AGHRIM [battle of] iii. 404.
AGILBERT, biſhop of Weſſex, i. 89.
AGITATORS, or adjutators [council of] firſt ſet up, ii. 877.
AGRICOLA [Julius] a Roman governor in Britain, i. 11. his ſeven campains, ibid. 12. beats Galgacus, the Britiſh general, 13. and makes the Britons conform to the Romiſh cuſtoms, ibid. Domitian recalls him, and cauſes him to be poiſon'd, ibid.
AGRICOLA [Calphurnius] another Roman governor, i. 14.
AIDAN, K. of Scots, aſſiſts the Britons, i. 44. is defeated, and retires, 45.
AIDAN, biſhop of the Northumbrians, i. 84.
AILOFFE [colonel] his anſwer to K. JAMES II. when examined, iii. 244. n. 4. executed for coming over with Argyle, ib.
AIRE taken by the allies, iii. 713.
ALBAN [St.] the firſt martyr in England, i. 26.
ALBANS, St. [abbot of] rebels, i. 206. [abbey of] given to Wolſey, ii. 64.
——— [battle of] ii. 667.
ALBANY [d. of, Robert Stuart] forms a deſign of ſeizing the crown of Scotland, i. 564. ſtarves Prince David to death, ib. negociations with HENRY V, 602. death, 612.
ALBANY [d. of, Alexander Stuart] eſcapes from priſon into England, and treats with EDWARD IV, i, 724. makes peace between EDWARD and his brother K. JAMES, 725. unfortunately kill'd, ib.
ALBANY [d. of, John Stuart] See Scotland.
ALBEMARLE [Wm. de Fortibus, e. of] rebels againſt K. HENRY III, i, 340. ſeizes on a caſtle, ib. obtains pardon, ib.
ALBEMARLE [d. of, Edmund de Langley] conſpires againſt K. HENRY IV, i. 550. diſcovers the conſpiracy, ib.
ALBEMARLE [d. of] See Monk [George.]
ALBEMARLE [d. of, Chriſtopher Monk] ſent againſt the d. of Monmouth, iii. 245.
ALBERT, cardinal and archduke, raiſes forces againſt the elector Frederic, ii, 440. amuſes K. JAMES I, 449, dies, ib.
ALBINUS [Claudius] governor of Britain, elected Emperor, i, 15.
ALBION, etymology of the word, i. introduction, viii.
ALBRET [conſtable] commits an overſight before the battle of Azincourt, i. 582, or 574.
ALBUQUERQUE taken by the allies, iii. 610.
ALBYVILLE [marq. of] his memorial to the States, iii. 277.
ALCANTARA taken by the allies, iii. 610. retaken by the Spaniards, 656.
ALCRED, K. of Northumberland, i. 58.
ALCUINUS, his letter to Charlemagne, i. 97.
ALDRED, archbiſhop of York, makes remonſtrances to WILLIAM the Conqueror, which are ill received, i. 201, 202. dies, 202.
ALDRICK, K. of Kent, i. 68.
ALDULPH, K. of Eſtanglia, i. 64.
ALEHOUSES monopolized, ii. 446.
ALENÇON [Charles, e. of] brother to K. PHILIP V. ſlain at the battle of Crecy, i. 478.
ALENÇON [d. of] remarkably brave in the battle of Azincourt, i. 584 or 575. ſlain, ib.
ALENÇON [John, d. of] taken priſoner at the battle of Verneuil, i. 618 or 610.
ALENÇON [d. of] propoſes to marry Q. ELIZABETH, but refuſed, ii. 323. put under arreſt, ib. raiſes an army againſt the K. in favour of the Hugonots, 324. See Anjou, d. of.
ALEXANDER, K. of Scotland. See Scotland.
ALEXANDER, Pope. See Pope.
ALEXANDER Cementarius, his character, i. 403.
ALEXANDER de Hales, his character, i. 403.
ALEXANDRIA reduced by the duke of Savoy, iii. 661.
ALFRED, K. of Deira, i. 56, becomes K. of Nothumberland, 57.

ALFRED the Great, ſon of Ethelwolph, ſent to Rome at five years old, and anointed by the Pope, i. 103. ſucceeds Ethelred, 107. haraſs'd and defeated by the Danes, ib. deſerted by his ſubjects, 109. his great diſtreſs, ib. 110. beats the Danes, 110. own'd by them for their ſovereign, ib. takes London, 111. makes laws for the good of the people, and inſtitutes juries, 112. divides the kingdom into ſhires, hundreds, and tythings, 113. regulates the militia, ib. encourages trade, ib. invites learned men into England, and founds the Univerſity of Oxford, ib. his three councils, 114. diviſion of his time, ib. diſtribution of his revenues, 115. death, character, and children, ib.

ALFRED and EDWARD, Saxon princes, ſons of ETHELRED II. withdraw to Normandy, i. 148. return to England, 152. Alfred betray'd, 153.

ALFGAR, ſon of Leoffrick, ſucceeds Harold in his places, i. 160. baniſh'd, but recall'd, ib. made d. of Mercia, 161.

ALFONSO, confeſſor to PHILIP of Spain, preaches againſt perſecution, ii. 241.

ALGERINES, obliged to make an advantageous peace with the Engliſh, iii. 112.

ALICANT ſubmits to K. CHARLES III, 655.

ALIEN-PRIORIES, ſeiz'd by EDWARD III, and reſtord, i. 490. given by the Clergy to K. HENRY V. to prevent his ſeizing their other revenues, i. 578 or 574.

ALICE of France, betroth'd to prince Richard, i. 276. committed to K. HENRY's care, ib. who loves her, 280. ſolicited for by Richard, 279, 280. refuſed by him, 281, 284. ſent back to K. PHILIP, 293.

ALLEGIANCE [oath of] the Engiſh offer to take it to HENRY V, before he is crown'd, i. 571 or 568.

ALLEMONDE [the Dutch admiral's] letter, giving an account of the fight off of la Hogue, iii. 420. joins ſir George Rooke, in his expedition to the Baltick, 519.

ALLEN [ſir Thomas] ſent with a fleet to the Mediterranean, iii. 112.

ALLIANCE [formidable] between England and France, iii. 336. [ſtrict] between JAMES II. and LEWIS XIV, 340. between the Emperor, England and Holland, which was the baſis of the grand alliance, 521. [grand] articles of, 535.

ALLIES take Alcantara, Albuquerque and Salvaterre, 640. under apprehenſions of the K. of Sweden, 672. take poſſeſſion of Lens, 689. Douay, Bethune, St. Venant and Aire, 703. beſiege and take Queſnoy, 737. defeated by the French at Denain, ib.

ALMANZA [battle of] fatal to the allies, 675.

ALOST declares for K. CHARLES III, 652.

ALPHONSO [K. of Caſtile] chuſes HENRY II, arbitrator between him and GARCIAS K. of Navarre, i. 277.

ALPHONSO [K. of Caſtile] yields Guienne to prince Edward, i. 372.

ALPHONSO [ſon of K. EDWARD I.] dies, i. 409.

ALPHUALD I. K. of Northumberland, i. 58.

ALPHUALD II. K. of Northumberland, i. 59.

ALPHUALD, K. of Eſtranglia, i. 64.

ALRESFORD [battle of] ii. 840.

ALVA [d. of, Ferdinando de Toledo] overruns Navarre, ii. 21. vice-roy of Naples, 244. blocks up Rome, 245. made governor of the Low-countries, 291. ſets up the Inquiſition there, 306. relied on by the Q. of Scots, 320. recalled, 322.

AMBOISE conſpiracy, ii. 262.

AMBOYNA, ſatisfaction demanded of the Dutch for their cruelties there, iii. 22.

AMBROSIUS, [Aurelianus] who he was, i. 31. Vortigern ſuſpects him, ibid. he arrives in Britain, 32. Vortigern divides the kingdom with him, 33. he becomes ſole monarch, 34. his wars with the Saxons, 36, 37, 38. he is kill'd, 38.

AMBRUN [archbiſhop of] comes to England, and confers with K. JAMES, ii. 482, 483. remarks on the conference, 483.

AMBRUN taken by the d. of Savoy, iii. 425.

AMIENS, a treaty concluded there, i. 718.

ANABAPTISTS, their inſurrection under Venner, which occaſions the prohibition of conventicles, iii. 72. careſs'd, 334.

ANASTATIUS, pope, dies, i. 259.

ANDRED, K. of Northumberland, i. 59.

ANDREWS, St. [archbp. of, John Hamilton] his great influence in Scotland, iii. 220, 253, 292. hang'd, 311.

ANDREWS, St. [John Sharp, archbp. of] barbarouſly murder'd, iii. 189.

ANFRID, K. of Bernicia, i. 55. he and Oſrick apoſtatize, 83.

ANGLIANS, their origin, and union with the Saxons, i. 24. arrive in Britain, 39.

ANGLO-SAXONS, a diſſertation on their government, laws, manners, cuſtoms, and language, i. 174, 193.

ANJOU [d. of] negociations of marriage between him and Q. ELIZABETH, ii. 311, 312, 313. choſen protector of the Belgic liberty, 326. preſſes his marriage with ELIZABETH, but to no purpoſe, 327. viſits her incognito, 329. articles of marriage with her, 331. made ſovereign of the united Netherlands, 332. arrives in England, but goes back without ſucceſs, 332, 333. quits England, and made d. of Brabant, 333, 334.

ANJOU [d. of] declar'd K. of Spain, in France, and proclaimed at Madrid, 524.

ANLAFF, the Dane, enters into a league againſt Athelſtan, i. 120, he and the K. of Scots invade Northumberland, and are defeated, 121. his deſign on Athelſtan's perſon, ib. made K. of Northumbria, 122. driven out of England, 123. recall'd, and driven back again, 123, 124.

ANN of Luxemburg, married to K. RICHARD II. i. 459.

ANN [ducheſs of Bretagne] makes a treaty with HENRY VII. i. 774. married by proxy to the archduke Maximilian, 776. embaſſies to HENRY, 777, 779. breaks her contract, and marries CHARLES VIII. of France, 780.

ANN BOLEYN. See Boleyn.

ANN of Cleve, pitch'd on by Cromwell and Cranmer as a wife for K. HENRY VIII. ii. 157. who diſlikes, yet marries her, 162, 163. divorced from him, 164.

ANN of Denmark, married to K. JAMES I. ii. 342. comes to England, 391. recommends Villiers to the K. 425. dies, 438.

ANN, ducheſs of York. See Hyde.

ANN [Princeſs] daughter of K. JAMES II. married to prince George of Denmark, iii. 223. retires from her father, and leaves a letter to the Queen, 288. motion for increaſing her revenue rejected, 371. her revenue ſettled at 50,000l. per ann. 382. is deliver'd of a daughter, 399. letter to K. WILLIAM, on the death of Q. MARY, 446. [Q. of England, &c.] acceſſion to the throne, 541. firſt ſpeech to the privy-council, ib. proclaim'd, ib. letter to the privy-council in Scotland, ib. firſt ſpeech to her parliament, 542. letter to the States general, 543. an inſtance of her generoſity, 545. letter to the parliament of Scotland, 546. forms her miniſtry, 547. goes to the Bath, and viſits the univerſity of Oxford, 570. dines in the city at Guildhall, 571. meſſage to the commons, concerning a thankſgiving, 572. goes to St. Paul's, 573. ſends a meſſage to the houſe of commons, concerning the Prince's revenue, ib. meſſage to the commons, in favor of the d. of Marlborough, 574. for an augmentation of troops, 575. Semper eadem, her motto, 581. is viſited by CHARLES III. K. of Spain, 598. meſſage to the houſe of commons, in favor of the poorer clergy, 604. letter to the Scotiſh parliament, concerning the ſucceſſion to the crown, 606. meſſage to the houſe of commons, in favor of the d. of Marlborough, 629. goes to New-market, 632. gives the parliament an account of the ſucceſſes in Spain, and communicates ſeveral letters from thence, 643. ſpeech to the commiſſioners on preſenting the articles of the union, 663. letter to the parliament of Scotland, concerning the union, 664. anſwer to the lords addreſs in favor of the d. of Marlborough, 667. meſſage to the houſe of commons in his favor, 668. ſpeech to both houſes on paſſing the ratification of the union, 670. to the firſt parliament of Great Britain, 678. has various effects on the two houſes of parliament, 679. reſents the d. of Marborough's, and the e. of Godolphin's behavior to her, 681. writes a polite letter to the States-general, concerning the d. of Marlborough, 718. repreſents to the commons the want of churches in London and Weſtminſter, 719. reſolutions on the death of Emperor JOSEPH, ib. creates 12 new peers at once, 731. acquaints the parliament that the treaty of Utrecht is begun, ib. anſwer to a letter from the States general, 734. ſpecific demands at the congreſs of Utrecht, ib. declares the terms for a general peace to the parliament, ib. ſpeech to the parliament at the concluſion of the peace, 741. meſſage for a ſupply of the civil liſt, ib. taken ill, 742. letter to the lord mayor of London, on her recovery, 743. letters to the Princeſs SOPHIA, and the Electoral Prince of Hanover, 744. laſt ſpeech to both houſes of parliament, ib. her laſt ſickneſs, 745. appoints the duke of Shrewsbury lord-treaſurer, 746. her life in extream danger, ib. her death and character, ib. vile inſinuations on this occaſion, by the continuator of Rapin in French. n. 1, 2. ib. her marriage, iſſue and funeral, 748.

ANNALS of K. JAMES and K. CHARLES, character of that work, ii. 637.

ANNAPOLIS ROYAL [formerly Port Royal] in Nova Scotia, taken from the French, iii. 714.

ANNAS, K. of Eſtanglia, i. 63.

ANNATES, or firſt-fruits, aboliſhed, ii. 126.

ANSELM, abbot of Bec, unwillingly made archbp. of Canterbury, i. 218. differs with the K. 219. goes to Rome, 220. recall'd, 224. engages the Engliſh to be true to K. HENRY, 225. differs with HENRY, ib. goes again to Rome with complaints, 226. perſecutes the married prieſts, 228. dies, 229. character, ib. See State of the church, 246, &c.

ANTE-NATI, and Poſt-nati, K. JAMES's diſtinction concerning them, ii. 409.

ANTHONY d. of Wolfenbuttle, excluded the regency for ſiding with France, iii. 554.

ANTWERP ſubmits to CHARLES III, iii. 652.

APELLES, his picture of calumny, i. 125, n.

APPEALS to Rome, ſtatute againſt them, ii. 129.

APPRENTICES riſe againſt the biſhops, ii. 711. petition the parliament, 885.

ARCHBISHOPS of Canterbury and York. See their ſucceſſion in the ſtate of the church, after each book. Diſpute between them begins, i. 247. judgment thereon, ib.

ARCHDUKE [Maximilian] his affairs, i. 776, 780. [Philip] refuſes to deliver up Perkin Warbeck, 787.

ARCO [count d'] the Bavarian general, beaten at Schellenberg, iii. 614.

ARDULPH, K. of Northumberland, i. 59.

AREMBERG [count] comes embaſſador from the archduke to K. JAMES I. ii. 392.

ARESKIN [John] ſigns a confederacy againſt Q. MARY, and e. Bothwel, ii. 286. created e. of Marr, 270. has the charge of K. JAMES I. 286, 288. made regent of Scotland, 315. dies, ſuſpected to be poiſon'd, 320.

ARESKIN [Alexander] governor to K. JAMES I. ii. 328.

ARGYLE [e. of, Archibald Campbell] a friend to the reformation, ii. 257, &c.

ARGYLE [marq. of, Archibald Campbell] raiſes forces againſt Monroe, ii. 921. treats with him, 922. careſs'd by K. CHARLES II. iii, 18. beheaded at Edinburg, 76.

ARGYLE [e. of, Archibald Campbell] refuſes an oath impos'd by the parliament of Scotland, iii. 213. tried and condemned, but eſcapes, ib. perſuades Monmouth to invade England, 242. lands in Scotland, 243. ſuſtains a great loſs, 244. taken and beheaded, ib.

ARGYLE [e. of, John Campbell] performs the ceremony of offering the crown of Scotland to K. WILLIAM K. WILLIAM and Q. MARY, iii. 357 [d. of] appointed lord-high commiſſioner in Scotland, 632. created a peer of England, 644. diſtinguiſhes himſelf at the battle of Ramellies, 650. takes poſſeſſion of Menin, 653. named embaſſador extraordinary and plenipotentiary to K. CHARLES III, and commander in chief of the Britiſh forces in Spain, 717. falls ſick and returns. 724. removed from all his places, 744.

ARLES [K. of] a title given to K. Richard I. by the Emperor, i. 291.

ARLEUX taken by the allies, but retaken by the French, iii. 721.

ARLINGTON [e. of, Henry Bennet] made ſecretary of ſtate, iii. 85. one of the cabal, 116. character, ib. impeached, 122. in diſgrace, 144. made lord chamberlain to K. CHARLES, ib, ſucceſsleſs negociation at the Hague, 145, loſes all his credit with the King and the Duke, ib. made lord high chamberlain to K. JAMES, 234. n. 4. dies, 253.

ARMADA [the Spaniſh] ii. 360, 361, 362.

ARMAGNAC, [d'Albret, count of] made conſtable of France, i. 585 or 577. deſigns, 589 or 581. procures the Queen's baniſhment, 591 or 582. impriſon'd and murder'd, 592 or 584.

ARMAGNACS, a great number maſſacred by the Burgundians, i. 592 or 584.

ARMENIA [K. of] arrives in England, i. 518.

ARMINIANISM, diſpute about it, in which K. JAMES I. warmly engages, ii. 415, 416. ſome points of it embraced by the papiſts and clergy, 450. proclamation concerning it, 516.

ARMINIANS for the K. in his diſpute with the commons, ii. 450.

ARMINIUS [Jacobus] account of him, ii. 415.

ARMSTRONG [ſir Thomas] executed for the Ryehouſe-plot, iii. 225.

ARMY new modell'd, ii. 859. inſpired with diſcontent by Cromwell, when to be diſbanded, 875. project a petition to the parliament, ib. more diſcontented, 876. publiſh two declarations, ib. ſet up the council of agitators, 877. preſent a threatning petition to general Fairfax, ib. ſend and fetch the King by force from Holmby-houſe, 878. petition Fairfax again, 879. ſign the ſolemn engagement, ib. march towards London, and complain of diverſe members, 880. declaration, ib. accuſe eleven members of the houſe, 881. demands, ib. ſtill diſcontented, ib. make new demands, 882. conſpired againſt, ib. 883. petition the parliament, 883. march nearer London, and receive ſixty-ſix members into their protection, 886. publiſh their manifeſto, ib. flatter the K. 888. but ſlight him after they have gained their ends, 889. articles propoſed by them to the parliament's commiſſioners, ib. remarks on the propoſals, 891. unite with the parliament, and deſiſt from meddling with ſtate-affairs, 904. preſent a remonſtrance, demanding juſtice on the K. 926. declaration, 927. propoſals to the houſe of commons, 928. commit forty-one members, ib. exclude an hundred more, 929. officers combine againſt Richard Cromwell, iii. 45. form a grand council, who force Richard to diſſolve the parliament, and afterwards ſeize the government, ib. 46. chuſe Fleetwood for their general, 46. reſtore the long parliament that was diſſolv'd in 1653, 47. preſent a petition and addreſs to the parliament, 48. diſpleas'd with the parliament, 49. preſent two petitions, 51. diſtruſt the parliament, which vacates Fleetwood's commiſſion, 53. hinder the parliament from meeting, ib. form a council of ten, and elect their own generals, ib. exact in their diſcipline, ib. erect the committee of ſafety, 54. disbanded, 66. increas'd by K. JAMES II, and encamp'd on Hounſlow-heath, 256. farther enlarged, 264, 278. oppoſe the promotion of papiſts among them, 274. ſummon'd together on Salisbury-Plain, 285. declaration to the e. of Feverſham, their general, 287. disbanded, 291. re-aſſembled by the Prince of Orange, 292.

ARMY in Ireland, fill'd with Catholics, iii. 334, defection thereof, 353. reaſons for and againſt disbanding it, after the peace of Ryſwick, 496. voted by the commons to be reduced to what it was in 1680, ib. reduced to 7000 men in England, 506.

ARRAN [e. of, James Hamilton] his character, ii. 175. choſen regent of Scotland, ib. abjures the proteſtant religion, 177. made d. of Chatelraut by the French K. 204. reſigns the regency to the Q. 220, 253. comes over to the confederate proteſtants, 258. conſpires to aſſaſſinate the e. of Murray, 272. obtains a patent from MARY to reſtore him to the regency, 302.

ARRAN [e. of, ſon of the former] perſuades his father to join the confederate proteſtants, ii. 258. in hopes of marrying Q. Elizabeth, ii. 265.

ARRAGON [Peter, K. of] quarrels with the K. of Sicily, i. 410, 411. ſends him a challenge, 411. dies, 412. [Alphonſo, K. of] reconcil'd to the K. of Sicily, by the mediation of Edward I, K. of England, 412. [Ferdinand, K. of] his actions and negotiations, ii. 9—45. views and intereſts, 24, 34.

ARREARS of ſubſidies examin'd into, iii. 497.

ARTHUR the Great makes his firſt appearance, i. 33. he ſlays Hoel, K. of Areclute, ibid. is made a patrician, 34. goes to the holy land, 36. defeats the Saxons in ſeveral battles, 36, 37, 38. is elected monarch of the Britons, 38. gains many more victories over the Saxons and Picts, 38, 39. lays waſte the country of the Picts, 39. makes peace with Cerdick, ibid. ſuccors the K. of Armorica, ib. 40. renews his treaty with Cerdick, and aſſumes the title of Emperor, 40. goes again into Armorica, ib. Modred, in his abſence, ſeizes his crown, and Cerdick ſome of his dominions, ib. he returns, and maintains a ſeven years war with Modred, 41. is ſlain, ib. his character, 42.

ARTHUR [e. of Bretany] ſon of Jeoffery, brother of K. RICHAD and K. JOHN, deprived of his eſtates by K. JOHN, i. 297. put under K. Philip's protection, 298. reconciled to K. John, but returns to K. Philip, ib. joins the count de la Marche, 301. goes into Poitou, and beſieges Mirebeau, 302. taken priſoner, and ſent to Falaiſe, ib. refuſes to come into K. John's intereſt, ib. diſappears of a ſudden, ib. K. John ſuſpected of his death, ib.

ARTHUR [Prince] ſon of Henry VII, born, i. 762. marries Catherine of Spain, 801. dies, ib.

ARTICLES [five] to reduce the authority of the clergy, i. 264. [ſix] afterwards forty-one, for preſerving the rights of the people, 379. [thirty-three] of accuſation againſt K. Richard II, 531—534, or 529—532. [ſix] for aboliſhing diverſity of opinions, ii. 159. repeal'd, 201. [five] ſent to the kirk of Scotland by K. JAMES, but oppos'd, 433. [of marriage] between Prince Charles and the Infanta of Spain, 464, 467, 471. ſign'd by K. PHILIP and K. JAMES, 470. between Pr. Charles and Henrietta Maria of France, 484, 485, 486.

ARTOIS [Robert de] ſlain in Britany, i. 474.

ARVIRAGUS, a Britiſh King, i. 14.

ARUNDEL [William d'Aubigny, e. of] perſuades K. Stephen againſt engaging with the d. of Normandy, i. 224.

ARUNDEL [Edmund Fitz-Allan, e. of] beheaded for adherence to Edward II. whom he had before refuſed to ſerve, 454, 444.

ARUNDEL [Richard Fitz-Allan, e. of] his exploits, i. 522. apprehended, 525. condemned, executed, and eſteemed a martyr, 526.

ARUNDEL [e. of, Henry Fitz-Allan] one of the counſellors of Edward VI, his character, ii. 195. takes meaſures againſt the d. of Northumberland, which ſucceed in the d's ruin, 225. made lord-ſteward, 230. hopes to marry Q. Elizabeth, 265. leaves England, 282. dies, 330.

ARUNDEL [Philip Howard, e. of] apprehended and ſent to the tower, ii. 341. condemned, but ſpared by the Queen, 363.

ARUNDEL [Thomas Howard, e. of] ſon of the former, made alſo e. of Surrey, ii. 390. quarrels with the lord Spenſer, and is ſent to the tower, 447.

ARUNDEL [Herny lord, of Wardour] ſent to the tower, iii. 167. Bedlow's depoſitions againſt him, 168. made a privy-counſellor, and e. of Powis, 254. lord privy-ſeal, 256.

ARUNDEL [Thomas, archbiſhop of York] deprived of the great ſeal, i. 522. [archbiſhop of Canterbury] baniſh'd, 526 makes a ſpeech in parliament in favor of K. Henry IV, 544 or 542. oppoſes the ſeizing the church-revenues, and prevails on the K. 560 or 557. dies, 575 or 572.

ARUNDEL [Humphrey] a Corniſh gentleman, heads a rebellion in Devonſhire, ii. 208. executed, 209.

ASAPH [St.] i. 47.

ASCHOUGH [ſir George, admiral] a fight between him and de Ruyter, iii. 97.

ASGIL [mr.] expell'd the houſe of commons of Ireland, for writing a book, intitled, an argument, &c. iii. 583.

ASHBURNHAM [John, eſq;] created baron Aſhburnham, iii. 378.

ASHBY [ſir John] appointed admiral of the fleet, jointly with ſir Richard Haddock, and Henry Killegrew, eſq; iii. 395. blamed by biſhop Burnet, n. 2. 422.

ASHDON, a church built there by Canutus, i. 150. n. 1.

ASHELDON [battle of] in which Edmund Ironſide was defeated by Canutus, i. 147.

ASHTON [ſir Ralph] a very extraordinary commiſſion of vice-conſtable granted him, i. 745.

ASHTON [mr.] executed for high-treaſ. iii. 492.

ASKE [Robert] heads an inſurrection in Yorkſhire, ii. 151, 152. executed, 154

ASKEW [Ann] tortur'd and burn'd for religion, ii. 188.

ASPERSIONS [malicious] caſt on the officers of the fleet, iii. 418.

ASSEMBLY of Scotland, under the marquis of Hamilton, ii. 579, 582. declares epiſcopacy to be aboliſh'd, 582. under the e. of Traquair, 588. See alſo 815.

ASSEMBLY at Weſtminſter, ii. 814. write to the churches abroad, 834.

ASSERIUS MENEVENSIS, the firſt who taught grammar and rhetorick at Oxford, i. 113, 138.

ASSOCIATIONS, in favor of MARY Q. of Scots, ii. 289. in favor of Q. ELIZABETH, 339. in favor of K. CHARLES, and of the parliament, 796. in favor of the Pr. of Orange, iii. 286. of the houſe of commons on the aſſaſſination plot, 471. preſented to K. WILLIAM, and voted legal, 472.

ASTLEY [ſir Jacob] leads up the main body of the infantry at Naſeby fight, ii. 861.

ATHELING, a title of the Saxon Princes, its origin and meaning, i. 176.

ATHELMAR [half brother of K. HENRY III.] elected biſhop of Wincheſter, i. 365. baniſh'd by the barons, 380. recall'd and dies, 382.

ATHELSTAN, ſon of EDWARD the elder, by his concubine Egwina, ſucceeds his father, i. 119. a conſpiracy againſt him detected, ib. the Danes ſubmit to him, ib. he conquers Northumberland, ib. receives homage from the Scots, 120. defeats the Welſh K. ib. expoſes his brother Edwin to the waves, ib. founds a monaſtery, ib. kills the K. of Scots, and invades Scotland, 121. Miracles wrought in his favor, ib. eſcapes a great danger, ib. dies, ib. his encomium, ib. 122.

ATHLONE taken by general Ginckel, iii. 404.

[e. of] inveſts Dinant, 479. commands an army in the duchy of Cleves, 554. defeats a bold attempt of the marſhal de Bouflers, 555.

ATHOL [e. of] governor of Scotland for K. Edward III, defeated and ſlain, i. 467.

ATHOL [e. of] ſigns a confederacy againſt Q. MARY and Bothwell, ii. 288. made chancellor of Scotland, 328. dies, ib.

ATHOL [marquis of] marches againſt the e. of Argyle, iii. 244.

ATKINS [ſir Robert] chief baron of the exchequer, made ſpeaker of the houſe of lords, iii. 378.

ATTAINDERS, the power of repealing them lodg'd in HENRY VIII. by the parliament, ii. 71. revers'd, 370. iii. [bill of] loſt in the houſe of lords, 374.

AVAUX [monſieur d'] memorials to the States-general, iii. 377, 532.

AUBACH's [monſieur d'] unpardonable blunder, iii. 636.

AUGSBURG, K. of the Romans crown'd there, iii. 397. taken by the El. of Bavaria, 595. a deſcription of this place, n. 1. ib. ſubmits to the d. of Marlborough, 623.

AUGUSTUS, K. of Poland, obliged to renounce his crown, iii. 672.

AVICE [heireſs of Glouceſter] married to K. John, i. 282. divorced, 299.

AVOCATION of K. HENRY VIII's divorce to Rome, ii. 111, 112.

AUBIGNY [baron of] ſee Eſme Stuart.

AUDLEY [ſir Thomas] made lord chancellor, ii. 126. character, 167. dies, 180.

AUGUSTIN the Monk, the apoſtle of the Saxons, i. 51. arrives in the iſle of Thanet, 77. converts the K. of Kent. ib. ſends Peter and Laurence to the Pope, 78. attempts to unite the churches of Rome and Britain, 79. dies, 80.

AULUS Didius, a Roman governor in Britain, i. 8.

AUSTINRICK, or AUSTIN's oak, council of, i. 80.

AUSTIN's [St.] or Auguſtin's, a church in Canterbury, i. 77.

——[Monks of] their degeneracy, i. 172.

AUSTRIA [d. of] affronted by K. Richard, i. 287. withdraws from him, 289. RICHARD ſeiz'd in his territories, ib. has a third of RICHARD's ranſom, 291.

AUSTRIA [Charles d. of] makes his addreſſes to Q. Elizabeth, ii. 265.

AUSTRIA greatly diſtreſs'd by the El. of Bavaria, iii. 595.

AUTHUN and Bethun, Kings of Suſſex, i. 69.

AUVERQUERQUE [general] bombards Namur, iii. 624. motions of part of the Dutch army under his command, 636. valor and conduct at the battle of Ramellies, 650. appointed to command in chief in the Netherlands during winter, 654. behaves bravely at the battle of Oudenarde, 688.

AUXILIARIES leave the d. of Ormond, iii. 737.

AYLESBURY [e. of, a priſoner in the Tower for high-treaſon] admitted to bail, iii. 489.

AYLESBURY [mayor of] differences between the two houſes of parliament, concerning an action brought againſt him, iii. 602. reſolutions of both houſes hereupon, ib. the diſpute revived, 630. five of the Aylesbury-men commited to Newgate, ib.

AZINCOURT [battle of] i. 583, 584, or 575, 576. why ſo called, 585 or 576.

B

BABINGTON [Anthony] conſpires with the Q. of Scots againſt Q. ELIZABETH, ii. 346. apprehended and executed, 347.

BACON [ſir Nicholas] keeper of the great ſeal, his character, and ſpeech to Q. ELIZABETH's firſt parliament, ii. 254, and ib. n. 2. one of the chief miniſters, 265.

BACON [ſir Francis] ſollicitor-general, argues for an union of England and Scotland, ii. 409. made lord-chancellor, 429. accuſed of corruption, 446. confeſſes himſelf guilty in general, and is forced to make a particular confeſſion, 447. turn'd out of his office, and out of the houſe of peers, ib. character, ib. remark on his hiſtory of HENRY VII. ib.

BADEN [Prince LEWIS of] in England, iii. 438. cannonades the French in their intrenchments, 481. beſieges and takes Landau, 561. beats the French at Friedlingen. ib. his ſhameful neglect. n. 3, 612. joins the d. of Marlborough, 613. behaves gallantly at Schellenberg, 614. beſieges Ingolſtadt, 616. beſieges Landau, 623. appoints a meeting with the d. of Marlborough, but diſappoints him, 635. renders the duke's deſigns abortive, ib. his conduct very much cenſur'd, n. 1, 636. has a fine army, but does little with it, 640.

BADBY [Thomas] a Lollard, burn'd by order of K. HENRY IV. i. 567 or 564.

BAILEY, a domeſtic of MARY Q. of Scots, brings over letters to her from Ridolfi, ii. 313. apprehended, put to the rack, and confeſſes all he knows, ib. 314.

BAKER [ſir Richard] remarks on him, i. 45. n.

BALAGUER taken by Stahremberg, iii. 705.

BALDOCK, chancellor to K. EDWARD II. taken, and abuſed by the mob, i. 454. dies in priſon. ib.

BALDESMERE [Bartholomew] one of the confederate barons againſt K. EDWARD II. inſults the Queen, i. 448. beheaded, ib.

BALDRED, K. of Kent, i. 68.

BALDWIN [archbp. of Canterbury] his character, i. 403.

BALFOUR [ſir William] lieutenant of the Tower, his confeſſion, ii. 665. removed, 709. prevents Eſſex's defeat at Edgehill, 788. ſaves the cavalry in Cornwal, 844.

BALIOL [John] his genealogy, i. 415. claim to the crown of Scotland, ib. 422. declar'd king of Scotland by K. EDWARE I. of England, 423. does homage to EDWARD, ib. renounces all engagements made by K. EDWARD, 425. ſummon'd five times to appear at Weſtminſter, ib. appears before the parliament of England, ib. makes an alliance with France, ib. declares againſt K. EDWARD, 426. defeated, ib. reſigns the kingdom to EDWARD, 427.

BALIOL [Edward, ſon of John] excited by EDWARD III. of England, to aſſert his right to the Scots crown, i. 465. prepares for his expedition, ib. makes a deſcent into Scotland, where he gains four victories, and reduces Perth, 466. crown'd at Scone, and does homage to EDWARD, ib. yields to EDWARD the town of Berwick, &c. ib. holds his firſt parliament in Scotland, ib. yields ſeveral towns to EDWARD, 467. ſurprized, and driven out of Scotland, ib. ſituation of his affairs, 483. makes over all his rights to K. EDWARD for a penſion of 2000l. per annum, ib.

BALL [John] a ſeditious prieſt, ſpirits up the inſurrection headed by Tyler, i. 512.

BALLARD, a conſpirator againſt Q. ELIZABETH, ii. 346.

BALLYMORE taken by gen. Ginckel, iii. 403.

BAMBRIDGE [Chriſtopher] archbp. of York, made embaſſador to Rome, and cardinal, ii. 6. &c. dies, 38.

BANCROFT [Richard] made archbiſhop of Canterbury, ii. 394. perſecutes the puritans, ib. 410. makes an attempt in the K's favour, 402. dies, 414.

BANGOR-Monaſtery deſtroy'd by ADELFRID, i. 52.

BANK of England erected, iii. 439. charter granted, 443. capital ſtock increaſed, 488.

BANK-BILLS at 20l. per cent. diſc. iii. 487.

BANNOCK's-Down [battle of] won by the Scots with great loſs to the Engliſh, i. 444.

BANTRY-BAY, ſea-fight there, iii. 358.

BARBANSON [Pr. of] ſuſpected of treachery, iii. n. 2. 423.

BARCELONA bombarded by the French, iii. 409. a fruitleſs attempt on that place, 608. taken by K. CHARLES III. 634. diſtreſs'd by the French, but relieved by the Engliſh. 655.

BARDOLPH [lord] ſlain in rebellion, i. 565 or 562.

BARDS, what they were, i. Introd. x.

BAREBONE [Praiſe-God] a leather-ſeller and member of parliament, iii. 26. preſents a petition concerning the abjuration oath, 59.

BAREBONE's parliament, ſo call'd from Praiſe-god Barebone, iii. 26.

BAREITH [Margrave of] commands on the Rhine, iii. 435.

BARNS [dr. Robert] executed for hereſy, ii. 166.

BARNET-battle, i. 708.

BARNEVELT, penſionary of Holland, the head of the Arminian party, ii. 416.

BARNWELL, enters into a conſpiracy againſt Q. Elizabeth, ii. 346.

BARON [the title] limited in the reign of K. Edward I. i. 438.

BARONS diſcontented with the marriage of Empreſs MAUD to Jeoffery Plantagenet, i. 232. take and renew an oath to her, ib. take the oaths to K. STEPHEN, 235. permitted to fortify their caſtles, ib. revolt, 236. reduced to obedience, 237. refuſe to go with K. JOHN into France, 301. excuſed for a ſum of money, ib. make a league to re-eſtabliſh their rights, 314. examination of their rights, ib. require a revival of the laws of St. EDWARD, 315. urge the K. to anſwer, ib. elect a general, begin hoſtilities, take London, and beſiege the K. in the tower, ib. threaten the lords of the King's party, 316. precaution concerning the two charters, ib. deſpiſe the pope's threats, 317. and excommunication, ib. call in prince LEWIS of France, 318. take an oath to him, ib. beſiege Windſor, 319. repent their calling in LEWIS, ib. refuſe to appear in parliament, 350. complain to the K. and demand ſatisfaction, 354. take a vigorous reſolution againſt the Pope, 362. intercept his courier, ib. repreſent to the Pope the grievances of the nation, and proteſt againſt the tribute demanded by him, ib. 363. form a project for altering of the government, in which they ſucceed, 379. enter into a confederacy to maintain the ſtatutes of Oxford, 380. juſtify their conduct herein to the Pope, ib. conclude a treaty with France, very diſadvantageous to the K. 381. preſent a fruitleſs petition to the K. 382. reunite themſelves, 383. elect the e. of Leiceſter their general, ib. war with the K. ib.—393. reject the arbitration of the French K. 385. renounce their oaths of allegiance, ib. refuſe to receive a legate, 387. take an oath to K. EDWARD I. in his abſence, 405. oppoſe him, 430. make a league to oppoſe EDWARD II's coronation, but are pacified, 440. ſtir up the people againſt the K. 441. chuſe the e. of Lancaſter general, take Gaveſton, and behead him, 442, 443. give the King public ſatisfaction, 443. complain of ſeveral grievances, 445. take up arms, and require the removing of the two Spencers, 447. many of them ſubmit, 448. others are executed, ib. take up arms againſt K. RICHARD II. 521. amuſed and put off by him, ib. continue arm'd, ib. reproach the K. ib. threaten to chuſe a new one, 522. procure a general amneſty, ib. declare for the d. of Lancaſter, 529 or 527.

BARONETS, when firſt created, ii. 422.

BARRIER-treaty cenſured, iii. 732. a new one ſign'd, 739.

BEACHY, ſea-fight off that place, iii. 390.

BEAUMONT taken by K. WILLIAM, iii. 399.

BARTHOLOMEW's, St. a maſſacre at Paris on that day, ii. 318.

BARTON [Elizabeth] called the holy maid of Kent, act of attainder againſt her, ii. 133. ſome account of her, 134.

BASIL [council of] an account of it, i. 814.

BASILOWITZ [Ivan] Czar of Moſcovy, ſends an embaſſy to Q. ELIZABETH, ii. 291. makes an alliance with her, and grants very large privileges to her ſubjects, ib.

BATEMAN [Charles] a ſurgeon, executed for treaſon, iii. 248.

BATH [John Bourchier, e. of] raiſes troops for Q. MARY, ii. 225.

BATH [John Granville, e. of] ſecures Plymouth for the prince of Orange, iii. 288.

BATTLE of Crecy, i. 477. of Poitiers, 483. of Azincourt, 583 or 575. of Towton, 686. of Barnet, 708. of Boſworth, 750. of Edge-hill, ii. 788. of Tadcaſter and Gisborough, 794. of Hopton, or Saltheath, ibid. Chaldgrave-field, 809. firſt of Newbury, 811. of Stratton, ib. of Lanſdown, 812. of Roundway-down, ib. 838. of Alresford, 840. of Cropedy-bridge, 841. ſecond of Newbury, 846. of Naſeby, 861. of Langport, 862.

BATTLE-ABBEY, founded by WILLIAM the Conqueror, i. 200.

BAVARIA [d. of] made elector, ii. 467.

Baxter [Richard] tried and fined for his notes on the New Teſtament, iii. 111. 239, 240. refuſes the biſhopric of Hereford, n. 1.

Bayfield and Baynam burned for religion, ii. 123.

Beachy, ſea fight off that place, iii. 390.

Beaton [cardinal] archbp. of St. Andrews, an enemy to England and the reformation, his intrigues in the Scots court, ii. 175-187. cauſes Wiſhart to be burnt, 187. murdered, ib.

Beauchamp, [Henry de] made governor of Calais, ii. 481.

Beauchamp [Thomas de] See e. of Warwick.

Beaufort, the Name of John of Ghent's legitimated children, i. 524.

Beaufort [John] created e. of Somerſet, i. 524.

Beaufort [John, e. of Somerſet] exchang'd for the count d'Eu, i. 644. becomes d. of Somerſet, ib.

Beaufort [Thomas] e. of Perth, i. 644.

——See Somerſet.

——See Dorſet [e. of]

Beaufort [d. of, Henry Somerſet] made lord preſident of Wales, iii. 236. n. 4.

Beaumont taken by K. William, iii. 399.

Beauvais [biſhop of, Philip de Dreux] ſent to the Emperor Henry, by Philip the French K. to perſuade him to detain K. Richard I. of England, i. 292. taken priſoner by Richard, 293. expreſſion of Richard on that occaſion, 294.

Becket [Thomas] his riſe, i. 262. made high chancellor by K. Henry II. ib. and archbp. of Canterbury, ib. ſends the great ſeal to the K. ib. alters his behaviour, 263. deſigns to thwart all the K's meaſures, ib. partiality to a prieſt guilty of murder, the firſt cauſe of his quarreling with the K. ib. gives the K. other cauſes of diſpleaſure, ib. ſubmits to the K. and ſigns five articles againſt the prieſthood, 264. repents, ſuſpends himſelf, and is re-eſtabliſh'd by the Pope, ib. ſued at the K's inſtigation, ib. impeach'd, and refuſes to make a defence, ib. refuſes to appear before the K. 265. eſtates confiſcated, ib. declared perjured by the peers, ib. proceeds ſeditiouſly, ib. condemned to impriſonment, but refuſes to ſubmit, and eſcapes to Flanders, ib. protected by the French K. who excites the Pope againſt K. Henry, ib. defends himſelf to the Pope againſt K. Henry's ambaſſadors, 266. excommunicates certain lords, ib. letter to the K. ib. refuſes to be try'd by the Pope's legates, 267. turn'd out of the convent of Pontigni, ib. confers with the K. 268. excommunicates moſt of the Engliſh clergy, ib. confers again with the K. ib. more interviews between them, till matters are accommodated, 269. returns to England, and excommunicates the archbp. of York, and other biſhops, ib. enters Canterbury in triumph, ib. excommunicates two lords, ib. murder'd at the altar, 270. reflections on his character, ib. miracles attributed to him after his death, ib. canoniz'd, ib. bones burnt and ſhrine demoliſh'd, ii. 155. ſuperſtition paid to him, ib. n. 3.

Bede, venerable, ſome account of him, i. 48. n.

Bedford [John, Plantagenet d. of] ſon of Henry IV, beats the French fleet, i. 587 or 578. made commander of Henry V's army, 603 or 598. made regent of France, 607 or 599. character, 610 or 602. made protector of England, 612 or 604. leagues with the dukes of Britany and Burgundy againſt Charles VII. 613 or 605. marries Ann, ſiſter of the d. of Burgundy, ib. wins ſeveral places, 614 or 606. actions in France, while ſucceſsful, ib. to 622 or 613. received protector in England, 623 or 614. returns to France, 625 or 616. letter to the K. about the maid of Orleans, 630 or 629. ſhuts himſelf up in Paris, 631. inſtructions to garter K. of arms, ib. marches to meet K. Charles, who evades fighting, 632. drives the conſtable out of Normandy, ib. engages the d. of Burgundy, and makes ſome conqueſts, 634. obtains Joan of Arc from the count de Ligny, ib. gets her condemned and burned, 635. ill ſtate in France, 636. loſes his conſort, 637. marries Jaquelina of Luxemburg, which occaſions a rupture with the d. of Burgundy, ib. dies, 639. eulogy, ib.

Bedford [Jaſper de Hatfield, d. of] diſperſes the forces of lord Lovel and the two Staffords, i. 762. made lieutenant of Ireland, 763.

Bedford [John Ruſſel, e. of] at firſt lord Ruſſel, and lord privy-ſeal, appointed by K. Henry VIII. one of the regents during the minority of Edward VI. ii. 194.

Bedford [William Ruſſel, e. of] returns to the parliament after having deſerted them, ii. 833.

Bedingfield [ſir Henry] Princeſs Elizabeth committed to his care, ii. 236.

Bedloe [William] an evidence in the popiſh plot, his depoſitions againſt the priſoners, iii. 168, 170, 173, 190, 191. death and depoſitions before the lord chief juſtice North, 196.

Bellarmine [cardinal] writes againſt the oath of allegiance to K. James I. ii. 408.

Belknap [ſir Robert] cenſures himſelf for declaring the K. above law, i. 520.

Bellasis [colonel John] defeated, ii. 836.

Bembow [captain] bombards St. Malo, iii. 432. bombards Havre de Grace, 442. Granville, 459. purſues du Bart's ſquadron, 478. [rear-admiral] ſent to the Weſt-Indies, 504. demands ſatisfaction of the Spaniards, for depredations committed, but in vain, 512. goes in queſt of the pirate Kidd, ib. goes on another expedition to the Weſt-Indies, 563. purſues and ingages monſieur du Caſſe's ſquadron, ib. ſhamefully abandon'd by ſome of his captains, 564. is mortally wounded, ib.

Benefices [vacant] ſeiz'd by William Rufus, i. 216. fill'd by Henry I. 229.

Benefit of the Clergy, what, ii. 201, n. 5. act to eſtabliſh it, ib.

Benevolence, a method of raiſing money, practiſed by Edward IV. i. 716. reviv'd by Henry VII. 780. and again by K. James I. ii. 423, 442, 461.

Bentinck [William] ſent by the Prince of Orange to K. James II. with an offer of his ſervice, iii. 246. for having the Prince of Orange made K. alone, 309. created earl of Portland, n. 1, 349.

Beorna, K. of Eſtanglia, i. 64.

Beornred, K. of Mercia, the uſurper, i. 61.

Berenger oppoſes the doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation, i. 253. his two abjurations, ib.

Berkley [judge] his ſentence, ii. 831.

Berkley [ſir John] helps K. Charles to eſcape from Hampton-court, ii. 892.

Berkley [lord] commands a ſquadron, order'd to attempt the harbor of Breſt, iii. 441. returns unſucceſsful, 442. takes 70 ſhips coming from the North, ib. bombards Diep, ib. St. Malo and Calais, 459. makes a fruitleſs attempt on Dunkirk, ib. appointed admiral of the fleet, 477. does conſiderable damage on the coaſt of France, 478. his death, 489.

Berkstead [John] one of the judges of K. Charles I. apprehended in Holland, and executed, iii. 83.

Bermondsey-abbey, Q. Elizabeth Woodville, dowager of Edward IV. confined and dies there, i. 764.

Bernard's-Heath Battle, i. 675.

Bernicia, ſucceſſion of its Kings, i. 46.

Bernonville [congreſs of] i. 591 or 583.

Berry [d. of] renounces his pretenſions on Spain, iii. 739.

Bertha, Q. of Kent, a chriſtian, i. 76.

Berulle [father] general of the oratory-prieſts, ſent to Rome on the affair of Prince Charles's marriage with Henrietta Maria of France, ii. 484.

Berwick taken by K. Edward I. i. 426. by Robert Bruce K of Scotland, 446. yielded to Edward III. by Edward Baliol, 466. ſeiz'd by the Scots, but retaken, 510.

Berwick [d. of] taken priſoner by brigadier Churchill, iii. 434. accompanies K. James on his intended expedition to England, 469. comes to London, 494. a proclamation iſſued to apprehend him, ib. commands the French army at the battle of Almanza, 675. under the Elector of Bavaria, on the Rhine, 686.

Bethel [Slingsby] choſen ſheriff of London, iii. 197. accuſed of packing juries, 212.

Betholdus, archbp. of Canterbury, i. 82.

Bethune taken by the allies, iii. 713.

Beverley, John of, i. 88.

Bible tranſlated into Saxon, i. 122. [Engliſh] burned a. London, ii. 137. [tranſlation of] reſolved on, and undertaken by K. Henry VIII. 143. printed, 156. ſet up in churches, and allow'd in private houſes, 162.

Billeting of ſoldiers complain'd of, ii. 525, 526.

Bilney, burned for religion, ii. 123.

Birinus converts the Weſt-Saxons, i. 89. baptizes the K. of Weſſex, ib.

Birmingham taken by Prince Rupert, ii. 808.

Biron [marſhal de] inveſts Roan, ii. 366. ſaying on the e. of Eſſex's penitence, 383. beheaded, 386.

Bishopricks, ſix new ones erected, ii. 168.

Biſhops, of their election, i. 172. ſeveral depoſed by William the Conqueror, 205. take the oaths to K. Stephen, 235, and afterwards acknowledge Maud, 240. great pomp and vanity, 238 humbled by K. Stephen, ib. their rank aſcertain'd, 251. refuſe to excommunicate the e. of Pembroke, 350. power of impriſoning heretics revoked, 515. condemn K. Henry's marriage with Q. Catherine, ii. 102. conduct on aboliſhing the Pope's authority, 134. charge the court with perſecution, 241. inſtructed againſt the Presbyterians, 553. attachment to K. Charles increaſes, 652. right to ſit in Parliament examin'd, ib. 656, 657, 679, 684, 748. twelve proteſt, 712. and are ſent to the Tower, 713. debate on their right to ſit in trials, iii. 188. conſulted on the Prince of Orange's invaſion, 278. advice, 279. excuſe themſelves concerning the Prince of Orange's declaration, 282. refuſe to take the aſſociation, and why, 293.

Biſhops, five popiſh ones reſtored, ii. 229. ſeven proteſtant ones deprived, 236. ſome oppoſe the reformation, 255.

Biſhops, ſeven, petition K. James II. to be excuſed from publiſhing his declaration, iii. 265, 337. ſummon'd before the council, 266, 337. ſent to the Tower, ib. tried, and acquitted, which occaſions great joy, 273, 338. [ſeveral] abſent from the houſe of lords at the revolution, 342.

Biſhops [of Scotland] attempt of K. James to re-eſtabliſh them, ii. 433.

Black-heath-Battle, i. 794.

Blair [ſir Adam] ſentenc'd for high-treaſon, in Scotland, iii. 457.

Blake [admiral] his engagements with Van Trump, iii. 23, 24. burns the Spaniſh Galeons from St. Croix, 34.

Blanch [Q. Dowager] accuſed of conſpiring againſt Henry V. i. 592 or 583.

Blaregnies, vid. Malplacquet.

Blenheim [battle of] vid. Hochſtadt. a little army taken priſoners there, iii. 620. houſe order'd to be built, 629.

Blood ſteals the crown, iii. 123. examin'd by the K. ib. pardon'd, 124. See alſo n. 2. ib.

Bloody-Statute, ii. 159. repeal'd, 201.

Blunt, an accomplice of the e. of Eſſex, executed, ii. 384.

BOADICIA, Q. of the Iceni, ſpirits up a revolt againſt the Romans, i. 9. her ſpeech to her army, 10. ſhe's routed, and poiſons herſelf, ibid.

BOCKLAND and Bockmen, what, i. 178.

BODLEY [ſir Thomas] ſent into Germany, ii. 342.

BODMYN [Boyer, mayor of] baſely hang'd, ii. 209. n. 3.

BOHEMIA [K. of] ſlain at the battle of Crecy, i. 478.

BOHEMIA, affairs of that kingdom during the diſpute between the elector Frederic, and the arch-duke Ferdinand, ii. 437, 438, 439, 440, 441, 448, 462.

BOLEYN [Ann] an account of her, ii. 100. married to K. HENRY VIII. 124. remarks on her conduct, 131. invectives againſt her, ib. n. 1. ſuſpected by the K. who is inflam'd by her enemies, 145. accuſed of adultery and inceſt, and made priſoner, ib. confeſſes ſome paſſages, ib. condemned and beheaded, 146. behavior under ſentence, ib. n. 2. character, 146, 147.

BONDE, [count de] Swediſh embaſſador, makes his public entry in mourning, 502. returns the Garter and GEORGE of CHARLES XI. ib.

BONIFACE [archbp. of Canterbury] his character, i. 403.

BONNER [Edmund] ſent to Marſeilles on the affair of K. HENRY's divorce, ii. 132. affronts the Pope, ib. made biſhop, 157. behaves inſolently to the French K. ib. character, 167. ſent to priſon, 200. deprived, 212. ſet at liberty, 227. inhumanly furious againſt the reformed, 241. ſlackens his ſeverity, but renews it on a letter from court, 242.

BONN beſieged, and taken by the allies, iii. 588. a deſcription of the place, n. 3. ib.

BOSWORTH-Battle, i. 750.

BOTHMAR [baron] envoy extraordinary from the El. of Hanover, preſents a memorable memorial, iii. 727.

BOTHWELL [e. of] in favor with MARY, Q. of Scots, ii. 280. ſcandalous familiarity with her, 281, 286. accuſed of the K's death; tries in vain to clear himſelf, 286. acquited by his dependents, 287. puts away his wife, and marries the Q. ib. retires with the Q. from the confederate lords, 288. casket intercepted, which diſcovers his intrigues with the Q. ib. flies to the iſles of Orkney, 289. eſcapes to Denmark, and is impriſon'd, 292.

BOTHWELL [e. of] conſpires againſt K. JAMES, ii. 363. demanded of Q. ELIZABETH, who refuſes to deliver him, 368.

BOUCHAIN taken by the d. of Marlborough, 723. a deſcription of the place, n. 1. ib. retaken by the French, 738.

BOUFLERS [monſieur de] commands a body of dragoons, at the battle of Steenkirk, 424. bombards Charleroy, ib. defends Namur againſt K. WILLIAM, 460. is arreſted by K. WILLIAM, but releas'd, 462. greatly accelerates the treaty of Ryſwick, n. 2. 491. commands under the d. of Burgundy, 554. unſucceſsful attempt upon Nimeguen, 555. a deſign of his fruſtrated, 589. defends Liſle againſt Prince Eugene, 689. defeated at the battle of Malplacquet, 702.

BOULOGNE ſurrenders to K. HENRY VIII. ii. 182. beſieg'd by the French, 210. reſtored, 214.

BOUNTY-MONY allow'd the disbanded ſoldiers, iii. 497. and to the officers of the fleet, 514. to both ſoldiers and ſeamen, 626.

BOURBON [d. of] his agreement with HENRY V. i. 590 or 581. dies in England, 633.

——— [d. of, conſtable of France] breaks with the French K. ii. 71. exploits and intrigues, 72—92. ſlain, 93.

BOURCHIER [cardinal] archbp. of Canterbury, dies, i. 762.

BOURCHIER [mr.] conſpires to deliver up Briſtol to K. CHARLES I. ii. 799.

BOURGES [archbp. of] embaſſador from France, his bold ſpeech to HENRY V. i. 580 or 572.

BOURN, chaplain to Bonner, preaches a ſermon that expoſes him to danger, ii. 227, 228.

BOURG [de] defeats count Merci, iii. 704.

BOYNE, a famous battle there, iii. 386. importance of it. n. 1, 387.

BRABANT [States of] acknowledge King CHARLES III. iii. 651.

BRADFORD [John] reſcues Bourn, a popiſh chaplain, ii. 228. committed to priſon, 229.

BRADSHAW [John] ſerjeant at law, choſen preſident of the high-court of juſtice for trying K. CHARLES I. ii. 931.

BRADWARDIN [abp of Cant.] his character, i. 543 or 540.

BRANDON [Charles] created d. of Suffolk. ii. 35. marries the Q. Dowager of France, 39. dies, 184.

BRANDENBURG [Frederick III. Elector of] inſtall'd knight of the garter, iii. 443. enters into a confederacy againſt CHARLES XII. King of Sweden, 532.

BRAUSE [William de] his wife's anſwer to the K's commiſſioners who demanded her ſon in hoſtage, i. 309. n. 1.

BREDA, negociations there, between King CHARLES II and the Scots, iii. 12.

BREGWIN, archbp. of Canterbury, i. 82.

BRENTFORD attack'd by K. CHARLES I. ii. 793.

BREST, fruitleſs attempt to deſtroy the harbor of that place, iii. 441. deſcription and ſtrength of that harbor, ib.

BRET commands the city trained-bands againſt ſir Thomas Wyat, ii. 234. deſerts to him, ib. hang'd, 235.

BRETANY [ducheſs of, Conſtance] puts herſelf under K. PHILIP's protection, i. 298. reconciled to K. JOHN, ib. marries Guy de Thouars, 299. [affairs of] 473, 474. [d. of] diſpoſſeis'd by the French K. 510. makes a treaty with France, and uſes the Engliſh coldly, 511. [John the valiant, d. of] dies, 549 or 548. [affairs of] 692, &c.

BRETIGNY, [treaty of] between EDWARD III. and France, i. 486, 487, 488. reflections on it, 489.

BRETONS make a deſcent on Portland, which the Engliſh revenge, i. 559 or 557.

BRIBERIES [ſeveral] proceeded againſt in parliament, iii. 447. repreſentation to the King concerning them, ib. in the caſe of the Eaſt-India company, 448. a committee appointed to inquire into them, 449. report of the committee, ib. in the caſe of the orphan's bill examined into, 450. report of the committee concerning that matter, ib. in elections inquired into, 521.

BRIDGMAN [ſir Orlando] made keeper of the great ſeal, iii. 104. Speech, ib.

BRIDGWATER taken by the marq. of Hertford, ii. 811.

BRIGANTES, a people of Britain, in the north, i. 7.

BRIHUEGA [battle of] fatal to the Engliſh, iii. 714.

BRISTOL, conſpiracy to deliver it to the K. ii. 799. taken by P. Rupert, 809. retaken by Fairfax, 862.

BRITAIN, a general deſcription of it, i. introd. vii. etymology of the name, viii. Cæſar's two expeditions into Britain, i. 1, 2, &c. ſtate of this iſland under Auguſtus, Tiberius, and Caligula, 5. Claudius reduces it, 6, 7. Adrian divides it by a rampart, 14. Severus divides it by a wall, 15. Vandals and Burgundians, tranſplanted thither, 16. ſtate of the iſland under Conſtantine, 16, 17. the name chang'd into that of England, 45. its ſtate under the Saxons, 49.

BRITHRICK, K. of Weſſex, i. 72.

BRITHRICK, brother to Edrick Streon, admiral of ETHELRED II's fleet, loſes moſt of his ſhips in purſuit of a private revenge, i. 143.

BRITONS, their origin, i. introd. viii, ix. their cuſtoms and manners, ix. their way of fighting, their trade and religion, x. their government, xi. their ſeveral engagements with Cæſar's army, 2, 3, &c. they revolt againſt the Romans, 9. foreign families intermix with them, 19. they elect Emperors, ibid. they are deſerted by the Romans, and haraſs'd by the Picts and Scots, 20. their weakneſs, and the cauſe of it, 21. they elect Vortigern for their King, who calls in the Saxons, 22, 23. converſion of the Britons, 25. they require aid from the Scots, 44. retire into Cambria, 45. their ſtate, ibid. refuſe ſubmiſſion to the church of Rome, 79, 80.

BROMLEY [judge] one of the regents of the kingdom during EDWARD VI's minority, ii. 194.

BROMLEY [William, eſq;] choſen ſpeaker of the houſe of commons, iii. 715. appointed ſecretary of ſtate, 742.

BRISAC [old] taken by the French, iii. 594.

BROOKE [lord] ſlain before Litchfield, ii. 794.

BROWN [ſir Anthony] one of the regents appointed by HENRY VIII's will, ii. 194.

BRUCE [Robert] his genealogy, i. 415. claim to the Scots crown, ib. &c. rejected in K. EDWARD's deciſion, 422. forms the deſign of freeing his country, 436. betray'd by Cumin, ib. eſcapes into Scotland, and ſtabs Cumin, 437. declares againſt King EDWARD, and crown'd K. of Scotland, ib. defeated, and obliged to hide, ib. defeats the e. of Pembroke, ib. makes great progreſs in Scotland, 444. takes Sterlyn, and wins the battle of Bannocks-down, ib. waſtes England, 446. refuſes to make peace, and takes Berwick, ib. defeats K. EDWARD II. and waſtes England, 449. conſents to a truce of 13 years, ib. breaks it, 457. makes a peace, 459. dies, 461. character, ib.

BRUCE [Edward] brother of Robert, defeats the Engliſh, i. 444. crown'd K. of Ireland, 446. ſlain, ib.

BRUCE [ſir Alexander] expel'd the parliament of Scotland, for aſſerting Presbytery to be inconſiſtent with Monarchy, iii. 553.

BRUGES bombarded by baron Spar, iii. 624. ſubmits to K. CHARLES III, 652. taken by the French by ſtratagem, 686. they abandon it again, 692.

BRUNAMBURGH, battle of, i. 121.

BRUNSWICK [George William, d. of] inſtal'd knight of the garter, iii. 443.

BRUSSELS ſubmits to K. CHARLES III. iii. 651. attempted by the Elector of Bavaria in vain, 691.

BRUTUS, the ſuppoſed founder of the Britiſh nation, i. introd. viii.

BUCER, a proteſtant divine, his bones dug up and burned, ii. 245.

BUCHANAN [George] his character, as an hiſtorian, ii. 248. his account of the K. of Scots murder, ib. 285. one of the commiſſioners at the York conference, 295. n.

BUCKHURST [lord, Thomas Sackville,] made lord-treaſurer, ii. 377. created e. of Dorſet, 390. dies, 410. See Dorſet.

BUCKINGHAM [d. of, Henry Stafford] intrigues in favor of Richard d. of Glouceſter, i. 729——738. demands the moiety of the inheritance of Hereford, 739. conſpires againſt K. RICHARD, 740. betrayed and beheaded, 744.

BUCKINGHAM [d. of, Edward Stafford] ſon of the former, diſgrace and death by means of Wolſey, ii. 64, 65.

BUCKINGHAM [ducheſs of] mother of George Villiers, d. of Buckingham, rules all at court, ii. 442. See Villiers.

BUCKINGHAM [John Sheffield, d. of] made lord ſteward of the houſhold, iii. 712.

BUDE DE VERACE, writes to Mr. Skelton an account of the prince of Orange's preparations, iii. 276.

BULLS of the Popes, remarks on one of pope Formoſus, i. 135. meaning of the word Bull, ib. n. diverſe of them for ſqueezing money out of the people, 375. to confirm the ſettlement on HENRY VII. 760. concerning ſanctuaries, 767.

BULL [dr.] made biſhop of St. David's, iii. 631.

BURGAGE [tenure in] what, i. 329. n. 3.

BURGHERS, or magiſtrates, among the Saxons, i. 178.

BURGUNDIANS, what, i. 585 or 577. perſecuted by the d'Armagnac party, ib. and 588 or 579. maſſacre the Armagnacs and murder the conſtable, 592 or 584.

BURGUNDY [d. of] murders the d. of Orleans, i. 564 or 561. makes an alliance with HENRY IV. 568 or 565. ſeeks the friendſhip of HENRY V. 573 or 562. reduced to great ſtraits, procures a peace with the Dauphin, 576 or 573. challenges K. HENRY, 585 or 576. makes a treaty with HENRY, 588 or 580. takes up arms and approaches Paris, 591 or 582. ſeeks to be reconciled with the Dauphin, 594, 595, or 586. which he accompliſhes, 596 or 587. breaks off the conference of Meulant, ib. aſſaſſinated, 597 or 588.
BURGUNDY [Philip d. of] makes a treaty with HENRY VI. i. 598 or 589. leagues with the d. of Bedford againſt CHARLES VII. 613 or 605. challenges the d. of Glouceſter, 621 or 612. leſs intractable towards CHARLES, ib. diſpoſition towards the parties, 633. farther engaged to the Engliſh, 634. breaks with the d. of Bedford on his ſecond marriage, 637. takes ſome places from the French, 638. makes a ſeparate peace with K. CHARLES, 639. excuſes himſelf to HENRY, and offers his mediation, which is rejected, 641. declares againſt England, ib. beſieges Calais, but driven away by the d. of Glouceſter, 642. rouſes K. CHARLES, and inveſts Crotoy, but raiſes the ſiege, 643. makes another vain attempt on Calais, 644. diſpoſition, 645. makes a treaty of commerce with England, 646. and a truce, 652. brings the two Ks. to a truce, 653. both prolonged, 656.
BURGUNDY [Charles d. of] warns EDWARD IV. of a deſign againſt him, i. 701. poſture of his affairs, 704. helps to reſtore K. EDWARD, 705. treaties between him and EDWARD, 715. quarrels with EDWARD, 718. gives up the e. of Richmond, but gets him back, 719. affairs, 720. dies, ib.
BURGUNDY [Maria, ducheſs of] ſtripp'd of her dominions by LEWIS XI. i. 720. eſpouſes Maximilian of Auſtria, 721.
BURGUNDY [Margaret ducheſs of] promiſes to aſſiſt Lambert Simnel, i. 765. ſets up Perkin Warbeck to diſtreſs K. HENRY VII. and inſtructs him, 784.
BURGUNDY [d. of] makes his firſt campain, iii. 555. commands the French army in Flanders, 686.
BURLEIGH [lord] See Cecil.
BURLEY [captain] his inſurrection in favor K. CHARLES, ii. 900. taken and executed, ib.
BURNET [dr. Gilbert] goes over to the prince of Orange at the Hague, iii. 276. his account of the pretender's birth, 268, &c. account of K. CHARLES II's death, 228, &c. character of that prince, 231. made biſhop of Salisbury, 348. preaches the coronation ſermon, 357. publiſhes a paſtoral letter, which gives offence, 378. his reflections on the fight off of la Hogue, n. 1, 422. blames ſir John Aſhby, n. 2, ib. obſervations on the impriſonment of the peers for the ſham-plot, n. 1, 426. his paſtoral letter burnt by the hands of the common hangman, 428. preaches the thankſgiving ſermon for the peace, 495. declared preceptor of the d. of Glouceſter, 498. account of paſſing the act for the new Eaſt-India company, n. 2, 499. obſervation on Q. ANN's firſt ſpeech, n. 1, 543. reflections on ſir John Munden's trial, n. 1, 565. on ſir George Rooke's conduct, n. 2 and 5, ib. farther reflections on ſir George Rooke's conduct, n. 5, 567. account of his conduct in 1703, n. 5, 585. reflections on a memorable debate in the houſe of lords, 717. a very odd paragraph in his hiſtory, with a reflection upon it, n. 4, 727.
BURTON [Bartholomew] of the exciſe-office, commited to newgate for forgery, iii. 500.
BUTLER [James] created e. of Ormond by K. EDWARD III, i. 460.
BUTLER [mr. Charles, brother to the d. of Ormond] created e. of Arran, iii. 439.
BUTTON [John] biſhop of Hereford, i. 543, or 541.
BYNG [ſir George] takes a great number of French prizes, iii. 633. commands a ſquadron to oppoſe the intended invaſion, in 1708, 684. purſues the French fleet, and takes the Salisbury, ib. convoys the Q. of Portugal to Lisbon, 705.
BYRON [ſir John] lieutenant of the Tower, accuſed by the commons, ii. 721.

C

CABAL, council of K. CHALES II, ſo call'd, iii. 116. deſigns of it, 117. diſpleaſed with the K. 135.
CADE [Jack] makes an inſurrection in Kent, i. 660, 661. petitions the parliament, cuts to pieces ſome of the King's army, enters London, and beheads the high-treaſurer, 661. deſerted and ſlain, ib.
CADIZ ſack'd by the Engliſh, ii. 363.
CADIZ, unſucceſsful attempt on that place, iii. 565. the deſign abandon'd, 567.
CADOC, abbot of Landcaerven, i. 47.
CADOGAN [brigadier] bravery at forcing the French lines, iii. 637. taken priſoner but releas'd again 653. [lieutenant general] enters the French lines at Pont à Vendin, 712.
CÆSAR [Charles, eſq;] committed to the Tower, iii. 645.
CAILLEMOTE's [monſieur la] bravery at the battle of the Boyne, where he is kill'd, n. 2. iii. 387.
CALAIS, beſieg'd by K. EDWARD III. i. 479. taken, 480. [burgher of] his heroic behavior, ib. [town] filled with Engliſh, ib. loſt to the French, ii. 247. taken by the Spaniards, 372.
——— bombarded, iii. 459. again bombarded by ſir Cloudeſly Shovel, 477.
CALDSTREAM, a truce concluded there, i. 784.
CALENDAR reformed by Pope Gregory XIII. ii. 335.
CALIDONIANS, who they were, i. 16.
CALLIERE [monſ.] ſent by France to Holland, to make overtures for a peace, iii. 479.
CALIGULA, his fooliſh expedition againſt the Britons, i. 5.
CALUMNY, a deity, Apelles's revenge on her, i. 125. n.
CAMBRAY [league of] againſt the Venetians, ii. 9. [peace of] between CHARLES V Emperor, and FRANCIS I. of France, 115.
CAMBRIA [now Wales] the Britons retreat thither, i. 45. name changed by the Saxons, ib.
CAMBRIDGE [univerſity of] founded by EDWARD the elder, i. 117. colleges there, ib. n. 2. ſchools re-eſtabliſh'd there by HENRY I, 229. refuſes to admit a benedictine monk to the degree of maſter of arts, iii. 260.
——— [RICHARD of Coningsburg, e. of] executed for a conſpiracy againſt HENRY V, i. 580 or 572.
CAMDEN [William] his character, and the character of his annals of Scotland, ii. 284. reflection on ſome paſſages therein, 303, 345.
CAMELODUNUM made a Roman colony, i. 7.
CAMERON [ſir Evan, with his highlanders] ſubmit to K. WILLIAM and Q. MARY, iii. 416.
CAMPEJO [Cardinal] joined with Wolſey in the affair of K. HENRY's divorce, ii. 107. deals doubly, ib. artfully ſpins out the affair, 111, 112. returns to Rome, 113.
CANADA, unſucceſsful expedition thither, iii. 724.
CANGI, a people of Britain, to the eaſt of Wales, i. 7.
CANNON, firſt uſed by the Engliſh at the battle of Crecy, i. 478.
CANON-LAW, when introduced into England, i. 245.
CANONS, in the reign of K. EDGAR, i. 137. of Elfrick, 171. ſent by CHARLES I. into Scotland, ii. 573.
CANTERBURY, a church erected there, i. 77. [archbiſhop of, Elphegus] murdered by the Danes, i. 144. plunder'd and burnt, ib. [Robert archbiſhop of] an enemy to e. Goodwin, 157. withdraws into Normandy, and is deprived, 159. [archbiſhops of] extend their juriſdiction over Wales, 248. [archbiſhop of, Hubert] ſpeech at the coronation of K. JOHN, 297, emulates the K. 300. [Stephen Langton archbiſhop of] elected, 305. the Pope exhorts the K. and clergy to acknowledge him, 306. abſolves the K. 312. oppoſes and threatens him, ib. ſhews the barons the charter of Henry I. ib. proteſts againſt K. JOHN's reſignation, 313. appeals to the Pope, ib. refuſes to publiſh the barons excommunication, 317. made chancellor to Prince Lewis of France, 318. dies, 344. [Richard le Grand, archbp. of,] choſen by the Pope, 345. diſcontented, 346. [Stratford] procures a peace between K. EDWARD III, and the malecontent nobility, i. 460.
CANUTUS, ſon of SWENO, proclaim'd K. of England, i. 144. withdraws to Denmark, but returns next year, and reduces moſt of the kingdom, 145, 146. five battles between him and Edmund in one year, 146. gains a compleat victory, and refuſes a challenge from EDMUND, 147. divides the kingdom with EDMUND, ib. acknowledged ſole K. 148. attempts to gain the affection of the people, ib. ſends the two ſons of EDMUND to be murder'd, 149. baniſhes the two EDWY's, but recalls and murders one of them, ib. marries EMMA of Normandy, ib. frees himſelf from ſome lords whom he apprehended, ib. taxes the Engliſh, and goes into Denmark, ib. ratifies the Daniſh laws, 150. goes againſt the Swedes, and ſeizes Norway, ib. gives himſelf to devotion, and goes to Rome, where he makes preſents, and obtains favours for the Engliſh, ib. death and character, ib. 151. remarkable inſtance of his humility, 151. children, ib.
CAPEL [Arthur lord] beſieg'd in Colcheſter, ii. 908. taken, 913. trial and defence, iii. 5. beheaded, 6.
CAPEL [ſir Henry] made baron Capel of Tewksbury, iii. 416.
CARACTACUS, K. of the Silures, taken priſoner by Oſtorius, and ſent to Rome, i. 8. his ſpeech to the Emperor, ib.
CARAUSIUS aſſumes Imperial dignity, i. 16. has Britain for his ſhare, ib. is ſlain, ib.
CARR [ſir Robert] becomes K. JAMES's favorite, ii. 415. made viſc. Rocheſter, &c. 416. loaded with favors, acts prudently, ib. loves the counteſs of Eſſex, 418. gets her divorced, and Overbury murder'd for oppoſing it, 419, 420. marries her, 421. made e. of Somerſet, ib. govern'd by the e. of Northampton, ib. loſes credit, and ſues for a pardon, 425. arreſted, 426. condemned, and afterwards pardon'd, 427. immenſe fortune, 430.
CARDAN, the Italian philoſopher, his character of K. EDWARD VI. ii. 219. n. 5.
CAREW [Peter] concern'd with ſir Thomas Wyat in a conſpiracy againſt Q. MARY, ii. 234, 235.
CAREY [ſir ROBERT] ſent to K. JAMES I, with the news of Q. ELIZABETH's death, ii. 388.
CARLISLE [Thomas Merks, biſhop of] makes a remarkable ſpeech in K. RICHARD's favor, i. 547 or 545. impriſoned, 548 or 547. condemn'd for a conſpiracy, dies with fear, 552 or 550.
CARLISLE addreſs to K. JAMES II, iii. 273.
CARLOVINGIENS and Merovingiens, why ſo called, i. 176, and n. 4.
CARLOWITZ [treaty of] concluded by the mediation of England and Holland, iii. 506.
CARTER [rear admiral] falſely aſpers'd, iii. 417. kill'd at the fight off of La Hogue. n. 2. 420. his dying words, ib.
CARTHAGENA ſubmits to K. CHARLES III, iii. 655. is retaken by the Spaniards, 661.
CARTWRIGHT [dr. dean of Rippon] his gloſs on JAMES II's promiſes, for which he is made biſhop of Cheſter, iii. 254.
CASAL taken by the confederates, iii. 462. reduced in 1706, by the d. of Savoy, 661, CASALI [ſir Gregory] concern'd in the affair of K. HENRY's divorce, ii. 103.

CASIMIR [Prince] an account of him, ii. 326, 327, 328.

CASSIBELAN, K. of the Trinobantes, i. introd. xi. beats the Romans, 1, 3. is defeated by them, 4. makes his peace, and pays tribute, ib.

CASTILE [affairs of] i. 492. [Peter the Cruel, K. of] driven out of his kingdom, ib. reſtored by Edward Prince of Wales, ib. ingratitude, ib. cataſtrophe, 493. [HENRY, K. of] joins the French againſt the Engliſh, 496. [PHILIP, K. of] arrives in England, and negociates ſeveral matters with K. HENRY VII, 806.

CASTLEMAIN [e. of, Roger Palmer] apprehended for contriving the Meal-tub plot, iii. 194. acquitted, 196.

CATALANS ſubdue Tarragona, Tortoſa, Lerida and Gironne for K. CHARLES III, iii. 610. their behavior after the peace of Utrecht, 745.

CATALONIA, an inſurrection there, iii. 397. ſubmits to K. CHARLES III, 634.

CATEAU [treaty of] ii. 255, 256.

CATESBY, favourite of RICHARD III. betrays lord Haſtings, i. 734. executed, 751.

CATESBY [Robert] chief of the Powder-plot conſpirators, ii. 404.

CATHERINE, [daughter of CHARLES VI, K. of France] married to HENRY V, i. 598 or 590. marries Owen Tudor, 642.

CATHERINE, [daughter of K. FERDINAND of Arragon] married to Prince Arthur, i. 801. contracted to Prince Henry, 803. married to him after his acceſſion to the throne, ii. 6. perſuaded to deſiſt from her marriage claim, 107. appeals from the proceedings of the legates, 111. arguments againſt the divorce, 117. remarks on her conduct, 131. remains inflexible, but is ſtiled only Princeſs-dowager, 132. death and character, 143, and n. 3. divorce from K. HENRY repeal'd, 231.

CATHERINE HOWARD, niece to the d. of Norfolk, married to K. HENRY VIII, and declared Q. ii. 166. cauſes alterations in matters of religion, ib. leudneſs diſcover'd, which ſhe confeſſes, 169. condemned and beheaded, 170.

CATHERINE PARR, relict of lord Latimer, married to K. HENRY VIII. 178. favors the reformation, 188. accuſed to the K. but happily brings herſelf off, 189. married to the lord Thomas Seymour, 202. dies, 206.

CATHERINE of Portugal arrives in England, iii. 80. married to K. CHARLES II. ib.

CATHOLICS [Roman] injoy a large indulgence, iii. 344. officers give uneaſineſs to the Pr. of Orange, 335. Princes favor the revolution, 340. voted for ever excluded from the ſucceſſion to the crown of England, 342.

CATINAT [monſ.] ſucceſsful againſt the d. of Savoy, iii. 397. takes a great number of places, 409. wins the battle of Marſiglia, 435.

CAUTIONARY TOWNS delivered to Q. ELIZABETH, ii. 343. ſold to the States by K. JAMES, I. 430.

CAXTON [William] the hiſtorian, i. 822. n.

CEADDA, biſhop of the Northumbrians, i. 86.

CEARLUS, K. of Mercia, i. 60.

CECIL [ſir William] in favor with Q. ELIZABETH, ii. 265. plot againſt him, and the occaſion, 299. made lord Burleigh and treaſurer, 310. dies, 377.

CECIL [Robert] ſon of the treaſurer, made ſecretary of ſtate, ii. 373. devoted to K. JAMES, 389. created e. of Salisbury, 390. made treaſurer, 410. ſpeech to the parliament for K. JAMES, 411, 412. artifice to limit the K's bounty, 416. dies, 417.

CECIL [Sir Edward] his expedition to Spain, ii. 497.

CED, biſhop of the Eaſt Saxons, i. 91.

CEDDA, Adda, Beti, and Diurna, miſſionaries to the Mercians, i. 90.

CEDWALLA, K. of Weſſex, i. 71.

CELANO [battle of] i. 393.

CELIBACY of prieſts, when injoined in England, i. 171. tranſactions concerning it, 248.

CENELM, K. of Mercia, i. 62.

CENSUS, Eſchwin, and Centwin, Kings of Eſſex, i. 70.

CENULPH, K. of Weſſex, i. 72.

CERRED, K. of Northumberland, i. 58.

CENRED, K. of Mercia, i. 60.

CEOLRED, K. of Mercia, i. 60.

CEOLULPH, K. of Northumberland, i. 58.

CENTWIN, K. of Weſſex, i. 70.

CEOLULPH, K. of Mercia, i. 62.

CEOLULPH, K. of Weſſex, i. 70.

CEOLRICK, K. of Weſſex, i. 70.

CEORLES, or tradeſmen among the Saxons, what, i. 178.

CERDICK arrives in Britain, i. 36. beats Cador, the nephew of Arthur, 37. is defeated by Arthur, ib. ſlays Ambroſius, 38. founds the kingdom of Weſſex, 39. wins the battle of Chardſley, 40. takes the Iſle of Wight, ib. dies, 41.

CESSATION of arms between the French and the Engliſh publiſh'd, iii. 737. twice renew'd, 738. in Catalonia, ib. between France and Portugal, 739.

CETTE taken by ſir John Norris, but abandon'd again, iii. 714.

CEVENNOIS, a brief account of that people, n. 2 and 3. iii. 587.

CHAISE [F. la] his pernicious letters, iii. 336.

CHALDGRAVE field battle, ii. 809.

CHALLENGE from Philip of France to K. RICHARD I. of England, which Philip afterwards does not ſtand to, i. 293.

CHAMBERS [alderman] refuſes to pay tonage and poundage, ii. 541. fined, 543.

CHAMPION at the coronation, the firſt account of one, i. 508.

CHANCELLORS, among the Saxons, what, i. 177.

CHANDOS [John] made by EDWARD III. his lieutenant-general in France, i. 490. his character, ib. dies, 496.

CHANTRY lands alienated, ii. 196. reſtored to K. EDWARD VI. 202.

CHARLEMAGNE, Emperor, attempts to conquer the Saxons, i. 99.

CHALEROY bombarded by monſ. de Bouflers, iii. 424. taken by the French, 435.

CHARLES [Prince] ſon of K. JAMES I. created Prince of Wales, ii. 429. treaty for his marriage with the Infanta of Spain, 461—468. ſets out for Spain, 468. not ſuffer'd to ſee the Infanta in private, ib. letters to the Pope, 469. ſwears to the marriage-articles, 472. waits for a new diſpenſation, which he wiſhes may never arrive, ib. leaves a proxy to celebrate the marriage, and returns home, 475. prevails on the K. to break off the treaty, ib. treaty for his marriage with Henrietta Maria of France, 477—486. ſuſpected by his father, on Gondomar's inſinuation, 481. procures the diſgrace of the lord-treaſurer and the e. of Briſtol, 482. articles of his marriage, 484, 485, 486. [I. K. of England] projects concerning the regal power, and the Palatinate, 489. married, 491. firſt ſpeech in parliament, ib. 492. anſwers in general to a petition againſt popiſh recuſants, 492. brings the examination of Montague's book from before the commons to his council, ib. ſends for the parliament, and haſtens the ſupplies, 493. anſwers their petition againſt recuſants, 494. executes not his promiſes, 495. determines to diſſolve the parliament, whereupon the commons draw up a declaration in their own defence, 496. fits out a fleet againſt Spain, and extorts loans, ib. calls a new parliament, and is crowned, 497. thanked for his anſwer to the petition againſt recuſants, 498. orders the judges to proceed againſt recuſants, ib. writes to the ſpeaker to haſten a ſupply, 499. replies to the commons anſwer, 500. ſpeech to the parliament at Whitehall, 501, 502. conſents to the proſecution of Buckingham, 505. ſpeech to the lords in Buckingham's favor, 507. ſupports his favorite, and writes to the commons for a ſupply, 508. diſſolves the parliament againſt the advice of the lords, 510. declaration, notifying the cauſes of aſſembling and diſſolving the two laſt parliaments, 513, 514, 515. remarks on it, 515. proclamation againſt the commons remonſtrance, 516. other proclamations, ib. prevents Buckingham's being accuſed in the ſtar-chamber, ib. inſtructions to the commiſſioners for raiſing a loan, ib. 517. ſtate of his affairs, and reaſons of his conduct, 518. indeavors to break with France, 519. ſends a fleet to Rochel, 520. calls a parliament, and demands a ſupply, 521. view in his ſpeech, 523. demands of the commons, 524. ſeveral meſſages to them, ib. 525. reply to the petition about billeting ſoldiers, 527. indeavors to prevent the petition of right, 528. more meſſages to the commons, 529, 530. letter to the lords, which is communicated to the commons, 531. ſpeech before reading the petition, 532. reply to it, 533. meſſages, 534. gives a more ſatisfactory anſwer to the petition, 535. cancells the commiſſion for raiſing money without parliament, 539. ſpeeches concerning tonage and poundage, 540, 542. proclamations, 541. forbids the commons to meddle with religious matters, which they regard not, 542. ſpeech at diſſolving the parliament, 544. propoſes queſtions concerning ſome impriſoned members to the judges, 545. declaration, notifying the cauſes of diſſolving the laſt parliament, 546—551. remarks thereon, 551. proclamation againſt falſe rumours touching parliaments, ib. makes peace with France, 552. ſupremacy conſidered, ib. revenues diminiſhed, ib. orders concerning the cuſtoms and militia, 553. grants monopolies, ib. treats of peace with Spain, ib. inſtructs the bps. againſt the presbyterians, ib. lends the K. of Sweden 10,000 men, ib. makes thoſe compound, who had neglected to receive knighthood, 554. proclamation for lords and gentlemen to reſide on their eſtates, 555. gains ſir Thomas Wentworth, and makes him preſident of the council at York, 556. goes to Scotland, and is crowned there, 557. indeavors to eſtabliſh epiſcopacy there, 558. ſupports wakes, revels, and recreations on ſundays, 559. ſuſpected of a ſcheme to re-eſtabliſh popery, and why, ib. inſtructions for the dean of his chapel at Edinburg, 560. firſt writ for ſhip-money, 562. requires the judges opinion concerning ſhip-money, 564. forbids departing the realm without his licence, ib. forbids foreigners to fiſh on the Britiſh coaſts, 565. grants a commiſſion about depopulations, ib. inſiſts on ſhip money, ib. publiſhes the judges opinion, 566. letter to the judges, and their anſwer, ib. deſigns touching Scotland, 568. puts off ſending the new liturgy, but ſends the new canons into Scotland, 573. ſends the liturgy, and orders it to be read, 574. proclamation concerning the doubtful meanings, 575. wrong meaſures with the Scots, 577. reaſons for what he did, 578. ſends marq. Hamilton to Scotland, who ſoon returns, ib. 579. declaration concerning ſcruples, 579. further affairs with the aſſembly, 580, 581, 582. reſolves on a war with Scotland, and ſummons the lords to bring troops to York, 583. demands money of the clergy, ib, aboliſhes monopolies, 584. led into errors, ib. begins to miſtruſt his friends, ib. anſwers the Scots ſuit for peace, 585. makes the e. of Traquair high-commiſſioner, ib. inſtructions to the commiſſioner, 586. letter to the arch-biſhop of St. Andrews, 587. prorogues the parliament of Scotland, 589. refuſes audience to the Scots committee, 590. reaſons for breaking with Scotland, ib. 591. ſpeech to a new parliament in England, 592. 594. offended at the commons procedure, 596. cauſes the lords to demand a conference. ib. ſpeech at diſſolving the parliament, 597. declaration of the cauſes for diſſolving it, ib. continues the convocation, 600. obtains a ſubſidy from the clergy, and raiſes mony by other ways, 601.

601. affairs alter, 602. ſpeech to the great council of peers, 605. conduct during the e. of Briſtol's trial, 606—636. writers of his hiſtory conſider'd, 636—640. ſtate of his affairs, 640. ſpeech at opening a new parliament, 641. forced to conſent to whatever the commons demand, 647. ſpeech to the parliament concerning the biſhops, 655. why he favoured papiſts, 658. treaty with Scotland, 662. concedes to all the Scots demands, 663. compared to HENRY VIII. 664. ſpeech in favor of lord Strafford, 676. behavior during Strafford's trial, 677, 678. contributes towards uniting the puritans, 678. inclinable to give Spain part of the Iriſh army, 680. goes to Scotland, in order to ſatisfy the Scots, 681. why oppoſed after his conceſſions, 686. demands aid of the Scotiſh army againſt the Iriſh, 688. reported to have given the Iriſh rebels a commiſſion, ib. 689. returns from Scotland, 690. refuſes a guard to the commons, 691. anſwer to the petition preſented to him, with the commons remonſtrance, 702. declaration in anſwer to the remonſtrance of the ſtate of the nation, 703—706. ſpeech to both houſes, 706. meſſage concerning ſix condemned prieſts, 707. offers to raiſe 10,000 men for Ireland, 708. ſeats a guard near the parliament, ib. ſpeech concerning the bill for preſſing ſoldiers, 709. anſwers the petition of both houſes, ib. removes Balfour, lieutenant of the Tower, ib. and gives the place to Lunsford, 710. anſwers the lords petition in favor of the e. of Newport, ib. injoins the lord mayor to prevent diſorders, 713. anſwer to the commons petition for a guard, 714. orders a peer and five commoners to be accuſed of high treaſon, 715. demands the five commoners, 716. goes to the lower houſe with a guard, and ſpeech there, ib. ſpeech to the common-council of London, demanding the five members, 717. anſwer to the city's petition, ib. quits London, repents his conduct, and ſends to the commons, 718. more meſſages relating to the five members, 719. aims different from the parliaments, 722. complains of mr. Pym's ſpeech, 726. differs with the parliament about the militia, ib. meſſages, anſwers, and declarations, about that affair, 727—747. removes to the north, ib. proclamation againſt the parliament's ordinance, 747. meſſage, containing many conceſſions, 748. iſſues a proclamation againſt papiſts, 749. informs the parliament of his deſign to go into Ireland, ib. anſwer to their petition on that affair, 750. appears before Hull, and denied admittance, 751, 752. demands juſtice upon Hotham the governor, 752. attempts to gain Hull by intelligence, ib. prepares for war, 753. propoſal to the Yorkſhire gentry, ib. anſwer to the declaration, or remonſtrance, of the lords and commons, 762—770. breach with the parliament explained, 770. receives the great ſeal, and ſharply anſwers the parliament's petition to disband his forces, 772. anſwer to the parliament's nineteen propoſitions, 774—781. receives arms from Holland, and injoins his friends to leave the parliament, 781. inhibits the citizens of London to lend the parliament money, 782. fruſtrated in his project to ſeize the fleet, ib. beſieges Hull to no purpoſe, 783. ſummons his ſubjects to attend the royal ſtandard, ib. takes Lincoln, and arrives at Nottingham, ib. ſets up his ſtandard, 784. in great danger at Nottingham, ib. propoſes peace, with a view of its being rejected, 785. marches from Nottingham towards Wales, 786. proteſtation at the head of his army, ib. 787. fixes his head quarters at Shrewsbury, and borrows the militia arms, 787. univerſity of Oxford give him their plate, ib. marches towards London, 788. fights Eſſex at Edgehill with doubtful ſucceſs, ib. 789. retires to Oxford, 789. friends at London propoſe a peace, ib. 790. anſwers the parliament's declaration, 790. order for papiſts to provide arms, 791. offers a pardon to the Londoners, ib. receives the parliament's committee with a propoſal of peace of Colebrook, and immediately afterwards attacks Brentford, 793. attempts to juſtify his conduct, ib. remarks on the principles he would have eſtabliſhed, 795, 796. aſſociation in his favor, 796. gets ſeveral priſoners of war condemned, who are ſaved by the parliament's declaration, 796, 797. anſwer to the London petition, and order to the ſheriffs, 797. ſupplied from Holland, 798. treats of a peace, which neither party deſires, 799—807. view in propoſing a ceſſation, 807. tries in vain to relieve Reading, 808. about to quit Oxford on a falſe alarm, ib. re-inforced by the Q. 809. beſieges Glouceſter, 810. fights the firſt battle of Newbury, 811. in vain forbids taking the covenant, 818. anſwer to the Scots manifeſto, 819. treats with the Iriſh, 819, 820, 821. allows free commerce between his quarters and London, which the commons forbid, 822. meſſenger ſeized for wanting a ſafe-conduct, ib. ſucceſs, and declaration after it, 823. tries in vain to gain the e. of Eſſex, 826. proteſtation concerning religion, 827. accuſed by the parliament of the Iriſh rebellion, ib.—830. revenues ſeized, 831. manifeſto touching religion, 834. meſſage to both houſes concerning a peace, 835. raiſes mony by loan, 836. army routed at Marſton-moor, 838. quits Oxford, 840. marches weſtward, 842. meſſage to both houſes, which is not anſwered, ib. ſpeech to the Somerſetſhire men, ib. follows Eſſex, and writes to him about a peace, 843. another meſſage to the parliament unregarded, 844. attacks Plymouth without ſucceſs, ib. marches towards London, but meets obſtructions, 845. 846. fights the ſecond battle of Newbury, and retires to Wallingford, 846. carries off the cannon from Dennington-caſtle, in ſight of the enemy, ib. treats with the parliament at Uxbridge, 849—857. letters between him and the Q. during the treaty, 854, 855. ſtate of his affairs, 857. fights the battle of Naſeby, and is entirely routed, 861, 862. papers taken, 862. retires into Wales, ib. quits Wales, takes Huntingdon, and marches to Hereford, 864. routed before Cheſter, and retires again to Wales, ib. 865. ſtrives in vain to obtain a peace, 865, 866. treaty with the Iriſh rebels, 867, 868. counſel'd to join the Presbyterians, but rejects the propoſal, 869, goes to the Scotiſh army, ib. who carry him to Newcaſtle, 870. writes to both houſes, and to the city of London, ib. anſwer to the parliament's propoſitions, 871, 872. diſpoſal of his perſon debated on, 872, 873. delivered to the parliament's commiſſioners, and carried to Holmby-houſe, 875. forcibly carried away from Holmby-houſe by the army, 878. conducted to Newmarket, 879. flattered by the army, 888. conceives great hopes, but over-reached by Cromwell, 889. leſs reſpected, ib. eſcapes from Hampton-court, 892. letter to both houſes left upon his table, 893. letter from the iſle of Wight to both houſes, 894, 895. treats with the Scotiſh commiſſioners, 896---899. anſwer to the parliament's commiſſioners, on their preſenting four bills to be ſign'd by him, as the terms of peace, 900. project in his favor, ib. his views, 903. inſurrections in his favor, in Wales and Kent, 907. prejudiced by the eagerneſs of his friends, 914. treaty with him debated upon, 915, 916, 917. carried on, but interrupted and lengthened by new demands on him, and the army's interpoſition, 919---927. removed from the Iſle of Wight to Hurſt caſtle, 927. juſtice demanded on him, 926, 930. trial determined on, 930. brought to St. James's, and treated without ceremony, ib. ſubſtance of his trial, 931---934. ſentenced and executed, 934. character, 934, 935, 936. funeral, 934, n. 5. ſeventy thouſand pounds allowed his ſon for a more pompous funeral, who pretends the body could not be found, iii. 151, 157, and ib. n. 2.

CHARLES [Prince] ſon of K. CHARLES, I. born, ii. 553. aſſembles forces in the weſt, 863. retires to Cornwal and Scilly, ib. goes on board the revolted fleet, 909. enters the Thames to meet Warwick, but ſails back without fighting, ib. invited into Scotland, refuſes to go, 913. letter to the lords, 920.

CHARLES [II. K. of England] aſſumes the title of King, iii. 6. treated coldly in Holland, ib. proclaim'd in Scotland, but receives the news of it coldly, 9. againſt going to Scotland, 10. commiſſions them. of Montroſe to invade that kingdom, ib. prepares for Ireland, but quits his deſign, ib. 11. writes to haſten Montroſe, 12. treats with the Scotiſh commiſſioners at Breda, ib. cannot bring them to reaſonable terms, and therefore amuſes them, 13. complains of Montroſe's execution, 14. ſigns the terms propoſed to him, arrives in Scotland, and takes the covenant, ib. very uneaſy, ib. diſcovers his religious principles, and loſes the Scots confidence, 15. publiſhes a ſtrange declaration, which diſappoints his hopes, 17. flies, ib. brought back, and better treated, 18. crowned, and appears at the head of the Scots army, ib. marches into England, 19. unſucceſsful, ib. defeated at Worceſter, ib. flies, and arrives in France, 20. in great diſtreſs, ib. circumſtances in France, 29. ſells ſome ſhips, brought by Prince Rupert, ib. makes an alliance with Spain, 36. has a penſion of 6000 guilders a month, ib. reſides at Bruges, ib. goes to Fontarabia, 50. returns without ſucceſs, 54. reſtoration concerted, 55. affairs thought deſperate, 56. ſends a commiſſion to Monk, conſtituting him general, 62. declaration to the lords, ib. 63. acknowledged by both lords and commons, 63. money ſent him, ib. proclaim'd, ib. arrives at Whitehall, 64. prepoſſeſſions in his favor, much to the nation's hurt, ib. 65. religion, 65. governing maxim, ib. faults, ib. good qualities, ib. forms his council, 66. ſpeech to the lords concerning the act of indemnity, 67. ſpeech to both houſes, 68. inſtitutes guards, 69. revenue ſettled, ib. ſigns diverſe acts, and makes a ſpeech, 70. crown'd, 74. hiſtorians of his reign characterized, ib. ſpeeches to the parliament, ib. 76. 78. 85. 92. 96. 99. 114. 130. 135. 145. 150. 152. 156. 159. 166. 168. 182. 185. 208. informs them of his intended marriage, 74. obtains a large ſupply, 77. married, 80. ſells Dunkirk, 81. conduct to the Presbyterians, 84. deſign in favoring them, 85. anſwers to the parliament's addreſſes, 86. 88. 133. 138. 139. 151. 158. 168. 183. 188. 203. obtains another ſupply, 87. makes a progreſs, 88. demands of the Dutch reparation of damages, 90. borrows mony of the city, 91. refuſes the French K's mediation, ib. in treaty with the States, 101. mortified by De Ruyter, 102. concludes a peace, ib. ſuſpected by the people, 103. lives in great diſorder, and is very profuſe, 111. makes ſeveral progreſſes, 112. ſends a fleet to the Mediterranean, ib. goes into the French intereſt, ib. ſcheme for religion, ib. receives favorably the non-conformiſts petition, 113. ſupremacy in Scotland enlarg'd, 114. reconciles the two houſes of parliament, 115. deſigns, ib. eſtabliſhes a cabinet council, which is called the Cabal, 116. makes a ſecret alliance with France, 118. receives money from the K. of France, 123. examines Blood, who had ſtole the crown, ib. in want, ſhuts up the exchequer, 124, 125, 129. intends to ſurprize the Dutch Smyrna fleet, but without ſucceſs, 125. declares for liberty of conſcience, 126. ſuſpends the execution of two acts of parliament, 128. ſends embaſſadors to Holland, 129. demands 1,000,000 l. ſterling, and ſeveral other things of the Dutch, to grant them peace, ib. in great difficulties, 134, 140. addreſs'd on account of the d. of York's marriage, 139. mortified by the parliament, 141, 143. ſinks in his demands on the Dutch, 142. concludes a peace with the advice of parliament, 143. abandons himſelf to his pleaſures, ib. governed by his miſtreſſes, ib. 144. offers his mediation to the K. of France, who accepts it, 144. refuſes to diſſolve the parliament, ib. fixed in his reſolutions, 145. deſired by the commons to call home his forces from France, which he refuſes, 146. tries to procure a ſeparate peace both with France and Holland, 149. purſues his own intereſt, and not that of the kingdom, 152. preſſes a mony-bill, and is diſtruſted by the commons, ib. complains of an addreſs of the commons, perſuading him to a war with France, 153. perſuades the prince of Orange to a ſeparate peace with France, but in vain, 154. carries on ſecret negociations with France, 155. remarks on his conduct, ib. concludes alliances with the States, 156. complains again of an invaſion of his prerogative in an addreſs of the commons, 157. asks the advice of the two houſes, 158. ſpeaks angrily to the commons, whoſe advice diſpleaſed him, ib. makes a ſecret treaty with France, for which he receives mony, ib. abuſed by the French K. 159. acquaints the parliament with the peace of Nimeguen, ib. makes a league with the States, 160. diſconcerts their meaſures, ib. informed of the popiſh plot, 162. forbids the publication of it, 163. indeavors to conceal it from the parliament, 166. addreſs'd concerning it, ib. 168. demands money, 169. diſſolves the parliament, after it had ſat eighteen years, 180. letter to the d. of York, who withdraws to Bruſſels, 182. meets a new parliament, and differs with them about the choice of a ſpeaker, ib. intereſts himſelf for the e. of Danby, 183. forms a new council, 184. acquaints the parliament with it, ib. prorogues the parliament, who were preparing a bill of excluſion, 188, 189. diſſolves the parliament, 193. falls ſick, ib. changes in his council, 194. addreſs'd for a parliament, which meets, and is prorogued, 195. ſilences a report of the d. of Monmouth's legitimacy, 196. ſends away the d. of York, 197. diſſembles, 198. ſends to the commons, to interrupt them in the excluſion-bill, 200, 201. anſwer to their addreſs on the bill of excluſion, 205. preſſed in vain to forſake the d. of York, ib. 206. diſſolves the parliament, and calls one at Oxford, 206. goes to Oxford before the time of their meeting, which occaſions ſuſpicion, 208. ſpeech to the Oxford parliament, ib. diſſolves it, 210. governs arbitrarily, and from what cauſes, ib. publiſhes a declaration of the reaſons for diſſolving the two laſt parliaments, 211. flatter'd in addreſſes, which he takes well, ib. runs in debt, 215. ſends out a writ of Quo Warranto againſt the city of London, 216. ſuſpected of the e. of Eſſex's murder, 219. impoſes a lord-mayor and other magiſtrates on the city of London, 223. pardons the d. of Monmouth, but requires a letter from him owning his guilt, ib. by what means confirmed in abſolute power, 224. gets the charters of the principal boroughs into his hands, 226. muſters his forces, ib. diſſolves the eccleſiaſtical commiſſion, ib. ſtatue erected to him, ib. forms new projects, 227. dies, ib. extract from dr. Welwood concerning his death, ib. 228. from dr. Burnet on the ſame ſubject, 228, 229, 230. other particulars, 230. character, by dr. Burnet, 231, 232. by the d. of Buckingham, 232, 233. compared, 234. ingratitude to the Derby family, 21. n. 2. miſtreſſes and children, n. 2, 234. funeral, 236. compared with K. JAMES II. 288.

CHARLES V. [Emp. of Germany] quarrels with Francis K. of France, ii. 54. his intrigues, wars, and negociations, with the K's of France and England, the Pope, &c. ib.—243. interviews with K. HENRY VIII. 57. character and diſpoſition, 58, 59. moderation after the victory of Pavia, 88. anſwer to K. HENRY's demands, 97. attempts to ſet the K's of England and France at variance, 98. anſwer to the Engliſh and French heralds on their declaring war againſt him, 104. promiſes to attempt the Proteſtants extirpation, 115. conduct in the affair of K. HENRY's divorce, 113. great deſigns, 138. propoſes and concludes the marriage of his ſon Philip to Q. MARY, 232, 233. reſigns his dominions to his ſon and brother, and retires, 243. remarkable ſaying of his, ib. n. 3. dies, 253.

CHARLES XII. [K. of Sweden] lands near Copenhagen, iii. 520. formidable confederacy againſt him, 532. raiſes the ſieges of Riga and Narva, ib. defeats 80,000 Ruſſians with a tenth part of the number, ib. invades Saxony, 661. the eyes of all Europe upon him, 672. anſwer to the d. of Marlborough's ſpeech, 673. intirely defeated by the Muſcovites at Pultowa, eſcapes with a ſmall number to Bender, 704.

CHARLES [archduke of Auſtria] proclaim'd K. of Spain at Vienna, iii. 588.

CHARLES III. [K. of Spain] viſited by the d. of Marlborough, iii. 596. comes to England, and is ſplendidly entertain'd by the Queen, 598. is convoy'd by the Engliſh fleet to Lisbon, 607. his magnificent reception there, 608. is convoy'd to Spain by the Engliſh fleet, 633. lands at Gibraltar, and takes poſſeſſion of that kingdom, ib. takes Barcelona, and makes his public entry into that city, 634. his ſeaſonable reſolution, n. 2. ib. proclaim'd at Madrid, 656. trifles away his time at Saragoſſa, and joins the allies too late, ib. marries a Princeſs of Wolfembuttle, 692. purſues K. PHILIP, defeats his army, and goes to Madrid, 713. is oblig'd to return to Catalonia, 714. acceeds to the Imperial throne, 723.

CHARLES VI. [Emperor of Germany] crown'd at Francfort, iii. 724. ſends circular letters to the Princes of the Empire, to exhort them againſt the peace, 727. writes to the States general on the ſame account, ib.

CHARNOCK [John] enters into a plot to aſſaſſinate Q. ELIZABETH, ii. 346.

CHARNOCK, one of the aſſaſſines, condemned and executed, iii. 472.

CHARTA MAGNA [the great Charter] granted by K. John, i. 316. recited in Latin and Engliſh, with notes, 321—333.

CHARTA DE FORESTA [the charter of Foreſts] granted by K. John, i. 316. recited, 334.

CHARTER of Ethelwolph for paying of tythes, i. 134. of the clergy, violated by WILLIAM the Conqueror, 205. of HENRY I. to the people, 224.

CHARTERS of the principal boroughs ſurrender'd to K. CHARLES, iii. 226.

CHARTER of London declared forfeited, iii. 216.

CHATHAM, Engliſh ſhips burnt there by De Ruyter, iii. 102.

CHAUCER [Geoffery] the famous poet, i. 570, or 567.

CHEAULIN K. of Weſſex, his exploits, i. 43, 44.

CHERBOURG [ſiege of] i. 592 or 583.

CHERBOURG, French men of war burnt there, iii. 420.

CHESHIRE made a principality, i. 526.

CHESTER [county of] united to the crown, i. 354.

CHICHELEY [Henry] bp. of St. Davids, made archbp. of Canterbury, 575 or 572. ſpeech to K. HENRY V. 577 or 574. in parliament, 578 or 574. dies, 654. character, 822.

CHICHESTER [bp. of, chancellor] refuſes to give K. HENRY III. the great ſeal, i. 353.

CHILD [ſir Joſiah] examin'd in the affair of the Eaſt-India company, iii. 452.

CHOISY [the abbot de] verſes on the report of K. WILLIAM's being kill'd at the Boyne, n. 7. iii. 387.

CHURCH, diſputes about that word, i. 815.

CHURCH of the Britons not ſubject to the ſee of Rome, i. 97.

CHURCH, ſtate of it in Britain, from its converſion to the coming of the Saxons, i. 24---27. from the arrival of the Saxons to the retreat of the Britons into Cambria, 47, 48. from the converſion of the Engliſh to the the diſſolution of Heptarchy, 76---97. from the union of the ſeven kingdoms to the death of EDWARD the Martyr, 134---139. from the reign of ETHELRED II. to the Norman conqueſt, 170---174. from the Norman conqueſt to the death of K. STEPHEN, 256- 257. during the reigns of HENRY I, RICHARD I, JOHN, and HENRY III, 395—405. from the acceſſion of EDWARD I to the depoſition of RICHARD II, 535 -543 in the fifteenth century, 810---822.

CHURCH of England, its opinion of the Euchariſt, i 170. of the invocation of the Virgin Mary and the ſaints, 171. of extreme unction, ib. changes introduc'd in it by the Norman conqueſt, 246. departs from former principles, and takes meaſures to oppoſe K. JAMES II. iii. 275. unites with the Presbyterians, ib. danger of it from K. JAMES, 341. oppreſs'd by him in Ireland, 368. voted by parliament not in danger, 644.

CHURCHES, a bill for erecting 50 new ones, iii. 635.

CHURCHILL [John] created lord Churchill, iii. n. 3. 215. goes to the Prince of Orange, and ſends a letter to K. JAMES, 287. created e. of Marlborough, 356.

CHURCHILL [brigadier] takes the d. of Berwick priſoner, iii. 434. [general] made governor of Bruſſels, 651. beſieges and takes Dendermond, 653

CINIGIL, K. of Weſſex, i. 70.

CINIGIL and QUICELM, K's of Weſſex, i. 70.

CINQUE-PORTS eſtabliſhed by K. JOHN, i. 320.

CISSA, K. of Suſſex, i. 68.

CISTERCIANS, uſed ill by the Pope's legate, i. 377.

CIVIDAD RODRIGO taken by the Portugueſe, iii. 656.

CIVIL LIST, 700,000 l. per ann. allowed for it, iii. 496.

CLANCARTY [e. of] taken priſoner at Cork, iii. 395.

CLARENCE [Thomas d. of] ſlain in France, i. 601 or 592.

CLARENCE [George Plantagenet, d. of] brother of EDWARD IV. joins the e. of Warwick againſt his brother, i. 698. marries Warwick's daughter, ib. declares for the rebels, 700. makes a private agreement with EDWARD, 702. declared one of the governors for K. HENRY VI, 704. raiſes troops ſeemingly for HENRY, with which he goes over to EDWARD, 706. 707. ſuſpected by EDWARD, condemned, and drown'd in a but of Malmſey, 721, 722.

CLARENDON [ſir Roger] ſon of EDWARD the Black Prince, executed, i. 555 or 553.

CLARENDON [e. of] character of his hiſtory, ii. 637. See Hyde, Edward.

CLARENDON [Henry Hyde, e. of] petition'd againſt by the commons, iii. 205. made lord privy-ſeal, 236. and lord lieutenant of Ireland, 250. diſplaced, 256. joins other lords to petition the Prince of Orange, 286.

CLARGES [Thomas] ſent by the committee of ſafety to Monk, iii. 55. whom he joins, ib.

CLAUDIUS reduces part of Britain into a province, i. 6, 7.

CLEMENT [Pr. of Bavaria] acknowledg'd Elector, and archbiſhop of Cologn, iii. 341.

CLERGY oppoſe the coronation of EDGAR ATHELING, i. 198. declare for King STEPHEN, 234. elect Maud the Empreſs, 240.

220. ſubmit to K. HENRY II, 264. excommunicated by Becket, 268. [forein] a confederacy againſt them, 347. [Engliſh] ſhocking anſwer to K. HENRY III, 370. haughtineſs abated by K. EDWARD I, 430. order'd to arm by EDWARD III, 495. n. debate how to root out the Lollards, 572 or 568. obtain the K's leave to proſecute Oldcaſtle, 572 or 569. give the K. part of their revenues, to prevent his ſeizing all, 577 or 574. decide in favor of K. HENRY VIII, with regard to his divorce, ii. 121. condemned for breach of the ſtatute of Præmunire, ib. acknowledge the K. head of the church, 122. pardoned, ib. opinion concerning councils, 149. murmur at ſome injunctions laid on them, and ſtir up commotions, 150, 151. diſpoſition at Q. MARY's acceſſion, 232. diſpute between popiſh and proteſtant, 237. few of them refuſe to comply with the reformation, 255. countenance K. JAMES's ſcheme of arbitrary power, 402. impoſe an oath, and give K. CHARLES a ſubſidy, 601. make large conceſſions to the Presbyterians, iii. 113. preach up paſſive obedience, 214. forbid to preach on controverted points, 255.

CLERGY of London in the utmoſt perplexity, iii. 336. refuſe to read K. JAMES's declaration, ib. [High-Church] diſcontented, 356.

CLEVES [duchy of] ravaged by the French, iii. 556.

CLIFFORD [ſir Robert] takes part with Perkin Warbeck, i. 786. betrays his ſecrets to K. HENRY, 787.

CLIFFORD [ſir Thomas] made treaſurer of the houſhold, iii. 112. one of the cabal, 116. character, ib. adviſes the K. to ſhut up the Exchequer, 124. created ld. Clifford, 128. reſigns his office of lord-treaſurer, and retires into the country, 138. dies, ib.

CLOSETTING, riſe of that word, iii. 254. the practice, ib. 273.

CLOTHIERS mutiny, ii. 105.

CLOTWORTHY [ſir John] one of the eleven members accuſed by the army, ii. 881.

CLYTONS, the title of the Saxons Princes, its origin, &c. i. 176.

COBHAM, ld. See ſir John Oldcaſtle.

COHORN [colonel de] defends a fort at the caſtle of Namur, iii. 423. burns Givet with the magazines there, 479. forces and demoliſhes the French lines, 554. breaks into their intrenchments, 590.

COIN, bad ſtate of it inquired into, iii. 455. report of a committee of the houſe of commons concerning it, ib. act to prevent the clipping and coining it, 456. ill ſtate of it recommended, by K. WILLIAM, to the conſideration of the parliament, 463. debates in the houſe of lords, concerning re-coining the ſilver, 464. reſolved to re-coin it, 465. debate about raiſing the ſtandard, ib. reſolution thereupon, 466. inconveniencies attending the calling it in, ib. reſolutions of the commons thereupon, ib. an act for remedying the ill ſtate of the coin paſs'd, 467.

COKE [ſir Edward] lord-chief-juſtice, diſplaced for oppoſing the K's prerogative, ii. 429. ſpeech concerning grievances, 523. concerning the petition of right, 531.

COLCHESTER block'd up by Fairfax, ii. 908. ſurrenders at diſcretion, 913.

COLEMAN [Edward] tried for the popiſh plot, iii. 170. letters produced againſt him, 171. defence, 172. condemned, and executed, ib. pernicious tendency of his letters, 336.

COLLEGE to qualify young men for the ſervice of the ſtate, project of one, ii. 161. n. 3.

COLLEDGE [Stephen] called the Proteſtant Joiner, ſent to the Tower, ii. 212. tried for high-treaſon, and executed, ib.

COLMAN, biſhop of the Northumbrians, i. 84, 85.

COLOGN [El. of] enters into ingagements with France, iii. 533. puts all his ſtrong places into the poſſeſſion of France, 554.

COLUMBA, abbot of Dearmach, i. 47.

COLUMBUS [Chriſtopher] his firſt voyage to America, i. 784.

COMBAT, ſingle, in criminal matters, i. 190.

COMMENDAM's, diſpute concerning them between K. JAMES I, and his judges, ii. 428.

COMMENDONE, legate from the Pope in England, ii. 231.

COMMERCE with France prohibited, iii. n. 2. 375.

COMMISSIONS of three general officers ſuperſeded, iii. 716. their ſuppoſed crime, ib.

COMMISSIONERS [the twenty-four] eſtabliſhed by the parliament of Oxford, i. 379.

COMMITTEE of Safety ſet up by the army, iii. 54. reſtore the rump parliament, 56.

COMMONS, obſervations on their rights, i. 379. petition K. HENRY IV to ſeize the church revenues, 560 or 557. preſent an addreſs againſt the clergy, and another in favor of the Lollards, 566 or 563. another againſt the clergy, 577 or 574. take ſome ſteps to the ſame purpoſe, ii. 125, 126. addreſs Q. MARY againſt her marriage with PHILIP, 232. addreſs Q. ELIZABETH to marry, 254, 282. diſpleaſed with King JAMES, 402, 412, 413. examine grievances, 423. declare for the defence of the Palatinate, 448. remonſtrances to K. JAMES on the ſtate of affairs, 450, 451. petition ſent with the remonſtrance, 452, 453. proteſtation, 456. ſeveral of them impriſoned, 458. declaration on their diſſolution by K. CHARLES I, 496. examine grievances, 498, 523, 524, 542, 642, 645——648. petitions, ſpeeches, anſwers, addreſſes, remonſtrances, &c. of them and their ſpeaker to K. CHARLES I, 500, 503, 508, 509, 510, 525, 526, 529, 532, 535, 538, 539—540, 542, 544, 691, 702. examine the d. of Buckingham's conduct, 500. and proceedings againſt him, 505—509, 534. clamorous about the impriſonment of their members, 507. not ſatisfy'd with the K's anſwer to the petition of right, 534. ſatisfied, 535. reſolve againſt Buckingham, Neile, and Laud, ib. vow concerning religion, 542. quarrel with the K. about tonage and poundage, 544. debate on the convocation, 546. proceedings concerning religion, 653—658, 680. proteſtation, 665. proceeding concerning a plot to ſeduce the army, 664—670. labor to exclude the biſhops, 679, 684. explain a clauſe in the proteſtation, 680. oppoſe the lending of forces to Spain, ib. jealous of the K. and ſend a committee to watch him in Scotland, 681. votes and declaration againſt innovations, 682. differ with the peers, ib. remonſtrance of the kingdom's condition, 687, 692——702. votes about Ireland, 687. inſtructions to the committee in Scotland, ib. 688. impriſon two lords ſent from Ireland, 708. accuſe the proteſting biſhops of high-treaſon, 713. deſire a guard, ib. procedure concerning the five members, 715—720. ſend ſir John Hotham to ſecure Hull, 721. vote for Kingly government, 914. reduced to all independants, make an ordinance for trying the K. 930. vote the peers concurrence not neceſſary, 931. erect their high court of juſtice, ib. exclude the K's ſon, iii. 4. aboliſh the houſe of peers and monarchy, ib. principles, ib. paſs the excluſion bill, iii. 200. addreſs to King JAMES II, 252. preſs K. WILLIAM to a war, 361. diſſatisfied with his ſpeech after the peace of Ryſwick, 496. expreſs their diſguſt at a ſpeech of K. WILLIAM's, 513. addreſs K. WILLIAM to enter into negociations, in concert with the States-general, for the preſervation of the peace of Europe, 521. declare for the Proteſtant ſucceſſion, 522. expreſs their diſlike of the partition-treaty, 523. advice to King WILLIAM, 524. reſent ſome expreſſions made uſe of by lord Haverſham, 528. reaſons for not appearing at the trial of lord Sommers, ib. warm and remarkable reſolution, 529. vote thanks to the d. of Ormond, and ſir George Rooke, 572. reſolutions againſt the biſhop of Worceſter, 573. as to their privileges, 666. addreſs in favor of the d. of Marlborough, 668. reſolutions concerning the ſea ſervice, 680. concerning Scotland, ib. addreſs the Q. to ſend the d. of Marlborough ſpeedily to Holland, 709. inquire into abuſes in the victualling office, 718. repreſentation of grievances to Q. ANN, 720. reſolutions on the ſtate of the war, 732. repreſentation to the Q. grounded thereupon, ib. debates thereupon, ib. reſolution concerning a peace, 734.

COMMUNION-table placed altar-wiſe, ii. 561.

COMPTON [Henry] biſhop of London, ſuſpended, for not ſuſpending dr. Sharp, iii. 256. reſtored, 279.

CONCLAVE, proceeding there at the election of Clement VIII. ii. 74.

CONFEDERACY. See League, Aſſociation.

CONFESSION of Faith [the firſt Engliſh proteſtant] ii. 215.

CONGRESS at the Hague, iii. 401. liſt of illuſtrious perſons, who aſſiſted at it, n. 2, ib.

CONINGSMARK [count] murders Thomas Thynne, eſq; ii. 215.

CONQUEROR, remarks on that name, as given to WILLIAM the Firſt, i. 213.

CONSPIRACY. See Plot.

CONSTANCE [council of] an account of it, i. 811.

CONSTANTINE the Great, ſtate of Britain under him, i. 16.

CONSTANTINE, a private ſoldier, elected Emp. i. 19.

CONSTANTINE, K. of Scots, his wars with ATHELSTAN, i. 120. ſlain, 121.

CONSTANTINE, a citizen of London, hang'd for a riot, i. 340.

CONSTANTINOPLE [Emanuel Paleologus, Emp. of] comes to England, i. 553 or 552.

CONSTANTIUS, Emp. of the weſt, dies at York, i. 16.

CONSTITUTION [Engliſh] remarks on it, i. 527 or 525.*

CONSTITUTIONS [eccleſiaſtical] reaſons for altering them, ii. 143. [ten] drawn up by the convocation, and approved by K. HENRY VIII. 148.

CONTRACT between K. and people debated of, iii. 298.

CONTRACTERS for cloathing the army call'd to an account, iii. 448.

CONTRA-remonſtrants, the Gomariſts ſo call'd, ii. 415.

CONVENTION, remark on the word, iii. 295.

CONVENTION ſummon'd by the Pr. of Orange, meets, iii. 297, 342. proceedings concerning K. JAMES's abdication, ib.---308. offer the crown to the Prince and Princeſs of Orange, which they accept, 309, 347. the lower houſe votes the throne vacant, ib. as does likewiſe the upper houſe, 343. aſcertains the liberties of the ſubject, 346. turn'd into a parliament, with the debates for and againſt it, 349. their acts confirm'd by the future parliament, 385. ſummon'd in Scotland, as in England, 359. the lawfulneſs of it aſſerted, ib. offers the adminiſtration to the Pr. of Orange, 360. votes the throne vacant, ib. ſettles the crown on K. WILLIAM and Q. MARY, ib. turn'd into a parliament, 361.

CONVOCATIONS of Canterbury and York, decide in K. HENRY's favor, with regard to the divorce, ii. 129. complain of the reformers, 148. draw up articles of religion, which K. HENRY approves, ib. revive epiſcopacy, iii. 76. See Clergy.

CONVOCATION, [deſire of a] not immediately complied with, iii. 358. ſummon'd, 378. their proceedings, 382. different tempers of their two prolocutors, 383. difference between the two houſes, 522. revived, 580. thank the Q. for her royal bounty to the clergy, 604. meet to little purpoſe, 605. differences between the two houſes continue, 690. meet, but are prorogued, 694. licens'd to act, 718.

CONWAY [ſir Edward] made ſecretary of ſtate, ii. 443. letter to the e. of Briſtol, 607.

CONWAY [Francis Seymour, eſq;] created baron Conway, iii. 581.

COOK [ſir Thomas] commited to the Tower, for refuſing to account for a ſum of mony to the houſe of commons, iii. 450. examin'd by the houſe of lords, ib. an act to indemnify him paſs'd, 451.

COOKE, one of the conſpirators, tried, condemned and baniſh'd, iii. 475.

COPLEY [colonel] ſecures Hull for the Pr. of Orange, iii. 288.

COOPER [ſir Anthony Aſhley] hinders Monk from ſeizing the government, iii. 61. one of the Cabal, 116. character, ib. creâted e. of Shaftsbury, 128. See Shaftsbury.

CORBET, archbp. of Canterbury, i. 231. dies, 235.

CORFEU, or Covre-feu, its eſtabliſhment, i. 203.

CORITON [William] impriſon'd, ii. 544.

CORNBURY [lord] ſon to the e. of Clarendon, goes over with his regiment to the Prince of Orange, iii. 286.

CORNISH [Henry] elected ſherif of London, iii. 197. accuſed of packing juries, 212. alderman of London, condemned and executed for high-treaſon, 248.

CORNWAL, a rebellion there, i. 793, 796.

CORONER, the name and office, i. 327. n. 2.

CORONATION of the Saxons Kings, when and by whom performed, i. 188.

CORONATION of K. WILLIAM and Q. MARY, iii. 357. of Q. ANN, 546.

CORK beſieg'd by, and ſurrender'd to the e. of Marlborough, iii. 394. articles of capitulation, 395.

CORPORATION-Act, iii. 77.

CORSNED, a kind of purgation uſed by the Saxons, i. 190.

COSINS [dr. John] accuſed of innovating in religion, ii. 657.

COVENANT, Scotiſh, ii. 576, 816. taken, 818. K. CHARLES II. obliged to take it, iii. 14.

COVENTRY ſhut againſt K. CHARLES, ii. 783.

COVENTRY's [ſir John] hiſtory, iii. 119. act on his account, ib.

COVENTRY [ſir Henry] made ſecretary of ſtate, iii. 129.

COUNCILS, the three, of K. ALFRED, i. 114. See Synods.

COUNCIL of ſtate, erected by the parliament, iii. 5.

COUNCIL [the K's] diſpoſition of it at the death of EDWARD VI. ii. 224.

COUNCIL of State, eſtabliſh'd by Cromwell, iii. 26.

COUNCIL of trade appointed, iii. 468.

COUNSELLORS of EDWARD VI. conſpire againſt the protector, ii. 211. five of them appointed governors, 212. [ſeveral] leave lady Jane, and proclaim Q. MARY, 226.

COUNTIES, the lands of 17 ſaid to be forfeited to K. RICHARD II. i. 528 or 526.

COURCY [John de] an Iriſh lord, his prodigious ſtature and ſtrength, i. 304. frightens a champion ſent by PHILIP K. of France, ib.

COURT, ſtate of it at EDWARD IV's death, i. 728.

COURT of the hundred, what, i. 179.

COURTS of juſtice, among the Saxons, ſeveral ſorts of them, i. 179. erected by the Conqueror, 210.

COURT of the tithing, its power, i. 179.

COURT of trithing, what, i. 179.

COWLEY [Abraham] dies, iii. 109.

COWPER [Spencer, eſq:] tried for the murder of mrs. Sarah Stout, and acquited, iii. 511.

COWPER [William, eſq;] made lord-keeper, iii. 641. created a peer of England, 667. made lord-chancellor of Great-Britain, 671. reſigns the great ſeal, 712.

CRAMBURN, one of the conſpirators, tried, condemned and executed, iii. 475.

CRANFIELD [ſir Lionel] See Middleſex e. of.

CRANMER [Thomas] an account of him, ii. 113. ſhews K. HENRY how to proceed in his divorce affair, and is taken to court, ib. made archbp. of Canterbury, 129. unwillingly takes the oath to the pope, ib. cites Q. CATHERINE, and on her not appearing pronounces ſentence of divorce againſt her, 130. remarks on his conduct, 131. ſupports the reformation, 137, 157. oppoſes the ſix articles, and writes his reaſons for it, 160. papers luckily ſav'd, ib. n. writes in behalf of Cromwell, 163. ruin deſign'd, 166. character, 167, 194. informs the K. of the Q's leudneſs, 169. accuſed to the King, who informs him of the plot againſt him, and favors him highly, 178. procures biſhoprics for his friends, 184. openly accuſed, brought off by the K. 188, 189. attends K. HENRY in his laſt moments, 193. blamed for want of zeal in the reformation, 205. cited to the ſtar-chamber, and ſent to the Tower, 229. attainted of high-treaſon, 231. excommunicated, 237. degraded, abjures, repents, and ſuffers, 244.

CRECY [battle of] i. 477, 478.

CREVANT [battle of] in which the French are worſted, i. 614 or 606.

CREW [dr.] biſhop of Durham, one of the eccleſiaſtical commiſſioners, iii. 255.

CRIDA, firſt K. of Mercia, i. 45.

CRIMES, how diſcover'd and puniſhed among the Saxons, i. 190, 191.

CROKE, judge, againſt ſhip-mony, ii. 567.

CROMWELL [Thomas] defends Wolſey in parliament, ii. 114. ſupports the reformation, 137. viſits the monaſteries, 141. made vicegerent in eccleſiaſtical matters, 148. injunctions to the people, 156. projects, in concert with Cranmer, the King's marriage with Ann of Cleve, 157. made e. of Eſſex, 163. accuſed of high-treaſon, and condemn'd without being heard, ib. executed, 166

CROMWELL [Oliver] throws ſuccor into Gainsborough, ii. 813. accuſes the e. of Mancheſter, 858. ſpeech againſt the members holding places, 859. power over ſir Thomas Fairfax, 860. diſſimulation, ib. 875. iii. 4. his exploits, ib. abſence from parliament diſpenſed with, tho' contrary to an ordinance procured by himſelf, ii. 861. inſpires the army with diſcontent, 875, &c. over-reaches the King, 889. diſperſes the Levellers, 894. inveighs againſt the K. 900. views, 901. takes Pembroke, 910. marches into the north, 911. joins Lambert, ib. defeats d. Hamilton, and diſperſes his army, 912. letter to the parliament on that ſubject, ib. marches to Edinburg, 921. well receiv'd, and returns to England, 922. arrives at London, 929. made governor of Ireland, iii. 310. lands at Dublin, 11. recall'd from Ireland after great ſucceſs, 15. made general, and ſent to Scotland, 16. marches to Dunbar, and defeats the Scots, ib. dares not attack the K. 18. enters Fife, routs a detachment of the K's forces, and takes St. John's-town, ib. follows the K. into England, 19. comes up with him at Worceſter, and defeats his army, ib. increaſes his credit, 20, 22. returns to London, 21. ruin intended, 22, 24. which occaſions him to diſſolve the parliament, 25. remarks on that proceeding, ib. vindicates his conduct in a declaration, 26. choſes 144 perſons, and gives them the ſupreme authority by an inſtrument of his own ſigning, ib. made protector, and takes an oath accordingly, 27. reflections on his advancement, ib. firſt council, ib. n. 2. makes many his enemies, 28. conſpiracies againſt him, ſeveral puniſhed, ib. calls a parliament, 30. ſpeaks warmly to them, expels ſeveral members, and at laſt diſſolves the aſſembly, for queſtioning his authority, 31. conſpired againſt, ib. reſolves on a war with Spain, and ſends out two fleets, 32. ſurrounded with enemies, 33 conſtitutes major-generals, ib. reflection on his authority, 34. calls a parliament of the three nations, ib. offered the crown by a committee of the parliament, 35. greatly perplex'd in his choice, but at laſt refuſes the crown, ib. confirmed in his protectorſhip by the parliament, ib. ſolemnly inaugurated, 36. makes a league with France, offenſive and defenſive, ib. ſends 16000 men into France, 37. forms an upper houſe of parliament, ib. deſigns of his enemies againſt him, ib. ſpeech to the parliament, ib. reduces the power of the major-generals, 39. diſcovers a conſpiracy of the Royaliſts, ib. Dunkirk ſurrender'd to him, ib. death, 40. deſcent and character, ib. body dug up, hung on Tyburn, and buried under it, 69.

CROMWELL [Richard] made chancellor of Oxford, iii. 38. ſucceeds his father, as protector, 41. addreſs'd from all parts, ib. 42. indeavors to gain Monk's friendſhip, 41. propoſes to follow his father's maxims, and calls a parliament of two houſes, 43. meets with great difficulties, ib. rejects a petition of the officers, is recogniz'd by an act, 44. forced to diſſolve the parliament, and loſes all his credit, ib. ſubmits to the long parliament, which is reſtored by the officers, 48. debts not wholly paid by the parliament, 49. account of him afterwards, ib. n. 1, 2.

CROMWELL [Henry] made lieutenant of Ireland, iii. 38. recall'd from Ireland, 49. his good character, ib.

CROPEDY-bridge fight, ii. 841.

CROSS-BOWS, remarks on their uſe, i. 295.

CROWN of the Saxon K's, its form, i. 188. opinions concerning the ſucceſſion to it, ib. 189.

CROYLAND [abbot of] atteſts the miracles of Walthoff, i. 209.

CRUSADE to the Holy Land, i. 220.

CRUSADES, ſome account of them, i. 251.

CUDRED, K. of Kent, i. 68.

CUMBERLAND [dr. Richard] made biſhop of Peterborough, iii. 408.

CUMIN [Robert] ſent governor to the north, i. 204. ſlain, ib.

CUMIN [John] one of the claimants for the crown of Scotland, i. 415, &c. choſen regent, 433. exhorts the Scots to break their truce, ib. betrays Bruce, with whom he had join'd in a deſign to free their country, 436. kill'd by Bruce, 437.

CUSTOMERS offer the parliament 150,000 l. ii. 680.

CUTHBERT, archbp. of Canterbury, i. 82.

CUTS [lord] his prudence and bravery at the ſiege of Venlo, iii. 557.

CYPRUS [Iſaac, K. of] cruel and avaritious, i. 284. miſuſes the Engliſh, ib. dethroned by K. RICHARD, i. 285.

CYRUS, K. of Perſia, EDGAR compared to him, i. 132. abridgment of his ſtory, ib. n.

D

DACRES [Leonard] his rebellion, ii. 302.

DANBY, e. of. See Osborne.

DANES, their origin, i. 98. attempts on England, 98——133. aſſiſt the Saxons againſt Charlemagne, 99. are maſters of half England, 108. own ALFRED for their King, 110. exact tribute from ETHELRED II, 141. maſſacred, 142. decree againſt them, 155. difficulties relating to this decree, ib. and n.

DANEGELT, eſtabliſhed by ETHELRED II, i. 141. renewed by WILLIAM the Conqueror, 201. raiſed with rigor, 202.

DANGERFIELD [Thomas] the chief manager of the meal-tub plot, iii. 194. diſcovers the fraud, ib. ſentenc'd to be whipp'd, 239. kill'd, ib.

DANIEL's [F.] account of Bantry-bay fight, iii. n. 3. 364. an inſtance of his partiality, n. 3, 391. account of the fight off of la Hogue, n. 1, 421. of the deſtruction of the Smyrna fleet, n. 5, 431. of the attempt on Martinico, n. 1, 433. of the attempt on Breſt-harbor, n. 1, 442. of the expedition to Cadix, n. 3, 567. of the deſtruction of the galleons at Vigo, n. 4, 569. of ſir George Rooke's conduct in 1703, n. 5, 585. of the battle of Eckeren, 592.

DARCY [lord] ſurrenders Pontefract to the Yorkſhire rebels, ii. 151. executed, 154.

DARIEN, a colony ſettled there by the Scots, iii. 503. their council-general writes a letter to K. WILLIAM, 510. make ſeveral repreſentations in their juſtification, ib. all intercourſe of his Majeſty's ſubjects with them prohibited, 511. houſe of lords in England petition againſt it, 518. proceedings in Scotland concerning it, ib. the ſettlement ſurrenders to the Spaniards, 519.

DARNLEY [lord] See Henry Stuart.

DARTMOUTH [e. of, George Legg] made commander of K. JAMES II's fleet, iii. 278. in debate concerning engaging the Prince of Orange, 285. prevented by a tempeſt from attacking the Prince, ib.

DARTMOUTH [lord] made ſecretary of ſtate, iii. 711. conſtituted lord privy-ſeal, 742.

DAVENANT [ſir William] dies, iii. 112.

DAVID [St.] biſhop of Menevia, i. 47.

DAVIS [John] diſcovers the ſtreight that bears his name, ii. 343.

DAVISON, brings over the e. of Arran to Q. ELIZABETH's intereſt, ii. 337. made ſecretary, to be made accountable for the Q. of Scots death, 356. tried, 357. apology, 358.

DAUPHIN warm in the Pretender's intereſt, iii. 534.

DAY [bp. of Chicheſter] deprived for oppoſing the reformation, ii. 219.

DEAD-Body, law concerning it, 203, and n. 2.

DEBATES on the queſtion for electing a King, iii. 344. whether the revenue expired by the vacancy of the throne, 351. between the two houſes, concerning the rights of the commons in mony-bills, 373. in the houſe of commons concerning the affairs of the Eaſt-India company, 453. between the two houſes of parliament, concerning ſome impeach'd lords, 527. between the ſame, concerning the public accounts, 530. in council about declaring war, and the operations of it, 548, 549. in parliament concerning the ſuppoſed danger of the church of England, 644. about the affairs of Spain, 681. [memorable] in the houſe of lords, 717. concerning the negociations for a peace, 728. in the houſe of lords, about the d. of Ormond's order, 733. in parliament about the peace, 736.

DECLARATION [K. JAMES's] diſpers'd, and order'd to be read in churches, iii. 336. pernicious in its conſequences, ib. refus'd to be read by the biſhops and clergy, 337. of war againſt France, 362. diſlik'd by the Tories, n. 2, 363. K. JAMES's in Ireland, 368. of war againſt France and Spain, 549. France's againſt the Emperor, England, Holland, and their allies, 550.

DECRETALS of the Popes, i. 402.

DEFENDER of the Faith, that title firſt given to HENRY VIII. ii. 66.

DEFENDER of the church of England, a title inſeparably connected with that of King, iii. 333.

DEIRA [Ks of] an account of them, i. 52——59.

DELAMERE [lord] tried for high-treaſon, and acquited, iii. 252.

DELAVAL's [ſir Ralph] letter, giving an account of the battle off of la Hogue, iii. 420. appointed admiral of the fleet, jointly with Henry Killigrew, eſq; and ſir Cloudeſly Shovel, 430. accuſed by bp. Burnet of being in K. JAMES's intereſt, n. 2. ib.

DELINQUENTS, uſe of that word, ii. 647.

DEMESN, what it means, i. 130. n.

DENAIN, the allies defeated there, iii. 738.

DENDERMOND taken by the allies, iii. 653. a deſcription of the place, n. 5, ib.

DENHAM [ſir John] dies, iii. 112.

DENIA ſubmits to K. CHARLES III. iii. 634. retaken by the d. of Orleans, 693.

DENMARK [account of] complained of by the Daniſh miniſter, iii. 412.

DENMARK [Chriſtiern K. of] comes to England, ii. 71.

DENMARK [K. of] comes to viſit K. JAMES I. and his Queen, ii. 409. again, 424.

DENMARK [K. of] attempts in conjunction with K. CHARLES to ſeize the Dutch Smyrna fleet, iii. 95.

DENMARK [K. of] enters into a confederacy againſt CHARLES XII, K. of Sweden, iii. 532.

DERBY [e. of, Henry of Lancaſter] makes great progreſs in Guienne, i. 476. generoſity, ib. ſucceſs after the battle of Crecy, 479, n. 2. made d. of Lancaſter, 482. dies, 490. See Henry.

DERBY [Ferdinand e. of] poiſon'd in a ſtrange manner, ii. 369.

DERBY [e. of] defeated by colonel Lieburne, iii. 19. executed, 21.

DERING [ſir Edward] ſpeech concerning the commons declaration, ii. 683. returns to the parliament after long abſence, 833.

DESBOROUGH [colonel] diſſuades Cromwell from accepting the crown, iii. 35. plots againſt Richard Cromwell, 45.

DESCENT on the coaſt of France projected, iii. 422. but not put in execution, n. 4, ib.

DEVONSHIRE rebels, their demands, ii. 208. diſperſed, 209.

DEVONSHIRE's [e. of] caſe inquired into, iii. 370. reſolution of the commons thereupon, ib. [d. of] made lord-ſteward of the houſhold, 545. the ſtaff taken from him, 712.

DEYNSE, taken by the French, iii. 461.

DIEP bombarded, iii. 442. two letters concerning this bombardment, n. 4, ib.

DIEU ET MON DROIT, original of that motto, i. 471.

DIGBY [lord] ſent embaſſador to Vienna, ii. 446. ſucceſs of his embaſſy, 449. returns, 450. ſent embaſſador extraordinary to Spain, and created e. of Briſtol, 461. proceedings againſt him, 606—636. letters to and from him, 607, 608. accuſation, 609——612. anſwer, 612——615. charge againſt the d. of Buckingham, 615, 616. againſt lord Conway, 616. ſpeech and anſwer to the articles at large, 618, &c. relates his negociations with the Scots, 660.

DIGBY [George, lord] call'd to the houſe of peers, ii. 680. accuſed of high-treaſon, 749. dies, 150.

DIGGS [ſir Dudley] explains the articles againſt Buckingham, ii. 506. ſent to the Tower, ib. releas'd, 507.

DILATORINESS of the Spaniards, iii. 458.

DILKES's [rear-admiral] ſucceſsful expedition on the coaſt of Normandy, iii. 588.

DIMMOCK [John] the firſt that appeared as a champion at a K's coronation, i. 508.

DINOTH [abbot of Bangor] preſent at the council of Auſtinrick, i. 80.

DIRECTORY, eſtabliſhed in the room of the Liturgy, ii. 849.

DISPENSATION for the marriage of Prince Charles and the Infanta of Spain, ii. 464. render'd void by the death of Pope Gregory XV. 474.

DISSENTERS, a bill in their favor, iii. 351. their union with the church of England debated in the convocation, but without ſucceſs, 383. reflections thereupon, n. 2. ib. [the ſhorteſt way with] a defamatory libel, 577.

DISSERTATION, on the Anglo-Saxons, i. 174——193. on the Salic law, 500——507. on the maid of Orleans, 677——685. on the Whigs and Tories, iii. 311—330.

DIVORCE of K. HENRY VIII. from Q. CATHERINE, ii. 99—132. reaſon why it made ſo much noiſe, 99. arguments for and againſt it, 117. repeal'd, 231. —from ANN of Cleve, 164.

DIXMUYDE taken by the d. of Lemſter, iii. 424. abandon'd by count Horn, ib. taken by the French, 461.

DOMINICANS, their order founded, i. 402.

DOMINIS [Mark Antony de] archbp. of Spalato, his ſtory, ii. 432.

DONAWERT abandon'd by the Bavarians, iii. 614. a deſcription of the place, n. 1, 615.

DOOMSDAY-Book, an account of it, i. 210.

DORISLAUS [dr Iſaac] the Engliſh agent, murder'd at the Hague, iii. 10. character, ib. n.

DORSET [Thomas Beaufort e. of] encounters the conſtable d' Armagnac, i. 587 or 578.

DORSET [Grey, marq. of] ſent to Spain, diſcovers the artifices of K. FERDINAND, and refuſes to obey him, ii. 20, 21. created d. of Suffolk, 216. conſpires, betrayed, and executed, 234, 235.

DORSET [Buckhurſt, e. of] his ſpeech for an accommodation, ii. 799.

DOUAY beſieged and taken by the allies, iii. 712, 713. retaken by the French, 738.

DOVER [lord, Henry Jermyn] made privy-counſellor, iii. 254.

DOUGLAS [ſir James] bold action of his, i. 458.

DOUGLAS [e. of] commands the French army, i. 617 or 609.

DOUGLAS [Thomas] hang'd for counterfeiting the privy-ſeal, ii. 403.

DOUGLAS [lieutenant-general] brave behavior at the battle of the Boyne, iii. 387. beſieges Athlone, but is obliged to abandon it, 392.

DOWNING [ſir George] obtains the conſent of the States to ſeize three Regicides, iii. 83. preſents a memorial to the States, 90.

DRAKE [Francis] returns from his voyage round the world, ii. 330. knighted, ib. complain'd of by the Spaniſh embaſſador, ib. expedition againſt Spain, 363. takes ſixty ſhips of the Hanſe towns, ib.

DRAKE [dr.] a pamphlet of his cenſured, iii. 546.

DROGHEDRA taken by K. WILLIAM, iii. 392.

DRUIDS, etymology of the word, i. introd. x. an account of the Druids, Bards, and Eubages, ib. maxims of the Druids, ibid. and xi.

DRUNKENNESS, a common vice of the Saxons, i. 192. EDGAR's law concerning it, ib.

DUBRICIUS, bp. of Caerleon, i. 47.

DUBLIN, firſt taken by the Engliſh, i. 273.

DUBOURDIEU [chaplain to the d. of Schomberg] occaſion of great relief being given to the Vaudois, iii. n. 3, 425.

DUDLEY and Empſon, their character and exactions, i. 802, 807. See Empſon.

DUDLEY, choſen ſpeaker of the houſe of commons, i. 804.

DUDLEY [John, viſc. Liſle] one of K. EDWARD VI's regents, his character, ii. 195. created e. of Warwick, 196. puts an end to Ket's rebellion, 209. one of the governors of K. EDWARD VI, aſſumes the chief authority, 212. of no religion, ib. made high-admiral and great maſter of the houſhold, 213. reſtores Boulogne, 214. ambitious project, 215, 216. created d. of Northumberland, 216. abſolute, 219, 223. made count Palatine of Durham, 220. perſuades K. EDWARD to ſettle the crown on his daughter-in-law Jane Grey, ib. ſuſpected of the K's death, 221. error in not ſecuring the Princeſſes Mary and Elizabeth, 223. notifies to Lady Jane her acceſſion, ib. keeps the council in the Tower, and why, ib. 224. hated by the public, 225. heads the army againſt Mary, which ruins all his meaſures, ib. 226. proclaims MARY at Cambridge, 226. ſent to the Tower, 227. condemned and executed, 228. hatred of him the ruin of Jane, and advantageous to Mary, 225, 226.

DUDLEY [Guilford, lord] marries Jane Grey, ii. 220. attainted of high-treaſon, 231. executed, 235.

DUDLEY [Robert] in great favor with Q. ELIZABETH, ii. 265. made e. of Leiceſter, 273. general of the Engliſh troops in the Netherlands, 343. ambitious projects, 344. comes to England to clear himſelf, ib. attempts to ſurpriſe ſome places in Holland, and is recalled, 359. dies, 362.

DUGDALE [Stephen] accuſes five Jeſuits and one prieſt of the popiſh plot, iii. 180. account of him and his evidence, ib. n. 1. depoſitions, 189, 202.

DUKES, or Heartoghan, what they were, i. 177.

DUMONT, undertakes to aſſaſſinate K. WILLIAM, iii. n. 2, 409. diſcovers and prevents the deſign, 424.

DUNBAR-fight, iii. 16.
DUNCANNON [the fort of] ſurrenders to K. WILLIAM, iii. 392.
DUNCOMB [mr. Charles] receiver-general of the exciſe, commited to the Tower for forgery, iii. 500. gets off by the force of almighty gold, n. 1, ib. is knighted by K. WILLIAM, 512.
DUNDALK abandoned by the Iriſh, iii. 376.
DUNKIRK delivered to Cromwell, iii. 39. ſold to the K. of France by CHARLES II, 81. attack'd in vain by the Engliſh fleet, 459. delivered into the hands of the Engliſh, 738.
DUNS-SCOTUS. See Scotus.
DUNULFUS, biſhop of Winchеſter, i. 138.
DUNSTAN, St. born, i. 122. appears in the world, 123. his great intereſt, 124. his diſgrace and baniſhment, 125. recall'd and advanc'd, 126, 127. who he was, 128. his zeal for the monks, ib. procures a council againſt the prieſts, 129. crowns EDWARD the Martyr of his own authority, 132. engroſſes power, and carries on the intereſt of the Monks, 133. a miracle in his favor, ib. more concerning him, 135, 136. ſpeech at the coronation of ETHELRED II, 139, n. 2. loſes his credit, and dies, 140.
DURAS [lord, afterwards e. of Feverſham] petition'd againſt by the parliament, iii. 205. made general of K. JAMES's army, 246. diſbands his army, 291. arreſted by the Prince of Orange's order, 292. releaſed, 296.
DURHAM [biſhop of, William] rebels againſt RUFUS, and is baniſhed the kingdom, i. 215. [biſhop of] made joint regent with Longchamp in the abſence of K. RICHARD, 283. ſeized, 285.
DURHAM [Edmund, of] his character, i. 403.
DURHAM [ſee of] divided, ii. 220. reſtored, 237.
DUTCH, declare war againſt Don Juan of Auſtria, and ſend an embaſſy to Q. ELIZABETH, who lends them mony, ii. 325. procures forces from ELIZABETH, 343. affront her, by giving too much authority to the e. of Leiceſter, her general, 344. complain of the e. of Leiceſter. 359. embroil'd with ELIZABETH on account of their debts, 372, 373. embroil'd with K. JAMES on account of the fiſhery, 410. promiſe to ſtand neutral in the civil war, but ſend ſupplies to the K. 798. endeavor to avoid a war with England, iii. 22. war with the Engliſh commonwealth, 23, 24. in a moſt deplorable condition, 128. refuſe to return K. JAMES's troops, 264.
DUTCH war in K. CHARLES II's time [the firſt] cauſes of it, iii. 88, 89, 90. progreſs of it, 91—102. [the ſecond] occaſion of it, 123. declar'd, 127. continued, ib.—143.
DUTCH-guards take poſſeſſion of St. James's and Whitehall, iii. 293.
DUTCH, their obligations to the Engliſh artfully hinted at by the ſpeaker of the houſe of commons, iii. 375. the author's reflections hereupon, n. 1, ib. horſe, their cowardice at Flerus, 397. charg'd with the loſe of the battle of Landen, n. 3, 434. negociate privately with France, n. 1, 480. guards return to Holland, 507. acknowledge the d. D'Anjou's title to the crown of Spain, 520. under great apprehenſions, apply to the Engliſh, 525. againſt Prince GEORGE of Denmark's commanding the army, 548. too ſelf-intereſted to break off a commerce with France, 550. refuſe to hazard a battle, 556. reflections on their clandeſtine commerce with France, n. 1, 576. order of council to allow them that trade, 631. a remark on this order, n. 4. ib. approve of the d. of Marlborough's acting on the Moſel, 635. fruſtrate a project laid by the d. of Marlborough, 638. give the d. ſatisfaction, 639. a deſcent upon France fruſtrated by a fatal delay of theirs, 656. their ſuppos'd inſincerity at the treaty of Gertruydenburg, n. 1 and 2, 711.
DUTTON-COLT [John] fined 100,000 l. for calling the d. of York papiſt, iii. 225.
DYKVELT [baron] ſent by the Pr. of Orange into England, iii. 335.

E

EARLDORMEN, or earls, what they were, i. 176.
EARTHQUAKE, a terrible one in England, i. 455. another in England, iii. 425. a terrible one in Jamaica, n. 4, ib.
EAST-ANGLIA. V. Eſtanglia.
EASTER, diſputes about it decided, i. 85.
EAST-INDIA company, regulations made in the houſe of commons, in order to confirm their charter, iii. 410. a bill order'd in for their eſtabliſhment, 411. comes to nothing, n 1, ib. reſumed to as little purpoſe, 428. a new charter granted them, 437. a vote of the houſe of commons, to their prejudice, ib. inquiries concerning them in parliament, 450. brought again upon the carpet, 499. bill for a new company paſs'd, ib. ſubſcription of two millions compleated in three days, 501. charter granted the new company, 502. petition of the old company, 509. a bill in their favor rejected, ib. obtain a bill to continue them a corporation, 517. the two companies unite, n. 2, 570. lend the government 1,200,000 l. 680.
EATON-College, founded by K. HENRY VI, i. 712.
EBALD, K. of Kent, i. 66.
ECCLESIASTICAL power, principles on which it was grounded, i. 395.
ECCLESSIASTICAL-commiſſion, erected by K. JAMES II, iii. 255. its power, ib. orders concerning the declaration for liberty of conſcience, 274. diſſolved, 279, 339. appointed by K. WILLIAM, 388.
ECKEREN [an account of the battle of] by general Schlengenberg, iii. 581.
EDBERT, K. of Northumberland, i. 58.
EDBERT-PREN, K. of Kent, i. 68.
EDGAR, brother of EDWY, revolts againſt him, i. 125. obtains the kingdom of Mercia, and ſoon after of all England, 126. his qualities, and peaceful reign, ib. great navy, 127. row'd by eight Kings, ib. frees England from wolves, and puniſhes unjuſt judges, ib. inclination for Dunſtan and the monks, and harangue in favor of the latter, 127, 128, 129. remarks on his character, 130. his amours, 131. death, wives, and children, 132. paſſes for a ſaint, ib.
EDGAR-ATHELING, his right to the crown of England, i. 164. favored by HAROLD, 165. origin of his name, 176. ſubmits to WILLIAM the Conqueror, 199. retires into Scotland, 203. proclaimed King, but retires again to Scotland, 206. ſubmits again, 207. diſgraced and reſtored, 217.
EDGE-HILL-fight, ii. 788.
EDINBURG-treaty, ii. 264.
EDITHA, daughter of e. Goodwin, married to EDWARD the Confeſſor, i. 154. confined, 158. reſtored to favor, 159.
EDMUND, K. of Eſtanglia, his tragical death, i. 106. remarks on it, 134.
EDMUND I, ninth Saxon K. of England, ſucceeds ATHELSTAN, i. 122. divides his kingdom with Anlaff, whom he afterwards ſubdues, ib. 123. his character, laws, and tragical end, 123.
EDMUND II, ſurnamed Ironſide, ſixteenth K. of England, ſucceeds his father ETHELRED II, i. 146. has ſeveral battles with CANUTUS, and beſieges London, ib. fights five battles in one year, ib. entirely defeated, ſends a challenge to CANUTUS, who refuſes it, 147. why called Ironſide, ib. divides the kingdom, ib. aſſaſſinated by two of his own domeſtics, ib. ſons, ib. daughters, ib. n. 4. ſons ſent to be murdered by CANUTUS, but arrive and ſettle in Hungary, 149.
EDMUND, biſhop of Durham, his remarkable election, i. 173.
EDMUND, ſon of K. HENRY III, born, i. 362. made K. of Sicily, 373.
EDMUND [e. of Kent] ſon of K. EDWARD I, enters into a league againſt Q. ISABELLA and Mortimer, i. 460. impoſed upon by ISABELLA and Mortimer to his ruin, 461. condemn'd and executed, 462.
EDMUND'S-BURY, St. origin of its name, i. 106.
EDRED, tenth K. of England, ſucceeds his brother EDMUND I, i. 123. his wars with the Danes, &c. ib. 124. he makes Northumberland a county, 124. his devotion, and favor to Dunſtan and the monks, ib. death, ib. titles, 125.
EDRICK, K. of Kent, i. 67.
EDRICK, an Engliſh lord, revolts againſt the Conqueror, i. 201.
EDRIC STREON, d. of Mercia, his pernicious advice to K. ETHELRED I, i. 143. favors CANUTUS, 145. ſubtilty, 146. puniſhment, 149.
EDWARD the Elder, ſeventh K. of England, ſucceeds ALFRED, i. 115. his wars, 116. founds the univerſity of Cambridge, 117. the Danes, Welſh, &c. ſubmit to him, 118. his death, wives, and children, ib.
EDWARD the Martyr, thirteenth K. of England, crown'd by Dunſtan, i. 132. diſputes in his reign, 133. his tragical death, ib. why called the Martyr, ib.
EDWARD the Confeſſor, one of the ſons of ETHELRED II, flies to Normandy on his brother's death, i. 153. returns and accuſes e. Goodwin, who juſtifies himſelf by a bribe, ib. 154. ſucceeds HARDIKNUTE in the kingdom, by the help of e. Goodwin, whoſe daughter he engages to marry, 154. his weakneſs, 156. takes from his mother all her treaſure, and makes her undergo the Ordeal, ib. deſigns to puniſh Goodwin, and confines the Queen in a monaſtery, 158. pretended will in favor of WILLIAM the Baſtard, 159. calls home EDWARD his nephew from Hungary, who dies ſoon after, 160, 161. builds and dedicates the church of Weſtminſter, 162, 163. dies, and leaves the ſucceſſion undetermined, 163. character, ib. gift of curing the King's-evil, ib. proofs of his good-nature, ib.
EDWARD, ſon of EDMUND Ironſide, eſcapes into Hungary, and marries the K. of Hungary's ſiſter-in-law, i. 149. called home by his uncle the Confeſſor, but dies ſoon after, 160, 161.
EDWARD [Prince] ſon of K. HENRY III, born, i. 356. made d. of Guienne, 369. married to Eleanor of Caſtile, 372. ratifies his father's agreement with the Pope, 377. juſtifies himſelf againſt the falſe report of the e. of Glouceſter, 381. joins his father againſt the barons, 383. takes 10,000 l. from the Templars, ib. extricates himſelf from a dangerous blockade, 384. ſeized by the e. of Leiceſter, and compell'd to his terms, ib. defeats the militia of London, but purſues them too far, 385. taken by the e. of Leiceſter, 386. obliged to approve the barons new plan of government, 387. makes his eſcape, 388. defeats the e. of Leiceſter, and reſcues his father, 389. brings the Cinque-Ports to obedience, 391. generous action of his, ib. forces the rebels of Ely to ſurrender, 392. engages to accompany the French K. to the Holy-Land, 393. arrives there, and is wounded by a ruffian, whom he kills, 394. concludes a truce with the Sultan, and ſets out on his return to England, ib. [I King of England, ſurnamed Longſhanks] at his father's death, ſworn to by the barons in his abſence, 405. paſſes thro' Sicily, Italy, and France, into England, 406. crown'd, ib. enquires into the ſtate of the kingdom, ib. attacks the Prince of Wales, who ſubmits to hard terms, 407. obtains the country of Ponthieu and Montreuil, ib. executes 280 Jews for debaſing the coin, ib. procures the ſtatute of Mortmain, ib. 408. publiſhes a proclamation for enquiring into the titles of thoſe who held lands of the crown, which he ſoon revokes, 408. marches againſt the Welſh, ib. kills Pr. Lleweline, and takes poſſeſſion of Wales, 409. extorts great ſums from the Jews, 410. goes to France, and concludes a treaty with PHI-LIP the Fair, ib. does homage to PHILIP, ib. choſen mediator between the Kings of Sicily and Arragon, 412. returns to England, and ſeverely puniſhes corrupt judges, 413. drives all the Jews out of England, ib. concludes a marriage for the Prince his ſon with Margaret of Scotland, 414. choſen arbitrator between the claimants of the Scots crown, 415. requires to be acknowledg'd Sovereign of Scotland, 416. which he obtains, 417. has the poſſeſſion of the kingdom put into his hands, ib. proteſts, 418. proofs of his right of ſovereignty over Scotland, 419. preſides at the examination of the claimants rights, 421. decides in favor of John Baliol, againſt Robert Bruce, 422. declares BALIOL King of Scots, and receives his homage, 423. treats the Scots haughtily, 424. revokes what he had granted them, 425. ſummons the Scots King to Weſtminſter, who appears before the Engliſh parliament, ib. attacks the Scots on BALIOL's revolt, 426. reduces Berwick, and defeats BALIOL, ib. ſends him priſoner to the Tower of London, and takes away the Scots crown, ſcepter, and coronation-ſtone, 427. burns their records, ib. unfairly dealt with by K. PHILIP, ib. retracts the homage he had done him, 428. engages the e. of Flanders in his intereſt, and makes a league againſt France, 429. abates the pride of the clergy, 430. oppoſed by the barons, ib. deprives two lords of their poſts, ib. appeaſes the people, who were enflamed by the deprived lords, ib. arrives in Flanders, and makes ſeveral acquiſitions, 431. runs the riſque of his life at Ghent, ib. leaves the quarrel with PHILIP to the Pope, 432. confirms the great charter, ib. makes an excurſion into Scotland, and wins the battle of Falkirk, ib. receives the Pope's ſentence concerning his quarrel with France, 433. marches a third time into Scotland, and gains a compleat victory, ib. threatens to waſte all Scotland, but grants a truce at the French K's ſolicitations, 434. inveſts EDWARD his eldeſt ſon in the principality of Wales, ib. grants a new truce to the Scots, ib. ſends Seagrave into Scotland, who is beat thrice in one day, 435. makes a treaty with France, ib. goes a fourth time into Scotland, where he meets little oppoſition, ib. requires a ſtrict regard to his authority, ib. commits the Prince of Wales to a common goal, 436. acts with a deſpotic power, ib. ſends an army into Scotland againſt Bruce, which defeats him, 437. arrives in Scotland, and forms the deſign of uniting it with England, ib. on its revolt, reſolves to lay it waſte, and draws together an army at Carliſle for that purpoſe, ib. taken ill, gives his laſt orders to his ſon, 438. carried into Scotland, and dies at Burgh, ib. character, ib. children, ib. parliaments in his reign, ib.

EDWARD [Prince] ſon of EDWARD I, born at Caernarvon in Wales, i. 409. articles of his intended marriage with Margaret of Norway, 414. inveſted in the principality of Wales and earldom of Cheſter, 434. commited by his father to a common goal, 436. his favorite Piers Gaveſton, baniſh'd, 437. adviſed never to recal him, 438. [II K. of England, ſurnamed of Caernarvon] highly eſteemed by the Engliſh at his acceſſion to the crown, 439. recals Gaveſton, which does him hurt, ib. impriſons the biſhop of Litchfield, ib. goes to France, and marries Iſabella, daughter of PHILIP the Fair, ib. pacifies the nobility, who had made a league againſt him, and is crown'd, 440. neglects his promiſe to the barons, ib. gives his niece to Gaveſton, ib. promiſes to baniſh Gaveſton, but delays it, ib. makes him governor of Ireland, but ſoon recals him, 441. gives up the government to commiſſioners, ib. baniſhes Gaveſton, and recals him again, ib. ſurprizingly indolent, while the barons levy forces againſt him, 442. retires with Gaveſton to Scarborough, ib. accommodates matters after Gaveſton's death, and promiſes a general amneſty, which he delays to publiſh, 443. publiſhes the amneſty, ib. marches againſt Scotland, and returns, having done nothing, 444. advances to Sterlyn with 100,000 men, and is entirely defeated, ib. hangs an impoſtor, who pretended to be the true Edward, 445. reproach'd with his conduct in a letter, ib. convenes a parliament, but revokes his order, ib. reconciles the angry barons, 446. ſends troops to Ireland, ib. ſolicits the Pope to procure him a peace with Scotland, ib. beſieges Berwick, but to no purpoſe, ib. receives the Spencers to favor, and creates the father e. of Winchеſter, 447. raiſes forces againſt the barons, and publiſhes a proclamation to ſatisfy the people, 448. recals the Spencers, who had been baniſhed by the parliament, ib. reduces the barons, and puts to death the e. of Lancaſter, their general, ib. marches into Scotland, but obliged to return for want of proviſions, 449. purſued and defeated by the Scots King, ib. makes a truce with him, ib. pardons Roger Mortimer twice, after he was condemned, 450. loſes Guienne to the French King, ib. ſends his Queen to France, who concludes a treaty with her brother, 451. conſents that his ſon EDWARD ſhall do homage to the French King for the duchy of Guienne, of which he is to be put in poſſeſſion, ib. ſends for his Queen and ſon back, who refuſe to return, 452. juſtifies young Spencer to the French King againſt the Q's complaints, ib. falſely accuſed of having baniſhed the Queen and Prince, 453. entirely abandon'd at the Queen's landing, retires to the weſt, ib. endeavors to withdraw into Ireland, but forced upon the Welſh coaſt, hides himſelf in Wales, 454. ſeiz'd and conducted to Monmouth, where he gives up the great-ſeal, ib. conducted to Kenelworth caſtle, ib. depoſed by a parliament called in his name, and his ſon Edward elected in his room, ib. obliged to reſign his crown to his ſon, 455. reſigns the regalia to the parliament's deputies, ib. character, ib. children, ib. writes to his Queen for a mitigation of her ſeverity, but in vain, 458. barbarouſly treated by his keepers, ib. inhumanly murdered, 459.

EDWARD [Prince] ſon of EDWARD II, born, i. 443. goes to Paris, and does homage to the French King, 452. contracted to Philippa, daughter of the count of Haynault, 453. elected guardian of the realm by the lords, 454. elected K. by the parliament in his father's place, ib. vows not to accept the crown, but with his father's conſent, which the parliament oblige him to give, 455. [III K. of England] proclaimed and crowned, 457. requires the canonization of the late e. of Lancaſter, ib. draws together a numerous army, and marches after the Scots, but cannot engage them, ib. 458. marries Philippa of Haynault, 459. makes peace with the Scots, and gives up all his pretenſions over Scotland, ib. reſtores to them the regalia, 460. reſolves to puniſh the malecontents, who had form'd a league againſt the court, ib. grants them an amneſty at the archbp. of Canterbury's requeſt, 461. makes a treaty with France, 462. claims the regency of France, which Philip de Valois obtains, ib. demands the French crown, which Philip alſo obtains, 463. does homage to Philip, but proteſts in private againſt the conſequences of it, ib. confirms his homage by letters patent, 464. ſends Mortimer e. of March to the Tower, ib. calls a new parliament, ib. confines the Queen mother, and reduces her penſion, ib. forms a deſign of conquering Scotland, and employs BALIOL to execute it, 465. makes a ſhew of obſerving the peace while BALIOL prepares, who gets himſelf crown'd K. of Scotland, and does homage to EDWARD, 466. raiſes an army under pretence of ſending it to Ireland, but marches it to Scotland, ib. takes Berwick, and defeats the Scots at Haly-down-hill, ib. makes three more expeditions into Scotland, in which he ravages the kingdom, 467. deſigns to invade France, and makes alliances with ſeveral Princes, ib. 468. writes to the Pope againſt K. PHILIP, 469. orders the d. of Brabant to demand the crown of France, and makes him his lieutenant in that kingdom, ib. goes to Antwerp, ib. made vicar of the Empire, 470. borrows mony on all lands, and even pawns his crown, ib. aſſumes the title of King of France, ib. publiſhes a declaration addreſs'd to the French, and a manifeſto againſt K. PHILIP, 471. returns to England, obtains a ſupply, and confirms the grand charter, ib. defeats the French fleet, ib. beſieges Tournay to no purpoſe, and ſends a defiance to the French King, 472. makes a truce, and returns to England, ib. goes into Britany, begins four ſieges at once, but is obliged to raiſe them, 474. makes a two years truce, ib. marches againſt the Scots, has his fleet diſabled by a ſtorm, and grants a truce to the Scots, ib. calls a parliament, 475. creates his eldeſt ſon Prince of Wales, ib. inſtitutes a tournament, to engage perſons of fortune in his intereſt, ib. declares the truce with France broken, ſends a challenge to K. PHILIP, and begins hoſtilities by his generals, 476. publiſhes a manifeſto, and goes into Flanders, ib. embarks for Guienne, but driven back by contrary winds, 477. lands in Normandy, knights the Pr. of Wales, and waſtes the country, ib. forces a paſſage over the Somme, ib. meets PHILIP at Crecy, and gains a compleat victory, ib. 478. commends his ſon for his behavior in the action, ib. beſieges Calais, 479. refuſes a challenge from K. PHILIP, 480. takes Calais, and condemns ſix of the principal burghers to death, but pardons them at his Queen's intreaty, ib. ſettles an Engliſh colony at Calais, and conſents to a truce, ib. refuſes the Imperial dignity, ib. falls upon a French ambuſcade before Calais, and beats them, 481. generoſity, ib. returns to England, and inſtitutes the order of the garter, ib. defeats the Spaniſh pyrates, 482. inveſts the Pr. of Wales in the duchy of Guienne, ib. makes an incurſion into France, ib. retakes Berwick from the Scots, 483. receives the captive King of France with great reſpect and affection, 484. releaſes DAVID K. of Scots, 485. makes a tournament at Windſor, ib. agrees to terms with K. JOHN, which the States of France reject, ib. croſſes over to Calais with 100,000 men, ib. ravages France even to the gates of Paris, 486. perſuaded by the Pope's legate to a peace, ib. ſends plenipotentiaries to Bretigny, who negociate a treaty, ib. ſwears to the peace at Calais, and ſets K. JOHN at liberty, 489. reſtores the lands he had taken from forein priors, 490. erects the duchy of Guienne into a principality, with which he inveſts the Prince of Wales, ib. publiſhes a general amneſty, ib. confers titles on all his children, ib. agrees to releaſe the French hoſtages, ib. refuſes a tribute demanded by the Pope, 492. diſguſts the noblemen of Guienne, 493. loſes the earldom of Ponthieu, and ſeveral towns in France, 495. reſumes the title of K. of France, ib. attempts in vain to relieve Thouars, 496. makes a truce, 497. falls in love with Alice Pierce, ib. cauſes the people to murmur at his expences, ib. extravagant tournament in Smithfield, ib. mortify'd by his parliament, who oblige him to remove Alice Pierce, 498. publiſhes a general amneſty, ib. recals the d. of Lancaſter, and Alice Pierce, ib. creates his grandſon Richard Prince of Wales, ib. gives him the garter, 499. falls ill, and is deſerted by all, ib. dies, ib. character, and children, ib.

EDWARD the Black Prince, eldeſt ſon of EDWARD III, born, i. 465. created d. of Cornwall, 469. Prince of Wales, 475. knighted, 477. prodigious actions at the battle of Crecy, where his father gives him him the honor of the victory, 478. takes the plume and motto, Ich Dien, for his creſt, ib. modeſty, ib. inveſted in the duchy of Guinne, 482. ravages Languedoc, 483. makes offers to King JOHN of France, which are rejected, ib. encourages his army, ib. beats the French at Poitiers, and takes K. JOHN priſoner, ib. 484. moderation and generoſity after the battle, 484. grants a truce for two years at the Pope's interceſſion, and conducts K. John to London, ib. ſent plenipotentiary to Bretigny, 486. inveſted with the principality of Guienne, 490. keeps a court at Bourdeaux, ib. wins the battle of Najara, in favor of PETER K. of Caſtile, whom he re-eſtabliſhes, 492. contracts a fatal illneſs, ib. impoſes a tax on the inhabitants of Guienne, 493. returns a haughty anſwer to the K. of France, who ſummon'd him before the court of peers, 494. puniſhes the inhabitants of Limoges, 496. very ill, gives up Aquitain to his father, and returns to England, ib. dies, 498. encomium, ib. why called the Black Prince, ib.

EDWARD [Prince] fourth ſon of EDWARD III, created d. of Cambridge, i. 490. marries a daughter of Peter the Cruel, 496. made one of the regents to King RICHARD II, 508. ſent with an army into Portugal, 511. returns much diſſatisfied, 515. made d. of York, 518. leaves the court, 525. left regent while K. RICHARD goes to Ireland, 528, or * 526. attempts in vain to hinder a general rebellion on the d. of Lancaſter's landing, 529, or * 527. goes over to the d. of Lancaſter, ib. advice followed concerning the depoſing of RICHARD, 531, or 528.

EDWARD e. of March, ſon of Richard d. of York, born, i. 652. continues his father's claim to the crown, 675. elected K. at London, 676. [IV K. of England] marches againſt Q. MARGARET, 685. wins the battle of Towton, 686. takes down his father's head from the walls of York, and returns to London, 687. crowned, 688. creates diverſe peers, ib. treats with the e. of Roſs, 689. congratulated by the Pope, ib. conceſſion to the clergy, 690. ſucceſsful again in the North. ib. makes a truce with France, 691. rewards his friends with his enemies eſtates, and renders himſelf popular, ib. demands in marriage Bona of Savoy, ib. makes a truce with Scotland, 692. falls in love with Elizabeth Woodville, and marries her, which offends the e. of Warwick, who had concluded his marriage treaty with Bona, 693. keeps fair both with the King of France, and his enemies, 695. makes alliances with Caſtile and Denmark, 696. ſends aid to the d. of Bretany, 697. renews an alliance with ARRAGON, and ſends thither a great number of ſheep, 698. army defeated by Warwick's party, whom nevertheleſs he miſtruſts not, 699. ſees his error, marches againſt Warwick, and is taken priſoner, 700. eſcapes to London, and recruits, ib. beheads lord Wells for his ſon's rebellion, 701. defeats and beheads young Wells, ib. warn'd of Warwick's cabal in France, ib. gains his brother the d. of Clarence from Warwick's party, 702. too ſecure, deſerted by his friends, ib. eſcapes to France, and in danger from pirates, 703. declared a traitor and uſurper by parliament, ib. engages the d. of Burgundy to aſſiſt him, 705. lands at Ravenſpur, and is coldly received, 706. aſſumes only the title of duke, and why, ib. ſwears to be faithful to K. HENRY, 707. joined by the d. of Clarence, ib. marches towards London, ib. received by the Londoners, 708. meets Warwick at Barnet, defeats, and kills him, ib. marches againſt Q. MARGARET, whom he defeats and takes at Tewksbury, 710. cauſes Pr. Edward, ſon of HENRY, to be ſlain in cold blood, 711. pardons the baſtard of Fauconbridge for rebellion, and afterwards beheads him, ib. tries to get the earls of Pembroke and Richmond into his hands, but fails, 712, 714, 719. gets the lords to take an oath to his ſon, 712. negociates ſeveral affairs with forein ſtates, 713. perſecutes the Lancaſtrians, 714. carries on other negociations, 715. betroths his daughter Cecily to the King of Scots ſon, 716. obtains a ſubſidy, and raiſes more mony by benevolence, ib. goes to Calais, and declares war againſt France, 717. deceived by the d. of Burgundy and the conſtable De St. Pol, and greatly embarraſs'd, ib. makes a treaty with France, 718. confers with King LEWIS at Pequigny, ib. refuſes to aid Maria ducheſs of Burgundy, and why, 720, 721. puts the d. of Clarence to death, 721, 722. creates his eldeſt ſon Prince of Wales, and his youngeſt d. of York, ib. grows effeminate and ſlothful, ib. raiſes mony illegally, 723. carries on ſeveral negociations, and diſcovers the inſincerity of the French K. ib. at war with France and Scotland, 724, 725. ill poſture of his affairs, 725. makes great preparations againſt France, 726. death and character, ib. iſſue, ib. ſtate of the court before his deceaſe, 728. children ſaid to be illegitimate, 734.

EDWARD [Prince] ſon of HENRY VI, taken priſoner at the battle of Tewsbury, i. 711. his anſwer to K. EDWARD IV, ib. murder'd in cool blood by the Yorkiſts, ib.

EDWARD [Prince] eldeſt ſon of EDWARD IV, created Pr. of Wales, i. 722. proclaimed K. 727. [V King of England] ſeiz'd by the d. of Gloceſter's order, 731. brought to London, and treated with much ſeeming reſpect, ib. lodg'd in the Tower, 733. ſmother'd to death, 740. bones of him and his brother found, ib.

EDWARD [Prince] ſon of K. HENRY VIII, born, ii. 154. [VI King of England] diſpoſition and good qualities, 193. proclaimed, ib. confers new dignities, 196. conſtitutes his uncle Edward Seymour protector by patent, 197. turn'd againſt the protector by lord Thomas Seymour, 203. enlarges his patent, 204. conſents to the execution of his uncle Thomas, 206. ſigns with tears a warrant for burning Joan of Kent, 207. remov'd to Windſor by the protector, and addreſs'd againſt him by the council, 211. approves of the council's proceedings, ib. ſends an embaſſy to France, to treat of his marriage, 216. prepoſſeſs'd againſt his uncle, the late protector, ſigns a warrant for his execution, 217, 218. falls ſick, and appears concerned for religion, 220. ſettles the crown on Jane Grey, ib. dies, 221. character, 219, n. 5, and 221, n. funeral, 227.

EDWIN, the ſon of ALLA, K. of Deira, his diſtreſs, i. 53. advancement to the crown of Northumberland, ib. 54. to the monarchy of the Saxons, 54. his juſtice, ib. death, ib. converſion by Paulinus, 83.

EDWY, eleventh K. of England, ſucceeds EDRED, and diſgraces Dunſtan, i. 125. traduced by Dunſtan and the deprived monks, ib. abandons Mercia to his brother EDGAR, and dies K. of Weſſex only, 126. his character by the monks, ib.

EDWY's [the two] ſons of ETHELRED II. baniſh'd by CANUTUS, i. 149. one of them recall'd and murder'd, ib.

EGBERT, K. of Kent, i. 67.

EGBERT, bp. of the Northumbrians, obtains an archi-epiſcopal Pall, i. 89.

EGBERT, K. of Weſſex, i. 73. ſubdues Cornwal and Wales, ib. choſen Monarch, ib. routs the K. of Mercia, 74. conquers Kent and Suſſex, ib. Mercia and Northumberland, 75. his wars with the Danes, 100. death, 101.

EGERTON, lord-chancellor, refuſes to ſign the e. of Somerſet's pardon, ii. 426.

EGFRID, K. of Northumberland, i. 57.

EGFRID, K. of Mercia, i. 62.

EGRICK, K. of Eſtanglia, i. 63.

EGWINA, concubine of EDWARD the Elder, her ſtory, i. 118.

EIKON BASILIKE, character of that work, ii. 636.

ELEANOR de Guienne, wife of Louis le Jeune K. of France, divorced by him, and married to Pr. Henry, afterwards HENRY II, K. of England, i. 243. right to the province of Toulouſe, 261. conſpires againſt her husband, 274. puts Roſamond to death, ib. impriſon'd, 275. ſet at liberty, 281. labors for her ſon's liberty, 290, 291. dies, 304.

ELEANOR, daughter of K. HENRY II, and Q. ELEANOR married to the K. of Caſtile, i. 270. taken priſoner by her brother John, 302.

ELECTIONS of biſhops and abbots, diſputes concerning them, i. 397.

ELECTIONS, methods uſed to influence them, ii. 230. diſputed, 402.

ELECTORS of parliament-men interrogated, iii. 335.

ELECTOR of Saxony commands on the Rhine, iii. 409. elected a knight of the garter, 416. of Bavaria, made governor of the Spaniſh Netherlands, 422. commands with K. WILLIAM in Flanders, 460. gives K. WILLIAM notice of the intended invaſion, 470. pays a viſit to him at Loo, 506. delivers the towns and fortreſſes of the Spaniſh Netherlands to the French, 520. ſeizes Ulm, and threatens the Empire, 561. proteſts againſt the proceedings of the diet of the Empire, ib. reaſons for his defection, n. 5, ib. takes poſſeſſion of Ratisbon, 594. publiſhes a manifeſto, ib. invades Tirol, but is obliged to quit it, 595. takes Augsburg, and diſtreſſes Auſtria, ib. is maſter of the Danube, 611. intrenches his army under the cannon of Augsburg, 615. cut off from his dominions, which are ravag'd, ib. evacuates Ratisbon, ib. is defeated at Hochſtadt, 621. retires to Ulm, 622. and from thence towards the Iller, 623. forms a deſign againſt general Auverquerque, but is prevented in it, 624. retreats upon the d. of Marlborough's forcing the French lines, 637. is defeated at the battle of Ramellies, 649. his precipitate flight, 650. commands the French army on the Rhine, 686. makes a fruitleſs attempt on Bruſſels, 691. [of Hanover] inſtal'd knight of the garter, 581. takes the command of the army of the Empire, 678. lays down that command, 713.

ELFLEDA, daughter of ALFRED, her character, i. 116. death, 117.

ELIZABETH [Princeſs] daughter of EDWARD IV, refuſes to marry her uncle Richard, i. 748. married to HENRY VII, 760. crown'd, 767. dies, 801.

ELIZABETH [Princeſs] daughter of HENRY VIII, her claim to the crown at her brother's death, ii. 222. accuſed of conſpiring againſt her ſiſter, acquited, but rigorouſly treated, 235. pardon'd at Prince Philip's interceſſion, 237. removed to Hampton, diſſembles her religion, 241. in great danger, 248. [Q. of England] reaſons for and againſt her ſucceſſion, 250. proclaimed, and comes to London, 251. forms a mix'd council, ib. rejects King PHILIP's offer of marriage, ib. and why, 252. calls a parliament, and publiſhes a proclamation in favor of the reformed, ib. creates new peers, 253. crown'd, ib. anſwer to the commons who addreſs'd her to marry, 254. forbids to preach without licence, 255. concludes a peace with France, ib. with Scotland, 256. much oppos'd, 260. maxims of government, 262. differently ſpoke of by different authors, ib. treats with the Scots malecontents, 263. ſends an army to Scotland, and procures an advantageous treaty of the regency, 264. refuſes ſeveral offers of marriage, 265. mortifies K. PHILIP, who had refuſed the garter, 266. rejects the Pope's offers, ib. refuſes a ſafe safe-conduct to MARY Q. of Scots, 267. suspicious of MARY, 268. views with regard to the treaty of Edinburg, ib. refuses to declare MARY her successor, 270. or to receive a nuncio from Rome, ib. prepares for her defence against K. PHILIP, ib. good œconomy, ib. imprisons the countess of Lenox, ib discovers and pardons a conspiracy, but is severe to Catherine Grey, 271. distrusts the French and Spanish courts, ib. treats with the French Hugonots, and publishes a manifesto in their favor, ib. dissuades MARY Q. of Scots from marrying the archduke Charles, and why, 273. visits the university of Cambridge, 274. politics with regard to MARY, ib. indeavors, in vain, to dissuade her from marrying lord Darnley, 277. demands lord Darnley after marriage, 278. discovers MARY's designs, and promises protection to the Scots fugitives, 280. vex'd at the birth of James, afterwards K. JAMES I, ib. she and MARY suspect, and lay snares for each other, ib. 281. address'd to marry, which perplexes her, 282. speech on that occasion, ib. demands Calais, which is refused by the French, 290. prudently dissembles, and breaks off the affair, ib. 291. stickles for the French Hugonots, 291, 292. quarrels with K. PHILIP of Spain, 292, 298. apply'd to by MARY for protection, but refuses to see her till she had clear'd herself, 293. resolves on detaining her, 294. takes advantage of the Scots troubles, ib. treats with the regent Murray, 296. examines the affair of the Scots K's death, ib. 297. refuses to decide, 298. assists the Hugonots, ib. makes an alliance with the Czar, 299. inform'd of an intended marriage between MARY and the d. of Norfolk, and menaces the d. 300. writes to the States of Scotland in MARY's favor, 305. avoids a snare laid for her by Lidington, 306. libel'd in Scotland, which she neglects, 307. demands a suspension of arms between the parties in Scotland, ib. excommunicated and conspired against, 308. still detains MARY, and why, ib. refuses to marry the French King, 310. protracts the dispute between the Scots factions, ib. engaged by her ministers to treat of marriage, 311. dissembles with the French K. and why, 312. discovers that Norfolk had engaged in MARY's interest, 314. security provided for by parliament, 315. orders Norfolk's execution, 316. sends commissioners to examine Q. MARY, 317. negociations with France, 318, 319. CHARLES and she mutually dissemble, 318, 320. treats with the Scots regent, 322. speaks haughtily to the French embassador, ib. in profound tranquility, ib. refuses a visit from the d. of Alençon, 323. lends mony to the States, 325. dissembles with K. PHILIP, who seeks revenge, 327. behaves prudently in regard to a marriage proposal, ib. answer to the Spanish embassador's complaint against Drake, 330. settles the articles of her intended marriage with the d. of Anjou, 331. starts difficulties about the marriage, but receives the d. well at his arrival, 332. retracts her promise, ib. 333. conduct reflected on, ib. severe to the Papists, ib. in distress, relies on her peoples affection, and wins it, 334. turns her thoughts to the Scots affairs, ib. feigns a desire to release Q. MARY, 335. writes a warm letter to K. JAMES, 336. sends Davison into Scotland, who gains the e. of Arran, 337. reproves the judges for their severity to the Popish delinquents, ib. sends away the Spanish embassador, 338. treats with Q. MARY, ib. 339. discovers a conspiracy, which occasions an act against Q. MARY, and another against the Papists, 340. threaten'd from diverse quarters, 341. attempts to hinder the Scots K's marriage, 342. makes an aliance with the States, and sends a fleet into America, 343. aids the Hugonots, 344. offended with the States for giving the e. of Leicester, whom she sent to assist them, too much power, ib. makes a treaty with K. JAMES, ib. 345. escapes a horrid conspiracy, 346. appoints commissioners to try MARY, 347. answer to the parliament's petition for MARY's execution, 352. speech to the parliament, who insisted on their demand, 354. address'd in MARY's behalf, but dissembles thro' the whole affair, 355, 356. signs a warrant for her execution, and afterwards expresses great grief at it, 357. letter to the Scots King thereon, ib. sends a fleet against the Spaniards, which burns many of their ships, 359. prepares against the invincible Armada, 360. caresses the K. of Scots, 361. glorifies God for the victory of her fleet, 362. freed from her fears, sends a fleet to distress the Spaniards, 363. keeps in a posture of defence, 364. assists HENRY IV of France, 365. deceiv'd by HENRY, which highly affronts her, 366. complimented with an unusual subsidy, 367. letter to HENRY on his turning Papist, 368. leagues with him, 369. escapes new conspiracies, ib. uneasy with K. JAMES, who alters his conduct, 370. refuses to succor HENRY, and unites heartily with JAMES, ib. 371. has a difference with the States, which is made up, 372, 373. sends another fleet against Spain, which pillages Cadiz, &c. 373. another, which gains not much advantage, 374. justifies her conduct to K. HENRY, who makes peace without her, 375. incens'd with HENRY, prosecutes singly the war with Spain, 376. makes a new treaty with the States, 377. differs with the e. of Essex, but sends him lieutenant to Ireland, 377, 378. writes him an angry letter, and causes him to be put under an arrest, 379. behavior towards him during his confinement, 380, 381, 382. signs a warrant for his execution, 383. pardons several that were concerned with him, 384. compliments between her and the K's of Scotland and France, ib. suppresses monopolies, and is thanked by the commons, 385. speech on that occasion, ib. sends another fleet against Spain, which brings home a great prize, ib. publishes a proclamation against the Jesuits, 386. sickens, and grows melancholy, ib. declares the Scots K. her successor, and dies, ib. character, ib. 387, 388. sparing of titles, 390.

ELIZABETH [Princess] daughter of King JAMES I, married to the El. Palatine, ii. 418. expence of her marriage, 423.

ELLA, K. of Sussex, elected monarch of all the Saxons, i. 36.

ELLA, K. of Bernicia, i. 105, 106.

ELLEMBERG [major general] beheaded for cowardice, iii. 462.

ELLIOT [sir John] sent to the Tower for managing against Buckingham, ii. 506. releas'd, 507. imprison'd for the loan, 520. petitions in vain, ib. releas'd, 521. injoin'd silence by the speaker, 534. imprison'd, and study seal'd up, 544.

ELUTHERIUS, bishop of Wessex, i. 90.

ELY, Isle of, besieged and taken, i. 206. rebellion there, suppressed, 393.

EMMA of Normandy, married to ETHELRED II. i. 142. afterwards to CANUTUS the Great, 149. attempt in favor of her sons by ETHELRED, 152. undergoes the Ordeal, 156.

EMPIRE [the German] declares war against France, &c. iii. 561. supine negligence of the diet, 594. deplorable state of it, 611.

EMPSOM and DUDLEY, their character, i 802, 807. sent to the Tower, ii. 4. condemned, 5.

ENGLAND, great variety in the history of it, i. introd. vii. origin of the name, i. 45. state of it under the Saxons, 49. so call'd before EGBERT, 100, 101. unhappy state under ETHELRED II, 141. ill state of it under RICHARD II, 527 or *525. state under Q. ELIZABETH, ii. 260, 261. at the death of K. CHARLES I, iii. 3, 4.

ENGLISH, their complaints against the Normans, who complain again of the English, i. 203. complains against the popes, 535, or 533. against the clergy, 536, or 534. means used by them to redress their grievances, 537, or 534. sad condition in France before the battle of Azincourt, 581, or 573. loss there, 585 or 576. disposition towards the Popes at the time of K. HENRY VIII's divorce, ii. 116, 125. reason of their great submission to K. HENRY, 139. disposition towards Q. ELIZABETH, 261. enter Scotland under lord Grey, 264. disposition at Q. ELIZABETH's death, 388. jealous of the Scots, 403.

ENGLISH-language, remarks on it, i. 211. first used in the courts of justice, 490.

ENGLISHMEN, whence so called, i. 100. n. exempted from all duties, 150. exploits of some in the east, 491.

ENSIGN, the bravery of one in Cæsar's army, i. 2.

EPISCOPACY restored in Scotland, ii. 557. state of it from the reformation to King CHARLES's time, 568—573. reduced to a low ebb in Scotland, iii. n. 4, 360. abolish'd in that kingdom, n. 1. 361.

ERCAMBERT, K. of Kent, i. 67.

ERCENWIN, first K. of Essex, i. 39.

ERPWALD, K. of Estangia, i. 63.

ERLE's [colonel] bravery before Limerick, iii. 393.

ERROR of F. Orleans, and mr. archdeacon Echard, n. 1. iii. 337.

ESCUAGE, or scutage, i. 324, n. 3.

ESCUS, K. of Kent, i. 36.

ESSEX [kingdom of] abridgment of its history, i. 64, 65. church of, 91, 92.

ESSEX [William Parr, e. of] brother of Queen Catherine Parr, his character, ii. 195. created marquis of Northampton, 196. See Northampton.

ESSEX, Walter Devereux created e. of, ii. 316. goes on an expedition to Ireland, but without success, 323.

ESSEX [Robert Devereux e. of] in great favor with Q. ELIZABETH, i. 365. sent to France with succors for HENRY IV, ib. expedition to Cadiz, 373. mortified at his return, ib. disgusted with the court, 374. created earl-marshal, ib. receives a box of the ear from the Queen, 377. sent to Ireland as lieutenant, 378. conduct, character, and power, ib. acts contrary to his own counsel, and grant Tir-oen a truce, ib. suspected by the Queen, who writes to him angrily, ib, 379. meditates a dangerous design, but is diverted, 379. comes into England without leave, and put under an arrest, ib. apology, ib. conduct examined, ib, 380. declared guilty, and condemned to penalties, ib. humbles himself, but listens again to pernicious counsels, 380, 381. falls into a snare which is laid for him, and designs against the Queen's person, ib. writes to the King of Scots that a design was formed to deprive him of the succession, ib. entertains suspected persons, ib. designs, 382. sent for to council, excuses himself from going, ib. imprisons the lord keeper and others who are sent to him by the Queen, ib. indeavors to raise an insurrection in the city, but without success, ib. opposed in his return, invested, and taken, ib. committed to the Tower, 383. condemned, ib. becomes penitent, and discovers his accomplices, ib. beheaded, ib. much favored by the Queen, ib. accomplices executed, 384.

ESSEX [Robert Devereux e. of] son of the former, restored to his father's honors, ii. 390. caress'd by the e. of Salisbury, marries the e. of Suffolk's second daughter, 418. slighted by his wife, who loves Carr the King's favourite, ib. account of his divorce, ib. 419, 420. heads the parliament's army, 786. fights the King at Edge-hill, 788. takes Reading, 808. fights at Newbury, 811. character, 825. letter concerning a peace, ib. letter to the Oxford parliament, 835. progress in the West, 841. followed by the K. into Cornwal, 843. straiten'd, capitulates, but saves his cavalry, 844. well received at London, ib. resigns his commission, 859.

ESSEX [Arthur Capel e. of] speech to King CHARLES against calling a parliament at Oxford, iii. 207. found with his throat cut in the Tower, 219. K. CHARLES II, and the d. of York ſuſpected of his murder, ib. inquiries concerning his death, 351.

ESSEX [Frances Howard counteſs of,] loves Carr the King's favorite, ii. 418. gets divorced from her husband, 419, 420. marries Carr, 421. condemned, and pardoned, 427.

ESTANGLIA, kingdom of, abridgment of its hiſtory, i. 63, 64. church of, 92.

ETHELBALD, K. of Mercia, i. 61.

ETHELBALD, ſon of ETHELWOLPH K. of England, conſpires againſt his father, i. 103. reigns in Weſſex, 104.

ETHELBERT, King of Kent, his wars with Cheaulin, i. 44. converted to Chriſtianity, 77

ETHELBERT, K. of Eſtanglia, i. 64.

ETHELBERT II, and EDBERT, K's of Kent, i. 67.

ETHELBERT, fourth K. of England, repulſes the Danes, i. 105. dies. ib.

ETHELBURGA, Q. of Northumberland, i. 82.

ETHELRED, K. of Eſtanglia, i. 64.

ETHELRED, K. of Mercia, i. 60.

ETHELRED, K. of Northumberland, i. 58.

ETHELRED I. fifth K. of England, i. 105. troubles in his reign, ib. 106. his death, and character, 107.

ETHELRED II, fourteenth K. of England, crown'd by Dunſtan, i. 139. his character, ib. troubles from the Danes, ib. neglects the clergy, 140. becomes tributary to the Danes, ib. 141. eſtabliſhes Danegelt, 141. maſſacres the Danes, 142. defeated by Sweno, ib. fits out a great, but uſeleſs fleet, 143. withdraws to Normandy, and leaves the kingdom to Sweno, 144 recall'd, ib. cruelty, avarice, and cowardice, 145. death, wives, and children, 146.

ETHELRICK, K. of Eſt anglia, i. 63.

ETHELWARD, ſon of ETHELBERT, aſſerts his right to the crown, i. 115, 116. acknowledg'd K. by the Danes, and deſerted again, 116. ſlain, ib.

ETHELWOLD and Oſwald, Saxon biſhops, i. 139.

ETHELWOLPH, ſon of EGBERT, ſucceeds him, i. 101. gives Kent, Eſſex, and Suſſex to Adelſtan his baſtard ſon, 102. his wars with the Danes, ib. character of him and his favorites, 103. goes to Rome, ib. marries Judith of France, ib. divides his kingdom, 104. dies, ib. his charter for paying of tithes, 134.

EUBAGES, an order of prieſts among the ancient Britons, i. introd. x.

EUCHARIST, opinion of the Engliſh church concerning it, i. 170. abſtract of a homily on that ſubject, ib.

EVESHAM [battle of] between Prince EDWARD and the barons, i. 389.

EUGENE [Prince of Savoy] raiſes the ſiege of Coni, and takes Carmagnola, iii. 409. takes the city of Gap, 425. loſes the battle of Marſiglia, 435. penetrates into Italy, 532. takes Caſtiglione, and gains an advantage at Cherry, ib. ſurprizes the marſhal de Villeroy, at Cremona, 537. fights the battle of Luzara, 562. adviſes the Emperor to implore the protection of Q. ANN, 611. firſt interview with the d. of Marlborough, 613. his army joins that of the d. of Marlborough, 616. together with the d. of Marlborough fights the ever-memorable battle of Hochſtadt, 617. ſucceſs on the right, 620. attributes the victory at Hochſtadt chiefly to the d. of Marlborough's valor and conduct, 621. has a melancholy campain in Italy, in 1705, 640. divides the French army by a ſtratagem, ib. fights the d. de Vendome with little ſucceſs, ib. joins the d. of Savoy, beats the French, and relieves Turin, 661. takes Milan, and is made governor of it, ib. takes Suſa, 677. acts in concert with the d. of Marlborough in Flanders, 686. commands the ſiege of Liſle, 689. is wounded in the head, ib. with the d. of Marlborough, gains the battle and victory of Malplacquet, 702. enters the French lines at Courieres, 712. inveſts Douay, ib. commands on the Rhine, 724. comes to England, 731. is unſucceſsful in his negociations, ib. with the marſhal de Villars, concludes a peace between the Emperor and France, 745.

EUROPE [ſtate of] at the revolution, iii. 340. threatned with a burthenſome ſlavery, ib.

EUSTACE, the ſon of K. STEPHEN, made d. of Normandy, i. 236. married to Conſtantia, 238. propoſed to the people for their K. but refuſed, 242. beſieges Wallingford, ib. retires and dies, ib.

EWERS [colonel] preſents the army's remonſtrance againſt K. CHARLES I, ii. 926. ſent governor of the Iſle of Wight, 927.

EXCHEQUER ſhut up by the advice of lord Clifford, iii. 124, 129.

EXCHEQUER-COURT erected by WILLIAM the Conqueror, i. 210,

EXCHEQUER-BILLS, falſe indorſements on them diſcover'd, iii. 500.

EXCISES, additional, continued by an evaſion, iii. 335. granted, 373. on beer, ale, and other liquors doubled, 398. a new duty laid, 709.

EXCLUSION-BILL againſt the biſhops, paſſed, ii. 748.

EXCLUSION-BILL againſt the d. of York, firſt ſteps towards it, iii. 185, &c. brought into the houſe, 188. ſubſtance of it, ib. reſumed, 198. paſs'd in the houſe of commons, 200. thrown out by the lords, 202.

EXCOMMUNICATION [ſentence of] pronounced againſt the infringers of the charters, i. 371.

EXEMPTIONS, diſputes concerning them, i. 397.

EXETER [people of] revolt againſt the Conqueror, i. 202. pardoned, ib.

EXETER [John Holland d. of] conſpires againſt K. HENRY IV, i. 550 or 549, taken and beheaded, 551 or 550.

EXETER [Thomas Beauſort d. of] made governor of HENRY VI, with the biſhop of Wincheſter, i. 612 or 604.

EXETER [Henry Holland d. of] lives miſerably in Flanders, i. 691. dies, 713.

EXETER [Henry Courtney marq. of] executed with ſeveral others, for holding correſpondence with cardinal Pole, ii. 158.

EXPENCE of EDWARD III's war in France for one year, and 131 days, i. 479. n. 7.

EXPOSITION of the Chriſtian doctrine, a book publiſh'd by HENRY VIII's order, ii. 166. impoſed on all under the penalty of being deemed heretics, 168.

EXTREME UNCTION, opinion of the church of England concerning it, i. 171.

F

FACTIONS, their different hopes at Richard Cromwell's advancement, iii. 44.

FAGAL [lieutenant-general] wounded in the head and foot at the battle of Eckeren, iii. 591.

FAGEL [penſionary of Holland] his letters to mr. Stewart concerning the teſt, iii. 264.

FAGIUS, a reformed divine, his bones dug up, and burned, ii. 245.

FAIRBORN [ſir Stafford] aſſiſts at the taking of Oſtend, iii. 653.

FAIRFAX [lord] commands an army in the north, ii. 794. defeated by the e. of Newcaſtle, 813. routs the Iriſh, 821. defeats Bellaſis at Selby, 836.

FAIRFAX [ſir Thomas] beginning of his military exploits, ii. 794. wins the battle of Wakefield, 813. appointed general of the parliament's army, 859. forms his new army, 860. ſent into the weſt, and recall'd, ib. 861. beſieges Oxford, 861. wins the battle of Naſeby, ib. 862. takes Leiceſter and Briſtol, and defeats Goring, 862. takes Dartmouth, and defeats lord Hopton at Torrington, 863. purſues Hopton, ib. who capitulates, 864. takes Exeter, ib. threaten'd by the army, contracts its quarters, 878. petition'd by the army, 879. letter to the parliament about carrying off the King, ib. letters to the city, 882, 885. ordered to remove farther from London, 885. comes to London, has the forts delivered to him, and reſtores the abſent members, 888. conſtituted governor of the Tower, ib. intereſt and views, 904. ſends two regiments to guard the parliament, ib. marches againſt Goring and Waller, 907. blocks up their forces in Colcheſter, 908. takes Colcheſter, 913. comes to London, and poſſeſſes himſelf of the old palace, 928. ſeizes 20,000 l. in Weaver's-hall, 929. reſigns his commiſſion, iii. 15. receives Monk at York, 57. dies, 124.

FALKIRK [battle of] won by K. EDWARD I. i. 432.

FALKLAND [Lucius Carey lord viſc.] his ſpeech concerning ſhip-money, ii. 648, 649, 650, againſt biſhops, 656.

FALKLAND [lord] accuſed of bribery, iii. 439.

FAMINE, a great one in the reign of ETHELRED II. i. 143.

FAMINE in France, iii. 435.

FAUCONBRIDGE [Baſtard of] riſes againſt K. EDWARD IV. i. 711. repulſed, pardon'd, and afterwards beheaded, ib.

FEALTY, ſignification of the word, i. 176, n. 5.

FEE-farms, what, i. 329, n. 1.

FELIX, biſhop of Eſtanglia, i. 92.

FELTON [John] ſtabs the d. of Buckingham at Portſmouth, ii. 541.

FENWICK [ſir John] one of the conſpirators in the aſſaſſination-plot taken at Romney, iii. 482. his letter to his lady intercepted, ib. his counter-plot, in which he accuſes ſeveral noblemen, ib. tampers with the King's witneſſes, 483. examin'd by the houſe of commons, ib. his informations voted ſcandalous, ib. bill of attainder brought in againſt him, ib. is heard by his council, at the bar of the houſe of commons, 484. the bill read in his preſence, ib. debates againſt and for the bill, ib. it paſſes both houſes, and has the royal aſſent, 486. his execution and paper left behind him, ib.

FERGUS, the firſt K. of Scotland, i. introd. xii.

FERGUSON [Robert] a proclamation for apprehending him on account of the Rye-houſe-plot, iii. 217. pens the d. of Monmouth's declaration, 245, n. 1.

FERRAR [Robert] biſhop of St. David's, burned, ii. 241.

FIELDING [colonel] ſentenced to die, but pardoned, ii. 808.

FIENES [Nathaniel] condemned to die for the ſurrender of Briſtol, but pardoned ii. 810.

FIFTH MONARCHY-MEN plot againſt the government, iii. 84. heads of them executed, ib.

FINCH [ſir John] made lord-keeper, ii. 592. ſpeeches to the parliament. ib. 593, 594, 595. complain'd of, 645.

FINCH [ſir Heneage] made lord-keeper, iii. 140. ſpeeches in parliament, ib. 150. 186. made baron of Daventry and lord chancellor, 149. created e. of Nottingham, 212. dies, 215.

FINCH [Heneage, eſquire] created baron of Guernſey, iii. 581.

FINES, and amereiaments, uſed as puniſhments by the Saxons, i. 191.

FIRE-HEARTH duty taken away, iii. 352.

FIRE-WORKS, in St. James's-ſquare, on occaſion of the peace of Ryſwick, iii. 495.

FIRST-FRUITS, See Annates.

FISHER [John] biſhop of Rocheſter, refuſes to take the oath againſt the papal authority, and is ſent to the Tower, ii. 135. condemn'd to impriſonment and confiſcation of goods, 136. made a cardinal, and beheaded, 140.

FITZ-OSBERN [William] left regent by the Conqueror, i. 200.

FITZ-PETER [Jeoffery] his character, i. 312, n. 3.

FITZ-HARRIS, an Iriſh prieſt, requeſts Everard to write a libel on King CHARLES II, iii. 207. executed, 212.

FITZ-RALPH [Richard] preaches againſt the monks, i. 543 or 541.

FITZROY [Henry] natural ſon of K. HENRY VIII, made d. of Richmond, ii. 86. character, ib. n. 2.

FITZROY [Henry] d. of Grafton, goes over to the Prince of Orange, iii. 287.

FITZWALEER [John Ratcliff lord] conſpires againſt K. HENRY VII, i. 786. arreſted and executed, 787.

FIVE-MILE-ACT, iii. 96.

FLAMBART [Ranulph] prime miniſter to William Rufus, made biſhop of Durham, i. 222.

FLANDERS [e. of] does homage to King HENRY III, for a penſion, i. 357. [Guy e. of]

e. of] ingages in the intereſt of K. EDWARD I, 429.
FLEET [Engliſh] its expeditions againſt Spain in the reign of Q. ELIZABETH, ii. 363, 373. attacks the Dutch fiſhers, who compound, 565. attempted to be ſurpriſed by K. CHARLES, 782. in part revolts from the parliament, and receive the d. of York as admiral, 909. fights the Dutch, iii. 23, 24, 91—102. burns a hundred Dutch merchant-men, 98. refuſes to have maſs read in it, 274. ill conduct thereof taken notice of by K. WILLIAM, 398. proceedings thereof inquired into, 411.
FLEETWOOD [major-general] made governor of Ireland, iii. 30. diſſuades Cromwell from accepting the crown, 35. ſucceeds Lambert as lieutenant-general, 38. conſpires againſt Richard Cromwell, 45. choſen general by the officers, 46. commiſſion vacated by the parliament, 53. places a guard about the parliament-houſe, ib. re-elected general, ib. abandon'd by his party, 56.
FLEMMING, a colony of them ſettled in Wales, i. 229. fall off from EDWARD III, 482.
FLERUS, the battle of, iii. 397.
FLODDEN battle, in which JAMES V, K. of Scotland was ſlain, ii. 33.
FOLEY [Paul, eſq;] choſen ſpeaker of the houſe of commons, iii. 463.
FORBIN's [monſ. de] account of the fight off of la Hogue, iii. n. 2, 420. account of the deſtruction of the Smyrna fleet, n. 5, 431.
FOREIGNERS, many of them leave the kingdom, i. 203. their great revenues in the time of K. HENRY III, 370.
FORFEITURES, report of the commons concerning them, iii. 370. in Ireland, report of the commiſſioners appointed to inquire into them, 513. votes thereupon, 514. bill for the reſumption of them tack'd to a mony-bill, ib. farther proceedings thereupon, 515. truſtees for the forfeited eſtates nam'd, ib. differences between the two houſes, about the forfeiture-bill, 516. the bill, however paſs'd, ib. ſome reflections on theſe matters, n. 1. and 2, ib.
FOWLER [dr. Edward] made biſhop of Glouceſter, iii. 403.
FOX [Richard] keeper of the privy-ſeal, made biſhop of Exeter, i. 765. biſhop of Wincheſter, offended with the e. of Surry, ii. 6. introduces Wolſey to the court of K. HENRY VIII. ib.
FOX [Edward] ſent with Gardiner to Rome on the King's divorce, ii. 106.
FRANCE [PHILIP I, K. of] neglects to interpoſe in the invaſion of England by William the Baſtard, i. 166. invades Normandy, 207. war between him and William Rufus, 220. [LOUIS LE GROS, King of] troubles K. HENRY the firſt, 229. wars between him and HENRY, 230. peace, 231. [LOUIS LE JEUNE K. of] leads an army into Paleſtine, 243. divorces his wife Eleanor, ib. [HUGH CAPET K. of] eſtabliſhes the fiefs, 259. [PHILIP AUGUSTUS K. of] his war with HENRY II, 279. ſeduces Prince Richard, ib. receives homage of him, 280. again, when K. 281. affronted by K. RICHARD, 284. jealous of him, 287. leaves the Holy-land, ib. breaks truce with K. JOHN, 298. requires a peace, ib. receives JOHN as a friend, and at the ſame time plots againſt him, 301. cites JOHN before the court of peers, ib. again, where he is condemned, 303. makes acquiſitions in Normandy, ib. ſends a champion into England, who withdraws from John de Courcy, 304. reduces Roan, ib. undertakes to depoſe K. JOHN, 310. indeavors to engage his vaſſals againſt the Pope, and turns his army againſt the e. of Flanders for oppoſing him, 311. ſends his ſon Lewis into England, 314. dies, 341. [Lewis Prince of] ſee Lewis. [LEWIS VIII. K. of] takes Rochelle, 341. [LEWIS IX. K. of] attacks the d. of Bretany, 352. war with King HENRY III, 359. drives out all the Engliſh ſettled in his dominions, 362. taken priſoner by the Saracens, 365. beſieges Tunis, 393. dies before it, 394. [PHILIP the Fair, K. of] treats with K. EDWARD I, 410. deals unfairly with EDWARD, 427. put in poſſeſſion of Guienne, which he refuſes to reſtore according to agreement, 428. ſeduces EDWARD's allies, 431. makes diverſe acquiſitions, ib. reſtores Guienne to EDWARD, 435. [CHARLES the Fair K. of] makes a great progreſs in Guienne, 450. negociates a peace with his ſiſter the Q. of England, 451. favors his ſiſter's conſpiracy againſt her huſband, 453. dies, 462. [PHILIP DE VALOIS K. of] ſummons EDWARD III, to do him homage, 463. anſwers EDWARD's pretenſion on France, 469. offers EDWARD battle, but afterwards withdraws, 470. anſwers a defiance ſent by EDWARD, 472. publiſhes tournaments, in imitation of King EDWARD, 475. beheads ſeveral lords of Bretany, 476. behaves bravely at the battle of Crecy, 478. dies, 482. [JOHN King of] purſues the Prince of Wales to Poitiers, and refuſes his terms, 483. defeated and taken priſoner, 484. conducted to London, and received with great honor, ib. cloſely confined upon the rejecting of a treaty by the ſtates of France, 485. [Charles Dauphin of] makes propoſitions to King EDWARD, which are rejected, 486. negociates the treaty of Bretany, ib. [JOHN K. of] ſwears to the peace, and is ſet at liberty, 489. ratifies the treaty in France, ib. returns to England, and is honorably received, 490, 491. dies, 491. [CHARLES V, K. of] ſummons the Prince of Wales before the peers, 494. pretends the treaty of Bretigny is void, and declares war againſt EDWARD, ib. obſervations on this conduct, ib. ſucceſs againſt the Engliſh, 495, 496. drives the d. of Britany out of his dominions, 510. dies, 511 [CHARLES VI, K. of] makes a treaty with the d. of Britany, ib. affairs with the duke of Burgundy, &c 567 or 564, 572 or 569. offers HENRY V, his daughter Catherine, 575, or 572. incapable of acting as a King, by reaſon of lunacy, 576 or 573. [Lewis Dauphin of] governs the kingdom, ib. ſends a ſcornful preſent to K. HENRY V, but ſoon alters his behavior, 579 or *571. poiſon'd, 586 or 577. [John Dauphin of] oppoſed by the conſtable d'Armagnac, ib. poiſon'd, 588 or 579. [Charles Dauphin of] aſſumes the title of regent, 592 or 584. treats with K. HENRY, 593 or 584. refuſes to be reconciled with the d. of Burgundy, 595 or 586. conſents, 596 or 587. cauſes him to be aſſaſſinated, 597 or 588. [ſtates of] confirm the peace of Troye, 600 or 591. [Charles Dauphin of] accuſed of Burgundy's murder, ib. continues to act as regent, ib. retires, 602 or 594. [two courts of] unite at Paris, 603 or 594. [CHARLES VI, K. of] dies, 607 or 599. [CHARLES VII, K. of] ſtate of his affairs, 607—612 or 599—604. receives aid from the duke of Milan, and the Scots, 615 or 607. deplorable ſtate, 620 or 611. gains the d. of Britany, and the count of Richemont, 621 or 612. forced to part with his favorites, 622 or 613. refuſes to ſee the conſtable de Richemont till obliged by neceſſity, 624 or 615. in great perplexity, 628. affairs changed by the maid of Orleans, 629. reſolves to be crown'd at Rheims, 630. takes ſeveral towns, and crown'd, 631. purſues his conqueſts, and takes ſeveral more towns, 632. attempts Paris, ib. indolent, 637. continues the war to advantage, 639. propoſal rejected, ib. heads his army, 643. jealous of the Dauphin, 644. ſuffers in his reputation, 649. claims the earldom of Comminge, which is adjudged to him, 650, 651. takes ſeveral places in Guienne, 651. deſirous of peace, and obtains a truce, 653, 654. which is prolong'd, 656. continues the war, and conquers Normandy, 661. and all Guienne, except Bourdeaux, 662. loſes ſome towns, 664. which he recovers, and remains maſter of the Engliſh acquiſitions, 665. dies, 672. [LEWIS XI. K. of] ſtate of his affairs, 691, 694. character, 994. ſtruggles with the dukes of Bretagne and Burgundy, 695, 696, 697, 714. deceives K. EDWARD, 722. pays a penſion of 50,000 crowns annually to EDWARD, and continues to amuſe him, 723. dies, 758. [embaſſadors of] diſcourſe to K. HENRY VII, 769. [LEWIS XII. K. of] his affairs, ii. 9—39. views and intereſts, 25, 33. death, 39. [FRANCIS I. K. of] paſſes into Italy, and wins a battle, 41. obtains a cardinal's hat for Wolſey, 43. negociations, and wars, 41—198. interview with K. HENRY VIII, 57. character and diſpoſition, 58. taken priſoner, 79. treats of liberty without ſucceſs, and conducted to Madrid, 81. concludes the treaty of Madrid, and is releaſed, 88. ſends K. HENRY the order of St. Michael, 97. ſeems to favor the reformation, 137. great deſigns, 138. war with England, 181—184. dies, 198. [HENRY II. King of] refuſes to ratify his father's treaties, ib. ſolicites the Q. regent of Scotts to a rupture with England, 246. dies, 259. [FRANCIS II. K. of] offers to reſtore Calais, 264. deſires a peace, ib. [CHARLES IX. K. of] diſſembles with Q. ELIZABETH, 312, 316, 317, 320. conſents to a defenſive league, 318. cauſes the maſſacre of Paris, ib. ſhews great regard to ELIZABETH, but diſſembles, ib. 319. [HENRY III, K. of] warns ELIZABETH of the d. of Guiſe's deſigns, 334. aſſaſſinated, 364. [HENRY IV, K. of] in great perplexity, obtains aid from Q. ELIZABETH, 365. deceives her, 366, 368. turns Papiſt, ib. makes a league with ELIZABETH, 369. takes Paris, ib. in great perplexity, ſlighted by ELIZABETH, 370, 371. makes peace without ELIZABETH's participation, 375. ſigns it in the ſame manner, 376. compliments ELIZABETH, 384. aſſaſſinated, 414. [LEWIS XIV, K. of] invades the Netherlands, iii. 103. conquers Franche Comté, 110. declares war againſt the Dutch at the ſame time with the Engliſh, 127. progreſs of him and his allies, ib. abuſes K. CHARLES, 159. See Lewis.
FRANCE, prohibits the manufactures of England, &c. iii. 535. [intriegues of] of no effect, 545. makes offers for a peace, which are rejected, 663. makes new advances towards a peace, 714. and are again rejected, ib.
FRANCISCANS, the order founded, i. 402.
FREDERICK II, emperor of Germany, his conteſt with the Pope, i. 344. excommunicated, 360. genealogy of his family, 368.
FREDERICK, elector palatine, marries Elizabeth, daughter of King JAMES I, ii. 418. elected King of Bohemia, 439. defeated, flees to Holland, 441. deſerted by his allies, 442. arrives at London, 845.
FREEHOLDERS, among the Saxons, i. 178.
FREEMEN, ſignification of that word in the grand charter, i. 321.
FRENCH, defeated at ſea by the Engliſh, i. 471. ravage England, 516. troubleſom to K. HENRY IV, 561, 562, or 558, 559. defy K. HENRY V, before the battle of Azincourt, 582, or *574. preſumption and ſuperiority in numbers, ib. loſs, 585, or 576. demands at the conference of Meulant, 595 or 587. divided in two factions, 600, or 591. deſcend on the Iſle of Wight, but retire, ii. 183. their overſights at Beachy-fight, iii. n. 6, 390. their accounts of that fight, n. 1. 2, 391. ſucceſsful in Catalonia, and bombard Barcelona, 409. fleet routed off of la Hogue, 420. men of war burnt at Cherbourg, ib. at la Hogue, 421. commit great barbarities in the Palatinate, 435. triumphant in Catalonia, 444. ſue for peace, 479. refugees diſappointed at the treaty of Ryſwick, 493. indirect practices, 525. retreat before the allies with precipitation, 557. account of the battle of Luzara, 562. of the deſcent on Guadelupe, n. 1, 585. of the ſiege of Bonn, n. 1. to 4, 589. retire before the confederate army, army, 590. their intrenchments forc'd, ib. ſucceſsful on the Rhine, 594. gain the battle of Spirebach, ib. accounts of the fight off of Malaga, n. 5, 610. and Bavarians join in Germany, 612. are intirely routed at Hochſtadt, 619. five of their men of war taken and deſtroy'd, 633. their lines level'd, 639. writers applaud the d. of Marlborough's conduct at the battle of Ramellies, n. 1, 649. accounts of that battle, n. 1, 650. abandon Louvain, 651. ſink their own ſhips in the harbor of Toulon, 677. ſurprize Ghent and Bruges, 686. their miſconduct before the battle of Oudenarde, 687. diſſentions among their generals, ib. are defeated, and retreat with great confuſion, 688. lines between Ipres and the Lys level'd, 689. abandon Lens, ib. are ſurpriz'd and their lines paſs'd, 722. accounts of this action, n. 1, ib. make propoſals for a peace, which are received with indignation, 734. force the confederate lines and defeat them at Denain, 737. take ſeveral important places, 738.

FRIEND [ſir John] one of the conſpirators, tried and condemned, iii. 473. examined before a commitee of the commons, ib. execution and confeſſion, ib.

FROISSART [ſir John] the hiſtorian, i. 822, n.

FROST, a great one in England, iii. 224.

FULK DE BRENT, his rebellion, i. 341.

FULLER [William] pilloried for an impoſtor, iii. 415. ſentenced to farther puniſhment, 552.

FURNES, taken by the d. of Lemſter, iii. 424. abandon'd by count Horn, ib.

FURSTEMBURG [Pr. WILLIAM of] elected co-adjutor of the Electorate of Cologn, iii. 341.

G

GALGACUS, general of the Britons, routed by Agricola, i. 13.

GALLAS [count] the Emperor's miniſter, treats the offers of France with ſcorn, iii. 726. is forbid the court, 727.

GALLIONS [Spaniſh] taken and deſtroy'd at Vigo, iii. n. 1, 569. value of them, n. 2, ib.

GALWAY [e. of] commands the Engliſh forces in Piedmont, iii. 437. ſent to command the Engliſh and Dutch troops in Portugal and Spain, 625.

GALWAY [e. of] loſes his right arm at the ſiege of Badajox, iii. 640. advances into Spain, and publiſhes a manifeſto, 655. takes poſſeſſion of Madrid for K. CHARLES III, 656. by the ſupineneſs of that Prince oblig'd to leave it again, ib. commands the Engliſh and Dutch troops at the battle of Almanza, 675. is defeated and retreats with part of his horſe to the frontiers of Catalonia, 676.

GAM [David] his anſwer to K. HENRY V, when ſent to get knowledge of the enemy, i. 582 or 574. ſaves the K's life, 584 or 575

GARDINER [Stephen] and Edward Fox, ſent to Rome on the affair of K. HENRY's divorce, ii. 106. ſent to Marſeilles in the ſame cauſe, with Brian and Bonner, 132. puts the K. upon perſecuting the reformed, 156. author of the bloody ſtatute, 159. diverts the King from joining the German Proteſtants, 162. character, 167. diſgraced, 189. ſtruck out of the K's will, 190 ſent to priſon, 200. enlarged, 202. committed to the Tower, 204. releaſed, 227. ſentiments in council about religion, ib. intrigues with the Emperor, ib. made chancellor, 229. differs in opinion from Pole, 232. adviſes to rigorous methods, ib. and prevails, 240. ordered to proceed againſt Heretics, but ſoon transfers his commiſſion to Bonner, ib. death and character, 243.

GARTER [order of the] inſtituted by K. EDWARD III, i. 481. account of it, 482.

GASCONS, refuſe to acknowledge the d. of Lancaſter for their Sovereign, i. 524. ready to revolt, but appeaſed, 549 or 548.

GAVESTON [Piers] baniſh'd by K. EDWARD I, i. 437. recall'd by K. EDWARD II, contrary to his oath and promiſe, 439. loaded with favors, ib. character, ib. made regent in the K's abſence, 440. marries the K's niece, ib. made governor of Ireland, 441. recall'd, affronts ſome noblemen, ib. baniſhed, ib. recall'd, ib. talks inſolently to the Q. 442. ſurrenders to his enemies at Scarborough, ib. carried to Warwick, and beheaded, 443.

GAULTIER [monſieur] the firſt perſon ſecretly imployed in negociating the peace with France, iii. 726.

GAUNT [Elizabeth] burn'd for harboring one of Monmouth's adherents, iii. 248.

GENERAL, or Monarch of the Saxons, what, i. 46, 50.

GEOFFERY of Monmouth, a character of his hiſtory, i. introd. viii, ix.

GEORGE [Pr. of Denmark] married to Princeſs Ann, iii 223. leaves K. JAMES, and goes to the Pr. of Orange, 287. naturaliz'd, 355. created baron of Ockingham, e. of Kendal, and d. of Cumberland, 356. accompanies K. WILLIAM to Ireland, n. 2. 386. declared generaliſſimo of all her Majeſty's forces, by ſea and land, 545. ſaid to deſign commanding the army, 548. appointed lord high-admiral of England, &c. 551. conſtable of Dover-caſtle, and lord-warden of the Cinque-ports, 552. reviews the troops at Portſmouth, 565. goes with the Q. to the Bath, 570. his revenue, in caſe the Q. ſhould dy before him, ſettled, 574. ſworn lord high-admiral of Great-Britain, &c. 672. ſaid to have indeavor'd procuring a change in the miniſtry, 682. his death and funeral, 693.

GEORGE AUGUSTUS, Electoral Prince of Hanover, elected knight of the garter, iii. 647. bravery at the battle of Oudenarde, 687. a writ demanded and granted to call him to the houſe of peers, 744.

GERMAIN and LOUP ſent from Gaul into Britain againſt the Pelagians, i. 27.

GERMAIN [father] an attempt of his, iii. 148.

GERMANY [affairs of] with regard to religion, &c ii. 49, 65, 119, 123, 128, 154, 184, 187, 198, 203, 205, 215, 218.

GERMAN Reformers, ſeveral come to England, ii. 203.

GERMAN Princes backward in furniſhing their quota's, iii. 401. defection of ſome of them, 554.

GERTRUYDENBURG appointed to be the place for a negociation for a peace, iii. 710. a ſummary account of the negociations there, ib. remarks on the breaking off of this treaty, ib.

GHENT ſubmits to K. CHARLES III, iii. 652. taken by the French by ſtratagem, 686. retaken by the d. of Marlborough, 692.

GIBRALTAR beſieged and taken, iii. 608. the French attempt in vain to retake it, 610. again attempted by Monſieur Ponti, 632. relieved by ſir John Leake, 633.

GIFFORD [William and Gilbert] prieſts, ſtir up conſpiracies againſt Q. ELIZABETH, ii. 346.

GILDAS of Badon, his hiſtory, i. 48.

GINCKEL [general] commands K. WILLIAM's army in Ireland, iii. 403. takes Ballymore, ib. lays ſiege to Athlone and takes it, ib. commands at the battle of Aghrim, 404. gains the victory, 405. takes Galway, 406. lays ſiege to Limerick, ib. takes it by capitulation, 407. has the thanks of the houſe of commons, 414. created e. of Athlone, &c 416.

GIRONNE ſubdued by the Catalans to King CHARLES III, iii. 640.

GIVET, with the magazines there, burnt by the allies, iii. 479.

GLASSENBURY, Glaſton, or Glaſtonbury, church of, its antiquity and privileges, i. 25, 128, 135.

GLENCOE-men, ſlaughter of them inquired into in the parliament of Scotland, iii. 457. K. WILLIAM acquited of having had any ſhare in the barbarity, ib.

GLENDOUR [Owen] acknowledg'd Prince of Wales, i. 553 or 551. takes the e. of March priſoner, 553 or 552. leagues with the e. of Northumberland, 557 or 555, 565 or 562. retires and lives privately, 568 or 565.

GLOUCESTER [e. of] taken priſoner, i. 242. exchanged for K. STEPHEN, ib. dies, 243.

GLOUCESTER [Richard e. of] ſpreads a falſe report of Pr. EDWARD, i. 381. accuſes the e. of Leiceſter, ib. reconciled to him, 382. unites with him againſt the K. ib. dies, 383.

GLOUCESTER [Gilbert e. of] heads a party againſt the e. of Leiceſter, i. 387. declar'd a traitor, 388. join'd by Pr. Edward, ib. takes meaſures againſt the K. 391. refuſes to come to parliament, 392. takes London, and publiſhes a manifeſto againſt the K. ib. ſues for peace, and obtains it, ib.

GLOUCESTER [e. of] beheaded for a conſpiracy, i. 551 or 550.

GLOUCETSER [Humphrey d. of] his character, i. 611 or 603. made protector in the abſence of the d. of Bedford, 612 or 624. jealouſy between him and the biſhop of Wincheſter, 613 or 614. actions in France, 619 or 611, &c. quarrel with the bp. of Wincheſter, 622, 623, or 613, 614. mortifies the cardinal of Wincheſter, 631. office ſuppreſſed upon crowning the young King, 632. blamed by the Engliſh, 633. creates the cardinal new troubles, 634, 635. loſes ground at court, 636, 644, &c. drives the d. of Burgundy from before Calais, and ſends him a defiance, 642. oppoſes in vain the d. of Orleans's releaſe, and proteſts againſt the council's reſolution, 647. wife impriſon'd as a ſorcereſs, 650. accuſes the cardinal of Wincheſter, but in vain, 651, 652. oppoſes the K's marriage with Margaret of Anjou, 654. ruin reſolved on, ib. 655. impriſon'd, and found dead in his bed, 655. body expoſed to view, ib. ſervants condemn'd, but pardon'd, 656.

GLOUCESTER [William d. of] born, iii. 371. elected knight of the garter, n. 1, 477. put under the tuition of the e. of Marlborough, 498. his death, 519. circumſtances of his laſt ſickneſs, n. 1, ib.

GODFREY [ſir Edmund Bury] takes Oates's depoſition concerning the Popiſh plot, iii. 165. murder'd, ib. proceedings againſt his murderers, 176, &c.

GODIVA, wife of Leoffrick d. of Mercia, her adventure to free the inhabitants of Coventry from a fine, i. 161.

GODOLPHIN [Sidney lord] made chamberlain to the Queen, iii. 236.

GODOLPHIN [lord] made firſt commiſſioner of the treaſury, iii. 520. made lord-treaſurer, 547. made e. of Godolphin, 667. lord-treaſurer of Great-Britain, 671. complains of mr. Harley, and offers to lay down his place, 682. diſmiſs'd from his poſt of lord-treaſurer, 711.

GOMARISTS, the oppoſers of Arminianiſm, ii. 415.

GOMARUS [Franciſcus] an account of him, ii. 415.

GONDOMAR [Conde] embaſſador from Spain, procures ſir Walter Ralegh's death, ii. 435. in great eſteem, ib. &c. corrupts the courtiers, and governs K. JAMES, 442, 443. inſulted by the mob, 447. complains of Buckingham, 478. privately informs againſt Buckingham and the Prince, which makes the K. ſuſpect them, 481.

GOODWIN [earl] defeats the Vandals, i. 149. made e. of Kent by CANUTUS, 150. regent of Weſſex for HARDIKNUTE, but delivers up his province to Harold Harefoot, 152. betrays ALFRED, ſon of ETHELRED II, 153. is accuſed by EDWARD, brother of ALFRED, but gets clear by a prodigious preſent, 154. aſſiſts EDWARD in getting the crown, ib. ſpeech againſt the Danes, 155. refuſes to obey the K's command, and puts himſelf into a poſture of defence, 158. makes peace with the King, 159. dies, ib. character and elevation, 154.

GOODWIN, Edmund, and Magnus, ſons of HAROLD II, make a deſcent into Somerſetſhire, i. 203.

GORDON [the d. of] ſurrenders Edingburg-caſtle to the convention, iii. 361.

GORING [colonel, afterwards lord and earl of Norwich] governor of Portſmouth, declares for K. CHARLES ii. 783. letter to the K.

K. intercepted, 861. defeated by Fairfax, 862. beſieged in Colcheſter, 908. anſwer to women and children, 913, n. 2. tried and clear'd, iii. 5.
GOSPATRICK [earl] intimidates EDGAR ATHELING, and retreats with him into Scotland, i. 203. ravages Scotland, 209.
GOTHLAND, what, i. 98.
GOTHS, their origin, i. 98.
GOVER [dr.] made biſhop of Chicheſter, iii. 403.
GOVERNMENT, form of it among the Anglo-Saxons, i. 175. [Reformation of] agreed to by K. HENRY III, 379.
GOVERNMENT-tallies, &c. at 40, 50 and 60 per cent. diſc. iii. 487.
GOURNEY, one of the murderers of King EDWARD II, beheaded, i. 459.
GOWER [John] the poet, i. 570 or 567.
GOWER [ſir John Leviſon] created baron Gower, iii. 681.
GOWRY's conſpiracy againſt K. JAMES VI. of Scotland, ii. 334.
GRAFTON [d. of] receives his death's wound at the ſiege of Cork, iii. 394.
GRANVALE [captain] undertakes to aſſaſſinate K. WILLIAM, iii. n. 2, 409. is diſcovered, tried and executed, 434. account of perſons concern'd with him, n. 4, ib.
GRANVILLE bombarded, iii. 459.
GRANVILLE [John, eſq;] created baron Granville, iii. 581.
GRAVELLE [battle of] where the Engliſh are routed, i. 615 or 607.
GRAYDON [vice admiral] ſent with a ſquadron to the Weſt-Indies, iii. 584. his character, and ſome account of this expedition, by biſhop Burnet, n. 3 and 4, ib. ſuffers Du Caſſe's ſquadron to eſcape, ib. votes of the houſe of lords againſt him, 603.
GREAT-BRITAIN threatned with an invaſion, iii. 684. [the miniſtry of] divided, 745.
GREENVILLE [ſir Bevil] brings over Cornwal to declare for King CHARLES I, ii. 795.
GREEN, BERRY, and HILL, tried for ſir Edmund-Bury Godfrey's murder, iii. 180, 181. condemn'd and executed, 182.
GREGG [mr. William] executed for a treaſonable correſpondence with her Majeſty's enemies, iii. 682.
GREGORY the great, Pope, ſends Auguſtin the monk into England, i. 77. reſolves certain queſtions, 78.
GREGORY VII, Pope, requires William the Conqueror to do him homage, which William refuſes, i. 208.
GREY [lady Jane] right to the crown examined, ii. 222. character, 223. accepts the crown with reluctance, and proclaim'd, ib. ſends Richard Shelly to the Emperor, who refuſes him audience, 225. lays down her dignity, 226. attainted of high-treaſon, 231. beheaded, 235.
GREY [Catherine] ſiſter of Jane, uſed ſeverely by Q. ELIZABETH, ii. 271.
GREY [Ford lord] proclamation for apprehending him, iii. 217. taken, 246.
GREY [lord] invades Scotland, ii. 264.
GRIEVANCES redreſs'd, ii. 654. authors of them, ib.
GRIFFIN [lord] proceedings in parliament concerning him, iii. 380. taken by ſir George Byng in the Salisbury, 684. a rule for his execution on his former outlawry, 685. is reprieved from time to time, till he dies in the Tower, ib.
GRIMBALD teaches divinity at Oxford, i. 113, 138.
GRIMSTON [ſir Harbottle] his arguments concerning biſhops, ii. 656.
GROSHEAD, biſhop of Lincoln, his character, i. 403, 404.
GUARDS inſtituted by CHARLES II. iii. 69.
GUESCLIN [du] gains great advantages over the Engliſh, i. 496.
GUIENNE, a dangerous commotion there, i. 371. made a principality in favor of the Black Prince, 490. [noblemen of] diſguſted with K. EDWARD, 493.
GUINEAS, the value of them ſettled by parliament, iii. 467.
GUNILDA, daughter of Canutus the Great, her ſtory, i. 151, n.
GUNILDA, niece of Canutus, baniſhed by Edward the Confeſſor, i. 157.
GUNPOWDER TREASON, an account of it, ii. 404, 405.
GUY DE LUSIGNAN, K. of Jeruſalem, comes to K. RICHARD at Cyprus, i. 285. taken by Saladine, 286. diſpute with Conrad de Montferrat, 287. made K. of Cyprus by K. RICHARD, 289. arrives in England, 368.
GWIN [ſir Rowland] removed from his office of treaſurer of their Majeſty's chamber, iii. 416. letter to the e. of Stamford cenſured, 646.
GYRTH, brother to K. HAROLD II, diſſuades him from ingaging the d. of Normandy, but in vain, i. 168.

H

HABEAS-CORPUS act, the commons jealous of the King's diſpenſing with it, iii. 352. act for ſuſpending it paſs'd, 372. benefit of it granted to ſome, but refuſed others, 379. act for ſuſpending it, 684.
HADDOCK [ſir Richard] made admiral of the fleet jointly with Henry Killegrew, eſq; and ſir John Aſhby, iii. 395.
HALES [Alexander] his character, i. 403.
HALSDEN, the Dane, arrives in England, i. 108.
HALL [dr. John] made biſhop of Briſtol, iii. 403.
HALLIDON Hills fight, i. 556.
HALLIFAX [e. and m. of, George Savil] retires from court, iii. 194 made preſident of K. JAMES II's council, 236 reaſon in the houſe of lords, why they ſhould thank the King for his ſpeech, 250. one of the commiſſioners to treat with the Prince of Orange, 289. preſident of the peers in the convention, 297. performs the ceremony of offering the crown to the Prince and Princeſs of Orange, 347. becomes obnoxious to both parties, 378. declines the office of ſpeaker of the houſe of lords, ib.
HALLIFAX [lord] impeach'd on account of the partition-treaty, iii. 525. articles againſt him, with his anſwer to them, 527. acquited, 529. proceedings againſt him as auditor of the receit of the exchequer, 578. is clear'd by the houſe of lords, ib. difference between the two houſes thereupon, ib.
HAMDEN's [mr.] extraordinary motion in the houſe of commons, iii. 372.
HAMILTON [marq. of] ſent high commiſſioner into Scotland, ii. 578. returns, and acquaints the K. with the ſtate of affairs there, 579. negociations with the Kirk; ib—582. oppoſes the meeting of the Scotiſh ſtates, 814. created duke, ib. apprehended at Oxford, ib. made general of the Scotiſh army to act in England, 906. loſes time in the North, 911. join'd by Langdale, enters Lancaſhire, ib. defeated, taken priſoner, and his whole army diſperſed, 912, 913. behavior when he enter'd England, 918. trial, and defence, iii. 5. execution, 6.
HAMILTON's [colonel Richard] treachery, iii. n. 6, 364. taken priſoner at the battle of the Boyne, 388.
HAMILTON [lord Baſil] not ſuffer'd to preſent an addreſs concerning the Scotiſh Weſt and Eaſt-India company, iii. 518. this refuſal reſented by the Scots, n. 1, ib.
HAMILTON [d.] fights a duel with the lord Mohun, and is kill'd, iii. 738.
HAMMOND [colonel] governor of the Iſle of Wight, notifies to the parliament the King's arrival in that iſland, ii. 893. receives new inſtructions concerning the King, 919. recall'd to the army, 927.
HAMPDEN [John] proſecuted and caſt for non-payment of ſhip-mony, ii. 567, 568. ſentence againſt him reverſed, 650. one of the five members accuſed by the K. 715. ſlain, 809.
HAMPDEN [mr.] tried for the Rye-houſe-plot, and fined 40,000 l. iii. 225. ſpeech concerning the word Abdicated, 299.
HAMPTON-COURT conference, on the K. of Scots murder, ii. 297, 298. between the Epiſcopalians and Puritans, 393.
HANMER [ſir Thomas] choſen ſpeaker of the houſe of commons. iii. 743.
HANOVER [d. of] his preſent Majeſty's grandfather, made an Elector of the Empire, iii. 425. [Princeſs of] married to the K. of the Romans, 506. [houſe of] agreed to be next in ſucceſſion to the crown of England, 522. a pretended ſcheme for that houſe to ſucceed immediately after the death of K. WILLIAM, n 3, 546. ſettlement of the ſucceſſion in that houſe refuſed in Scotland, 553. reflections of a Scotiſh writer hereupon, n. 1, ib. naturalized by act of parliament, 643. miniſter forbid the court, 744.
HANSE-TOWNS, ſixty of their ſhips ſeiz'd by Drake and Norris, ii. 363. complain of the Engliſh, 372, 374.
HARBORD [William, eſq;] embaſſador to the Ottoman Port, iii. 412.
HARCLAY [ſir Andrew] beheaded, i. 449.
HARCOURT [Jeoffery de] makes EDWARD III, his heir, i. 485.
HARCOURT [the marq. de] his intriegues, iii. 505.
HARCOURT [ſir Simon] receives the great ſeal, iii. 712.
HARDIKNUTE, ſon of Canutus, made King of Denmark, i. 151. of Weſſex, 152. deprived of the latter, ib. acknowledg'd King of all England, 153. cruelty and oppreſſion, ib. death, 154.
HARDING [John] the hiſtorian, i. 822, n.
HARFAGER, King of Norway, invades England, i. 166. ſlain, 167.
HARFLEUR taken by the Engliſh, i. 580, or *572.
HARLEY [Robert, eſq;] choſen ſpeaker of the houſe of commons, iii. 520. made ſecretary of ſtate, 605. his character, n. 2, ib. grows daily in the Queen's favor, 682. lays down his place, 683. continues however to have the Queen's ear, n. 1, ib. made chancellor and under-treaſurer of the exchequer, 711. ſtab'd by the marquis de Guiſcard, 718. on his recovery, complimented by the houſe of commons, ib. ſcheme for ſatisfying the public debts, 719. made a peer of Great-Britain, by the title of baron of Wigmore, and earl of Oxford, ib. made lord high treaſurer, ib. the ſtaff taken from him, 745.
HARLOW [captain] purſues monſieur Ponti, with a rich booty, two days and two nights in vain, iii. 494.
HAROLD, ſon of Canutus, ſurnamed Harefoot, eighteenth King of England, acknowledg'd with difficulty, i. 151. procures the kingdom of Weſſex, 152. dies, 153. body dug up, and thrown into the Thames by his brother's order, ib.
HAROLD, ſon of e. Goodwin, ſucceeds him in power, and acts with prudence, i. 160. augments his credit, and aſpires to the crown, ib. 161. arreſted, and releaſed, 161. dealt with by William the Baſtard, but diſſembles, ib. ſubdues the Welſh, and obtains pardon for the revolted Northumbrians, 162. elected K. of England by the name of Harold II, 164. manner of his election, and his right to the crown, ib. anſwers the d. of Normandy's embaſſadors, 165. gains the affections of his ſubjects, 166. diſbands his forces upon a falſe report, ib. overthrows the King of Norway, 167. diſcontent among his troops, which cauſes great deſertion, ib. ſends embaſſadors to the duke of Normandy, ib. reſolves to fight, and rejects the propoſals of William, 168. behaves bravely, and obſtinately, but is at length ſlain, 169. his elogium, ib. children, ib. [ſons of] make a deſcent into England, 203
HARRIS [mr. George] ſurrenders himſelf to be an evidence in the aſſaſſination-plot, iii. 471.
HARVEY [John, eſq;] created baron Harvey, iii. 581.
HASLERIG [ſir Arthur] one of the five members, ii. 715.
HASTINGS, the Dane, his devaſtations, i. 111, 112.
HASTINGS, battle of, between K. HAROLD and and William d. of Normandy, i. 168. number of Engliſh ſlain, 169, n. 2.

HASTINGS [William lord] ſtirs up the d. of Glouceſter to ſeize K. EDWARD V's perſon, i. 729. appeaſes a tumult at London, 731. ſeized and ſuddenly beheaded, 735.
HASTINGS [ſir Edward] joins Q. MARY with 4000 men, ii. 226.
HAVERSHAM [lord] utters ſome expreſſions, at a free conference, which are reſented by the commons, iii. 527. he explains and juſtifies them, n. 1 and 2, 528. charge againſt him diſmiſs'd, 529. makes a memorable ſpeech in the houſe of lords, 627. blames the Dutch for their too great cautiouſneſs, 638. juſtifies his ſpeech on this occaſion, 639. remarks on the conduct of the Imperialiſts and the Dutch, 642. upon the union, 670. the loſs of our trade and ſhipping, 671. the invaſion, 691.
HAVRE DE GRACE bombarded, iii. 442. a ſtratagem to leſſen the ſucceſs, n. 6, ib.
HAWKWOOD [ſir John] his good fortune, i. 491.
HEAD OF THE CHURCH, that title aſſumed by K. HENRY VIII, ii. 121, 122.
HEATH [biſhop of Worceſter] deprived, ii. 219.
HEBRIDES, how firſt inhabited, i. introd. xii.
HEDGES [ſir Charles] made ſecretary of State, iii. 520. again in Q. ANN's reign, 548.
HEIDELBERG taken and burnt by the French, iii. 435.
HENGIST and HORSA, leaders of the Saxons into Britain, i. 29. character of Hengiſt, ib. he builds Thong-caſtle, ib. receives freſh forces, and obtains Kent by means of his daughter, 30. begins to quarrel with the Britons, 31. his wars with them, 32, 33. he takes the title of King of Kent, 32. indeavors farther to aggrandize himſelf, 34. murders 300 of the Britiſh nobility, ib. dies, 36. his children, ib.
HENRIETTA MARIA of France, married to K. CHARLES I, ii. 491. writes to the Catholics for a ſupply to the King, 583. goes to Holland, 749. procures ſupplies there, 798. arrives in England, ib. joins the K. with a ſupp'y, 809. goes to France, 841. returns into England, iii. 81.
HENRY [Prince] third ſon of WILLIAM the Conqueror, lends mony to his brother Robert, i. 215. joins him againſt William, 216. beſieged by both Robert and William, 217. takes Domfront, ib. advantages above his brother Robert to recommend him to the Engliſh, 223. diligence to obtain the crown on the death of his brother William, ib. elected and crown'd, ib. [I King of England, ſurnamed Beauclerk] remarks on his election, ib. applies to the redreſſing of abuſes, ib. aboliſhes the Corfeu, and grants a charter of liberties, 224. marries Matilda of Scotland, ib. in danger from his brother Robert, but makes up matters with him, 225. revenges himſelf on his enemies, ib. quarrels with Anſelm, ib. 226. finds a pretence to fall out with Robert, raiſes an army, and makes great progreſs in Normandy, 227. ſets the Engliſh againſt Robert, whom he ſoon after takes priſoner, and confines, ib. 228. ſeizes Normandy, and grows haughty towards his ſubjects, 228. ſeizes William, his brother Robert's ſon, 229. marries his daughter to the Emperor HENRY V, and impoſes a tax to pay her portion, ib. fills the vacant benefices, ib. makes war on the Welſh, 230. impoſes an oath to his ſon William, ib. goes into Normandy, and wins a battle, in which he runs great hazard, ib. makes a peace with the French K. 231. marries Adelaid of Louvain, ib. cauſes his daughter to be acknowledg'd his heir, who marries Jeoffery Plantagenet, 232. dies, 233. character, and children, ib.
HENRY [Prince] ſon of Maud and Jeoffery Plantagenet, born, i. 232. deſigns to aſſert his pretenſions to England, 243. takes the title of d. of Normandy, and marries Eleanor, ib. meets K. STEPHEN with an army, but conſents to a peace, 244 adopted by STEPHEN, 245. crown'd, 258. [II King of England] cauſes the fortified caſtles to be demoliſhed, ib. ſends away the forein troops, ib. revokes King STEPHEN's grants, ib. diveſts the new-created barons of their titles, 259. confirms the charter of HENRY I, ib. goes into Normandy, ib. makes war upon his brother Jeoffery, ib. drives him out of Anjou, 260. recovers Northumberland, ib. ravages Wales, ib. vows to be never more crowned, 261. beſieges Toulouſe, ib. war with LEWIS of France, 262. diſturb'd by Becket, ib. will have the clergy tried by his own judges, which Becket oppoſes, 263. calls an aſſembly of lords to reduce the power of the clergy, 264. threatens the clergy, and they ſubmit, ib. gets five articles againſt the clergy ratified by a parliament, ib. ſtirs up ſuits againſt Becket, and cauſes him to be impeached, ib. threaten'd by the Pope on Becket's account, 265. proceeds violently againſt the Pope and Becket, 266. takes meaſures to defend himſelf againſt them, 267. threatens to ſhake off his obedience to Pope Alexander, ib. confers with Becket, 268. threatens the Pope again, ib. confers again with Becket, ib. cauſes his ſon Henry to be crowned, ib. falls dangerouſly ill, and reſolves to be reconciled with Becket, 269. has two more conferences with him, ib. ſpeaks raſh words, which occaſion Becket's death, 270. accuſed of Becket's murder, and acts wiſely in that affair, 271. forms a deſign of conquering Ireland, and receives the Pope's brief thereon, ib. promiſes ſuccor to the K. of Lemſter, 272. goes into Ireland, and receives its ſubmiſſion, 273. goes into Normandy, and is abſolved for the murder of Becket, 274. ſons and Q. conſpire againſt him, ib. impriſons his Q. ib. ſuſpects his eldeſt ſon, 275. attack'd in ſeveral places, and maintains himſelf with great reſolution, ib. ſucceſsful in Flanders, ib. comes into England, and is ſcourged at Becket's tomb, ib. reduces the rebels, ib. drives K. LEWIS from before Roan, and makes a peace with him, 276. appointed guardian to Alix of France, ib. revives the laws of St. Edward, ib. intends to erect Ireland into a kingdom, 277. ſows diſſention among his children, ib. ſupplies the patriarch of Jeruſalem with mony, 278. ſends his ſon John into Ireland, and terrifies his ſon Richard into a ſubmiſſion, ib. wars with PHILIP K. of France, 279, 280. indeavors in vain for a peace, 280. loves Alix, who was betrothed to his ſon Richard, ib. abandon'd and defeated, accepts a diſadvantageous peace, ib. utters imprecations againſt his children, ib. dies at Chinon, ib. character, 281. children, legitimate and natural, ib.
HENRY [Prince] eldeſt ſon of K. HENRY II, contracted to Margaret of France, i. 261. married, 262. crown'd by the archbp. of York, 268, 269. refuſes a viſit from Thomas à Becket, 269. conſpires againſt his father, 274. acts as Sovereign, 275. goes into France, 276. dies, 277.
HENRY [Prince] eldeſt ſon of K. JOHN, born, i. 307. left ſucceſſor by his father's will, 320. [III, K. of England, ſurnamed of Wincheſter] principal events of his reign, 335. ſupported by the e. of Pembroke, ib. crown'd, ib. does homage to the Pope, 336. makes an advantageous truce with LEWIS of France, ib. 337. makes peace with LEWIS, 338. enters pompouſly into London, ib. ſwears to maintain the people in their liberties, ib. crown'd a ſecond time, 339. lays the firſt ſtone of Weſtminſter church, 340. promiſes to inforce an exact obedience to his father's charters, 341. declared of age by the Pope, ib. by the parliament, 342. renews the charters to raiſe mony, ib. character, 343. begins to oppreſs the people, ib. revokes the two charters of his father, ib. ſatisfies his brother, who had form'd a league againſt him, ib. war with the Welſh, 344. loſes an advantage over the French, ib. Pope and he reciprocally maintain each other, 345. deſigns war with France, ib. defers it, ib. raiſes mony unjuſtifiably, 346. lands in Bretany, goes into Guienne, but returns as as he went, ib. obtains a ſupply, ib. attempts to deprive his brother of eſtates left him by the e. of Pembroke, ib. reſtores the eſtates to appeaſe his brother, who had raiſed a rebellion in Ireland, 347. carries war into Wales with little ſucceſs, ib. demands a ſupply, which is refuſed him, ib. obliges chief-juſtice Hubert to give up his accounts, 348. proceeds violently againſt Hubert, ib. pacified, 349. undertakes to reduce the diſſatisfied barons by force, and uſes them ſeverely, 350. expedition againſt the e. of Pembroke, in which he is defeated, ib. proceeds againſt his miniſters for their treachery to Pembroke, 352. marries Eleanor of Provence, ib. war with France, ib. gives his complaining parliament ſome ſatisfaction, ib. recals his former miniſters, and attempts to annul all grants made in his minority, 353. concludes a ſhameful treaty with the K. of Scots, ib. calls a parliament, and blames his former conduct to obtain a ſupply, ib. obtains it on certain conditions, ib. which he obſerves not, 354. interview with the K. of Scotland at York, ib. his brother and the lords unite againſt him, ib. complies with their requeſt, 355. indeavors to get the Queen's brother elected biſhop of Wincheſter, ib. levity, ib. publiſhes the ſentence of excommunication againſt the Emperor, 356. Pope and he extort mony from the people, ib. ſupports De Rubeis, the Pope's nuncio, 357. ſends judges into the country to procure mony, ib. exacts a great loan from the Jews, 358. gets a brother of the Queen elected archbp. of Canterbury, ib. reaſons of a war with France, ib. raiſes mony by gift and loan, when his parliament refuſes it, 359. leaves the archbp. of York regent, enters France, and declares war againſt LEWIS, ib. ſends a defiance to LEWIS, ib. makes a five years truce, and gets a ſupply from England, 360. extorts more mony from the Jews, ib. obtains another ſubſidy by promiſing to maintain the charters, 361. compels the K. of Scots to do him homage, ib. confiſcates all the eſtates of the French in England, 362. oppoſes the Pope's exactions, 364. receives a mortifying anſwer from the parliament on demanding a ſupply, ib. grows averſe to his ſubjects, and reproaches the barons, ib. diſſolves the parliament, and ſells his plate, ib. extorts mony from the Londoners, ib. refuſed the loans he asks for, ib. takes the croſs to fight againſt the Saracens, 365. gets his brother Athelmar made bp. of Wincheſter, ib. ſpeech on that occaſion, ib. n. keeps no meaſures with the Engliſh, 368. gives profuſely to Guy de Luſignan, ib. urges the K. of Scots to do him homage, who excuſes it, 369. exacts more mony from the Jews, ib. reſolves to ſacrifice the e. of Leiceſter to the reſentment of the Gaſcons, but is obliged to be reconciled to him, ib. gives Guienne to his eldeſt ſon Edward, ib. asks an aid of the clergy, ib. receives a ſhocking anſwer, 370. hates, and hated by, his ſubjects, ib. oppreſſes the city of London, ib. again attacks the e. of Leiceſter to no purpoſe, ib. ſtill governed by ſtrangers, ib. conſtrained to go in perſon to Guienne, 371. obtains a ſupply on the condition of obſerving the charters, ib. indeavors to diſengage himſelf from his promiſe, ib. makes ſome progreſs in Guienne, 372. obtains Eleanor of Caſtile for his ſon Edward, ib. asks in vain for aid of his parliament, ib. exacts more mony from the Jews, ib. comes into England, and extorts mony from the Londoners, ib. refuſes the title of K. of the two Sicilies, 373. accepts it for his ſon Edmund, and ſends mony to the Pope, ib. asks a ſupply of the parliament, who require certain conditions, 374, 375. prorogues the parliament, and takes a journy into Scotland, 375. obtains bulls for raiſing of of mony, ib. refuſed again by his parliament, 377. requires the clergy to be ſecurity for him to the Pope, which they refuſe, ib. importunes the clergy for a new ſupply, which they are compell'd to grant, 378. requires the reſtitution of Normandy, &c. of the French King, ib. renounces Sicily, ib. aſks for mony of the parliament at Oxford, and conſents to a reformation in the government, 379. complains of the e. of Leiceſter, 381. declares he will no longer obſerve the Oxford ſtatutes, 382. removes the magiſtrates appointed according to thoſe ſtatutes, ib. promiſes to confirm the ſaid ſtatutes, 383. addreſs'd by the barons, whom he threatens, ib. addreſs'd again, which brings him to an accommodation, 384. reſolves to free himſelf from the barons, ib. he and they ſubmit to the arbitration of the French K. which the barons will not ſtand to, 385. obtains ſeveral advantages againſt them, and haughtily rejects their addreſs, ib. taken priſoner at the battle of Lewes, 386. reſcued by his ſon Edward, 389. revenges himſelf on his enemies, 390. lays ſiege to the Caſtle of Kenelworth, and calls a parliament there, 391. propoſes conditions to the male-contents, which they reject, ib. obtains a ſubſidy of the parliament, 392. army increaſes, ib. gets another ſubſidy, 393. dies, 394. character, ib. children, [illegible]. a fictitious miracle attributed to him, 408.

HENRY [e. of Derby] ſon of John of Ghent d. of Lancaſter, defeats the d. of Ireland, i. 521. created d. of Hereford, 526. ingages to fight the d. of Norfolk at Coventry, which K. RICHARD prevents, 527, or *525. baniſh'd, and uſed unjuſtly at his father's death, ib. invited back in RICHARD's abſence, 528, or *526. lands at Ravenſpur, and aſſembles ſixty thouſand men, 529, or 527. aſſumes the title of duke of Lancaſter, publiſhes a manifeſto, marches to London, takes Briſtol-Caſtle, and beheads ſome of the miniſters, ib. conſers with the K. at Flint, and conducts him to London, 530, or 528. conſults his friends on the ſituation of affairs, ib. claims the crown, and is proclaim'd King, 534, or 532. [IV K. of England, ſurnamed of Bolingbroke] gives new authority to the parliament called by RICHARD, 544, or 542. fills the vacant poſts, 544, or 543. rewards the earls of Northumberland and Weſtmoreland, ib. makes his ſon Thomas lord high ſteward, and the e. of Worceſter his deputy, ib. crown'd, and anointed with an extraordinary oil, ib. denies that he holds the crown of the people, 545, or 543. examination of his right, ib. creates his eldeſt ſon Prince of Wales, ib. requires the advice of parliament concerning RICHARD, 546, or 544. promiſes the clergy his protection, 548, or 546. ſends embaſſadors to foreign courts in his juſtification, who are coldly received. [illegible] deſtroys the blank bonds extor[illegible]ICHARD, 549, or 548. conſpired againſt by ſome of RICHARD's friends, 550, or 549. reſolution advantageous to him, 551 or 550. marches againſt the Scots, but returns without ſucceſs, 552, or 551. pleas'd at the misfortunes of the e. of March, taken priſoner by Owen Glendour, 553, or 552. obtains an act againſt the Lollards, 554, or 552. ſends home RICHARD II's Queen, 554, or 553. expedition againſt the Welſh, 555, or 553. narrowly eſcapes being run thro' in his bed, ib. raiſes a ſubſidy without parliament for marrying his daughter, ib. marries Jane of Navarre, ducheſs dowager of Bretany, ib. another Welſh expedition, 555, or 554. connives at an inſult from the French, 556, or 554. challenged by the d. of Orleans, ib. quarrel with the e. of Northumberland, which occaſions the e. to rebel, 557, or 555. refuſes to ranſom the e. of March, ib. juſtifies himſelf by proclamation againſt Northumberland's manifeſto, 558, or 556. defeats him at Shrewſbury, and afterwards pardons him, ib. puniſhes the authors of a report that K. RICHARD was alive, 559, or 557. connives at an affront from the Britons, ib. procures an illiterate parliament, ib. aſks in vain for a ſubſidy of the nobles and clergy, 561, or 558. marches againſt the French in Wales without ſucceſs, 562, or 559. denied mony by his parliament, keeps them ſitting till they grant it, 563 or 560. in danger of being taken by pirates, 564, or 561. puniſhes the rebels who join'd the e. of Northumberland, 565 or 562. commands his ſubjects to acknowledge Pope Alexander V, 566, or 563. takes advantage of the broils in France, and infringes the privilege of parliament, ib. demands a ſubſidy, and rejects two petitions of the parliament, ib. orders a Lollard to be burnt, at which the commons are offended, 567 or 564. obtains a ſubſidy by violence, ib. aids the d. of Burgundy, 568, or 565. takes farther advantage of the troubles in France, ib. injoys a profound peace, 569 or 566. grows jealous of the Prince of Wales, who juſtifies himſelf, ib. falls dangerouſly ill, ib. takes the croſs to go to Jeruſalem, from a notion that he ſhould die there, ib. keeps the crown always near him, 570, or 566. carried into the Jeruſalem-chamber, where he gives inſtructions to his ſon, and dies, 570, or 567. character, and children, ib.

HENRY [Prince] ſon of HENRY IV, created Prince of Wales, i. 545, or 543. gains two victories over the Welſh, 560, or 558. runs into extravagancies, 569, or 566. ſtrikes a judge, and is commited to priſon, ib. vindicates himſelf againſt the King's ſuſpicions, ib. takes the crown from his father's pillow, 570, 566. anſwer to his father's laſt inſtructions, 570, 567. [V K. of England, ſurnamed of Monmouth] education, 571 or 568. inclination to war, ib. cauſe of his extravagancies, ib. proclaim'd and crown'd, ib. puts away his old companions, and chuſes a worthy council, ib. promiſes to perſecute the Lollards, and removes RICHARD's body to Weſtminſter, 572 or 568. conſents to the proſecution of Oldcaſtle, 572 or 569. ſends an embaſſy to France, 573 or 570. makes his firſt demands on that court, ib. impoſed upon by a ſtory concerning the Lollards, 574 or 571. kills ſome of them, ib. ſends embaſſies to France with freſh demands, 575 or 572. aſſembles a parliament at Leiceſter, who petition him to ſeize the lands of the clergy, and grant a ſubſidy for the intended war againſt France, 577, 578, or 573, 574. inſulted by the Dauphin, 579, or *571. negociates with the duke of Burgundy, 576, 579, 580, or 573, *571, 572. declares his reſolution of going to France to the lords, 579, or *572. imbarks his troops, ſuppreſſes a conſpiracy, ſails to France, and takes Harfleur, 579, 580, or *572. finding his army in an ill ſtate, reſolves for Calais, but is much obſtructed in his march, 581 or *573. croſſes the Somme, offers to reſtore Harfleur, and is defied by the French, 581, 582, or *573, 574. meets the enemy, accepts their offer of battle, and acts with precaution, 582, 583, or *574. expoſes himſelf in the battle to great dangers, and receives a blow on the head with a battle-ax, 583, 584, or 575. receives a blow from the duke of Alençon, whom he ſtrikes to the ground, 585, or 575. wins the battle, 584, or 576. puts all the priſoners to death, and reaſon of it, ib. returns God thanks for the victory, and calls it the battle of Azincourt, 585 or 576. refuſes a challenge from the d. of Burgundy, and returns to England, ib. courted by both parties in France, 586 or 577. prevail'd upon by the emperor Sigiſmund and the count of Holland to make a truce, 587 or 578. tries in vain to amuſe the French, ib. ſends the d. of Bedford to Harfleur, who beats the French fleet, and relieves the town, ib. concludes a truce with the d. of Burgundy, and a treaty with the emperor, 588 or 579. goes to Calais, where he has an interview with the d. of Burgundy, ib. conſents to a truce, but obtains a freſh ſubſidy, borrows mony, and reſolves to renew the war, 589 or 580. negociates with the French priſoners, 590 or 581. permits the d of Bourbon to go into France, having firſt ingag'd him to acknowledge his title to the crown of France, 590 or 582. lands at Tonque in Normandy, and takes ſeveral places, 591 or 582. makes high demands at the congreſs of Bernonville, 591 or 583. concludes a truce with Britany, Anjou, and Maine, ib. takes ſeveral towns in Normandy, 592 or 583. makes a truce with the revolted Gaſcons, 592 or 584. inſtructs embaſſadors to treat with the Dauphin, 593, or 585. takes more places, 594, or 585. grants the Dauphin a truce, 595, or 586. demands on France, and reply to the French demands, 595 or 587. takes Pontoiſe, with a great booty, 596 or 588. ſtate of his affairs, ib. grants a ſhort truce to the Pariſians, 597 or 588. claims the crown of France, 597 or 589. treats with the d. of Burgundy, ib. aſſumes the title of K. of France upon new coin, 598 or 589. ſigns the treaty of Troye, and betroths Catharine of France, 598 or 590. enters Paris with K. CHARLES, 600 or 591. pardons the Gaſcon rebels, 600 or 592. returns to England, and makes a progreſs, 601 or 592. iſſues a proclamation againſt the Pope's collections, ib. obtains a ſubſidy, ib. affairs with the Scots, 601, 602, or 593. returns to France, and takes Dreux, 602, or 594. projects marriages for his brothers, 603, or 594. ſevere to the people of Meaux, ib. falls ſick, and gives the command of his forces to the d. of Bedford, 603 or 595. goes to Vincennes, and gives his laſt inſtructions to thoſe who were to govern for his young ſon, ib. ſteady at the approach of death, 604 or 595. declares his deſign to have warred againſt the Infidels, ib. dies, ib. character, 604, 605, or 595, 596. iſſue, 606 or 597.

HENRY [Prince] ſon of HENRY V, born, i. 603 or 594. [VI K. of England, ſurnamed of Windſor] proclaimed heir of France, 606 or 598. proclaimed K. of France at Paris, and ſworn to by the French lords, 607 or 599. ſtate of his affairs, 607—612, or 599—604. put under governors by the parliament, 612 or 604. crown'd in London, 632. at Paris, 634. returns to England, 636. gives away Boulogne, and Flanders, 642. diſpoſition, 646. makes a convention with the d. of Bretagne, 648. betroths a daughter of the count d'Armagnac, 651. deſires a peace, and ſends an embaſſy to Tours, 653. marries Margaret of Anjou, 654. delivers Mans to Charles of Anjou, 657. ſends the d. of Suffolk to the Tower, 660. marches againſt Cade the Kentiſh rebel, 661. orders the landing of the d. of York to be oppoſed, 662. anſwers his letter, 663. goes to meet him, and promiſes to grant what he deſires, ib. cauſes him to be apprehended, ib. falls ſick, 665. reſumes his authority, 667. diſfeated, falls into the d. of York's hands, who treats him reſpectfully, ib. relapſes, and names the d. of York protector, 668. recovers, and reſumes the government, ib. marches to meet York, Saliſbury, and Warwick, who had taken arms, and offers them pardon, 670. taken priſoner by the Yorkiſts at Northampton, 672. uſed reſpectfully, and conducted to London, ib. declares in favor of the d. of York, ib. to enjoy the crown during life, 673. ſends for his Queen, who brings an army, fights York, and defeats him, 674. freed by the Queen from the e. of Warwick, 675. depoſed, 676. character, ib. enters England again with an army, 690. routed, retreats to Scotland, land, ib. thinking to conceal himſelf in England, taken and carried to London, 691. releaſed from the Tower, and reſtored to the throne, 703. pretended prophecy concerning the e. of Richmond, 704. depoſed again, and impriſoned in the Tower, 708. murdered, 712. private character, ib. letter to the d. of Burgundy concerning the maid of Orleans, 679. canonization attempted, but dropt, 804.

HENRY [e. of Richmond] preſented to K. HENRY VI, i. 704. eſcapes the ſnares of K. EDWARD, 712, 714, 719. nominated K. by the d. of Buckingham, 741. right to the crown, ib. inform'd of the proceedings in his favor, 743. gets a promiſe of aſſiſtance from the d. of Bretagne, ib. like to be ſurprized on the coaſt of Cornwal, 744. returns to Bretagne, where many Engliſh repair to him, and ſwear allegiance, 745. attainted, ib. eſcapes from Bretagne to France, where the e. of Oxford joins him, 747. joined by ſeveral more lords, and promiſed aſſiſtance from France, 748. lands at Milford-haven, and advances into the country, 749. meets K. RICHARD at Boſworth, and utterly defeats him, 750. proclaimed in the field of battle, 751. [VII, K. of England] in ſuſpence about aſſuming the regal title, and why, 754. reſolves, repairs to London, and is well received, 755. crown'd, 756. inſtitutes a guard, ib. publiſhes a general pardon, and creates ſeveral peers, 757. redeems his pledges in France, and borrows mony of the city, 758 extreme avarice, ib. marries Princeſs Elizabeth, daughter of EDWARD IV, and ſo unites the houſes of York and Lancaſter, 760. uneaſy with regard to the Yorkiſts, 761. takes a progreſs to the north, ib. greatly embarraſs'd at York, but extricates himſelf, 762. ſuſpects the Q. dowager, 763. perplex'd on account of the impoſtor Simnel, ib. confines the Q. Dowager, and ſeizes her eſtate, 764. takes meaſures to oppoſe his enemies, 765. viſits Norfolk and Suffolk, and impriſons the marquis of Dorſet, ſon to the Q dowager, 766. aſſembles an army, and beats the e. of Lincoln, ib. 767. makes Simnel a ſcullion in his kitchen, 767. crowns his Queen, and ſets the marquis of Dorſet at liberty, 768. makes a treaty with Scotland, ib. reply to the French embaſſadors, 769. offers mediation between France and Bretagne, on a miſtake of their condition, 770. obtains a ſubſidy to aid Bretagne, but recurs to treaty, 771. goes to York, and puniſhes the leaders of an inſurrection there, 773. treaty with Bretagne, and deſign in it, 774, 775. ſends forces, and brings the French K. to a treaty, which he obſerves not, 776. makes ſeveral alliances, 777, 778. negociations with France, 779. prepares for war, and obtains a ſubſidy by way of benevolence, 780, 781. private aim, 781. calls on his allies to invade France, but finds a handle to make peace, 782, 783. behavior in the affair of Perkin Warbeck, 785. indeavors to undeceive the people, by proving that the d. of York, whom Perkin perſonated, was actually dead, 786. learns the whole ſtory of Perkin, and publiſhes it, ib. demands the impoſtor, and puts to death ſeveral conſpirators, 787. makes his ſon Henry governor of Ireland, ib. exacts mony by illegal means, 788. libell'd, 789. precaution againſt Scotland, 790. projects marrying his daughter to the K. of Scotland, 791. makes new alliances, 793. obtains a ſubſidy, ib. ſuppreſſes a rebellion, and executes its leaders, 794. makes a truce with Scotland, 795. ſends forces againſt Perkin, who flies to ſanctuary, 796. has the impoſtor conducted thro' London, and confined in the Tower, 797. builds Richmond-palace, ib. ambiguous anſwer concerning the croiſade, 799. choſen protector of the order of St. John, ib. goes to Calais on account of the plague, and has an interview with the archduke, ib. 800. extorts large fines from Warbeck's adherents, 800. concludes the marriage contract between his daughter Margaret, and the Scots King, 801. creates his ſon Henry Prince of Wales, ib. lends the Emperor mony, makes two treaties with him, and confirms that with Scotland, ib. oppreſſes his ſubjects by Empſon and Dudley, 802. rigor to the e. of Oxford, ib. diſcovers the e. of Suffolk's conſpiracy, and deceives him in an extraordinary manner, 803. treats of his ſon Henry's marriage with his ſon Arthur's widow, and obtains a diſpenſation for it, ib. influence over his parliament, 804. thinks of canonizing HENRY VI, but drops it, ib. uneaſy on account of his ſon's claim to the crown, 805. receives a viſit from the K. and Q. of Caſtile, with whom he treats of ſeveral affairs, 806. heaps up vaſt treaſures, 807, 808. ſeized with the gout, which turns to a ptific, 807. grants a general amneſty, repents of his exactions, and dies, 808. iſſue, ib. character, ib. 809, 810. funeral, ii. 4.

HENRY [Prince] ſon of K. HENRY VII, born, i. 781. made governor of Ireland, 787. created Prince of Wales, 801. contracted to his brother Arthur's widow, 803. [VIII, King of England] education and ſtudies, ii 3. qualities, ib. firſt counſellors, 4. retires, and incourages complaints againſt Empſon and Dudley, who are ſent to the Tower, ib. gets them condemned, but reſpites their execution, 5. marriage debated on, ib. determines to marry Catherine, ib. purſues his pleaſures at great expence, 6, 11. makes an alliance with LEWIS XII, 10. and with FERDINAND of Arragon, 11. ingages in the Italian league, 14, 16. guards againſt Scotland, ib. ſends an embaſſy to the K. of France, 17. falſe policy, ib. leagues imprudently with FERDINAND for the conqueſt of Guienne, 18. tells the parliament his deſigns, and obtains a ſubſidy, 19. ſends embaſſadors to the Lateran council, 20. perceives he had been impoſed on by FERDINAND, 21. duped again, 23. views with regard to France, 25. leagues againſt France, and again impoſed on, 27. makes Wolſey prime miniſter, 28. ſends an army to France, which he ſoon follows, 29. beats the French, and takes Terouenne and Tournay, 30. returns to England, 31. ſees he is abuſed by his allies, and the Pope, makes peace with France, and war with Scotland, 32. obtains a bull for the burial of the Scots K. who was kill'd excommunicate at the battle of Floddon, 33. receives a conſecrated hat and ſword from the Pope, 35. letter to Wolſey about an alliance with France, 36. makes three treaties with France, 37. engaged in new troubles, 41. entirely governed by Wolſey, 42. renews his alliance with FERDINAND, and reſolves to aid the Emperor privately, 43. tries to remove the d. of Albany from the regency of Scotland, 47. truce with Scotland, 48. refuſes mony to the Pope, 49. negociations with the Emperor about the ceſſion of the Empire, 46, 49. treats with France, 51, 53. aſpires to the Imperial dignity, which is attained by CHARLES K. of Spain, 53, 54. intereſt with regard to other Princes, 54. happy ſituation, 55. interviews with the Emperor at Dover, and with FRANCIS K. of France at Guiſnes, 57. character and diſpoſition, 59, 60. ſends an embaſſador to FRANCIS, 60. offers to be mediator between France and the Empire, but acts not ſincerely, 62, 63. falſe politics, 64, 65. finiſhes his book againſt Luther, and is ſtiled Defender of the Faith, 66. reaſons of his war with France, ib. indeavors to avoid a war with Scotland, and declares againſt France, 67. viſited by the Emperor, and ſwears with him to the treaty of Bruges, 68, 69. lends the Emperor mony, 69. impower'd by the parliament to repeal attainders, 71. renews an alliance with the K. of Denmark, ib. forms deſigns againſt Scotland, invades it, and offers his daughter to the young K. 76. joins the Emperor in a project againſt France, but alters his ſcheme, 77, 78. thinks of ſiding with France, and conſults his council how to proceed, 83. reſolves to ſupport FRANCIS, and ſends embaſſadors to Spain, who are anſwered in general terms, 84. diſavows commiſſions iſſued in his name by Wolſey to levy mony, and lays on him the blame of the peoples diſcontent, 85. exaſperated againſt the cardinal, but reconciled on his ſubmiſſion, ib. letter to him, ib. 86. reſtores him to friendſhip, 86. generoſity to the K. of France, ib. and 115. recals his embaſſadors from Spain, and prolongs the truce with Scotland, 87. makes a preſent to the Pope, 90. another, 92. refuſes to ingage in the affairs of Italy, 91. deceives the Pope and Venetians, ib. makes three treaties with France, 94. demands on the Emperor, ib. receives a memorial from the Emperor, which he ſends to the K. of France, 95, 96. makes three more treaties with France, 96. freſh demands on the Emperor, 97. ſends the order of the garter to FRANCIS, and receives that of St. Michael, ib. determines on divorcing Q. CATHERINE, 99. entertained thoughts of it from his firſt marriage, 100. conjectures thereon, 101. labors to inform himſelf in this affair, and is confirmed in his ſcruples, 102. reaſons alledg'd by him, ib. gets a memorial delivered to the Pope, who puts off the affair, 103. proclaims war, in concert with FRANCIS, againſt the Emperor, 104. offended with Wolſey, 105. ſends to the Pope for new bulls for the divorce, who grants a commiſſion to Wolſey and Campejo, 106, 107. meets with new difficulties in this affair, 108, 110. tries his cauſe before the legates, which is avocated to Rome by the Pope, 111, 112. extremely uneaſy, and inſtructed by Cranmer to extricate himſelf, 113. entertains an eſteem for Cranmer, and takes the great ſeal from Wolſey, ib. grants the cardinal a protection, 114. purſues the divorce affair, and is extremely perplexed, 116. rejects the Pope's expedient, and publiſhes his reaſons for ſuing out a divorce, 117. grants Wolſey a full pardon, but afterwards orders him to York, and has him arreſted, 118. concerned for his death, 119. deems himſelf no longer obliged to rely on the Pope, 121. imparts his intended divorce to the parliament and the convocation, ib. gets himſelf acknowledged head of the church of England, ib. 122. grants pardon to both clergy and laity, 122. tries in vain to make the Queen conſent to a divorce, 123. indeavors with K. FRANCIS to frighten the Emperor and the Pope, ib. interview with FRANCIS, 124. marries Ann Boleyn, ib. anſwer to the commons addreſs againſt the clergy, 125. reprimands the commons for the freedom of one of their members, 126. excuſes himſelf from appearing to the Pope's citation, and afterwards proteſts againſt it, 127. propoſals between him and the Pope, ib. imparts his marriage to Du Bellay, and afterwards publiſhes it, 129. conduct reflected on, 130. notifies his divorce and new marriage to the Emperor, 132. ſolicited for to the Pope by the K. of France, ib. ſentence publiſhed againſt him, 133. offended at the Pope's ſentence, gets the Papal authority aboliſhed by parliament, 134. acquaints the late Queen with what had paſſed, who inſiſts on the validity of her marriage, 135. determined to continue the rupture with Rome, obtains ſeveral acts in his favor, 136. forbids the name of Pope to be given the biſhop of Rome, 137. affairs with the French K. ib. 138. diſpoſition as to religion, 138. reaſon of his people's great ſubmiſſion, 139. inſulted by a monk, which makes their order odious, 140. council, which orders ſome of them to be executed, ib. equally ſevere to Catholics and Proteſtants, ib. delivers up More and Fiſher to execution, ib. ſends to the Proteſtants of Germany, 141. propoſes to his council the ſuppreſſion of monaſteries, and makes Cromwell viſitor-general of them, ib. permits the monks to quit their their monaſteries, 142. indeavors to make the Scots K. renounce the Pope, ib. takes on him to have the bible tranſlated into Engliſh, 143. treats with the Leaguers of Smalcald, 144. enamour'd of Jane Seymour, and jealous of his Queen, whom he cauſes to be apprehended, and executed, 145. annuls his marriage with Q. Ann, and marries Jane Seymour, 147. rejects the Pontif's propoſals for an accommodation, 148. ſends articles to the convocation, and approves of their conſtitutions, ib. 149. proteſts againſt the council of Mantoua, to which he was cited, 149. ſuppreſſes the leſſer monaſteries, and ſells their lands, 150. ſuppreſſes a Lincolnſhire rebellion by proclamation, 151. embaraſs'd by a rebellion in Yorkſhire, which ends in a general pardon, ib. 152, 153. keeps not his word with the rebels, but puniſhes the authors of that and another inſurrection, 154. reſolves to ſuppreſs all the monaſteries, and publiſhes the report of their viſitors, 154, 155. incens'd againſt cardinal Pole, 155. orders the new verſion of the bible to be printed, 156. diſputes publicly with Lambert, ib. orders the ſurrender of the viſited monaſteries, 158. procures the bloody ſtatute againſt the proteſtants, 159. incourages Cranmer, 160. puts little of the wealth of the monaſteries to good uſes, 161. permits the bible to be read in houſes, 162. diſlikes Ann of Cleves, to whom he was betrothed, ib. yet marries her, 163. gets Cromwell impeached, and condemned without being heard, ib. gets his marriage annul'd, 164. influence over the parliament, 165. marries Catharine Howard, 166. quarrels with King Francis, 167. abſolute in his kingdom, ib. publiſhes a teſt of hereſy, 168. goes to York, and publiſhes a proclamation in the people's favor, 169. inform'd of the Q's leudneſs, which ſhe confeſſes, ib. indeavors to ſuppreſs colleges and hoſpitals, 170. at war with Scotland, 171, 172, 173, 184. leagues with the Emperor, 174. betroths his ſon to the young Q. of Scots, 175. marries Catharine Parr, 178. ſhews his eſteem to Cranmer, ib. title ſettled by parliament, 179. conventions with Scotland, 180, 181. at war with France, 182, 183. conſents to peace, 186. calls in all the church plate, ib. ſevere temper, 188. mortifies Cranmer's enemies, 189. ſets againſt the enemies of the reformation, ib. 190. ſettles the ſucceſſion, 191. warned of his approaching death, and ſhews ſigns of repentance, 192. dies, 193. character, ib. n. funeral, 196.

Henry I, [K. of France] attacks William d. of Normandy, i. 196. dies, 197. See France.

Henry, brother of K. Stephen, made bp. of Wincheſter, i. 234. undertakes to protect the clergy, 238. cites the King to a ſynod, ib. ſides with the King's party, 239. ingages in Maud's party, 240. quits her, 241. beſieges her in Wincheſter, 242. excommunicates her partizans, ib. procures the King a ſubſidy, 243.

Henry VI, [Emperor of Germany] gets K. Richard I, delivered to him, i. 290, 291. accuſes him on ſix articles, which Richard anſwers, 292. exacts hard conditions of him, ib. indeavors to elude his agreement, 294. releaſes him, ib.

Henry [ſon of Richard K. of the Romans] murder'd at Viterbo by Guy de Montfort, i. 395.

Henry [Prince] ſon of K. James I, created Prince of Wales, ii. 413. character, ib. death and encomium, 417.

Henry d. of Glouceſter, ſon of K. Charles I, receives preſents from the parliament, iii. 63, 68. dies, 68.

Heptarchy, [Saxon] a general view of it, i. 50, 51. affairs of it, 50—75. time of its continuance, 75. cauſes of its diſſolution, ib.

Herbert [ſir William] created e. of Pembroke, i. 690. marches againſt the Northern rebels, 699. defeated, taken, and beheaded, ib.

Herbert [ſir Edward, attorney-general] ſent to accuſe the five members, ii. 715. accuſed by the commons, 719. ſentenc'd, 720.

Herbert [admiral] accompanies the Prince of Orange over to England, iii. 284. writes to the Engliſh fleet, ib. commands the Engliſh fleet at Bantry-bay fight, 364. made earl of Torrington, n. 5, ib.

Herbert [Henry eſq;] created baron Herbert of Cherbury, iii. 439.

Hereditary-right ſtrenuouſly aſſerted by K. James I, ii. 390. remarks on it, 391.

Heretics [German] come into England, and are ſeverely treated, i. 270.

Heretics firſt burnt in England, i. 554, or 552.

Hermenrick K. of Kent, i. 41.

Herrings [battle of] i. 628 or 619.

Hertford [e. of, Edward Seymour] uncle of K. Edward VI, one of the regents during his minority, ii. 194. character, ib. choſen protector, 196. made d. of Somerſet, ib. See Somerſet.

Hertford [marq. of] commands in the Weſtern parts, ii. 794. takes Bridgwater and Taunton, 811. fights Waller at Lanſdown, 812.

Hesquet hang'd for a conſpiracy, ii. 369.

Hesse-cassel [landgrave of] commands on the Rhine, iii. 425. relieves Rhinefeld, ib.

Hesse-cassel [Pr. of] ſucceſsful on the Rhine, iii. 561. loſes the battle of Spirebach, 594. takes Traerbach, 624. falls upon the rear of the French army, 712.

Hesse-Darmstadt [Pr. of] loſes his life at the attack of fort Montjuy, iii. 634.

Hewet [dr.] executed for conſpiring againſt Cromwell, iii. 39.

Heylin [dr. Peter] perſuades K. Charles to call a convocation, iii. 75.

Hide of Land, what, i. 141.

High-Commission-court erected, ii. 225. complain'd of, 412. an account of it, ib.

High-courts of juſtice, for the trial of King Charles, ii. 931. for the trial of ſome of the royaliſts, iii. 5.

High-Treason [articles of] exhibited againſt diverſe perſons, iii. 373.

Hoadley [mr.] recommended to the Q's favor by the houſe of commons, iii. 708.

Hobbes [Thomas] the Philoſopher, his death and character, iii. 195.

Hochstadt [battle of] preparations for it, iii. 616. deſcription of the field of battle, n. 2, ib. the battle begins, 617. force of both armies, n. 2, ib. the allies obtain a compleat victory, 622. conſequences of it, n. 1, ib. ſtandards and colors taken at that battle hung up in Weſtminſter-hall, 629.

Hoel, K. of Armorica, aſſiſts his nephew Arthur, i. 37.

Hogue [la] ſea-fight off of that place, iii. 420. French men of war burnt in that habor, 421.

Holland [lord] kills the lord Stafford, and is pardoned, i. 517.

Holland [e. of, Henry Rich] returns to his allegiance, and is coldly received, ii. 831. his project in favor of the King, 910. defeated and taken priſoner, ib. trial, iii. 5. execution, 6.

Holland, See Dutch.

Holles [Denzil] impriſon'd, ii. 544. ſtudy ſeal'd up, ib. fined, 546. one of the five members, 715. fine repaid, 848. one of the eleven members, 881.

Holloway [James] executed for treaſon, iii. 225.

Holmes [admiral] attacks the Dutch Smyrna-fleet, but without ſucceſs, iii. 125.

Homage, the ceremony of it, i. 118. n.

Homily, abſtract of one on the Euchariſt, i. 170.

Honi soit qui mal y pense [the motto of the garter] occaſion of uſing thoſe words, i. 481.

Honorius renounces the ſovereignty of Britain, i. 20.

Hooper [John] biſhop of Glouceſter, commited to priſon, ii. 229. burnt, 240.

Hopson's [vice-admiral] bravery in the action at Vigo, iii. 568. knighted, and a penſion ſettled upon him, 574.

Hopton [ſir Ralph] his report of what paſſed at preſenting the commons petition and remonſtrance to the King, 691. defeats Ruthen, 795. defeats the e. of Stamford, 811. takes Arundel-caſtle, 839. defeated at Alresford, 840. defeated at Torrington, 863. retires into Cornwal, ib. capitulates, 864.

Hopton-fight, ii. 794.

Horn [count] abandons Furnes and Dixmuyde, iii. 424. loſes K. William's favor thereupon, n. 3, ib.

Horsa and Hengist, leaders of the Saxons into Britain, i. 29.

Hospital [Michael] chancellor of France, his reaſons for not delivering Calais to the Engliſh, ii. 290.

Hotham [ſir John] commited to the Fleet, ii. 597. ſent to ſecure Hull, 721. refuſes admiſſion to the King, 752. diſgrace and death, 826, 827.

Hotham [John] ſon of the former, his exploits, ii. 794. executed, 827.

How [mr.] a member of the houſe of commons, caſts an indecent reflection on King William, n. 3, iii. 523.

Howard [admiral] loſt in a ſea fight, ii. 29.

Howard [lord Charles, of Effingham] commands againſt the Spaniſh Armada, ii. 360, 361. ſails againſt Spain, 373.

Howard [Thomas] his fruitleſs expedition, ii. 366.

Howard [lord, of Eſcrick] an evidence in the Rye-houſe-plot, iii. 218.

Hubert de Burgh defends Dover, i. 336, 337. made chief juſtice of England, 339. puniſhes the ring-leaders of a riot in London, 340. gets a bull from the Pope, declaring K. Henry of age, 341. ſtratagem to wreſt the fortified towns out of the hands of the barons, ib. ſuſpected of poiſoning the e. of Salisbury, 343. adviſes the King to make himſelf abſolute, ib. made e. of Kent, ib. accuſed of fruſtrating the King's deſign againſt France, 345. diſgraced, 347. deprived of his imployment of chief juſtice, 348. eludes the giving up his accounts, ib. drag'd out of a church by violence, ib. ſent to the Tower, 349. impriſoned in the Caſtle of the Devizes, ib. eſcapes out of priſon, taken by force, and ſent back again, 351. proſecuted again, and makes his reconciliation, 356.

Hugunots deſire ſuccor of Q. Elizabeth, who concludes a treaty with them, and publiſhes a manifeſto in their behalf, ii. 271. make a peace without her participation, 275. opinion of her, 319.

Hull ſummon'd by K. Charles, ii. 752. beſieged by him, 783.

Humble petition and advice, iii. 35.

Humbert, [St.] biſhop of Eſtanglia, i. 137.

Hundreds, England divided into them, i. 113.

Hungarian malecontents buoy'd up by France, iii. 340. England and Holland attempt an accommodation with them, n. 2, 624. the treaty broke off, 661. a pacification at length concluded, 724.

Hungerford [mr.] expell'd the houſe of commons for bribery, iii. 450.

Huntington [e. of] his bravery at the ſiege of Venlo, iii. 558.

Huss [John] and Jerome of Prague, an account of their doctrine, and proſecution, i. 813.

Hussites, proceedings againſt them, i. 814.

Huy taken by the d. of Luxemburg, iii. 433. retaken by the allies, 444. taken again by the French, 636. but retaken by the d. of Marlborough, ib.

Hyde [Edward] lord chancellor, e. of Clarendon, and firſt miniſter to K. Charles II, iii. 66. ſpeeches in parliament, 70, 74, 96. ſupports the rumor of a plot, 77. makes a report of it, 78. begins to ſink in his credit, 85, 87. articles of accuſation againſt him, 87. which the lords reject, 88. given up by the King, 103. cauſes of his fall, 104. deprived of the great ſeal, ib. articles of impeachment againſt him, 105. withdraws to France, and leaves an apology behind him, ib. 106. which is communicated by the lords to the commons, and publicly burnt, 107. baniſhed by act of parliament, 108. reflections on his diſgrace, ib. remarks on his hiſtory of the rebellion, ib. character, 103, 108. death, 144.

HYDE [Ann] married to the d. of York, iii. 69. dies, 122.
HYDE [Henry] See Clarendon, e. of.
HYDE [Laurence] ſpeaks againſt the excluſion bill, iii. 198. created lord Hyde, 212. [e. of Rocheſter] made lord treaſurer, 236. diſplaced for refuſing to turn Papiſt, 256.

J I

JACK STRAW, companion of Wat Tyler, and head of the Eſſex rebels, hang'd, i. 514.
JACOBITES, their deſigns while K. WILLIAM was in Ireland, iii. n. 4, 389. a conſpiracy of theirs unſucceſsful, 416. their preparations for a deſcent, 417. ſend captain Loyd to France with intelligence, ib. an epigram on LEWIS XIV publiſh'd by them, n. 1, 493.
JAMAICA taken by the Engliſh, iii. 33.
JAMBERT, archbiſhop of Canterbury, i. 82.
JAMES-town taken by the Iriſh, iii. 376.
JAMES [Prince] ſon of MARY Queen of Scots, born, ii. 280. inaugurated K. 289. [VI K. of Scotland] aſſumes the reins of government, and writes to Q. ELIZABETH, 328. avows the Ruthven conſpiracy, 334. treats of a marriage with the King of Denmark's daughter, 342, 343. makes a treaty with Q. ELIZABETH, 345. ſhews great reſentment at his mother's execution, 358. but is pacified, ib. remains firm to England, 362. conſpiracy againſt him ſuppreſs'd, 363. imbroil'd with Q. ELIZABETH, but changes his conduct, 370. unites with ELIZABETH, 371. inſiſts on being declared her ſucceſſor, 377. ſends embaſſadors at the invitation of Eſſex, who come after his death, and compliment the Queen on the diſcovery of the conſpiracy, 384. declared Q. ELIZABETH's ſucceſſor, 386. [I K. of England] proclaim'd, 388. inform'd of his ſucceſſion, ib. ſets out for England, and met by the Engliſh peers at York, 389. hangs a cut-purſe without trial, ib. arrives at Theobalds, where the council repair to him, ib. takes ſome Scots into his council, and careſſes the Howards, 390. refuſes to go into mourning for Q. ELIZABETH, ib. laviſh of honors and dignities, ib. 403. cold to the enemies of Eſſex, ib. thinks highly of regal power, and hereditary right, ib. much flatter'd, ib. 391, 393, 401. remarks on his ſucceſſion, 391. ſends for his Queen and children, ib. retires to Wilton, 392. anſwer to the Catholic's petition, ib. appoints a conference between the Epiſcopalians and Puritans, 393. threatens the Nonconformiſts, ib. regard for the Papiſts, 394. makes his entry into London, ib. high notion of the prerogative royal, ib. 411, 428, 431. firſt ſpeech to the parliament, 395. remarks on it, 400. title confirmed, 401. propoſes a union of England and Scotland, ib. aſſumes the title of K. of Great-Britain, ib. differs with the houſe of commons, ib. 402. makes a treaty with Spain, and is in profound tranquility, 402, 403. ſends embaſſies to Spain and the Netherlands, 403. neglects an affront of the Dutch to the Engliſh colors, ib. diſcovers the powder-plot, 405. ſpeech on that occaſion, 406. remarks on it, ib. complimented on his deliverance by forein embaſſadors, 407. death rumour'd, ib. fearful of offending the Catholics, ib. writes an apology concerning the Catholics, 408. remarks on it, ib. viſited by the K. of Denmark, and the Prince of Vaudemont, 409. ſpeech in favor of the union, ib. exceſſively profuſe, 410. imbroil'd with the ſtates, whom he openly blames, 410, 411. diſappoints the juſtice of the parliament, 411. orders the e. of Salisbury to make a ſpeech for him, ib. 412. complain'd againſt, ib. ſpeech to both houſes in defence of himſelf, 413. makes his eldeſt ſon Prince of Wales, ib. and thinks of marrying him, 414. receives Robert Carr to favor, 415. ſides with the Gomariſts againſt the Arminians, ib. loads his favorite with honors and wealth, 416. removes his mother's body to Weſtminſter, ib. ſuſpected of the Prince of Wales's death, 418. gives his daughter to the Elector Palatine, ib. ſcandalous behavior in the affair of Eſſex's divorce, 420, 421. profuſeneſs, with a remark on it, 422. creates baronets to raiſe mony, ib. calls a parliament, who examine grievances, and are diſſolved, 423. levies a benevolence, ib. viſited again by the K. of Denmark, 424. makes a progreſs to Cambridge, ib. receives Villiers to favor, and makes him his cup-bearer, ib. pardons him for a miſdemeanor, 425. diſguſted with Somerſet, ib. makes Villiers gentleman of the bedchamber, and gives him mony, ib. informed of Overbury's being poiſon'd, but conceals it, 426. tries in vain to reconcile his two favorites, ib. diſſembles with Somerſet, and has him arreſted, ib. injunction to chief-juſtice Coke about Overbury's murderers, 427. reprieves, and then pardons Somerſet, with reflections thereon, ib. juſtified with regard to Arabella Stuart's death, 428. diſpute with the judges about the prerogative, ib. makes his ſon Charles Prince of Wales, and determines on his marriage, 429. behaves ſtrangely, 430. favorites amaſs immenſe ſums, ib. gives up the Cautionary-towns, ib. ſpeech in the ſtar-chamber, 431. remarks on it, 432. oppoſed in his project of making the Scots conform to the church of England, 433. goes to Scotland, and treats the Scots imperiouſly, ib. gets an article paſſed in the aſſembly to give him full power, ib. ſummons the miniſters, and treats them roughly, 434. obtains his ends, ib. publiſhes a book of ſports, which makes great noiſe, ib. orders ſir Walter Ralegh's execution upon an old ſentence, 435. diſſatisfied with his people, 436. ſigns the articles of the Prince of Wales's marriage, 437. amuſed by the Spaniſh court, 438. angry with the Elector Palatine for accepting the crown of Bohemia, 439. perſuades him to quit it, ib. offers to be umpire between the contending Kings of Bohemia, but in vain, 440. ſends a fruitleſs embaſſy to Germany, 441. takes falſe meaſures to preſerve the Palatinate, 442. demands a benevolence, 443. feigns a regard for the Electors affairs, but does nothing, ib. ſpeech to the parliament during the Bohemian affairs, 444. remarks on it, 445. to the lords concerning monopolies, 446. tries to ſcreen Buckingham, ib. orders the parliament to be adjourned, which the commons think a breach of privilege, 447. amuſed by the archduke, and the Emperor, 449. deſign with regard to the Palatinate, 450. offended at the commons remonſtrance, writes them a haughty letter, 452. anſwers their petition in the ſame manner, 454, 455. memorial for eraſing the commons proteſtation out of the journal book, 457. cauſe of his difference with the commons, and remarks on it, 458. impriſons ſeveral of their members, ib. conſequence of theſe proceedings, 459. little eſteem'd abroad, and openly ridicul'd in the Netherlands, 460. exacts a benevolence, 461. courts the Pope for a diſpenſation for his ſon's marriage, ib. permits the Infanta to raiſe men in England, to imploy againſt Proteſtants, 462. amuſed, and deceives himſelf, 463. letters to the e. of Briſtol in Spain, ib—466. wrong meaſures, 464. imbaraſs'd on the Pope's account, 465. reſolves to conclude the affair, 466. conſents to all the Pope requires, 467. ſends the Prince of Wales to Spain, 468. debates in council about tolerating Papiſts, 470. ſigns and ſwears to the marriage articles ſent from Spain, ib. 471. ſtiles the Pope, Holy-father, 472. procures a declaration of council in behalf of the Papiſts, 473. letter to the e. of Briſtol about the Palatinate, 475. conſents to break off his ſon's match, ib. 479. ſpeech on the project of a match with Henrietta-Maria of France, 477. remarks on it, 478. letter to ſecretary Conway, concerning the petition againſt recuſants, 479. anſwer to the petition, 480. ſuſpects the Prince, and the d. of Buckingham, 481. aw'd by them, obliged to diſgrace the e. of Briſtol, 482. ſends 6000 men into Holland, ib. executes the laws againſt recuſants, ib. confers with the archbiſhop of Ambrun, 483. letter to the Pope, ib. negociates his ſon's marriage with Henrietta, 483—486. ſends forces to the Palatinate, ib. death and character, 487, 488. epigram on him, 488. funeral, 491.
JAMES [Prince] ſon of K. CHARLES I, born, and created d. of York, ii. 559. received as admiral of the revolted fleet, 909. obliged to quit France, iii. 36. character, 65. receives preſents from the parliament, 63, 68. marries Ann Hyde, 69. revenue of the poſt ſettled on him, 88. ſails againſt the Dutch, 93. medals ſtruck in his honor, 95. formally abjures the Proteſtant religion, and openly profeſſes the Romiſh, 122. reſigns all his places, 138. marries the Princeſs of Modena, ib. withdraws to Bruſſels on the King's letter, 182. voted againſt by the commons, 185, 188, 198. returns to England, 193. goes into Scotland, 194. comes to court, 195. preſented as a Papiſt, and ſent away by the King, 197. returns to court, and is well received, 214. goes to Scotland for his family, and eſcapes a great danger, ib. grows very powerful at court, ib. ſuſpected of the e. of Eſſex's murder, 219. blamed for the King's actions, 226. [II, K. of England] proclaimed, 235. declaration to the council, ib. makes no alterations, 236. goes publicly to maſs, ib. publiſhes that the late King was a Papiſt, ib. fills the vacant places, ib. crown'd, 237. letter to the Scotiſh parliament, ib. ſpeech to the parliament of England, 238. anſwer to their addreſs, 241. confirms his promiſes in his declaration and ſpeech, 243. ſpeech at paſſing the revenue bill, ib. demands mony on account of Monmouth's rebellion, 245. ſees the d. after he is taken, 246. but refuſes to pardon him, 247. takes a cruel revenge on his enemies, ib. in a flouriſhing condition, 248. forms new projects, which he ought not to have followed, ib. 249. proceedings in Ireland, 249. ſurpriſes the people with a ſpeech to the parliament, 250. anſwers the commons addreſs obſcurely, 252. prorogues the parliament, ib. method of executing his deſigns, 254. erects an eccleſiaſtical commiſſion, 255. buſy to gain Proſelytes, 256, 261. beſtows all places on Papiſts, 257. prorogues the parliament, 258. publiſhes in Scotland a declaration for liberty of conſcience, ib. and the like in England, 259, 264. thank'd for it by the Nonconformiſts, ib. tries to diſunite the Proteſtants, but in vain, ib. writes to the chancellor of Cambridge to make a Benedictine monk maſter of arts, and diſplaces the vice-chancellor for non-compliance, 260. diſpoſes of the preſidentſhip of Magdalen-college in Oxford, ib. indeavors to gain over ſeveral members of parliament, 261. iſſues out Quo Warranto's againſt diverſe corporations, 262. takes pains to gain a favorable parliament, ib. 264. 279. kind to the French Proteſtants, 262. puſhes his deſigns, ib. congratulated by numerous addreſſes on the Queen's pregnancy, 263. forbids books of controverſy, ib. increaſes his army and fleet, 264. anſwer to the biſhop's petition, 266. ſends for forces out of Ireland, 273. tries the temper of his army, ib. oppoſed in filling the vacancies of the army with Papiſts, 274. neglects intelligence from France, 276. orders writs for a new parliament, 277. puts himſelf upon the defenſive, ib. diſowns his treaty with France, 278. in a conſternation, conſults the biſhops, ib. proclamation againſt the Prince of Orange's

Orange's invaſion, ib. promiſes to reſtore the city charter, 278. redreſſes ſome grievances, ib. behaves doubtfully, 280. calls a council to prove the birth of the Prince of Wales, ib. ſpeech on the examination of the witneſſes, 281. pardons ſome of the moſt obnoxious perſons, 282. revokes ſome of his acts of grace, on the news that the Prince of Orange had met with a tempeſt, 284. prints the Prince's declaration, with his own remarks upon it, ib. fleet ill-affected to him, ib. orders his army together on Salisbury-Plain, 285. declares againſt an accommodation, 286. promiſes a parliament, 287. afraid, ib. arrives at Salisbury, ib. returns to London, and offers a general pardon, ib. receives a ſucceſſion of ill-news, 288. abuſed by his counſellors, ib. in great difficulties, conſults the proteſtant peers, 289. promiſes a free parliament, ib. ſends propoſitions to the Prince, ib. owns the moderation of the Prince's propoſals, and calls a council on them, 290. biaſs'd by his Popiſh counſellors, ib. leaves Whitehall in diſguiſe, 291. ſeiz'd at Feverſham, returns to London, 292. laſt act of royalty, ib. goes to Rocheſter, 293. paper left behind him at withdrawing to France, 294. writes to the council and the convention, 297. the ſtate of England under his reign, 333. his happy ſituation, 334. abuſe of it, ib. ſends an embaſſy of obedience to Rome, 335. meaſures taken by him, ib. quarrels with the forein powers, ib. refuſes to enter into a league againſt France, ib. his haughtineſs, 338. attempts to gain the army, but without ſucceſs, 339. hopes never to return to England, but by means of fire and ſmoke, 341. his fears and flight, 342. his letter to the convention of Scotland, 363. lands in Ireland, 365. enters triumphantly into Dublin, ib. publiſhes five proclamations, ib. takes Coleraine and Kilmore, ib. ſpeech to his parliament in Ireland, 367. impolitic behavior in that kingdom, 368. loſes the battle at the Boyne, 387. flees to Dublin, 388. and returns to France, 389. his letter to lieutenant-general Sheldon, n. 3, 407. to ſeveral of his late privy-council, 417. to ſeveral ladies, n. 1, ib. his declaration and promiſe of pardon, ib. perſons excepted in his pardon, n. 2, ib. his melancholy letter to LEWIS IV, n. 3, 426. goes to Calais, in order to imbark for England, 473. his intereſt not regarded at the treaty of Ryſwick, 496. publiſhes a manifeſto, ib. his death, 537.

JAMES's [St. Palace of] erected, ii. 127. n. 2.

JANE [daughter of K. HENRY II] married to the King of Sicily, i. 276. impriſon'd, and ſet at liberty, 283. married to the count de Toulouſe, 287. dies, 298.

JANE [daughter of K. JOHN] married to the K. of Scots, i. 340.

JAQUELINE [wife of the d. of Glouceſter] her affairs, i. 625, 626, 627, or 616, 617, 618.

ICENI, a people of Britain, in the Eaſt, i. 7.

ICH-DIEN, the motto of the Prince of Wales, aſſumed by Edward the Black Prince, i. 478.

IDA arrives in Britain, with a fleet of Angles, and founds the kingdom of Northumberland, i. 42, 43.

JEFFERIES [ſir George] petition'd againſt by the commons, iii. 197. character, 224. his barbarous proceedings in the Weſt, 247. created baron of Wem, 248. n. 3. and made lord chancellor, 248. ſeiz'd, uſed ill by the rabble, and ſent to the Tower, where he dies, 291. his new law, 341.

JEFFERIES [William eſq;] appointed her Majeſty's reſident in Sweden, iii. 717.

JENKINS [ſir Leoline] ſupports the d. of York's intereſt in the houſe of commons, iii. 198.

JENNINGS [ſir John] convoys the Empreſs to Italy, iii. 741. convoys count Stahremberg, with the Imperial troops to Genoa, 745.

JEOFFERY Plantagenet [e. of Anjou] marries Maud the Empreſs, daughter of K. HENRY the firſt, from which marriage deſcended the family of the Plantagenets, i. 232.

JEOFFERY [e. of Anjou] ſon of the former, driven by his brother HENRY out of Normandy, i. 244. out of Anjou, 260. made count de Nantes, ib. dies, 261.

JEOFFERY [Prince] ſon of K. HENRY II, born, i. 261. contracted to Conſtance of Bretany, ib. made d. of Bretany, 270.

JERSEY [e. of] appointed embaſſador to the court of France, iii. 498. made ſecretary of ſtate, 510. plenipotentiary for concluding the ſecond treaty of partition, 517. made lord-chamberlain, ib. is ſucceeded by the e. of Kent, 605.

JERSEY [Eaſt and Weſt] ſurrender'd to Queen ANN, iii. 546.

JERUSALEM [city of] taken by the Croiſes, i. 221. [crown of] refuſed by Robert d. of Normandy, ib. [Patriarch of] obtains mony of K. HENRY II, 278. [city of] taken by the Saracens, 279. [kingdom of] its affairs, 286—289, 345. [city of] taken by Saladine, 286.

JESUITS [order of] founded, ii. 167. firſt appear in England, 330. proclamation againſt them, 386. baniſh'd out of England, 394. their artifices, 401.

JESUITS, a college of them diſcovered in England, iii. 179. five of them tried for the Popiſh plot, 189. executed, 191.

JESUIT at Liege, his letter concerning K. JAMES, iii. 257.

JEWS, many of them ſlain in England, i. 282. ſums exacted from them, 358, 360, 369, 372. two hundred and eighty hang'd for debaſing the coin, 407. ſeiz'd, and obliged to pay a large ſubſidy, 410. all of them driven out of England, 413.

IGNORAMUS Juries, what, iii. 212.

IMPERIALISTS, their miſerable conduct, n. 3, iii. 612. leave the d. of Ormond, 737.

IMPORTS from France prohibited, iii. 363.

IMPERIAL crown, refuſed by EDWARD III, i. 481.

INA, King of Weſſex, i. 71.

INDEMNITY [act of] perſons in general exempted from it, iii. 369. the ſame particularized, n. 1, 370. brought a ſecond time into parliament, 379. paſs'd, with the exception of 31 perſons. 385. names of the perſons excepted, n. 3, ib.

INDEPENDENTS, an account of them, ii. 857. join the Presbyterians, ib. begin to undermine them, 858. project, ib. intereſts and views, 901, 917. uppermoſt in parliament, but loſe ground to the Presbyterians, 913. retard the treaty with the K. 919. petition the parliament againſt a treaty, and give their reaſons, 920. careſs'd, iii. 334.

INDIES, the Engliſh trade thither, i. 113.

INDULGENCES, [ſale of] oppoſed by Luther, ii. 49.

INFERNAL machine made uſe of at St. Malo, n. 3, iii. 432.

INGULPHUS, abbot of Croyland, atteſts the miracles on the tomb of Walthoff, i. 209.

INISKILLIN-men, their bravery and ſucceſs, iii. 367.

INNS-OF-COURT Gentlemen, offer to guard the King, ii. 713.

INQUISITION, Q. MARY grants a commiſſion for one in England, ii. 245.

INSURRECTIONS, againſt William the Conqueror, i. 206. a general one in England, 236. in Kent, Eſſex, &c. headed by Wat Tyler, 512. in the North, allay'd by the e. of Surry, 773. in Cornwal, 793, 796. in Lincolnſhire and Yorkſhire, ii. 151. in Wiltſhire, Somerſetſhire, Devonſhire, Norfolk, Yorkſhire, &c. on account of the want of buſineſs, 208, 209. in Cornwal, Kent, and Warwickſhire, 234. in Northamptonſhire, 410. in Wales and Kent in favor of K. CHARLES, 907. in London, iii. 291, 293.

INTERDICTION laid on England for not acknowledging archbiſhop Langton, i. 307. taken off, 313.

INTERIM granted the Proteſtants, ii. 205.

INVESTITURES, diſpute about them between HENRY I, and Anſelm, i. 225, 255. accomodated, 256. ſtate of it, ib.

INVOCATION of the Virgin Mary and the Saints, opinion of the church of England concerning it, i. 171.

JOAN of Arc, ſome account of her, i. 629, or 628. enters Orleans in triumph, and obliges the Engliſh to raiſe the ſiege, 629. wounded before Paris, 632. goes to Compeigne, makes a ſally, and is taken priſoner, 634. delivered to the d. of Bedford, who cauſes her to be burnt, ib. 635. diſſertation concerning her, 677—685. letter to the King of England, 680. proceſs againſt her, 680, 681, 682. three opinions concerning her, 682, &c.

JOHN [Prince, ſurnamed Without-land] fourth ſon of K. HENRY II, born, i. 267. kingdom of Ireland intended for him, 277. ſent thither, and the Pope ſends him a crown, 278. recall'd, ib. marries Avice, heireſs of the houſe of Glouceſter, 282. introduces himſelf into the government in his brother's abſence, 286. indeavors to ſeize the crown, 290. makes an alliance with the French King, but is not hearken'd to by the Scotiſh King, ib. ſpreads a report of his brother's death, and asks the crown, which is refuſed him, ib. perſuades the Emperor to keep his brother priſoner, 291. flies into France at his brother's return, and is cited and condemned, 292. pardon'd, 293. nominated RICHARD's ſucceſſor, 294. [K. of England] obſervations on his right, 295. meaſures to ſecure the crown, 296. the nobility, &c. ſwear allegiance to him, ib. ſeizes the late K's treaſures, ib. diſpoſſeſſes his nephew Arthur of all his territories, ib. 297. crown'd at Weſtminſter, 297. three principal events of his reign, ib. rewards thoſe who had ſerv'd him, 298. croſſes into Normandy, ib. raiſes the ſiege of Lavardin, ib. takes thoſe provinces that had ſided with Arthur, 299. falls in love with Iſabel of Angouleme, whom he marries, having divorced his former wife, ib. loſes the good opinion of the Engliſh, ib. returns to England, and demands a ſubſidy, which is granted with difficulty, ib. pardons the archbiſhop of York, who oppoſed the ſubſidy, 300. receives the Scots King's homage, and eludes his demands, ib. founds the abby of Bowley, ib. crown'd a ſecond and a third time, ib. attacks the diſcontented barons, who ſubmit, 301. careſs'd by K. PHILIP, who at the ſame time intrigues againſt him, ib. cited by PHILIP before the peers, ib. deſpiſes the citation, ib. marches to the relief of Mirebeau, 302. takes Arthur and Eleanor priſoners, ib. in vain attempts to gain Arthur to his intereſt, ib. accuſed of Arthur's death, ib. crown'd a fourth time, ib. cited again before the peers, ſends embaſſadors to France, who are ill received, 303. condemn'd, and his French territories confiſcated, ib ſurprizingly indolent, ib. ſlighted by his Engliſh lords, ib. uſes his Engliſh ſubjects ill, ib. obtains a ſupply for war, and indeavors in vain for a peace with K. PHILIP, ib. exacts mony from the nobility, 304. threatens the monks for chuſing a ſub-prior without him, 305. recovers part of Poitou, and makes a peace with PHILIP, ib. gets a ſupply by violent methods, ib. drives the monks of St. Auguſtin out of their monaſtery, 306. writes a warm letter to the Pope, ib. threatens the eccleſiaſtics, 307. ſevere towards the clergy, ib. ſends mony to the Emperor, ib. raiſes an army on pretence of a war with Scotland, which he neglects, and puniſhes the northern provinces, ib. makes all his vaſſals renew their homage, 308. ſevere to the archdeacon of Norwich, ib. deceived by the biſhop of Lincoln, ib. leads an army into Ireland, where he reduces the King of Conaught, and makes the Iriſh receive the Engliſh laws, ib. returns to England, and lays a heavy tax on the clergy, ib. goes great lengths to forward an accommodation with the Pope, ib. reſolves to carry war into Wales, 309. inform'd of the lords conſpiracy againſt him, miſtruſts his army, and diſbands it, ib. depoſed by the Pope, ib.

draws

draws together a great army, 310. agrees to the conditions propoſed by the Pope's legate Pandulphus, ib. reſigns the crown to the Pope, and does him homage, 311. orders Pontefract the hermit to be hang'd, ib. indeavors to ingage his vaſſals againſt the Pope, ib. oppoſed by the e. of Flanders and K. PHILIP, ib. intends to carry war into France, 312. the barons refuſe to imbark till he is abſolved, ib. Langton abſolves him, and the barons ſtill refuſe, ib. reſolves to puniſh the barons, ib. threaten'd by Langton, ib. implores the Pope's protection, 313. conſents to reſign his crown again to the Pope, ib. carries the war into France, ib. penetrates as far as Anjou, 314. the barons league againſt him, and demand the re-eſtabliſhment of St. EDWARD's laws, ib. 315. refuſes to grant their demands, 315. beſieged by them in the Tower, ib. becomes tractable, and ſigns the Grand Charter, and the Charter of the Foreſts, 316. repents the ſigning, and ſeeks means to free himſelf, ib. levies forein troops, and requires ſuccor from the Pope, ib. withdraws to the Iſle of Wight, 317. abſolved by the Pope from his oath, and the charters annul'd, ib. receives a ſupply, recovers Rocheſter, and ravages the kingdom, ib. continues ravaging the kingdom, 318. waſtes the eaſtern counties, 319. carries his crown and treaſures to Lynn, and grants privileges to the town, ib. withdraws into Lincolnſhire, 320. loſes his baggage, falls ſick with grief, leaves his crown to his ſon, and dies, ib. character, ib. wives and children, ib. 321. remarkable events in his reign, 321. the firſt Engliſh K. who wrote in the plural number, ib. n. 2.

JOHN of Ghent, third ſon of EDWARD III, created d. of Lancaſter, i. 490. left to command in France, 496. marries the eldeſt daughter of PETER the Cruel, and aſſumes the title of K. of Caſtile, ib. marches thro' France into Guienne, and offers battle to the d. of Anjou, 497. removed from court, 498. recall'd, ib. warm in defence of Wickliff, 499. acknowledges his nephew Richard's right, 507. made one of the regents, 508. violent procedure, 509. attempts to reſtore the d. of Britany, but fails, 510. wrongfully accuſed, 514. accuſed of conſpiring againſt the K. 516. reconciled to the K. and ſent with an army into Scotland, 517. expedition in Spain, 518. inveſted with the duchy of Guienne, 523. but cannot get himſelf acknowledg'd there, 524. quits the court, 525. dies, 527 or * 525.

JOHN, monk of St. David's, the firſt who taught logic, arithmetic and muſic, at Oxford, i. 113.

JOHN of Eltham, brother of EDWARD III, created e. of Cornwal, i. 460.

JOHN's [St. Prior of] taken at the battle of Tewksbury, and beheaded, i. 711.

JOHN [mr. St] made ſecretary of State, iii. 712.

JOHNSON [Samuel] degraded, whipp'd, pilloried, and fined, for addreſſing a writing to the army, iii. 256. recommended to K. WILLIAM for preferment, 371.

JOHNSTON [ſir John] executed for carrying away an heireſs, iii. 399.

JOSEPH of Arimathea, the ſtory of him examined, i. 25.

JOSEPH [arch-duke] elected K. of the Romans, iii. 397. crown'd at Augsburgh, ib. acceeds to the Imperial Throne, 632. does great honor to the d. of Marlborough, 639. his death, 719.

IRELAND, Pickering, and Grove, tried for the popiſh plot, iii. 173. their defence, 174. ſentence, ib. Ireland and Grove executed, ib.

IRELAND, called antiently Great Scotland, i. introd. xii. conqueſt of it projected by K. HENRY II, 271. ſituation, extent, and advantages, 272. firſt inhabitants, ib. ſeveral names, ib. language, ib. converſion to chriſtianity, ib. invaſions, ib. domeſtic diviſions, ib. partly ſubdued by ſome Engliſh lords, 273. wholly ſubmits to K. HENRY II, ib. rebellion there, 346. rebellion there againſt RICHARD II, 523. erected into a kingdom, ii. 170. commotions there, 291, 302. wants a powerful ſuccor, 688. See more of its affairs, 377, 819, iii. 6, 10, 29, 253, 296. [ſtate of] before K. WILLIAM's arrival there, 386. wholly reduced to the obedience of King WILLIAM and Q. MARY, 407. the dependance thereof on the parliament of England aſſerted, 470. their woollen manufactures complained of, 471.

IRELAND [lords juſtices of] in great perplexity, ii. 820.

IRETON [colonel] left to command in Ireland by Cromwell, iii. 15. dies, 29.

IRISH Rebellion, ii. 687, &c. pretended to be carried on by the K's order, 688, 689. not chargeable on K. CHARLES, 831.

IRISH invite the d. of Lorrain to accept their government, who refuſes it, iii. 30.

IRISH army routed by Fairfax, ii. 821.

IRISH, their barbarity, iii. 376. war ended, 407. aim at an union with Breat Britain, 706.

IRONSIDE [dr. Gilbert] made bp. of Briſtol, iii. 378.

ISABELLA [of Angouleme] married to King JOHN, i. 299.

ISABELLA [daughter of PHILIP the Fair, K. of France] married to EDWARD II, K. of England, i. 439. inſulted by Gaveſton, 442. by one of the confederate barons, 448. procures Mortimer's pardon, 450. goes to France, and negotiates a treaty with her brother, 451. gets over her ſon, and makes pretences for ſtaying at Paris, 452, 453. paſſion for Mortimer, 452. lands in England, and publiſhes a manifeſto, 453. takes the two Spencers, and has them hanged, 454. calls a parliament in the K. her husband's name, in which ſhe gets him dethroned, ib. counterfeits affliction on that occaſion, ib. aſſumes the regency, 457. animates the K. againſt HENRY of Lancaſter, 460. lays a ſnare for the e. of Kent, which ſucceeds in his ruin, 461. impriſoned, 464. dies, 485.

ISABELLA [daughter of CHARLES VI, K. of France] married to King RICHARD II, i. 524. refuſed in marriage to Prince Henry, and ſent home, 554 or 553.

ISABELLA of Bavaria [Q. of France] baniſhed by the conſtable d'Armagnac, i. 591 or 582. joins the d. of Burgundy, and aſſumes the title of regent, 591 or 583.

ITALY [affairs of] in the reign of HENRY VIII, ii. 6, &c.

IVAR, K. of Denmark, invades England, i. 106.

JUDGES [corrupt] puniſhed by K. EDWARD, i. 413. declare the K. to be above law, 520. [three] ſign with reluctance a ſettlement of the crown on Jane Grey, ii. 221. clear themſelves from Q. ELIZABETH's charge of ſeverity, 337. diſpute with K. JAMES I, on his prerogative, 428. opinions concerning ſhip-money, 566. declare to K. JAMES II, that he may diſpenſe with the laws, iii. 254.

IVICA ſubmits to K. CHARLES III, iii. 656.

JULIERS [d. of] defeated and ſlain by PHILIP the Fair, i. 431.

JULIUS CÆSAR, the firſt who gave the Romans a deſcription of Great-Britain, i. introd. vii. his two expeditions into Britain, i. 1, 2, &c.

JULIUS FRONTINUS, a Roman governor in Britain, i. 11.

JUNIUS SEVERUS, a Roman governor in Britain, i. 15.

JURIES, their inſtitution by King ALFRED, i. 112.

JUSTUS, archbp. of Canterbury, i. 81.

JUTTS, a northern people, i. 24.

JUXON [dr.] archbp. of Canterbury, dies, iii. 88.

K

KATHERINE, Q. Dowager of K. CHARLES II, dies at Liſbon, iii. 645. See Catherine.

KEELING [Joſiah] diſcovers the Rye-houſe plot, iii. 217. depoſitions, ib.

KEHL [fort] taken by the French, iii. 594.

KEINTON or Edge-hill fight, ii. 788.

KENELWORTH [parliament of] i. 391. [gariſon of] capitulates, ib.

KENSINGTON-houſe purchaſed by King WILLIAM, iii. 377. indanger'd and damag'd by fire, 412.

KENRIC, the ſon of Cerdick, his bravery, i. 40. becomes King of Weſſex, 41. repels the Britons, 43. dies, ib.

KENT [kingdom of] begins, i. 32. abridgment of its hiſtory, 65—68. [church of] its ſtate during the Heptarchy, 76. [people of] their remarkable embaſſy to WILLIAM the Conqueror, 198. inſurrections there, 201, 907.

KENT [Joan of] a female anabaptiſt, burnt for hereſy, ii. 207.

KENT [e. of] made lord chamberlain, iii. 605. diveſted of that poſt and created duke, 709.

KENTIGERN, abbot of Glaſgow, i. 47.

KET, a tanner, heads a rebellion in Norfolk, ii. 209. hang'd, ib.

KEYES, one of the aſſaſſins, tried, condemn'd, and executed, iii. 472.

KEYSERSWAERT taken by the El. of Brandenburg, iii. 377. beſieged by the allies, 554. a deſcription of the place, n. 1, ib. taken by capitulation, 555.

KIDD [capt.] fited out to ſuppreſs Pirats, turns Pirat himſelf, iii. 511. ſeveral great men concern'd in fiting him out, 512. taken, brought to England, tried, condemn'd and executed, n. 1, 526.

KIDDER [dr. Richard] made biſhop of Bath and Wells, iii. 403.

KILLEGREW [Henry eſq;] appointed admiral of the fleet, jointly with ſir Richard Haddock and ſir John Aſhby, iii. 395. his expedition to the Mediterranean, ib. appointed admiral of the fleet, jointly with ſir Ralph Delaval and ſir Cloudeſly Shovel, 430. accuſed by biſhop Burnet of being in K. JAMES's intereſt, n. 2, ib.

KILWARBY [archbp. of Canterbury] his character, i. 403, 542 or 540.

KIMBOLTON [lord] See five members, and e. of Mancheſter.

KING, the title among the Saxons, firſt aſſumed by Hengiſt, i. 175. his power limited, 186. his prerogatives, revenues, and titles, 187. coronation, ib.

KINGS [Britiſh] four of them attack Cæſar's camp, i. 4. [of England] a remark on them, 552.

KING's-College, at Cambridge, founded by HENRY VI, i. 712.

KING's-Court, its authority, i. 180.

KINGS de jure, and Kings de facto, origin of that diſtinction, iii. 309, 347.

KING's-Evil firſt cured by K. EDWARD the Confeſſor, i. 163.

KING, one of the aſſaſſins, tried, condemn'd and executed, iii. 472.

KINGSALE beſieged and taken by the earl of Marlborough, iii. 395. importance of that place, n. 1, ib.

KINGSTON [e. of] taken, and kill'd, ii. 813.

KIRBY [captain Richard] ſhot for cowardice, iii. 564.

KIRIEL [ſir Thomas] defeated by the French, i. 661.

KIRK of Scotland, its affairs, ii. 568—591. reaſons for oppoſing K. CHARLES, 577. oppoſe the levying of an army, 604. demands of the Scotiſh parliament, 605.

KIRK [colonel] his barbarity, iii. 247. anſwer when preſs'd to change his religion, 256, n. 3.

KIRK [major-general] ſuſpected of treachery, iii. n. 6, 366. relieves Londonderry, 367.

KNIGHT, ſignification of the word, i. 322, n. 3. Knights Bannerets, —of the Bath, —of the Chamber,—of the Garter,—of St. John of Jeruſalem,—of Malta,—Templars, —of the Thiſtle, account of theſe ſeveral orders, ib.

KNIGHTS-TEMPLARS ſuppreſs'd, i. 455.

KNIGHTHOOD, [ſeveral orders of it] i. 322. n. commiſſion to compound with thoſe who who had neglected to receive it, ii. 554.

KNIGHT [dr.] secretary of state, sent to Rome about K. HENRY VIII's divorce, ii. 103.
KNIGHT [John] treasurer of the customs, commited to the Tower for forgery, iii. 500.
KNIGHTLY, one of the conspirators, tried and condemn'd, but pardon'd, iii. 475.
KNIGHT-SERVICE, what, i. 322.
KNOLLES [Robert] his death and character, i. 564, or 561.
KYNING'S-HOLD, or generalissimo of the Saxons, what, i. 177.

L

LAMBERT, a sacramentarian, disputes with K. HENRY VIII, ii. 156.
LAMBERT [general] join'd by Cromwell, ii. 911. left to command in Scotland, 922. removed from all his places, iii. 38. ambitious designs, 46. restores the long parliament, 47. defeats sir George Booth, and sir Thomas Middleton, 50. hinders the speaker from going to the house, 53. arrested by his own troops, 56. escapes out of the Tower, and makes head against Monk, 62. defeated by Ingoldsby, ib. condemned and pardon'd, 83.
LANCASHIRE recusants petition the King, ii. 791.
LANCASTER [house of] its remains at the death of HENRY VI, i. 712.
LANCASTER [Thomas e. of] chosen general by the barons, i. 442. wife taken from him, and given to another, 445. stirs up the nobility against the Spencers, 447. taken prisoner, and beheaded, 448. doubtful character, 449. canoniz'd, ib.
LANCASTER [Henry of] declared chief regent in EDWARD's III's minority, i. 457. procures a league against the court, 460. manifesto, ib. accepts the King's amnesty, 461. See e. of Derby.
LANCASTER [d. of] See John of Ghent.
LANCASTER [Thomas of] second son of K. HENRY IV, made lord high steward, i. 544 or 543. made d. of Clarence, and sent to succor the Orleans faction in France, 568 or 565.
LANDAU taken by the El. of Brandenburg, iii. 377. by the Imperialists, 561. a description of the place, n. 1, ib. taken by the French, 594. besieged by Pr. LEWIS of Baden, 623. surrendered to the K. of the Romans, 624.
LANDEN, battle of, iii. 434.
LANDRECY besieg'd by the allies, but abandoned, iii. 737.
LAND-TAX bill, the first pass'd in K. WILLIAM's reign, iii. 369. inequality of it, n. 1, ib.
LANFRANK, made archbishop of Canterbury, i. 205. reproaches William Rufus with his conduct, 216. dies, ib. took the part of Paschasius about the real presence, 253. See state of the church, 246. &c.
LANGTON [bishop of Litchfield] advises the banishment of Gaveston, i. 437. imprison'd on Gaveston's return, 439.
LANGDALE joins d. Hamilton, ii. 911. defeated, 912.
LANGHORN [Richard] his trial for the Popish-plot, iii. 191. execution, 192.
LANGPORT-fight, ii. 862.
LANGUAGE of the Anglo-Saxons, remarks on it, i. 192, 193.
LANSDOWN-fight, ii. 812.
LARREY's [monsr. de] account of the attempt on Martinica, n. 1, iii. 433.
LATIMER [Hugh] bp. of Worcester, resigns his bishopric on account of the six articles, and is sent to the Tower, ii. 160. sent again by Q. MARY, after having been restored by EDWARD VI, 229. excommunicated, 237. burnt, 243.
LAUD [William] bishop of St. David's, head of the Arminians, ii. 493. resolved against by the commons, 535. made bp. of London, 541. character by bp. Abbot, 543. zeal against the Presbyterians, 553. ceremonies observed by him at a consecration, 554. made archbishop of Canterbury, 559. injunction to the Walloon and French churches, 563. visits the universities, 565. complain'd of, 645. accused, and sent to the Tower, 646. progress of his credit, 651. condemned and executed, 848.
LAUDERDALE [e. of, John Maitland] goes to K. CHARLES II, iii. 9. character, 114, 117. one of the cabal, 117. created duke, 128. voted against, 141. addresses against him, 145, 187. dies, 215.
LAURENCE St. [battle of] ii. 246.
LAURENCE, archbishop of Canterbury, i. 81.
LAUTREC sent to Milan with an army of Swissers, ii. 61. exploits, 62. defeated, 70. declared general of the league, 98. besieges Naples, 105.
LAWS of Alfred, i. 112. of Edmund I, 123. three sorts in England, 150. reduced into one body by Edward the Confessor, 164. [of Europe] most of them derived from the northern nations, 174. [of England] taken from the Saxon laws, ib. [of the Anglo-Saxons,] diverse kinds of them, 189, 190, 191. [penal] abrogated in Scotland, iii. 334.
LEAGUES [remarkable] of Cambray, ii. 9. between HENRY VIII, and Ferdinand of Aragon, 18. of Machline, 27. of London, 37. of Cognac, against the Emperor, 89. of Smalcald, in defence of the reformation, 120. against the German Protestants, 187. between some Scots lords, to revenge the King's murder, 288. between France and England, 318. offensive and defensive, between ELIZABETH and HENRY IV of France, 369. [private] between CHARLES II, and LEWIS XIV, iii. 336. of Augsburg form'd, ib.
LEAKE [commodore, afterwards sir John] successful in Newfoundland, iii. n. 1, 570. relieves Gibraltar, 632. stop'd by the Portuguese, loses an opportunity of intercepting the Spanish Gallions, 654. takes Ivica and Majorca, 656. made admiral and commander in chief of her Majesty's fleet, 683. sent to the Mediterranean, 692. takes a large convoy of provisions, ib. convoys the Q. of Spain to Barcelona, ib. subdues the Islands of Sardinia and Minorca, ib.
LEARNING and piety, [men eminent for,] See state of the church.
LEEDS, [d. of] suspected of bribery in the case of the East-India company, iii. 452. his speech to the house of lords, 453. to the house of commons, 454. impeach'd for bribery, ib. articles against him, ib. his vindication and complaint of partiality, ib. farther proceedings against him, 455. triumphs over his accusers, ib.
LEGATES of Popes, what, i. 249.
LEGATE's court erected, ii. 55.
LEGION, a memorial so call'd sent to the speaker of the house of commons, iii. 520. address to the lords, a seditious libel, 605.
LEICESTER [e. of] See Robert Dudley.
LEICESTER [e. of, Simon de Mountfort] sent into Guienne to quel the Gascons, i. 365. complain'd of, 369. examined by commissioners, and acquited on their report, ib. appears before his peers, ib. gives the King the lie, ib. pardon'd and sent back into Guienne, ib. attack'd again to no purpose, 370. elected general of the barons against K. HENRY III, 383. becomes master of London, 385. follows the King to Lewes, and defeats him, and takes him and his brother and son prisoners, ib. 386. uses the King's name against the King, ib. reduces some revolted barons, 387. suspected of aspiring to the throne, ib. slain at the battle of Evesham, 389. remarks on him, ib. look'd upon by the monks as a martyr, ib.
LEMSTER [d. of] takes Furnese and Dixmuyde, iii. 424.
LENOX [e. of, Matthew Stuart] sent for from France to oppose the e. of Arran, regent of Scotland, ii. 176. takes arms, 177. sides with K. HENRY, 180. demands justice for the murder of the King his son, 286. chosen regent of Scotland, 307. disperses Huntley's troops, ib. kill'd, 315.
LENTHALL [William] speaker of the house of commons, his letter to the army, ii. 666. speaker of Cromwell's first parliament, iii. 30.
LEOFFRICK, d. of Mercia, an enemy to e. Goodwin, i. 156.
LEOPOLD [Emp. of Germany] discontented with France, iii. 340. protests against the d. d'Anjou's pretensions to the crown of Spain, 470. writes to the d. of Marlborough, 615. his death, 632.
LERIDA subdued by the Catalans to King CHARLES III, iii. 640.
LESLEY [John] bishop of Ross, sent to MARY Queen of Scots by her Catholic subjects, ii. 267. negociations, ib.—323. solicits the potentates in vain in Q. MARY's behalf, 309. brought before the English council, and sent to the Tower, 314. commanded to depart England, 323 his history, ib.
LESLEY [David] chosen general of the Scotish army, iii. 16. routed by Cromwell at Dunbar, ib.
LETTERS of K. JAMES intercepted, iii. 372.
LEVELLERS, what they were, ii. 893. disperse by Cromwell, 894. rise again, but defeated, iii. 11.
LEVING [sir Richard] commited to the Tower, for a report concerning the forfeited estates in Ireland, iii. 514.
LEWES [battle of] i. 385. wise or convention of, 386.
LEWIS [Prince of France] son of K. PHILIP AUGUSTUS, called into England by the barons, i. 318. his great success here, ib. 319. dissatisfies the English, 336. loses by a truce, 337. burns Sandwich, ib. blockaded in London, 338. returns to France, ib. succeeds his father PHILIP, 341. dies, 343.
LEWIS XIV's steps in favor of K. JAMES, iii. 336. triumphs over the just complaint of his enemies, 340. his impolitic conduct towards the Protestants, ib. his enemies strengthen'd with 800,000 Fr. subjects, ib. what hinder'd him from opposing the revolution, 341. makes early overtures of peace, n. 2, 397. orders monsr. de Tourville to fight the English fleet, 417. promises never to forsake K. JAMES, n. 3, 422. besieges and takes the town of Namur, 423. and the Castle, ib. makes light of his loss at la Hogue, n. 1, ib. sues for peace, 435. indeavors to draw off several Princes from the grand alliance, 439. makes great preparations to invade England, 469. sends monsr. Calliere to Holland, to make overtures for a peace, 479. seeks the alliance of the King of Sweden, 505. concludes a treaty with him, ib. declares the d. d'Anjou K. of Spain, 520. infringes the treaty of partition thereby, ib. proclaims the Pretender K. of England, &c. 533. Letter to the d. of Savoy, 595.
LEYDEN-CASTLE built by the Saxons, i. 35.
LIBERTY, signification of the word, i. 331. n. 2.
LIBERTY of conscience, declaration of K. CHARLES II, for it, iii. 126. of K. JAMES II, in Scotland, 258. in England, 259, 264.
LIBERTIES of England owing to the barons wars, i. 395.
LIBERTIES of the subject reduced into an act, iii. 340. ascertain'd by certain limitations of the crown, 522.
LICHFIELD, erected into an archbishopric, i. 91.
LIDINGTON imprisoned by the e. of Murray, ii. 305. releas'd, indeavors to insnare Q. ELIZABETH, 306.
LIEGE, with its citadel, taken by the allies, iii. 559. a description of the place, n. 2, ib. the citadel invested by the French, 636. but abandoned at the approach of the d. of Marlborough, ib.
LILBURN [John] defeats the e. of Derby, iii. 19.
LILIENRODT [Swedish embassador in Holland] instrumental in mediating a peace, iii. 480.
LILLINGSTON [colonel Luke] commander of the land forces in an expedition to the West-Indies, iii. 459.
LIMBURG besieg'd and taken by the allies, iii.

593. a deſcription of the place, n. 2, ib.
LIMERICK beſieged by K. WILLIAM, iii. 393. unſucceſsful attempt on the counterſcarp, ib. the ſiege raiſed, 394. beſieged a ſecond time, 406. and taken, 407.
LINCOLN, battles of, i. 240, 337.
LINCOLN [e. of] his advice to the e. of Lancaſter, i. 442.
LINCOLN [John e. of] eſpouſes the cauſe of Lambert Simnel, i. 764. ingages the ducheſs of Burgundy, 765. ſlain at the battle of Stoke, 767.
LINCOLN [Hugh, biſhop of] his character, i. 403.
LIONEL [Prince] ſon of EDWARD III, born, i. 470. created d. of Clarence, 490.
LISLE beſieg'd by the allies, iii. 689. a deſcription of the place, n. 1, ib. the town ſurrenders, 691. the citadel follows, 692.
LISLE [ſir George] block'd up in Colcheſter, ii. 908. taken, and ſhot to death, 913.
LISLE [Lady] barbarouſly ſentenc'd and executed, iii. 247.
LIST of the Engliſh and Dutch fleets at the fight off of la Hogue, n. 1, iii. 419. of the French fleet at the ſame fight, ib.
LITTESTER, an alehouſe keeper, heads an inſurrection in Norfolk, i. 513. defeated and beheaded by the biſhop of Norwich, 514.
LITTLETON's [captain] letters concerning the miſcarriage of the Smirna fleet, iii. 431.
LITTLETON [ſir Thomas] choſen ſpeaker of the houſe of commons, iii. 506.
LITURGY [the new] eſtabliſhed, ii. 207. ſent into Scotland, 573. ordered to be read at Edinburg, 574. tumults on that occaſion, ib. aboliſhed in England, 849.
LLOYD [dr. biſhop of St. Aſaph] his ſyſtem of political theology, iii. 347.
LOAN, mony raiſed by it, ii. 516. perſons impriſon'd for not paying it releaſed, 521.
LOLLARDS, their deſigns repreſented to K. RICHARD, i. 524. why ſo called, n. ib. ſeparate from the church, and preſent a memorial to the parliament, 540, or 538. ſtatute againſt them, 554 or 552, and 577 or 573. alarm the clergy by their increaſe, 566 or 563. commons addreſs in their behalf, ib. accuſed to K. HENRY V, of conſpiring againſt him, who believes it, and deſtroys ſeveral of them, 574 or 571.
LONDON becomes a Roman colony, i. 7. is repaired and fortified by Theodoſius, 18. imbeliſhed, 114. great diſorders there, 198. keys of it delivered to William the Conqueror, 199. a great fire there, 232. ſynod there, grants K. STEPHEN a ſupply, 243. ſedition there, 294. begining of companies there, 295. taken by the barons, 315. by the e. of Leiceſter, 385. by the e. of Glouceſter, 392. prohibition againſt inlarging it, ii. 329. burn'd, iii. 98. charter ſeiz'd, 216. ſubmits, ib
LONDON [bp. of] remonſtrates to K. HENRY II, in the Pope's name, i. 267.
LONDON [citizen of] entertains four K's in his own houſe, i. 491.
LONDONERS declare for Maud againſt King STEPHEN, i. 241. take an oath to LEWIS of France, 318. quarrel with the people of Weſtminſter, 340. buy the plate of K. HENRY III, 364. declare for the barons, 383. inſult the Queen, 384. declare for Queen ISABELLA, 454. refuſe to lend K. RICHARD II a thouſand pounds, 523. receive K. EDWARD IV after his exile, 708. unwilling to own RICHARD III, 737. refuſe to pay an arbitrary tax, ii. 68, 85. expreſs no joy at Q. JANE's proclamation, 223. petition againſt ſhip-mony, 561. order of council againſt them, 602. petition for relief of diverſe grievances, &c. 603, 717, 723, 797, 882, 914. againſt a peace, 825. write to Fairfax, 880. declare againſt the army, 885. try to appeaſe the army, and deliver their forts to Fairfax, 888. intereſts and views, 903. petition for a treaty with the King, 916, 917, 920. ſurprized at K. JAMES's abdication, iii. 291. an inſtance of their loyalty, 353. a farther inſtance of it, 391. entertain the e. of Athlone, Prince of Wirtemberg, and ſeveral general officers, 416. entertain the K. Q. and court, 426. take leave of the King, 531.
LONDONDERRY, ſiege of, iii. 365. reduced to great extremity, 366. great reſolution of the inhabitants, ib. reliev'd by major-general Kirk, and the ſiege raiſed, 367.
LONGCHAMP, favorite of K. RICHARD I, made chancellor, i. 282. joint-regent with the biſhop of Durham in the King's abſence, 283. proceeds haughtily, 285. ſeizes the biſhop of Durham, and ſlights the King's counſellors, ib. cited, impeached, and condemn'd, ib. deprived of all his poſts, and impriſon'd, 286. ſet at liberty, ib.
LORDS, See barons.
LORDS [houſe of] addreſs Q. ELIZABETH to marry, ii. 282. demand of K. CHARLES the e. of Arundel's releaſe, 507. propoſition touching the petition of right, 528, 532. petition in favor of the e. of Newport, 710. examine the King's procedure, 715. ſevere againſt nine abſent members, 782. ſeveral return that had retired, 832. refuſe to ſign the ſelf denying ordinance, 859. but at laſt do it, 860. propoſe a peace to the King on his ſigning four bills, 896. their low ſtate, 930. reject the ordinance for the King's trial, 931. throw out the excluſion bill, iii. 202. advice to K. JAMES at the Prince of Orange's approach, 289. meet at Guildhall, and ſend to the Prince, 291. take on themſelves the adminiſtration of the government, which they deſire the Prince to accept, 295. confer with the commons on the word Abdicated, 299, &c. expreſs their diſlike of the partition treaty, 523. meſſage to the houſe of commons thereupon, ib. ſhew their ſenſe of it in an addreſs to the K. ib. addreſs K. WILLIAM in favor of ſome impeach'd lords, 525. are diſſatisfied at the King's ſilence, n. 1, ib. ſend rules to the houſe of commons for the trial of lord Sommers, 528. anſwer to the reaſons given by the commons for not appearing at that trial, ib. anſwer to a warm reſolution of the commons, 529. addreſs about privateers, 556. vote tacking contrary to the uſage of parliament, 572. reſolutions concerning the Scotiſh plot, 602. clear the e. of Orford, of an accuſation laid againſt him, 603. reſolutions of the Scotiſh parliament againſt them, 607. reſolutions concerning the Scotiſh affairs, 627. addreſs in favor of the d. of Marlborough, 667. fall upon grievances, and particularly on the decay of trade, 679.
LORRAIN [d. of] takes Mentz, and is aſſiſtant at the ſiege of Landau, iii. 377.
LOTHARIUS, K. of Kent, i. 67.
LOUDON [lord] commited to the Tower for correſponding with the French K. ii. 591.
LOVEL [lord] rebels againſt HENRY VII, i. 761. flies, 762. loſt at the battle of Stoke, 767.
LOUVAIN taken by the allies, iii. 651.
LOWICK [major] one of the conſpirators, tried, condemn'd and executed, iii. 475.
LOWTHER [ſir John, bart.] created baron Lowther, and viſcount Londſdale, iii. 477.
LUCAS [ſir Charles] ſhot to death at Colcheſter, ii. 913.
LUCAS [lord] his warm ſpeech concerning ſubſidies, iii. 121.
LUCIUS, a Britiſh King, embraces Chriſtianity, i. 14, 26.
LUDLOW [colonel] comes to England, but is oblig'd to fly, iii. 379.
LUNDEE's [colonel] treachery, iii. 365. ſent priſoner to the Tower, ib. order'd to Londonderry to be tried, 374.
LUNSFORD made lieutenant of the Tower, ii. 710. remov'd, ib.
LUNT brings over commiſſions from K. JAMES, iii. 416. liſt of perſons to whom they were deliver'd, n 2, ib.
LUTHER [Martin] begins to appear, ii. 49. excommunicated by the Pope, appeals to a council, 58. anſwers the K. of England's book, 77.
LUXEMBURG [d. of] gains the battle of Flerus, iii. 397. makes an unſucceſsful attempt, 403. covers the ſiege of Namur, 423. commands the French army at the battle of Stenkirk, ib. takes Huy, 433. gains the battle of Landen, 434. [chevalier de] a bold attempt of his, 689.
LUZARA, battle of, iii. 562.

M

MACCLESFIELD's [e. of] caſe, with regard to his lady, iii. 499.
MACGUIRE and MACMAHONE [lords] executed, ii. 848.
MACKARTY [major-general] taken priſoner in Ireland, iii. 367.
MACKAY's [major-general] prudent behavior at the battle of Aghrim, iii. 405. kill'd at the battle of Steenkirk, 434.
MACKEREL [dr.] heads an inſurrection, ii. 140.
MAGDALEN, or MAUDLIN, a domeſtic of RICHARD II, ſet up to perſonate him, i. 550 or 549. hang'd, 551 or 550.
MAGDALEN COLLEGE Oxford, its diſpute with K. JAMES II, iii. 260.
MAGISTRATES diſplaced by an abuſe of their charter, iii. 335.
MAGNUS, K. of Norway, attacks Angleſey, i. 220.
MAINFROI, natural ſon of the Emperor FREDERICK II, poiſons his brother CONRAD K. of Sicily, i. 373. dupes the Pope, ib. defeats the Pope's army, 374. again, ib. crown'd K. of the Sicilies, ib.
MAJOR generals, their inſtitution and power, iii. 33.
MAJORCA ſubmits to K. CHARLES III, iii. 656.
MALAGA, Engliſh and Dutch ſhips burnt there, iii. 432. ſea fight off of that place, 609. reflections on the ſucceſs of it, n. 1, 610.
MALCOLM, King of Scots, marries a ſiſter of Edgar Atheling, i. 203.
MALO [St.] bombarded, iii. 432, 459.
MALMSBURY [William of] his character, i. 243.
MALPLACQUET [the famous battle of] preparations for it, iii. 701. the battle begun, 702. victory ſavors the allies, ib.
MANCHESTER [e. of, Edward Montague] beats lord Widrington, ii. 813. made general of the aſſociated counties, 826. exploits, 837. joins Fairfax and the Scots, ib. wins the battle of Marſton moor, 838. takes York, 839. accuſed by Cromwell, 858. reſigns his commiſſion, 859. dies, iii. 124.
MANCHESTER [e. of] appointed embaſſador extraordinary to the republic of Venice, iii. 489. to the court of France, 510. recall'd, 534. letter to monſieur de Torcy, with his anſwer, ib. made ſecretary of ſtate, 537.
MANIFESTO, publiſhed by the archbiſhop of York and others againſt HENRY IV, i. 561 or 558.
MANNERS, cuſtoms, and religion of the Engliſh Saxons, i. 191, 192.
MANNING, Cromwell's ſpy, ſhot to death, iii. 32.
MANWARING [dr.] preaches up paſſive obedience, ii. 518. ſentenced, 534. ſermons ſuppreſs'd, 541.
MARCH [e. of] See Roger Mortimer.
MARCH [Edmund, e. of] dies, 514.
MARCH [Roger, e. of] declared preſumptive heir of the crown, 518. ſlain in the Iriſh rebellion, 528 or *526.
MARCH [Edmund, e. of] retires from court at the acceſſion of HENRY IV, ii. 544, or 542. taken by Owen Glendour, with whom he afterwards leagues, 553 or 552. children conceal'd, 560 or 558. dies, 620 or 611.
MARCHIENNES taken by the French, iii. 738.
MARGARET, daughter of EDMUND Ironſide, from whom is deſcended the preſent royal family of Great Britain, i. 147. n. 4.
MARGARET of Anjou, married to K. HENRY VI, i. 654. hated by the people, 656.

raiſes

raiſes and commands an army, which is defeated, 672. levies another army, and wins the battle of Wakefield, 674. wins the battle of Bernard's-heath, and frees the K. from the e. of Warwick, 675. denied proviſions at London, retires to the north, 676. army increaſes, 685. loſes the battle of Towton, 686. prevents EDWARD's making a truce with Scotland, 688. goes to France to ſolicit for ſuccors, 689. arrives in the north of England, but is routed, 690. retires to her father, 691. treats with Warwick and Clarence, 701. arrives in Dorſetſhire, and levies a freſh army, 709. beaten at Tewksbury, and taken priſoner, 710, 711.

MARGARET, counteſs of Richmond, mother of HENRY VII, dies, ii. 6.

MARLBOROUGH [John Churchill, e. of] commands the Engliſh troops in the Netherlands, iii. 377. commands the main poſt at the battle of Walcourt, ib. arrives in Ireland, 394. lays ſiege to Cork, takes the new forts, and Shannon-caſtle, ib. diſpute with the d. of Wirtemberg, made up by his prudence, ib. beſieges and takes Kingſale, 395. returns to England, and goes back again to Ireland, ib. ſent by K. WILLIAM to Flanders, 403. put in the Tower, on account of a ſham-plot, 425. his hand counterfeited, ib. the forgery detected, 426. diſcharged from his impriſonment, n. 1, ib. declared governor of the d. of Glouceſter, 498. general of foot, and commander in chief of his Majeſty's forces in Holland, 531. embaſſador extraordinary and plenipotentiary in Holland, ib. knight of the garter, captain-general, embaſſador, and plenipotentiary, 544. ſpeech to the States-general, ib. character by K. WILLIAM, n. 1, ib. made maſter of the ordnance, 551. declared generaliſſimo of all the Dutch forces, 556. purſues the French army, ib. beſieges and takes Liege with its citadels, 559. conduct ſuperior to the marſhal de Bouflers, ib. taken by a French party, but eſcapes, 560. receives the thanks of the houſe of commons, 574. created d. of Marlborough, ib.

MARLBOROUGH [d. of] beſieges and takes Bonn, iii. 588. forms a deſign on Antwerp, which is fruſtrated, 590 views the French lines, and is for forcing them, but the Dutch oppoſe it, 593. beſieges and takes Limburg, ib. viſits the K. of Spain at Duſſeldorp, 601. goes to Holland, for a few days, at the deſire of the States, 604. concerts a plan for the campain, and returns, 605. reſolves to relieve the Empire, 611. marches into Germany, 612. his wiſdom in the management of this important affair, n. 1, ib. firſt interview with Pr. EUGENE and Pr. LEWIS of Baden, 613. forces the Bavarian intrenchments at Schellenberg, 614. takes Rain, Aicha and Friedberg, 615. is honored with a letter from the Emperor, ib. declines the dignity of a Prince of the Empire, ib. together with Prince EUGENE, fights the ever-memorable battle of Hochſtadt, 617. unſhaken reſolution, ib. ſucceſs in the center and on the left, 619. gains a compleat victory, 620. his juſt encomium, 621. interview with the marſhal de Tallard, ib. takes poſſeſſion of Augsburg and Memmingen, 623. covers the ſiege of Landau, ib. his expedition on the Moſel, takes Triers, ib. ends his glorious campain, and goes to Berlin, 624. is ſucceſsful in his negociations there, ib. returns to England with his priſoners, 628. receives the thanks of both houſes of parliament, ib. is entertain'd by the city, 629. the manor of Woodſtock, &c. granted him, ib. made colonel of the firſt regiment of foot guards, ib. reſolves to act on the Moſel, 635. confers with Pr. LEWIS of Baden at Raſtadt, ib. incamps within ſight of the enemy's army, who retreat and intrench themſelves, ib. his real deſign prevented by Pr. LEWIS of Baden, ib. returns to the Netherlands, 636. drives the French within their lines, ib. forces the lines, and takes a great many priſoners, 637. forms a new deſign, but is fruſtrated by the Dutch, 638. they give him ſatisfaction, 639. goes to Vienna, ib. the principality of Mindelheim, with the title of a Prince of the Empire, confer'd upon him, n. 3, ib. goes to Berlin, and renews the treaty with the K. of Pruſſia, ib. returns by the way of Hanover to England, 640. receives the thanks of the houſe of commons, 645. aſperſions thrown upon him, ib. concerts an attempt on Toulon, ib. ingages for arrears due to the Danes, 647. fights the famous battle of Ramellies, 648. is twice in great danger, 649. gains a compleat victory, ib. takes poſſeſſion of Louvain, 651. writes a letter to the States of Brabant, ib. makes his public entry into Bruſſels, ib. and into Ghent, 652. mr. Stepney introduced, in his name, into the diet of the Empire, 654. receives the thanks of both houſes of parliament, 666. ſpeech to the houſe of lords, in return to their addreſs in his favor, 667. dines with the lord-mayor, &c. at Vintner's-hall, 668. act paſs'd in his favor, ib. another act in his favor, ib. goes into Saxony, 672. has audience of the King of Sweden, 673. is ſucceſsful in his negociation, ib. returns by the way of Berlin and Hanover to the confederate army, ib. purſues the enemy, who retreats with precipitation, 674. ends the campain without any ſucceſs, ib. confers with the Electors of Mentz and Hanover, ib. returns to England, 675. complains of mr. Harvey, and offers to lay down his imploys, 682. acts in concert with Pr. EUGENE, in Flanders, 686. fights the battle of Oudenarde, ib. gains an indiſputable victory, 688. covers the ſiege of Liſle, 689. relieves Bruſſels, 691. retakes Ghent, and ends his glorious campain, 692. has the thanks of both houſes of parliament, 696. favors the inveſting of Tournay, by a ſtratagem, 700. with Pr. EUGENE, gains the battle and victory of Malplacquet, 702. has the thanks of both houſes of parliament, 707. enters the French lines with the whole army, 712. takes Douay, Bethune, St. Venant and Aire, 713. is viſited by the new miniſtry, 716. not thank'd by either houſe of parliament, ib. reſolves not to lay down his commiſſion, 717. ſome reflections hereupon, n. 1, ib. forms a ſecret deſign to paſs the French lines, 721. deceives the marſhal de Villars, and ſucceeds, 722. his conduct compared with that of monſ. de Villars, ib. takes Bouchain, 723. viſits the new miniſtry, 727. ſpeech in the houſe of lords in his own juſtification, 729. letter to the commiſſioners for ſtating the public accounts, ib. his farther juſtification in anſwer to their report, 730. proceeding of the houſe of commons againſt him, ib. diſmiſs'd from all his imployments, 731. repreſentation of ſome forein Princes in his favor, 733. reſents reflections caſt upon him by the e. of Powlet, ib. leaves England, 738.

MARLBOROUGH [ducheſs of] declines in the Queen's eſteem, iii. 682. abſents ſome weeks from court, 683. retires intirely from court, 709. her places diſpoſed of, 717.

MARR [e. of] See Areskin, John.

MARRIAGE, of Elizabeth, daughter of King JAMES I, to the count Pal. of the Rhine, i. 147, n. 4. ii. 423. of eccleſiaſtics declared valid, iii. 218.

MARSHAL [William, e. of Pembroke] See Pembroke. Extinction of the family of the Marſhals, i. 363.

MARSIGLIA, battle of, iii. 435.

MARSTON-MOOR fight, ii. 838.

MARTINICA, unſucceſsful attempt there, iii. 433.

MARTYR [Peter] arrives in England, ii. 203. retires back, 229. wife dug up, 245.

MARY [Princeſs] daughter of K. HENRY VIII, born, ii. 45. complains of the reformation, 201. refuſes the new liturgy, 207. and the confeſſion of faith, 215. prevented from quiting the realm, ib. eſcapes the d. of Northumberland's ſnares, 221. [Queen of England] right examined, 222. retires into Norfolk, and aſſumes the title of Queen, 223. received in Norfolk and Suffolk, promiſes to make no alteration in religion, 225. proclaim'd in London, and acknowledg'd by the whole kingdom, 226, 227. enters London, 227. ſpeaks doubtfully about religion, ib. diſcovers her intention by a proclamation, 228. rewards her friends, 230. crown'd, ib. jealous of her ſiſter Elizabeth, 231. ſends for cardinal Pole as legate, ib. accepts the offer of a marriage with the archduke Philip, and diſſolves the parliament for oppoſing it, 232. concludes the treaty of marriage, 233. ſuſpends an act againſt German merchants, 234. orders againſt prieſts marriage, 236. deprives four married biſhops, and three others upon other pretences, ib. fancies herſelf pregnant, but miſtaken, 238, 242. reſtores the goods of the church, 241. cauſes Bonner to renew his ſeverity, 242. ſigns a warrant for Cranmer's execution after he had abjured, 244. repairs old monaſteries, and erects new ones, ib. orders ſeveral things to be razed out of the public records, ib. grants a commiſſion for erecting the Inquiſition-court in England, 245. declares war againſt France, 246. loſes Calais, &c. 247. very uneaſy, ib. exceſſively furious againſt the Proteſtants, 248. ſends out a fleet in vain, and not granted a ſupply, 249. death and character, ib. death concealed, 250. funeral, 253.

MARY [Q. of Scots] born, ii. 173. promiſed to Pr. Edward, 176. right to the Engliſh crown examined, 222. married to the Dauphin, 248. aſſumes the title of Q. of England, 256. quits it, 267. anſwers ELIZABETH's embaſſy evaſively, ib. refuſed a ſafe conduct, is highly offended with ELIZABETH, ib. ſpeech on that occaſion, ib. 268. views with relation to the Edinburg treaty, 268. arrives from Scotland in France, and deſires to be declared ELIZABETH's heir, 269. ſolicited in marriage by the archduke Charles, but diſſuaded by ELIZABETH, 272, 273. reſolves to marry lord Darnley, 274. draws him out of Scotland, 275, 276. marries, and afterwards hates him, 277. lives ſcandalouſly with David Rizzo, who is aſſaſſinated in her chamber, 278. put under a guard, 279. eſcapes, and re-aſſumes her authority, ib. delivered of Pr. James, afterwards King, 280. ſuſpicious of Q. ELIZABETH, ib. treats her husband cruelly, 281, 286. lives ſcandalouſly with Bothwell, ib. refuſes to ratify the treaty of Edinburg, ib. accuſed of her husband's death by ſome, and cleared by others, 284, 285. careſſes the K. and perſuades him to retire to Edinburg, 285. gets Edinburg-caſtle into her hands, and commits her ſon to the e. of Marr, 286. married to e. Bothwell, 287. forms a league in her defence, which Murray refuſes to ſign, ib. retires from the confederate lords, taken, and confin'd, 288. obliged to reſign the crown to her ſon, but ſuffered to appoint a regent, ib. 289. treated ill by Murray, ib. eſcapes out of priſon, and marches againſt Murray the regent, but defeated, 292. arrives in England, and writes to ELIZABETH, who refuſes to ſee her, 'till ſhe clears herſelf of her husband's death, 293. detain'd a priſoner, 294. cauſe debated, 295—298. treats of a marriage with the d. of Norfolk, 300. deſires her marriage with Bothwell may be annul'd, 305. faction in Scotland much en'ebled, ib. party aſſembles, but brought to a ſuſpenſion of arms, 307. propoſals for her releaſe, with the Scots anſwer, 308, 309. imploys Ridolfi the Florentine to negociate for her in Spain, 313. examined, gives in her anſwer, 317. agrees to ſhare the royalty with her ſon, 334. conſpiracy in her favor, 337. treats with Q. ELIZABETH, 338, 339. put in the cuſtody of ſir Drue Drury, 339. act of parliament for her trial, 340 correſponds with Babington, 346. papers ſeized, and trial trial determined on, 347. commiſſion for it, ib. acquainted with it, refuſes to anſwer, 348. proceedings againſt her, 349—352. her ſentence, 352. informed of her ſentence, ſhews great firmneſs of mind, 355. writes to ELIZABETH, and interceded for, but in vain, ib. beheaded, 357. body removed to Weſtminſter, 417.

MARY, daughter of CHARLES I, Princeſs of Orange, comes to England, iii. 68. dies, 71.

MARY [Princeſs] daughter of JAMES II, married to the Prince of Orange, iii. 154. refuſes to reign alone, 309, 350. arrives in England, 309, 351. tamper'd with to change her religion, 335. promiſes to transfer her right to the crown to the Pr. 349. proclaimed Queen, jointly with the Prince, as King, 351. [Q. of England, &c.] proclaimed, 348. proclaim'd, in like manner, in Scotland, 360. adminiſtration of the government, in the K's abſence, given her by act of parliament, 385. a reſtraining clauſe in this act, n. 4, ib. her vigilance in the King's abſence, 390. generoſity to the Dutch, 392. ſets an example of induſtry, n. 3. 402. aſſiduous in preparing to oppoſe an intended invaſion, 417. her politic meſſage to the fleet, 418. bounty after the fight off of la Hogue, 422. dines in the city, 426. her death, 445. her character and funeral, 446.

MARY's [Fort St.] plunder'd by the Engliſh, iii. 566. miſconduct of our officers and troops in this action, n. 3, ib.

MASHAM [mrs.] begins to eclipſe the ducheſs of Marlborough, iii. 682. a farther account of her, n. 1, ib. is made privy-purſe, 717.

MASSACRE of Paris, and conſequences of it, ii. 318.

MATHILDA, conſort of WILLIAM the Conqueror, crown'd, i. 201.

MATHILDA, niece of EDGAR ATHELING, and daughter of the K. of Scots, married to HENRY I, 224.

MATTHEW PARIS [the hiſtorian] obſervations on him, i. 309.

MAUD [daughter of HENRY I,] married to the Emperor HENRY V, i. 229. acknowledg'd her father's heir, 232. married to Jeoffery Plantagenet, ib. invited into England, 237. lands, 239. ingages the nobility and clergy in her intereſt, ib. beſieg'd in Wallingford, and retires to Lincoln, ib. eſcapes artfully, ib. her great progreſs, 240. elected by the clergy, ib. acknowledged by the Londoners, 241. uſes the Queen ill, ib. falls out with the biſhop of Wincheſter, and indeavors to ſeize him, ib. offends the Londoners, ib. beſieged in the caſtle of Wincheſter, 242. in Oxford, ib. withdraws to Normandy, 243. dies, 267.

MAUD [daughter of HENRY II] married to the d. of Saxony, i. 270.

MAURICE [Prince] Stadtholder of Holland, made knight of the garter, ii. 418.

MAURICE [Prince] ſon of the Elector Frederic and Princeſs Elizabeth, wounded, ii. 812. commands in the weſt, 813. takes Exeter and Dartmouth, and beſieges Plymouth, ib. raiſes the ſiege of Lime, 841. caſt away, iii. 29.

MAXIMILIAN [Emperor] his affairs, ii. 9—53. views and intereſt, 24, 34. makes as if he would reſign the Empire to HENRY VIII, 46. dies, 53.

MAXIMUS, governor of Britain, his exploits, i. 18. he is beheaded, ib.

MAZARIN [cardinal] indeavors to intereſt himſelf in the Engliſh affairs, but without ſucceſs, iii. 61.

MAZARIN [the ducheſs of] comes into England, iii. 159. accuſed of holding Popiſh cabals, n. 1, 359.

MEAL, ordinance for abating one per week, ii. 847.

MEAL-TUB plot, iii. 194.

MECHLIN ſubmits to K. CHARLES III, iii. 651.

MEDALS on the coronation of K. WILLIAM and Q. MARY, iii. 357.

MEEZE [rear-admiral] burns Petit-Guavas, iii. 494. dies ſoon after, ib.

MELDRUM [ſir John] defeated, ii. 837.

MELFORT [e. of] ſentenc'd for high-treaſon in Scotland, iii. 457. a letter of his to the e. of Perth intercepted, 521.

MELLITUS, an aſſiſtant of Auguſtin the monk, made archbp. of Canterbury, i. 81. the firſt who preached to the Eaſt-Saxons, 91.

MELVIL [ſir James] character of him and his memoirs, ii. 284.

MEMBERS of the houſe of commons [four] commited to the Tower for refuſing to give an account of their proceeding in the houſe, ii. 544. inform'd againſt by the attorney-general, 545. fined, 546.

MEMBERS [five] accuſed of high-treaſon by K. CHARLES I, ii. 715. papers, &c. ſealed up, ib. ſent for by the King, 716. demanded by him in perſon, ib. proclamation againſt them, ib.

MEMBERS [eleven] accuſed by the army, ii. 881. articles againſt them, ib. deſire leave to abſent themſelves, 882. granted ſix months abſence, 883. voted into the houſe again, 886.

MEMBERS [forty-one] ſeiz'd, and made priſoners, ii. 928.

MEMBERS [an hundred] excluded the houſe, ii. 929. proteſt, ib. proteſtation voted ſcandalous, ib.

MEMMINGEN ſubmits to the d. of Marlborough, iii. 623.

MEMORIAL of the church of England [a pamphlet] burnt, iii. 641.

MENDOZA, the Spaniſh embaſſador, found to be in a plot againſt Q. ELIZABETH, ii. 338. ordered to depart the land, ib.

MENIN beſieged and taken, iii. 653. a deſcription of the place, n. 2, ib.

MERCI [count] defeated by the count de Bourg, iii. 704.

MERCIA [kingdom of] begins, i. 45. abridgment of its hiſtory, 59—62. [church of] 90, 91.

MERCER, a Scots pirate, taken by an alderman of London, i. 509.

MEROVINGIENS and Carlovingiens, why ſo called, i. 176, and n. 3.

MERTON ſtatutes, i. 352.

MESNAGER [monſ.] ſent by France to England, to make offers for a peace, iii. 726.

MEULANT conference, i. 595 or 587.

MICHEL [ſir Francis] obtains a patent for making gold and ſilver lace, ii. 446. degraded from knighthood, and fined, ib.

MIDDLESEX [Lionel Cranfield, e. of] made lord-treaſurer, ii. 443. fined 50,000 l. by the intereſt of Prince Charles and the d. of Buckingham, 482.

MIDDLE-TEMPLE addreſs to K. JAMES II, 261.

MIDDLETON [Hugh] a citizen of London, brings the new river to that city, ii. 424.

MIDDLETON [e. of] ſentenc'd for high-treaſon in Scotland, iii. 457.

MILITIA, regulated by K. ALFRED, i. 113. [French] 60,000 kill'd the day after the battle of Crecy, 479. [Engliſh] ordered to be kept in diſcipline, 553. diſpute concerning it betwixt K. CHARLES I, and his parliament, ii. 726—747.

MILLEVOIX [the chevalier de] hang'd for treachery, iii. n. 2, 424.

MILTON [John] dies, iii. 144.

MINISTERS of K. RICHARD II, retire to Briſtol on the d. of Lancaſter's arrival, where they are taken and beheaded, i. 529 or *527.

MINORCA taken by ſir John Leake and major-general Stanhope, iii. 692.

MISCARRIAGES, with reſpect to the ſuccors in Ireland inquired into, iii. 372. the inquiry reſumed, 374. again inquired into, 380. of the fleet inquired into, 381. the inquiry reſumed, 436. farther inquired into, 488.

MISSIONARIES, Engliſh, ſent into Sweden, i. 173.

MODENA [Princeſs of] married to the d. of York, iii. 138. [Queen of England] with child, for which a miracle is pretended. 263. goes to France, 290.

MODENA reduced by the d. of Savoy, iii. 661.

MODRED, nephew of ARTHUR, ſeizes the crown in his uncle's abſence, i. 40. overthrown by ARTHUR in ſeveral battles, 41. ſlain, ib.

MOHUN [lord Charles] tried for the murder of Mountford the player, and acquited, iii. 430. tried for the murder of Richard Coote eſq; and acquited, 510. fights a duel with d. Hamilton, and is kill'd, 738.

MOLESWORTH [mr. afterwards lord viſcount] author of an account of Denmark, iii. 412.

MOLLON-ADELWALT, K. of Northumberland, i. 58.

MONARCH, or General of the Saxons, what, i. 46, 50.

MONASTERIES, ſeveral ſuppreſs'd for the ſupport of cardinal Wolſey's intended colleges, ii. 79, 109. viſitation of them commited to Cromwell, 141. ſeveral ſurrender'd to the K. 142. wickedneſs diſcover'd in them, ib. n. 3. leſſer ones ſuppreſs'd, and lands ſold, 150. viſited again, and their frauds publiſhed, 155. ſuppreſs'd in general, and their lands granted to K. HENRY, 158, 159. eſtimate of the gains from this ſuppreſſion, 161.

MONK [George] taken priſoner and ſent to the Tower, ii. 822. reduces Scotland, iii. 20. aſſiſts Blake againſt the Dutch, 24. ſubmits to Richard Cromwell, 44. ſubmits to the Rump parliament, 47. ſuſpected by the officers, 53. reſolves to reſtore the K. 54, 55. procures a ſupply of mony, and enters England, 57. receiv'd at York by Fairfax, ib. diſſembles, and why, 58. gets the parliament's forces removed from London, ib. enters London, and refuſes to abjure K. CHARLES, ib. complimented by the commons, and makes a ſpeech to them, ib. 59. obeys the parliament againſt the city, 59. ſees his error, and makes the citizens his friends, ib. imbroil'd with the parliament, reſtores the ſecluded members, 60. perſuaded to accept the government, 61. prevented by ſir Anthony Aſhley Cooper, ib. n. 6. anſwers a meſſage from the K. and conſtituted the K's general, 62. made knight of the garter, 64. hinders the propoſing of conditions to the K. ib. n. 2. [duke of Albermarle] commands the Engliſh fleet in conjunction with Pr. Rupert, 97. dies, 114.

MONKS, diſputes between them and the prieſts, i. 27—30. diſſentions in England on their account, 132. decay of them in ALFRED's time, 134. [of Glaſtenbury] their great privileges, 126, 135. [forein] expell'd the kingdom, 511. become odious to K. HENRY VIII, ii. 138. inſolence of one, which occaſions the execution of ſeveral, 140.

MONMOUTH [d. of] made captain of the life-guard, iii. 112. ſuppreſſes an inſurrection in Scotland, 189. in diſgrace, 193. report of his legitimacy, ſilenc'd by the K. 196. accuſed of the Rye-houſe plot, 217. proclamation againſt him, ib. reconciles himſelf to the K. 223. demands back a letter wherein he owns his guilt, and baniſhed from court, 224. perſuaded by Argyle to invade England, 242. lands at Lyme, 244. declaration, 245. attainted, ib. advances to Taunton, ib. proclaimed at Bridgwater, 246. hears of the advance of the K's army, and Argyle's defeat, ib. defeated, taken, and ſent to London, ib. ſees the K. and begs pardon, ib. which the K. denies, 247. inſulted by the Queen, ib. beheaded, ib.

MONOPOLIES complained of, ii. 385. ſuppreſſed, ib. ſpeech of Q. ELIZABETH concerning them, ib. complain'd of again, and the monopoliſts proſecuted, 446. diverſe revoked, 448. ſeveral granted by K. CHARLES, 553. ſome aboliſhed, 584.

MONPESSON [ſir Giles] obtains a patent, together with ſir Francis Michel, for making lace, ii. 426. eſcapes from the parliament, ib. degraded and eſtate confiſcated, ib.

MONROE [general] treats with Argyle, ii. 922.

MONS beſieged and taken by LEWIS XIV, iii. 402. K. WILLIAM's deſign on it abortive, 423. taken by the allies, 704.

MONSON [ſir Thomas] concerned in ſir Thomas Overbury's murder, ii. 420.
MONSTER [ſea] found in K. JOHN's time, i. 321. n.
MONSTRELET [Enguerrand de] the hiſtorian, i. 822. n.
MONTAGUE [lord, John Nevil] defeats a detachment of HENRY VIth's army, i. 690. created marquis, ib. defeats ſome Yorkſhire rebels, whom he had ſtirr'd up to an inſurrection, 698. deſerts K. EDWARD, 702. behaves doubtfully, 706, 707. ſlain, 708.
MONTAGUE [ſir Henry] made firſt commiſſioner of the treaſury, ii. 431.
MONTAGUE [dr.] proceedings againſt him, ii. 492, 493, 498. made biſhop of Chicheſter, 541.
MONTAGUE [ſir Ralph] embaſſador in France, his letters to the K. and the lord-treaſurer, iii. 155.
MONTAGUE, [the hon. Charles eſq;] a monument to his fame, iii. 498. created lord Halliſax, 520.
MONTAGUE, [e. of] created duke, iii. 631.
MONTEAGLE [lord, William Parker] receives a letter, which diſcovers the Gun-powder-treaſon, ii. 405.
MONTFERRAT [marquis of] his diſpute with Guy de Luſignan, i. 287. choſen general in the Eaſt, 289.
MONFORT [Simon de] begins to be in favor, i. 354. marries one of the King's ſiſters, ib. obtains the Popes confirmation of the marriage, ib. See Leiceſter [e. of].
MONTFORT [Simon de] ſon of the former, defeated by Prince Edward, i. 389. obliged to ſurrender, 390. turns pirate, 391.
MONTFORT [ſir Simon] conſpires againſt K. HENRY VI, i. 786. executed, 787.
MONTGOMERY, Philip Herbert created e. of, ii. 390.
MONTGOMERY [lord] a priſoner in Newgate for high-treaſon, refus'd admitance to bail, iii. 489.
MONTHS, the Romans diviſion of them, i. 138. n.
MONTJOY [lord, Charles Blount] ſent lieutenant to Ireland, and reduces Tir-oen, ii. 379, 385, 386.
MONTROSE [marquis of, James Graham] arrives at the Hague to K. CHARLES II, iii. 9. commiſſion'd to invade Scotland, 10. progreſs in Germany, 13. arrives in Scotland, ib. ſurpriſed, defeated, and taken priſoner, 14. condemned to be hang'd, ib. makes a ſpeech at the gallows, ib.
MONUMENT at London, inſcription on it, iii. 98.
MOOR, [dr. John] made biſhop of Norwich, iii. 403.
MORDAUNT [lord] concerned in the Powder-plot, ii. 407.
MORE [ſir Thomas] made lord chancellor, ii. 113. reſigns the great ſeal, 126. refuſes the oath on aboliſhing the papal authority, and is ſent to the Tower, 135. converſation on that matter, ib. n. 2. condemned by parliament to impriſonment, and confiſcation of goods, 136. perſecuted the Proteſtants, 137. executed, 140. character, ib.
MORE [a Popiſh prieſt] made provoſt of the univerſity of Dublin, iii. 368.
MORKAR, ſon of Alfgar, made e. of Northumberland, i. 162. defeats Toſto, 165. defeated by Toſto and the King of Norway, 166. he and Edwin oppoſe William the Conqueror, 198. ſubmit to him, 200. rebel and ſubmit again, 202, 203.
MORTALITY in the army and fleet in Ireland, iii. 376.
MORTIMER [Hugh] ſtands out againſt King HENRY II, i. 258.
MORTIMER [Roger] ravages the eſtates of the Spencers, i. 447. ſent to the Tower, 448. twice condemned, and pardon'd, 450. eſcapes out of the Tower, and withdraws to France, ib. lov'd by Queen ISABELLA, 452. made e. of March, 460. renders himſelf odious, 461. ſeiz'd, and ſent to the Tower, 464. condemned and executed, 465. family, ib.
MORTIMER'S-HOLE, i. 465.
MORTMAIN, meaning of that word, i. 128. n. [ſtatute of] 407.
MORTON [dr. John] biſhop of Ely, commited to the Tower, i. 735. to the d. of Buckingham's cuſtody, 738. character, ib. joins Buckingham againſt King RICHARD, 741. flies into Flanders, 742. made privy counſellor to HENRY VII, 758. dies archbp. of Canterbury and cardinal, 800.
MORTON [e. of, James Douglas] elected regent of Scotland, ii. 320. devoted to England, ib. puts an end to the troubles of his country, 321. treats with Q. ELIZABETH, 322. reaſſumes the authority, which K. JAMES had taken on himſelf, 328. hated by the King's favorites, 329. ſent to priſon, 331. beheaded, ib.
MOTION for an addreſs to remove ſome perſons from his Majeſty's council dropp'd, iii. 372.
MOWBRAY [Robert de] rebels, i. 219. taken and puniſhed, ib.
MOWBRAY [Thomas] e. of Nottingham, and e. marſhal, made d. of Norfolk, i. 526. agrees to fight the d. of Hereford, but prevented by K. RICHARD and baniſhed, 527 or 525. rebels againſt K. HENRY IV, i. 561 or 558. taken and beheaded, 562 or 559.
MOWBRAY [John] reſtored to his father's title of d. of Norfolk, i. 623 or 614.
MULGRAVE [e. of, John Sheffield] made lord chamberlain to K. JAMES II, iii. 253. anſwer concerning tranſubſtantiation, 256, n. 3. See Normanby, marq. of.
MUNDEN's [ſir John] fruitleſs attempt to deſtroy ſome French ſhips at the Groyne, iii. 564. call'd to an account, but acquited, 565.
MURDER and manſlaughter, how diſtinguiſh'd by the Saxons, i. 191.
MURRAY [e. of] See James Stuart.

N

NALSON [John] character of his collections, ii. 637.
NAMUR, town and caſtle taken by the French King, iii. 422. beſieged by K. WILLIAM, 460. the town ſurrenders, 461. ſtrength of the place, n. 1, and 2, ib. the caſtle ſurrenders, 462.
NANTZ [the edict of] revok'd, iii. 340.
NAPLES, abſtract of its ſucceſſion, i. 789.
NAPLES [the kingdom of] reduced to the obedience of K. CHARLES III, iii. 678.
NASEBY-fight, ii. 861, 862.
NASSAU-SAARBRUG undertakes the ſiege of Kayſerſwaert, iii. 554. beſieges and takes Venlo, 555.
NATIONAL land bank erected by parliament, iii. 475. proves abortive, n. 2, 487. debt inquired into and partly provided for, 497. farther provided for, 509.
NAVY [royal] ſtate of it at the revolution, iii. n. 2, 363. a ſupply granted for its increaſe, 399. eſtabliſhment relating thereunto, n. 1, 440. ſtate thereof, taken into conſideration, 508. addreſs of the commons thereupon, ib. ſuffers greatly by a violent ſtorm, 597.
NAUNTON, ſir Robert, made ſecretary of ſtate, ii. 431. turned out, 443.
NEGATIVE of the crown call'd in queſtion in Scotland, iii. 582.
NEGOCIATIONS for a peace renew'd, iii. 725. reflections upon this ſubject, n. 3, 4. ib. the time and place for the congreſs fix'd, 727.
NEOTUS and GRIMBALD, the firſt who taught Divinity at Oxford, i. 113, 138.
NETHERLANDS [affairs of the] i. 759. ii. 259, 283, 291, 306, 320, 324, 325, 326, 327, 339.
NEUBURG abandon'd by the Bavarians, iii. 615.
NEVIL [Alexander] archbiſhop of York, a favorite of K. RICHARD II, i. 515. baniſhed, 522.
NEVIL [George] archbp. of York, removed from the chancellorſhip, i. 696. ſtirs up an inſurrection in Yorkſhire, 698.
NEVIL [John] brother of the archbiſhop, See Montague.
NEVIL's [vice-admiral] expedition in the Weſt-Indies, iii. 493. purſues monſ. Ponti's ſquadron, which eſcapes, ib. ill uſed by the Spaniards, 494. dies at Virginia, ib.
NEW-RIVER brought to London, ii. 424.
NEWBURGH [lord, Edward Barret] correſponds with K. CHARLES I, and tries to procure his eſcape, ii. 930.
NEWBURY-battles, ii. 811, 846.
NEWCASTLE founded by Robert, ſon of the Conqueror, i. 209. taken by the Scots, ii. 602.
NEWCASTLE [William Cavendiſh, e. of] his military exploits, ii. 794, 813.
NEWCASTLE [d. of] made lord-privy ſeal, iii. 631.
NEW-FOREST, a large country depopulated to make it, i. 210. William Rufus ſlain there, 221.
NEWPORT-treaty, between K. CHARLES I, and his parliament, ii. 922, &c.
NEWRY abandon'd by the Iriſh, iii. 376.
NEWTON-BUTLER, 6000 Iriſh routed there, iii. 367.
NICE taken by the d. de Vendôme, iii. 640.
NIMEGUEN-congreſs, iii. 149, &c.
NIMEGUEN, an attempt on that place fruſtrated, iii. 556. bravery of the burghers, ib.
NOBILITY, complain'd of by the common people, ii. 207. diſpoſition at the death of EDWARD VI, 224.
NOBILITY and gentry go over to the Prince of Orange, iii. 276. names of thoſe that accompany'd him into England, 284.
NONCONFORMISTS, ſtatutes againſt them, ii. 367. iii. 115. the name apply'd indifferently to all Diſſenters, 72. preſent a petition, which is favorably received, 113. proſecuted, ib. 213. bill in their favor brought into the houſe, 249. thank K. JAMES II for his declaration, 259. See Puritans and Presbyterians.
NONJURING clergymen aſſiſt and abſolve the conſpirators at their execution, iii. 475.
NON-OBSTANTE clauſe, aboliſh'd by the parliament, i. 601 or 592.
NON-RESISTANCE preached up by the clergy, iii. 214.
NORFOLK, inſurrection there quell'd by the biſhop, i. 514.
NORFOLK [Thomas Mowbray, d. of] agrees to fight the d. of Hereford, but prevented by K. RICHARD, and baniſhed, i. 527 or *525.
NORFOLK [Thomas Howard, d. of] ſuppreſſes a rebellion in Yorkſhire, ii. 152, 153. excites K. HENRY againſt Cromwell, 163. character, 167. an enemy to the reformation, 188. ſent to the Tower with his ſon, 190. attainted in parliament, and eſcapes narrowly, 192. releaſed from the Tower, 227. ſits as lord high ſteward, 228. attainder reverſed, 231. dies, 258.
NORFOLK [Thomas Howard, d. of] treats of a marriage with the Queen of Scots, ii. 300. promiſes to deſiſt, but ſent to the Tower, 301. rebellion in his favor, but ſoon ſuppreſs'd, ib. releaſed, 308. ingages in MARY's intereſt, and renews his project of marrying her, 313. diſcovered, confeſſes part of his deſigns, 314. condemned and executed, 316. family careſs'd by K. JAMES I, 390.
NORFOLK [d. of] brings an action of adultery againſt mr. Germain, iii. 438. obtains an act of divorce, 517.
NORMANBY [marq. of] made lord privy ſeal, iii. 546. created d. of Normanby and Buckinghamſhire, 581.
NORMANDY [affairs of] i. 151. from the time of Rollo to William the Baſtard, or Conqueror, 195. [dukes of] ibid. taken poſſeſſion of by HENRY I, 228. [duke of, ſon of Philip de Valois] obliges EDWARD III, to raiſe four ſieges, i. 474.
NORMANS and Engliſh reciprocally complain of each other, i. 203.
NORRIS [John] goes with Drake againſt Spain, ii. 363. ſent againſt the Iriſh rebels, 372.
NORRIS [capt. John, now ſir John] is obliged by his officers to ſuffer monſ. Ponti, with a rich booty, to eſcape, iii. 494. a brave action under his command, 676. expedition on the coaſt of Languedoc, 714.

NORTHAMPTON [marquis of William Parr] ſentenced for high-treaſon, ii. 228. pardoned, and reſtored to his honours, 253.
NORTHAMPTON [e. of, Henry Howard] governs the e. of Somerſet, ii. 421. dies, ib.
NORTHERN nations, ſome account of them, i. 23, 24, 98, 99.
NORTHUMBERLAND divided into Deira and Bernicia, i. 43. abridgment of the hiſtory, 52—59. church of, 82—89. cruelly waſted by William the conqueror, 204.
NORTHUMBERLAND [e. of, Henry Piercy, e. marſhal] rewarded by K. HENRY IV, for his ſervices, i. 544, or 543. projects HENRY's dethronement and leagues with Owen Glendour and the e. of March, 557, or 555. beaten at Shrewsbury, loſes his ſon, and withdraws into the North, 558, or 556. pardon'd, ib. rebels again, 561, or 558. retires into Scotland, 562 or 559. into Wales, 563 or 561. joins again with Glendour, advances into Yorkſhire, and publiſhes a manifeſto, 565 or 562. defeated and ſlain by the ſherif of York, ib.
NORTHUMBERLAND [Thomas Grey e. of] beheaded for a conſpiracy againſt K. HENRY V. i. 580 or 572.
NORTHUMBERLAND [Thomas Piercy e. of] outlaw'd for rebellion, ii. 301. ſeiz'd in Scotland, 306. beheaded, 319.
NORTHUMBERLAND [Henry Piercy e. of] ſhoots himſelf, ii. 341.
NORTHUMBERLAND [Algernoon Piercy e of] returns to the parliament, after having retired into the country, ii. 832.
NORTHUMBRIANS, their converſion to Chriſtianity, i. 83. revolt from Ethelred, 105. from Edward the confeſſor, but are pardoned, 162. rebel, and call in the Danes, 204.
NORWICH [Henry Spencer bp. of] quells a rebellion in Norfolk, i. 514. commands a croiſade in favor of Pope Urban VI, 515.
NOTHELMUS, archbp. of Canterbury, i. 82.
NOTTINGHAM, K. CHARLES I ſets up his Standard there, ii. 784.
NOTTINGHAM [Charles Howard e. of] lord high-admiral, ſent embaſſador to Spain, ii. 403.
NOTTINGHAM [e. of, Daniel Finch] his arguments in the convention, after K JAMES's Abdication, iii. 298, &c.
NOTTINGHAM [e. of] made ſecretary of ſtate, iii. 548. complaint againſt him in the houſe of commons, 599. acquited of the complaint with honor, ib. reſigns his place of ſecretary of ſtate, 605.
NOVEMBER [fifth day of] appointed to be kept, ii. 408.
NOYELLES [count de] takes Sandvliet, iii. 639.
NUNTIO [de Rubei's] gets mony from the abbots, i. 357. ſupported by K. HENRY III, ib. [Ruſtand] arrives with bulls in favor of K. HENRY III, 375. attacks all the Ciſtercian abbots, 377. [John de Die] arrives with more bulls for mony, 378. [Arlot] arrives on the ſame errand, ib. [Ferdinando Dadda] makes a public entry into Windſor to K. JAMES II, iii. 262.

O

OAK of reformation, at Mouſhold-hill near Norwich, ii. 209.
OATES [Titus] an account of him, iii. 163, ſent by dr. Tongue to find out a plot, ib. ſubſtance of his narrative, 164. takes meaſures to bring the affair before the parliament, 165. examined by the commons, 166. depoſitions againſt the conſpirators, 170, 173, 189, 191, 202. accuſes the Queen, 173. re-examin'd, 183. turned out of Whitehall, 212. fined 100,000*l.* for calling the d. of York traitor, 225. his terrible ſentence, 239. proceedings in parliament concerning him, 371. Judgments againſt him for perjury confirm'd, ib. is pardon'd, and allow'd a penſion by K. WILLIAM, ib.
OATH [coronation] taken by K. EDWARD II, i, 440. taken by the Engliſh on abo-liſhing the Pope's authority, ii. 135. [of allegiance] impoſed by K. JAMES I, 407, remark on it, 408. appointed by the bp. of Wincheſter to promote informations againſt the Puritans, 558. annexed to the Scots confeſſion of faith by the Scots, 576. enjoined by the convocation, 601. impoſed by the rump, iii. 57. enjoined by the corporation act, 77.
OATHS in force againſt catholicks ſuſpended, 334, of allegiance altered, iii. 346. [the coronation] brought back to its ancient form, 357. a conference between the two houſes concerning thoſe of allegiance and ſupremacy, 358. alter'd in Scotland, 360. Ireland, 410.
OBDAM, the Dutch admiral, blown up, iii. 94.
OCCAM [William] a diſciples of Duns Scotus, i. 543, or 540.
OCCASIONAL conformity, a bill to prevent it paſſes the houſe of commons, iii. 572. ſubſtance of it, n. [2.] ib. debates thereon, in a conference with the lords, 576. the bill loſt, ib. arguments on both ſides, n. [1.] 577. again paſs'd by the commons, but rejected by the lords, 598. again rejected by the lords, 626. paſſes with a new title, 729.
OCTA, K. of Kent, i. 39.
ODO, archbp. of Canterbury, his conſtitutions, i. 137. his piety and modeſty, 138.
ODO, bp. of Bayeux, brother of the conqueror, left regent, i. 200. aſpires to the papal dignity, 211. deprived of his eſtates, ib. releaſed from priſon, 212. conſpires againſt William Rufus, 214.
OFFA, K. of Mercia, his exploits and character, i. 61.
OFFA, K. of Eſſex, i. 65.
OLAUS, K. of Norway, invades England with Sweno, i. 140. a remark on his name, ib. n. [5.] embraces Chriſtianity, 141. diveſted of his kingdom, and ſlain, 150.
OLDCASTLE [John] lord Cobham, impriſon'd and condemn'd as a Lollard, i. 572, or 569. eſcapes, ib. accuſed of conſpiracy againſt the King, 574, or 571. burnt alive, 592, or 589.
OLIVAREZ [count] letter to the K. of Spain on the Infanta's marriage with Pr. Charles, ii. 466.
OMERS St. [ſcholars of] their depoſitions at the trials of the 5 Jeſuits, iii. 190.
O NEAL [Shan] rebels, ii. 291.
ONSLOW [ſir Richard] choſen ſpeaker of the houſe of commons, iii. 693.
OPDAM [monſ.] inveſts Venlo, iii. 557. cut off from his troops, at the begining of the battle of Eckeren, 592. ſome reflections on his caſe, n. 2. b.
OPULENCE of England, an aſtoniſhing inſtance of it, iii. n. 2. 501.
ORANGE [Pr. of, William I] his affairs, ii. 325, &c.
ORANGE [Pr. of] ſee William III.
ORANGE [Naſſau, Pr. of] bravery at the battle of Oudenard, iii. 688.
ORANGE [principality of] taken from its lawful ſovereign, iii. 336.
ORDEAL, meaning of the word, i. 136. Q. Emma ſuffers it, 156. the two kinds of it, 190.
ORDOVICES, a people who inhabited part of Wales, i. 7.
ORFORD, [e. of] an addreſs of the houſe of commons chiefly level'd againſt him, iii. n. 1. 508. impeach'd on account of the partition treaty, 525. articles againſt him, 526. his anſwer to them, ib. acquitted, 529.
ORIA [Andrea D'] his exploits, ii. 98, &c.
ORLEANS [F.] partial account of the battle of the Boyne, iii. n. 1. 389. and of the battle of Aghrim, n. 3. 406.
ORLEANS [Ann of] ducheſs of Savoy's proteſt againſt the Proteſtant ſucceſſion, not regarded, iii. 522. [d. of] takes Tortoſa, Denia and Alicant, 693. renounces his pretenſions on Spain, 739.
ORLEANS faction, makes a treaty with K. HENRY IV, i. 568, or 565.
ORLEANS [d. of] offers to mediate a peace between France and England, i. 638. debates concerning his releaſe, 647, 648.
ORLEANS [maid of] ſee Joan of Arc.
ORLETON [Adam] bp. of Hereford, impeach'd of high-treaſon, for joining the e. of Lancaſter, i. 449. receives the reſignation of K. EDWARD II, 455. ſends two equivocal Latin verſes, which occaſion the murder of the depoſed King, 459. n. 1.
ORMOND [m. of] empowered to treat with the Iriſh rebels, ii. 821. ſucceſsful in Ireland, iii. 11. defeated, ib. leaves Ireland, 29.
ORMOND [James Butler d. of] made an Engliſh peer, iii. 215. accompanies K. WILLIAM to Ireland, 386. takes Kilkenny, and entertains K. WILLIAM there in his own caſtle, 392. wounded and made priſoner at the battle of Landen, n. 4. 434. made commander in chief of all her Majeſty's forces on board the fleet, 545. commands the land forces, in the unſucceſsful expedition to Cadiz, 565. and in the more ſucceſsful attempt at Vigo, 567. propoſes to winter at Vigo, but is oppoſed by ſir George Rooke, 569. has the thanks of both houſes of parliament, 573. complains of ſir George Rooke's conduct, n. 1. ib. appointed lord-lieutenant of Ireland, 581, 608. commander in chief of her Majeſty's forces, 731. refuſes to conſent to a battle, 733. covers the ſiege of Queſnoy, ib. propoſes a ceſſation of arms, 737. the Imperialiſts and Auxiliaries leave him, ib. publiſhes a ſuſpenſion of arms, and retires to Ghent, ib. detaches forces to ſtrengthen the gariſon of Dunkirk, 738.
ORRERY [e. of] appointed envoy extraordinary to the States-general, and the council of ſtate of the Spaniſh Netherlands, iii. 717.
OSBALD, K. of Northumberland, i. 59.
OSBERT, K. of Northumberland, commits a rape, i. 105. is defeated and ſlain, 106.
OSBORNE [ſir Thomas] made lord high treaſurer and e. of Danby, iii. 138. conduct examin'd by the commons, 146. communicates the Popiſh plot to the council and commons, 166. ruin ſought, 175. but prevented by the King, 176. proceedings againſt him, 182—185. pleads the K's. pardon, 185. remains in the Tower, ib. judgment demanded againſt him, on which the houſes differ, 187. diſcharged from the Tower, 224. ſecures York for the Pr. of Orange, 288. ſends over to Holland, and propoſes to the Princeſs of Orange to reign alone, which ſhe refuſes., 309.
OSRED I, K. of Northumberland, i. 57.
OSRED II, K. of Northumberland, i. 58.
OSRICK, K. of Deira, i. 55.
OSRICK, K. of Northumberland, i. 58.
OSTORIUS SCAPULA, a Roman governor in Britain, i. 7.
OSTEND beſieg'd and taken, iii. 653. ſome obſervations on the taking of this place, n. 1. ib.
OSULPH, K. of Northumberland, i. 58.
OSWALD, K. of Northumberland, his character, i. 55. death, ib.
OSWALD, archbp. of York, a friend of Dunſtan, dies, i. 140.
OSWYN, K. of Deira, i. 56.
OSWY, K. of Bernicia, i. 56. obtains the kingdom of Northumberland, ib. calls a council to end the diſpute about Eaſter, 85.
OTHER-houſe ſet up by Cromwell, iii. 37.
OTHO [legate from the Pope] arrives in England, i. 354. his exactions, 356. refuſed entrance into Scotland, ib. but at laſt obtains it, ib. refuſed a ſupply by the clergy, whom he finds means to divide, 357.
OVATION, what, i. 6. n. 2.
OUDENARDE ſubmits to K. CHARLES III, iii. 652. battle of, 686. the allies gain the victory, but night puts an end to the ſlaughter, 688.
OVERBURY [ſir Thomas] oppoſes the counteſs of Eſſex's divorce, ii. 419. ſent to the Tower, and death reſolved on, 420. poiſon by Carr's means, 421.
OWEN [ſir John] condemn'd by the high court of juſtice to loſe his head, iii. 5. ſaying on that occaſion, ib. n. 6.

OWLERS and SMUGGLERS punish'd, iii. 500.
OXFORD [univerſity of] founded by Alfred, i. 113. ſend K. CHARLES their plate, ii. 787.
OXFORD [parliament of] ingages K. HENRY III, to conſent to a reformation in the government, i. 369.
OXFORD [parliament of] ſummoned by K. CHARLES I, their proceedings, ii. 834, 835, 836.
OXFORD [parliament of] ſummoned by K. CHARLES II, iii. 206. meet, and reſume the excluſion bill, 209. diſſolv'd, 210.
OXFORD decree, in behalf of arbitrary power, iii. 221.
OXFORD [e. of, Robert de Vere] a favorite of RICHARD II, i. 515. made d. of Ireland, 518. repudiates his wife, couſin to the King, and marries a maid of honour, 520, marches to relieve the King, and is defeated, 521. flies to Holland, ib. dies at Louvain, and buried in England with great Pomp, 524.
OXFORD [John de Vere, e. of] beheaded, i. 688.
OXFORD [John de Vere, e. of] impriſon'd at Hammes, i. 713. eſcapes to the e. of Richmond, 747. commands the firſt line at the battle of Boſworth, 750. made governor of the Tower, 756.
OXFORD [biſhop of] takes the oaths, and ſubſcribes the declaration, iii. n. 1. 385. falſe rumours of a deſign to poiſon K. WILLIAM there, n. 2. 463.

P

PAGET [ſir William] ſecretary of ſtate, his Character, ii. 195. ſent embaſſador to the Emperor, 210. created a baron, 214. embaſſador in a treaty with France, ib. apprehended, 217. fined, and degraded from the order of the garter, 219.
PAGET [Thomas, lord] conſpires againſt Q. ELIZABETH, ii. 336.
PALAMOS bombarded, iii. 458.
PALATINATE [affairs of the] ii. 439, &c. [Upper] loſt by the Elector, ib.
PALATINE [Elector] ſee Frederick.
PALATINES [poor] come to England, iii. 706.
PALLESTINE, ſee Jeruſalem.
PALMER [ſir Thomas] his depoſition againſt the d. of Somerſet and others, ii. 217. executed for oppoſing Q. MARY, 228.
PAMPHLET call'd K. WILLIAM and Q. MARY conquerors, cenſured, iii. 428. a blaſphemous one burnt, 437. ſeveral burnt, 708.
PANDULPHUS [legate from Pope Innocent III,] offers K. JOHN the Pope's Protection, i. 310. receives his crown, which he reſtores in five days, 311. orders K. PHILIP to diſarm, ib. lays down his legation, and is made bp. of Norwich, 340.
PAPERS [treaſonable] found on lord Preſton, iii. n. 1. 402.
PAPISTS and Proteſtants executed at the ſame time, ii. 166.
PAPISTS, their diſpoſition at the death of EDWARD VI, ii. 224. expoſe themſelves to Q. ELIZABETH's ſeverity, 333. preſent petition to K. JAMES I, but receive no ſatisfaction, 392. encouraged by K. JAMES, 411. their increaſe complain'd of by the parliament, 423. incouraged by K. CHARLES, 601. proceedings of the commons againſt them, 658. iii. 134, 141. proclamations againſt them, ii. 749. iii. 87, 99, 108, 169, 179. order'd to provide arms, ii. 791. openly profeſs their religion, iii. 254. put into poſts, 255, 257. their intereſt ſinks, 289. a bill for the diſcovery of them, 351. bills againſt them, 355. reſolutions againſt them, 372.
PARISHES, an account of their origin and diſtinction, i. 173.
PARE [Ambroſe] cures an extraordinary wound in the d. d'Aumale's head, ii. 183.
PARISIANS deſire an accommodation with HENRY V, i. 597, or 588.
PARLIAMENT [of K. HENRY III.] require of the K. the obſervation of the Charters, i. 341. neglect a demand of the Pope's, 342. complain to the King, 352. grant a ſubſidy on conditions, 353. refuſe the K. mony, and reproach him ſeverely, 359. grant a ſubſidy on the condition of his obſerving the charters, 371. called and diſſolved to no purpoſe, 375. refuſe mony to the K. 377. [of Oxford] bring K. HENRY to their terms, 379. [conſiſting of four Kts. for every county] inſtituted, 386. [conſiſting of two kts. for every county, and two deputies for every town.] ſummoned to ſeek means for the releaſe of Pr. Edward, 388. called by Q. ISABELLA, depoſe K. EDWARD II, 454. chuſe regents in the minority of EDWARD III, and revoke the ſentences of the former reign, 457. conſulted by the King, 459. ſtop the encroachments of the Pope, 492. affronted by K. RICHARD II, 519. [corrupt] choſen by RICHARD's influence, 525. repeal an act of indemnity paſſed nine years before, 526. adjourn'd to Shrewsbury, where they proceed in an extraordinary manner, ib. [firſt of K. HENRY IV,] examine the proceedings of the former parliament, and repeal all its acts, 545, or 544. reſtrain the papal and regal power, and aſcertain caſes of high-treaſon, 546, or 544. call RICHARD's favorites to account, ib. debate concerning K. RICHARD, ib. paſs ſeveral Statutes on church affairs, 553, or 552. [illiterate] ſummon'd by K. HENRY IV, 560, or 557. [of HENRY VIII.] confirm whatever the King injoins, ii. 165. [at the death of Q. MARY] declare for Q. ELIZABETH, 250, 251. confirm the ſentence againſt MARY Q. of Scots, and petition to have it executed, 352. adviſe K. JAMES to break the treaty of marriage with Spain, 479. preſent a petition againſt recuſants, 480. and a liſt of Papiſt in poſts, 481. petition K. CHARLES I, 492, 493, 535, [of 1640] diſpoſition of it, 641, 642. debate on the biſhops right to ſit with them, 652, its aim, 678. the two houſes differ, 682, 721. appoint committees to take care of affairs, 683. deſire a guard of the e. of Eſſex, ib. deſign, 685. vote againſt O Neal, 707, petitions, &c. to K. CHARLES, 707, 728, 729, 730, 732, 739, 743, 749. 754—762, 772, 783, 785, 786, 827. proceedings concerning the militia, 726—747 on his Majeſty's withdrawing himſelf from them, 749—784. take up mony upon loan, 782. procedure after the King had ſet up his ſtandard till the end of the war, 784—864. demand a peace, but deſire it not, 800. hang one of the King's meſſengers, 833. exclude their members from places, 859. diſpute with the army, 875—904. in great perplexity, 884. forbid all communication with the King, 900. intereſts and views, 903. unite with the army, 904. treat with the King, 915—928. petition'd againſt, 920, 921. an hundred and forty one members excluded, conſiſt all of Independents, 929. proceedings after beheading the King, and excluding the houſe of lords, till diſſolved by Cromwell, iii. 4—25. Barebone's parliament, 26, 27. Cromwell's parliament queſtion his authority, 31. long parliament reſtored, and called the Rump, 47. diſſolved by the army, 53. reſtored again, 56. diſſolve themſelves, after having abrogated their laws againſt monarchy, 61. the healing parliament meets, 62. confirm'd by K. CHARLES, 66. paſs an act of indemnity, 67. other acts, ib. 68, 69. diſſolved, 70. the penſionary parliament, 74, &c. addreſſes the King, 86. refuſes to confirm liberty of conſcience, 335. K. JAMES's in Ireland, their proceedings, 367. a prorogation for two days only, 379. K. JAMES's in Ireland declared rebellious and unlawful, 382. [convention] in England diſſolved, ib. eſſence of it call'd in queſtion at the death of Q. MARY, 446. of Scotland, ſigns the aſſociation, 478. of Ireland does the ſame, 479. of Scotland, votes it ſelf a legal parliament, 553. the firſt of Great Britain meets, 678. proceedings about the affairs of Spain, 683.
PARLIAMENT [remarkable acts of] for reſtraining perſons in the diſpoſal of their eſtates [mortmain act] i. 407. for inquiring into the titles of crown tenants [ſtatute of Quo Warranto] 408. againſt the court of Rome, 437. againſt proviſors, 475, 523, 553 or 552. againſt foreign incumbents, 511. againſt extending the regal power, and for aſcertaining caſes of high-treaſon, 546, or 544. to over-rule all pleas of conſtraint, ib. againſt Hereticks, 554 or 552. for ſecuring the freedom of elections, 563 or 560. to exclude females from the crown, ib. againſt the Lollards, 577 or 573. all thoſe of the houſe of York repeal'd, 688. in favor of the reigning King, 791. againſt all appeals to Rome, ii. 129. to take from the clergy the cognizance of Hereſy, 133. to aboliſh the Papal authority, 134. [ſeveral] on occaſion of the rupture with Rome, 136. for ſuppreſſing of monaſteries, 143. for aboliſhing diverſity of opinions, [bloody ſtatute] 159. for inhancing the regal power, ib. allowing the bible in private houſes, 173. to limit the juriſdiction of eccleſiaſtical courts, 179. to abridge the regal power, and repeal the bloody ſtatute, 201. that all ſhould enjoy benefit of clergy, ib. againſt vagabonds, 202. for the confronting of witneſſes, 218. in favor of Eccleſiaſticks, 231. to confirm Q. MARY's rights on her marriage to Philip of Spain, 237. to reſtore the papal authority, 238. to revive the act againſt Heretics, 239. ſeveral, to reſtore the reformation, 254. to maintain Q. ELIZABETH's title, 315. againſt the Papiſts, 333, 340. againſt MARY Q. of Scots, 340. againſt the Nonconformiſts, 367. to confirm K. JAMES's title, 401. to aboliſh the ſtar-chamber court, 647. for a triennial parliament, ib. againſt ſhip-mony, ib. to prohibit proclaiming K. CHARLES II, iii. 4. to aboliſh the houſe of peers, and monarchy, ib. ſeveral relating to religion and the government, by the penſionary parliament, 77—80, 96.
PARKER [col. John] eſcapes out of the Tower, iii. 443. comes to Englaand, 494. a proclamation iſſued to apprehend him, ib.
PARKER [Samuel] bp. of Oxford, made privy-counſellor to K. JAMES II, iii. 254.
PARRY [William] conſpires againſt Q. ELIZABETH, ii. 340. executed, ib.
PARTIES [in France] See the reigns of HENRY IV, and HENRY V. [in the court of EDWARD V] i. 728.
PARTITION [firſt treaty of] propos'd to K. WILLIAM at Loo, iii. 504. conditions of it, n. 3. ib. concluſion and articles of it, 505. authors differ about the time of ſigning it, n. 1. ib. [ſecond treaty of] concluded, 517. conſequences of it, 520.
PARTRIDGE [ſir Miles] executed for a pretended conſpiracy, ii. 218.
PASCHASIUS RADBERT aſſerts the bread and wine in the Euchariſt to be the real body and blood of Chriſt, i. 253.
PASSIVE-OBEDIENCE every where preached up, iii. 214. remark on that doctrine, ib.
PATAY [battle of] i. 630.
PATERN, St. i. 47.
PATRICK, St. i. 47.
PATRICK [dr.] made biſhop of Chicheſter, iii. 378.
PAUL, a notary, commands in Britain, i. 17. his tyranny and extortions, ib.
PAUL [St.] the probability of his having preached in Britain, i. 26.
PAUL's [St. cathedral of] the choir firſt open'd for divine ſervice, iii. 495.
PAULINUS, biſhop of the Northumbrians, converts K. EDWIN, i. 83. his great ſucceſs, ib.
PAWLET [William, lord St. John] made keeper of the great ſeal, ii. 197. marquis of Wincheſter, 216.
PAY, given by EDWARD III, to his officers and ſoldiers in Normandy, i. 479, n. 7.
PEARSON [Henry] author of a ſham-plot, iii. 425.
PECKHAM [John] his character, i. 542, or 540

PEDA, ſon of the King of Mercia, imbraces Chriſtianity, i. 90.
PEERS, meaning of the word, i. 190, 325, n. 11. of trial by Peers, ib. [twelve] petition K. CHARLES, ii. 604.
PELAGIANISM introduced in Britain, i. 27.
PELHAM [ſir Thomas] created baron of Laughton, iii. 667.
PEMBROKE [Richard de Clare, e. of] marries the daughter of Dermoth, K. of Leinſter, i. 273. ſeizes his country, ib.
PEMBROKE [William Marſhal, e. of] ſupports K. HENRY III, i. 335. named Protector, 336. writes to the barons, ib. conſents to a peace with Lewis of France, 338. ſupports the Pope's legate againſt the clergy, 339. gives new orders for obſerving the charters, ib. dies, ib.
PEMBROKE [Richard Marſhal, e. of] withdraws into Wales, i. 350. ſurprizes the King's army, ib. taken priſoner, but inſtantly releaſed, 351. ſucceſsful, ib. treacherouſly kill'd in Ireland, ib.
PEMBROKE [Gilbert Marſhal, e. of] diſgraced without cauſe, i. 355. dies, 358.
PEMBROKE [Walter Marſhal, e. of] ſucceeds Gilbert as earl-marſhal, i. 358. dies, and the family of the Marſhals is extinct, 363.
PEMBROKE [e. of] beaten in a ſea-fight by the Spaniards, i. 496.
PEMBROKE [William Herbert, e. of] defeated by mutineers, and beheaded at Banbury, i. 699.
PEMBROKE [Jaſper Tudor, e. of] retires with his nephew the e. of Richmond out of EDWARD IV's way, i. 712.
PEMBROKE [William Herbert, e. of] trapans ſir Thomas Wyat in the ſtreets of London, ii. 234.
PEMBROKE [the late e. of] made plenipotentiary for a treaty of peace, iii. 489. lord-preſident of the council, 510. firſt commiſſioner of the admiralty, 531. lord-high admiral of England and Ireland, 537. is diſmiſs'd from that poſt, 551. refuſes a conſiderable penſion, ib. made a ſecond time lord-preſident of the council, 570. lord-lieutenant of Ireland, 672. a ſecond time lord-high admiral, 693. diſmiſs'd from that office, and allow'd a penſion, 706.
PENN, [vice-admiral] takes Jamaica, iii. 33.
PENAL-LAWS and teſt, act concerning them, iii. 137. See alſo 142, 146, 148.
PENDA, K. of Mercia, i. 60.
PENDERGRASS firſt diſcoverer of the aſſaſſination-plot, iii. 470.
PENRUDDOCK [John] conſpires againſt Cromwell, iii. 1.
PENSIONARY parliament, iii. 74, &c.
PEOPLE [the common] complain againſt the nobles, and why, ii. 207. diſpoſition of them at the death of EDWARD VI, 224. demand the Queen of Scots execution, 356. diſcontented about religion, 401. diſſatisfied with K. JAMES, 411, 429, 436. expreſs great joy at breaking off the match with Spain, 479. diſcontented at K. CHARLES, 552. call for juſtice on the e. of Strafford, 664. riſe againſt the biſhops, 711.
PERCHE [count du] raiſes the ſiege of Mount Sorrel, i. 337. defeated, ib.
PERCY [Henry Hotſpur] ſon of the e. of Northumberland, killed at the battle of Shrewſbury, i. 558 or 556.
PERCY [Thomas] concerned in the Powder-plot, ii. 404.
PERCY, brother to the e. of Northumberland, his letter on the plot to ſeduce the army, ii. 667.
PERCY, See Northumberland, e. of.
PERHAPS, the ſtreſs that was laid upon that word in the Pope's diſpenſation for Prince Henry's marriage, i. 803.
PERINNIS, favorite of Commodus, given up to the ſoldiers, i. 15.
PERKIN WARBECK, his ſtory, i. 784. inſtructed by the ducheſs of Burgundy to perſonate Richard d. of York, ib. goes to Portugal and France, 785. behaves prudently, ib. ſecrets betray'd, 786, 787. miſcarries in an attempt on the Kentiſh coaſt, 790. goes to Ireland and Scotland, 791. marries a relation of the Scots King, ib. diſcountenanced by the Engliſh, 793. ſent to Ireland by the King of Scots, 795. comes and heads the rebels in Cornwal, takes the title of King, and beſieges Exeter, 796. takes ſanctuary, ib. ſurrenders, and confin'd in the Tower, 797. eſcapes, and pardoned, 798. plots with the e. of Warwick, diſcovered, and hang'd, ib.
PERKINS [ſir William] one of the conſpirators, tried and condemn'd, iii. 474. examin'd before a commitee of the commons, ib. execution and confeſſion, ib.
PERTINAX, governor of Britain, choſen Emperor, i. 15.
PETER DE PONTEFRACT [the hermit] propheſies that K. JOHN ſhould be deprived of his crown, i. 309. hang'd by the King's order, 311.
PETER the Cruel, K. of Caſtils, See Caſtile.
PETER and LAURENCE, aſſiſtants of Auguſtin in the converſion of the Saxons, 78. their meſſage to the Pope, ib.
PETRE [ſir William] ſecretary of ſtate, his character, ii. 195.
PETRE [Father] received in K. JAMES II's council, iii. 262. led in by the King, 341.
PETER ALEXOWITZ, Czar of Muſcovy [or Ruſſia] comes to England, iii. 498. is magnificently entertain'd, and has ſeveral private conferences with the King, Prince, and Princeſs, ib. enters into a confederacy againſt CHARLES XII, K. of Sweden, 532.
PETERBOROUGH [e. of] appointed admiral of the fleet, jointly with ſir Cloudeſly Shovel, iii. 633. they carry K. CHARLES III to Spain, ib. publiſhes a manifeſto, 634. bravery at the attack of Montjuy, ib. ſtays with K. CHARLES in Spain, ib. relieves Valencia, and enters that capital in triumph, 640. his conduct examined in the houſe of lords, 683. ſent to Vienna to concert matters with that court, 717.
PETILIUS CEREALIS, a Roman governor in Britain, i. 11.
PETITION of right, project of it, ii. 528. progreſs in the two houſes, ib. 532. recited, 532, 533. of the citizens of London againſt ſhip-mony, 563. of the officers and ſoldiers of the army to the King and parliament, 669. four, preſented to the lords by Pym, 723. ſeveral, againſt K. CHARLES, 926, 930. of the biſhops declared a libel, iii. 337. [Kentiſh] voted ſcandalous, inſolent and ſeditious, 529. farther reſolutions of the commons thereupon, 537.
PETITIONERS [the Kentiſh] impriſoned, iii. 529. one of them commited to Newgate, 537. makes his ſubmiſſion, 574.
PETROCK, i. 47.
PETRONIUS. a Roman governor in Britain, i. 11.
PETTECUM [monſ.] makes new offers in the name of France, iii. 704. goes to France for new inſtructions, ib. returns, but brings nothing ſatisfactory, ib. anſwer to the marquis de Torcy's farther propoſals, 710.
PHILIP DE VALOIS, See France.
PHILIP [Prince of Spain] contracted to Q. MARY I, ii. 233. arrives in England with great treaſure, and obtains pardon for ſome out of favor, 237. diſpleaſes the Engliſh, 238. grows weary of the Queen, and leaves England, 242. [II K. of Spain] brings Q. MARY to a rupture with France, 245. takes a tour into England, 248. adviſes the Queen to ſecure Calais, which ſhe neglects, 247. offers marriage to Q. ELIZABETH, which ſhe rejects, 251. receives ELIZABETH's embaſſadors very coldly, and returns the garter which ſhe had ſent, 266. coldneſs increaſes, 270. gets poſſeſſion of Portugal, 330. degraded from his ſovereinty of the Netherlands, 332. prepares to invade England, and ſtrives to amuſe ELIZABETH, 359. grounds of his title to England, ib. patient at the news of his fleet's defeat, 362. ſends another fleet, which is diſperſed by a tempeſt, 374. another againſt Ireland, ib. death and character, 377.
PHILIP III, K. of Spain, in treaty with K. JAMES about the marriage of the Prince of Wales, ii. 429—450. raiſes troops againſt the King's ſon-in-law during the negociation, 440.
PHILIP IV, K. of Spain, his letter to count Olivarez on the marriage, ii. 466. ſigns the marriage articles, 470. ſtops the preparations, 476.
PHILIP V, K. of Spain, abandons Madrid, iii. 656. loſes the battle of Almanara, and retires towards Saragoſſa, 713. is again defeated, and oblig'd to leave Madrid a ſecond time, ib. renounces his claim to the crown of France, 739.
PHILIPPA of Haynault, contracted to Prince Edward, afterwards EDWARD III, i. 453. married, 459. dies, 495.
PHILIPS [ſir Robert] his ſpeech concerning grievances, ii. 523.
PHILIPS [Father] the Queen's confeſſor, accuſed, ii. 660.
PICCIGHITONE reduced by the d. of Savoy, iii. 661.
PICKERING [Thomas] a conſpirator againſt K. CHARLES II, tried and condemned, iii. 173, 174. executed, 187.
PICTS, their arrival in Britain, i. introd. xii. their union with the Scots, and ſeparation from them, ib. they make an alliance with the Britons, ib. aſſiſt the Romans in driving out the Scots, i. 18. whom they afterwards recal, 19.
PIERCE [Alice] beloved by K. EDWARD III, i. 497. ſent from court, and recalled, 498. ſtrips the King at his death, 499.
PIETY and Learning, [men eminent for] See ſtate of the church.
PILKINGTON [Thomas] fined 100,000 l. for ſpeaking againſt the d. of York, iii. 215.
PINKEY-battle, ii. 200.
PIRATES [Daniſh] ſcour the Engliſh ſeas, i. 157. [French] kill the e. of Kent, 565 or 562. put to the ſword, ib.
PLACE-MEN, debates concerning them, iii. 381. the grand argument in their favor, n. 2, ib.
PLAGUE, a great one in London, i. 564 or 561. the laſt great one, iii. 95.
PLAGUE at Dantzig, and other parts of the Baltick, iii. 706.
PLANTAGENETS, a brief recapitulation of their hiſtory, i. 752.
PLASSENDAEL [fort] taken by the allies, iii. 652.
PLAUTIUS, general of the Romans againſt the Britons, reduces part of Britain for Claudius, i. 6, 7.
PLAY-HOUSES, order for their regulation, iii. 605.
PLEGMUNDUS, the Mercian, favored by Alfred, i. 114. archbiſhop of Canterbury, 138.
PLICA, a Poliſh diſtemper, what, ii. 216, n. 2.
PLOT, remarks on the word, iii. 161.
PLOTS, againſt William the Conquer, i. 208. pretended one againſt Prince Henry, 245. a great one againſt K. HENRY II, of which his wife and children are the authors, 274. againſt K. HENRY III, 355. of K. RICHARD II to make himſelf abſolute, 520. of the nobility againſt RICHARD II, 528, 529, or *526, 527. againſt K. HENRY IV, in which ſome of the chief nobility are concerned, 550 or 549. another, form'd by the archbiſhop of York, 561 or 558. againſt K. HENRY V diſcovered, and the conſpirators puniſhed, 580 or *572. againſt Q. ELIZABETH, ii. 337, 338, 340, 346, 369, 377. to blow up King and parliament, 404, 405. to make the army declare for the King, 664. report concerning it, 666. Scotiſh, 683. againſt the army, 882. againſt Cromwell, 28, 31, 34, 49. Popiſh-plot againſt King CHARLES II, 161—184. conſpirators apprehended apprehended, 165, 167. Presbyterian or Meal-tub-plot, 194, 195, &c. more of the Popiſh-plot, 189—193. 202, 203. Rye-houſe-plot, 216, &c. a ſham one, 425. detected, and the authors puniſh'd, 426. [Lancaſhire] voted real by both houſes, 447. to invade England, and aſſaſſinate the King, commonly call'd the aſſaſſination-plot, 469. ſeveral methods propos'd to execute it, 470. firſt diſcovery of it, ib. [Scotiſh] made known to the parliament, 598. perſons taken up on that account, 599. examin'd into by a commitee of the lords, ib. differences between the two houſes on that account, ib. ſeveral repreſentations to the Queen on that account, 601.

PLUNKET [Oliver] titular primate of Ireland, executed, iii. 212.

POCKLINGTON [dr.] his books ordered to be burned, ii. 656.

POIDRAS, an impoſter, who pretended to be EDWARD II, hang'd, i. 445.

POITIERS [battle of] i. 483, 484. names of thoſe who moſt diſtinguiſh'd themſelves in it, 484, n. 2.

POL [conſtable de St.] deceives EDWARD IV and the duke of Burgundy, i. 717. beheaded, 719.

POLE [Michael de la] favorite of K. RICHARD II, i. 515. made e. of Suffolk, and lord chancellor, 518. hinders a reconciliation between the King and the lords, 521.

POLE [Reginald] an account of him, ii. 149. quarrels with K. HENRY VIII, and made a cardinal, 150. incourages libels againſt the King, 155. raiſes new troubles to Henry, 158. correſpondents executed, ib. loſes the papacy by a mere nicety, 215. ſent for to England as legate, but detain'd in Germany, 231, 232. writes to Q. MARY different advice from what Gardiner gives, 232. arrival in England, and ſpeech to the parliament, 238. abſolves the parliament, ib. adviſes to moderate meaſures, but in vain, 240. made archbiſhop of Canterbury, 244. did not haſten Cranmer's death, ib. recalled by the Pope, and reſtored, 246. death and character, 249.

POLL-TAX in the reign of RICHARD III, which cauſes a rebellion, i. 511, 512. granted King WILLIAM, iii. 368. granted quarterly, 415. none excuſed but thoſe who receiv'd alms, 487.

PONTI [monſ.] eſcapes from vice-admiral Nevil with a rich booty, iii. 493. eſcapes likewiſe from captain Norris, 494. and a third time from captain Harlow, ib. indeavors in vain to take Gibraltar, 633.

PONTHIEU [count of] ſeizes Harold, i. 161.

PONTIGNI [abbot of] turns Becket out of his convent, i. 267.

POOR [Richard] biſhop of Durham, his character, i. 403.

POPE refuſes to ſend the pall to Lanfrank, and reaſons of that refuſal, i. 246. threatens HENRY II on Becket's account, 265. [Innocent III] letter to K. JOHN, 306. interdicts the kingdom, 307. excommunicates the King, 308. abſolves the Engliſh from their oath of allegiance, 309. commits the depoſing of K. JOHN to the King of France, ib. threatens and excommunicates the barons, 317. declares for K. HENRY III, 336. [Gregory IX] nominates 300 Italians to fill the vacant benefices, 357. ſimoniacal propoſition to the clergy of England, 358. [Innocent IV] excommunicates the Emperor, 360. oppreſſes the Engliſh clergy, 361. appropriates to himſelf the effects of all inteſtate eccleſiaſtics, 363. grants a trifling prerogative to the King, 364. forbids the Croiſes to proceed without K. HENRY III, and ſuffers the K. of France to be taken by the Croiſes, 365. offers the kingdom of Sicily to Prince RICHARD, 370. offers the ſame to K. HENRY III, who refuſes it for himſelf, but accepts it for Edmund his ſecond ſon, 372, 373. extorts mony from K. HENRY, 373. reduces the kingdom of Naples, ib. duped by Mainfroi, ib. [Alexander IV] inveſts Prince Edmund in the two Sicilies, 374. ſtrange method to get mony from the clergy, 376. ſends ſeveral nuntio's with bulls to extort mony, 375—378. [Urban IV] threatens K. HENRY III, 383. releaſes Baliol from his oath to K. EDWARD I, 426. [Clement V] diſpenſes with K. EDWARD I's obſervance of the great charter, 436. writes a threatning letter to EDWARD III upon his French expedition, 470. exhorts EDWARD to quit his title to France, 471. [Benedict XII] interdicts Flanders, for taking part with the Engliſh, 473. [Urban VI] demands the arrears of the tribute ſettled by K. JOHN, but to no purpoſe, 492. publiſhes a Croiſade, in which the Engliſh ingage, 515. [Gregory XI] takes information againſt Wickliff, but to no purpoſe, 537, or 539. bull to the archbiſhop concerning Wickliff, of no effect, 540, or 537. [Martin V] indeavors to reconcile the two factions in France, 592 or 583. letter to the archbiſhop of Canterbury againſt the ſtatute of præmunire, 819. [Pius II] congratulates EDWARD IV, 689. [Julius II] ſends K. HENRY VIII a conſecrated roſe, ii. 11. intrigues and wars, 9—25. views, 24. [Leo X] his views, 26. ſends K. HENRY a conſecrated ſword and hat, 35. excites the Chriſtian Princes to a war againſt the Turks, 48, 49, 50. character and diſpoſition, 59. dies, 62. [Clement VII.] elected, 75. ſuppreſſes monaſteries for cardinal Wolſey's uſe, 79. made priſoner at the taking of Rome, 93. eſcapes to Orvieto, after treating for his deliverance, 99. artful behavior concerning K. HENRY's divorce, 103—122. cites K. HENRY to Rome, 127. remarks on his conduct in the divorce affair, 131. annuls Cranmer's ſentence, 132. ſentence againſt K. HENRY, ib. 133 dies, 136. [Paul III] attempts to accomodate matters with HENRY, 147. excommunicates him, 156. [Julius III] gives his cardinal's hat to a mean ſervant, 215, n. 4. [Paul IV] demands the reſtitution of church goods in England, and payment of Peter's-pence, 242. erects Ireland into a kingdom, ib. 243. makes a rupture between France and Spain, 244, 245. recals Pole, but reſtores him, 246. ſpeaks haughtily to the Engliſh embaſſador, 251, n. 4. [Pius IV.] indeavors to gain Q. ELIZABETH, but without ſucceſs, 266. [Gregory XIII] reforms the calendar, 335. [Sixtus V] incourages PHILIP II's intended invaſion of England, and publiſhes a bull againſt Q. ELIZABETH, 360. [Clement VIII] ſends briefs to the Engliſh Papiſts, 380. [Gregory XV] grants a diſpenſation for the marriage of Prince Charles and the Infanta of Spain, 464. [Urban VIII] refuſes to renew the diſpenſation, 474. againſt the marriage with Henrietta-Maria, 484.

POPE has a Nuncio in London, iii. 335. Innocent XI. favors the revolution, 340. Alexander VIII. dies, 335. Innocent XII. elected, ib. ſides with the French, 425. Clement XI. elected, 515. proteſts againſt the d. of Anjou's pretenſions to the crown of Spain, ib.

POPES, See account of ſuch as concerned themſelves moſt with England, chiefly in ſtate of the church. Complain againſt the Engliſh, i 536, or 534. deſign to extend their authority over temporals, 538, or 536.

POPERY voted inconſiſtent with the Engliſh conſtitution, iii. 342.

PORTA, a Saxon general, lands at Portland, i. 37.

PORTOCARRERO [cardinal] eſpouſes the intereſt of France, iii. 505.

PORTER, one of the diſcoverers of the aſſaſſination-plot, iii. 471.

PORTLAND's [e. of] bravery at the battle of Aghrim, iii. 405. refuſes a bribe of 50,000 l. 452. a grant made to him by K. WILLIAM, ſtrenuouſly oppoſed, 468. elected and inſtall'd knight of the garter, 489. greatly accelerates the treaty of Ryſwick, n. 2, 491. ſent embaſſador extraordinary to France, 494. makes a magnificent public entry, 498. more than ordinary honors ſhewn him, n. 1, 502. no embaſſador ever more honored, or leſs ſucceſsful, n. 3, ib. letter to mr. ſecr. Vernon, concerning the firſt treaty of partition, 504. plenipotentiary for concluding the ſecond treaty of partition, 517. ſeverely cenſur'd on that account, 523. and impeach'd, 524. acquited, 529.

PORT-MAHON taken by ſir Edward Whitaker and major-general Stanhope, iii. 692. the Emperor's colors taken down, and the Engliſh put up there, 738.

PORTSMOUTH [ducheſs of, Louiſe de Querouaille] governs K. CHARLES II, iii. 144.

PORTUGAL [JOHN, K. of] ſolicits the aſſiſtance of K. RICHARD II againſt the Caſtilians, and obtains it, i. 518. [kingdom of] taken by the Spaniards, ii. 330.

PORTUGAL embaſſador's brother [don Pantaleon Sa] beheaded, iii. 28.

PORTUGAL [PETER, K. of] comes into the grand alliance, iii. 581. his death, 656. ſucceeded by his ſon, don Juan IV, ib.

PORTUGUESE dilatory in their proceedings, iii. 640. beſiege Badajox, but abandon the ſiege, ib. ſuſpicion of treachery, in their ſtopping ſir John Leake, 654. behave very ill on their own frontiers, 705. take ſeveral ſmall places from the Spaniards, 714. enter into a ſecret negociation with France, 724.

POST-OFFICE, the revenue of it ſettled on the d. of York, ii. 88.

POUSSINEERS, whence the name, iii. n. 4, 534.

POWDER-PLOT, occaſion and hiſtory of it, ii. 404, 405.

POWER [diſpenſing] declared inherent in the crown, iii. 334. declared illegal in parliament, 337. pretended by ſome to be an inſeparable prerogative of the crown, but the opinion rejected, 381.

POYNINGS [ſir Edward] made deputy governor of Ireland, i. 787.

POYNINGS's law, what, i. 788.

PRÆMUNIRE [ſtatute of] of ſervice to the Engliſh, i. 537, or 535. the word explain'd, 554 or 552. remarks on the ſtatute, 821.

PRAGUE [battle of] ii. 441.

PRANCE [Miles] taken up for the murder of ſir Edmund-Bury Godfrey, iii. 176. denies it, and is ſent to Newgate, 177. accuſes ſeveral, ib. retracts, 178. ſubſtance of his depoſition concerning the murder, 179. proſecuted, and ſentenced to be fined, pilloried, and whipp'd, 256. the whipping omited, ib.

PREACHING forbid, without a licence, ii. 255.

PRELIMINARIES [abſtract of] agreed to by the marq. de Torcy, but refuſed to be ſign'd by him, iii. 699. exceptions made to them by France, 700. offer'd by monſ. Meſnager, and communicated to the forein miniſters, 736. occaſion great murmuring, ib. ſix others ſaid to be agreed to by France, ib.

PREROGATIVE ROYAL, high notions of it entertained by K. JAMES I, ii. 411, 428, 431.

PRESBYTERIANS hate biſhop Laud, and why, ii. 553. believe K. CHARLES deſigns to reſtore Popery, and why, 559. publiſh libels againſt Laud, 564. hated by the court, 651. perſecuted, ib. their view, ib repreſentation againſt the biſhops, 653. views in the rupture between King and parliament, 781. ſeparate from the Independents, 875. ſign an ingagement in the King's favor, 884. intereſts and views, 901. get uppermoſt in parliament, 913. obtain a vote for kingly government, ib. their error, 917. not ſuffered to take their ſeats in parliament, iii. 47. inclinable to join the royaliſts, 50. contribute to the King's reſtoration, 55. confer with the biſhops at the Savoy, 72, 73. perſecuted, 76, 96. miniſters quit their livings rather than conform, 181. upon their guard, 133. two elected ſherifs of London, 197. thank K. JAMES for his declaration in favor of liberty of conſcience, 259. unite with the church againſt K. JAMES's proceedings, ceedings, 275. careſs'd, 334. K. WILLIAM and Q. MARY ſuſpected to be ſo, 356.

PRESTON [lord] proceedings in parliament concerning him, iii. 380. is taken going over to France, 402. convicted of high-treaſon, condemn'd, but pardon'd, ib.
PRETENDER born, iii. 267. reflections on his birth, ib. extract from dr. Welwood concerning it, ib. from bp. Burnet, 268, &c. baptized, 280. depoſitions in council concerning his birth, 280, 281. proclaimed K. of England, &c. in France, 533. attainted of high-treaſon, 538.
PRIDEAUX [mr.] gives Jefferies 14,000 l. to ſpare his life, iii 247.
PRIESTS [married] ſynod againſt them, i. 231. [Popiſh] four executed, ii. 330.
PRINCES [Saxon] their titles, i. 176.
PRIOR [mr. Matthew] a witty obſervation of his, iii. n. 2, 502. ſent to France to negociate a treaty of peace, 726.
PRISONERS [French] their negociations with HENRY V, ii. 590 or 581.
PROCLAMATION in favor of the Normans againſt the Engliſh, i. 203. againſt ſending children to forein ſeminaries, ii. 330. againſt the Puritans, 394. againſt the Jeſuits, 414. prohibiting ſubjects to talk of ſtate-affairs, 443, 448. to apprehend the five members, 718. to attend the royal ſtandards, 783. againſt Engliſh who ſerve the Dutch, iii. 335. for continuing all inferior officers, 348. againſt vice and prophaneneſs, 415. againſt ſeditious libellers, 425. for the diſcovery of highway-men, ib. againſt the exportation of corn, 435. for ſtrict diſcipline, 448. for calling in the clipp'd mony, 466. to apprehend the conſpirators, 471. liſt of the conſpirators mention'd in it, n. 1, ib. for apprehending lord Montgomery and ſir John Fenwick, 473. ſundry publiſhed by the lords-juſtices, 479. againſt Papiſts, 508. for a general faſt, 510. at the death of K. WILLIAM to continue all perſons in offices, 541. for recalling Engliſh ſeamen from abroad, 550. for a general faſt, ib. for the recovery of the goods embezzel'd at Port St. Mary's and Vigo, 575. for a free trade with the Spaniſh Netherlands, 663. declaring the lords and commons of the then parliament in England, to be members of the firſt parliament of Great-Britain for England, 671. for holding the firſt parliament of Great Britain, ib. declaring the Prince of Wales, and all his abettors traytors, 684.
PROJECT to aſſaſſinate K. WILLIAM, iii. n. 2, 409.
PROPOSITIONS [nineteen] ſent by the parliament to the K. ii. 772.
PROROGATION, difference between that and an adjournment, iii. 110.
PROTECTIONS [written] declared void, iii. 466.
PROTESTATION taken by the parliament, ii. 665. of twelve biſhops, ib. preſented to his Majeſty, 712.
PROTESTANTS, ſome grants in their favor in Germany, ii. 124. number of them burned in England in Q. MARY's reign, 249, and ib. n. 2. diſunion of them attempted by K. JAMES II, but they unite the more, iii. 259. [French] received favorably by K. JAMES, 262. proclamation for their relief, 361. advantages of inviting them from forein parts, n. 1, 363. intereſt in Ireland reduced to a deſperate condition, 365. to the number of 7,000 drove under the walls of Londonderry, 366. attainted by act of parliament in Ireland, 368. Iriſh clergy, an act for their relief, n 2, 375. [French] pray for relief, but without ſucceſs, 415.
PROVISIONS and PROVISORS, what, i. 475. an act againſt them, ib. the act revived, 523. of ſervice to the Engliſh, 537 or 535. confirmed, 553 or 552.
PRYN [William] proſecuted in the ſtar-chamber, and fined, ii. 561. dies, iii. 114.
PUNISHMENTS, the kinds of them among the Saxons, i. 191.
PURITANS, ſtatute againſt them, ii. 367. preſent a petition to K. JAMES I, who appoints a conference between them and the Epiſcopalians, 393. proclamation againſt them, 394. perſecuted by Bancroft, 394, 410. conſidered as enemies to the K. 422. for the people in their diſputes with the King, 450. increaſe againſt oppoſition, 555. perſecuted by Laud, 558. two ſorts of them, 679. See Presbyterians.
PYERS [Exton] murders King RICHARD II, i. 552.
PYM [John] his ſpeech about grievances, ii. 642, 643, 644. diſcovers a plot to ſeduce the army, 664. ſpeech againſt the prelates, 684. one of the five members, 715. ſpeech to the lords at preſenting four petitions, 722—725. defended by the houſe, 726. dies, 833.

Q

QUAKERS, act againſt them, iii. 79. thank K. JAMES for his declaration in favor of liberty of conſcience, 259. careſs'd, 334. an act allowing their affirmation and declaration, to be accepted inſtead of an oath, 476.
QUEEN, the title, what it ſignifies, i. 175, 176. had no ſhare in the government among the Saxons, 175.
QUEEN Dowager of K. CHARLES II, a regulation concerning her ſervants, iii. 355. leaves England, 416.
QUEENSBERRY [d. of] lord high commiſſioner of Scotland, iii. 518. made third ſecretary of ſtate, and aſſigned Scotland for his province, 698.
QUESNOY beſieged and taken by the allies, iii. 737. retaken by the French, 738.
QUESTIONS ſent by Auſtin the Monk to Pope Gregory, with the anſwer, i. 78.
QUINCY's [the marquis de] partial account of Beachy fight, iii. n. 3, 391. account of a ſecret deſign of general Cohorn, 554. partiality in favor of the d. of Burgundy, n. 1, 557. applauds the conduct of the d. of Marlborough at Hochſtadt, n. 3, 619. account of the battle of Ramellies, n. 1, 650. of the ſurrender of Antwerp, n. 1, 652. reflections on the refuſal of the overtures made by France for a peace, n. 1, 663.
QUOTA of troops to be furniſhed by the ſeveral Princes in the grand alliance, iii. n. 3, 401.
QUO-WARRANTO-WRIT brought againſt the city of London, iii. 216.
——— Writs iſſued by King JAMES II againſt ſeveral corporations, iii. 262.

R

RADBERT PASCHASIUS, broaches the doctrine of tranſubſtantiation, i. 253.
RADULPH, biſhop of Rocheſter, elected archbiſhop of Canterbury, i. 230. death and character, 231.
RAGMAN'S-ROLL, or Ragimund's-roll, what, i. 459, n. 2.
RAGMANS, burnt by K. HENRY IV, i. 549 or 548.
RAGOTZI [Prince] excites the Hungarians to a rebellion, iii. 596. publiſhes a manifeſto, ib.
RALEGH [ſir Walter] his expedition to the Azores, ii. 367. fires the traders at Portreal, 373. condemn'd on the written evidence of a ſingle witneſs, and remains 12 years in the Tower, 392. obtains his liberty, and a new commiſſion, 435. at the inſtance of the Spaniſh embaſſador, executed on his former ſentence, ib.
RAMELLIES [the famous battle of] iii, 648. a deſcription of that place, n. 1, ib. conſequences of that victory, 651. ſtandards and colors taken there hung up in Guildhall, 667.
RAMPART, Adrian's, i. 14. broken down, ib.
RANDOLPH [ſir Thomas] ſent to Scotland to ſolicit for the e. of Morton, but in vain, ii. 321. tries to ſtir up a rebellion there, ib. dies, 365.
RANELAGH [e. of] proceedings againſt him, iii. 575.
RANULPH FLAMBART, prime miniſter to WILLIAM RUFUS, made biſhop of Durham, i. 222. impriſon'd, 224.
RAPPEREES [Iriſh] diſturb the Engliſh in their quarters, iii. 403. commit great cruelties and depredations, ib.
RATCLIFF [ſir Robert] conſpires againſt K. HENRY VII, i. 786. arreſted and executed, 787.
RATISBON ſeized by the Elector of Bavaria, iii. 594. a deſcription of that place, n 5, ib.
READING taken by Eſſex, ii. 808.
READING [Simon] an adherent of K. EDWARD II in his misfortunes, hang'd at Hereford, i. 454.
REBELLION in Scotland ſuppreſs'd, iii. 384.
RECUSANTS [Popiſh] releaſed by K. JAMES, in order to curry favor with the court of Rome, ii. 461. proceeded againſt, 498. commiſſion to compound with them, 541. See Papiſts.
REDOWALD, K. of Eſtanglia, his generoſity to EDWIN, i. 53, 63.
REFORMATION [of Government] agreed to by K. HENRY III, i. 379. articles of it, ib. [of Religion] the neceſſity of it at the time it was made, 817. progreſs of it in Germany, ii. 65, 119. in England, 137, 188. affairs concerning it, 198, 199. conſultation concerning reſtoring it, 252. [of Manners, ſociety for] their rife, iii. 498. reflections on the uſe and abuſe of it, n. 3, ib.
REFORMED, their diſpoſition at the death of K. EDWARD VI, ii. 224. See Proteſtants.
REFORMERS in England, complained of by the clergy, ii. 148. intereſt declines at court, 157. [forein] ſent back, 229.
REGENCY, objections againſt it at the revolution, iii. 345.
REGICIDES, their trial and execution, iii. 68. none of them confeſs their guilt, ib. three more of them executed, 83.
REJOYCINGS on occaſion of the biſhops being acquited, iii. 339.
RELIGION, odd ſtate of it in England under HENRY VIII, ii. 188. ſtate under EDWARD VI, 199. affairs of it, 215. examined into by the commons, 542.
REMONSTRANCE, preſented to the States by the Arminians, ii. 415.
REMONSTRANTS, the Arminians ſo called, ii. 415.
REPRESENTATION of the parliament of Ireland to the Queen, iii. 583.
REVENUE of the crown ſetled, iii. 385. continued to Q. ANN for life, as to K. WILLIAM, 545.
REVOLUTION, reflections on the benefits accruing to Europe thereby, iii. 347.
RHEE-ISLAND, the d. of Buckingham's expedition thither, ii. 520.
RIBAUMONT [Euſtace de] a French knight, fights with K. EDWARD III, i. 481. taken priſoner, and rewarded by EDWARD, ib.
RICH [ſir Richard] his character, ii. 195. made lord Rich, 196. and chancellor, 201. deprived for being Somerſet's friend, 218.
RICHARD [Prince] ſon of HENRY II, born, i. 260. ſent to Paris, 275. indeavors to obſtruct a peace between the K. of France and his father, 276. contracted to Alix of France, ib. ſtirs up commotions in Guienne, and defeats his brother Jeoffery, 278. ſubmits to his father, ib. ſeduced by the French K. 279. complains againſt his father for hindering his marriage, 279, 280. quarrels with the count de Toulouſe, ib. throws himſelf into the French K's protection, and does homage for the Engliſh provinces in France, 280. [I, K. of England] lays aſide thoughts of the marriage which he had ſolicited in his father's time, 281. crown'd d of Normandy, ib. ſets his mother at liberty, ib. uſes his former friends ill, who had ſerved him againſt his father, ib. crowned at London, 282. raiſes money by extraordinary methods, ib. gives largely to his brother, ib. makes an alliance with Scotland, 283. ſets out for the Holy-land, and renews his alliance with the the French King, ib. takes Meſſina, in revenge for his ſiſter's impriſonment, ib. makes a treaty with TANCRED K. of Sicily, 284. quarrels with PHILIP King of France, and refuſes to marry Alix, ib. they agree, ib. takes Cyprus, 285. marries Berenguelle of Navarre, ib. arrives at Acre, and affronts the d. of Auſtria, 287. oppoſes the return of K. PHILIP, ib. puts to death his priſoners of war, ib. obtains a great victory over Saladine, 288. repairs the maritime towns which Saladine had abandoned, ib. eſcapes a great danger, ib. takes the caravan of Babylon, and diſtributes the booty to his army, 289. abandon'd by the other Chriſtian Princes, makes a truce with Saladine, ib. embarks for Europe, ib. ſhipwreck'd near Aquila, enters the ſtates of the d. of Auſtria, and is ſeiz'd, and deliver'd to the Emperor, ib. effects of his impriſonment in England, 290. conducted to the diet of the Empire, ib. juſtifies himſelf againſt the Emperor's accuſations, 291. agrees to pay a ranſom, ib. liberty oppoſed by his brother John and the K. of France, 292. releaſed, ib. reduces his brother's partiſans, ib. crown'd a ſecond time, ib. prepares for a war with France, 293. makes K. PHILIP raiſe the ſiege of Verneuil, ib. pardons his brother, ib. obtains a great victory over the French, 294. wounded at the ſiege of Chaluze by a croſs-bow, ib. dies, and makes John his ſucceſſor, ib. character, 295.

RICHARD [Prince] ſon of EDWARD the Black Prince, made Prince of Wales, i. 498. knight of the garter, 499. [II, King of England, ſurnamed of Bourdeaux] acknowledged by his uncle, on the death of his grandfather, EDWARD III, and crowned, 507. confers ſeveral titles, 508, govern'd by his uncles, ib. obtains a ſubſidy upon hard conditions, ib. govern'd by the e. of Warwick, who was choſen by the parliament, 511. meſſage to Wat Tyler and his rebellious aſſociates, who return an inſolent anſwer, 512. ſends for Tyler, and confers with him in Smithfield, 513. in great danger at Tyler's death, from which he happily frees himſelf, ib. marries Ann of Luxembourg, 514. character of him and his favorites, 515. takes the great ſeal from the chancellor, for refuſing to ſign an exorbitant grant, ib. goes into Scotland, and loſes the opportunity of ſubduing it, 517. refuſes to pardon lord Holland for murder, when his mother interceded, ib. but ſigns the pardon after ſhe was dead for grief of the denial, ib. aſſiſts the K. of Portugal againſt the Caſtilians, 518. confers new honors on his uncles and favorites, ib. gives the K. of Armenia a penſion, who was driven out of his dominions by the Turks, ib. raiſes a great army, and demands mony of the parliament, ib. returns a raſh anſwer to their addreſs againſt the favorites, 519. demands a ſubſidy in a haughty manner, which occaſions a difference, ib. removes his favorites, and takes 14 commiſſioners to aſſiſt him in the government, ib. recals his favorites, who ſtir him up to revenge, ib. 520. communicates his ſcheme of becoming abſolute to the ſheriffs, who refuſe to come into it, 520. deſigns fruſtrated, 521. tries to amuſe the lords who had taken arms, ib. ſcheme diſcovered, ib. reproached by the lords, anſwers with tears, ib. 522. conſents to baniſh his favorites, 522. takes upon him the government, and changes the miniſtry, ib. reconciled to his uncles, 523. gives Guienne to the d. of Lancaſter, ib. expenſive way of living, ib. 524. takes away the charter of London, which he reſtores for mony, 523. buries his Queen, ib. goes to Ireland, and makes ſome progreſs there, 524. returns, and tries to ſuppreſs the Lollards, ib. marries the K. of France's daughter, ib. makes uſe of illegal ways to raiſe mony, ib. gives up Cherbourg and Breſt, at which the people murmur, 525. ſuſpects his uncles, ib. rids himſelf of ſeveral nobles, ib. gets a parliament to his mind, ib. proceeds with much ſeverity, 526. gratifies ſeveral lords to make them eaſy, ib. lives in a deceitful ſecurity, 527 or *525. prevents a duel between the dukes of Hereford and Norfolk, and baniſhes them both, ib. guilty of great oppreſſions, 528 or *526. goes to Ireland, and leaves the d. of York regent, ib. ſucceſsful againſt the Iriſh rebels, ib. detained in Ireland by bad advice, and afterwards by contrary winds, while the d. of Lancaſter lands, and makes great progreſs in England, 529 or *527. arrives in England, but knows not what courſe to take, 530 or *527. withdraws from his army, and retires to Conway Caſtle, ib. propoſes an accommodation, ib. offers to reſign his crown, ib. has an interview with the d. of Lancaſter at Flint, ib. goes with the d. to London, and is confined in the Tower, ib. makes an abſolute reſignation, 531 or *528. articles of accuſation againſt him, 531—534, or 529—532. depoſed, 534 or 532. character, 535 or 533. defended by the biſhop of Carliſle in parliament, 547 or 545. ſtrangely ſentenc'd, 548 or 547. ſent to Pomfract-caſtle, 549 or 548. tragical death, 552 or 550.

RICHARD, ſon of Richard d. of York, created d. of Glouceſter, i. 688. ſaid to murder K. HENRY VI, 712. marches againſt the Scots, and takes Edinburg, 724, 725. diſſimulation, 728. ſpeech to his friends againſt the Queen-mother, 729. letter of conſolation to her, 730. meets young K. EDWARD, confines his friends, and ſeizes his perſon, ib. 731. calls a grand council, in which he is declared protector, 731. gets the d. of York taken from the Queen, 732. lodges the King and the d. in the Tower, 733. publiſhes a report againſt the K's legitimacy, 734. cuts off lord Haſtings for attachment to the K. and attempts to juſtify the action, 735. imploys dr. Shaw to preach in his favor, 736. imploys Buckingham to harangue the Londoners, 737. artfully refuſes the crown when offer'd him, 738. proclaim'd, ib. [III, K. of England] confers ſeveral offices and titles, ib. crown'd, 739. takes meaſures for his ſafety, and reſolves on deſtroying his nephews, ib. ſends Tyrrel to diſpatch them, 740. crown'd again at York, and creates his ſon Prince of Wales, ib. renews an alliance with Caſtile, ib. gets intimations of Buckingham's conſpiracy againſt him, 743. ſummons the d. to court, who refuſes, and declares againſt him, 744. takes and beheads the duke, ib. puts ſeveral conſpirators to death, and gets the e. of Richmond attainted, 745. receives freſh advice of Richmond's deſigns, ib. ſecures thoſe forein powers whom he moſt ſuſpected, 746. indeavors to get Richmond into his hands, who eſcapes, ib. 747. obliges lord Stanley to leave his ſon in hoſtage, 747. reſolves to marry his niece, and prevent Richmond, ib. gets rid of his Q. but cannot prevail on the young Princeſs, 748. lays up his fleet, ib. orders ſir Walter Herbert to oppoſe Richmond, who was landed in Wales, 749. determines to fight the earl, ib. meets him at Boſworth, 750. guilty of an overſight, with regard to lord Stanley, ib. routed and ſlain, ib. 751. character, 751. recapitulation of his family's hiſtory, 752.

RICHARD [Prince] the ſon of King JOHN, made e. of Cornwal, and ſent into Wales, i. 342. anſwers the King haughtily, and makes a league with the lords, 343. made heir to the e. of Pembroke, 346. eſtate ſeiz'd by the King, for which he raiſes a rebellion in Ireland, ib. 347. reſtored, 347. makes remonſtrances to the King, 354. reproaches the King for his ſiſter's marriage with Simon de Montfort, ib. married to Zanchia of Provence, 360. has an interview with the Pope, 365. will accept the crown of Sicily but on certain conditions, 370. elected King of the Romans, 378. refuſes to lend mony to his brother, 375. declares againſt the ſtatutes of Oxford, 381. reconciles the earls of Leiceſter and Glouceſter, 382. takes the part of his brother Henry againſt the barons, 383. taken priſoner at the battle of Lewes, 386. intercedes in the behalf of Simon Montfort, 390. marries again, 393. reconciles Prince Edward and the e. of Glouceſter, ib. dies, 394.

RICHARD [a falſe one] ſet up by the conſpirators againſt HENRY IV, i. 550 or 549.

RICHARD [Prince] the ſon of K. EDWARD IV, d. of York, takes ſanctuary with his mother in Weſtminſter-abby, i. 731. deliver'd up to the archbiſhop of Canterbury by his mother, 733. lodg'd in the Tower, ib. murder'd, 740.

RICHEMONT [count de] created conſtable of France, drives from court Louvet the King's favorite, i. 622, or 613. exploits, ib. &c. leaves the court, 625 or 616. brings freſh troops to the King of France, 630. exploits, 645, &c.

RICHMOND PALACE erected, i. 797.

RIDLEY [Nicolas] made biſhop of London, ii. 215. preaches in favor of Q. JANE, 225. excommunicated, 237. burnt, 243.

RIDOLFI the Florentine, his negociations for MARY Q. of Scots in Spain, ii. 313.

RIGHTS [bill of] diſpatch'd in the houſe of commons, iii. 379. receives the royal aſſent, 382.

RIOTS on occaſion of dr. Sacheverel's trial, iii. 701.

RIVERS [e. of] See Woodville.

RIVERS [Savage, e. of] appointed miniſter and plenipotentiary to the court of Hanover, iii. 717.

RIZZO [David] becomes the favorite of MARY Q. of Scots, ii. 275. promotes her marriage with lord Darnley, 276. lives with her in a ſcandalous familiarity, 278. aſſaſſinated in her chamber by the King's order, ib. buried in the ſepulchre of the Kings, 279.

ROAN [archbp. of] undertakes to defend K. STEPHEN in a ſynod, i. 238.

ROBERT II, d. of Normandy, father of K. WILLIAM the Conqueror, his unſucceſsful attempt againſt Canutus the Great, i. 151. ſuppoſed to have poiſon'd his brother, 195. gets his ſon William declared his ſucceſſor, 196. dies, 151, 196.

ROBERT, ſon of K. WILLIAM I, makes war upon his father, i. 209. wounds him unknowingly, ib. ſubmits, is ſent againſt the Scots, and founds the town of Newcaſtle, ib. ſtate of his affairs at his father's death, 214. [d. of Normandy] borrows mony of his brother Henry, 215. loſes much by his negligence, ib. invaded by his brother William, 216. beſieges Henry, 217. reduced very low by William, 219. pawns his duchy to William, and joins the Cruſade, 220. character, ib. refuſes the crown of Jeruſalem, 221. advantages and diſavantages at his brother William's death, 223. aſſerts his right to the crown, 224. arrives in England, but agrees with HENRY, 225. gives up his penſion, 226. invaded by HENRY, and ſues in vain for peace, 227. taken priſoner, and confined, 228. dies, 232.

ROBERT DE BELESME, attack'd by K. HENRY I, i. 225. retires to Normandy, and has his eſtates confiſcated, ib. diſquiets Normandy, and defeats the duke, 226. taken and confined, 229.

ROBERT DE MELLENT taken priſoner, i. 231.

ROBERTS [lord] deceives the e. of Eſſex, ii. 843.

ROBINSON [dr.] biſhop of Briſtol, made lord privy-ſeal, iii. 725. appointed plenipotentiary at the congreſs of Utrecht, 727. declaration to the Dutch plenipotentiaries, 733. made biſhop of London, 742.

ROCHELLE, taken from the Engliſh by the treachery of its mayor, i. 496. reduced by the French in ſight of the Engliſh fleet, ii. 541.

ROCHELLERS, refuſe to ſubmit to the Engliſh, ii. 520.

ROCHES [Peter des] biſhop of Wincheſter, protector protector to K. HENRY III, i. 339. promoted, 347. aims at an arbitrary government, 349. irritates the barons, ib. imprudent to the parliament, 350. betrays the e. of Pembroke, 351. disgraced, ib. called to Rome by the pope, 352, dies, 355. chief cause of the commotions in the reign of K. HENRY III, ib.

ROCHESTER, besieged and taken by William Rufus, i. 215.

ROCHESTER [bishop of] put in the Tower, on account of a sham plot, iii. 425. discharged from his imprisonment, 426.

ROCHESTER [Laurence Hyde e. of] made governor-general of Ireland, iii. 520. disappointed, and retires from court at Queen ANN's accession to the throne, 548. made lord president of the council, 712. dies suddenly, 719.

ROCHFORD [lord, Thomas Boleyn] accused of incest with his sister Q. Ann, ii. 145. condemned and executed, 146.

ROCHFORD [Lady] privy to Q. Catherine Howard's leudness, ii. 169. beheaded, 170.

ROCKWOOD [brigadier] one of the conspirators, tried, condemn'd and executed, iii. 475.

ROGER, bishop of Salisbury, his good fortune, i. 234.

ROGERS [John] confined for Protestantism, after rescuing a popish chaplain from the mob, ii. 229. burned, 240. character, ib. n. 1.

ROKESBY [sir Thomas] sherif of York, defeats the e. of Northumberland and lord Bardolph, i. 565 or 562.

ROLLO, the Norman, his arrival in England, i. 108, 109. some account of him, 108, n. seizes the duchy of Normandy, 119. dies, ib.

ROLLS [mr.] his warehouse lock'd up, for refusing tonage and poundage, ii. 544. which occasions a quarrel between King and Commons, ib.

ROMANS, a general massacre of them in Britain, i. 9.

ROMAN CATHOLICS. See Papists.

ROMANS [K. of the] elected, iii. 397. marries a Princess of Hanover, 506. takes Landau, 624.

ROME [court of] its prudent conduct to establish its authority, i. 246. why it prohibited marriage of priests, 248. excesses with regard to England, 535 or 533. artifices concerning church lands, ii. 238, or 239.

ROME [city of] sack'd by the Imperialists, ii. 93.

ROMNEY [e. of] entertains K. WILLIAM with fine fire-works, on occasion of the peace of Ryswick, iii. 495.

ROOKE's [mr. afterwards sir George] success at the Skerries, iii. n. 2, 377. convoys K. WILLIAM to Holland, iii. 403. Smyrna-fleet under his command destroy'd, 431. admiral of the fleet, 493. expedition to the Baltick, 519. joins the Swedes, and gets into Copenhagen road, ib. bombards the Danish fleet, 520. all matters adjusted, returns to England, ib. admiral of the fleet, 531. commands the fleet in the unsuccessful expedition to Cadiz, 565. and in the more successful attempt at Vigo, 567.

ROOKE [sir George] commands the main fleet, iii. 585. convoys the King of Spain to Lisbon, 607. besieges and takes Gibraltar, 608. commands the fleet at the battle of Malaga, 609.

ROSAMOND Clifford, mistress of K. HENRY II, put to death by Q. ELEANOR, i. 274.

ROSES taken by French, iii. 435.

ROSS [bishop of] see John Lesly.

ROUILLE [monsr. de] sent by France to Holland to make overtures for a peace, iii. 698. the Dutch confer with him, 699.

ROUND-TABLE of King EDWARD III, at Windsor, i. 475.

ROUND-WAY-DOWN fight, ii. 812.

ROUS, or Ross [John] the historian, i. 822. n.

ROUSE [John] provost of Eaton, chosen speaker of Barebone's parliament, iii. 26.

ROUSE [John] executed for the Rye-house plot, iii. 220.

ROWENA, daughter of Hengist, Vortigern falls in love with her, and gives her father the county of Kent, i. 30.

ROYAL-SOCIETY founded, iii. 71.

ROYAL SUN, the French admiral's ship, burnt at Cherburg, iii. 421.

RUBEIS [Peter de] see Nuntio.

RUDOLPH [d. of Wolfembuttel] put in possession of the regency, upon quiting his ingagements with France, iii. 554.

RUE [de la] one of the first discoverers of the assassination-plot, iii. 470.

RUMBOLD [Richard] executed for rebellion, iii. 244.

RUMP PARLIAMENT, their actions, iii. 47—53.

RUMSEY [John] an evidence in the Rye-house plot, his depositions, iii. 217, 218.

RUNNEMEDE, the place where K. JOHN granted the two charters to the barons, i. 316.

RUPERT [Prince] gains an advantage near Worcester, ii. 787. takes Cirencester, 794. sent to the North, takes Birmingham and Litchfield, but recalled, 808. takes Bristol, 809. defeats Meldrum, 837. other exploits, ib. marches to York, and forces the Parliamenterians to fight, 838. defeated, ib. drives back Ireton at Naseby fight, 862. retreats to Bristol, ib. surrenders the city, and is discharged, ib. carries a fleet to CHARLES II, in France, which the K. sells, iii. 29. fights the French fleet with disadvantage, 97.

RUREMOND besieged and taken by the allies, iii. 559. a description of the place, n. 1, ib.

RUSHOUT [sir James] appointed embassador to the Ottoman Port, iii. 489.

RUSHWORTH [John] character of his collections, ii. 636.

RUSSEL [John lord] lord-privy-seal, quells a rebellion in Devonshire, i. 209.

RUSSEL [Francis] kill'd on the borders of Scotland, ii. 342. Q. ELIZABETH demands satisfaction, ib.

RUSSEL [William, lord] moves for the exclusion bill to be brought into the house of commons, iii. 198. tried for the Rye-house plot, 218. condemn'd, 219. beheaded, 220. attainder reversed, 353.

RUSSEL [mr. afterwards e. of Orford] made admiral of the fleet, iii. 407. meets the French fleet, 418. letter giving an account of the fight and victory off of La Hogue, 420. burns 13 French men of war in that harbor, 421. receives the thanks of the house of commons, 427. is called to an account, but clear'd, ib.

RUSSEL [admiral] set aside, iii. 430. again appointed admiral of the fleet, 436. destroys a fleet of French merchant-ships, 440. expedition to the Mediterranean glorious without action, 443. commands the fleet at the time of the assassination-plot, 472. made e. of Orford, n. 1, 494.

RUSTAND, see Nuncio.

RUTH [monsr. St.] takes the whole duchy of Savoy, Montmelian excepted, iii. 397. his vanity and weakness at Athlone, n. 2, 404. his speech to the Irish, before the battle of Aghrim, ib. kill'd by a cannon ball, at that battle, 406.

RUTHEN, governor of Plymouth, defeated, ii. 795.

RUTHVEN [lord] and George Douglas, murderers of David Rizzo, ii. 278. abandon'd by the King, who imploy'd them, fly into England, 279.

RUTHVEN Conspiracy in Scotland, ii. 334. avow'd by K. JAMES, ib.

RUVIGNY's [major-general, afterwards e. of Galway] conduct and bravery at the battle of Aghrim, iii. 406.

RUYTER [Michael de] admiral of the Dutch, his exploits, iii. 92—102. burns several ships in the Thames, 102. comes into the Thames upon false intelligence, but retires, 138.

RYE-HOUSE-PLOT discovered, iii. 217. proceedings thereupon, ib. &c.

RYSWICK [a royal palace of K. WILLIAM's, near the Hague] agreed on for the congress to treat of a peace, iii. 490. preliminaries setled, ib. objections to some of them, 491. ceremonials setled, ib. the treaty sign'd, ib. greatly accellerated by the e. of Portland, and the marshal de Boufflers, n. 2, ib. principal articles of this treaty, 492. proclaim'd in London, 494.

S

SABERT, K. of Essex, i. 64.

SACHEVEREL [dr.] his impeachment, trial and sentence, iii. 707.

SALADINE [Sultan of Egypt] takes possession of Palestine, i. 286. puts his prisoners to death, 287. beat by King RICHARD of England, 288. makes a truce with K. RICHARD, 289.

SALAMANCA declares for K. CHARLES III, but is obliged to return to their allegiance to K. PHILIP V, iii. 656.

SALIC LAW, EDWARD III pretends it is wrong interpreted, i. 467, 468. dissertation on it, 500—507.

SALISBURY [John of] his character, i. 402.

SALISBURY [John de Montacute, e. of] raises an army in King RICHARD's defence, which disbands again on the K's not arriving, 529 or *527. conspires against HENRY IV, 549. taken and beheaded, 550, SALISBURY [Thomas de Montacute e. of] his exploits in France, i. 614 or 605, &c. slain, 628 or 619.

SALISBURY [Richard Nevil, e. of] sides with Richard d. of York, i. 666, defeats lord Audley at Blore-heath, 670. beheaded, 675.

SALISBURY [James Cecil, e. of] sent to the Tower for a speech in the house of lords, iii. 151.

SALISBURY [James Cecil, e. of] presented to the grand Jury of Middlesex as a Papist, iii. 289. detained in prison on that account, 293. put in the Tower on account of a sham plot, 425. discharg'd from his imprisonment, n. 1, 426.

SALISBURY [countess of] repulses the Scots at the castle of Werk, i. 474. visited by K. EDWARD III, 475. drops her garter at a ball, which occasions the order of the garter, 481.

SALISCH [general] commands at the siege of Menin, iii. 653.

SALLUSTIUS LUCULLUS, a Roman governor in Britain, i. 14.

SALT-PETRE-MEN, a proclamation against them, ii. 294.

SALVATERRE taken by the allies, iii. 308.

SALUSSES, battle of, iii. 397.

SANCROFT [dr. William] archbp. of Canterbury, accused of altering the coronation oath in favor of K. JAMES, iii. 237. waits on the Pr. of Orange, and signs the association, 297. introduces an officious innovation, 336. absents from the house of lords, 342. death and character, 437.

SANDVLIET taken by the count de Noyelles, iii. 639.

SANDWICH [e. of, Edward Montague] commands the English fleet against the Dutch, iii. 95. his naval exploits, ib. &c.

SANQUIR [lord, Robert Creighton] hanged for causing a fencing-master to be murder'd, ii. 417, and n. 1.

SARAGOSSA submits to K. CHARLES III, iii. 656.

SARSFIELD [col.] surprizes and blows up the English train going to Limerick, iii. 393.

SAVIL [sir William] governor of Leeds, his military exploits, ii. 794.

SAUNDERS burnt for religion, ii. 240.

SAVOY-PALACE, a conference there between the bishops and the Presbyterian ministers, iii. 72, 73.

SAVOY [d. of] takes a bold resolution, iii. 397. is compriz'd in the grand alliance, ib. makes but a bad bargain at first, ib. staunch to the interest of the allies, 425. is successful in Dauphiny, and takes Ambrun, ib. sickness stops the carrier of his glory, ib. loses the battle of Marsiglia, 435. carries on a secret negociation with France, 444. concludes a separate peace at at Loretto, 480. conceals it at firſt, under the veil of a ſham-truce; but, at length owns it, ib. inconſtancy of that houſe, n. 3, ib. comes into the grand alliance, 595. unſucceſsful campain in 1704, 624. fights the battle of Turin, and enters his capital triumphantly, 661. takes Piccighitone, Tortona, Alexandria, Modena, and Caſal, ib. obtains ſeveral advantages over the marſhal de Villars, 692.

SAUTRE [William] the firſt that was burnt in England for religion, i. 554 or 552.

SAXBURGA, Queen of Weſſex, i. 70.

SAXONS, their origin, and conqueſts in Germany, i. 23. etymology of the name Saxon, 24. the cuſtoms, government, and religion of that people, ib. meſſage of the Britons to them, 28. they enter Britain under the conduct of Hengiſt and Horſa, 29. they rout the northern people, ib. their firſt war with the Britons, 32. they drive the Britons into Cambria, 45. make great alterations, 49. their converſion to Chriſtianity begins, 77. to whom owing, 95, 96.

SAXRED, SEWARD, SIGEBERT, Kings of Eſſex, i. 64.

SCANDIA, or Scandinavia, a deſcription of it, i. 98.

SCHELLENBERG, victory obtain'd there by the d. of Marlborough, iii. 614. liſt of the kill'd and wounded in that action, ib.

SCHISMS in the Romiſh church, the cauſe why the Popes did not gain more authority in England, i. 250, 537, or 534. at the death of Adrian IV, 262. at the death of Gregory IX, 358. at the death of Gregory XI, 509. See alſo, 565 or 562. and ſtate of the church.

SCHOMBERG [Frederick, mareſchal de] comes over with the Prince of Orange, iii. 284. naturalized, and created d. of Schomberg, 357. made commander in chief in Ireland, 375. the commons vote him a preſent of 100,000 l. ib. imbarks for Ireland, ib. takes Carrickfergus, ib. declines attacking the Iriſh, 376. his reaſons for it, n. 3, ib. takes ſeveral places from the Iriſh, 386. kill'd inadvertently, by his own troops, at the battle of the Boyne, 388. his character, n. 1, ib.

SCHOMBERG [d. of, ſon of the former] declaration in the name of K. WILLIAM, in favor of the Proteſtants of France, iii. n. 2, 425. commands the Engliſh troops at the battle of Marſiglia, 435. wounded and taken priſoner, ib. made general of the Engliſh and Dutch forces, ſent to the aſſiſtance of Portugal, 581. is recall'd at his own deſire, 625.

SCHOOLS erected in Britain, i. 27, 47.

SCONE, the famous ſtone there, brought into England by K. EDWARD I, i. 427.

SCOTLAND [MALCOLM, K. of] his devaſtations in the north, i. 207, 217, 218. death, ib. [DONALD and DUNCAN Kings of] ib. [affairs of] 220. [DAVID, K. of] invades the north, and gains an advantagious peace, 235. [WILLIAM, K. of] taken priſoner, 275. privileges granted him by K. RICHARD, 293. does homage to K. JOHN, 300. [ALEXANDER II, K. of] ſues for a peace to K. HENRY III, 361. dies, 365. [ALEXANDER III, K. of] marries Margaret, daughter of K. HENRY III, 369. [affairs of] 413—427. [royal family of] its genealogy, 415. [crown of] its claimants, ib. &c. diſpoſed of by K. EDWARD I, 423. [kingdom] invaded by EDWARD I, 426, 427. again, 432, 433, 434, 435, 437. [affairs of, in the reign of EDWARD II,] 443, 444. [Kings of] See Baliol and Bruce, [David, Prince of] marries Jane, ſiſter of K. EDWARD III, 460. ſucceeds his father Robert Bruce, 461. [K. of] driven out of his kingdom by Edward Baliol, 466. [regent of, e. of Murray] taken priſoner, 467. [DAVID, K. of] returns, 474. makes a truce with EDWARD III, 475. enters England, 479. defeated and taken priſoner, ib. ſet at liberty, 415. dies, 485. [ROBERT STUART, K. of] makes an alliance with France, 496. breaks the truce with England, but renews it, 549 or 548. proclaims war againſt England, 552 or 551. makes a truce, ib. dies, 564 or 561. [JAMES, K. of] priſoner in England, ib. [affairs of] in the reign of HENRY V of England, 601 or 593. in the reign of EDWARD IV, 687. [JAMES III, K. of] puts one brother to death, and impriſons another, 724. invades England, ib. harraſs'd by the d. of Glouceſter, ib. 725. [affairs of] 760, 768. [JAMES III, K. of] ſlain, 774. [JAMES IV, K. of] ſtate of his affairs, 780. owns Perkin Warbeck for d. of York, 791. invades England, 792. ſends Perkin away, and makes a truce with HENRY, 795. views and intereſts, ii. 25. defeated and ſlain at Floddon, 33. buried at K. HENRY's requeſt, ib. [d. of Albany, regent of] negociations and broils, 39—76. driven out of Scotland, and returns, 76. [e. of Angus, regent of] grant to Wolſey, 87. [JAMES V, K. of] affronts K. HENRY VIII, by not coming to meet him, 142, 169. invaded by HENRY, and his army defeated, 172, 173. dies, 173. [MARY, Q. of] See MARY. [e. of Arran, regent of] 175, &c. rejects the Engliſh Protector's offer of peace, 200. See more of the affairs of this kingdom, ii. 14, 39, 44, 47, 58, 65, 76, 79, 87, 91, 127, 168, 171, 172, 173, 175, 176, 177, 180, 184, 187, 199, 200, 204, 253, 257, 267, 268, 269, 272, 292, 302, 315, 321, 327, 330, 335, 336, 337, 362, 370, 557, 568, 814—819, 904, 905, 906. iii. 7—19, 237, 238.

SCOTLAND [church of] its affairs after the reformation, ii. 568—591. diſturbances on introducing the new liturgy, 574, &c. See Kirk.

SCOTLAND [parliament of] raiſe an army, and give the command of it to Leſley, ii. 904, 906. inlarge the King's ſupremacy, iii. 114.

SCOTLAND [peers of] anſwer to Q. ELIZABETH's letter concerning Q. MARY, ii. 305.

SCOTLAND [factions of] brought to a ſuſpenſion of arms, ii. 307. conſer at London, 310. remarks on them, 315.

SCOTLAND, change in the miniſtry there, iii. 606. [affairs of] debated on, 627.

SCOTISH conſpiracy, account of it, ii. 683, &c.

SCOTISH miniſter, inſolence of one before K. CHARLES II, 871. n. 3.

SCOTISH commiſſioners, their negociations with K. CHARLES, ii. 896—899.

SCOTS, a fabulous account of their origin, i. introd. xi. a more probable account, ib. they unite with the Picts, and ſeparate from them again, xii. their antiquity diſputed by the Engliſh, xiii. they are driven out of Britain by the Romans and Picts, 18. the Picts recal them, 19. they and the Picts haraſs the Britons, 20. defeated by K. STEPHEN, 237. complain againſt K. EDWARD I, 423. rebel againſt EDWARD, 432, 433. defeated, ib. defeat the Engliſh in ſeveral battles, 444. ravage the frontiers of England, 457. beaten by the Engliſh, 466. beat the Engliſh, 467. ſeize Berwick, but ſoon loſe it again, 510. ravage England, 516. make a diverſion in Cumberland, 517. ſeize the Caſtle of Werk, 549 or 546. inſolence in the reign of K. JAMES I, ii. 417. n. 2. raiſe tumults on reading the new liturgy, 574. prepare for their defence, 584. ſue for a peace, ib. incite the Engliſh againſt their King, 601. take Newcaſtle, 602. gain the Londoners affection, 603. treat with K. CHARLES, 605, 606. ſend forces into Ireland, 722. manifeſto, 819. enter England, 836. take Newcaſtle, 839. progreſs in England, 864, 865. K. CHARLES throws himſelf into their hands, 869. preſs the King to accept the parliaments propoſitions, 871. agree to deliver up the King, 872. deliver him to the parliament's commiſſioners, 875. intereſts and views, 902. ſeize Berwick and Carliſle, 909. routed by Cromwell, 912. proteſt againſt the murder of K. CHARLES, iii. 7. treat with CHARLES II, 12.

SCOTUS [Joannes Duns] profeſſor of divinity, i. 543, or 540.

SCOTUS [Joannes] the firſt profeſſor of geometry and aſtronomy at Oxford, i. 113. account of him, 137.

SCROGGS [ſir William] lord-chief-juſtice, takes down the examination of Oates, iii. 167.

SCROOPE [Richard] chancellor, refuſes to ſign an exorbitant grant of K. RICHARD II. and loſes the ſeal for it, i. 515.

SCROOPE [Richard] archbiſhop of York, forms a conſpiracy againſt HENRY IV, i. 561 or 558. fraudulently taken and beheaded, 562 or 559.

SCROOP [Henry] lord high-treaſurer, executed for a plot againſt K. HENRY V, i. 580 or 572.

SCUTAGE, what, i. 324, n. 3.

SEAL, a new one made by the parliament's order, ii. 832. another made after the death of K. CHARLES I, iii. 5. [the Great] thrown by K. JAMES into the Thames on his withdrawing from Whitehall, 291.

SEBBA, K. of Eſſex, i. 65.

SECURITY [act of] in Scotland, paſs'd, iii. 607. tenor of it, ib.

SEGRAVE [John de] commander of the Engliſh forces in Scotland, divides his army into three bodies, which are ſeverally defeated in one day, i. 434, 435. fights a duel without the King's leave, for which he is condemned, but pardoned, 435, 436.

SEISSAC's [the marquis de] merry obſervation to the credit of the Engliſh nation, iii. n. 1, 359.

SELBY-fight, ii. 836.

SELDEN [John] impriſon'd, and ſtudy ſeal'd up, ii. 544. argument concerning bps 656.

SELF DENYING ordinance paſſed by the parliament, ii. 859.

SEMINARIES [Engliſh] erected in forein parts, ii. 329.

SENECA, his avarice, i. 9.

SENTENCE, a very remarkable one on RICHARD II, i. 548, or 547.

SEOLRED, K. of Eſſex, i. 65.

SETTLEMENT [act of] repeal'd in Ireland, iii. 368.

SEVERUS, JULIUS, a Roman governor in Britain, i. 14.

SEVERUS, SEPTIMIUS, choſen Emperor, i. 15. conquers his two competitors, and goes into Britain, ib. divides the Iſland by a wall, ib. dies at York, ib.

SEWALD [archbiſhop of York] his character, i. 403.

SEWARD, k. of Eſſex, i. 64.

SEYMOUR [Jane] married to K. HENRY VIII, ii. 147. dies in child birth, 154.

SEYMOUR [Edward] See Hertford, e. of, and Somerſet, d. of.

SEYMOUR [ſir Thomas] his character, ii. 195. made lord Dudley and high admiral, 196. marries Q. CATHERINE PARR, 202. aims at ſupplanting his brother, and threaten'd by the council, 202, 203. new project, againſt the protector, 206. ſent to the Tower, attainted, and executed, ib.

SEYMOUR [ſir Francis] his ſpeech concerning grievances, ii. 523.

SEYMOUR [ſir Edward] adviſes the ſigning an aſſociation in the Prince of Orange's favor, iii. 286.

SHAFTSBURY [earl of, Anthony Aſhley Cooper] made lord chancellor, iii. 129. remarkable ſpeech in parliament, 130. turns to the country-party, 135. declares publicly againſt the King, 136. reaſon of his ſo doing, n. ib. reflections on his character, ib. great ſeal taken from him, 140. ſent to the Tower for a ſpeech in the houſe of lords, 151. releaſed, 157. in diſgrace, 193. preſents the d. of York as a Papiſt, 197. ſent to the Tower, and call'd the Proteſtant earl, 212. tried by the 12 judges and acquited, 213. eſcapes into Holland, and there dies, 215.

SHAFTSBURY [lord] a piece of wit related of him, iii. n. 1, 464.

SHARP [dr. John] archbiſhop of St. Andrews, barbarouſly murdered in Scotland, iii. 189.

SHARP [dr. John] preaches a ſermon, for which K. JAMES II orders him to be ſuſpended, iii. 255. iſſue of that affair, 256.

SHARP [dr. dean of Canterbury] made archbiſhop of York, iii. 403.

SHAW [Edmund] mayor of London, a tool of crook-back'd RICHARD's, indeavors to juſtify the execution of lord Haſtings, i. 736. waits upon RICHARD, and deſires him to accept the crown, 738.

SHAW [dr.] a famous preacher, his ſermon at St. Pauls, and iſſue of it, i. 736, 737.

SHAXTON [Nicholas] biſhop of Salisbury, reſigns his ſee, and is impriſon'd, on account of the ſix articles, ii. 160. condemned to be burned, abjures, pardon'd, and becomes a perſecutor of the reformed, 188.

SHELDON [Gilbert] made archbiſhop of Canterbury, iii. 88. tries to hinder a comprehenſion, 113.

SHEPHERD [mr.] gives riſe to the new Eaſt-India company, iii. 499.

SHERLEY [ſir Robert] embaſſador from the King of Perſia to K. JAMES I, ii. 417.

SHERFIELD [Henry] recorder of Salisbury, proſecuted and fined in the court of ſtar-chamber, for taking a picture out of a church window, ii. 556.

SHERIFFS, or viſcounts, their office, i. 177. meaning of the word, 326, n. a larger account of their office, ib. their oath, 327.

SHERLOCK [dr.] writes in defence of the trinity, iii. 476. his writings ſaid to border on Tritheiſm, ib.

SHIP-MONY ſet on foot, ii. 562. writ for it, ib. petitioned againſt by the city of London, 563. laid upon the whole nation, 564. opinion of the judges concerning it, ib 566. inſiſted on by the King, 565. Hampden proſecuted and caſt for non-payment of it, 567. levied again, 592. aboliſhed by act of parliament, 647—650.

SHIRES, England divided into them, i. 113.

SHORE [Jane] her character, i. 728. accuſed of ſorcery, 735. obliged to do penance, 736.

SHOVEL [ſir Cloudeſly] convoys K. WILLIAM to Ireland, iii. n 3, 386. appointed admiral of the fleet jointly with Henry Kellegrew, eſq; and ſir Ralph Delaval, 430. bombards Calais, 477. brings home the prizes from Vigo, 570. expedition to the Mediterranean in 1703, 586. his inſtructions, n. 2, ib. lands ſome troops in Spain, and publiſhes a manifeſto, 587. indeavors to relieve the Cevennois, but in vain, ib. inſiſts upon a royal ſalute at Leghorn, 588. returns to England, ib. biſhop Burnet's account of this expedition, n. 2, ib. appointed admiral of the fleet, jointly with the earl of Peterborough, 633. they carry K. CHARLES III to Spain, ib. returns with the fleet to England, 634. commands the fleet at the attempt at Toulon, 676. confers with the d. of Savoy and Prince Eugene, ib. returns to England and is loſt among the iſlands of Scilly, 677.

SHREWSBURY parliament, their extraordinary complaiſance to the King, i. 526.

SHREWSBURY-fight, between HENRY IV and the e. of Northumberland, i. 558 or 556.

SHREWSBURY [e. of, Charles Talbot] caſhier'd of his regiment for refuſing to turn Papiſt, iii. 261. ſecures Briſtol for the Prince of Orange, 288. See Talbot.

SHREWSBURY [d. of] made lord-chamberlain, iii. 709. lord-lieutenant of Ireland, 742.

SIBTHORP [dr.] preaches up paſſive obedience, ii. 517.

SICILY, affairs of that Iſland, i. 283. [TANCRED, K. of] his quarrel with K. RICHARD I of England, ib. creates a miſunderſtanding between RICHARD and K. PHILIP of France, 284. [affairs of] 366, 367, 368. [K. of, CHARLES of Anjou] quarrels with the K. of Arragon, 410. decided by EDWARD I of England, i. 412.

SIDNEY [col. Algernoon] tried for the Rye-houſe-plot, iii. 220. one of his MSS produced againſt him, 221. condemned and beheaded, ib.

SIDNEY [Henry, eſq;] the firſt Engliſh gentleman that goes over to the Prince of Orange, iii. 276. created baron of Milton and viſc. Sidney, 356.

SIDNEY [ſir Charles] makes a remarkable ſpeech againſt exorbitant penſions, ſalaries, &c. iii. n. 2. 375.

SIGEBERT, K. of Eſtanglia, i. 63.

SIGEBERT I, K. of Eſſex, i. 64.

SIGEBERT the Little, K. of Eſſex, i. 65.

SIGEBERT the Good, K. of Eſſex, i. 65.

SIGEBERT, K. of Weſſex, i. 72.

SIGER, K. of Eſſex, i. 65.

SIGHARD and SINOFRED, Kings of Eſſex, i. 65.

SIGISMUND [Emperor of Germany] comes to France and England, and procures a truce between the two courts, i. 586, 587 or 577, 578. makes a treaty with HENRY V, 588 or 579.

SILVESTER, biſhop of Wincheſter, ſent to the Lateran council, ii. 20.

SILURES, inhabitants of South-Wales, i. introd. xi. n.

SIMIE, envoy from France, promotes the d. of Anjou's marriage with Q. ELIZABETH, and is hated by the e. of Leiceſter, ii. 328. 329.

SIMNEL [Lambert] perſonates the young e. of Warwick, and is received and proclaim'd King in Ireland, i. 763. crown'd at Dublin, 766. arrives in England, ib. defeated at Stoke, and made a ſcullion in the King's kitchen, 767.

SIMON [Richard] ſets up Lambert Simnel as the e. of Warwick, i. 763. impriſon'd, 767.

SINDERCOMB conſpires againſt Cromwell, iii. 34. dies in priſon, ib.

SIWARD, e. of Northumberland, an enemy of e. Goodwin, i. 156.

SKELTON [mr.] envoy at Paris, ſends advice of the Prince of Orange's preparations, which is neglected, iii. 276. counſel to the French court, which alſo fails of effect, 277. recall'd, and ſent to the Tower, ib.

SLAVES, what they were among the Saxons, i. 178.

SLEDDA, K. of Eſſex, i. 46.

SLIGO taken by the Iriſh, iii. 376. ſurrenders to the e. of Granard, 407.

SLINGSBY [ſir Henry] executed for a conſpiracy againſt Cromwell, iii. 39.

SMALCALD [league of] concluded, ii. 120. deputies from, to K. HENRY VIII, 144.

SMITH [ſir Thomas] ſent to demands Calais, which France refuſes, ii. 290. ſpeech to the chancellor de l'Hoſpital, ib.

SMITH [——eſq;] choſen ſpeaker of the houſe of commons, iii. 641. of the firſt parliament of Great-Britain, 678.

SMOAK-SHIPS made uſe of againſt Dunkirk, but with little effect, iii. 459.

SMUGLERS and Owlers puniſh'd, iii. 500.

SMYRNA-fleet deſtroy'd by the French, iii. 431. voted to have happen'd by a notorious and treacherous miſmanagement, 436.

SOBIESKI III, K. of Poland, dies, iii. 481.

SOCINIANISM [growth of] in England, iii. 476.

SOCK-LAND and SOCK-MEN, what, i. 178.

SOCCAGE, tenure in, what, i. 329, n. 2.

SOLDIERS quartered in private houſes, ii. 517. petition concerning it, 525.

SOLEBAY fight, iii. 128.

SOLMES [count de] ſent by K. WILLIAM to Flanders, iii. 403. occaſions the loſs of the battle of Steenkirk, 424. cauſe of his ill conduct, n. 1, ib. reſented by K. WILLIAM, n. 2. ib. kill'd at the Battle of Landen, n. 4, 434.

SOMERSET [Edmund Beaufort, d. of] made regent of France, i. 657. delivers up ſeveral places to the French, 659. ſurrenders Normandy, 661. comes to England, and is made prime miniſter, 662. ſlain at St. Albans, 667.

SOMERSET [——d. of] beheaded at Hexham, i 690.

SOMERSET [Edmund, d. of] lives miſerably, i. 691. eſcapes after the battle of Barnet, 709. routed and taken priſoner at Tewkſbury, 710, 714. beheaded, 711.

SOMERSET [Edward Seymour, d. of] made lord-treaſurer, marſhal, &c. ii. 196. ambitious, becomes abſolute maſter of the government, 197. marches into Scotland, offers peace, which refuſed, he wins the battle of Pinkey, 199, 200. returns without improving the victory, and envy'd by the grandees, 200. cabal'd againſt by his brother, 202, 203. prerogatives inlarged, 204. blamed by the more zealous reformers, 205. cenſured for his brother's execution, 206, 207. tries in vain to redreſs the people's grievances, 208. conduct during ſeveral popular commotions, 209. propoſal for the reſtoring of Boulogne rejected by the council, 210. reſolutions againſt him, 211. removes the King to Windſor, where the council repairs to his Majeſty, ib. ſent to the Tower, 212. attainted, throws himſelf on the King's mercy, and acquited, 213. ruin reſolved, and gives his enemies advantage over him, 216. ſent to the Tower, tried, acquited of treaſon, but found guilty of felony, 217. beheaded, 218. behavior on the Scaffold, and character, ib. pretended accomplices executed, ib.

SOMERSET [d. of] appointed lord-preſident of the council, iii. 537.

SOMMERS [mr.] ſpeech on the word Abdicated, iii. 299.

SOMMERS [lord] letter to K. WILLIAM, concerning the firſt partition-treaty, iii. 504. the great ſeal taken from him, 517. impeach'd on account of the partition-treaty, 525. articles againſt him, with his anſwer to them, 526. acquited, 529. made preſident of the council, 693. diſmiſs'd from that imploy, 712.

SOPHIA [Princeſs, ducheſs dowager of Hanover] declared next in ſucceſſion to the crown of England, iii. 522. order'd to be pray'd for, 550. a motion for inviting her to England rejected, 643. a remark on this incident, 644. her death, 744.

SOUTH [dr.] writes againſt dr. Sherlock's defence of the Trinity, iii. 476. accus'd by dr. Sherlock of Sabellianiſm, ib.

SOUTHAMPTON [e. of] diſſuades the e. of Eſſex from a dangerous enterprize, ii. 379. condemned together with Eſſex, 383. reſtored to his eſtates and honours, 390. See Wriothſley.

SOUTH-SEA company, riſe of it, iii. n. 3, 719.

SPAIN [affairs of that kingdom] i. 759, 804. ii. 244. iii. 32.

SPAIN inraged againſt France, iii. 340. [Q. of] convoy'd by the Engliſh to the Groyne, 383. acceeds to the peace of Italy, 481. [K. of] his laſt will, and death, 520.

SPANIARDS make a deſcent into Ireland, ii. 330. conſpire againſt Q. ELIZABETH, 369. burn ſome villages in Cornwall, 372.

SPANIARDS ſucceſsful in Catalonia, iii. 462. beaten by the d. of Vendôme at Oſtalryc, 481. alarm'd at the Scotiſh colony of Darien, 510. prepare to diſlodge them, 511. invade Portugal, 625.

SPANISH ARMADA, an account of it, ii. 360. expedition and defeat, 361, 362.

SPANISH ambaſſador [Bernardino de Mendoza] complains againſt Drake, ii. 330. found to be in a plot, and ordered to quit the Land, 338.

SPAR [baron] forces the French intrenchments in the county of Waes, iii. 590. bombards Bruges, and takes fort Iſabella, 624. ſucceſs in Flanders, 642.

SPEECHES [remarkable] of Caractacus to the Emperor, i. 8. of Boadicia and Paulinus to their armies, 10. of Edgar againſt the ſecular clergy, 130. of HENRY I, remarks on it, 228. of Hubert archbp. of Canterbury at the coronation of K. JOHN, 297. remarks on it, ib.

SPEECH of mr. Powle, ſpeaker of the houſe of commons, to the King and Queen on their coronation, iii. 357. remarkable, of the ſpeaker of the houſe of commons to K. WILLIAM, on preſenting the poll-bill, 368. of mr. Price, concerning a grant from K. WILLIAM to the earl of Portland, 469. K. WILLIAM's on the aſſaſſination-plot, 471.

471. of ſir William Trumball, to ſecond it, ib. a ſtudied and elaborate one of K. WILLIAM diſreliſh'd by the commons, 513. [remarkable] of the ſpeaker of the houſe of commons to ſir George Rooke, 572. [Q. ANN's] concerning the Scotiſh plot, 598. [memorable] of lord Haverſham, 627. [pathetic and comprehenſive] ſuppoſed to be penn'd by the lord-keeper Cowper, 642. Queen of Spain's to the grandees, 655. [the d. of Marlborough's] to the K. of Sweden, 673. of the Queen, reſented by ſome members of both houſes, 681. Q. ANN's, concerning the terms of a peace communicated at the congreſs of Utrecht, 738.

SPEECH WITHOUT DOORS, a pamphlet, ii. 523.

SPENCER [Hugh] the father, created earl of Wincheſter, i. 447. character, ib. recall'd from baniſhment, 448. left in Briſtol by the King, 454. taken by Queen ISABEL, and hang'd, ib.

SPENCER [Hugh] the ſon, becomes the chief favorite of EDWARD II, i. 447. recall'd from baniſhment, 448. taken with the K. in Wales, 454. hang'd at Hereford, ib.

SPENCERS [father and ſon] eſtates ravaged by Hugh Mortimer, i. 447. baniſhed by parliament, ib. great power at their return, 449. ſhew no quarter to their enemies, ib. make the Queen uneaſy, 450, 451. withdraw with the K. into the Weſt, 453.

SPIREBACH, battle of, iii. 594.

SPORTS [books of] publiſhed by K. JAMES I, ii. 434. burnt, by the parliament's order, 831.

SPRAGG [vice-admiral] loſt in an ingagement with the Dutch, iii. 138.

SPRAT [Thomas] biſhop of Rocheſter, one of the eccleſiaſtical commiſſioners, quits his commiſſion, and why, iii. 274.

SPURS, the battle of, won by K. HENRY VIII, ii. 30.

SQUIBS, ſerpents, &c. an act to prevent the throwing of them, iii. 499.

SQUIRE [Edward] conſpires againſt Q. ELIZABETH, ii. 377.

STAFFORD [lord] deſerts the e. of Pembroke, i. 699. beheaded, ib.

STAFFORD [Thomas] raiſes an inſurrection, ii. 246.

STAFFORD [William, lord] tried for the Popiſh plot, iii. 202. makes an illuſory confeſſion, 203. beheaded, ib.

STAFFORDS [the two] rebel, i. 761. one of them executed, 762.

STAHREMBERG [count] takes Balaguer, iii. 705.

STAMFORD [Henry Grey, e. of] general for the parliament, defeated at Stratſon, ii. 811.

STANDARD, royal, ſet up at Nottingham, ii. 784.

STANHOPE [ſir Michael] executed, ii. 218.

STANHOPE [major general] appointed envoy extraordinary and plenipotentiary to King CHARLES III, and commander in chief of the Britiſh forces in Spain, iii. 685. aſſiſts ſir John Leake in the reduction of Minorca, 692. takes poſſeſſion of Port-Mahon, 693. kills a Spaniſh general, and wins the battle of Almanara, 713. loſes the battle of Brihuega and is taken priſoner, 714.

STANISLAUS advanced to the throne of Poland, iii. 672.

STANLEY [lord] ſuſpicious of the protector Richard, i. 734. wounded, 735. made high-conſtable, 745. leaves his ſon hoſtage with Richard, 747. raiſes forces, which he carries over to the e. of Richmond, 749, 750. [e. of Derby] made high-conſtable, 760.

STANLEY [ſir William] executed for joining with Perkin Warbeck, i. 788.

STAPLETON [Walter] biſhop of Exeter, his character, i. 543 or 540.

STAR-CHAMBER [court of] aboliſhed, ii. 647.

STATES-GENERAL repaid their charges at the revolution, iii. 374. anſwer to K. WILLIAM's ſpeech to them, 531. to monſ. d'Avaux memorial, 532. anſwer to Queen ANN's letter, at her acceſſion, 543. to the earl of Marlborough's ſpeech, 544. concur in the d. of Marlborough's meaſures to relieve the Empire, 612. congratulate the Queen on the battle of Hochſtadt, 625. write to the diet of Ratisbon, concerning their deficiency, 675. adviſe the Queen not to diſſolve the parliament, 711. conſent to a congreſs to treat of a peace, 727. their letter to the Queen concerning the biſhop of Briſtol's declaration, 733. vote of the houſe of commons thereupon, 734. conſent to a plan for a peace, 739. See Dutch.

STATUTES, ſee Parliament, acts of.

STEENKIRK, battle of, iii. 423.

STEPHEN [e. of Boulogne] grandſon of the Conqueror, in favor with his uncle Henry, i. 234. aſpires to the crown, ib. clergy declare for him, ib. crown'd, ib. [K. of England] makes great promiſes to the barons, ib. takes an unuſual oath, 235. ſeizes the late K's treaſures, ib. grants his ſubjects a beneficial charter, ib. ſeizes the archbp. of Canterbury's revenues, ib. commits overſights, ib. wars with the Welſh and Scots, ib. drives his brother Theobald out of Normandy, 236. his ſubjects rebel, and invite Maud into England, ib. 237. he defeats the Scots, and reduces the revolted barons, 237. affection for the K. of Scots's ſon, ib. falls out with the clergy, ib. humbles the biſhops, 238. ſummon'd to a ſynod, ib. beſieges Maud in Arundel caſtle, and ſends her to Briſtol, 239. civil war between him and Maud, whom he beſieges again in Wallingford and Lincoln, ib. taken priſoner, and put in irons, 240. his adherents excommunicated, 241. exchanged for the e. of Glouceſter, 242. his enemies excommunicated, ib. beſieges Maud in Oxford, who eſcapes, ib. 243. gets a ſupply, ib. continues the war, and at laſt remains ſole maſter of the kingdom, ib. alarmed by Henry the ſon of Maud, ib. fails in an attempt to get his ſon Euſtace crown'd, 244. meets Henry in the field, and at an interview with him agrees on a truce, ib. loſes his ſon Euſtace, ib. makes a peace with Henry, and adopts him, 245. dies, ib. character, and children, ib. 246.

STERLING-MONY, original of that word, i. 193.

STEVENS's [mr.] ſermon before the houſe of commons cenſur'd, iii. 517.

STEVENSWAERT beſieg'd and taken by the allies, iii. 559.

STEWART [James] writes to penſionary Fagel about the teſt, iii. 263.

STEWS [public] ſuppreſs'd, ii. 190.

STIGAND, made archbp. of Canterbury, i. 159. officiates, tho' under ſuſpenſion, and without a pall, 173.

STILL-YARD, company of German merchants ſetled there, diſſolved, ii. 219.

STILLINGFLEET [dr. Edward] made biſhop of Worceſter, iii. 378.

STOCK-JOBBING, firſt riſe of that infamous practice, iii. n. 3, 487.

STOKE battle, i. 766.

STORY [dr] forcibly brought into England, and executed, ii. 299.

STORM, the moſt violent that ever was known in England, iii. 597.

STRAFFORD, [e. of] ſee Wentworth, Thomas.

STRAFFORD [e. of] ſent to the Hague, to induce the States-general to come into the Queen's meaſures, iii. 727. appointed plenipotentiary at the congreſs of Utrecht, ib.

STRATFORD [John] archbp. of Canterbury, has a miſunderſtanding with K. EDWARD III, i. 472. ſubmits himſelf, 473. See 543 or 540.

STRATSON-fight, ii. 811.

STRICKLAND [Walter] ſent to Holland, and neglected, ii. 798.

STRODE [William] one of the five members, ii. 715.

STUART [Robert] ſupports the intereſt of his country againſt the Engliſh, i. 474. takes Perth and Sterlyn, ib.

STUART [James] prior of St. Andrews, levies forces in favor of the Proteſtants, ii. 257. created earl of Murray, 270. manages the Scotiſh affairs, 272. preſerves the Q. from the earl of Huntley's ſnare, ib. credit declines, 276. oppoſes the Q's marriage with lord Darnley, but without ſucceſs, ib. vindicated againſt Cambden, 279, 303, 304. leaves the court, 286. accuſed of K. HENRY's murder, but never queſtion'd, ib. returns to court, ib. refuſes to ſign a league for the Q's defence, 287. retires to France, 288. choſen regent, returns to Scotland, and treats the Q. ill, 289. takes poſſeſſion of all the fortreſſes, 290. left by ſeveral of his party, 292. defeats the Queen, ib. ſummon'd by Q. ELIZABETH, goes to York, to debate the affair of the Q's guilt, 295. gives informations to the diſadvantage of the d. of Norfolk, 298. aſſaſſinated, 306.

STUART [Eſme] favorite of K. JAMES I, ii. 329. made d. of Lenox, 331. character, ib.

STUART of Oghiltry, another favorite of K. JAMES I. ii. 329. made e. of Arran. 331. character, ib. comes over to the Engliſh intereſt, 337.

STUART [Henry] lord Darnley, obtains leave to go into Scotland, ii. 276. married to MARY Q. of Scots, 277. hated by her, ib. cauſes Rizzo, the Q's favorite, to be aſſaſſinated, 278. abandons Rizzo's murderers, 279. treated unworthily by the Q. 281. poiſon'd in his retreat to Glaſgow, but overcomes the poiſon, ib. careſs'd by the Q. and perſuaded to go to Edinburg, 285. murdered, 286. remarks on his cataſtrophe, 283—286. debates on it, 295.—298.

STUART [Arabella] couſin-german of King JAMES I, a plot to ſet her on the throne, ii. 392. dies, 428. ſuſpected to be poiſon'd, ib.

STURTON [lord] ſuſpected of the powder-plot, and fined, ii. 407.

SUBSIDY, a very large one granted to K. EDWARD III, i. 471, n. 2.

SUCCESSION in the houſe of Hanover propoſed by the lords, but oppoſed by the commons, iii. 371. dropp'd on the birth of the d. of Glouceſter, ib. reſolution in the Scotiſh parliament concerning it, 606. act for the ſecurity of it, 642.

SUDBURY [Simon] archbp. of Canterbury, beheaded by Wat Tyler, i. 412.

SUETONIUS PAULINUS, a Roman governor in Britain, i. 9.

SUFFOLK [William de la Pole, e. of] his exploits in France, i. 614 or 625, &c. taken priſoner, 630. negociates a truce, 653. gets K. HENRY VI married to Margaret of Anjou, 654. created marquis, ib. thank'd by the parliament, 655. defends himſelf to the King, 656. made duke, 657. complain'd of, 659. impeached, and ſent to the Tower, but ſoon releaſed, 660. baniſhed, and beheaded in his paſſage, ib.

SUFFOLK [Edmund de la Pole, e. of] nephew of K. EDWARD IV, withdraws to Flanders, but brought back by K. HENRY VII, i. 800. conſpires, and deceived by HENRY, 803. delivered up, and ſent to the Tower, 807. beheaded, ii. 29.

SUFFOLK [two dukes of] die of the ſweating ſickneſs, ii. 216.

SUFFOLK [dukes of] ſee Brandon Charles, and Dorſet, marquis of.

SUFFOLK, Thomas Howard created e. of, ii. 390. made lord treaſurer, 417. accuſed of miſmanagement, and fined 30,000 l. 431.

SUITHELM, K. of Eſſex, i. 65.

SUNDAY, ſports allowed on that day, ii. 434.

SUNDERLAND [e. of, Robert Spencer] made ſecretary of ſtate, iii. 176. preſident of the council, and prime miniſter, 253. turns Papiſt, 256. ſuſpected by K. JAMES, 277. remov'd from all his places, 282.

SUNDERLAND [e. of] ſet at liberty, iii. 347. reflections thereupon, n. 1, ib. reſigns his office of ſecretary of ſtate, 498. accuſed of arbitrary proceedings, n. 1, ib. ſent envoy extraordinary and plenipotentiary to the Imperial court, 632. accompanies the d. of Marlborough to Berlin, 639. diſmiſs'd from his office of ſecretary of ſtate, 711.

SURREY [e. of] lord treaſurer, his character, ii. 6.
SURREY [Henry Howard, e. of] beheaded, ii. 191. character, 192, n. 1.
SUSSEX [kingdom of] abridgment of its hiſtory, i. 68, 69. church of, 92, 93.
SUSSEX [e. of, Henry Ratcliff] general for Q. MARY, obtains the honor to be covered in her preſence, ii. 230.
SUZA taken by monſ. Catinat, iii. 397. retaken by Prince Eugene, 677.
SWAN, ſon of e Goodwin, baniſhed, i. 157. infeſts the Engliſh coaſts, ib. kills e. Beorn, yet obtains a pardon, ib.
SWEATING-ſickneſs in London, i. 756. ii. 50. affects the Engliſh both at home and abroad, 216. account of it, ib. n. 1.
SWEDEN [K. of] demands Princeſs Elizabeth in marriage, but fails, ii. 248.
SWEDEN [K. of] offers his mediation for a peace, iii. 480. his death no hindrance to the treaty, 491.
SWEERS [vice admiral] loſt, iii. 138.
SWENO, K. of Denmark, invades England, i. 140, 141. lands in Cornwal, to be revenged for the maſſacre of the Danes, deſeats the Engliſh, burns ſeveral towns, and withdraws, 142. invades England again, ib. 143. again, when Ethelred leaves the kingdom to him, and he is proclaim'd, 144. taxes the Engliſh, and ſoon after dies, ib.
SWENO, K. of Norway, prepares to invade England, but is prevented, i. 157.
SWITHIN, St. preceptor to K. ETHELWOLPH, i. 137.
SWITHRED, K. of Eſſex, i. 65.
SYNODS and Councils, of Whitby, i. 84. of Oneſteceld, 88. of Hertford, 93. of Hatfield, ib. of Becceanceld, 94. of Berkhamſtead, ib. of Cloveſho, ib. of Calcuith, ib. of Finchale, 95. 2d. of Calcuith, ib. 2d. of Cloveſho, ib. of Grately, 136. of Engſham, 171. of Hebba, ib. of Wincheſter, 251. of London, ib. of Rockingham, 252. national, ib. of London, 398. againſt Becket, ib. of Oxford againſt Publicans, ib. of Weſtminſter, ib. of Armagh in Ireland, 399. of Caſhel, for ſeting the church of Ireland on the ſame foot with that of England, ib. Lateran, in favor of K. JOHN's marriage, ib. aſſembled by Baldwin, ib. of Glouceſter and Weſtminſter, ib. of Canterbury, for the election of an archbiſhop, ib. another, ib. of York, ib. of Weſtminſter, in oppoſition to K. JOHN's prohibition, 400. of Reading, on the Romeſcot, ib. Latran, ib. of Canterbury, to deliver three men to the ſecular power, ib. againſt marriage of prieſts, 401. of St. Paul's, ib. of London, ib. of Reading, ib. of Northampton, ib. of St. Paul's, in which were produced certain conſtitutions brought from Rome, ib. of London, againſt Wickliff, 541 or 538. of Lyons, for receiving the Greeks into the Romiſh communion, 541 or 539. of Reading, to ratify ſome canons of the council of Lyons, ib. of Lambeth, for the inſtruction of prieſts, ib. of Exeter, on tranſubſtantiation, ib. againſt the Templars, 542 or 539. of London, on feſtivals, and confeſſions, ib. of Magfield, on feſtivals, ib. of London, againſt the Monks, ib. of Conſtance, 811. of Baſil, 814.

T

TAAF [lord] ſent with propoſitions concerning the peace of Ireland, and impriſoned, ii. 708.
TABLES, committees ſo called, erected by the Scots male-contents, ii. 576. reject the articles propoſed to them, 580.
TADCASTER and Gisborough fight, ii. 794.
TALBOT [John] his exploits in France, i. 630, 639, 643, 645, 649, 651, 664. made earl of Shrewsbury, 651. ſlain, 665.
TALBOT [colonel Richard] agent for the Iriſh Catholics, petition'd againſt by the commons, iii. 138. made e. of Tyrconnel, and lieutenant-general of the Iriſh army, 250. and privy-counſellor to King JAMES II, 254. See Tyrconnel.
TALENTS, value of the ſeveral kinds of them, i. 150, n.
TALLARD [count] beſieges Rhinefeld, but is obliged to abandon the ſiege, iii. 425. French embaſſador in England, 502. of great ſervice to the beſieged in Keyſerſwart, 555. takes Traerbach, 561. joins the Elector of Bavaria, 616. commands jointly with him at the battle of Hochſtadt, 617. haughtineſs and errors laid to his charge, 618. taken priſoner, 619. with ſeveral other French priſoners brought to England, 628. ſent to Nottingham and Litchfield, 629.
TALMASH's [lieutenant-general] prudence and bravery at the battle of Landen, iii. 435. commands a body of troops deſign'd to deſtroy Breſt harbor, 441. receives his death's wound there, ib. dies at Plymouth, ib. ſuppoſed to be deſignedly ſacrificed, n 3, ib.
TANGIER, preſervation of it recommended to the commons, iii. 201. demoliſh'd, 224.
TARRAGONA ſubdued by the Catalans to CHARLES III, iii. 640.
TATWIN, archbp. of Canterbury, i. 82.
TAUNTON, taken by the marq. of Hertford, ii. 811.
TAYLOR [Rowland] his remarkable execution, ii. 240.
TAXIS, embaſſador from Spain, arrives, ii. 392. ſaid to purchaſe a peace with England, 402.
TEMPLARS [knights] what they were, i. 322, n. extinction of their order, 455.
TEMPLE [ſir William] goes to the Hague, and concludes an alliance with the States, iii. 109. recall'd, on a pretence of giving the King information, 119. publicly recall'd, and permited to ſend for his wife and family, whoſe return occaſions a breach with the Dutch, 123. his converſation with the Prince of Orange, 154. declines treating with the French embaſſador, 158. makes a league with the States, 160. retires from court, 194.
TENNISON [dr. Thomas] attends the d. of Monmouth in his laſt hours, iii. 247. anſwers Popiſh writings in the reign of K. JAMES II, 263. made biſhop of Lincoln, 412. ſucceeds dr. Tillotſon as archbiſhop of Canterbury, 445. reconciles the royal family, n. 1, 446.
TENURES, [ſeveral ſorts of them] i. 321, notes.
TEROUENNE beſieged and taken by King HENRY VIII, ii. 30.
TEST-ACT paſſed, iii. 137. See more concerning it, 142, 146, 148.
TEST-OATH, a neceſſary qualification for all preferments, iii. 333.
TEWKSBURY-battle, i. 710.
THAMES forded by Cæſar, i. 4. dried up, ii. 267.
THANES, what they were, and the ſeveral orders of them, i. 177, 178.
THANKSGIVING for the ſucceſs in Ireland, iii. 399. for the preſervation of their Majeſties, 426. for the peace of Ryſwick, 495. for the ſucceſſes of the war, 573. on account of the victory at Hochſtadt, 625. for the victory at Ramellies, 663. for the Union, 671. for the victory at Malplacquet, 706.
THAUN [count] reduces the kingdom of Naples to the obedience of K. CHARLES III, iii. 678. invades the Papal territories, and brings the holy father to reaſon, 692.
THEOBALD, abbot of Bec, elected archbp. of Canterbury, i. 237.
THEODORUS, archbp. of Canterbury, his character, i. 81.
THEODOSIUS, ſent into Britain, i. 18. he drives the Britons northward, repairs and fortifies London, and augments the Roman provinces, ib.
THIRLBY [Thomas] made biſhop of Norwich, ii. 215. ſent by Q. MARY to degrade Cranmer, 243. ſent plenipotentiary to the congreſs of Cambray, 249, n. 6.
THISTLE [the order of the] reviv'd in Scotland, iii. 605. pretended antiquity of it, n. 1, ib.
THOMPSON [ſir John, bart.] created baron Haverſham, iii. 477.
THOMAS [Valentine] impriſon'd at the requeſt of the Scotiſh embaſſadors, ii. 384. hang'd for calumniating K. JAMES, 391.
THONG-CASTLE built by Hengiſt, i. 29.
THROGMORTON [ſir Nicholas] tried for rebellion againſt Q. MARY, ii. 235. acquited, and jury fined, ib. complains in vain of the Dauphin's uſing the Engliſh arms, 256.
THROGMORTON [ſir John] convicted on the ſame evidence on which his brother was clear'd, ii. 235.
THROCKMORTON [Francis] conſpires againſt Q. ELIZABETH, ii. 337. executed, 338.
THUNGEN [general] retakes Ulm, iii. 623.
THURSTAN, abbot of Ely, betrays that iſle to the Conqueror, i. 206. elected archbp. of York, 230. repels the Scots, who had entered England, 237.
THYNNE [Thomas] murdered in his coach, iii. 215.
THYNNE [ſir Thomas] created viſc. Weymouth, iii. 215.
TILLOTSON [dr. John] dean of Canterbury, obliges the Prince of Orange, iii. n. 3, 154. writes againſt the Papiſts, 263. dean of St. Paul's, made archbp. of Canterbury, 403. his death and character, 445.
TILLY [count Tſerclas de] defeats a French party from Namur, iii. 424.
TINCHEBRAY [ſiege and battle of] i. 228.
TINDAL [William] his tranſlation of the bible burned at London, ii. 137.
TIR-OEN [Hugh O Neal, e. of] begining of his rebellion, ii. 372. formidable in Ireland, 377. obtains a truce of Eſſex, 378. breaks it, and makes great progreſs, 379. receives ſuccor from Spain, 385. defeated, ib. ſubmits, 386. quits Ireland on pretence of religion, 410.
TITLES of K. WILLIAM and Q. MARY, acknowledged by moſt of the potentates of Europe, iii. 364.
TITULUS, K. of Eſtanglia, i. 44.
TITUS, his bravery in Britain, i. 7.
TIVOLI [Nicholas bp. of] the Pope's legate, arrives in England, i. 313. propoſes to K. JOHN a ſecond reſignation of his crown, ib. abuſes his power, ib.
TOLEDO declares for K. CHARLES III, but is obliged to return to the allegiance of K. PHILIP, iii. 656.
TOLERATION [univerſal] eſtabliſhed in Scotland, iii. 334. how received in England, ib. [act of] rejected by the parliament of Scotland, 582.
TOMKINS, a weaver, burnt for hereſy, ii. 240.
TOMPKINS [mr.] in a plot to force the parliament to peace, ii. 823. hanged, ib.
TONAGE and Poundage, remonſtrances of the commons concerning it, ii. 539. ſpeeches of K. CHARLES on the ſame ſubject, 540, 542. merchants refuſe to pay it, and have their goods ſeiz'd, 541, 544.
TONGE [dr. Ezrael] diſcovers the Popiſh plot to the King, iii. 162. his character, 163. examin'd, 165. has a lodging alloted him in Whitehall, ib.
TONSTAL [Cuthbert] burns Tindal's tranſlation of the bible, ii. 137. firſt biſhop of London, afterwards of Durham, 195. his character, ib. indeavors to reſtore Popery, 198. an attempt to get him condemned, 219. deprived, and ſee ſuppreſſed, 220. reſtored, 229.
TORCY [the marq. de] comes to Holland to treat of a peace, iii. 699. agrees to preliminaries, but refuſes afterwards to ſign them, ib. abſtract of them, ib. the negociations broke off, 700. makes farther propoſals, 709. letter to mr. Pettecum, ib.
TORIES and WHIGS, origin of the parties, ii. 447. of the names, iii. 195. diſſertation on their riſe, progreſs, views, ſtrength, intereſt and characters, 311—330.
TORIES, pleaſed at the elevation of King CHARLES II's power, iii. 226. conceive a high opinion of K. JAMES II, 236.
TORRINGTON [e. of] cruiſes unſucceſsfully, iii. 377. commands the Engliſh fleet at the fight off of Beachy, 390. his conduct blamed, blamed, n. 5, ib. commited to the Tower, and tried by a court-martial, but acquited, 391.

TORTONA reduced by the d. of Savoy, iii. 661.
TORTOSA ſubdued by the Catalans to King CHARLES III, iii. 640. retaken by the d. of Orleans, 693.
TOSTO, e. of Northumberland, brother of HAROLD II, driven out of his government by the Northumbrians, i. 162. a barbarous action of his, ib. prepares to diſturb his brother, but is defeated by Morkar, 165. ſlain, 167.
TOULON, a deſign on that place concerted, iii. 676. the confederate army appears before it, ib. the Engliſh fleet comes into the road, 677. the town and harbor bombarded, ib. the ſiege raiſed, ib.
TOURNAMENT, at Chalons, i. 406. at Windſor, and the deſign of it, 475.
TOURNAY, beſieged by EDWARD III, i. 472. beſieged and taken by K. HENRY VIII, ii. 30. treaty concerning it, 36, 42, 49, 50, 51, 53. Wolſey made adminiſtrator of its ſee, 35. its biſhop reſtored by the Pope, 42. reſtored to the French, 53.
TOURNAY beſieged and taken by the allies, iii. 701.
TOURVILLE [monſ. de] commands the French fleet at the fight off of la Hogue, iii. 420. deſtroys the Engliſh and Dutch Smyrna fleet, 431.
TOWER OF LONDON, built by WILLIAM the Conqueror, i. 209. a wall built round it, 221.
TOWNSHEND [Horatio] created viſc. Townſhend, iii. 215.
TOWTON-battle, i. 686.
TRAERBACH taken by the French, iii. 561. retaken by the Prince of Heſſe-Caſſel, 624.
TRAIL-BATON [commiſſion of] to puniſh miſdemeanors of great men in poſts, i. 436.
TRANSUBSTANTIATION, abridgment of the antient diſputes about it, i. 253. reflections thereon, ib. diſpute concerning it between the Popiſh and Proteſtant clergy, ii. 233.
TRAQUAIR [John Stuart, e. of] ſent high commiſſioner into Scotland, ii. 585. his inſtructions, 586.
TREATIES [remarkable] between England and France, for the quiting of England by Lewis the French K's ſon, i. 338. to terminate all diſputes, 462. between EDWARD III and K. JOHN of France, rejected by the States of France, 485. of Bretigny, between EDWARD III and France, 486, 487, 488. between HENRY IV and the Orleans faction, 568 or 565. between HENRY V and the d. of Burgundy, 598 or 589. of Troye, between K. HENRY V of England, and K. CHARLES VI of France, 598, 599, or 590, 591. of Amiens, between EDWARD IV, and LEWIS XI, 718. with the ducheſs of Bretagne, 774. with CHARLES VIII of France, 783. between HENRY VIII, and FERDINAND of Arragon, ii. 18. three, between HENRY VIII, and LEWIS XII of France, 37. of Bruges, between CHARLES V Emperor, and HENRY VIII, 69. of Madrid, between CHARLES V Emperor, and FRANCIS I K. of France, 88. three, between K. HENRY VIII, and FRANCIS I of France, 94. three more, 96, 97. between England and France, 186. for the reſtoring of Boulogne, 214. of marriage, between Q. MARY and Philip ſon of CHARLES V, Emperor, 233. between Q. ELIZABETH and the French, 255. and the Scots, 256. of Edinburg, between ELIZABETH and the Scots, 264, 345. between England, France, and the States, 373. between England and the States, 378. between England and Spain, 402. between England and Scotland, 662. for a ceſſation of arms between King and parliament, 800—805. for a peace, 805, 806, 807. between England and Scotland, 818. at Uxbridge between King and parliament, 849—856. between England and the Dutch, iii. 102.
TREBELLIUS, a Roman governor in Britain, i. 11.
TRENT [council of] called by pope Paul III, ii. 171. opens, and remarks on it, 185. affairs of, continued, 187.
TRESILIAN [judge] his cruelty, i. 514. favored by K. RICHARD II, 515. declares the King to be above law, 520. hang'd, 522.
TREVISA [John de] his character, i. 543 or 541.
TREVOR [ſir John] made ſecretary of State, iii. 112. choſen ſpeaker of the houſe of commons, 240.
TREVOR [ſir John] choſen ſpeaker of the houſe of commons, iii. 384. expell'd the houſe for bribery, 450.
TRIALS in caſes of high-treaſon, a bill for regulating them paſſes the houſe of commons, iii. 412. amendments to it in the houſe of lords diſagreed to by the commons, with the debates on both ſides, ib. the bill dropp'd, 414. dropp'd a ſecond time, 427. paſſes both houſes, 464. has the royal aſſent, 467.
TRIENNIAL act paſſed, iii. 445.
TRIMOUILLE [la] favorite of CHARLES VII of France, his exploits, i. 630, &c. ruin'd, 637.
TRIMOUILLE [la] ſent by LEWIS XII into Italy, ii. 28. repulſed by the Swiſſers at Novara, ib. treats without his Sovereign's participation, 31.
TRINOVANTES, the inhabitants of Middleſex and Eſſex, i. introd. xi. n. they ſubmit to Cæſar, i. 4.
TRIPLE-alliance between England, Holland, and Sweden, iii. 109.
TRUMP [Martin Van] admiral of the Dutch, ingages admiral Blake in the channel, iii. 23. his fleet diſperſed, ib. fights again, ib. again for three days, 24. beaten and ſlain, 26.
TRUMP [Cornelius Van] commands under Obdam, iii. 94. under de Ruyter, 98. removed, ib.
TRUSSEL [Judge] attorney for the people at the reſignation of EDWARD II, makes a formal renunciation of his obedience to that Prince, i. 445.
TRUTH, methods uſed by the Saxons to diſcover it, i. 190.
TRYTHING and Tything courts, i. 179.
TUDA, biſhop of the Northumbrians, i. 86.
TUDOR [Owen] marries Catherine, dowager of HENRY V, i. 642. ſent to the Tower, ib. iſſue, ib. beheaded, 675. See HENRY VII, and Jaſper e. of Pembroke.
TULLIBARDINE [e. of] lord high commiſſioner in Scotland, iii. 478.
TUMULTS of the London populace, ii. 711, 713. of the women, 825. at London, 908.
TURBERVILLE, an evidence in the Popiſh plot, iii. 198. his depoſitions, 202, 203, &c.
TURENNE [marſhal] killed, iii. 147.
TURENNE [Prince de] killed at the battle of Steenkirk, iii. 424.
TURIN beſieged by the French, iii. 661. defended by general Thaun, ib. the ſiege raiſed by Prince Eugene, ib.
TURKETULE re-eſtabliſhes the abby of Croyland, i. 134. is refuſed an azyle, ib. his reputation, 139.
TURKIL, made d. of Eſtanglia by Canutus, i. 148.
TURNER [dr.] moves in the houſe of commons to have the d. of Buckingham examined, ii. 500.
TUTCHIN [John] author of the Obſervator, proceedings againſt him, iii. 605.
TWEEDALE [marq. of] lord high commiſſioner in Scotland, iii. 457. preſents a national petition to K. WILLIAM, 518. a ſecond time lord high commiſſioner, 606.
TWENTY-FOUR commiſſioners eſtabliſhed by the parliament of Oxford to reform abuſes, i. 379. forbid ſending to forein incumbents the revenues of Engliſh benefices, 381.
TYRCONNEL [e. of] ſeizes moſt of the important places in Ireland, for King JAMES, iii. 364. made a duke by King JAMES, 365. ſtops the maintenance of the univerſity of Dublin, 368. dies at Limerick, n. 4, 406.
TYRONE declares for King WILLIAM, and takes Waterford, iii. 376. taken priſoner at Cork, 395.
TYRREL, a French knight, ſhoots William Rufus, i. 221.
TYTHES, charter of Ethelwolph for paying them, i. 134.

VU

VACANCY of the throne, debates thereupon, in the convention, iii. 343.
VALENCIA beſieged, iii. 381. ſubmits to King CHARLES III, 640.
VALENTINE [Benjamin] impriſon'd, ii. 544.
VANDALS, defeated by e. Goodwin, i. 149.
VANE [ſir Ralph] executed for a pretended conſpiracy, ii. 218.
VANE [ſir Henry] ſecretary of ſtate, choſen one of the commitee of ſafety, 54. excepted out of the act of indemnity, 67. condemned and executed, 83.
VANNES [Peter] and ſir Francis Brian, ſent to Rome about K. HENRY's divorce, ii. 108.
VASSAL [mr.] an embargo laid on his effects, for refuſing to pay tonage and poundage, ii. 541.
VAUBAN's [ingineer] letter to the French King, concerning the harbor of Breſt, iii. n. 2, 441.
VAUCLAIR, lieutenant of Calais, refuſes the e of Warwick admittance, i. 701. made governor, ib.
VAUDEMONT [Pr.] makes a fine retreat, iii. 461. gives K. WILLIAM notice of the intended invaſion, 470.
VAUGHAN [capt. Thomas] executed for high-treaſon, iii. 490.
UBBA, the Dane, his exploits and death, i. 109, 110.
VECTIUS BOLANUS, a Roman governor in Britain, i. 11.
VENANT [St.] taken by the allies, iii. 713.
VENABLES [mr.] ſent againſt the Spaniards in the Weſt-Indies, iii 32. miſcarries, and is impriſon'd at his return. 33.
VENDÔME [d. de] beats the Spaniards at Oſtalric, iii. 481. takes Verceil, Yvrea and Verrue, 624. Nice and Villa Franca, 640. ſent to command in Flanders, 653. commands there under the d. of Burgundy, 686.
VENETIAN affairs, an account of them, ii. 9, 10, &c. views of that ſtate, 24.
VENICE [Doge of] writes a letter to cardinal Wolſey, ii. 56.
VENLO beſieged by the Prince of Naſſau Saarbruck, iii. 557. a deſcription of the place, n. 3, ib. ſurrender'd by capitulation, 558.
VENUTIUS, K. of the Brigantes, enters into an alliance with the Romans, i. 8.
VERAC, agent of France, who was ſent to foment the Scots diviſions, taken at Scarborough, ii. 322.
VERANIUS, a Roman governor in Britain, i. 9.
VERCEIL taken by the d. de Vendôme, iii. 624.
VERE [ſir Francis] his bravery in the Cadiz expedition, ii. 373, n. 2; 3. ſent embaſſador to the States, 376. diſtinguiſhes himſelf at the battle of Newport, 380. and at the ſiege of Oſtend, 384.
VERE [ſir Horatio] leads a few troops to aſſiſt the Elector Palatine, ii. 441.
VERNEUIL-battle, in which the French are defeated, i. 618 or 610. the place taken, ib.
VERRUE taken by the d. of Vendôme, iii. 624.
UFFA, firſt K. of the Eſt-angles, i. 44.
VICTORINUS ſent into Britain, i. 19.
VICTUALLERS of the fleet turn'd out of their imploy, iii. 381.
VIGO, the French fleet and Spaniſh gallions deſtroy'd there, iii. 567. reflections on that expedition, n. 3, 569.
VILLADARIAS [the marq. de] account of the expedition to Cadiz, iii. n. 3, 567.
VILLAFRANCA taken by the d. de Vendôme, iii. 640.

VILLARS [marſh. de] lays the circles of Swabia and Franconia under contribution, iii. 678. outwitted in his own way, n. 2, 700. defeated at the battle of Malplacquet, 702. deceiv'd by the d. of Marlborough, 722. forms two deſigns, but ſucceeds in neither, 723. an inſtance of his vanity, with verſes on that occaſion, n. 2, ib. proclaims a ſuſpenſion of arms with England, 737. takes Marchiennes, fort Scarpe, Douay, Queſnoy, and Bouchain, 738. with Prince Eugene, concludes a peace between the Emperor and France, 745.

VILLEROY commands the French army in Flanders, iii. 460. attempts to ſurprize Prince Vaudemont, 461. takes Dixmuyde and Deynſe, ib. bombards Bruſſels, ib. taken priſoner at Cremona, 537. a deſign of his fruſtrated, 589. retreats before the d. of Marlborough, 637. is defeated at the battle of Ramellies, 649. his precipitate flight, 650.

VILLIERS [George] an account of him, ii. 424. made cup-bearer to K. JAMES I, ib. commits a miſdemeanor, pardon'd, and recommended by the Queen, 425. made gentleman of the bed-chamber, and highly favour'd, ib. inſtructed by Abbot, ib. rules all at court, 428, 435. created e. of Buckingham, 432. and privy-counſellor of Scotland, 434. letter to Gondomar concerning the Palatinate, 442. his mother in great power, 443. goes to Spain with Prince Charles, 468. created d. of Buckingham, 473. returns home with the Prince, 475. explains the pretended reaſons for breaking off the match with Spain, and is applauded, 478. ſuſpected by the King, and like to be diſcarded, 481. procures the diſgrace of the lord-treaſurer and the e. of Briſtol, 482. ſuſpected of K. JAMES's death, 487, 489. becomes favorite to K. CHARLES, 489. ſpeech to explain one of that King's, 503. informed of his intended proſecution, 505. declaration againſt him, 506. choſen chancellor of Cambridge, 508. ſupported by the King, anſwers the commons charge, ib. expedition to the Iſle of Rhee, 520. murdered by Felton at his return, 541.

VILLIERS [George] d. of Buckingham, ſon of the former, defeated near Kingſton, ii. 910. one of the cabal, iii. 116. character, ib. ſent embaſſador to France, 118. queſtions propoſed to him by the parliament, 141. makes a ſpeech, to prove the parliament diſſolv'd, 151. ſent to the Tower, but ſoon releaſed, ib. dies, 262.

VILLIERS [ſir Edward] created a baron and viſcount of England, iii. 402. nam'd plenipotentiary for a treaty of peace, 489. made e. of Jerſey, and embaſſador extraordinary to the States-general, 494.

VIRGIL [Polydore] archdeacon of Wells, permited to retire into Italy, and enjoy his benefices, ii. 215.

VISCOUNT, origin of that title, i. 177.

ULFKETEL, d. of Eſtanglia, defeated by the Danes, i. 142, 144. his character, 143.

ULNOTH, a Saxon lord, purſued by Brithrick, i. 143.

ULM ſeiz'd by the Elector of Bavaria, iii. 561. a deſcription of the place, n. 2, ib. retaken by general Thungen, 623.

ULPIUS MARCELLUS, a Roman governor in Britain, i. 14. his ſucceſs, ib.

ULSTER [e. of] v. John de Courcy.

UNION of England and Scotland propoſed, and preſſed by K. JAMES I, ii. 401. debated on, 409. rejected, ib. propos'd by K. WILLIAM, iii. 518. a bill brought into parliament for that purpoſe dropp'd, ib. an act inabling her Majeſty to appoint commiſſioners for that purpoſe, 550. the like act paſs'd in Scotland, 553. commiſſioners appointed purſuant to thoſe acts, and their proceedings, ib. a ſtop put to the progreſs of them, ib. reſolution of the Scotiſh parliament concerning it, 606. an act to forward it paſs'd it England, 643. commiſſioners again appointed, 661. meet and agree upon preliminaries, ib. articles of the Union agreed on, 662. an abſtract of them, ib. proceedings in Scotland concerning it, 664. tumults on that account, ib. petition againſt it, ib. the articles burnt, ib. ratified in Scotland, 665. debates on them in the houſe of commons of England, 669. proceedings thereupon in the houſe of lords, ib. ratified in England, ib. the Scots indeavor to diſſolve it, 741.

UNIVERSITIES, moſt of them decide in favor of K. HENRY's divorce, ii. 116. remarks on their conduct herein, 131.

VORSTIUS [Conrad] ſucceeds Arminius in his profeſſorſhip, ii. 415. declaration againſt him by K. JAMES I, 416.

VORTIGERN elected King of the Britons, i. 22. his character, ib. he calls in the Saxons to aſſiſt him againſt the northern nations, 23. gives Hengiſt ſome lands, and adviſes the Saxons to ſettle in Britain, 29, 30. falls in love with Rowena, and gives her father the county of Kent, 30. the Britons diſlike him, ib. his wars with the Saxons, 32, 33. he divides the kingdom with Ambroſius, 33. the Britons turn their arms againſt him, and burn him in a caſtle of Cambria, 35.

VORTIMER, the ſon of Vortigern, made his father's collegue, i. 32. his enmity to the Saxons, 31, 32. his death, 33.

VOWEL [Peter] conſpires againſt Cromwell, iii. 28. hanged, ib.

UTHRED, e. of Northumberland, ravages the counties which take part with the Danes, i. 145. ſurrenders to Canutus, who cauſes him to be ſlain, 146.

UTRECHT, union of, concluded, ii. 329.

UTRECHT fix'd upon for the congreſs to treat of a general peace, iii. 727. the congreſs opened, 731. propoſals made by the French, received with indignation, 734. her Majeſty's ſpecific demands, ib. a difference concerning the manner of treating, ib. the conferences ſuſpended, ib. the treaty of peace concluded and ſign'd, 739. the Emperor's miniſter proteſts againſt it, ib. abſtract of it, 740. proclaim'd, 741. communicated to the houſe of commons, ib. abſtract of the treaty between Great-Britain and Spain, 743.

UXBRIDGE treaty, ii. 849—856.

W

WADE [ſir William] clerk of the council, ſent embaſſador to Spain, ii. 338. to the Queen of Scots, ib.

WADE [captain Cooper] ſhot for cowardice, iii. 564.

WAGER's [commodore, now ſir Charles] ſucceſs in the Weſt-Indies, iii. 693.

WAGSTAFF [ſir Joſeph] conſpires againſt Cromwell, iii. 31. ſurpriſes Salisbury, ib. defeated, but eſcapes, 32.

WAKE [dr.] made biſhop of Lincoln, iii. 631.

WAKES and Revels, ſupported by K. CHARLES, ii. 559. offenſive to the Puritans, ib.

WAKEFIELD [battles of] i. 764. ii. 813.

WAKEMAN [ſir George] tried for the Popiſh-plot, iii. 193. but acquited, ib.

WALCOT [captain] tried and condemned for the Rye-houſe-plot, iii. 217, 218. executed, 220.

WALCOURT, the battle of, iii. 377.

WALDECK [Pr. of] loſes the battle of Flerus, iii. 397. offers Luxemburg battle a ſecond time, ib.

WALDEGRAVE [James, lord] ſent embaſſador to France, iii. 289.

WALES, the Britons retreat thither, i. 45. acquiſitions of the Engliſh there, 217. expeditions of WILLIAM RUFUS thither, 218, 219, 220. [affairs of] 358, 361. ſubdued by EDWARD I, and united to England, 409. expeditions of HENRY IV thither, 555 or 553, 554.

WALES [Pr. of, Lleweline] a peace concluded with him, i. 319. does homage to K. HENRY III, and puts himſelf under his protection, 355. offers to become vaſſal to the Pope, 361. found a dangerous neighbour to the Engliſh, 406. excuſes himſelf from doing homage, ib. attack'd by EDWARD I, ſubmits to hard terms, 407. defeated and ſlain, 409. head ſet upon the Tower of London, ib.

WALES [pretended Pr. of] his birth, iii. 339. inquiry into his ſuppoſititious birth ſet on foot, but dropp'd, 343.

WALEYS [William] ſpirits up the Scots to take arms, i. 432. drives the Engliſh out of Scotland, and is declared regent by the army, ib. beat at Falkirk by K. EDWARD I, ib. confers with Robert Bruce, and diveſts himſelf of the regency, ib. haraſſes K. EDWARD, by whom he is unfairly put to death, 435.

WALKER [mr. George, rector of Donaghmore] raiſes a regiment for the ſervice of K. WILLIAM, iii. 385. defends the long cauſey at Londonderry, with great courage, ib. choſen governor of Londonderry, ib. defends that city with great bravery, 366. performs the functions of governor, captain, ſoldier and divine, ib. lays down his commiſſion, after the raiſing of the ſiege, and goes to England, 367. receives the thanks of the houſe of commons, n. 1, ib. kill'd at the battle of the Boyne, 388.

WALKER [captain] ſucceſsful at Guadelupe, iii. 584. [ſir Hovendon] unſucceſsful expedition to Canada, 724. reflections on that expedition, n. 1, 2, 725.

WALLER [Edmund] an account of his plot, ii. 822. fined and baniſh'd, 824.

WALLER [ſir William] takes Farnham, Winchester, Chicheſter, &c. ii. 794. defeats lord Herbert of Ragland, 808. joins Eſſex before Reading, ib. ſent into the Weſt, 811. defeated by the e. of Hertford at Lanſdown, 812. beſieges the Devizes, ib. defeated at Roundway-down, ib. quarrels with Eſſex, ib. ſent again into the Weſt, 839. has a few skirmiſhes with lord Hopton, ib. wins the battle of Arlesford, 840. follows the King, whom he ingages at Cropedy-bridge, 841. his army recruited, 844. takes the field again, 846. preſent at the ſecond battle of Newbury, ib.

WALLER [ſir Hardreſs] one of the commiſſioners appointed to treat with the army, ii. 883.

WALLER [ſir William] finds the model of a pretended plot in a meal-tub, and thence calls it the Meal-tub-plot, iii. 194.

WALLISHLAND, a name given by the Saxons to Cambria, now Wales, i. 45.

WALSINGHAM [Thomas] the hiſtorian, i. 822. n.

WALSINGHAM [ſir Francis] a creature of lord Burleigh's, ſent embaſſador to France, ii. 311. againſt Q. ELIZABETH's marriage with the d. of Anjou, 332. ſent embaſſador to the King of Scots, 336. diſcovers a conſpiracy, which haſtens the Queen of Scots trial, 346, 347. contrives to retard the Spaniſh expedition, 359, n. 3. dies very poor, 365.

WALTER [archbiſhop of York] his character, i. 403.

WALTERS [Lucy] the d. of Monmouth's mother, reported to have been lawfully married to K. CHARLES II, iii. 196.

WALTHOFF, ſon of e. Siward, defends York againſt K. WILLIAM I, i. 204. the King pardons him, and gives him his niece in marriage, ib. created e. of Northampton and Huntingdon, ib. made e. of Northumberland, ib. 207. ingages in a conſpiracy, of which he repents and informs the King, 208. pardon revoked, and he is beheaded, 209. deem'd a martyr, ib.

WALWORTH [William] mayor of London, kills Wat-Tyler in Smithfield, i. 513.

WAR begun with great diſadvantages on the ſide of the allies, iii. 554.

WARREN [John de Warren, e. of] makes a reſolute anſwer to K. EDWARD's officers, i. 408.

WARREN [John de Warren, e. of] enters into a confederacy againſt K. EDWARD II, i. 442.

WARHAM [William] archbiſhop of Canterbury, informs K. HENRY VIII of Wolſey's oppreſſions, ii. 55.

WARWICK [Guy de Beauchamp, e. of] enters into a confederacy againſt K. EDWARD II, i. 442. his violent procedure with regard to Piers Gaveſton, 443. refuſes to ſerve ſerve the King againſt the Scots, 444.

WARWICK [Thomas de Beauchamp, e. of] made ſole governor of King RICHARD II, i. 511. ſeized, and ſent to the Tower, 525. condemned, and baniſhed, 526.
WARWICK [Richard de Beauchamp, e. of] commands in France for HENRY VI, i. 623 or 614, &c. made governor to K. HENRY VI, 627 or 618.
WARWICK [Richard Nevil, e. of] his exploits in favor of the d. of York, 666—676. gets Edward e. of March, ſon of the d. of York, elected King, 676. concludes the K's marriage with Bona of Savoy, 693. reſents his marrying Elizabeth Woodville, ib. withdraws from court extremely incenſed, 696. draws his own brothers, and the d. of Clarence into the deſign of dethroning EDWARD, 698. partiſans routed, ib. routs the Royaliſts, 699. declares for the rebels, 700. takes K. EDWARD, who eſcapes, ib. retires to France, and treats with Q. MARGARET, 701. returns to England, frees, and reſtores K. HENRY, 702, 703. Clarence and he declared governors of the kingdom, 704. made high-admiral, 706. deſerted by Clarence, 707. defeated and ſlain, 708, 709.
WARWICK [Edward Plantagenet, e. of] ſon of George duke of Clarence, ſent to the Tower, i. 755. ſhewn in public, to ſatisfy the people, who take Simnel for him, 764. conſpires with Perkin Warbeck, and beheaded, 798.
WARWICK [e. of] ſee John Dudley.
WARWICK [Robert Rich, e. of] high admiral of the parliament's army, purſues the Pr. of Wales to Helvoetſluys, ii. 909. ſides with the army and the Independents, 930.
WARWICK [Edward, e. of] tried for the murder of Richard Coote, Eſq; and found guilty of man-ſlaughter, iii. 510.
WASHINGTON [colonel] makes a breach in the walls of Briſtol, ii. 809.
WAT TYLER kills a collector of the poll-tax, i. 512. marches to London at the head of 100,000 men, and beheads the archbp. of Canterbury, nobility, judges, &c. ib. meets K. RICHARD II, in Smithfield, and is killed by the mayor of London, 513.
WATERFORD ſurrenders to K. WILLIAM, iii. 392.
WATSON [dr.] deprived of the biſhopric of St. David's for ſimony, iii. 631.
WEAVERS uproar, iii. 374.
WEBB [major-general] gains the ever memorable battle and victory of Wynendale, iii. 690. his juſt encomium, 691.
WELLS [lord] beheaded, i. 701.
WELLS [ſir Robert] raiſes troops in Lincolnſhire for the e. of Warwick, i. 700. defeated, and beheaded, 701.
WELSH, pay tribute to WILLIAM the Conqueror, i 209. defeat the Engliſh, 235. wars with the Engliſh, 217, 218, 219, 220, 260, 344. riſe in favor of King RICHARD II, but disband again on his not coming to join them, 529 or *527. rebel under Owen Glendour, 553 or 551. beaten by Prince Henry, 560 or 558. combine in favor of K. CHARLES, ii. 907.
WELWOOD [dr.] cenſured for a pamphlet call'd Mercurius Reformatus, iii. 411. made Phyſician in ordinary to King WILLIAM, n. 3, ib.
WENTWORTH [William, lord] tried for the ſurrender of Calais, and acquited, ii. 247.
WENTWORTH [ſir Thomas] his ſpeech concerning grievances, ii. 523. goes over to the K's party, and made preſident of the council at York, 556. lieutenant-general of the army, deputy of Ireland, and e. of Strafford, 592. ſubſcribes 20,000 l. for the King, ib. complain'd of, 645, 664. accuſed of high-treaſon, 645. ſent to the Tower, ib. attainted, 664. petitioned againſt, ib. trial, 671—676. articles againſt him, 672—675. letter to the King, 677. beheaded, ib. reaſons for and againſt him, ib. 678.
WEREFRED, St. biſhop of Worceſter, i. 138.
WESSEX [kingdom of] abridgment of its hiſtory, i. 69—75. [church of] 89, 90.
WEST-INDIES, ill ſucceſs of our expeditions thither, iii. 395. Scotiſh act for carrying on a trade thither, to Africa and the Eaſt-Indies, 457. oppoſed by the parliament in England, 467. the directors order'd to be impeach'd, 468. uneaſy at the ſtop of their ſubſcriptions, 503. their petition to the Scotiſh parliament, ib. addreſſes on this account to K. WILLIAM, ib. they ſetle a colony at Darien, ib. their letter to the lord Seafield, 510. his anſwer, by direction of K. WILLIAM, 511.
WESTMINSTER [hall] built, i. 221. [church] rebuilt, 340.
WESTMINSTER [abbot of] flying for a conſpiracy, dies with fear, i. 551 or 550.
WESTMINSTER-conference, concerning a peace between K. EDWARD IV and the e. of Warwick, i. 700. concerning matters of religion, ii. 255.
WESTMINSTER-aſſembly, ii. 814, &c. write to the churches abroad in defence of the parliament, 834.
WESTMORELAND [Ralph Nevil, e. of] rewarded by K. HENRY IV, i. 544 or 543. takes the heads of a conſpiracy by ſtratagem, 559.
WESTMORELAND [Charles Nevil, e. of] takes Scarborough, and makes Stafford the rebel priſoner, ii. 246. conſpires againſt Q. ELIZABETH and ſecretary Cecil, 299. outlaw'd, 301.
WESTON conveys poiſon to ſir Thomas Overbury, ii. 420.
WESTON [ſir Richard] his embaſſy to Bruſſels, ii. 462. made e. of Portland, and lord high-treaſurer, 541.
WHARTON [Thomas, lord] ſent to the Tower for a ſpeech in the houſe of lords, iii. 151.
WHARTON [miſs] an heireſs, carried away, iii. 399.
WHARTON [e. of] made lord lieutenant of Ireland, 693. delivers up his commiſſion, iii. 712.
WHEELER [ſir Francis] commands a ſquadron in America, iii. 433. drowned in the Streights, 440.
WHETSTONE [rear-admiral] ſucceſsful in the Weſt-Indies, iii. 584.
WHIGS and TORIES, origin of the parties ſo called, ii. 447. of the names, iii. 195. diſſertation on their riſe, progreſs, views, ſtrength, intereſts, and characters, 311—330.
WHITEBREAD [Thomas] provincial of the Jeſuits, tried for the Popiſh plot, iii. 173. executed, 174.
WHITEBREAD [the Jeſuit] apprehended, iii. 180. tried, 189. executed, 191. proteſtation at the gallows, ib.
WHITEHALL-PALACE, obtain'd by K. HENRY VIII, ii. 127. n. 2. a fire there, iii. 402. wholly deſtroy'd by fire, excepting the banqueting-houſe, 498.
WHITELOCK [Bulſtrode] one of the commiſſioners appointed to treat with the King, ii. 849. one of the commiſſioners of ſafety, iii. 54. n. 1. dies, 149.
WHITBY, council of, i. 84.
WHITGIFT [John] archbiſhop of Canterbury, dies, ii. 394. character, ib.
WHITTINGTON [Richard] mayor of London, i. 570 or 567.
WHITWORTH [Charles, eſq;] appointed embaſſador extraordinary to the Czar of Muſcovy, iii. 717.
WIBBA, K. of Mercia, i. 59.
WICKHAM [William of] biſhop of Winchester, i. 570 or 567.
WICKLIFF [John] begins to publiſh his doctrines, and occaſions a commotion, i. 498. explains his opinions about the Euchariſt, and is ſilenced, 499. account of him, 538 or 536. articles maintain'd by him, 539 or 536. much followed, 539 or 537. ſummon'd to St. Paul's, and ſupported by the d. of Lancaſter and the lord marſhal, ib. proſecution poſtpon'd, 540 or 537. cited to Lambeth, but ſuffered to paſs the reſt of his life quietly, ib. followers increaſe, 540 or 538. books ordered to be burned, 566 or 563.
WICKLIFFITES, vindicated, with regard to Wat Tyler's rebellion, i. 514. ſeparate from the reſt of the church, 540 or 538. preſent a memorial to the parliament, ib. See Lollards.
WIDDRINGTON [lord] defeated, ii. 813.
WIDRED and SWABERT, Kings of Kent, i. 67.
WIGHT [Iſle of] K. CHARLES I eſcapes thither, ii. 892. treats there with the Scots, 869, &c. removed thence, 927.
WIGHARD, archbp. of Canterbury, i. 81.
WILDMAN [major] taken up by Cromwell's order, iii. 31. a declaration found in his houſe, ib. excepted out of a general pardon, 279. his memorial concerning the Pretender's birth, 280.
WILFORD [William] ſails to Britany without commiſſion, and revenges an affront given by the Britons, i. 558 or 556.
WILFRID, biſhop of the Northumbrians, ſupplanted, i. 86. reſtored, 87. depoſed, 88. made biſhop of Hagulſtadt, ib. converts the South-Saxons, 92.
WILL, pretended one of EDWARD the Confeſſor, in favor of William the Baſtard, i. 159. of HENRY VIII, ii 190, 191, 193.
WILLIAM the Baſtard, acknowledg'd d. of Normandy, i. 196. war with France, ib. comes into England to viſit K. EDWARD, 159, 197. indeavors to gain Harold to his intereſt, 161. prepares to invade England, 165. ſends an embaſſy without ſucceſs, ib. ſupplied with mony by private men, and ingages ſome neighboring Princes in his cauſe, 166. makes a deſcent into England, 167. contents of his manifeſto, ib. ſends another embaſſy to inſult Harold, which Harold returns, ib. ſends four propoſals, which are all rejected, 168. ſtratagem in the battle of Haſtings, by which he defeats Harold, 169. conduct after the battle, ib. 197. conſiderations on his expedition to England, 194. takes Dover, 197, 198. approaches London, and is perplex'd, 198. the clergy his friends, ib. the keys of London preſented him, 199. the crown offer'd him, which after ſome pauſe he accepts, ib. crown'd by Stigand, archbiſhop of Canterbury, ib. coronation oath, ib. reflection on his good fortune, ib. 200. makes a diſtribution of Harold's treaſures, 200. receives preſents from the people, and confirms their privileges, ib. miſtruſts the Engliſh, ib. founds Battle-abby, and then takes a tour into Normandy, ib. his regents oppreſs the people, 201. cauſes of the miſunderſtanding between him and the Engliſh, ib. renews the Danegelt, ib. which is rigorouſly executed, 202. beſieges Exeter, which had revolted, and pardons the inhabitants, ib. confiſcates the eſtates of Harold's friends, ib. receives the ſubmiſſion of Edwin and Morkar, who had rebell'd, 203. builds citadels in the principal towns, ib. diſarms the Engliſh, and eſtabliſhes the Corſue, ib. proclamation in favor of the Normans, ib. marches againſt the Danes, and bribes their general to withdraw, 204. waſtes Northumberland, ib. gives the Engliſh eſtates and imployments to foreiners with great profuſeneſs, 205. violates the charters of the clergy, and robs the monaſteries, ib. depoſes ſeveral biſhops and abbots, ib. appeaſes two inſurrections, 206. ſeverity to the rebels, 207. marches into Scotland, and concludes a peace with the Scotiſh King, ib. goes to defend Normandy from the French, ib. refuſes homage to the Pope, and forbids his ſubjects to own any Pope without his approbation, 208. cruſhes a plot in the begining, ib. cruelty to the conſpirators, 209. goes to Normandy, and brings his ſon Robert, who had rebell'd, to ſubmiſſion, ib. builds the Tower of London, ib. inrols every man's eſtates and effects in the doom's day-book, 210. revenues, ib. makes new foreſt, ib. erects new courts of juſtice, ib. attempts to aboliſh the Engliſh language, 211. partiality to the Normans, ib. taxes his ſubjects for a defence againſt the Danes, and again on the knighting of Prince Henry, ib. makes war againſt France, 212. falls ill, acknowledges his uſurpation, and dies, ib. character and children, 213. remarks on his title of Conqueror, ib.

WILLIAM RUFUS, or red-hair, ſon of the Conqueror, recommended to the people by his father, i. 212. intrigues for ſecuring the crown, 214. crown'd, ib. [II K. of England] character, ib. a conſpiracy againſt him, in favor of his eldeſt brother Robert, ib. the conſpirators take up arms, and ſeize diverſe places, whereupon he attacks and takes his uncle Odo, 215. baniſhes the biſhop of Durham, and puts an end to the affair, ib. oppreſſions and tyrannies, 216. ſeizes the vacant benefices, ib. attacks his brother Robert in Normandy, but is brought to a treaty, ib. joins Robert againſt Henry, but withdraws diſſatisfied, ib. 217. runs the hazard of his life, 217. marches into Scotland, and, after bad ſucceſs, makes peace with Malcolm, ib. ſhews tokens of repentance in a fit of ſickneſs, 218. fills the vacant benefices, ib. on recovery, fails in his promiſes, and continues to oppreſs his ſubjects, ib. forbids their going out of the kingdom, ib. make war on his brother Robert, ib. 219 raiſes mony by an extraordinary method, 229. marches twice againſt the Welſh, ib. cruſhes a rebellion in the north, with danger to his perſon, ib. ſeizes the temporalities of the archbiſhop of Canterbury, 220. extorts mony from his ſubjects to lend his brother Robert, ib. wars with France, ib. with the Welſh, ib. builds London-bridge, a wall round the Tower, and Weſtminſter hall, 221. takes the count de la Fleche priſoner, ib. is accidentally kill'd in hunting, ib. character, ib. 222. obſervations on the writers of his life, 222.
WILLIAM III, Prince of Orange, comes to England, iii. 119. made captain general and admiral to the States, 127. admited Stadtholder, 128. refuſes to be corrupted by the K. of France, ib. loſes a battle, 152. arrives in England, 154. differs with King CHARLES II, who wants him to make peace with France, before he conſummates the marriage which he came about, ib. married to the princeſs Mary, and returns to Holland, ib. receives a favor from dr. Tillotſon, ib. n. 3. offers to head K. JAMES's army againſt the duke of Monmouth, 246. Engliſh noblemen and gentlemen repair to him, 276. meaſures taken by him, ib. intention declared, 278. declaration, 282. ſets ſail, but has his fleet diſperſed by a tempeſt, 284. writes to the Engliſh army and fleet, ib. ſails a ſecond time, and lands at Torbay, 285. marches to Exeter, ib little incouraged at firſt, but at laſt joined by many gentlemen, 286. comes to Salisbury, ib. ſends propoſals to the King, 290. ſent to by the lords, 291. re-aſſembles the K's army, 292. arrives at St. James's, 293. aſſembles the peers about London, ib. addreſſed to aſſume the government, and call a convention, 295, 342. takes the advice of ſeveral old members of parliament, ib. communicates in the church of England, 296. ſends for the princeſs, 297. letter to the convention, ib. addreſs'd by the two houſes, ib. offer'd the crown, 309. meaſures taken with him, 335. hatred of LEWIS XIV, 336. his intereſt advanced by the birth of the pretended Prince of Wales, 339. is invited to England, ib. accepts of the invitation, 340. diſpoſition of the Engliſh nation towards him, 341. ſnares laid in his way, 342. he ſummons a convention, ib. his reſerved behavior, 346. he declares his mind to ſome lords, ib. is proclaim'd King jointly with the Princeſs, as Queen, 347. [III King of England] proclaim'd, ib. his letter to the States-general, ib. appoints a privy-council, and the great officers of ſtate, 348. his firſt ſpeech to the convention-parliament, 349. remits the duty on fire-hearths, 352. artful anſwer to an addreſs of both houſes, ib. ſpeech in favor of the Diſſenters, with the debates thereupon, ib. 353. an enemy to perſecution, 355. his letter to the convention of Scotland, 359. proclaim'd in Scotland, a remarkable ſaying of his, n. 4, ib. enters into an alliance with the Emperor, Empire, Spain, and the Dutch, 377. goes to New-market and Cambridge, 378. ſpeech of his own compoſing, 379. his reaſons for it, and exceptions againſt it, n. 1, ib. dines in the city, with the Queen, Prince and Princeſs, 383. elected maſter of the Grocer's company, ib. indignity offered to his picture in Guild-hall, ib. goes to Ireland, 386. commands at the battle of the Boyne, ib. is wounded there, ib. obtains a compleat victory, which determines K. JAMES's fate, 388. takes Drogheda, 392. makes his public entry into Dublin, ib. beſieges Limerick, and is near being kill'd at that ſiege, 393. raiſes the ſiege, and returns to England, 394. congratulated on his ſucceſſes in Ireland, 397. is in great danger at ſea, 399. his ſpeech to the congreſs at the Hague, 401. commands in Flanders, 402. leaves the command to the Prince of Waldeck, ib. anſwer to the Daniſh miniſter, on his complaining againſt Moleſworth's account of Denmark, 412. marches to the relief of Namur, but in vain, 422. commands at the battle of Steenkirk, 423. loſes the day, but makes an excellent retreat, 424. the d. of Hanover made Elector by his intereſt, 425. dines in the city, 426. gives his negative to a bill for the frequent calling and meeting of parliaments, 428. loſes the battle of Landen, 434. narrow eſcape there, n. 1, 435. encomium by the Prince of Conti, ib. gives his negative to a bill concerning free and impartial proceedings in parliament, 438. the commons reſent it, ib. beſieges Namur, 460. at the ſurrender cauſes monſ. de Boufflers to be arreſted, 462. goes on a progreſs to the North, 463. viſits the univerſity of Oxford, ib. recommends the miſerable circumſtances of the French Proteſtants to the houſe of commons, ib. makes a grant of ſome lands to the e. of Portland, 468. revokes it, at the deſire of the houſe of commons, 469. has notice, from ſeveral hands, of the intended invaſion, and aſſaſſination plot, 470. gives an account of it in a ſpeech to the parliament, 471. vindicated from the aſperſion of his favoring Socinianiſm, 477. magnificently entertain'd at Cleves, by the court of Brandenburg, 481. is complimented by the city of London, ib. makes a public entry through the cities of London and Weſtminſter, after the peace of Ryſwick, 495. diſpleaſed with the houſe of commons, for disbanding ſo great a part of the army, 496. goes to Newmarket, 502. writes to lord Sommers concerning the firſt treaty of partition, 504. goes to Zell, 505. is viſited by the Electreſs and Electoral Prince of Hanover, ib. ſhews his diſpleaſure, in a ſpeech from the throne, at the reduction of the army, 506. meſſage to the commons about the Dutch guards, 507. his anſwer to an addreſs of the commons on that account, ib. order to the play-houſes, 509. complimented by the city of London, and the clergy of London and Middleſex, 512. anſwer to an addreſs of the houſe of commons, expreſſing ſome diſguſt, 513. uneaſy about ſome proceedings relating to the forfeited eſtates in Ireland, 514. miſunderſtanding with the commons on that ſcore, 515. prevents a diſtaſteful addreſs from the commons, by proroguing the parliament, 516. reflected upon for giving the garter to a foreiner, 517. propoſes an union with Scotland, 518. letter to the d. of Queensberry concerning the Darien-colony, ib. letter to the Scotiſh parliament on the ſame account, 519. prudent conduct with regard to the Swedes, 520. conceals his reſentment of the French King's infringement of the treaty of partition, ib. equivocal ſaying to monſ. de Tallard, ib. meſſage to the houſe of commons, concerning certain negocia tions, 522. ſecond meſſage on the ſame account, 524. acknowledges the d. of Anjou King of Spain, ib. his congratulatory letter to him, ib. ſome reflections on this ſtep, n. 2, ib. meſſage to the houſe of commons in favor of the Dutch, 525. ſpeech to the aſſembly of the States-general, 531. ſenſible of his approaching death, 535. his laſt and memorable ſpeech to both houſes of parliament, ib. projects formed by him before he left Holland, n. 1, 537. falls from his horſe, ib. his meſſage to the houſe of commons, ib. his death and character, 538. cauſes of his death, ib. his funeral, 545. papers inſpected into, 546.
WILLIAM [Prince] ſon of King HENRY I, marries a daughter of the count d' Anjou, i. 229. Normans and Engliſh take an oath to him, 230. drowned in his return from France, 231.
WILLIAM CRITON, ſon of Robert d. of Normandy, favored by LEWIS le Groſs, i. 230. made e. of Flanders, 232. killed at the ſiege of Aloſt, ib.
WILLIAM [ſon of K. STEPHEN] ſet aſide from the ſucceſſion, i. 258. ſpoil'd of all the lands which his father had given him, ib. dies, 262.
WILLIAM [count of Holland] elected King of the Romans, i. 364. ſlain, 378.
WILLIAM, K. of Scotland. See Scotland.
WILLIAMS [dr. John] afterwards archbiſhop of York, made lord-keeper, ii, 450. vindicates the K. for releaſing the Popiſh recuſants, 462. ſpeeches in parliament, 497, 501, 521, 528, 530. his diſtinction between the K's public and private conſcience, 677. pens the proteſtation of the biſhops, 712, n. accuſed of high-treaſon, and ſent to the Tower, 712. death, iii. 18, n. 2.
WILLIAMS [Richard] executed for a conſpiracy againſt Q. ELIZABETH, ii. 371.
WILLIAMSON [ſir Joſeph] ſecretary of ſtate, ſent to the Tower, iii. 169. reſigns his office, 176. named plenipotentiary for a treaty of peace, 489.
WILLIS [ſir Richard] corrupted by Cromwell, betrays the K's ſecrets, iii. 42. diſcovers a conſpiracy to Thurlo, 50.
WILLOUGHBY [lord, of Parham] takes Gainsborough, ii. 813. he and ſir John Meldrum defeated at Newark, 837. nominated vice-admiral by the d. of York, 909.
WILMOT [lord] loſes a fine advantage, ii. 784. takes Marlborough, 794. defeats Waller at Round-way-down, 812. arreſted for treating with Eſſex, 843.
WILMOT [capt. Robert] commands a ſquadron in the Weſt-Indies, iii. 459.
WILTON, battle of, i. 74.
WILTSHIRE [William Paulet, e. of] created marquis of Wincheſter, ii. 216.
WINCHELSEY [Robert] archbp. of Canterbury, his character, i. 543 or 540.
WINCHESTER burnt, i. 242.
WINCHESTER [John Paulet, marq. of] beſieged in his own caſtle of Baſing, ii. 847.
WINCHESTER [Henry Beaufort, biſhop of] made a governor to K. HENRY VI, i. 612 or 604. character, ib. accuſed by the d. of Glouceſter, and declared innocent, 623 or 614. made a cardinal, 625 or 616. mortified by the duke of Glouceſter, 631. made general of the Croiſade, but to ſerve firſt in France, ib. mortified a-freſh by Glouceſter, 634, 635. gains ground on the duke, 636, 644. acquited of freſh accuſations, 652. dies, 656.
WINDEBANK [ſir Francis] ſecretary of ſtate, ſummon'd before the commons, ii. 645. eſcapes to France, ib.
WINDEBANK [colonel] ſurrenders Blechington, ii. 860. ſhot to death, ib.
WINDRAM [colonel] ſent to K. CHARLES II in Jerſey, iii. 11.
WINDSOR-Tournaments, inſtituted by EDWARD III, i. 475.
WINGFIELD [ſir John] ſlain at the taking of Cadiz, ii. 372, n. 4.
WINWOOD [ſir Ralph] embaſſador to the States, ii 415. ſecretary of ſtate, ſome account of him, 424, 426. dies, 431.

WIRTEMBERG [Pr.of] commands ſome auxiliaries in Ireland, iii. 394. has a diſpute with the e. of Marlborough, ib. begins the attack of the battle of Steenkirk, 423. forces the French lines, 433. gives K. WILLIAM notice of the intended invaſion, 470. arrives in England with 20 batallions of foot, 472. enters the French lines at Pont à Vendin, 712.
WIRTEMBERG [d. of] commands a part of the army on the Rhine, iii. 425. taken priſoner and carried to Paris, ib.
WISHART [George] his martyrdom, and prediction concerning Cardinal Beaton, ii. 187.
WIT [John de, and Cornelius de] torn in pieces by the Dutch mob, iii. 128.
WITTENA-GEMOT, i. 175. its origin, 180. of whom compoſed, 181—184. its authority, 185. power in eccleſiaſtical affairs, ib. 186. one in each kingdom, 180. whether the commons had a right to ſit in it, 181, &c. had a power to levy taxes, 185. to elect or deprive biſhops, 186.
WITZEN [vice-admiral de] continues an ingagement with the Engliſh after Van Trump is ſlain, iii. 26.
WOLFENBUTTLE [d. of] eſpouſes the French intereſt, iii. 554.
WOLFRID, archbp. of Canterbury, i. 82.
WOLPHET, K. of Mercia, i. 60.
WOLSEY [Thomas] diſpenſation granted him, i. 801. introduc'd at court, ii. 6. account of him before he came to court, ib. n. riſes, 11. made prime miniſter, 28. biſhop of Lincoln, and adminiſtrator of the ſee of Tournay, 35. conſulted by letter about the peace with France, 36. made archbp. of York, 38. in great credit, but diſpoſſeſſed of the biſhopric of Tournay, 42. made Cardinal, 43. ingages K. HENRY and the Emperor againſt the K. of France, ib. exceſſive proud, ib. and 55, 63, 75. made lord chancellor, and loaded with favors, 44. treats with the French K. about Tournay, 49, 50, 51. join'd with Campejo in the legateſhip, 51. obtains an equivalent for the biſhopric of Tournay, 53. careſs'd by both the Emperor and the K. of France, 54, 56. preferments and oppreſſions, 55. aſpires to the Papacy, and regulates the interview between his maſter and the K. of France, 56. obtains penſions on Spaniſh ſees, 57. mediator at the congreſs of Calais, 62, 63. makes a league againſt France, 64. procures the d. of Buckingham's death, ib. 65. raiſes mony by an expedient, which diſpleaſes the people, 67, 68. diſappointed of the Papacy, but ſmothers his reſentment againſt the Emperor, who had promiſed it to him, 68. obtains a penſion from the Emperor, 69. gets a ſubſidy from the clergy, 70. mortified in the houſe of commons, 71. made biſhop of Durham, and aſpires again to the Papacy, ib. 74. diſappointed again, 75. forms a project of founding two colleges, ib. obtains the ſuppreſſion of monaſteries for the uſe of his colleges, 79. contributes to a rupture between K. HENRY and the Emperor, 83. publiſhes commiſſions for raiſing mony in the King's name, which the King diſavows, 85. on the brink of diſgrace, but pardoned and reſtor ed on his ſubmiſſion, ib. 86. grant from the regent of Scotland, 87. obtains for his colleges, 88. confers with the King of France, 95, 96. cheriſhes the King's doubts concerning his marriage, 102. writeſts ſir Gregory Caſſali on the ſame affair, 103. attempts to juſtify a war, of which the King was not appriſed, 105. menaces the merchants in vain, on their refuſal to buy the Netherland cloths, ib. join'd with Campjeo in the commiſſion to try the caſe of K. HENRY's divorce, 107. gets more naſteries ſuppreſs'd to carry on his colleges, 109. indeavors again for the Papacy, 110. made biſhop of Wincheſter, ib. permits Campejo to preſide in K. HENRY's affair, 111. acts with deſign in the matter, 112. diſgraced, and excluded the protection of the law, 113. affair brought before the parliament, and defended by Cromwell, 114. pardon'd, but afterwards ordered to York, and arreſted on the way, 118. dies on the road to London, 119.
WOMEN [Engliſh] their ſhameleſs behavior in the reign of EDWARD III, i. 481. [of London] preſent a petition to the parliament, ii. 825.
WOODSTOCK [Thomas, e. of] ſon of EDWARD III, made e. of Buckingham, and one of the regents to young K. RICHARD, i. 508. goes to aſſiſt the d. of Britany, 511. created d. of Glouceſter, 518. ruin determined, 512. eſcapes being poiſoned, 520. threatens the d. of Ireland, ib. clears himſelf from the accuſation of the King's favorites, 522. reproaches the King, 524, 525. ſent priſoner to Calais, 525. ſmothered between two feather-beds, 526, n. 1.
WOODSTOCK [mannor of] with the hundred of Wootton, granted to the d. of Marlborough, iii. 629.
WOODVILE [ſir Richard] marries Jaquelina of Luxemburg, i. 693. made e. of Rivers, ib. lord-treaſurer and high-conſtable, 696. beheaded by mutineers, 699.
WOODVILE [ſir Richard] joins the d. of Buckingham in a conſpiracy againſt K. RICHARD III, i. 747.
WOODVILE [Anthony] marries the lord Seales's daughter, i. 693. [e. of Rivers] conducts young K. EDWARD towards London, 730. betray'd and impriſon'd by the d. of Glouceſter and his party, ib. 731. executed at Pontefract, 735.
WOODVILE [Elizabeth] married to K. EDWARD IV, and the occaſion, i. 693. relations favor'd and envy'd, 696. takes ſanctuary in Weſtminſter-abby, 730, 731. delivers up the d. of York to the protector, 733. promiſes her daughter to the e. of Richmond, 743. ſuſpected by HENRY VII, 763. commited to a monaſtery, where ſhe dies, 764.
WOOLLEN trade, regulations made therein by EDWARD III, i. 469.
WOLSTON, biſhop of Worceſter, his character, i. 173.
WOOLLEN manufactures, an act paſs'd for their incouragement, iii. n. 4, 375. of Ireland complained of, 591.
WOOLSEY [colonel] a brave action of his in Ireland, iii. 386.
WORCESTER-fights, ii. 787. iii. 19.
WORCESTER [Thomas Piercy, e. of] taken at the battle of Shrewsbury and beheaded, i. 558 or 556.
WORCESTER [Henry Somerſet, marquis of] petition'd againſt by the commons, iii. 205. created d. of Beaufort, See Beaufort.
WOTTON [dr.] dean of Canterbury and York, and embaſſador to France, perſuades Q. MARY to fall out with the French, ii. 245.
WOTTON [ſir Henry] ſent embaſſador to Germany, ii. 441.
WRATISLAUS's [count] memorial to the Queen, iii. 611.
WREN [Matthew] biſhop of Norwich, complain'd of, ii. 656. dies, iii. 109.
WREN [commadore] performs a brave action in America, iii. 409.
WRIGHT [ſir Nathan] made lord-keeper, iii. 517.
WRIOTHESLEY [Thomas] made chancellor, ii. 180. character, 194. oppoſes the election of a protector, but in vain, 196. created e. of Southampton, ib. diſgraced, 197. abandon'd by Dudley, retires from court, and dies, 212.
WULFIG, biſhop of London, i. 138.
WYAT [ſir Thomas] forms a conſpiracy, in conjunction with the d. of Suffolk and ſir Peter Carew, againſt Q. MARY, ii. 234. ſurrenders, and ſent to priſon, 235. accuſes Princeſs Elizabeth and the e. of Devonſhire, whom he afterwards clears, ib. executed, ib.
WYNDHAM [ſir William] made chancellor of the Exchequer, iii. 742.
WYNENDALE, the battle and victory of, iii. 690.

Y

YACHT [Engliſh] fires upon the Dutch, which occaſions the Dutch war, iii. 123.
YEAR 1706, a year of wonders; year 1707, a year of blunders, iii. n. 1. 678.
YELVERTON, ſir Henry, attorney-general to K. JAMES I, turned out, ii. 431.
YEOMAN [Robert] a citizen of Briſtol, executed for conſpiring to deliver up that city to K. CHARLES I, ii. 799.
YEOMEN of the guard firſt inſtituted, i. 756.
YORK, a conference there on the K. of Scots murder, ii. 295.
YORK taken by the parliament's army, ii. 839.
YORK [d. of] See Edmund.
YORK [Richard, d. of] ſucceeds the e. of March in his right, i. 620 or 611. made regent of France, 640. inſtructions, 641. made regent for five years longer, 655. title to the crown talk'd of, deprived of his regency, 657. ſuppreſſes a rebellion in Ireland, 659. aſpires to the crown, 660. returns to England, tho' oppoſed by the King, 662. writes to the K. who meets him, and ſeemingly agrees to his demands, 663. apprehended, but ſet at liberty again, ib. 664. ſwears allegiance, and retires to his country ſeat, 664. right to the crown examined, 665. conſults his friends, 666. made protector, and governor of Calais, ib. removed, retires into Wales, and raiſes an army, 667. defeats the royal army at St. Albans, kills the d. of Somerſet, and takes the King priſoner, whom he treats reſpectfully, ib. made protector, but hurt by his ſecurity, 668. retires from court, 669. raiſes freſh forces, 670. deſerted, flies into Ireland, 671. acknowledg'd a loyal ſubject, 672. arrives, and expects to be invited into the throne, 673. conſents that HENRY ſhall reign during life, ib. moderation, ib. ſlain in the battle of Wakefield, 674. character, 675. head taken from the walls of York, 687.
YORK [d. of] ſee James II.
YORK [Erneſt, late d. of] his bravery at the ſiege of Venlo, iii. 558.
YORK [archbp. of] his juriſdiction in Scotland, i. 24.
YORK [archbp of, Jeoffrey] oppoſes King JOHN in raiſing a ſubſidy, i. 300. excommunicates the K's electors, 305.
YORK [archbp. of] ſee Nevil, Scrope, Rotherham, Heath, Neil, Williams.
YORK-Conferences, concerning MARY, Q. of Scots, ii. 297.
YORK [council of] erected, ii. 557.
YORK [Edmund] executed for a conſpiracy againſt Q. ELIZABETH, ii. 371.
YORKSHIRE gentry attend K. CHARLES, ii. 753.
YOUNG [a priſoner in Newgate] propagator of a ſham-plot, iii. 425.

Z

ZELL [William, d. of] elected knight of the garter, iii. 399. viſits K. WILLIAM at Loo, 512. is directed by the Emperor to make an incurſion into the territories of Wolfenbuttel, 554.
ZUYLESTEIN [monſieur de] ſent by the Prince of Orange to K. JAMES II, to deſire him to ſtay at Rocheſter, iii. 292. ſent by the Prince of Orange to England, 339. created e. of Rochford, 459.

TO THE READER.

AS ſeveral of the Subſcribers favored Mr. Kelly on the Diſunion between him and me, and as he printed ſome Numbers on his own Account, the which has occaſion'd a Diſagreement in diverſe Folioes in the firſt Volume of this Work, I have thought proper, in this Index, to mention both of them, as for Example, in the preceding page, viz. YORK [Richard, d. of] ſucceeds the e. of March in his right, i. 620 or 611, and ſo in many other Places; by this Method, I hope, it is render'd uſeful to all Perſons.

J. MECHELL.

A SUMMARY OR ABRIGEMENT OF THE History of England.

VOLUME I.

As the firſt book of this hiſtory contains only the time the Romans were maſters of Britain, and as we cannot come at a perfect knowlege of the hiſtory of thoſe times, it will not be expected, we ſhould point out the years, months and days, but only ſet down the moſt remarkable events, and under which Emperor's reign they happened.

Julius Cæſar. CÆSAR projects the conqueſt of the iſland of Britain. Page 1
He makes a deſcent with two legions. p. 2
He puts the Britons to flight; they deſire a peace; he grants it. ibid.
The Roman veſſels ſhattered by a ſtorm. ibid.
The Britons break the peace, and continue the war with ſome advantage. ibid.
They are beat in attacking the Roman camp. p. 3
They obtain peace. ibid.
Cæſar withdraws into Gaul. ibid.
His ſecond expedition into Britain. ibid.
He beats the Britons and forces their trenches. ibid.
His ſhips receive great damage by a ſtorm. ibid.
He returns to the camp to repair the damage. ibid.
Caſſibelan King of the Trinobantes made general of the Britons. ibid.
He has ſeveral conflicts with the Romans. ibid.
Cæſar paſſes the Thames, and ſubdues the Trinobantes. p. 4
He makes himſelf maſter of the metropolitan town of Caſſibelan's kingdom. ibid.
Cirgentorix, a Britiſh King, is taken priſoner. ibid.
Cæſar impoſes a tribute on the Britons, and grants them peace; he returns into Gaul. Page 4
Caſſibelan's ſucceſſors pay tribute to the Emperor Auguſtus. p. 5 Auguſtus.
Tiberius neglects Britain. ibid. Tiberius.
Caligula's ridiculous expedition againſt the Britons. ibid. Caligula.
Bericus ingages the Emperor Claudius to undertake the conqueſt of Britain. ibid. Claudius.
The Emperor ſends Plautius into Britain to conquer it. p. 6
Sedition in the Roman army. ibid.
The ſoldiers refuſe to hear Narciſſe the Emperor's freedman. ibid.
The army of its own accord returns to its obedience. ibid.
Plantius makes a deſcent in Britain. ibid.
He beats King Togodumnus. ibid.
And after King Caractacus. ibid.
He paſſes a river in ſight of the Britons. ibid.
The Britons attack the Roman army, and are overcome. ibid.
They retire beyond the Thames. ibid.
Plantius paſſes the Thames. ibid.

He invites the Emperor into the iſland. Page 6
Claudius arrives and gains a great battle. ibid.
He uſes the Britons with great clemency. p. 7
They dedicate a Temple to him. ibid.
He returns to Rome. ibid.
Plantius is recalled and honored with an Ovation. ibid.
Oſtorius Scapula made governor of Britain. ibid.
Camelodunum and London become Roman colonies. ibid.
The country between the Sea and the Thames is made a Roman province, by the name of Britannia Prima. ibid.
The Icenes revolt, and are beat. ibid.
Oſtorius gains a great victory over Caractacus King of the Silures. p. 8
Caractacus delivered up to the Romans, and ſent to Rome. ibid.
The Emperor pardons him. ibid.
The Britons continue the war. ibid.
The death of Oſtorious Scapula. ibid.
Aulus Didius governor. ibid.
He puts a ſtop to the Silures's progreſs. ibid.
Venutius King of the Brigantes, exites ſeveral people againſt the Romans. ibid.
Nero. Veranius governor for a ſhort time. p. 9
Suetonius Paulinus governor. ibid.
He makes himſelf maſter of the iſle of Mona (Angleſey) ibid.
General inſurrection of the Britons under Boadicia. ibid.
A maſſacre of eighty thouſand Romans. ibid.
Cruelties exerciſed againſt the Romans. ibid.
Paulinus abandons the Iſle of Mona. ibid.
A battle in which Paulinus with ten thouſand men kills eighty thouſand Britons. p. 9, 10
A quarrel between Paulinus and Julius Claſſicianus, Nero's attorney general. p. 10, 11
Paulinus recalled to Rome. 11
Petronius Turpilianus governor. ibid.
He does nothing conſiderable. ibid.
Trebellius Maximus governor. ibid.
He quarrels with Cælius the tribune, and is obliged to withdraw into Germany. ibid.
Galba and Otho. Britain governed by Tribunes, and particularly Cælius. ibid.
Vitellius. Vectius Bolanus governor. ibid.
He does not diſturb the Britons. ibid.
Veſpaſian. Petilius Cerealis governor. ibid.
He beats the Brigantes at different times. ibid.
Julius Frontinus governor. ibid.
He ſubdues the Silures. ibid.
Julius Agricola governor. ibid.
The firſt campain, he beats the Ordovices, and makes himſelf maſter of the iſle of Mona. ibid.
He gains the affections of the Britons. ibid.
Titus. The ſecond campain he builds ſeveral forts in Britain towards the North. ibid.
He begins to civilize the Britons. ibid.
The third campain he advances as far as the Tweed. p. 12
Domitian. The fourth campain he ſubdues the nations lying between the Tweed, and the bays of Glatta and Bodotria. ibid.
He builds forts on the Iſthmus, which parts the two bays. ibid.
The fifth campain he conquers ſome people to the North of the two bays. ibid.
The ſixth campain, he marches further into the North with his fleet rowing cloſe in with the ſhore. ibid.
The Iſlanders gather an army, and attack the ninth legion which is ſuccored by Agricola. ibid.
They gather another army. ibid.
A cohort of Uſipians, deſert the Roman army, and came to miſerable ends. ibid.
Seventh campain, he gains a great battle againſt Galgacus general of the Iſlanders. p. 12, 13
Domitian recalls him, and has him poiſoned. Page 13
Britain reduced into a Roman province. ibid.
The Britons civilized. ibid.
Several withdraw into the North among the Picts. ibid.
Saluſtius Lucullius governor for a ſhort time. p. 14
Some commotions appeaſed. ibid. Nerva and Julius Severus governor. ibid. Trajan.
He is ſoon recalled. ibid. Adrian.
The Iſlanders revolt. ibid.
The Emperor Adrian comes into Britain. ibid.
He raiſes a rampart of earth covered with turf from Eſca to the Tine, and abandons all the reſt of the country to the Nothern people. ibid.
The South Britons more and more civilized. ibid.
The Northern people in ſome meaſure demoliſh Antoninus
Adrian's rampart. ibid. Pius.
Lollius Urbicus governor. ibid.
He tames the Brigantes. ibid.
He raiſes a rampart on the Iſthmus where Agricola had built forts. ibid.
Antoninus takes the title of Britannicus. ibid.
Calphurnius Agricola governor. ibid.
Lucius a Britiſh King imbraces Chriſtianity. ibid.
Ulpius Marcellus governor. ibid. Commodus.
He quells the Britons who had revolted, and had cut off the Roman army. ibid.
He is recalled. ibid.
The Roman army in Britain mutinies, they ſend a detachment to Rome to accuſe Perennis the Emperor's favorite. Perennis is delivered up to the ſoldiers, who cut him to pieces. p. 14, 15
Pertinax governor. p. 15
Sedition in the army againſt Pertinax, who is left for dead, but eſcapes. ibid.
Claudius Albinus governor; he is recalled. ibid.
Junius Severus governor. ibid. Pertinax.
Claudius Albinus governor a ſecond time. ibid. Albinus.
Albinus elected Emperor by the army in Britain, Severus.
Septimius Severus by that in Pannonia, and Peſcennius.
Peſcennius Niger by that in Syria. ibid.
Peſcennius Niger defeated and killed by Severus. ibid.
Albinus paſſes over into Gaul. ibid.
Severus goes to meet him. ibid.
The battle of Lyons where Albinus is defeated and killed. ibid.
The Caledonians, a people in the North of Britain, Severus alone.
revolt. ibid.
Severus paſſes over into Britain. ibid.
He marches to the utmoſt limits of the North. ibid.
He loſes fifty thouſand men in that march. ibid.
He abandons the Northern countries, and builds a wall in the place where Adrian's rampart was. ibid.
He takes upon him the title of Britannicus Maximus. ibid.
He leaves his eldeſt ſon Caracalla in the North, and returns to York. ibid.
The Iſlanders of the North revolt, where he makes a terrible maſſacre. ibid.
He dies at York. ibid.
The two Emperors, ſons of Severus, make peace Caracalla and with the Caledonians, and return to Rome. p. 16 Geta.
The Emperor Probus tranſports a great number of Probus Max-
Vandals or Burgundians into Britain. ibid. imian in the Carauſius aſſumes the Imperial dignity. ibid. Weſt.
Maximian is obliged to make him his aſſociate in the Empire. ibid.
He ſends Conſtantius Chlorus againſt Carauſius. ibid.
Carauſius killed. ibid.
Diocleſian and Maximian diveſt themſelves of the Empire. ibid.
Commotions in Britain. ibid.
Conſtantius paſſes over and dies at York. ibid. Conſtantius in Great tranquillity in Britain. ibid. p. 17 the Weſt.

The

Constantine. The Christian religion makes great progress. Page 17
Martin governor. ibid.
Paul, the Emperor's officer, tyrannizes over the Britons. ibid.
Julian governor of the West. ibid.
Constantius. Julian. Lupicinus the governor recalled. ibid.
Interval of time to Valentinian I, in which nothing considerable happened in Britain. ibid.
Valentinian. the I. The Island attacked by several united strangers. ibid.
Nectaridius and Buchobaudes killed. p. 17, 18
Severus and Jovianus not able to stop the course of these strangers. p. 18
Theodosius the elder governor. ibid.
He repels the strangers. ibid.
He repairs and fortifies London. ibid.
He inlarges Britain by a fifth province. ibid.
In 368. He returns to Rome. ibid.
Gratian and Theodosius. Maximus governor. ibid.
He makes an alliance with the Picts to drive the Scots out of the island. ibid.
Maximus being discontented, lays a scheme to make himself Emperor. ibid.
The Scots re-enter their country. ibid.
Maximus drives them into Ireland. ibid.
He takes the title of Emperor. ibid.
He puts Gratian to death. ibid.
Theodosius causes his head to be struck off. ibid.
Honorius in the West. Victorinus governor. p. 19
He tyrannizes over the Picts. ibid.
The Picts recal the Scots, and restore to them their country. ibid.
AN' 403. Fergus II, is acknowleged King by the Scots. ibid.
The Picts and Scots make war on the Romans, and the Britons their subjects. ibid.
The Romans being weakened in Britain, the Picts and Scots pass the wall of Severus, and harass the Britons by their continual inroads. ibid.
407. The Britons elect Marc, Emperor, who is soon after killed. ibid.
They elect Gratian, who is also killed. ibid.
They elect Constantine (a private soldier) Emperor. ibid.
Constantine beats back the Northern people into their own country. ibid.
He sends an army into Gaul. ibid.
Honorius attacked in several places, is obliged to acknowlege Constantine for his collegue in the Empire. ibid.
Constantine makes his son Constans his associate, leaves him in Gaul, and marches towards Italy, to make himself master of the whole Empire. ibid.
Gerontius general under Constans revolts, and besieges him in Vienna, where Constans is killed. ibid.
Constantine withdraws to Arles. ibid.
Constantius marches into Gaul. ibid.
Gerontius retires into Spain, and is there killed. p. 20
Constantius besieges Constantine in Arles; takes and sends him to the Emperor, who has him beheaded. ibid.
The Northern people again attack the Britons, who in vain desire succor of the Romans. ibid.
410. Honorius renounces the sovereignty of Britain, and restores liberty to the Britons. ibid.
The Britons are always beat. ibid.
Ætius sends them a legion, and immediately recals it. ibid.
By the commanders of the legions advice, the Britons repair the wall of Severus. ibid.
The Romans leave Britain, no more to return. ibid.
The Northern people renew the war. ibid.
The Britons abandon part of the country to them. ibid.
They obtain peace. ibid.
Eugenius II, King of Scotland, breaks the peace with the Britons. ibid.

The Britons at variance among themselves. Page 21
They resolve on war. ibid.
They lose a great battle against the Scots. ibid.
They dearly purchase peace. ibid.
They elect several Kings, which contributes to the misfortunes of Britain. ibid.
They in vain desire help of Ætius. ibid.
They elect Vortigern their Monarch. p. 22 AN' 445.
Vortigern advises them (for his own interest) to call in the Saxons to their aid. ibid.
They follow his advice and send embassadors to the Saxons. ibid.
Vortigern's policy becomes fatal to him. ibid.
Origin of the Saxons in Germany and their conquests. p. 23
Of the Anglians, and their junction with the Saxons. p 24
Of the Juts. ibid.
Etymology of the name Saxon. ibid.
Customs, governments, and religion of this people. ibid.
State of the church. ibid. 25, 26. 27.
The Britons send embassadors to Saxony. p. 28 446.
Their address to the Saxons. ibid.
The Saxons undertake to assist the Britons. ibid. 449.
The first arrival of Saxon troops under Hengist and Horsa. p. 29
The Saxons land in the isle of Thanet in the county of Kent. ibid
Vortigern receives them with great kindness. ibid.
The Saxons drive the Northern people back into their own country. ibid.
Vortigern gives lands to Hengist near Lincoln. ibid.
Hengist builds the fort of Thong castle. ibid.
The Britons complain of Vortigern. ibid.
Hengist offers him assistance. ibid.
A new body of Saxons arrive in Britain, with Escus and Rowena. 450. p. 30
Vortigern makes Hengist a visit, who entertains him very magnificently. ibid.
Vortigern falls in love with Rowena, and asks her in marriage. ibid.
He gives Hengist the country of Kent to have Rowena. ibid.
The Britons complain of Vortigern. ibid.
Hengist makes him jealous of Ambrosius Aurelianus, and advises him to send for more Saxon troops over. p. 31
Vortigern follows this council. ibid.
Octa and Ebusa's arrival with more Saxon troops. 452. ibid.
They settle in the North. ibid.
Vortimer son of Vortigern causes the Britons to revolt against his father. 453. ibid.
Vortigern is forced to make Vortimer his associate. 454. p. 32
Vortimer brings the Britons to a resolution of making war against the Saxons. ibid.
Hengist makes an alliance with the Picts. ibid.
The battle of Eglesford. ibid. 455.
Hengist takes the title of King of Kent. ibid.
The battle of Crecanford ibid. 457.
Ambrosius Aurelianus arrives from Armorica, and brings with him, to assist the Britons, 10,000 men from King Aldroen. 458. ibid.
Ambrosius makes war on Vortigern and Vortimer. p. 33
The battle of Catgwalop between the Britons. ibid.
The Saxons fortify themselves in the country of Kent, and in the North. ibid.
Some Birtons go to settle in Holland. ibid.
The two British Kings and Ambrosius divide Britain. 465. ibid.
The war between the Britons and Saxons renewed. 466. ibid.
The battle of Wipped's fleet. ibid.

Arthur

Arthur at fourteen years of age ſerves in Ambroſius's army. Page 33
An' 470. Arthur gains a battle againſt Hoel King of Areclute. ibid.
473. Another battle between the Britons and Saxons. ibid.
Vortimer dies. ibid.
The Britons and Saxons makes peace. ibid.
Hengiſt indeavors to aggrandize himſelf. p. 34
He cauſes 300 Britiſh lords to be maſſacred at a feaſt, and Vortigern impriſoned. ibid.
Vortigern gives him up a large country. ibid.
The Britons forſake Vortigern, and put themſelves under obedience to Ambroſius. ibid.
Ambroſius takes the title of Emperor. ibid.
476. He creates Arthur a patrician. ibid.
477. Ella the Saxon arrives in Britain. p. 35
Suſpenſion of arms for nine years. ibid.
485. Ambroſius makes war on Vortigern. ibid.
The death of Vortigern. ibid.
Ambroſius reigns alone. ibid.
He renews the war againſt the Saxons. p. 36
487. Ella defeated by Ambroſius. ibid.
488. Death of Hengiſt. ibid.
Eſcus his ſon King of Kent. ibid.
A truce for three years. ibid.
490. Arthur's voyage to Jeruſalem. ibid.
491. Ella beſieges and takes Andredceſter. ibid.
He takes the title of King of Suſſex. ibid.
492. He is elected monarch or general of the Saxons. ibid.
494. Arthur beats the Northumbrian Saxons. ibid.
495. He beſieges York. p. 37
Cerdick a Saxon captain arrives. ibid.
He beats Cador. ibid.
Arthur raiſes the ſeige of York. ibid.
496. Paſcentius Vortigern's ſon, takes arms againſt Ambroſius. ibid.
497. Arthur twice beats him. ibid.
Ambroſius grants peace to Paſcentius, and gives him Brecknock and Radnor in the country of Galle or Cambria. ibid.
The Saxons conquer the kingdom of Gallway from Galvan Arthur's nephew. ibid.
501. Porta a Saxon captain arrives. ibid.
The King of Armorica brings 15,000 men to Arthur his uncle. ibid.
Arthur gains a battle againſt Cerdick. ibid.
Great preparations on both ſides. p. 37,38
508. The Britons loſe a great battle, in which Ambroſius is killed, who was ſurnamed Nazaleod. p. 38
Arthur elected Monarch of the Britons. ib.
He defeats the Northumbrian Saxons. ib.
He gains the battle of Cadbury. ib.
511. The battle of Badon won by Arthur. ib.
The Picts make a diverſion in favor of the Saxons. p. 39
Arthur ravages their country. ib.
The death of Guenivere, Arthur's wife. ib.
512. The death of Eſcus King of Kent. Octa his ſon ſucceeds him. ib.
514. The death of Ella, Ciſſa his ſon ſucceeds him in the kingdom of Suſſex. ib.
519. Cerdick makes a great progreſs and gains a noted victory. ib.
Treaty of peace between Arthur and Cerdick. ib.
Arthur relinquiſhes to him ſome provinces. ib.
Cerdick takes the title of King of Weſſex, or Weſt Saxons. ib.
527. Ercenwin makes himſelf King of Eſſex. ib.
The Engliſh ſettle on the Eaſt ſide under twelve chiefs; they are called Eaſtangles. ib.
Arthur's expedition in Armorica. ib.
The battle of Chardſley gained by Cerdick. p. 40
528. Arthur's return. He renews the treaty with Cerdick. ib.
And takes upon him the title of Emperor. ib.
He returns into Armorica, and leaves the regency to Modred his nephew. An' 529. Page 40
Modred ſeizes on his uncle's ſtates. ib.
He is crowned at London. ib.
He makes a league with Cerdick, and gives him ſeveral provinces. ib.
A great number of Saxon families come and ſettle in Cerdick's kingdom. ib.
He is crowned a ſecond time. ib. 530.
He gives the iſle of Wight to his nephews Stuff and Withgar, who were Juts by nation. p. 41
Death of Cerdick. ib. 534.
Kenric his ſon becomes King of Weſſex. ib.
The death of Octa, King of Kent. Hermenrick his ſon ſucceeds him. ib.
Arthur returns from Armorica. ib. 535.
He makes war on Modred. ib.
Modred makes an alliance with the Picts. ib.
Arthur defeats him. ib.
Arthur's ſecond victory over Modred. ib.
The laſt battle in which Arthur and Modred are killed. 542. ib.
The Britons great weakneſs after Arthur's death. ib.
The name of Britain given to Armorica. p. 42
Ida the Angle, his arrival in the North, where he is acknowleged King of Northumberland. 547. ib.
The Britons attack Kenrick, King of Weſſex, and are beat. 552. p. 43
Conſtantine beats and kills two ſons of Modred. ib. 555.
The death of Ida, firſt King of Northumberland. ib. 559.
Northumberland divided into two kingdoms, viz. Deira and Bernicia. ib.
Alla, King of Deira. ib.
Adda, King of Bernicia. ib.
The death of Kenrick, King of Weſſex. ib. 560.
Cheaulin ſucceeds him. ib.
He ſubdues the other Saxon Kings. p. 44 562.
The death of Hermenrick, King of Kent. ib. 564.
Ethelbert his ſon ſucceeds him. ib.
Ethelbert makes war on Cheaulin. ib. 567.
He is twice beaten. ib. 568.
Uffa takes the title of King of the Eſtangles. ib. 571.
Cheaulin attacks the Britons. ib. 577.
The death of Uffa, firſt King of Eſtanglia. ib. 578.
Titilus his ſon ſucceeds him. ib.
Aidan, King of the Scots marches to the aſſiſtance of the Britons. ib.
Aidan defeats Cheaulin. ib.
He is afterwards defeated. p. 45
The Scots army returns to its own country. ib.
Crida arrives in Britain, with a numerous army of Angles. 584. ib.
He makes great conqueſts, and drives the Britons into Cambria. ib.
Crida founds the kingdom of Mercia. ib.
The name of Britain changed to that of England. ib.
Athalarick, King of Bernicia in Northumberland. p. 46 586.
The death of Ercenwin, firſt King of Eſſex. ib.
Sledda his ſon ſucceeds him. ib. 587.

SUMMARY of the HEPTARCHY.

That we may not be obliged to repeat in every line, the names of the kingdoms of the Heptarchy, the following letters are made uſe of.

K. - - - - - -	King.
D. - - - - - -	Death, Dead, or Died.
K. of N. - - -	King of Northumberland.
K. of N. in Bern. - -	King of Northumberland in Bernicia.
K. of N. in De. -	King of Northumberland in Deira.
K. of M. - - -	King of Mercia.

K. of

K. of Eſt. - - - King of Eſtanglia.
K. of Kt - - - King of Kent.
K. of Eſſ. - - - King of Eſſex.
K. of S. - - - King of Suſſex.
K. of W. - - - King of Weſſex.

AN' 590. D. of Ciſſa, K. of S. Cheaulin K. of W. ſeized on Suſſex. p. 68
592. Cheaulin, K. of W. is overthrown by Ethelbert, K. of Kt. chief of the allies; Cheaulin never after appeared. p. 69, 70
593. Ceolrick aſcends the throne of Weſſex. p. 70
594. D. of Crida, K. of M. Ethelbert K. of Kt. ſeizes on Mercia; p. 59
597. Ethelbert reſtores Mercia to Wibba, Crida's ſon. p. 59
598. D. of Ceolrick, K. of W. Ceolulph ſucceeds him. p. 70
599. D. of Titilus, K. of Eſt. Redowald his ſon ſucceeds him. p. 63
604. Sabert or Sabba, aſcends the throne of Eſſex, he becomes a Chriſtian. Page 64
611. D. of Ceolulph, K. of W. Cinigiſil ſucceeds him. p. 70
612. Cinigiſil, makes Quicelm his brother his aſſociate. ibid.
613. The monks of Bangor maſſacred by Adelfrid K. of N. p. 52
614. The two Kings of Weſſex gain a ſignal victory over the Britons or Welſh. p. 70
615. Ethelfryd, K. of N. demands Edwin of the King of Eſtanglia. p. 52
616. D. of Ethelbert, firſt K. of Kt. Ebald his ſon ſucceeds him. p. 66
D. of Sabert, K. of Eſſ. Saxred, Seward, and Sigebert his ſons ſucceed him. p. 64
Cearlus, K. of M. ſhakes off the dominion of the Kings of Kent. p. 60
617. Ethelfryd K. of N. defeated and ſlain by Redowald K. of Eſt. p. 53
Edwin aſcends the throne of Northumberland. p. 54
623. Sigebert the Little, K. of Eſſ. p. 65
624. D. of Redowald K. of Eſt. Erpwald his ſon ſucceeds him. p. 63
625. D. of Caerlus K. of M. Penda ſucceeds him. p. 60
Edwin K. of N. marries Ethelburga of Kent, ſiſter to Ebald. p. 54
633. D. of Erpwald K. of Eſt. Interregnum. p. 63
D. of Edwin, K. of N. Interregnum. p. 55
634. Oſrick and Anfrid King of N. killed, Interregnum. ibid.
635. Quicelm K. of W. imbraces the Chriſtian religion. p. 70
636. D. of Quicelm. Cinigiſil ſole K. of W. ibid.
Sigebert K. of Eſt. reſigns his crown and enters into religion. p. 63
640. D. of Ebald K. of Kt. Ercombert ſucceeds. p. 67
643. D. of Cinigiſil, K. of W. Cenowalch ſucceeds him. p. 70
Oſwy, K. of N. in Bern. p. 56
644. Oſwin, K. of N. in Deir. ibid.
D. of Erpwald, K. of Eſt. Annas ſucceeds. p. 63
645. Cenowalch, K. of W. driven out of his kingdom by Penda K. of M. and takes refuge in Eſtanglia. p. 70
Penda ſeizes on Mercia. p. 60
646. Cenowalch converted in Eſtanglia. p. 70
648. Cenowalch re-eſtabliſhed. ibid.
Adelwalch, K. of S. p. 68
651. Oſwy, K. of Northumberland in Bern. puts Oſwin K. of N. in Deir. to death. p. 56
652. Adelwalt, K. of N. in Deir. ibid.
Cenowalch, K. of W. obtains a great victory over the Britons. p. 70
653. Sigebert the good, K. of Eſſ. p. 65
654. D. of Annas, K. of Eſt. p. 63
655. Adelwalt ſucceeds him. p. 63, 64

Oſwy gains a great victory againſt Penda, who is killed. Page 56
Peda, K. of Leiceſter. p. 60
Oſwy, K. of N. ſeizes on Mercia. p. 56
Sulthelm, K. of Eſſ. p. 65
D. of Peda, King of Leiceſter. p. 60
Cenowalch, K. of W. defeats the Britons. p. 70 AN' 657.
Wolpher aſcends the throne of Mercia. p. 60 658.
War between Wolpher and Cenowalch K. of M. p. 70 659.
Wolpher defeats and takes Adelwach, K. of S. priſoner. p. 60 661.
The converſion of Adelwach; Wolpher gives him the Iſle of Wight. ibid. 663.
D. of Ercombert, K. of Kt. Egbert ſucceeds him. p. 67 664.
Aldulph, K. of Eſt. p. 64
Wolpher, K. of M. ſells the biſhopric of London to Wina. p. 60 666.
D. of Oſwy, K. of N. Egfrid ſucceeds him. p. 56 670.
D. of Cenowalch, K. of W. Saxburga his widow ſucceeds him. p. 70 672.
She is depoſed; Cenſus, Eſcwin and Centwin ſucceed. p. 70 673.
D. of Egbert, K. of Kt. Lotharius ſucceeds him. p. 67
Cenſus, K. of W. makes Centwin his ſon his aſſociate. p. 70 674.
D. of Wolpher, K. of M. Ethelred ſucceeds. p. 60 675.
Centwin, ſole K. of W. p. 70 676.
War betwen M. and N. p. 60 679.
Lotharius, K. of Kt. makes Richard his ſon his aſſociate. p. 67 683.
Egfrid, K. of N. makes War on Ireland. p. 57 684.
Cedwalla aſcends the throne of Weſſex. p. 70 685.
Lotharius, K. of Kt. is killed; Edrick ſucceeds him. p. 67
Alfred, K. of N. p. 57
D. of Edrick K. of Kt. Widred and Swabert ſucceed him. p. 67 686.
D. of Adelwalch, K. of S. Authun and Berthun ſucceeds him. p. 69
Cedwalla's war in Suſſex. ibid.
Mollon, Cedwalla's brother, ravages the kingdom of Kent, and is killed. p. 67 687.
Cedwalla, K. of W. dies at Rome. p. 71 688.
Ina ſucccceds him. ibid.
Berthun, K. of S. p. 69
Ina, K. of W. ravages the country of Kt. p. 71 694.
Sebba, K. of S. turns monk. p. 65
Widred ſole K. of Kt. p. 67 695.
Oſtrith, wife of Ethelred, K. of M. is aſſaſſinated. p. 60 697.
D. of Ethelred K. of M. Cenred ſucceeds. ibid. 704.
Offa K. of Eſſ. p. 65 705.
D. of Alfred K. of N. Oſred ſucceeds. p. 57
D. of Cenred, K. of M. Ceolred ſucceeds. p. 60 709.
Offa K. of Eſſ. becomes a monk, Seolred ſucceeds. p. 65
War between Weſſex and Mercia. p. 60, 71 715.
Oſred, K. of N. killed. p. 57 716.
Ethelbald, K. of M. p. 60
Cenred ſucceeds Oſred K. of N. p. 58 717.
D. of Widred, K. of Kt. Ethelbert and Edbert ſucceed him. p. 67
Ina re-eſtabliſhes the monaſtery of Glaſtonbury. p. 71 722.
Ina reduces the South Saxons, who had revolted. ibid.
They again revolt and place Albert on the throne; they are ſubdued. ibid. 725.
Ina takes a journey to Rome and becomes a monk; Adelard ſucceeds to the crown of Weſſex, p. 72 727.
D. of Oſrick K. of N. Ceolulph ſucceeds. p. 58 728.
Ceolulph K. of N. makes himſelf a monk, Edbert ſucceeds him. ibid. 737.
D. of Adelard, K. of W. Cudred ſucceeds. p. 72 740.
Cudred gains a great victory over the Britons of Cornwall. ibid. 743.

An' 745. Ethelun revolts from Cudred K. of W. Page 72
746. Suithred, K. of Eſſ. p. 65
748. D. of Edbert, one of the Kings of Kent, Ethelbert ſole. p. 67
749. D. of Alphuald, K. of Eſt. Beorna and Ethelbert ſucceed. p. 64
750. Battle between Cudred, K. of W. and Ethelun his ſubject. Cudred pardons this rebellion. p. 72
752. Ethelbald, K. of M. loſes a battle againſt Ethelun, general of the Weſt Saxons. p. 61
753. Cudred, K. of W. takes part of Cornwall from the Britons. p. 72
754. D. of Cudred, K. of W. Sigebert ſucceeds him. ibid.
The South Saxons revolt and place Oſmond on the throne. p. 69
Sigebert, K. of W. depoſed. Cenulph ſucceeds. p. 72
Cenulph intirely ſubdues the South Saxons. ibid.
756. Edbert, K. of N. gains a great battle againſt Deovama. p. 58
757. D. of Ethelbald, K. of M. Beorhred uſurps the crown. p. 61
Offa K. of M. ibid.
758. Beorna, ſole King of Eſtanglia: p. 64
D. of Edbert, K. of N. Oſulph ſucceeds. p. 58
759. D. of Oſulph, K. of N. Mollon-Adelwalt ſucceeds. ibid.
760. Aldrick, K. of Kent. p. 68
761. Oſwy, a Northumberland lord revolts: p. 58
Ethelred, K. of N. ibid.
Offa, K. of M. his victory againſt Aldrick, K. of Kt. p. 60
779. Alphuald, K. of N. p. 58
784. D. of Cenulph, K. of W. Brithrick ſucceeds. p. 72
789. Oſred, K. of N. p. 58
790. Ethelred, K. of N. re-eſtabliſhed. ibid.
D. of Ethelred, K. of Eſt. Ethelbert ſucceeds. p. 59
792. Offa, K. of M. puts Ethelbert K. of Eſt. to death. p. 64
He unites Eſtanglia to Mercia. ibid.
794. Edbert Pren, K. of Kt. made priſoner by Cenulph. p. 68
The Danes make a deſcent in Northumberland. p. 59——72
795. They are repulſed. p. 59
796. Oſbald K. of N. Ardulph K. of N. ibid.
D. of Offa, K. of M. Egfrid ſucceeds him and died four months after. Cenulph ſucceeds. p. 62
798. Cudred, K. of Kt. p. 68
800. D. of Brithrick, K. of W Egbert ſucceeds him. p. 73
Law of the Weſt Saxons againſt the Queens. ibid.
Ardulph, K. of N. puts Alemund to death. p. 59
805. Baldred, K. of Kt. p. 68
808. Ardulph, K. of N. takes refuge in France. p. 59
Alphuald II ſucceeds him. ibid.
810. Andred, K. of N. ibid.
810---813. Egbert, victorious againſt the Britons. p. 73
819. D. of Cenulph, K. of M. Cenelm ſucceeds. p. 62
Cenelm, killed by his ſiſter Quendrida. ibid.
Ceolulph, K. of M. ibid.
821. Bernulph, K. of M. ibid.
823. Battle of Wilton gained by Egbert, K. of W. againſt Bernulph. p. 74
Ludican, K. of M. p. 62
Egbert, K. of W. conquers the kingdom of Kent. p. 74
He makes himſelf maſter of the kingdom of Eſſex, ibid.
825. He ſtirs up a war againſt the Mercians and Eſtangles. Bernulph killed by the Eſtangles. ibid.
Ludican, elected K. of M. ibid.
His Death. ibid.
Witglaph, elected K. of M. p. 75
He is conquered by Egbert, who reſtores him the kingdom on condition of his holding of the Kings of Weſſex Page 76 An' 828.
He impoſes the ſame conditions on the Eſtangles. ibid.
And afterwards on the Northumbrians. ibid. 830.
Egbert King of Weſſex, Suſſex, Kent, and Eſſex, Sovereign Lord of Mercia, Eſtanglia and Northumberland. ibid.

End of the HEPTARCHY.

The Reign of EGBERT.

Egbert beats the Welſh. p. 100 830.
The Danes make a deſcent in the Weſt of England. 833.
Egbert haſtens thither and is defeated. ib.
The Danes make another deſcent; Egbert routs them at Hengiſtdun. 835.
Egbert confirms by edict the change of the name of Britain to that of England. ib.
Death of Egbert. Ethelwolph ſucceeds him. p. 101 838.

ETHELWOLPH.

A Daniſh fleet makes a deſcent at Southampton; they are repulſed. p. 101
Another deſcent of the Danes at Portland. ib.
They ſucceſſively beat two generals of Ethelwolph. ib.
Death of Witglaph, K. of M. tributary to Ethelwolph. 839.
Bertholph ſucceeds. ib.
Intire extirpation of the nation of Picts by the Scots. ib.
The Danes continuing their incurſions, Ethelwolph gives the kingdom of Kent to his baſtard ſon Adelſtan. p. 102 840.
D. of Andred, K. of N. Ethelred ſucceeds. ib. 841.
War between Roderic Maur, King of Wales, and Berthulph, King of Mercia. Ethelwolph ſupports his vaſſal Berthulph. 842. ib.
Ethelred, K. of N. depoſed; Redowald ſucceeds him; he is killed; Ethelred reſtored. 844. ib.
The Danes make a deſcent in England, and are repulſed. 845. ib.
Ethelred, K. of N. killed, Oſbert ſucceeds him. 848. ib.
Another deſcent of the Danes who are defeated at Wenſbury. 851. ib.
The Danes make great havock in Weſſex, they are defeated at Ockley, by the two King Ethelwolph and Adelſtan. 852. ib.
D. of Adelſtan, K. of Kt. ib.
Ethelwolph alone, &c. p. 103
Ethelwolph's edict for granting the tenths to the church. ib.
Ethelwolph ſends his younger ſon to Rome. ib. 853.
Ethelwolph's journey to Rome. ib. 855.
He extends the Peter-pence or Romeſcot over all England. ib.
On his return, in France he married Judith the Daughter of Charles the Bald. ib.
The conſpiracy of Ethelbald the King's eldeſt ſon, againſt his father. ib.
Ethelwolph arrives in England. p. 104
He is forced to reſign Weſſex to Ethelbald, and to be ſatisfied with the kingdom of Kent. ib.
Edmund aſcends the throne of Eſtanglia. ib.
Death of Ethelwolph. ib. 855.

ETHELBALD.

Death of Ethelbald. ib 860.

ETHELBERT.

The Danes burn Wincheſter. p. 105

They

AN' 860. They are repulsed. Page 105
Another company of Danes in the Isle of Thanet. ib.
Ethelbert gives them money. ib.
They break their promise; they retire. ib.
866. Death of Ethelbert. ib.

ETHELRED.

The Northumbrians revolt and refuse obedience to the Kings of Wessex. ib.
Divisions among the Northumbrians. ib.
Ella made King of Bernicia. ib.
An action of Osbert who drew the Danes into Northumberland. ib.
Ivar, K. of Denmark, makes a descent in Northumberland. p. 106
He defeats and kills Osbert. ib.
And afterwards Ella. ib.
He enters Mercia. Buthred, K. of M. gives him money, he withdraws. ib.
870. He makes himself master of Estanglia. ib.
Death of Edmund, K. of Est. ib.
871. Ivar gives Gurthorm the government of Estanglia. ibid.
He attacks Wessex. ib.
Several conflicts between Ethelred and Ivar. p. 107
872. Ethelred killed in a battle. ib.
Alfred succeeds him. ib.

ALFRED the GREAT.

The battle of Wilton, where Alfred is defeated by the Danes. p. 107
He makes a treaty with them. ib.
They enter Mercia. Buthred gives them a sum of money; they withdraw. ib.
They return into Mercia, which Buthred abandons to them. p. 107, 108
The Danes masters of Northumberland, Estanglia, and Mercia. Ricsige, King over them in Northumberland; Gurthorm, in Estanglia, and Ceolulph in Mercia. ib.
875. Halfden a Danish captain brings a new army into England; he attacks Wessex, and by surprize makes himself master of Warham. p. 108
Alfred makes a treaty with him. Halfden breaks the treaty, and besieges Exeter. ib.
876. War between Alfred and the Danes. Seven battles in one campain. ib.
Alfred treats with the Danes. ib.
Rollo arrives in England, and passes over into France. ib. 109
Alfred fits out a good fleet by which he obtains several advantages. p. 109
The Danes withdraw from Wessex. ib.
877. They divide Mercia and Northumberland among them. ib.
They unawares attack Wessex, and seize on Chipenham. ib.
Alfred is forced to hide himself at a Shepherds. ib.
Ubba, Ivar's brother, besieges the castle of Kinwith; he is defeated and killed in a sally. ib. 110
Alfred disguised, becomes a spy in the enemies camp. p. 110
He intirely routs the Danes; allows the vanquished advantageous terms. ib.
He confirms their possessions in Estanglia, and gives Gurthorm the title of King. ib.
He is acknowleged Sovereign of all England. ib. 111
Hastings a Dane ravages the Low Countries. p. 111
Some Danes return to England, and are repulsed. ib.
Alfred equips a great fleet, and fortifies several places. ib.
He makes himself master of London. ib.
He gives that town to Ethelred his daughter Elfleda's husband. Page 111
A calm which lasts twelve years. ib.
The Danes after twelve years renew their invasions, and those of Estanglia, join the new comers. ib. 112
At length, the Danish strangers withdraw, and those established in England submit to Alfred. p. 112
Alfred's character. ib.
He published a body of the law. ib.
He instituted juries in criminal causes. ib. 113
He divided England into shires, &c. p. 113
He regulated the militia. ib.
He caused vessels to be built for trade. ib.
He sent ships to the Indies. ib.
He invites learned men into England. ib.
He founded the university of Oxford. ib.
He regulated his councils. p. 114
He embellished London. ib.
He introduced buildings of brick. ib.
The number of monks very much decreased by the wars. ib.
Alfred's private life. ib.
His death. Edward succeeds him. p. 115 AN' 900.

EDWARD the ELDER.

Ethelward disputes the crown. ib. 116
He retires among the Danes, who acknowlege him King of England. 901. p. 116
The Danes abandon him, and he quits the kingdom. 902. ib.
Edward carries the war into Mercia, and takes several places from the Danes. ib.
Ethelward returns with a succor of Normans from France; the Danes join him. 903. ib.
He is killed in a fight. ib. 905.
Peace between Edward and the Danes. ib. 907.
The war renewed. ib. 910.
Death of Ethelred earl of Mercia; Elfleda his widow gains upon the Danes. 912. ib. 117
Edward founds the university of Cambridge. p. 117 915.
Death of Elfleda. ib. 918.
Edward seizes on Mercia. ib.
The Danes submit to Edward. p. 118 921.
He subdues the Welsh and Britons of Cumberland. 923. ib.
Death of Edward; Athelstan succeeds. ib. 925

ATHELSTAN.

Athelstan, Edward the elder's bastard, by election ascends the English throne. 925. p. 119
Alfred conspires against the King; he is sent to Rome where he dies. ib.
The Danes rise; Athelstan marches into the North and subdues them. 925. ib.
Death of Sithrick Danish King of Northumberland. ib.
Athelstan dispossesses Anlalf and Godfrid the sons of Sithrick, and seizes on Northumberland. ib. 120
He has an interview with Constantine King of Scotland at Dacor. p. 120
Constantine and Anlaf make a league against Athelstan. ib.
Athelstan defeats the King of Wales. ib.
He marches towards Scotland, and makes peace with Constantine. 933. ib.
He condemns Edwin his brother. ib.
He repents, and founds the monastery of Middleton. ib.
Constantine and Anlaf invade Northumberland. p. 121
The battle of Brunamburgh where Athelstan is victorious. ib.
Athelstan makes some conquests in Scotland. ib.
He chastizes the Welsh, and Britons of Cornwall. ib.
Pretended miracle in favor of Athelstan. ib.

Death

An' 941. Death of Athelſtan; Edmund ſon of Edward the elder ſucceeds. Page 121, 122

EDMUND.

942. Anlaf makes great progreſs in Northumberland. p. 122
A battle. ib.
Edmund and Anlaf divide England. ib.
492. Diviſions among the Northumbrians. p. 122
Edmund marches into Northumberland. ib.
He gives it to the two Kings Anlaf and Reginald, who take an oath to him and become Chriſtians. ib. 123
944. The two Kings renew the war. p. 123
Edmund forces them to fly, and makes the Northumbrians take an oath to him. ib.
945. Edmund conquers Cumberland, and gives it to the King of Scotland. ib.
948. He is killed by Leolf. Edred ſucceeds. ib.

EDRED.

The Northumbrian Danes recal Anlaf, who makes himſelf maſter of Northumberland. ib. 124
His ſubjects drive him out, and place Erick on the throne. p. 124
Edred regains Northumberland; Erick takes an oath of fidelity to him. ib.
The Danes traiterouſly attack Edred. ib.
He immediately returns and defeats them. ib.
954. He aboliſhes the Royalty in Northumberland, and changes the kingdom into a county. ib.
Edred ſuffers himſelf to be guided by Dunſtan abbot of Glaſton. ib.
He introduces the monks into eccleſiaſtical benefices. ib.
Dunſtan is in great repute for ſanctity. ib.
955. Death of Edred; Edwy ſon of Edmund ſucceeds him. ib. 125

EDWY.

Dunſtan diſgraced and baniſhed. p. 125
959. Rebellion againſt Edwy; Edgar his brother takes Mercia from him. ib.
Several calumnies publiſhed againſt him. p. 126
Death of Edwy; Edgar ſucceeds him. ib.

EDGAR.

Edgar maintains a numerous fleet, and takes other precautions which procure him a conſtant peace. ib. 127.
961. He frees England from wolves. ib.
He treats corrupt magiſtrates with great ſeverity. ib.
He recals Dunſtan, and re-eſtabliſhes the monks in benefices. ib.
He makes Dunſtan archbiſhop of Canterbury. p. 128
The amours of Edgar. p. 130, 131
His marriage. ib.
975. Death of Edgar; Edward ſucceeds. p. 132

EDWARD II, the MARTYR.

Diviſions about the ſucceſſion; Dunſtan by his own authority crowns Edward. ib.
Councils and miracles occaſioned by the differences between the prieſts and monks. p. 133
979. Edward aſſaſſinated by his mother-in-law. ib.
Ethelred II, his brother ſucceeds him. p. 139

ETHELRED II.

Foreign Danes begin to make irruptions into England. ib.
983. Death of Elfrick duke of Mercia. p. 140
The monks credit fall at the ſame time with Dunſtan's. ib.
990. Death of Dunſtan. ib.
991. Invaſion of the Danes; Ethelred gives them money. ib.
993. Another Daniſh fleet; the Engliſh are defeated. ib.
Sweno King of Denmark, and Olaus King of Norway, attack England. Page 140 An' 994.
Ethelred ingages to pay them a certain ſum. ib.
Olaus becomes a Chriſtian. p. 141.
The Daniſh war was renewed. ib. 997.
The Danes ravage England. ib. 998.
They go to aſſiſt the duke of Normandy. ib. 999.
They return into England and make great waſte. ib. 1001.
The eſtabliſhment of Danegelt, to the end the Danes may give over their devaſtations. p. 141
They withdraw, tho' ſeveral remain. ib.
The Danes are maſters, they are called Lord Danes. ib.
Ethelred marries Emma of Normandy. p. 142
He cauſes a general maſſacre of the Danes. ib.
He cauſes the head of Sweno's ſiſter, King of Denmark, to be cut off. ib.
Sweno lands in Cornwall. ib. 1002.
He burns Exeter. ib.
The Engliſh are beat. ib.
Sweno withdraws to Denmark. ib. 1003.
He returns and ravages Eſtanglia. ib.
Ethelred every where betrayed. p. 143
Great famine. ib. 1005.
Sweno withdraws. ib.
Another Daniſh fleet. Ethelred gives them money. ib.
He gives one of his daughters to Edrick Streon, Duke of Mercia. ib.
He ſets out a great fleet, which becomes uſeleſs. ib.
Other Danes in Kent. ib. 1008.
Edrick Streon, hinders the King's fighting. ib.
The Danes gain a battle and ſeize on Eſtanglia. p. 144
They become maſters of almoſt all Weſſex. ib.
They burn Canterbury, kill the archbiſhop Elphegus, and the monks of St. Auguſtin. ib. 1012.
Ethelred gives them money to withdraw. ib.
Sweno returns into England. ib. 1013.
Ethelred flies into Normandy. ib.
Sweno proclaimed King of England. ib.
Death of Sweno. ib. 1014.
Canutus his ſon proclaimed King by the Danes ib. 1015.
The Engliſh recall Ethelred. ib.
Canutus retires to Denmark. p. 145
Ethelred is hated by his ſubjects. ib.
The marriage of Edmund his ſon. ib.
Canutus returns to England. ib. 1016.
He gains over Edrick Streon, duke of Mercia, ſon in law to Ethelred. ib.
He ſubdues all Mercia. ib.
He attacks Weſſex. ib.
Edrick betrays Ethelred in favor of Canutus. ib.
Ethelred ſeized with fear. ib.
He durſt not head the army, for fear of being betrayed, and the ſoldiers will not fight without him. ib.
Edmund retires to Uthred earl of Northumberland. ib.
Canutus marches towards the North; Uthred ſubmits. p. 145, 146
Canutes cauſes him to be ſlain. p. 146
Death of Ethelred. Edmund ſucceeds him. ib. 1016.

EDMUND II. Iron Side.

The Engliſh ſupport Edmund, the Danes Canutus. ib.
Several combats. ib.
Canute twice lays ſeige to London, which is always ſuccored by Edmund. ib.
A battle undecided. ib.
Another ſiege of London. ib.
Five battles in one year. ib.
The battle of Aſheldun where Canutus gets the victory. p. 147
Edmund aſſembles another army. ib.
England divided between Edmund and Canutus. ib.

Death

An' 1717. Death of Edmund. Canutus ſucceeds. Page 147, 148

CANUTUS the GREAT.

Canutus makes himſelf be acknowleged King of all England contrary to the right of Edmund's ſons. p. 148
He diviſes England into four provinces. ib.
He publiſhes an edict in favor of the Engliſh. ib.
He orders two of Edmund's ſons into Denmark, with deſign to get rid of them. p. 148, 149
They are preſerved and carried into Sweden, thence into Hungary, where they marry. p. 149
Edmund the elder dies without iſſue. ib.
Canutus puts Edwy, one of Ethelred's ſons, to death. ib.
He marries Emma of Normandy, Ethelred IId's widow. ib.
He puts to death Edrick Streon, duke of Mercia. ib.
He lays a tax to pay his army. ib.
1019. Earl Goodwin routs the army of the Vandals unknown to Canutus. ib.
Canutus returns to England. ib. 150
He ratifies the Daniſh laws. p. 150
1025. Canutus's expedition into Sweden without ſucceſs. ib.
He ſeizes on Norway. ib.
1031. He returns into England and gives himſelf up to devotion. ib.
He takes a journey to Rome. ib.
He returns to England. ib.
1036. Death of Canutus the Great. Harold his ſon ſucceeds him in England, and Hardiknute his ſon by Emma in Denmark. p. 150, 151

HAROLD I. Harefoot.

Harold elected King of Mercia by the Danes, Hardiknute of Weſſex by the Engliſh. p. 151, 152
Earl Goodwin, regent in Weſſex, in the abſenſe of Hardiknute. ib.
He procures the crown of Weſſex for Harold. ib.
Goodwin diſcovers Emma's deſign of placing Alfred and Edward, her ſons by her firſt huſband, on the throne. ib.
She makes them come into England. ib.
1037. Goodwin puts to death Alfred. Edward eſcapes to Normandy. p. 153
1039. Death of Harold I. Hardiknute ſucceeds. ib.

HARDIKNUTE.

Hardiknute acknowleged King of all England. ib.
He cauſes his brother's corpſe to be diſentombed. ib.
He lays a tax to pay his fleet. ib.
A ſedition at Worceſter chaſtiſed. ib.
Prince Edward, ſon of Ethelred and Emma arrives at court. ib.
He demands juſtice againſt Goodwin. ib.
1041. Death of Hardiknute. Edward ſucceeds. p. 154

EDWARD the CONFESSOR.

Goodwin cauſes Edward to be acknowleged, who ingages to marry Editha his daughter. ib.
Expulſion of the Danes. p. 155
Edward makes the Queen his mother undergo the trial of Ordeal. p. 156
1043. Daniſh pirates make a deſcent in England, and are beat off. p. 157
Swan, earl Goodwin's ſon, baniſhed the kingdom. ib.
He infeſts the coaſt, and kills count Beorn. ib.
1047. The King pardons him. ib.
1048. The Normans in great credit with the King. ib.
Quarrel between the King and Goodwin. ib. 158
Goodwin, and Harold his ſon, baniſhed. ib.
They force the King to re-eſtabliſh them. ib. 159
Stigand made archbiſhop of Canterbury in the place of Robert who was fled. p. 159
William the baſtard, duke of Normandy, makes a viſit to Edward, who promiſes him the ſucceſſion. Page 159
Death of Goodwin. Harold his eldeſt ſon ſucceeds him in his poſts. An' 1053. ib. 160
Harold gains the eſteem of the Engliſh. p. 160
A war for Cumberland. ib. 1054.
Death of Siward, earl of Northumberland. ib. 1055.
Toſto, Harold's brother, made earl of Northumberland. ib.
Alfgar, ſon of Leoffrick, duke of Mercia, revolts. ib.
Edward ſends for his nephew Edward from Hungary. 1057. ib.
Death of Prince Edward, he leaves one ſon named Edgar Atheling. ib.
Death of Leoffrick, duke of Mercia, Alfgar his ſon ſucceeds him. ib.
Harold aſpires to the crown. ib. 1062.
He takes a journey to Roan. ib.
The duke of Normandy makes him promiſe with an oath, that he will not diſpute with him the ſucceſſion. p. 162
Harold, on his return to England, takes meaſures to ſecure him the crown. ib.
He ſubdues the Welſh. ib. 1063.
The Northumbrians complain of Toſto. Harold takes their part againſt his brother. Toſto becomes a ſworn enemy to Harold, and withdraws into Flanders. ib.
Morkar, made earl of Northumberland. ib.
Edward convenes an aſſembly for the dedication of the church of Weſtminſter. 1065. p. 162, 163
He falls ſick. p. 163
Harold makes parties. ib.
Edward leaves the election of a King to the lords aſſembled. ib.
He dies the latter end of December, or begining of January 1065-6. ib.
Harold elected. p. 164 1066.
Harold II, aſcends the throne by election. ib.
Toſto makes a deſcent in England. p. 165
He is repulſed. ib.
He perſuades the King of Norway to undertake the conqueſt of England. ib.
William duke of Normandy makes preparations to take the crown of England from Harold. ib.
The Pope approves his deſign. p. 166
The King of Norway makes a deſcent in Northumberland. ib.
Harold marches towards the North. ib.
The battle of Stamford, where Harold routs the Norwegians. p. 167
The duke of Normandy makes a deſcent in England. ib.
Harold goes to meet him. ib.
The battle of Haſtings where Harold is overcome and killed. p. 167, 168, 169 14 Oct.
State of the church from the reign of Ethelred II, to the Norman conqueſt, from 979 to 1066. p. 170, 174.

End of the SAXON DOMINION.

WILLIAM the CONQUEROR.

William, after his victory beſieges and takes Dover. 1066. p. 197
The country of Kent ſends deputies to him. p. 198
Every thing is in great confuſion at London. ib.
William approaches to London. ib.
Morkar and Edwin indeavor to place Edgar Atheling on the throne, but the clergy oppoſe it. p. 199
Edgar and the two archbiſhops go and ſubmit to William. ib.
The magiſtrates of London offer the crown to William, he accepts of it. ib.
He is crowned by Aldred, archbiſhop of York. ib.

William confirms the privileges of the people. Page 200
Edwin and Morkar ſubmit. ib.
The new King founds the abby of Battle ib.
He takes a voyage to Normandy, and leaves two regents in England. ib.
The regents abuſe their power. p. 201
The inſurrection in Kent chaſtiſed. ib.
The revolt of Edrick the Foreſter. ib.
William returns into England. ib.
His wife Mathilda of Flanders is crowned. ib.
An' 1068. Henry the King's ſon born. ib.
William re-eſtabliſhes the Danegelt to pay his debts. ib.
He very much careſſes count Edwin. ib.
Aldred archbiſhop of York makes remonſtrances to him, which are very ill received. ib. 202
Death of Aldred. p. 202
1068. Exeter revolts; William beſieges the town which ſurrenders; he pardons it, and builds there a citadel. ib.
He confiſcates the eſtates of thoſe who had born arms for Harold. ib.
He pays his debts, and rewards his ſervants. ib.
Edwin and Morkar revolt. ib.
The King marches againſt them, they ſubmit p. 203
He builds caſtles in ſeveral parts. ib.
York ſubmits, and pays a fine; he builds a caſtle there. ib.
Edgar Atheling, and Coſpatrick, retire into Scotland. ib.
Malcolm King of Scotland, marries Edgar's ſiſter. ib.
1069. The King diſarms the Engliſh, and eſtabliſhes the Corfue. ib.
A deſcent by Harold's ſons of little conſequence. ib.
Robert Cumin ſent into the North. p. 204
He is killed by the Northumbrians, who call in the Danes. ib.
A Daniſh army makes a deſcent in the North. ib.
The Danes make themſelves maſters of York, and leave count Walthoff governor. ib.
William corrupts the Daniſh general, who withdraws. ib.
Siege of York, and Walthoff's brave defenſe. ib.
The King pardons him, and gives him his niece in marriage. ib.
He waſtes Northumberland. ib.
1070. William, with great profuſeneſs, gives the eſtates of the Engliſh to foreigners. p. 205
He violates the charters of the church, and takes away the gold and ſilver from the monaſteries. ib.
Lanfrank made archbiſhop of Canterbury. ib.
The abbot of St. Alban's revolts. p. 206
Edgar Atheling proclaimed King. ib.
The King appeaſes the rebels, but does not keep his word. ib.
Edgar withdraws into Scotland. ib.
1071. Another rebellion; the malecontents retire into the iſle of Ely under Everard. ib.
William beſieges them in Ely; the ſiege is of long duration. ib.
The King of Scotland invades Northumberland. ib.
The King makes himſelf maſter of the iſle of Ely. ib.
He puniſhes the rebels. p. 207
1072. He marches into Scotland. ib.
He makes peace with Malcolm. ib.
Walthoff made earl of Northumberland. ib.
1073. War between France and Normandy. William retakes Mans. ib.
Edgar ſubmits to the King, who takes him into favor. ib. 208
Gregory VII, demands homage of the King for England, and the arrears of the Peter-pence. p. 208
William promiſes to pay the Peter-pence; but haughtily refuſes to do homage, and forbids his ſubjects to acknowlege any Pope without his permiſſion. Page 208
Some Normans eſtabliſhed in England conſpire againſt the King. An' 1074. ib.
Walthoff ingages in this conſpiracy. ib.
He repents and goes into Normandy to inform the King. ib.
The conſpirators diſperſed and puniſhed. ib. 209
Earl Walthoff beheaded. p. 209
The King miſuſes the Engliſh. ib.
He goes to Normandy. ib. 1075.
The ſiege of Dole in Bretany. ib.
Council at London. ib. 1076.
Robert the King's eldeſt ſon indeavors to take Nomandy. 1077. ib.
He wounds the King his father not knowing him, and ſubmits to his diſcretion. ib.
The King ſends him with the command of an army againſt the Scots. 1078. ib.
Robert lays the foundation of the town of Newcaſtle. ib.
The Welſh do homage to the King. ib.
Foundation of the Tower of London. ib.
The King cauſes the eſtates of all his ſubjects to be inregiſtred in a book called Dooms-day. p. 210
He depopulates a large country to make a foreſt for hunting, which is called the New-foreſt. 1079. ib.
He erects new courts of juſtice. ib. 1080.
He makes ſeveral attempts to introduce the uſe of the Norman language. p. 211
Odo, biſhop of Bayeux, his brother by his mother's ſide, aſpires to the Papacy. 1082. ib.
The King arreſts and makes him priſoner. ib.
Death of Queen Mathilda. ib. 1084.
The King of Denmark threatens England. ib.
William lays a tax to defend himſelf. ib.
Edgar Atheling goes into the Eaſt with ſome Engliſh lords, to ſerve the Emperor of Conſtantinople againſt the Saracens. 1085. p. 112
William makes war againſt France. ib. 1086.
Truce broke. ib.
William makes himſelf maſter of Mants, and burns the town. 1087. ib.
He falls ſick. ib.
He takes precautions to procure the crown for William his ſecond ſon. ib.
Death of William the Conqueror; William the II ſucceeds. 9th, Sept. ib. 213, 214.

WILLIAM II, RUFUS.

William II, crowned by the intrigues of Lanfrank in prejudice to Robert his elder brother. 1088. p. 214
The biſhop of Bayeux conſpiracy to procure the crown for Robert. ib.
Lanfrank does the King great ſervices. p. 215
William in Pevenſey takes the biſhop of Bayeux priſoner; he beſieges and takes Rocheſter. ib.
Robert neglects his affairs. ib.
William baniſhes the biſhop of Durham one of the conſpirators. ib.
He oppreſſes the Engliſh. p. 216 1089.
Death of Lanfrank. ib.
The King ſeizes on the vacant benefices. ib.
A ſchiſm in the church. ib.
William attacks Normandy. ib. 1090.
The King of France aſſiſts Robert, but ſoon abandons him. ib.
Prince Henry joins his brother, and ſaves Roan for him. ib.
Peace between Robert and William. ib. 1091.
Henry ſeizes on mount St. Michael in Normandy; his two brothers beſiege him. ib.
William withdraws; Robert takes the place. p. 217
Edgar Atheling is diſgraced; he retires to Scotland. ib.

The

The King of Scotland enters Nothumberland. Page 217
William and Robert march againſt him. ib.
Treaty of peace. ib.
Edgar taken into favor. ib.
Engliſh conqueſts in Wales. ib.
An' 1092. Henry ſeizes on Domfront in Normandy. ib.
1093. William is dangerouſly ill. ib.
He fills up the vacant benefices. p. 218
Anſelm made archbiſhop of Canterbury. ib.
William being recovered, oppreſſes his ſubjects. ib.
He affronts Malcolm King of Scotland. ib.
Malcolm enters Northumberland. ib.
He is defeated and killed. ib.
Donald ſucceeds him. ib.
He makes an irruption into England. ib.
Donald is beat; Duncan crowned by the Scots. ib.
Welſh war. ib.
1094. William makes war on his brother Robert. p. 218
He makes ſeveral conqueſts in Normandy. p. 219
The King of France ſends troops to Robert, but recals them on his receiving money from William. ib.
William inrolls twenty-thouſand men in England, and diſcharges them for ten ſhillings a man. ib.
1095. William makes two expeditions into Wales without ſucceſs. ib.
Robert Mowbray revolts. ib.
He is beſieged in Bamburgh, taken and puniſhed. ib.
A difference between the King and Anſelm, A. of Cant. ib.
1096. Cruſade for the conqueſt of the Holy-Land. p. 220
Robert mortgages Normandy to his brother William. ib.
The King extorts money from the Engliſh to give to his brother. ib.
The war with France. ib.
1097. Treaty of peace with France. ib.
The war with Wales. ib.
1098. The Engliſh carry the war into Wales. ib.
William cauſes London-bridge to be repaired. p. 221
He builds a new wall round the Tower, and builds Weſtminſter-Hall. ib.
1099. He goes to relieve Mans, and takes count Fleche priſoner. ib.
Jeruſalem taken by the Chriſtians, who there eſtabliſh a kingdom; of which Godfrey of Bouillon was the firſt King. ib.
1100. William II, by accident is killed in hunting. ib.

HENRY I, BEAUCLERC.

Henry in a tumultuous manner is elected, and crowned to the detriment of his elder brother Robert who was abſent. p. 223
He reforms ſeveral abuſes, and grants an advantageous charter to his ſubjects. ib. 224
1101. He recals Anſelm. ib.
He marries Mathilda of Scotland. ib.
Robert duke of Normandy lays claim to the crown. ib.
He arrives in England. p. 225
Anſelm does Henry great ſervices. ib.
Treaty between the two brothers. ib.
1102. Henry revenges himſelf on Robert's partiſans. ib.
1103. A quarrel between the King and Anſelm about inveſtitures. ib.
Anſelm goes to Rome. p. 226.
A reconciliation. ib.
1104. Robert makes a viſit to Henry, and gives up his penſion. ib.
1105. Henry ſeeks to quarrel with his brother, that he may take Normandy from him. p. 227
1106. Robert deſires peace, but cannot obtain it. ib.
1107. The battle of Tinchebray; Henry takes Robert priſoner, ſends him to the caſtle of Cardiff, and puts out his eyes. Page 228
Henry takes Normandy. ib.
Anſelm perſecutes the married prieſts. ib. 229 An' 1108.
Quarrels between Henry and France. ib.
The marriage of Mathilda, Henry's daughter, with the Emperor. 1109. ib.
Death of Anſelm. ib.
Re-eſtabliſhment of the univerſity of Cambridge. ib. 1110.
Henry puts to death the count du Maine. ib. 1111.
A colony of Flemings ſetle in Wales. ib. 1112.
Henry goes into Normandy, and ſurprizes Robert de Melleſme. 1113. ib.
The marriage of Prince William, the King's ſon, with a daughter of the count of Anjou's. ib.
Radulph made archbiſhop of Canterbury, and Thurſtan of York. 1114. p 230
Welſh war. ib. 1115.
Henry makes the Normans and Engliſh take the oath of fidelity to the Prince his ſon. ib. 1116.
The war between Lewis le Gros, King of France, and Henry, on account of William, Robert's ſon. 1117. ib.
Henry goes into Normandy. ib. 1118.
Treaty of peace between the two kings. ib.
The war renewed. ib.
A battle in which Henry is wounded. ib.
Council of Rheims, in which the Pope hinders Henry being brought into trouble. 1119. ib. 231
Treaty of peace. p. 231
Prince William Henry's ſon loſt by ſhipwreck. ib. 1120.
Henry marries Adelaid of Louvain. ib. 1121.
The Welſh war, in which Henry runs the riſque of his life. ib.
Death of Radulph archbiſhop of Canterbury. ib. 1122.
Corbet ſucceeds him. ib. 1123.
Robert de Mellent taken in Normandy. ib. 1124.
A Legate named John de Creme arrives in England, and holds a ſynod againſt the married prieſts. 1125. ib.
Henry cauſes Mathilda or Maud his daughter, the Emperor's widow, to be acknowleged his heir. 1127. p. 232
The marriage of the Empreſs Mathilda with Godfrey Plantagenet count of Anjou. ib.
The Engliſh barons diſcontented. ib.
Lewis le Gros creates William Criton ſon of Robert, count of Flanders. 1128. ib.
That Prince killed at the ſiege of Aloſt. ib.
Henry acknowleges Pope Innocent II. ib. 1130.
A new oath to Mathilda. ib.
Carliſle erected into a biſhoprick. ib. 1132.
The birth of Henry of Anjou Mathilda's ſon. ib. 1133.
Death of Robert duke of Normandy, in his priſon. ib.
Death of Henry I, Stephen ſucceeds. p. 233 1135. Aug.

STEPHEN.

Notwithſtanding the oaths taken to Mathilda, Stephen is crowned by the conſent of the great men, eccleſiaſtics and ſecular. 26. Sept. p. 234
He promiſes a great many things, and takes an unaccuſtomed oath. p. 235
The great men alſo take a conditional oath to him. ib.
He ſeizes the late King's treaſure. ib.
He grants an advantageous charter to his ſubjects. 1136. ib.
Death of Corbet archbiſhop of Canterbury. ib.
The King takes the revenues of the archbiſhopric, contrary to the tenure of his charter. ib.
He ſuffers the barons to fortify their caſtles, ib.
The duke of Devonſhire revolts. ib. 1137.
The King beſieges Exeter; the duke flies. ib.
The war with Wales, in which the Engliſh are beat. ib.

The

AN' 1137. The King of Scotland takes Carliſle and Newcaſtle, and advances as far as Durham. Page. 235
A treaty of peace between the two Kings, which is advantageous to the King of Scotland. ib.
Stephen falls ſick. p. 236
The Normans call in the count of Blois his brother. ib.
Robert, duke of Gloceſter, natural ſon to Henry I, delivers Falaiſe to the count of Blois. ib.
Stephen recovers Normandy, and gives it up to Euſtace his ſon, with the King of France's approbation. ib.
He makes an agreement with his brother and the count of Anjou. ib.
1138. The King of Scotland makes an invaſion in the North. ib.
The Engliſh barons rebel againſt Stephen, having the earl of Gloceſter at their head. ib.
The earl takes Briſtol. ib.
The barons invite Maud into England. p. 237
The war againſt the Scots King, called the Standard war. ib.
The Scots are beat. ib.
The earl of Gloceſter ſolicites Maud to paſs over into England. ib.
Stephen marches into Scotland. ib.
Treaty of peace with Scotland. ib.
1139. Stephen falls out with the clergy. ib.
He ſeizes on the biſhops caſtles. p. 238
The marriage of Euſtace, Stephen's ſon, with Conſtance of France. ib.
A ſynod in which the biſhop of Wincheſter declares for the clergy againſt the King his brother. ib.
Maud arrives in England. p. 239
She ingages the nobility and clergy on her ſide. ib.
1140. The civil war begins. ib.
The battle of Lincoln, where Stephen is taken priſoner. p. 240
The count of Anjou ſeizes on Normandy. ib.
The biſhop of Wincheſter ſides with Maud. ib.
He aſſembles a council at Wincheſter, where Maud is elected by the clergy. ib.
Maud quarrels with the biſhop of Wincheſter, who quits her party, and goes over to the King. p. 241
She diſobliges the inhabitants of London. ib.
She is obliged to leave London. ib.
She is beſieged in the caſtle of Wincheſter. p. 242
The earl of Gloceſter is taken priſoner, he is exchanged for the King. ib.
Council at Weſtminſter, where the biſhop of Wincheſter, being legate, excommunicates Maud. ib.
1142. Maud beſieged in Oxford, from whence ſhe eſcapes after an extraordinary manner. ib. 243
1143. Synod at London, in which the clergy grant a ſupply to the King. ib.
1146. Death of the earl of Gloceſter. ib.
Maud withdraws into Normandy. ib.
1147. The end of the civil war. ib.
1148. A new cruſade. ib.
Lewis le Jeune takes upon him the croſs of the holy war. ib.
1150. Death of Jeoffery, count of Anjou. ib.
1151. Lewis le Jeune, puts away Eleanor de Guyenne his wife. ib.
Henry the new duke of Normandy marries her. ib.
Stephen would have his ſon Euſtace crowned; the clergy oppoſe it. p. 244
1152. Henry duke of Normandy paſſes over into England, where he finds a great party. ib.
1153. Treaty of peace between Stephen and Henry, by which Henry is acknowleged Stephen's ſucceſſor. p. 245
Oct. 25. Death of Stephen, Henry II ſucceeds him. ib.
1154. State of the church. p. 246——257

HENRY II. PLANTAGENET

Henry arrives in England, and is crowned. AN' 1155. Page 258
He cauſes the caſtles of the lords to be demoliſhed, and revokes the gift of Stephen. ib.
He takes the title of baron from thoſe Stephen had created. p. 259
He confirms the charter of Henry the I ib.
He makes war on Jeoffrey his brother; drives him 1156. out of Anjou. ib. 260
Which he had taken poſſeſſion of, by virtue of their father's will. p. 260
Jeoffrey created count of Nantes. ib.
The King of Scotland reſtores Northumberland to Henry. ib.
Welſh war. ib. 1157.
Birth of Richard, the King's ſecond ſon. ib. 1158.
Birth of Jeoffrey, Henry's third ſon. p. 261 1159.
Death of Jeoffrey, the King's brother. ib.
The marriage between Henry, the King's eldeſt ſon and Margaret of France, concluded. ib.
Another marriage between Jeoffrey, the King's third ſon and Conſtance of Bretany. ib.
Henry makes war on the count of Toulouſe for the right of Eleanor his wife. ib.
The King of France ſupports the count of Toulouſe. ib.
Henry beſieges Toulouſe. ib. 262 1162.
Treaty of peace between the two Kings. ib.
Death of Pope Adrian the fourth. A Schiſm. ib. 1159.
Henry celebrates the marriage of his ſon Henry with Margaret of France. ib.
The war between the two Kings, ended by the mediation of Alexander the third. ib.
The begining of the differences between Henry and 1163. Thomas Becket, archbiſhop of Canterbury. ib.
Parliament at Clarendon; five articles propoſed by the King, and approved on. p. 264
The Pope condemns the five articles. ib.
Becket repents his ſigning them. ib.
The King raiſes him ſeveral troubles. ib.
Becket eſcapes to Flanders. p. 265
Alexander III, maintains the archbiſhop's cauſe. ib. 1164.
Henry proceeds vigorouſly againſt the Pope and 1165. Becket. p. 266 1166.
Becket excommunicates ſome of the King's counſellors. ib.
The Pope amuſes the King by his legates. p. 267 1167.
The King of France protects Becket. ib. 1168.
Birth of John, the King's fourth ſon. ib. 1169.
Death of the Empreſs Maud. p. 267
The King's conference with Becket ineffectual. p. 268
Becket excommunicates the Engliſh prieſts who ſide with the King. ib.
Another conference between the King and Becket without ſucceſs. ib.
Henry returns to England. ib. 1170.
He cauſes his ſon Henry to be crowned by the archbiſhop of York. ib.
The war between Henry and the King of France. p. 269
Treaty of peace. ib.
Henry falls ſick. ib.
He is reconciled to Becket. ib.
Becket, before his return to England, excommunicates the archbiſhop of York, and the other biſhops. ib.
He returns triumphantly into England. ib.
The excommunicated biſhops go to Roan, and complain to the King. ib.
Indirect words of the King. p. 270
Becket is maſſacred in the church by four of the 1171. King's domeſtics. ib.
He is canonized. ib.
Henry is accuſed of the murder of Becket. ib.

Troubles

AN' 1171. Troubles in Ireland, which occaſions the conqueſt of the iſland. Page 272
1172. Henry goes into Ireland and makes himſelf maſter of the country. ib. 273
He goes into Normandy; they give him abſolution on hard conditions. p. 274
1173. Henry's children conſpire againſt their father. ib.
Henry his ſon eſcapes to France. p. 275
A powerful combination againſt Henry; the confederate Princes, act at the ſame time, in different places. ib.
The earl of Leiceſter brings an army into England for Henry his ſon, he is beat and taken priſoner. ib.
The King of Scotland one of the confederate Princes is defeated and taken priſoner. ib.
Henry the father makes ſome progreſs in France. ib.
He returns to England and does penance on Becket's tomb. ib.
He reduces the Engliſh rebels. ib.
Henry returns into Normandy, and makes them raiſe the ſeige of Roan. p. 276
1174. Treaty of peace. ib.
A match agreed on between Richard, the King's ſecond ſon, and Alice of France. ib.
The King of Scotland does homage to Henry for the kingdom. ib.
1175. Henry confirms the laws of St. Edward. ib.
1176. The marriage of Jane, Henry's daughter, with William, King of Sicily. ib.
1177. The King of France goes a pilgrimage to Becket's tomb. p. 277
1179. Aſſizes of Northampton. ib.
Henry is judge of the differences between the Kings of Caſtile and of Navarre. ib.
1180. Lewis le Jeune, King of France, dies, Philip Auguſtus ſucceeds. ib.
1183. Death of young King Henry. p. 277, 278
1184. A new cruſade. p. 278
1185. The King ſends his ſon John to govern Ireland, and ſoon after recalls him. ib.
1186. Richard the King's eldeſt ſon makes war on the Bretons. ib.
Death of Jeoffrey, duke of Bretany the King's ſon. ib.
Philip Auguſtus makes war on Henry. p. 279
A truce. ib.
1187. Philip corrupts Richard. ib.
Jeruſalem taken by Saladine. ib.
Philip and Henry takes the croſs. ib.
1188. Richard ſeeks to quarrel with the count of Toulouſe. ib.
Philip accuſes Henry, and renews the war. p. 280
Richard throws himſelf upon the King of France. ib.
1189. Henry is abandoned by his French ſubjects. ib.
He is every where beat. ib.
He is conſtrained to accept of a peace on hard terms. ib.
He makes imprecations againſt his children. ib.
He dies at Chinon. Richard ſucceeds him. ib. 281

RICHARD I.

Richard does homage to Philip. p. 281
He is crowned duke of Normandy at Roan. ib.
He arrives at London, and is crowned there. p. 282
Philip has him ſummoned, to accompliſh his vow in relation to the cruſade. ib.
Richard prepares for the expedition, and amaſſes money by ſeveral methods. ib.
He makes great preſents to his brother John. ib.
He leaves Longchamp regent. p. 283
1190. He joins Philip at Vazelai. ib.
They part at Lyons. ib.
Sept. 20. Richard imbarks at Marſeiles and arrives at Meſſina. ib.
He quarrels with Tancred, King of Sicily, and makes himſelf maſter of Meſſina. ib.
He makes a treaty with Tancred. Page 284
Philip and Richard are at variance by Tancred's artifices. ib. AN' 1191.
They make an agreement. ib.
Philip parts firſt for the holy land. ib.
Richard waits to marry Berenguelle of Navarre. ib.
He ſets ſail. ib.
He makes himſelf maſter of the iſle of Cyprus. p. 285
He marries Berenguelle. ib.
Troubles in England, occaſioned by Longchamp; John foments them and ſeizes on the government. ib. 286
Richard arrives at the ſeige of Acre. p. 287
The place ſurrenders. ib.
Richard affronts the duke of Auſtria. ib.
The two Kings, Philip and Richard, are at greater variance than ever. ib.
They both fall ill. ib.
Philip returns to France. ib. 1192.
Richard and Saladine murder their priſoners. ib.
Richard's victory over Saladine. p. 288
Richard carries off a great caravan. p. 289
He arrives in ſight of Jeruſalem, and puts off the ſeige till ſpring. ib.
The greateſt part of the cruſade troops leave him. ib.
He makes a truce with Saladine. ib.
Richard imbarks at Ptolemais. ib.
He is ſhipwrecked near Aquila. ib.
He is taken by the duke of Auſtria, and delivered to the Emperor. ib.
John thinks to ſecure for himſelf the crown. p. 290 1193.
He makes an alliance with Philip. ib.
Philip attacks Normandy. ib.
Negociations for Richard's deliverance. ib.
The Emperor carries him to the diet of Haguenau, and accuſes him on many articles, which Richard juſtifies. ib. 291
Philip and John indeavor to perſuade the Emperor to detain Richard. p. 292 1194.
The Emperor exacts hard conditions of him. ib.
With great difficulty Richard obtains his liberty, and arrives in England. ib.
He condemns John. ib.
He cauſes himſelf to be crowned a ſecond time. ib.
He prepares for a war againſt France, but is prevented by Philip. p. 293 1195.
He returns the Princeſs Alice to Philip. ib.
The marriage of Jane, Queen of Sicily, with the count of Toulouſe. ib.
The two Kings make a truce for five years; a ſedition at London. p. 294 1199.
Richard beſieges the caſtle of Chaluz in Limoſin. ib.
He is wounded and dies. ib.
He appoints his brother John his heir. ib.

JOHN LACK-LAND.

John, Richard's brother is crowned, notwithſtanding the right of Arthur, duke of Bretagne, Jeoffrey's ſon, and John's elder brother. p. 297
Conſtance, ducheſs of Bretany, and Arthur her ſon, put themſelves under the King of France's protection. p. 298
Philip breaks the truce made with Richard for five years. ib.
Death of Jane, Queen of Sicily. ib.
John cauſes the ſiege of Lavardin to be raiſed. ib.
Conſtance and Arthur put themſelves into the hands of John, and ſoon after would return to Philip. ib.
Guienne declares for John. ib.
Treaty of peace between Philip and John. ib. 299 1200.
Lewis, Philip's ſon, marries Blanche of Caſtile. p. 299
John takes the provinces of France that belonged to his nephew Arthur. ib.

An' 1200. He puts away Havice of Gloceſter, and marries Iſabella of Angouleme. Page 299
Death of Conſtance, ducheſs of Bretany. ib.
John paſſes over to England. ib.
With great difficulty he obtains from the parliament a ſupply of money; the oppoſition of the archbiſhop of York his natural brother. ib. 300
Death of Hugh, biſhop of Lincoln. p. 300
Interview between John and the King of Scotland at Lincoln. ib.
The King of Scotland does homage to John. ib.
Hubert, archbiſhop of Canterbury aſſembles a ſynod notwithſtanding the King's prohibition. ib.
1201. The King cauſes himſelf to be again crowned. ib.
The barons refuſe to accompany John into France. p. 301
Interview between Philip and John; the peace confirmed. ib.
Philip ſtirs up the earl of March to rebel againſt John. ib.
The earl corrupts the Poitovins. Arthur takes with the party againſt his uncle. ib.
1202. Interview of the two Kings. Philip cites John to the court of peers. ib.
Philip attacks Normandy. ib. 302
Arthur is taken in Mirebeau, and ſent to Falaiſe. p. 302
Interview between John an Arthur. ib.
John is accuſed of his death. ib.
Philip cites John to the court of peers, and on his refuſing to appear confiſcates all his demeſnes in France. p. 303
1203. Philip makes great progreſs in Normandy; John ſurpriſingly indolent. ib.
The Engliſh are diſcontented. ib.
1204. John obtains from the parliament a ſupply for the war, and thinks of nothing but peace. ib.
Philip reduces Normandy, and the other provinces belonging to John, except Guienne. p. 304
Death of Queen Eleanor, John's mother. ib.
1205. John quarrels with the Engliſh nobility. ib.
Death of Hubert, archbiſhop of Canterbury. p. 305
The irregular election of Reginald, ſub prior of the monaſtery of St. Auguſtin at Canterbury. ib.
John cauſes the biſhop of Norwich to be elected. ib.
1206. The Pope elects cardinal Langton at Rome, and conſecrates him himſelf. ib.
The begining of John's quarrel with Innocent III. ib.
1207. John uſes violence to obtain money from the parliament. ib.
The archbiſhop of York excommunicates the collectors. ib.
Negociations and debates between John and Innocent. p. 306
Birth of Henry the King's ſon. p. 307
1208. The Pope interdicts England. ib.
Birth of Richard the King's ſon. ib.
1209. John raiſes an army; he makes peace with the Scots. ib.
He renews the homage of his vaſſals. p. 308
1210. The Pope excommunicates John, but the biſhops defer publiſhing the ſentence. ib.
John makes an expedition into Ireland. ib.
1211. He returns into England, and lays a tax on the clergy. ib.
The Pope ſends two nuncio's into England, to treat of an accommodation with the King. ib.
The nunico's publiſh the ſentence of excommunication. p. 309
The Pope abſolves John's ſubjects from the oath of allegiance. ib.
1212. He appoints the King of France to execute the ſentence. p. 310
1213. Philip accepts the commiſſion. ib.
Great preparations on both ſides. Page 310 An' 1213.
Pandulphus ſent into England the Pope's legate. ib.
He paſſes thro' France, and exhorts Philip to continue his preparations. ib.
He intimidates John, who ſubmits to the conditions propoſed by the Pope. ib.
John reſigns his crown to the Pope, does homage to him for England and Ireland, and promiſes to pay him a thouſand marks a year. p. 311
Pandulphus would oblige Philip to diſarm; he refuſes. ib.
The earl of Flanders oppoſes Philip's deſigns on England. ib.
Philip carries the war into Flanders. ib.
His fleet is intirely deſtroyed by the Engliſh fleet. p. 312
Philip lays aſide his project. ib.
John has deſigns to carry the war into France. ib.
The barons refuſe to ſerve him, before he is abſolved. ib.
Cardinal Langton arrives and abſolves him. ib.
The barons ſtill refuſe to follow the King; he would puniſh them; Langton oppoſes. ib.
A combination of the barons againſt the King. ib.
John implores the Pope's protection, who ſends a legate into England. p. 313 1214.
John a ſecond time reſigns his crown to the Pope. ib.
The interdiction taken off. ib.
John recovers Poitou, and marches into Anjou; Prince Lewis, Philip's ſon, ſtops his proceedings. ib. 314
Philip wins the battle of Bouvines againſt the Emperor. p. 314
John requires peace, and obtains a truce for five years. ib.
The Engliſh barons demand of the King the re- 1215.
eſtabliſhing their privilges, and St. Edward's laws. ib.
The King is obliged to ſign magna charta, and the charter of foreſts. p. 316
John repents the ſigning of them; raiſes foreign troops, and retires to the Iſle of Wight. ib.
The Pope annuls the two charters. 317
The foreign troops arrive. ib.
John takes Rocheſter, and ſpoils the barons lands. ib.
The Pope excommunicates the barons, who deſpiſe his excommunication. ib.
The barons offer the crown to Prince Lewis, Philip's ſon, who accepts it. p. 318
Lewis arrives in England; he takes Rocheſter; 1216.
the barons take the oath of fidelity to him. ib.
He makes great progreſs in England. ib.
The King of Scotland does him homage. p. 319
John retires to Lincoln. p. 320
He dies at Newark. ib. 28 Oct.
Magna Charta. p. 321, 333 1216.
Foreſt charter. p. 334, 335

HENRY III.

Henry III, at ten years of age, under the tuition of the earl of Pembroke, is crowned by his father's party. p. 335
Lewis beſieges Dover, without effect. p. 336
Hubert de Bourg refuſes to ſurrender the place. ib.
Several barons deſert Lewis. ib.
He concludes a truce with Henry, and makes a voyage to France. ib.
Count Perche beſieges Lincoln. p. 337 1217.
The French army defeated at Lincoln. ib.
Lewis a ſecond time beſieges Dover. ib.
He raiſes the ſiege, and retires to London. ib.
Philip ſends him a ſupply, which is defeated at at ſea. p. 338
Lewis is blockaded in London. ib.

He

He makes peace with Henry, and withdraws to France. Page 338
Henry takes an oath to maintain the Engliſh in their privileges. ib.
The King of Scotland does him homage. p. 339
The Pope's legate perſecutes the clergy. ib.
An' 1218. The earl of Pembroke, being regent, cauſes the charters to be obſerved. ib.
A treaty of peace with the Prince of Wales. ib.
1219. Death of the regent. ib.
The biſhop of Wincheſter made regent, and Hubert de Bourg lord chief juſtice. ib.
1220. Henry's ſecond coronation. ib.
1221. William of Albemarle revolts. p. 340
He obtains his pardon. ib.
Marriage of Jane, the King's ſiſter, with the King of Scotland. ib.
1222. Quarrel between the citizens of London and Weſtminſter. ib.
Conſtantine hanged. ib.
1223. Henry promiſes to obſerve the charters. p. 341
Henry demands of Lewis VIII, the fulfilling the ſecret articles of the treaty of London; Lewis refuſes. ib.
The Pope declares the King of age, the barons oppoſe it. ib.
Hubert, by artifice, indeavors to perſuade the barons to give up their ſtrong holds to the King. ib.
1224. The King of France takes Rochell. ib.
The rebellion of Fulk de Brent in England. ib.
1225. Henry confirms the two charters. p. 342
He creates his brother Richard earl of Cornwal, and ſends him to Guienne. ib.
1226. The King is declared of age. ib.
The Pope makes an extraordinary demand on the parliament. ib.
A cruſade againſt the Albigenſes, under the command of the King of France. ib.
Death of Lewis VIII; Lewis IX ſucceeds him, under the guardianſhip of Blanche of Caſtile his mother. p. 343
1227. Hubert de Bourg ſupplants the biſhop of Wincheſter, and has him ſent to his dioceſe. ib.
He adviſes the King to make himſelf abſolute. ib.
Henry annuls the two charters of King John. ib.
Confederacy of the barons to have the two charters re-eſtabliſhed; Prince Richard at the head of them. ib.
The league is diſſolved. ib.
Death of Pope Honorious III, Gregory IX ſucceeds. p. 344
1228. Death of cardinal Langton, archbiſhop of Canterbury. ib.
Differences about the election of a ſucceſſor carried to Rome. ib.
War in Wales. ib.
The Pope excommunicates the Emperor Frederick II. ib.
Troubles in France in the minority of Lewis IX. ib.
The Pope gives the archbiſhop of Canterbury, to Richard le Grand at the King's deſire, who promiſes him the tenths of all the perſonal eſtates in England and Ireland. p. 345
Great oppoſitions; but the Pope cauſes the tenths promiſed, to be levied. ib.
1229. Henry raiſes money by unlawful ways. p. 346
He makes war on France without ſucceſs ib.
1230. Rebellion in Ireland. ib.
1231. Prince Richard's marriage with the counteſs dowager of Gloceſter. ib.
A Quarrel between the King, and the earl of Pembroke. ib. 347
Death of the archbiſhop of Canterbury. p. 347
The biſhop of Chicheſter is elected and appoved of by the King; the Pope annuls the election. ib.
Confederacy againſt foreign eccleſiaſtics. Page 347 An' 1232.
Another election of an archbiſhop annulled by the Pope. ib.
The biſhop of Wincheſter is recalled to court, and Hubert de Bourg diſgraced. ib.
The King perſecutes Hubert. p. 348, 349
The fourth election of an archbiſhop of Canterbury. p. 349
The biſhop of Wincheſter puts the King on the 1233.
deſign of being abſolute. ib.
He cauſes a great many Poitovins to come into England. ib.
Broils between the King and the barons. p. 349, 350
Henry attacks the earl of Pembroke. p. 350
War between the King and the earl of Pembroke. ib.
The barons are perſecuted. ib.
The earl of Pembroke withdraws into Wales. ib.
He makes a league with the Prince of Wales. ib.
The King beſieges one of the earl's caſtles. ib.
The King comes to an accommodation with the earl, which he ſoon breaks thro' ib.
Remonſtrances from the parliament to the King, imprudently anſwered by the biſhop of Wincheſter. ib.
The biſhops threatens to excommunicate him. ib.
He appeals to the Pope. ib.
The earl of Pembroke retakes his caſtle by ſiege. ib.
The biſhops required by the King, refuſe to excommunicate the Earl of Pembroke. ib.
The King marches againſt him, but his army is ſurprized and routed. ib.
The King withdraws to Gloceſter. p. 351
The earl falls into an ambuſh, is taken priſoner, but immediately reſcued. ib.
Hubert eſcapes out of priſon; takes refuge in a church; taken thence by force; returned back to his exile; delivered by ſome armed men. ib.
The Pope annuls the fourth election of an archbiſhop of Canterbury, and cauſes Edmund to be elected. ib.
Plot contrived by the biſhop of Wincheſter againſt 1234.
the earl of Pembroke. ib.
The earl is killed in Ireland. ib.
The biſhop of Wincheſter diſgraced. ib.
Foreigners diſcarded; peace with the Welſh; the King made acquainted with the biſhop of Wincheſter's treachery; former miniſters proſecuted; they take refuge; a ſafeguard, and time to anſwer granted them. p. 352
King of France attacks the duke of Britany. ib. 1235.
The late miniſters obtain a pardon. ib. 1236.
Iſabel the King's ſiſter, marries the Emperor Frederick II. ib.
The biſhop of Wincheſter called to Rome by the Pope ib.
The Pope publiſhes a new cruſade, and exempts the croiſes for money. ib.
The King marries Eleanor of Provence. ib.
Statutes of Merton. ib.
The war between the two crowns of England and France dropped. ib.
The parliament complains to the King; he gives them ſome ſatisfaction. ib.
The lord chancellor refuſes to reſign the great ſeal to the King. p. 353
The King recalls his former miniſters. ib.
Henry annuls all donations of his minority. ib.
Concludes a ſhameful treaty with the Scots. ib.
He calls a parliament; demands a ſupply; the 1237.
barons anſwer to his ſpeech. ib.
The King promiſes to inforce an obſervance of the two charters. ib.
The parliament grants him a ſubſidy on conditions; which the King does not obſerve. ib. 354

His

His brother Richard makes him remonſtrances. Page 354
Begining of Simon Montfort's favor. ib.
The Prince of Wales does homage to the King, and puts himſelf under his protection. ib.
Arrival of a new legate. ib.
Interview at York, between the Kings of England and Scotland. ib.
The legate's deſign of going to Scotland oppoſed by the Scots King. ib.
The county of Cheſter reunited to the crown. ib.
Henry the Emperor's ſon born. ib.
An' 1238. Simon Montfort marries one of the King's ſiſters. ib.
Richard reproaches the King with it. ib.
Montfort obtains a confirmation of his marriage from the Pope. ib.
The lords complain to the King. ib.
They join Richard againſt the King, and demand ſatisfaction of their grievances. ib.
The King obliged to comply p. 355
Regulations propoſed by the King. ib.
The legate affronted at Oxford. ib.
Coldneſs between the King and Pope ib.
Of which the Emperor indeavors to take advantage. ib.
Death of the biſhop of Wincheſter. ib.
Henry indeavors to get the Queen's brother elected. The monks make choice of another. ib.
Death of Jane Queen of Scots. ib.
Conſpiracy againſt the King. ib.
1239. Gilbert earl of Pembroke diſgraced. ib.
The earl of Leiceſter withdraws into France. p. 356
Henry publiſhes the ſentence of excommunication againſt the Emperor. ib.
Birth of Edward the King's ſon. ib.
The legate demands money from the biſhops; he attempts going into Scotland; the King of Scotland forbids his entering the kingdom; however he finds means to enter. ib.
Hubert de Burgh again proſecuted by the King, and at length he is reconciled to him. ib.
1240. The King and Pope guilty of great extorſions; the biſhops complaints againſt the King. ib.
The legate forces the croiſes to give money for exemptions. Exceſſive demands of the Pope. p. 357
The archbiſhop of Canterbury withdraws to, and dies in France. Is canonized. ib.
The Pope nominates 300 Italians to Engliſh benefices. ib.
The nuncio de Rubeis's extraordinary method to get money from the abbots ib.
The King ſupports the nuncio. ib.
Supply aſked of the clergy by the nuncio; refuſed. ib.
He finds means to divide the clergy. ib.
The King ſends judges into the countries to procure money. ib.
The King recalls the earls of Leiceſter and Pembroke. Prince Richard ſets out for the Holy-land. ib.
The earl of Flanders does homage to the King for a penſion. ib.
1241. The legate returns to Rome. ib.
He is plundered in Italy. p. 358
Schiſm after the death of Gregory IX. ib.
Simonical propoſition made by Gregory to the clergy of England. ib.
The King exacts a great ſum from the Jews. ib.
The earl of Savoy arrives in England. ib.
The King gets the Queen's brother elected to the ſee of Canterbury. ib.
Death of the earl of Pembroke, who is ſucceeded by his brother. ib.
Affairs of Wales. ib.
Death of the Empreſs the King's ſiſter, and of Eleanor of Britany. Page 358
Ground of a new war with France. ib.
The count de la Marche perſuades Henry to carry the war into Poitou. ib. An' 1242.
The parliament refuſes to give the King money, and ſeverely reproach him. p. 359
He gets money by other methods. ib.
He leaves England under the regency of the archbiſhop of York. ib.
The King is diſappointed of the forces promiſed him in Poitou. ib.
Lewis lays ſiege to Fontenay. ib.
Henry declares war againſt him. ib.
Lewis makes advantageous offers. They are rejected; and Henry ſends him a Defiance. ib.
Lewis takes Fontenay. ib.
The earl of Marche makes his peace with Lewis. ib.
A five years truce between the two Kings. p. 360
Henry winters at Bourdeaux, and draws money from England. ib. 1243.
The parliament grants him a ſupply. ib.
Loans cauſe murmurs. ib.
Henry ratifies the truce, and returns home. ib.
Extorts great ſums from the Jews. ib.
Marriage of Prince Richard. ib.
Innocent IV Pope. ib.
The parliament refuſes a ſupply. p. 361 1244.
They are prorogued. The Pope oppreſſes the clergy. ib.
The King obtains a ſupply, on promiſing to obſerve the two charters. ib.
The King of Scots refuſes homage. Henry prepares for war; and the Scots King ſues for peace. ib.
Match projected between the Prince of Scotland, and one of Henry's daughters. ib.
The Prince of Wales offers to become the Pope's vaſſal. ib.
War reſolved againſt that Prince. p. 362
The King of France drives out the Engliſh, and Henry confiſcates the effects of the French. ib.
Birth of Edmund the King's ſon. ib.
Welſh war. Vigorous reſolution of the Engliſh nobility taken againſt the Pope. ib. 1245.
The Pope's courier intercepted. ib.
Engliſh embaſſadors at Lyons repreſent the grievance of the nation: remonſtrate againſt the tribute: the Pope gives them an eluſive anſwer. ib. 363
He forces the Engliſh prelates to ſign the charter of tribute. p. 363
Extinction of the family of the earls of Pembroke, hereditary Earls Marſhal. ib.
Death of the Prince of Wales. ib. 1246.
New impoſitions by the court of Rome. ib.
The Engliſh grievances. ib.
The Pope appropriates to himſelf the effects of the inteſtate clergy, and impoſes a great tax on all eccleſiaſtics. ib.
The King efficaciouſly oppoſes this tax. p. 364
Death of the King's mother. ib.
Three of the King's half brother's arrive in England. ib. 1247.
William count of Holland, elected King of the Romans. ib.
The King reproaches the barons. Diſſolves the parliament. Sells his plate. Extorts a preſent from the city of London. ib. 1248.
He indeavours in vain to have his half brother Athelmar elected biſhop of Durham. p. 365 1249.
Alexander II, King of Scots, dies: is ſucceeded by his ſon Alexander III. ib.
Earl of Leiceſter ſent to Guienne. ib.
Prince Richard has an interview with the Pope at Lyons. ib. 1150.

Henry

AN' 1250. Henry takes the croſs, and the Pope forbids the croiſes to ſet out without the King. Page 365
Perquiſitions concerning the foreſts. ib.
Athelmar created biſhop of Wincheſter. ib.
King of France taken by the Saracens; attributed to the Pope. ib.
The Pope intreats the King to let him keep his court at Bourdeaux; who makes no anſwer. p. 366
1251. Affairs of Sicily ib.
Interview between the Kings of England and Scotland; the latter marries Henry's daughter. ib.
King of England urges the King of Scots to do him homage for his kingdom; Alexander excuſes himſelf. ib.
1252. The King exacts money of the Jews. p. 369
The Gaſcons complain of the earl of Leiceſter. ib.
He juſtifies himſelf; however Henry ſends commiſſioners to Guienne. ib.
The archbiſhop of Bourdeaux's complaints againſt the earl of Leiceſter, who on the report of the commiſſioners is acquited; but Henry reſolves to ſacrifice him to the reſentment of the Gaſcons. ib.
The earl of Leiceſter appears before the peers; the King calls him Traitor; he gives the King the Lie to his face, who dares not arreſt him, but is outwardly reconciled. ib.
The earl of Leiceſter ſent again to Guienne. ib.
The King gives that duchy to his eldeſt ſon. ib.
Henry aſks an aid of the clergy. ib.
They make him remonſtrances; he threatens them. p. 370
He indeavors, but in vain, to gain ſome of their body to his intereſt. ib.
King oppreſſes the city of London. ib.
Attacks again the earl of Leiceſter. ib.
1253. Suffers himſelf to be guided by ſtrangers. ib.
Revenues of foreigners ſurpaſs thoſe of the crown. ib.
The Pope offers Sicily to Prince Richard. ib.
His precautions diſagreeable to the Pope. ib.
Dangerous commotions in Guienne. p. 371
The King of Caſtile pretends to that duchy. ib.
Henry conſtrained to go thither in perſon. ib.
He aſks a ſupply of the parliament on a pretence of a voyage to the Holy Land. ib.
The ſupply granted on the condition that the charters ſhall be obſerved. ib.
Sentence of excommunication pronounced againſt the infringers of charters. ib.
Henry ſets out for Guienne. p. 372
He aſks Eleanor of Caſtile for his ſon Edward; which is agreed to. ib.
The earl of Leiceſter offers his ſervice to the King; the Gaſcons ſubmit. ib.
1254. Henry can obtain no money of his parliament, but extorts it from the Jews. ib.
Prince Edward married. ib.
Henry returns thro' France to England. ib.
He exacts money from the city of London. ib.
The Pope offers the two Sicilies to Henry; he refuſes them. ib.
Innocent IV reduces the kingdom of Naples, and is duped by Mainfroi. p. 373
Innocent offers the two Sicilies to Henry for his ſon Edmund. ib.
Henry accepts the offer: ſends the Pope money; promiſes to pay what ſums the Pope ſhall borrow. ib.
The Pope imploys ſeveral methods to drain money from Henry. ib.
Mainfroi twice defeats the Pope's army in this and the following year; and is, in 1255, crowned King of the two Sicilies. p. 374
1255. The King aſks a ſupply from the parliament. ib.
Who on their ſide require conditions. p. 375
They are prorogued, and the King goes to Scotland. Page 375 AN' 1255.
Ruſtand, the Pope's nuncio, arrives in England. ib.
The parliament meets; Henry can get no money of them. Puts an end to the ſeſſion. His brother Richard refuſes to lend him money. ib.
Diverſe bulls to extort money out of the Engliſh. ib. 1256.
Strange methods of the Pope's to get money from the Engliſh clergy. p. 376
The nuncio attacks all the abbots of the Ciſtercians. p. 377
The parliament refuſes the King money. ib.
Henry expects the clergy to be ſecurity for him, which they refuſe, but are forced to do it. ib.
Welſh war. ib.
The Pope urges the King to ſend money, and threatens him with a revocation of the gift of the two Sicilies. ib.
Prince Richard elected King of the Romans. p. 378
The King importunes the clergy for money, which they are obliged to grant. ib.
Henry marches againſt the Welſh, and is defeated. ib.
He requires of the King of France the reſtitution of Normandy, &c. ib.
He intends to renounce the two Sicilies. ib.
The Pope ſends another nuncio who publiſhes a bull for obtaining money of the clergy. ib.
The barons begin to take meaſures againſt the King. 1258. p. 379
The King aſks money of the parliament, who complain of his conduct. ib.
The barons form the project of altering the government. ib.
The parliament adjourned to Oxford. ib.
The King promiſes to conſent to the reformation. ib.
Articles of reformation. ib.
Foreigners driven out of the kingdom. p. 380
The barons confederate to maintain the ſtatutes of Oxford. ib.
London enters into the aſſociation. ib.
The King of the Romans declares againſt the ſtatutes of Oxford, but finds himſelf obliged to acquieſce. Barons treaty with France diſadvantageous to the King. 1259. p. 381
Earl of Gloceſter jealous of the earl of Leiceſter; he accuſes him, and lets drop the accuſation. 1260. ib.
They are reconciled by the King of the Romans, who ſets out for Germany. p. 382
The King and Queen of Scotland arrive at London. ib.
The Pope abſolves the King of his oath with relation to the ſtatutes of Oxford. ib.
Death of Pope Alexander III. Urban IV ſucceeds. ib.
The King declares to the parliament he will no longer obſerve the ſtatutes of Oxford, and retires to the Tower. 1261. ib.
He breaks the magiſtrates eſtabliſhed by the twenty-four barons. They petition the King, who returns them no anſwer. ib.
A treaty of accommodation, which is broke off by the King's imprudence. ib.
The Cinque-ports declare againſt the King. ib.
The King of the Romans procures a reconciliation. p. 383
The King promiſes to obſerve the ſtatutes of Oxford. 1262. ib.
The earl of Leiceſter withdraws into France. ib.
Henry takes a voyage to Guienne. ib.
In his abſenſe the party of the barons re-unite. ib.
The earl of Leiceſter returns to England. ib.
The King returns. ib.
The barons preſent him a petition. ib. 1263.
The King of the Romans and Prince Edward declare for the King. ib.
Urban IV threatens to take Sicily. ib.
Begining of the barons war. ib.

An' 1263. They elect the earl of Leiceſter general. Page 383
London declares for them ib.
Treaty between the King and the barons. p. 384
The Queen inſulted on the Thames. ib.
The King again takes arms. ib.
Prince Edward ſeized by the barons, and forced to deliver up Windſor to them. ib.
Another treaty of peace. ib.
The King breaks it, in indeavoring to ſeize on Dover. ib.
Hoſtilities begin aagin. ib.
The earl of Leiceſter takes London, with the aſſiſtance of the inhabitants. p. 385
1264. The King and the barons take the King of France for mediator. ib.
Lewis gives his opinion; rejected by the barons. ib.
The war renewed. ib.
The battle of Lewes, where the King, the King of the Romans, and Prince Edward are taken priſoners. ib. 386
A parliament convoked, four knights of each county are admitted; origine of the rights of the commons. 386
A new plan of government. The eſtabliſhment of conſervators of the liberties of the people. ib.
The King and Prince, who are priſoners, approve every thing. p. 387
The barons refuſe to receive a legate. ib.
Rebellions appeaſed ib.
The Queen aſſembles an army in France. Her enterprize is broke off by contrary winds. ib.
1265. The duke of Gloceſter makes a party againſt the earl of Leiceſter. ib.
The earl of Leiceſter convenes a parliament, under pretence of delivering Prince Edward. ib. 388
Edward is put into the King's hands, who ſtill remains a priſoner. 388
The earl of Gloceſter openly declares againſt the earl of Leiceſter. ib.
Gloceſter proclaimed a traitor. ib.
Leiceſter marches againſt him. ib.
Prince Edward eſcapes, and joins Gloceſter. ib.
He takes an oath to reform abuſes. ib.
Edward's forces augments ib.
Leiceſter flies before him. p. 389
Edward defeats Simon de Montfort; marches againſt Leiceſter; forces him to come to a battle at Eveſham, where he is ſlain; the Prince obtains a compleat victory, and reſcues his father. ib.
The confederated barons are perſecuted. ib.
Their eſtates confiſcated, and the Londoners puniſhed. p. 390
Montfort releaſes the King of the Romans, and fortifies himſelf in the iſle of Axholm. ib.
1266. The Queen's arrival. ib.
The arrival of a legate, who excommunicates the barons, both the dead and the living. ib.
Simon de Montfort ſubmits. ib.
The male-contents retire to the iſle of Ely. p. 391
A vigorous action of Edward's againſt a rebel named Adam. ib.
1267. The ſiege of Kenelworth-caſtle. ib.
A parliament in the town of Kenelworth. ib.
Kenelworth ſurrenders. ib.
The duke of Gloceſter is diſſatisfied with Prince Edward. ib.
The King marches towards Ely. p. 392
The duke of Gloceſter ſeizes on London and the Tower, and publiſhes a manifeſto. ib.
Edward joins the King; his army increaſes very much. ib.
The duke of Gloceſter agrees with the King. ib.
The rebels of Ely ſubmit. ib.
End of the Barons-war. p. 393
1268. Edward takes the croſs. ib.
Statutes of Marlborough. ib.
Death of Clement IV. Vacancy in the See for three years. An' 1268. Page 393
Battle of Lac Celano. Conradin is taken and beheaded. ib.
Lewis IX lends Edward money. ib.
St. Edward's body tranſported to the church of Weſtminſter. 1269. ib.
The King of the Romans ſecond marriage. ib. 1270.
Edward goes to join the French King before Tunis, and return to Sicily. p. 394
Death of Lewis IX. Philip his ſon ſucceeds him. ib.
Henry, ſon to the King of the Romans, killed at Viterbo. ib.
Edward arrives in Paleſtine, where he is wounded by an aſſaſſin. 1271. ib.
He makes a truce for ten years with the Sultan, and departs. 1272. ib.
Death of the King of the Romans. ib.
Death of Henry III. ib.
State of the Church during the reigns of Henry II, Richard I, John, and Henry III. p. 395--405

EDWARD I.

The barons take the oath to Edward in his abſenſe. p. 405
Edward arrives in Sicily, and afterwards at Rome. p. 406
A tournament ib. 1273.
He goes to Paris, and from thence to Guienne. ib.
He arrives in England, and is crowned. ib.
He takes an exact account of the affairs of the kingdom. 1274. ib.
The cauſe of the war with Wales. ib. 1275.
Lleweline, Prince of Wales, is ſummoned to do homage, and refuſes to appear. ib.
Statutes of Weſtminſter. p. 407
War with Wales. ib. 1276.
Lleweline obtains peace. ib. 1277.
Edward takes poſſeſſion of the country of Ponthieu, by the death of the Queen of Caſtile, his wife's mother. 1279. ib.
Puniſhment of ſome Jews who coined falſe money. ib.
Statute of Mortmain. ib.
Statute of Quo Warranto, which Edward abuſes. 1280. p. 408
The earl of Warren oppoſes the King. ib.
The King revokes his proclamation. ib.
Second war with Wales. ib. 1281.
The defeat and death of Lleweline. p. 409 1283.
His head is expoſed on the Tower of London. ib.
Edward makes the conqueſt of Wales. ib.
The tragical death of David Lleweline's brother. ib.
Edward adds the country of Wales to the crown of England. ib.
Death of Alphonſus the King's ſon. ib. 1284.
Birth of Edward the King's ſon. ib.
The King takes from the city of London the charter of their privileges, and afterwards returns it. 1285. p. 410
He exacts great ſums from the Jews. ib. 1286.
Second ſtatutes of Weſtminſter. ib.
The King makes a voyage to France, and leaves the earl of Pembroke Regent in England. ib.
A treaty with Philip the Fair. ib.
Edward does homage to Phillip. ib.
The differences between the two houſes of Arragon and Anjou about Sicily. ib.
Edward is mediator between the two Kings. p. 412 1287.
Treaty of Campo Franco between the two Kings, who were at enmity. 1288. ib.
Edward returns to England. p. 413 1289.
Puniſhes the corrupt Judges. ib.
The Jews driven out of the kingdom. ib. 1290.
Detail of the affairs of Scotland. ib.
Concluſion of the Marriage of Edward the King's ſon, with margaret of Norway Queen of Scotland. p. 414
Death of Margaret. ib.

John

An' 1290. John Baliol and Robert Bruce, ſet up their pretenſions to the crown of Scotland. Page 415
Grounds of the right of the chief claimants. ib.
Edward choſen arbitrator. ib.
He aſſembles the ſtates of Scotland. ib.
Edward propoſes to the ſaid ſtates the acknowledging him ſovereign. p. 416
To which they return no anſwer. ib.
The claimants acknowlege Edward ſovereign. p. 417
Edward requires the kingdom to be put into his poſſeſſion, to which the claimants conſent. ib.
The regents and governors of the towns in Scotland give up their commiſſions to Edward, who returns them back. p. 418
All in imployments take an oath to Edward. ib.
The claimants preſent their petitions. ib.
1292. Sequel of what paſſed in the giving ſentence with relation to the crown of Scotland. p. 421, 422
Edward propoſes three queſtions which are anſwered. p. 422
Reaſons alleged by John Bruce. ib.
Reaſons and anſwer of John Baliol. ib.
Queſtions propoſed to the examiners and anſwered in favor of Baliol. ib.
Edward gives ſentence againſt Bruce. ib.
He preſents a petition. ib.
Claim of John Haſtings and of Robert Bruce. ib.
Two other queſtions propoſed by Edward againſt the claims of Haſtings and Bruce. ib.
All other claimants deſiſt from their pretenſions. ib.
He examines the right of ſeveral pretenders. ib. 423
He gives ſentence in favor of John Baliol againſt Robert Bruce. p. 423
Baliol takes an oath to the King of England. ib.
He does homage to him. ib.
The Scots complain againſt Edward. ib.
1293. Edward's ſevere and haughty manner of treating the Scots. p. 424
Edward revokes what he had granted the Scots. p. 425
Baliol renounces all ingagements made by Edward. ib.
Edward deſiſts from all the profitable rights as Lord paramount of Scotland. ib.
Baliol receives five ſeveral citations to appear perſonally before Edward. ib.
1294. Baliol appears before the Engliſh parliament as a private perſon. ib.
1295. Baliol makes an alliance with France. ib.
The Pope abſolves him from his oath. p. 426
Baliol declares againſt Edward. ib.
1296. War againſt Scotland. ib.
Edward gains Robert Bruce to his party. ib.
Edward beſieges and takes Berwick. ib.
Baliol defeated at the battle of Dunbar. ib.
Edward's progreſs after his victory. ib.
Baliol reſigns his crown to him. p. 427
The Scots take an oath to Edward. ib.
Douglas, the only one who refuſes. ib.
Baliol is ſent into England with ſeveral other Scots ib.
Edward takes the crown and ſcepter of Scotland with the famous ſtone of Scone, and ſends them into England. ib.
He burns the records of Scotland. ib.
A quarrel between Edward and Philip the Fair. ib.
Philip by a ſtratagem takes Guienne from him. p. 428
Edward retracts his homage done to Philip. ib.
War in Guienne. p. 429
The earl of Flanders takes Edward's part. ib.
Edward makes a league againſt France. ib.
1297. Quarrel between the King and clergy, who are forced to ſubmit. p. 430
The Engliſh barons vigorouſly oppoſe the King. ib.
The people complain; he indeavors to appeaſe them by a proclamation. ib.
Philip prepares for his defenſe and ſeduces Edward's allies. Page 431 An' 1297.
He beſieges Liſle. ib.
The duke of Juliers, Edward's ally defeated. ib.
Edward arrives in Flanders. ib.
Great troubles among the Flemmings. ib.
Liſle and other places taken by Philip. ib.
Truce between the two Kings prolonged. ib.
Edward ſtays at Ghent, and runs great riſque of his Life. ib.
The Scots riſe under the leading of William Walleys. p. 432
Walleys drives the Engliſh out of that kingdom. ib.
He is by the army declared regent of Scotland. ib.
The Pope is made arbitrator between Philip and Edward. ib.
Edward confirms the great charter of K. John. ib.
He marches into Scotland. ib. 1298.
An unlucky accident happens to him. ib.
Edward gains the battle of Falkirk. ib.
He returns to England. ib.
The Scots jealouſy of Walleys, who lays down the regency. ib.
Cumin made regent of Scotland. p. 433
Treaty of Montreuil, by which the truce is prolonged between Philip and Edward; the Pope's ſentenſe. ib. 1299.
Edward makes a truce with the Scots. ib.
Cumin exhorts the Scots to break the truce. ib.
The Engliſh are again drove out of Scotland. ib.
Edward a third time carries the war into Scotland. ib. 1300.
He gains a great battle againſt the Scots. ib.
He rejects their ſubmiſſions. ib.
The Scots offer the ſovereignty of Scotland to Pope Boniface VIII, who accepts it; they put themſelves under his protection. ib.
The Pope's brief to Edward. p. 434
Edward threatens to lay waſte all Scotland. ib.
He makes a truce with the Scots at the ſollicitation of the French King. ib.
He inveſts his ſon Edward in the Principality of Wales. ib.
The parliament makes a briſk reply to Boniface VIII's brief. ib. 1301.
Edward returns to Scotland; he grants a new truce. ib.
Segrave commands for Edward in Scotland. ib. 1302.
He is beat by the Scots, who gain three victories in one day. ib.
Edward concludes a truce with France, in which Scotland is compriſed. p. 435
Treaty of peace between Philip and Edward, by which they abandon their allies; this peace concluded without the Pope's interpoſition. ib. 1303.
Edward's fourth expedition into Scotland, by which he becomes maſter of the kingdom. ib.
He ſhews ſome favor to the Scots; he takes Sterling. ib. 1304.
William Walleys is hanged and quartered. ib.
Edward's ſeverity to Segrave, for fighting a duel againſt his order. ib. 1305.
Commiſſion of Trail-bâton to puniſh miſdemeanors of the great men in poſts. p. 436
Edward puts the Prince his ſon in priſon. ib.
He gets Pope Clement V to free him of his oath concerning the great charter. ib.
He begins to govern after an arbitrary manner. ib.
Robert Bruce and Cumin deſign freeing their country. Cumin betrays Bruce, who eſcapes from London, and is crowned King of Scotland. ib. 437 1306.
He is beat by the earl of Pembroke, and obliged after the defeat to keep himſelf concealed. p. 437
Edward goes again into Scotland, and treats the rebels with much rigor. ib.
He deſigns to unite Scotland to England. ib. 1307.

AN' 1307. A parliament held at Carliſle. Page 437
Statutes againſt the Pope's uſurpation. ib.
Piers Gaveſton, the Prince of Wales's favorite, baniſhed the kingdom. ib.
Robert Bruce, leaves his hiding place; he defeats the earl of Pembroke, and makes great progreſs, ib.
Edward aſſembles an army at Carliſle, with a reſolution to ruin Scotland intirely. ib.
He falls ſick and gives his laſt orders to his ſon. p. 438
He is carried into Scotland, and dies there. ib.

EDWARD II.

Edward II, recalls his favorite and loads him with honors. p. 439
He impriſons the biſhop of Litchfield, Gaveſton's enemy. ib.
1308. The King's marriage with Iſabella of France. ib.
The King leaves Gaveſton in England in quality of regent. p. 440
The great men are jealous, and make cabals to oppoſe the King's coronation. ib.
The King appeaſes them. ib.
He is crowned. ib.
Honors done to Gaveſton. ib.
The oath at the coronation ib.
Gaveſton behaves himſelf very imprudently. ib.
The King marries him to his neice. ib.
The great men combine againſt Gaveſton. ib.
The parliament demand that Gaveſton may be baniſhed; the King promiſes it. ib.
He makes Gaveſton governor of Ireland. p. 441
1309. He recals him from Ireland. ib.
Gaveſton behaves very inſolently towards the lords. ib.
1310. The lords addreſs the King, to deſire the kingdom might be govern'd by perſons nominated by the parliament. ib.
The King is forced to ſubmit; regulation on that affair. ib.
The King notwithſtanding continues his favor to Gaveſton. ib.
1311. Another regulation containing forty-one articles, and by which Gaveſton is baniſhed the kingdom. ib.
1312. The King recals him. ib.
The barons ſtir up the people againſt the King. ib.
Gaveſton ſpeaks inſolently to the Queen, who complains to the King of France her father. p. 442
A combination of the lords againſt the King; the earl of Lancaſter is made general of the faction. ib.
The King indeavors to amend the regulations. ib.
The barons aſſemble their troops, and the King, with Gaveſton, takes refuge in Scarborough. ib.
The barons enter Newcaſtle, and ſeize the King's baggage. ib.
The King goes from Scarborough to raiſe troops ib.
Scarborough beſieged. ib.
Gaveſton ſurrenders himſelf, on condition he may be permited to ſpeak to the King. ib.
The earl of Pembroke undertakes to carry him to the King. ib.
The earl of Warwick takes Gaveſton, and has him beheaded. 443.
The barons march againſt the King. ib.
Reconciliation between the King and the barons; the King promiſes an act of oblivion. ib.
He defers the executing it. ib.
The King of France ſends the count d'Evreux his brother into England to make peace. ib.
1313. A general pardon is publiſhed. ib.
Birth of Edward the King's ſon. ib.
The barons make a public ſatisfaction to the King. ib.

EDWARD's affairs with the Scots during the troubles in England.

After the death of Edward I, Edward II quits Scotland, and leaves his army to John Cumin. AN' 1313. Page 443, 444
Cumin is defeated by Robert Bruce. p. 444
Edward leads an army into Scotland, and returns without doing any thing. ib.
Robert makes great progreſs. ib.
He beſieges Sterling; which capitulates. ib.
Edward advances towards Sterling, with an army of an hundred thouſand men. 1314. ib.
Battle of Bannock's Down, where the Engliſh army is intirely defeated. ib.
An impoſtor, who would have paſſed for Edward II, is hanged. p. 445
A great famine. ib. 1315.
The King revenges himſelf on the duke of Lancaſter, by a law ſuit on account of his wife, who is taken from him and given to another. 1317. ib.
The barons complain of the King, and ſeveral grievances. 1318. ib.
He convenes a parliament and revokes it. ib.
The barons make preparations for war. p. 446
Agreement between the King and the barons. ib.
Robert Bruce ravages the Northern provinces of England. Aug. 9. ib.
He ſends Edward Bruce his brother into Ireland with an army, who is there crowned. ib.
King Edward ſends troops into Ireland. Edward Bruce is ſlain. ib.
The Engliſh army is beat in Scotland. ib.
The Scots prepare to beſiege Berwick. ib.
Edward deſires the Pope to procure him peace with the Scots. 1319. ib.
The Pope orders a truce for two years between England and Scotland. Robert rejects it; he is excommunicated, and Scotland interdicted. ib.
Robert takes Berwick. ib.
The militia of York are defeated by the Scots. ib.
Edward beſieges Berwick. ib.
Edward is obliged to raiſe the ſiege, and to ſue for a truce for two years with Scotland. p. 447
Hugh Spencer becomes the King's favourite. ib.
He makes ill uſe of his favor. ib.
His father created earl of Wincheſter. ib.
The lords combination renewed. ib. 1320.
They take arms. ib.
Roger Mortimer ravages the lands of the Spencers. ib.
The two Spencers are baniſhed by the parliament. ib.
The Queen affronted by one of the confederate barons. 1321. p. 448
She excites the King to revenge. ib.
The King takes arms, and puts out a proclamation to ſatisfy the people. ib.
He takes the caſtle of Leeds, and hangs the governor. ib.
He recalls young Spencer, and afterwards the father. ib.
Barons in great perplexity; ſeveral ſubmit to the King, and others are puniſhed. ib.
Young Mortimer ſent to the Tower by the Spencers. ib.
The earl of Lancaſter gets together ſome troops, and withdraws towards Scotland. 1322. ib.
The King purſues him, overtakes, and makes him priſoner. ib.
He has him beheaded. ib.
Baldeſmere and others are executed. ib.
Edward marches into Scotland, and finds himſelf obliged to return for want of proviſions. 1323. p. 449
Robert Bruce overtakes and beats him. ib.
He ravages the North of England. ib.
A truce concluded between England and Scotland for thirteen years. ib.

Harclay's

AN' 1323. Harclay's diſgrace. Page 449
The earl of Lancaſter is canonized. ib
The Spencers perſecute their enemies. ib.
Roger Mortimer is twice condemned to death, and twice pardoned by the King. p. 450
The Spencers make the Queen uneaſy. ib.
Mortimer eſcapes from the Tower, and retires to France. ib.
Quarrel between the Kings of France and England. ib.
1324. War in Guienne. ib.
Charles de Valois makes a great progreſs there. ib.
By the inſinuations of the Spencers, the county of Cornwal, which was the Queen's patrimony, is taken from her. p. 451
1325. The Pope ſends two nuncio's to Paris to mediate between the two Kings. ib.
Edward ſends the Queen his wife into France to procure a peace, in which ſhe ſucceeds. ib.
Treaty between the two Kings is concluded at Paris. ib.
Edward prepares to go and do homage to Charles. ib.
He makes over Guienne to Prince Edward his ſon, and ſends him into France to do homage. ib.
Suſpicions of a conſpiracy form'd by Queen Iſabella againſt the King her huſband. p. 452
The biſhop of Exeter informs him of it; he recalls the Queen and Prince, but in vain. ib.
1326. A faction formed for the Queen in England. ib.
The Queen concludes the marriage of the Prince her ſon, with Philippa of Haynault, unknown to the King. p. 453
Charles the Fair favors his ſiſter's conſpiracy. ib.
The Queen paſſes over to England, where the male-contents join her. ib.
Edward abandoned by every body, retires into the Weſt. ib.
The Queen publiſhes her manifeſto. ib.
The Queen purſues him. p. 454.
He leaves Spencer the father at Briſtol, and indeavors to withdraw into Ireland, but is hindered by contrary winds, which force him upon the Welſh coaſt; he hides himſelf in Wales. ib.
The Queen takes Briſtol, and hangs Spencer the father. ib.
London declares for the Queen; the biſhop of Exeter is beheaded. ib.
Young Edward is made guardian of the kingdom. ib.
The Queen publiſhes a proclamation, inviting the King to return. ib.
The King is ſeized and obliged to deliver the great ſeal. ib.
He is conveyed to the caſtle of Kenelworth. ib.
The Queen calls a parliament in the King's name. ib.
The earl of Arundel is beheaded at Hereford; young Spencer, and Simon Reading hanged. ib.
The chancellor Baldock dies in priſon at London. ib.
1327. The parliament meets; depoſes Edward the ſecond, and elects the Prince his ſon in his place. ib.
Prince Edward refuſes to accept the crown without the conſent of his father. p. 455
The parliament oblige the King to reſign his crown. ib.
The manner of his reſigning it. ib.
Abolition of the order of Templars at the council of Vienna, in 1311.
Extinction of the Knights Templars. ib.

EDWARD III.

Edward the third proclaimed. p. 457
The parliament nominate the Regents; but the Queen and Mortimer poſſeſs the government. ib.
The parliament repeals the ſentences given under the laſt reign againſt the earl of Lancaſter and his party. AN' 1327. Page 457
The King aſks of the Pope the canonization of the earl of Lancaſter. ib.
Robert Bruce, King of Scotland breaks the truce made with England. ib.
Edward draws together a numerous army; quarrel between the Engliſh troops, and thoſe of Haynault. ib.
The Scots ravage the frontiers of England. ib.
Edward purſues and overtakes them, without being able to give them battle. p. 458
Bold action of ſir James Douglas. ib.
The Scots retire into their own country. ib.
The tragical death of Edward II. ib.
Edward III, celebrates his marriage with Philippa of Haynault. 1328. p. 459
Treaty of peace with Scotland, by which Edward gives up all his pretenſions. ib.
He gives up all that Edward I had taken from the Scots. p. 460
The Engliſh murmur at this peace. ib.
Jane, the King's ſiſter marries David Bruce, Robert's ſon. ib.
Mortimer created earl of March, and James Butler earl of Ormond. ib.
Henry earl of Lancaſter, and ſome other lords are diſſatisfied with the court. ib.
The Queen perſuades the King to puniſh them. ib.
A combination againſt the court; a manifeſto of the confederates. ib.
The archbiſhop of Canterbury procures a reconciliation; and the male-contents accept a general pardon. ib. 461
Death of Robert I, King of Scotland; David his ſon ſucceeds him. 1329. p. 461
The earl of Kent being diſcontented with the court, the Queen and Mortimer lay a ſnare for him. ib.
He is impoſed on with a ſtory, that Edward II is ſtill alive, and attempts ſeveral methods to procure his liberty. ib.
He is betrayed, condemned and executed. p. 462 19 Mar.
New treaty with France. ib.
Death of Charles the Fair, King of France. ib.
Philip de Valois, and Edward, pretend to the regency; but Philip is preferred. ib.
The Queen Dowager, widow of Charles the Fair, is brought to bed of a daughter. p. 463.
Edward pretends to the crown of France, but Philip gets himſelf crowned; Edward diſſembles. ib.
Philip de Valois ſummons Edward to do him homage. ib.
Edward not being able to avoid it, makes a private proteſt. ib.
Edward does homage in general terms. ib.
Declares it Liege homage. p. 464 1330.
New treaty between the two Kings. ib. 1331.
The King is informed of his mother's diſorders, and the ill behavior of the earl of March. ib.
He arreſts the earl of March with his own hands, and ſends him to the Tower. ib.
He calls a new parliament. ib.
He confines the Queen his mother in a caſtle. ib.
The earl of March is hanged. p. 465
Birth of Edward the King's ſon. ib.
Edward has deſigns upon Scotland, and excites Edward Baliol, John's ſon, to the crown of Scotland. ib.
Baliol prepares for his expedition. ib.
He makes a deſcent in Scotland. p. 466 1332.
He gains four ſeveral battles and reduces Perth. ib.
King David withdraws into France. ib.
The Scots fleet beaten by the Engliſh. ib.
Baliol crowned King of Scotland. ib.

An' 1332. He does homage to Edward, and delivers to him Berwick. Page 466
Edward marches towards Scotland with a powerful army. ib.
1333. The battle of Halidown Hill, where the Scots are defeated. ib.
Reduction of Berwick. ib.
Baliol holds his firſt parliament in Scotland. ib.
He gives up ſeveral towns to Edward. p. 467
1334. The Scots rebel againſt Baliol, and drive him out of Scotland. ib.
Edward marches into, and ravages Scotland. ib.
1335. He makes another expedition into Scotland. ib.
The regent of Scotland is taken priſoner. ib.
The chief of the Scots nobility ſubmit to Edward. ib.
Edward returns to England. ib.
The Engliſh are beat in Scotland. ib.
1336. Edward again ravages Scotland, and returns to England. ib.
Edward III's deſign againſt France. ib.
1337. Edward makes alliance with ſeveral Princes, and with James d'Arteville, and the Flemings. p. 468
Victory obtained by the Engliſh in Flanders. p. 469
Edward the King's ſon made duke of Cornwall. ib.
Letters of Edward to the Pope, relating to his pretenſions to the crown of France. ib.
Philip's anſwer. ib.
Edward demands the crown of France. ib.
He makes the duke of Brabant his lieutenant general in France. ib.
1338. The Pope in vain indeavors to procure a peace. ib.
Edward grants a ſhort truce. ib.
The count de Haynault enters into the league againſt France. ib.
The Emperor makes Edward vicar of the Empire. p. 470
1339. Edward erects the county of Gueldres into a duchy. ib.
He borrows on all hands, and pledges his crown. ib.
Birth of Lionel the King's ſecond ſon. ib.
A threatning letter from the Pope to the King. ib.
He enters Artois, where Philip offers him battle. ib.
He accepts it, but Philip retires. ib.
Edward alſo retires into Haynault. ib.
1340. Edward takes the title of King of France. ib.
He publiſhes a manifeſto againſt Philip, addreſſed to the French. p. 471
He returns to England. ib.
The Pope exhorts Edward to quit the title of France. ib.
Edward gains a victory at ſea; the French ſuſtain a great loſs. ib.
He lays ſiege to Tournay. p. 472
Robert d'Artois, with a detachment of Edward's army, is defeated at St Omers. ib.
Reciprocal defiances between Philip and Edward. ib.
Truce concluded thro' the mediation of the counteſs of Haynault. ib.
Edward returns to England. ib.
The Emperor and duke of Brabant leave the confederates. ib.
The Emperor revokes the dignity of Vicar general of the Empire, he had given to Edward. ib.
Some of the German Princes leave the confederates. ib.
Diſcontent between Edward and the archbiſhop of Canterbury. ib.
1341. The archbiſhop ſubmits. p. 473
The Pope interdicts Flanders. ib.
Negociations for peace ineffectual. ib.
Differences between John de Monfort and Charles de Blois, for the duchy of Britany. ib.
The court of peers decide for Charles de Blois. ib.
John de Monfort puts himſelf under Edward's protection. Page 473 An' 1341.
He is taken at Nants, and carried priſoner to Paris. ib.
The counteſs his wife renews the alliance with Edward, and marries her ſon to one of the King's daughters. ib.
Edward ſends Robert d'Artois into Britany; he is there killed. p. 474.
Edward goes into Britany, and beſieges four places. ib.
John, duke of Normandy, ſon to Philip, marches into Britany againſt Edward, and compels him to raiſe the four ſieges. ib.
Truce for two years. ib. 1342.
Affairs of Scotland; progreſs of the Scots in the year 1339. ib. 1343.
Robert Stuart beſieges and takes Perth. ib.
Reduces Sterling in 1340. ib.
Edward marches againſt the Scots 1341. ib.
His fleet diſabled by a ſtorm. ib.
He grants a truce to the Scots; David returns to Scotland. ib.
He takes Durham, and withdraws on Edward's approach. ib.
He beſieges the caſtle of Werk, belonging to the counteſs of Saliſbury, but on Edward's approach he withdraws. ib.
Edward makes a viſit to the counteſs of Saliſbury. p. 475
He vainly purſues the Scots. ib.
Truce for two years between England and Scotland. ib.
Edward convenes a parliament ib.
Statute againſt proviſors. ib.
Edward creates Edward, his eldeſt ſon, Prince of Wales. ib.
Eſtabliſhment of the Round-table. ib.
The deſign of this tournament. ib.
Edward treats with ſeveral particular people for ſuccors. ib.
Philip publiſhes a tournament at Paris. ib.
He beheads ſeveral Breton lords, who came to the tournament. p. 476
Edward looks on that action as a breach of the truce, 1344. ib.
And ſends Philip a defiance. ib.
The war begins again in Guienne. ib.
Edward receives homage from the count de Monfort and d'Harcourt. ib.
He publiſhes a manifeſto. ib. June 14.
He makes a voyage into Flanders. ib. 1345.
The earl of Derby's progreſs in Guienne. ib.
Generous action of this commander. ib.
The duke of Normandy makes great progreſs in Guienne. ib. 1346.
He lays ſiege to Aiguillon. p. 477
Edward imbarks for Guienne; he is twice drove back by contrary winds. ib.
He makes a deſcent at La Hogue in Normandy. ib.
He knights the Prince of Wales. ib.
He makes great devaſtations, and advances near to Poiſſy. ib.
Philip deſigns to ſhut him up between two rivers. ib.
Edward retires, and forces a paſſage on the Somme. ib.
Philip overtakes him. ib.
Battle of Crecy, where Philip is intirely defeated. ib. 478
The King of Bohemia is killed. p. 478.
Cannon firſt uſed in this battle. ib.
Edward beſieges Calais. p. 479
David, King of Scotland enters England; he is defeated and taken priſoner by the Queen ib. 1347.
Charles de Blois is overcome and taken priſoner by the Engliſh in Britany. ib.

Philip

AN' 1347. Philip takes ſeveral meaſures to relieve Calais, but all prove vain. Page 479
Calais ſurrenders at diſcretion. p. 480
Edward condemns to death ſix of the burghers, but the Queen obtains their pardon. ib.
He ſettles the Engliſh in Calais, and drives out all the French. ib.
Truce for a year. ib.
1348. Edward refuſes the Imperial dignity, which is offered him. ib.
A great plague in England. p. 481
Philip corrupts the governor of Calais; Edward prevents the loſs of that place. ib.
Edward's generoſity to Ribaumont. ib.
Inſtitution of the order of the garter. ib.
1350. Edward goes in perſon to fight the Spaniſh pirates, and gets the victory. p. 482
Death of Philip de Valois; John his ſon ſucceeds. ib.
1351. Edward corrupts the governor of Guiſnes and takes the place during the truce. ib.
1352. Defection of the Flemings; the young earl of Flanders puts himſelf under the protection of the King of France. ib.
The Flemings abandon Edward's party. ib.
1353. Edward changes the Engliſh wool ſtaple ſettled in Flanders. ib, 1354. Truce with France prolonged. ib.
Treaty concluded for the King of Scotland's liberty not put in execution. ib.
Edward gives the Prince of Wales the duchy of Guienne. ib.
Defiance between the two Kings. ib.
Berwick ſurpriſed by the Scots, re-taken by Edward. p. 483
1355. Baliol gives up to Edward all his rights to Scotland. ib.
Charles de Blois makes an agreement with Edward for his liberty. ib.
1356. The Prince of Wales ravages Languedoc. ib.
His ſecond expedition with twelve thouſand men. ib.
John, King of France, follows and overtakes him at Poitiers, with an army of ſixty thouſand men. ib.
The Prince of Wales makes propoſals to have liberty to retire, which are rejected. ib.
The battle of Poitiers, where John is defeated and taken priſoner with many Princes and others. ib. 484
The Prince of Wales's moderation after his victory. p. 484
1357. John is carried to Bourdeaux. ib.
Truce for two years. ib.
John brought to London, where Edward receives him with great honor. ib.
The King of Scotland ſet at liberty. p. 485
1358. A magnificent tournament at Windſor. ib.
Death of Queen Iſabella, Edward's mother. ib.
The count d'Harcourt makes Edward his heir. ib.
King John's impriſonment the cauſe of great diſorders in France. ib.
1359. The two Kings agree upon conditions of peace, which are rejected by the ſtates general of France. ib.
1360. Edward goes into France with an army of a hundred thouſand men. ib.
He ravages the country even to the gates of Paris. p. 486
He rejects the Dauphin's propoſitions. ib.
He marches towards la Beauce. ib.
An extraordinary tempeſt makes him promiſe to reſtore peace to France. ib.
Treaty of peace concluded in Britany, very advantageous to Edward. ib. 487, 488
John ſet at liberty; he ratifies the peace, after his deliverance. p. 489
Edward makes John Chandos his lieutenant general in France. AN' 1361. Page 490
Death of the duke of Lancaſter. ib.
Prince of Wales's marriage. ib.
He is inveſted in the principality of Aquitain by the King his father. 1362. ib.
An order that all public acts ſhall be in Engliſh. ib.
A general pardon. ib.
Prince of Wales goes to keep his court at Bourdeaux. ib. 1363.
King John returns into England. ib.
He dies at London. p. 491 April 8.
Battle of Avrai, in which Charles de Blois is killed; John de Monfort lives in quiet poſſeſſion of Britany. 1364. ib.
The extraordinary fortune of Thomas Hawkwood an Engliſhman. 1365. ib.
Urban VI haughtily demands the arrears of tribute exacted of King John Lack-land. 1366. p. 492
The parliament declares King John's ingagement to the Pope, void. ib.
The Prince of Wales's expedition into Caſtile. ib. 1367.
He gains the battle of Najara, and re-eſtabliſhes Peter the Cruel on the throne. ib.
Peter pays him with ingratitude. ib. 1368.
The Prince returns to Guienne. ib.
The cataſtrophe of Peter. ib.
Lionel, the King's ſecond ſon, goes to marry Violante of Milan. p. 493
He dies in Italy. ib.
The artifices of Charles V, King of France, to break the treaty of Britany. 1356. ib.
He cauſes the Prince of Wales to be ſummoned. p. 494
He declares war againſt Edward. ib.
He takes the county of Ponthieu from him. p. 495
Several towns in Guienne revolt. ib.
Edward takes up the title of King of France. ib.
Death of Queen Philippa. ib.
Death of Chandos. p. 496 Aug. 15.
The Prince of Wales is ſick after his return from Spain. 1370. ib.
He puniſhes the revolt of the Limoges. ib.
He reſigns Aquitain to the King his father; he loſes his eldeſt ſon, and returns into England. ib. 1371.
Death of David King of Scotland. ib.
Robert Stuart, his nephew, ſucceeds him. ib.
He makes an alliance with France. ib.
The duke of Lancaſter and the earl of Cambridge, Edward's ſons, marries the two daughters of Peter the Cruel, King of Caſtile; the duke takes the title of King of Caſtile. ib.
Henry, King of Caſtile, unites with France. ib. 1372.
Great progreſs againſt the Engliſh by Du Gueſclin in France. ib.
Siege of Rochelle. ib.
The earl of Pembroke beat at ſea in indeavoring to ſummon it; Rochelle taken. ib.
Siege of Thouars; it capitulates on conditions. ib.
Contrary winds hinder Edward's ſuccoring Thouars. ib.
The lords of Britany oppoſe their duke's deſign to ſuccor Edward. 1373. p. 497
The duke of Lancaſter leads an army into Guienne. 1374. ib.
He offers battle to the duke of Anjou who accepts it. ib.
He receives news of a truce between the two Kings. 1375. ib.
The truce is prolonged till the month of April 1377. 1376. ib.
Edward falls in love with Alice Pierce, and cauſes the murmurs of the people by his expences. ib.
Tournament in Smithfield. ib.
He receives ſome mortification from the parliament. p. 498

He

An' 1376. He is forced to part with his favorite Alice Pierce, and miniſters. Page 498
A general pardon. ib.
Death of the Prince of Wales. ib.
1377. The King recalls the duke of Lancaſter and Alice Pierce. ib.
He creates Richard his grandſon Prince of Wales. ib.
Troubles in England occaſioned by the doctrines of Wicklif. ib.
The King gives Richard the order of the garter, and declares him his ſucceſſor. p. 499
He falls ſick, and finds himſelf abandon'd by every body. His Death. ib.
22 June. Diſſertation on the Salic-law. 500-507

RICHARD II.

1377. Richard II, acknowleged King without any oppoſition by his uncles. p. 507
16 July. He is crowned. ib.
The negligence of England, in relation to the war with France. p. 508
The truce being expired, Charles V ſends five armies into the field. ib.
Devaſtations of the French on the coaſts of England. ib.
The King's uncles complained of. ib.
The Scots ſurprize Roxborough. ib.
The parliament nominates regents. ib.
They grant the King money, but on hard conditions. ib.
Alice Pierce baniſhed. ib.
1378. The duke of Lancaſter one of the regents, makes uſe of his power with violence. ib.
He ſeizes on the money granted by the parliament. p. 509
The King of Navarre delivers up Cherbourg to the Engliſh. ib.
A Scots pirate does great damage to the Engliſh merchants; he is taken by Philpot an alderman of London. ib.
7 March. Death of Pope Gregory XI. ib.
A Schiſm. ib.
The duke of Lancaſter indeavors to re-eſtabliſh the duke of Britany, who was drove out by his ſubjects p. 510
The duke of Britany offers Breſt to the Engliſh, who reſolve to aſſiſt him. ib.
The Scots take Berwick, which is retaken. ib.
1379. An impoſition on the nobility and clergy. ib.
The King of France confiſcates Britany. ib.
The lords of Britany recall their duke. p. 511
1380. The parliament meets; they make a ſtatute againſt foreign incumbents. ib.
The foreign monks are drove out of England. ib.
The earl of Warwick made the King's governor. ib.
The parliament names commiſſioners to examine how the King's revenues are imployed. ib.
The duke of Buckingham, the King's uncle, goes to the aſſiſtance of the duke of Britany. ib.
Death of Charles V, King of France, Charles VI ſucceeds. ib.
The duke of Britany makes peace with France. ib.
A truce with Scotland. ib.
The parliament impoſes a poll-tax. ib.
The duke of Cambridge, the King's uncle, leads an army into Portugal againſt Caſtile. ib.
The duke of Lancaſter negociates a truce with Scotland. ib.
1381. An inſurrection under Wat. Tyler; he is killed. p. 512
They behead the nobles and judges, ſeize the Tower, and behead the archbiſhop and treaſurer. ib.
The King finds himſelf in great danger. p. 513
The inſurrections happily appeaſed. ib.
Puniſhment of the rebels. Page 514 An' 1381.
The duke of Lancaſter unjuſtly accuſed. ib.
The King's marriage with Ann of Luxemburg. ib.
Death of the earl of March preſumptive heir to Richard. ib. 1312.
Richard the II's favorite. p. 515
The commons revoke the power given to the biſhops to impriſon heretics. ib.
Croiſade ordained by Urban VI, againſt Clement VII; of which the biſhop of Norwich is made general. ib.
The duke of Cambridge returns diſſatisfied with the King of Portugal. ib.
Succeſs of the croiſade. ib. 1383.
The Scots and French ravage England. p. 516
A truce with France for ten months. ib.
The Scots included in it. lb.
The duke of Lancaſter is accuſed of a conſpiracy againſt the King; he juſtifies himſelf. ib. 1384.
The truce with France prolonged. ib.
A ſcheme to deſtroy the duke of Lancaſter. ib.
The duke takes meaſures to defend himſelf; the affair is appeaſed. p. 517 1385.
The duke of Lancaſter marches into Scotland. ib.
Richard puts himſelf at the head of his army. ib.
He loſes the opportunity of ſubduing the Scots, and returns to England. ib.
The lord Holland kills the lord Strafford. ib.
The King grants ſuccor to the King of Portugal. p. 518
The parliament grants a ſupply to the King. ib.
The clergy refuſe to pay their part; but at length comply. lb.
Roger, earl of March, is declared preſumptive ſucceſſor to Richard. ib.
Leo, King of Armenia, arrives in England. ib.
The duke of Lancaſter leads an army into Spain, againſt the King of Caſtile. ib.
French make preparations to conquer England. ib.
Richard draws together a numerous army. ib.
Difference between the King and parliament, on account of favorites. p. 519
The King is forced to conſent to the removal of his favorites; the parliament nominates fourteen commiſſioners to govern jointly with the King. ib.
The French fleet is diſperſed by a ſtorm. ib.
Richard recalls his favorites. ib.
The deſtruction of the duke of Gloceſter, the King's uncle, is reſolved on. ib.
The favorites exaſperate the King againſt their enemies. p. 520 1387.
The duke of Ireland, one of the King's favorites, repudiates his wife to the King's couſin. ib.
A combination to make the King abſolute. ib.
The judges determine the King to be above the laws. ib.
The King cannot compaſs his deſigns. ib.
A combination of the lords; they take arms. p. 521
The King indeavors to amuſe them. ib.
The duke of Ireland, with an army, marches to the King's aſſiſtance; he is defeated, and flies to Holland. ib.
All the King's deſigns are diſcovered. ib.
The confederate lords have a conference with the King. ib. 1388.
They upbraid him with his deſigns to make himſelf abſolute. ib.
The King conſents to another conference, and retracts; he is threatened; at laſt he agrees to baniſh his miniſters and favorites. p. 522
The judges are impriſoned. ib.
The parliament meets; two judges hanged, and others puniſhed. ib. 1389.
A general pardon. ib.
The Scots enter England, and defeat the Engliſh. ib.

AN' 1389. A truce with France for three years. Page 522
Richard, being come of age, takes upon him the government. ib.
He changes his miniſters and council. ib.
Duke of Gloceſter is accuſed; he clears himſelf. ib.
1390. Duke of Lancaſter's return. ib.
He gives Guienne to the duke of Lancaſter. p. 523
The earl of Derby, the duke of Lancaſter's ſon, goes to ſerve in Pruſſia. ib.
1391. The parliament renews the ſtatute made under Edward III againſt proviſions. ib.
The King extravagant in expenſes. ib.
1392. The city of London refuſes to lend him a thouſand pounds ſterling. ib.
The King takes away their charter, and returns it again on paying ten thouſand pounds. ib.
1393. The Iriſh revolt. ib.
Negociation with France. ib.
Charles VI, King of France, falls into an extraordinary illneſs. ib.
1394. Death of Ann of Luxembourg, Richard's wife. ib.
Richard goes into Ireland. p. 524
1395. Deſigns of the Lollards. ib.
Richard returns to England and indeavors to ſuppreſs the Lollards. ib.
1396. The Gaſcons refuſe to acknowlege the duke of Lancaſter for their Prince. ib.
The King revokes the grant he had made the duke of Lancaſter of Guienne. ib.
The duke of Lancaſter marries a third wife, by whom he had already ſeveral children, who are legitimated. ib.
The King's marriage with Iſabella of France. ib.
Truce for twenty eight years with France, and interview of Charles and Richard. ib.
The duke of Gloceſter upbraids the King with his truce and marriage. ib.
1397. The King's expenſes exceſſive. ib.
He exacts money from his ſubjects by illegal means. ib.
He gives up Breſt and Cherbourg for a moderate ſum. p. 525
The duke of Gloceſter reproaches him with it. ib.
The King ſuſpects his uncles. ib.
The duke of Lancaſter and York retire from court. ib.
The King ſurpriſes the duke of Gloceſter, and ſends him to Calais. ib.
The King finds means to have a parliament devoted to him. ib.
The violent proceedings of this parliament. p. 526
The archbiſhop of Canterbury is baniſhed, and the earl of Arundel and Warwick ſentenced to death; Arundel is executed, and Warwick baniſhed. ib.
The King cauſes the duke of Gloceſter his uncle to be ſtrangled at Calais. ib.
The parliament is adjourned to Shrewſbury. ib.
1398. The extraordinary proceedings of the parliament of Shrewſbury. ib.
The judges determine it treaſon, to propoſe any thing to the parliament before the King's affairs are diſpatched. ib.
The parliament delegate their whole authority to eighteen of their members, who are devoted to the King. ib.
Cheſhire elected into a principality. ib.
A quarrel between the dukes of Hereford and Norfolk; the King conſents they ſhould decide their quarrel by combat in the liſts; but he prevents their fighting and baniſhes them both. p. 527
Death of the duke of Lancaſter. ib.
The King's injuſtice towards the duke of Hereford, ſon of the duke of Lancaſter. ib.
The King governs by an abſolute power. ib. 528
Seventeen counties are condemned, and the eſtates confiſcated to the King. p. 528
Richard exacts blank bonds of the inhabitants of theſe counties. AN' 1398. Page 528
A rebellion in Ireland, where Roger, earl of March, preſumptive heir of Richard, is ſlain. ib.
The King exacts great ſums from his ſubjects, and ſets out for Ireland. ib.
The earl of Northumberland declared a traitor. ib. 1399.
The King intruſts the regency to his uncle the duke of York. ib.
A conſpiracy in England againſt the King. ib.
The conſpirators recall from France the duke of Hereford. ib. 529
The duke imbarks with eighty men only. p. 529
He lands at Ravenſpur in Yorkſhire, and in a few days draws together ſixty thouſand men. ib.
The King's council withdraws to St. Albans; London declares for the duke. ib.
The King's miniſters withdraw to Briſtol, and the duke of York to his own ſeat. ib.
The duke of Lancaſter marches to London, where he is favorably received. ib.
He reduces Briſtol, and beheads ſome of the miniſters. ib.
He is joined by the duke of York. ib.
The earl of Saliſbury levies an army in Wales for the King. ib.
A contrary wind, for a whole month, hinders the King's ſeting out from Ireland. ib.
The earl of Saliſbury's army diſbands. p. 530
The King arrives in England, tho' too late. ib.
He is at a loſs how to proceed; at length he withdraws to the caſtle of Conway in Wales. ib.
He is deſerted by all. ib.
The duke of Lancaſter marches to Cheſter, and the King ſends him propoſitions. ib.
He offers to reſign his crown. ib.
He goes to meet the duke, who conducts him to London, and confines him in the Tower. ib.
Richard reſigns his crown. p. 531
The parliament accepts his reſignation, and impeaches him upon thirty-three articles. ib.---534
Richard II is depoſed. p. 534
The duke of Lancaſter makes a demand of the crown. ib.
He is proclaimed King under the name of Henry IV, in prejudice of the earl of March, ſon of the late earl of March. Sept. 30. p. 535
The ſtate of the church, ſince the acceſſion of Edward I, in 1272, to the depoſition of Richard II, in 1399. p. 535——544

HENRY IV.

The new King continues the ſame parliament. p. 544
Edmund, earl of March retires to Wigmore houſe. ib.
The King rewards thoſe who had ſerved him. ib.
He makes his ſecond ſon Thomas high ſteward. ib.
He is crowned and anointed with ſanctified oil. ib.
Henry will not acknowlege he holds the crown by the election of the people. p. 545
He puts out a proclamation in which he grounds his right on three falſe notions, and neglects the only legitimate one. ib.
He creates his ſon Henry, Prince of Wales. ib.
The parliament meets, and paſſes an act of indemnity. ib.
They repeal all the acts of the parliament of Shrewſbury, and annul the bull which confirmed them. ib. 546
Puniſhment of Richard II's favorites. ib.
Act, that compulſion ſhould be no juſtification for illegal actions. ib.
A general pardon. ib.
An act for ſettling the ſucceſſion of the crown in the houſe of Lancaſter. ib.
The parliament's debate about the perſon of Richard II. ib.

An' 1399. Speech of the biſhop of Carſlile in favor of Richard II. Page 547
An extraordinary ſentence againſt Richard. p. 548
The King promiſes the clergy his concurrence, to rout out the hereſy of the Lollards. ib.
The parliament diſſolved. ib.
Henry's embaſſadors coldly received in France. p. 549
The inſurrection of Guienne prevented. ib.
The Scots ſeize on Werk caſtle; Henry ſends an embaſſador to Scotland. ib.
Henry cauſes the blank obligations of the ſeventeen counties, called the Ragmans, to be burn'd. ib.
He ſends Richard to be confined in Pomfract caſtle. ib.
Death of the duke of Britany. ib.
1400. A conſpiracy by ſeveral lords to re-eſtabliſh Richard II. ib. 550
It is diſcovered. p. 550
The conſpirators take up arms, and give out that King Richard is with them. ib.
Two of their chiefs are taken in Cirenceſter, and beheaded; and ſeveral others undergo the ſame fate. p. 551
Tragical death of Richard II. p. 552
The truce with France is confirmed. ib.
A war with Scotland; the cauſe of it. ib.
Henry goes into Scotland, and the Scots enter England, and are defeated. ib. 553
A truce between England and Scotland. ib.
An inſurrection in Wales headed by Owen Glendour. ib.
Glendour cauſes himſelf to be acknowleged Prince of Wales, by the rebels. ib.
He takes the earl of March priſoner; with which the King is not diſſatisfied. ib.
The Emperor of Conſtantinople arrives in England. ib.
1401. The ſtatute of præmunire. p. 554
Another againſt heretics. ib.
William Sowtre, a Lollard, is burned alive. ib.
Henry aſks in marriage for his ſon, Iſabella, widow of Richard; to which the court of France makes no anſwer; he ſends her back. ib.
Marriage of Blanche, the King's daughter, with Lewis of Bavaria. ib.
The King's expedition againſt the Welſh, of little importance. p. 555
A ſtratagem, to take away the King's life, diſcovered. ib.
Death of Edmund, duke of York; his ſon Edward ſucceeds him. ib.
1402. A tax to raiſe money for the marriage of the King's daughter. ib.
A rumor ſpread of Richard II's being alive, and in Scotland. ib.
Several injurious writings publiſhed againſt the King; the authors of which are puniſhed. ib.
One of the King's daughters married to the King of Denmark, and the King himſelf marries Jean of Navarre, widow of the duke of Britany. ib.
Another expedition of the King's into Wales, without ſucceſs. ib.
The Scots defeated at Niſbet, by the earl of Northumberland. ib. 556
Battle of Hali down-hill won by the ſame earl againſt the Scots. p. 556
The truce between France and England ill obſerved. ib.
The King of France demands the reſtitution of the dowry of Iſabella, widow ſo Richard II, and Henry requires the arrears of King John's ranſom. ib.
February, Arrival of the new Queen. ib.
1403. The French make a deſcent in the iſle of Wight; Henry diſſembles the inſult. ib.
The duke of Orleans, brother to Charles VI, challenges Henry, who complains of it to no purpoſe. Page 556, 557
An' 1403. Negociation concerning Queen Iſabella's dowry. p. 557
The King falls out with the earl of Northumberland. ib.
The earl enters privately into a league with Owen Glendour and the earl of March. ib.
The male-contents take up arms, and ſpread a report that Richard is living. p. 558.
They publiſh a manifeſto. ib.
Battle of Shrewſbury won by the King againſt the rebels, in which Pierce Hotſpur is ſlain. ib.
The earl of Worceſter beheaded. ib.
The King pardons the earl of Northumberland. ib.
The deſigns of France againſt Henry prevented by his victory at Shrewſbury. ib. 559
The Britons inſult the Engliſh, who revenge themſelves. p. 559
It is given out that Richard II is living; Henry puniſhes the authors of this report. 1404. ib.
The Britons make a deſcent near Portland; Henry diſſembles this affront. ib.
A truce of one year with Scotland. ib.
The unlearned parliament. p. 560
The commons petition the King to cauſe the revenues of the clergy to be ſeized; the houſe of lords break all their meaſures. ib.
Innocent VII Pope. ib.
The earl of March's children are carried away from Windſor. 1405. ib.
The duke of York is arreſted. ib.
Prince Henry wins two battles againſt the rebels of Wales. March 11, ib. 14.
The truce is ill obſerved by the French. p. 561
The King aſks a ſupply of money from the nobility and clergy, which is refuſed him. ib.
A conſpiracy by the archbiſhop of York and others, againſt the King. ib.
Manifeſto of the conſpirators. ib.
The archbiſhop is taken by treachery, and, with the lord Mowbray, is delivered to the King. ib. 562
They are beheaded. p. 562
The earl of Northumberland and Bardolph refuge in Scotland. ib.
The French make a deſcent in Wales. ib.
The King marches againſt them; and finds they are re-imbarked; the badneſs of the ſeaſon prevents his doing any thing againſt them. ib.
The French again inſults Henry, yet at the ſame time aſſure him they intend to obſerve the truce. ib.
Philipa, the King's daughter, ſets out for Denmark. ib.
An act of parliament to maintain the freedom of electing members. 1406. p. 563
The King demands money; the commons refuſe him. ib.
He cauſes the parliament to ſit till they grant him money. ib.
An act to exclude females from ſucceeding to the crown. ib.
This act is repealed in the ſame year, and another paſſed to maintain the women in their right. December; ib.
The earl of Northumberland withdraws to Owen Glendour in Wales. ib.
James, ſon of the King of Scots, is going to France by ſea, having landed in England to take ſome repoſe, was ſeized and brought to the King, who cauſes him to be confined in the Tower. p. 564
Death of Robert, King of Scotland. ib.
The duke of Albany is made regent, during James's impriſonment. ib.

Papers

An' 1407. Papers ſet up, to notify that Richard II was ſtill alive. Page 564
The King indeavors, in vain, to diſcover the authors. ib.
A plague which obliges the King to quit London; he is very near being taken by pirates. ib.
Death of Robert Knoller, a famous warrior in the reign of Edward III. ib.
Deſigns of France upon Guienne and Calais. ib.
The duke of Burgundy gets the duke of Orleans aſſaſſinated. ib.
A truce between England and Britany. ib.
1408. Another rebellion of the earl of Northumberland. p. 565
He is defeated and ſlain by the ſherif of York. ib.
The earl of Kent gives the French pirates chace; he aſſaults Brehac in Britany; is ſlain. ib.
A truce made with France, for Guienne, Poitou, and Picardy. ib.
1409. Council of Piſa, in which Gregory XII, and Bene-
25 March. dict XIII are depoſed, and Alexander V elected. p. 566
A proclamation to acknowlege Alexander V. ib.
Wicklif's books are publicly burnt at Oxford. ib.
The truce with Britany prolonged to the firſt of July 1411. ib.
1410. The troubles of France increaſe. ib.
Henry, being no longer in apprehenſion of France, very near becomes maſter of the election of members of parliament. ib.
January. The parliament paſſes an act againſt abuſes in the election of its members. ib.
The King aſks a ſupply of money. ib.
The commons addreſs him, to cauſe the revenues of the clergy to be ſeized. ib.
Another addreſs, to abrogate the act againſt the Lollards. ib.
The King rejects the two addreſſes. p. 567
Another addreſs againſt the clergy rejected. ib.
The King cauſes a Lollard to be burned. ib.
The commons refuſe to grant him money. ib.
He keeps the parliament ſiting till they grant him a ſupply. ib.
Deſign of the duke of Burgundy upon Calais. ib.
1411. The truce prolonged with France. ib.
Henry ſends ſuccors to the duke of Burgundy. p. 568
Parliament in England; act of indemnity; Glendour excepted. ib.
Owen Glendour's affairs goes to wreck; he is conſtrained to hide himſelf. ib.
1412. The two parties in France ſend to Henry for ſuccor. ib.
He makes a treaty with the duke of Orleans. ib.
Prince Thomas, the King's ſecond ſon, is made duke of Clarence, and appointed to lead a ſupply into France. ib.
He arrives after a peace concluded between the two parties, and withdraws into Guienne. ib. 569
Exceſſes of the Prince of Wales. p. 569
He gives a judge a blow on the face. ib.
He juſtifies himſelf of the doubts the King his father had entertained againſt him. ib.
1413. The King is taken with a violent ſickneſs. ib.
He makes a vow to go to Jeruſalem, and takes the croſs. ib.
He ſwoons away in a chapel. p. 570
20 March. He is carried into a room called the Jeruſalem Chamber, where he gives his laſt inſtructions to his ſucceſſor, and dies. ib.
He was foretold he ſhould die in Jeruſalem. p. 569

HENRY V.

9 April. Henry V proclaimed, and crowned. p. 571
He diſcards all his lewd companions, and choſe a worthy council. ib.
The body of Richard II, is removed to Weſt- An' 1413.
minſter. Page 572
The parliament makes a ſtatute againſt abuſes in the elections of its members. ib.
The clergy proſecutes ſir John Oldcaſtle, baron of Cobham, for hereſy. ib.
He is condemned; he makes his eſcape. ib.
Great commotions in France. The inhabitants of Paris rebel under the leading of John de Troye. ib. 573
The duke of Burgundy indeavors to win Henry's friendſhip. p. 573
Henry ſends embaſſadors to France. ib.
A revolution in France, which obliges the duke of Burgundy to retire into Flanders. He is declared an enemy to France. ib.
Henry requires France, to give up all it had acquired ſince the treaty of Britany. ib.
A truce between the two kingdoms to June 1, September.
1414. ib.
An embaſſy of France to Henry. p. 574
A continuation of the troubles of France. ib.
The Lollards are accuſed of having ploted againſt 1414.
the King. The King believes it. ib.
He takes ſome of them who were aſſembled; he puts ſome to death, and puniſhes others. ib. 575
Death of Arundel archbiſhop of Canterbury. Chicheley ſucceeds him. p. 575
Henry renews his demands with regard to the treaty of Britany. ib.
A marriage is propoſed to him with Catherine, daughter of Charles VI. He accepts it, with a proteſt it ſhall not prejudice his pretenſions. ib.
The truce is prolonged to the month of January 1415. ib.
Henry's demands. Offers of France. ib.
The French King makes war upon the duke of Burgundy. p. 576
He again falls ſick. Lewis the Dauphin governs, and grants peace to the duke of Burgundy. ib.
The duke of Burgundy enters into a ſecret negociation with Henry, who takes advantage of the troubles of France. ib. 577
Parliament held at Leiceſter, and a ſevere ſtatute againſt the Lollards. p. 577
The commons addreſs the King, to cauſe the revenues of the clergy to be ſeized. ib.
The clergy offer the King the lands of the alien priories; the King accepts the offer. p. 578.
The parliament grants the King money to make war upon France. ib.
The Dauphin's ſcornful preſent to Henry of Tennis Balls. p. 579
The negociations with France continues, but to no effect; that of Henry with the duke of Burgundy is alſo carried on. ib.
The truce is renewed. ib. 1415.
Other prolongations of little duration. p. 580
Henry imbarks his forces to croſs into France. ib. July.
A conſpiracy againſt him diſcovered. ib.
The earl of Cambridge, the duke of York's brother, is beheaded. ib.
Henry lands at Havre de grace in Normandy. ib.
He beſieges, and takes Harfleur. ib.
He offers the Dauphin to decide their quarrel by a ſingle combat. p. 581
The French raiſe great forces under the leading of the conſtable d'Albert. ib.
Henry reſolves to withdraw to Calais; but not being able to croſs the Somme he draws near to its ſource. ib.
He offers to reſtore Harfleur; 'tis not accepted. p. 582
He meets the enemy who offers him battle, which 25 Oct.
he accepts; great diſproportion between the two armies; the Engliſh begin the charge; the firſt line of the French routed; Henry fights on foot at

An' 1415. at the head of his troops; he is knock'd down on his knees; Alençon gives the King a furious blow, who knocks him down; the third line of the French retire without fighting; Henry intire maſter of the field. Page 583, 584
He continues his march towards Calais. p. 585
He declines a challenge from the duke of Burgundy. ib.
He croſſes into England. ib.
The troubles in France renewed. ib.
The count d'Armagnac is made high conſtable, and the Burgundians are oppreſſed. ib.
24 Dec. Death of Lewis the Dauphin; his brother John becomes Dauphin. p. 586
The conſtable hinders the Dauphin's appearing at court. ib.
Each party indeavors to gain Henry. ib.
1416. He indeavors to gain the duke of Burgundy. ib.
Arrival of the Emperor Sigiſmund in Paris. ib.
He indeavors to promote a truce; goes into England. ib.
The conſtable beſieges Harfleur. p. 587
The duke of Bedford, Henry's brother, obliges him to raiſe the ſiege, and beats the French fleet. ib.
An interview between Henry and the duke of Burgundy at Calais. ib.
John the Dauphin dies by poiſon; his brother Charles ſucceeds. p. 588
He goes over to the conſtable's party; the Burgundians are perſecuted. ib.
The duke of Burgundy at length reſolves to enter into a league with Henry, and does homage to him; a truce between them. ib.
A treaty between the Emperor Sigiſmund, and Henry. ib.
Agreement between Henry and the duke of Burgundy. ib.
A truce between France and England. p. 589
1417. Henry's preparations to renew the war. ib.
The bad ſituation of the affairs of France. ib.
Henry's negociation with the dukes of Orleans and Bourbon, and the other priſoners in England. p. 590
Iſabella of Bavaria, Queen of France, is baniſhed to Tours. p. 591
The Queen's mortal hatred towards the Dauphin her ſon. ib.
The duke of Burgundy places himſelf at the head of an army, and marches towards Paris. ib.
Henry lands at Tonque in Normandy. ib.
He reduces Caen, and makes acquiſitions. ib.
The Queen Iſabella joins the duke of Burgundy, who carries her away from Tours to Troye. ib.
The Queen aſſumes the title of regent of France. ib.
Henry goes on with his conqueſts in Normandy. ib.
A fruitleſs conference to make a peace. ib.
20 Decem. The taking of Falaiſe. ib.
A truce for Britany, Anjou and Maine. ib.
Oldcaſtle is burned alive in England. p. 592
1418. New acquiſitions in Normandy. ib.
May. Evreux taken. ib.
Siege of Cherbourg. ib.
An agreement between the Dauphin and the duke of Burgundy, which the conſtable renders abortive. ib.
The Burgundians reduce Paris; the conſtable is there maſſacred. ib.
The Queen and duke of Burgundy enter Paris, and govern in the King's name. ib.
The Dauphin takes upon him the title of regent. ib.
A truce in Guienne, between the King and the rebels of Gaſcony. p. 593
Auguſt. Siege of Roan. ib.
The Dauphin, by ſeveral ſtratagems, indeavors to preſerve Roan; but cannot ſucceed. ib.
Negociations between the King and the Dauphin. Page 593 An' 1418.
A conference at Alençon. p. 594
Another fruitleſs conference. ib.
Conference of Louviers. ib. 1419.
Capitulation of Roan. ib. 15 Jan.
————Dieppe. ib. February.
————Montreuil. ib.
A ſhort truce between the King and Dauphin concluded at Louviers. ib.
The Dauphin having refuſed to be reconciled to the duke of Burgundy, the duke offers to negociate a peace with Henry, in the French King's name. p. 595
A truce for three months. ib.
The Dauphin abſolutely rejects a reconciliation with the duke of Bungundy. ib.
The peace between the two King's is negociated at a place near Meulant. ib.
An interview between Henry, the Queen, the duke of Burgundy, and the Princeſs Catherine. ib.
Henry's demands. ib.
The demands of France, and the duke of Burgundy's policy. ib. 596
The Dauphin and the duke of Burgundy are reconciled. p. 596
The duke of Burgundy interrupts the conferences of Meulant. ib.
Henry takes Pontoiſe. ib.
Henry's affairs are in a perplexed ſituation. ib.
The Dauphin cauſes the duke of Burgundy to be aſſaſſinated on Montereau-bridge. p. 597
A lucky change of affairs in Henry's favor. ib.
The Pariſians obtain a truce from Henry. ib.
Philip, the new duke of Burgundy, indeavors to revenge the murder of his father, and to make an alliance with Henry. ib.
Henry claims the crown of France. ib.
Henry, the Queen, and the duke of Burgundy, agree to the preliminaries of peace between the two Kings. ib. 598
A particular treaty between Henry and the duke of Burgundy. 598 1420. January.
The truce is renewed. ib.
Henry takes the title of King of France, on the money coined in Normandy. ib.
He goes to Troye. ib.
Treaty of Troye, in which Henry is declared heir of the crown of France, and regent during the life of Charles VI. ib. 599 11 May.
Henry's marriage with Catherine of France. p. 599 2 June.
The ſiege and taking of Sens. ib.
Taking of Montereau. ib.
The ſiege of Melun. ib. July.
The two Kings make their entry into Paris. p. 600
The ſtates of France confirm the peace of Troye. ib.
Sentence given againſt the murderers of the duke of Burgundy. ib.
The Dauphin continues the title of regent. ib. 1421.
France is divided into two factions. ib.
Henry pardons the rebels of Gaſcony. ib.
He croſſes into England. p. 601 February.
The Queen's coronation. ib.
The King calls a parliament. ib.
Proclamation againſt the collations of the court of Rome. ib.
The duke of Clarence, the King's brother, is killed in Anjou. ib.
The parliament ratifies the peace of Troye, and grants a ſubſidy. ib.
The parliament complains of the expence of the war againſt France. ib.
The King's affairs with Scotland from the begining of this reign. ib. 602
Henry indeavors, by the means of James I his priſoner, to draw the Scots troops out of France; but to no purpoſe. p. 602

Henry

AN' 1421. Henry returns to France. Page 602
The Dauphin beſieges Chartres. ib.
Henry marches to ſuccor Chartres, and raiſes the ſiege. ib.
He takes Dreux. ib.
Siege of Meaux. ib.
1422. Birth of Henry the King's ſon. p. 603
Adventures of Jaquelina of Bavaria, counteſs of Hainault, who ſtands godmother to the King's ſon. ib.
May. The taking of Meaux. ib.
The Queen returns to France. ib.
The Dauphin takes la Charité, and beſieges Coſne upon the Loire. ib.
Henry marches to its ſuccor. ib.
He falls ſick, and is obliged to ſtop at Senlis. ib.
Auguſt 31. Death of Henry V. ib. 604

HENRY VI.

September. Henry VI, at nine years of age, is proclaimed King of England, and heir to the crown of France. p. 606
Parliament called. p. 607
The Welſh begin to ſtir. ib.
Octob. 21. Death of Charles VI. ib.
The duke of Bedford, Henry's uncle, cauſes this young Prince to be proclaimed King of France, and, in the King's name, receives the oath of fidelity taken by the French lords. ib.
He aſſumes the title of regent of France. ib.
Novemb. The Dauphin aſſumes the title of King of France, by the name of Charles VII, and is crowned at Poictiers. ib.
ditto 9. The Engliſh parliament aſſembles. p. 612
They declare the duke of Bedford protector, and in his abſenſe his brother the duke of Gloceſter. ib.
The duke of Exeter, and the biſhop of Wincheſter, are made the King's governors. ib.
Jealouſy of the biſhop of Wincheſter towards the duke of Gloceſter. p. 613
January 4, Meulant ſurprized by the French. ib.
1423. The regent retakes Meulant. ib.
April 8. The dukes of Burgundy, of Bretagne, of Bedford, and the earl of Richmond, ſign a treaty between themſelves at Amiens. ib.
The duke of Bedford marries one of the duke of Burgundy's ſiſters, the earl of Richmond another. ib.
He takes Pont-ſur-Seine. ib.
Montaigu beſieged by the earl of Suffolk. p. 614
June. The earl of Saliſbury's conqueſts. ib.
Battle of Crevant won by the Engliſh. ib.
Aug. Oct. Siege and capitulation of Orſay and Crotoy. ib.
Ham, Guiſe, and Compeigne ſurprized by the French. p. 615
The regent recovers theſe three towns. ib.
Battle of Gravelle, where the Engliſh are defeated. ib.
Charles VII receives a ſupply from Scotland. ib.
July 4. Birth of Lewis the Dauphin. p. 616
The earl of Richmond falls out with the regent. ib.
A truce for the provinces of Burgundy and Lyonnois. ib.
Earl of March made governor of Ireland. ib.
Octob. 20. The parliament of England aſſembles. ib.
A ſubſidy granted. ib.
Negociations for the liberty of the King of Scots. ib.
February. James I marries Joanna of Somerſet. ib.
1424. A ſeven years truce between England and Scotland from May. 1. ib.
Diverſe military exploits. p. 617
Beamont taken by the French. La Charité ſurpriſed. Beaumont retaken. The French ſurpriſe Ivry. It is beſieged by the regent. Douglas takes Verneuil. Ivry ſurrenders. Battle of Verneuil. The duke of Alençon taken priſoner. ib.
Verneuil taken by the regent. Page 618 Auguſt 16.
The dead body of the viſcount de Narbonne is expoſed upon a gallows. p. 619 AN' 1424.
The conqueſt of Maine by the earl of Saliſbury. ib.
A falling out between the dukes of Gloceſter and Burgundy, on account of Jaquelina d'Haynault. ib.
The duke of Gloceſter poſſeſſes himſelf of Haynault. p. 620.
Death of the earl of March; the duke of York ſucceeds to all his rights. ib.
Charles VII is in a very perplexed ſituation. ib. Jan. 12.
The affairs of Haynault is advantageous for him. ib. 1425.
A challenge between the dukes of Burgundy and Gloceſter. ib. 621
Braine taken by the Brabanters. ib.
Charles wins the earl of Richmond over to his party, and by his means the duke of Britany. ib.
He makes the earl of Richmond high conſtable of France. ib.
The new conſtable behaves very haughtily towards him. ib.
The duke of Britany does homage to Charles VII. p. 622
Difference between the duke of Gloceſter and the biſhop of Wincheſter. ib.
The duke of Bedford goes into England to reconcile them, and leaves Warwick to command in France. ib. p. 623 1426.
The duke of Bedford received for protector. p. 623
England proclaims war with Britany. ib.
Articles of accuſation againſt the biſhop of Wincheſter; he is declared innocent. ib.
Mowbray reſtored, and the duke of York, with forty others, knighted. ib.
The conſtable beſieges and take Pontorſon. ib.
He cauſes De Giac and Beaulieu the King's favorites to be ſtrangled. p. 624
The King will not ſee him; is reconciled. ib.
The Engliſh are defeated at the blocade of Montargis. ib.
War with Holland, on account of Jaquelina. p. 625
The earl of Suffolk is ſurprized in Mans and relieved by Talbot. 1427. ib.
Suffolk and Talbot take Laval. ib.
The duke of Bedford returns to France. ib.
The biſhop of Wincheſter made a cardinal. ib.
Diviſions in Charles's court. ib.
The regent ſubjects the duke of Britany. p. 626
Concluſion of the affair of Haynault. ib.
The duke of Brabant dies. ib.
The duke of Gloceſter quits Jaquelina, and marries Eleanor of Cobham. p. 627
The earl of Warwick made governor to the King. 1428. ib.
The earl of Saliſbury heads a ſupply of five thouſand men to the regent. ib.
The earl of Saliſbury ſeizes on ſeveral towns near Orleans. ib. 628
Begining of the ſiege of Orleans. p. 628 Octob. 12.
The earl of Saliſbury ſlain. ib.
The battle of Herrings. ib. 1429.
Charles VII projects his withdrawing into Dauphine. p. 629
The maid of Orleans is preſented to the King at Chinon. ib.
She enters Orleans with a convoy. ib.
She, ſword in hand, carries three of the Engliſh forts, and the next day a fourth. ib.
Raiſing of the ſiege of Orleans. p. 630 May 12.
The earl of Suffolk is taken priſoner. ib.
Battle of Patay, where the Engliſh are defeated, and Talbot taken priſoner. ib.
The duke of Bedford ſhuts himſelf up in Paris. p. 631
Charles receives ſupplies from ſeveral quarters. ib.
He marches towards Rheims, and is there anointed King. ib.

An' 1429. The diſpute between the duke of Gloceſter and the Cardinal of Windſor renewed. Page 631
June. The Pope nominates the cardinal of Wincheſter general of the croiſade againſt the heretics of Bohemia. ib.
Nov. 6. He levies forces in England. ib.
Henry VI crowned at London. p. 632
Charles VII makes ſeveral acquiſitions in France; the particulars of the campain. ib.
A change in the meaſures and policy of the duke of Burgundy. p. 633
1430. Agreement for the duke of Bourbon's liberty, which is not executed; he dies in England 1433. ib.
Henry VI goes into France. ib.
Dec. 17. He is crowned at Paris. ib.
Siege of Compiegne; the maid of Orleans gets into the town; ſhe is taken priſoner in a ſally. ib.
Raiſing of the ſiege. ib.
Nov. 8. A truce with Caſtile. ib.
December. A truce of five years with Scotland. ib.
May 30, The maid of Orleans is burned alive at Roan. p. 635
1431. The campain of 1431. ib.
War of Lorrain. ib.
Indeavors to make a peace without ſucceſs. ib.
Jan. 2, Henry VI returns to England. p. 636
1432. Continuation of the diſpute between the duke of Gloceſter and the cardinal of Wincheſter. ib.
Diviſion in Charles VII's court. ib.
Campain of 1432. p. 637
Nov. 13. Death of the ducheſs of Bedford. ib.
Embaſſy to the council of Baſil. ib.
1433. An inſurrection in Normandy. ib.
A marriage between the duke of Bedford and Jaquelina of Luxembourg. ib.
The duke of Orleans, a priſoner in London, offers his mediation for a peace; the Engliſh are deceived. p. 638
1434. Continuation of the war in France; earl of Arundel killed. p. 639
Talbot arrives in France, and takes ſeveral places. ib.
1435. Congreſs of Arras for peace. ib.
The duke of Burgundy makes a ſeparate peace with Charles VII. ib.
Sept. 30. Death of Iſabella of Bavaria, Queen of France. p. 640
Sept. 14. Death of the duke of Bedford. ib.
The duke of York is made regent in France. ib.
March, The duke of Burgundy declares againſt England. p. 641 1436.
April 13. The conſtable reduces Paris. ib.
The duke of York arrives in France and makes ſome progreſs. ib.
The duke of Burgundy beſieges Calais, and the duke of Gloceſter makes him raiſe the ſiege and purſues him into Flanders. ib. 642
Marriage of Lewis the Dauphine with Margaret of Scotland. ib.
January, Death of the two dowager Queens of England.
1437. Owen Tudor, is put in the Tower. ib.
Marriage of the ducheſs dowager of Bedford with Richard Woodville. ib
Febr. 19. Death of James I, King of Scotland. p. 643
Pontoiſe taken by Talbot. ib.
Crotoy taken by the duke of Burgundy; Talbot goes to relieve it. ib.
A bold action of that general; the ſiege raiſed; ſucceſs of the ſiege of Montereau. ib.
Campain of 1437. ib.
The duke of Orleans is choſen to mediate a peace between the two Kings. p. 644
1438. A plague and famine in France and England. ib.
A truce of a year with Scotland. ib.
Montargis ſold to the French; the duke of Burgundy's attempt on Calais. ib.
March, The ſiege and taking of Meaux by the conſtable de 1439. Richemont. ib.
He continues the ſiege of Market, and takes it. Page 644 An' 1439.
Talbot raiſes the ſiege of Avranche, and beſieges Harfleur and takes it. p. 645
A congreſs of peace appointed; inſtructions given to the Engliſh embaſſadors. ib.
Conference for a peace interrupted. p. 646
A truce for the merchants to trade between England and the Low Countries. ib.
The duke of Orleans is ſet at liberty, and choſen 1440.
one of the mediators for peace. p. 647
The duke of Gloceſter proteſts againſt the council's reſolution. ib.
Death of the earl of Warwick, regent of France. p. 649
The duke of York ſucceeds him. ib.
War of la Praguerie; Charles takes la Charité. ib.
A new conference for a peace fruitleſs. ib. 1441.
Charles takes Creil; lays ſiege to Pontoiſe; the duke of York raiſes the ſiege. ib.
Charles VII returns before Pontois, and takes the town ſword in hand. ib.
The ducheſs of Gloceſter condemned for bewitching the King. p. 650
Diſturbance at Charles's court. ib.
The Engliſh beſiege Tartas in Guienne. ib.
Charles marches to ſuccor Tartas. ib. 1442.
Charles's claim to the earldom of Cominge. ib.
The counteſs of Cominge's affair. ib.
Henry VI bethrothed to one of the daughters of the count of Armagnac. p. 651
Charles ſuccors Tartas, and takes ſeveral places in Guienne. ib.
Talbot is created earl of Shrewſbury, and the baſtard of Orleans count of Dunois. ib.
The ſiege of Dieppe. ib.
The duke of Gloceſter in vain accuſes the cardinal of Wincheſter, who is acquited. ib. 652
The duke loſes his credit with the King, p. 652
Birth of Edward, the duke of York's ſon, who September. was afterwards King of England by the name of Edward the IV. ib.
Truce between Henry VI and the duke of Bur- 1443.
gundy. ib.
Lewis, the Dauphin, cauſes the ſiege of Dieppe to be raiſed. ib. 653
Count d'Armagnac poſſeſſes himſelf of Cominge. p. 653
It is agreed to negociate a peace between England 1444.
and France at Tours. ib.
The earl of Suffolk goes to Tours, to negociate the peace. ib.
A truce concluded till April 1446. p. 654 May 28.
The truce with Scotland prolonged for ſeven years. ib.
Henry the VI's marriage with Margaret of Anjou Novemb.
ſolemnized at Tours. ib.
The new Queen arrives in England, and is crowned. May,
ib. 1445.
The truce with France prolonged till the firſt of November 1446. ib.
The death of Chichely archbiſhop of Canterbury; Stafford ſucceeds him. ib.
The duke of York arrives in England, to whom 1446.
the King confirms the regency of France for five years. p. 655
The truce is prolonged to the firſt of April, 1447. ib.
The court forms ſchemes againſt the duke of Gloceſter. ib.
The parliament meets at St. Edmundſbury; the 1447.
duke of Gloceſter is arreſted and found dead in his bed; his body expoſed to view; his domeſtics condemned, but pardoned. ib. 656
The Queen and the miniſters draw upon them the hatred of the people. p. 656

The

AN' 1447. The truce is prolonged till the first of January 1448. Page 656
Death of the cardinal of Wincheſter. ib.
The King ſuffers himſelf to be wholly governed by the Queen. ib.
The people murmur againſt Suffolk. ib.
People begin to talk of the duke of York's right to the crown. p. 657
The King takes the regency of France from the duke of York, and gives it to the duke of Somerſet. ib.
1448. The marquis of Suffolk is created duke. ib.
Mans delivered to Charles d'Anjou. Henry's proteſtation. ib.
The truce prolonged till the firſt of April 1449. p. 658
Surienne breaks the truce, by the taking of Fougeres, belonging to the duke of Bretagne. ib.
Fruitleſs conferences to adjuſt that affair. ib.
1449. Charles attacks Normandy, and takes all the places. ib.
19 Oct. The inhabitants of Roan open their gates to him. p. 659
He beſieges, and takes Harfleur. ib.
The rebellion in Ireland, whether the duke of York is ſent; he ſuppreſſes the rebellion. ib.
1450. The parliament accuſe the duke of Suffolk. ib.
The King ſends him to the Tower, in order to ſave him. p. 660
He is at laſt obliged to baniſh him the kingdom. ib.
April. The duke, in retiring to France, meets with an Engliſh man of war, whoſe captain cauſes his head to be cut off. ib.
The duke of York lays ſchemes to get the crown, as heir to the houſe of March. ib.
The ſedition of John Cade. He takes London, and cauſes the high treaſurer to be beheaded. ib. 661
He is abandoned by his people and killed. p. 661
Continuation of the war in Normandy. ib.
The battle of Fourmigni, at which the Engliſh are defeated. ib.
Charles compleats the conqueſt of Normandy. ib.
21 June. The duke of Somerſet ſurrenders Caen. ib.
At the deſire of the parliament, he is put into the Tower. p 662.
He comes out, and is made prime miniſter. ib.
1451. Charles makes many conqueſts in Guienne. ib.
Bourdeaux, and all the duchy treat with him. ib.
29 Aug. The ſiege, and taking of Bayonne. ib.
The duke of York writes to the King from Ireland, and complains of the bad adminiſtration in the government; he returns to England without leave. ib.
He withdraws into Wales, and again writes to the King on the ſame ſubject. p. 663
1452. He puts himſelf at head of an army, and marches to London, who ſhut their gates againſt him. ib.
The King marches againſt him. ib.
He offers to diſband his troops, on condition the duke of Somerſet ſhould be ſent to the Tower. ib.
His offer is accepted, but they do not keep their word with him; he is arreſted. ib.
He is reconciled with the King, and takes a freſh oath to him. p. 664
He retires into Wales. ib.
Diſturbance at the court of France, between the King and Dauphin. ib.
Talbot is received in Bourdeaux, and makes ſome progreſs in Guienne. ib.
1453. In indeavoring to ſuccor Caſtillon, he is ſlain. ib. p. 665
All Guienne ſubmits to Charles. ib.
End of the French war. ib.
23 Oct. Henry falls ſick. ib.
Birth of Edward, the King's ſon. ib.
Thomas Bourchier made archbiſhop of Canterbury. Page 665 AN' 1453.
The duke of York takes meaſures to aſcend the throne. ib.
The Queen is adviſed to put the duke of York, and his friends into the council; they become the ſtrongeſt party, and put the duke of Somerſet into the Tower, p. 666
The duke Somerſet is accuſed by the commons. ib. 1454.
The duke of York is made protector, and governor of Calais. ib.
The King retakes the government, releaſes the duke of Somerſet, and puts the duke of York out of his places. p. 667 1455.
The duke of York retires to Wales. ib.
The King marches againſt him. ib.
The battle of St. Albans, where the duke of Somerſet is ſlain; the King is defeated, and taken priſoner. ib. 31 May.
The duke of York treats him with great reſpect. ib.
The parliament deſire the King to name a protector. The King nominates the duke of York. p. 668
The King retakes the government, and puts the duke of York out of his protectorſhip. ib. 1456. February.
He withdraws from court. ib.
The Queen takes the King to Coventry. b
She lays a ſnare for the confederates, who av id.
it. ib.
The French make invaſions on the coaſts, and the Scots in the North. p. 669 1457.
The truce with Scotland prolonged till 1459. ib.
The Queen and the duke of Somerſet are reconciled with the duke of York. ib. 1458.
The duke of York, and the earl of Warwick retire from court. ib.
The earl of Warwick ſeizes ſome foreign ſhips. ib.
He falls into a danger, which he with difficulty overcomes. p. 670
The duke of York raiſes an army in Wales. ib. 1459.
The battle of Boreheath, where the lord Audley is defeated and ſlain by the earl of Saliſbury, the duke of York's friend. ib.
The duke of York, earls of Saliſbury and Warwick join. ib.
A fruitleſs treaty for an accommodation. ib.
The duke and two earls are abandon'd by the troops. p. 671
The duke of York eſcapes to Ireland, and the two earls to Calais. ib.
The parliament declare the duke of York and his adherents guilty. ib.
The duke of Somerſet repulſed at Calais. ib.
The court gives commiſſions to deſtroy the duke of York's partizans. ib. 1460.
The county of Kent invite over the lords of Calais. ib.
The lords ſend over Falconbridge; they publiſh a manifeſto, and arrive in England, where they preſently have an army of 40,000 men. ib. 672
They are received in London. p. 672
The Queen puts herſelf at the head of an army. ib.
The battle of Northampton, in which the royal army is defeated, and the King taken priſoner. ib.
The Queen, Prince, and Somerſet fly to Durham, and from thence the Queen withdraws into Wales, and after, with the Prince, goes into Scotland. ib.
The King is carried to London. ib.
A parliament call'd. The King's declaration in favor of the duke of York. ib.
Death of James II, King of Scotland at the ſiege of Roxborough. ib.
Death of Charles VII; Lewis XI ſucceeds. ib.
The duke of York expects the parliament will offer him the crown. p. 673
He is deceived in his expectation. ib.

He

An' 1460. He openly demands it. Page 673
The parliament gave judgment, the King ſhould hold the crown during his life, and the duke of York ſucceed him. ib.
The duke of York conſents to the agreement. ib.
The Queen raiſes an army in the North. p. 674
The duke marches againſt her with a few troops; he retires into Sandal caſtle. ib.
The battle of Wakefield, where the duke of York is defeated and ſlain. ib.
The earl of Rutland killed by Clifford, and the earl of Saliſbury beheaded. ib. 675
The earl of March, ſon to the duke of York, maintains the quarrel. p. 675
He beats the earl of Pembroke. ib.
Owen Tudor beheaded. ib.
The Queen marches towards London. ib.
The earl of Warwick goes to encounter her. ib.
Febr. 15. The battle of Bernards-heath. ib.
The Queen gains the victory, and delivers the King. ib.
Her troops plunder St. Albans. ib.
The earl of March is received at London. p. 676
The Queen retires to the North. ib.
The earl of Warwick cauſes the earl of March to be proclaimed King, by the name of Edward IV. ib.
A diſſertation on the maid of Orleans. p. 677---685

EDWARD IV.

1461. Edward the fourth is proclaimed, he ſets out from London to fight the Queen in the North. p. 685
March. The battle of Towton won by Edward, in which near thirty thouſand men were killed. p. 686
The earl of Devonſhire beheaded. p. 687
June 8. Edward takes down his father's head from the walls of York; he returns to London. ib.
He indeavors to imbarraſs the King of Scotland. ib.
He is crowned. p. 688
Queen Margaret breaks the meaſures of Edward in regard to Scotland. ib.
The parliament confirm the election of Edward IV. ib.
The parliament repeals the acts paſſed againſt the houſe of York. ib.
The King gives titles to his brothers and others. ib.
The earl of Oxford and his ſon beheaded. ib.
The duke of Burgundy ſends embaſſadors to Edward. p. 689
Queen Margaret goes to France to aſk ſuccor of Lewis XI. ib.
1462. Edward's league with the earl of Roſs, to create the King of Scotland troubles. ib.
Pope Pius II, congratulates Edward by a letter. ib.
The King's conceſſion to the clergy. p. 690
1463. The Queen arrives in the North of England. ib.
She is defeated, and flies to Berwick. ib.
The King ſends Montague to the North; Henry and Margaret re-enter England; Montague defeats a detachment of their army. ib.
The duke of Somerſet and ſome others are beheaded ib.
Montague created marquis, and Herbert earl of Pembroke. ib.
A truce with France, with Scotland, and with the duke of Burgundy. p. 691
1464. Henry VI returns to England, in order to hide himſelf; he is taken and put in the Tower. ib.
The Queen retires to her father. ib.
The duke of Somerſet and Exeter withdraw incognito to the Low Countries. ib.
Edward ſends the earl of Warwick into France, to aſk Bona of Savoy in marriage. ib.
Deſigns of Lewis XI againſt Bretagne. p. 692
He attacks Bretagne. ib.
Edward's negociations with Lewis XI. ib.
A fifteen years truce with Scotland. ib.
A years truce with Bretagne. Page 693 Octob. 1.
The earl of Warwick concludes Edward's marriage with Bona of Savoy. An' 1465. ib.
Edward marries Elizabeth Woodville. ib.
The Queen's father made earl of Rivers. ib.
The earl of Warwick's diſſatisfaction at the King's marriage. ib.
Lewis XI diſſatisfied with Edward, conceals his reſentment. ib. 694
Affairs of France. p. 694
Negociation of the duke of Bretange and the count de Charolois, ſons to the duke of Burgundy, with Edward. p. 695
The truce with Scotland prolonged till 1519. ib. Dec. 12.
Birth of Elizabeth the King's daughter. ib. 1466.
A truce with France. ib. April 30.
A truce with Bretagne. ib. June 7.
A friendly treaty between Edward and the count de Charolois. ib.
Edward's alliances with Caſtile and Denmark; negociations with Lewis and the duke of Burgundy. 1467. p. 696
Death of Philip the Good, duke of Burgundy; Charolois his ſon ſucceeds him. ib.
The Queen's relations are in great favor with the King, and the earl of Warwick is neglected. ib. July 15.
The earl of Rivers is made treaſurer and high conſtable. ib.
Warwick leaves the court, and makes ſure of Lewis XI's protection. ib.
Marriage of Margaret of York, the King's ſiſter, with the duke of Burgundy. 1468. p. 697
The commercial truce prolonged for thirty years. ib.
Edward promiſes to ſuccor the duke of Bretagne.
The duke of Burgundy beats the Liegeois. ib.
Lewis XI indiſcretely puts himſelf into the power of the duke of Burgundy. ib.
The duke diſcovers the inſincerity of Lewis, and takes him priſoner; Lewis ſubmits to hard terms. ib.
Deſtruction of Liege. ib.
Edward's alliance with Aragon; he ſends that King a preſent of ſheep. p. 698
The earl of Warwick's ſcheme againſt Edward. 1469. ib.
Sedition of York. ib.
Marriage of the duke of Clarence, the King's brother, with a daughter of the earl of Warwick. ib.
Montague defeats the rebels, and beheads their leaders. ib.
The earl of Pembroke is defeated by the rebels, and beheaded. p. 699
The earl of Rivers beheaded by the rebels. ib.
Edward cauſes the earl of Stafford to be beheaded. ib.
Embaſſy from France. ib. 1470.
The duke of Clarence and the earl of Warwick place themſelves at the head of the rebels. p. 700
The two armies being near one another, a peace is negociated, during which the King is taken priſoner. ib.
He is given in cuſtody to the archbiſhop of York. ib.
He eſcapes out of priſon to London. ib.
The lord Wells's ſon levies troops againſt the King. ib.
The King cauſes lord Wells and ſir Thomas Dimock to be beheaded. p. 701.
The ſon is defeated and beheaded. ib.
The duke of Clarence and the earl of Warwick ſeek refuge in France. ib.
Lewis XI promiſes to give them ſuccor. ib.
Margaret the Queen is reconciled to them. ib.
The Prince of Wales, Henry VI's ſon, marries a daughter of the earl of Warwick. ib.

Edward

AN' 1470. Edward ſecretly wins over his brother the duke of Clarence. Page 702
The earl of Warwick croſſes into England, and draws together 60000 men. ib.
Edward is forced to make his eſcape to Holland. p. 703
The Queen his conſort retires to Weſtminſter. ib.
Henry VI, is taken out of priſon, and reſtored to the throne. ib.

HENRY VI re-eſtabliſhed.

Montague is made preſident of the North. ib.
The parliament declares Edward a traitor, and an uſurper. ib.
An extraordinary act to ſettle the ſucceſſion. ib.
The duke of Clarence, and earl of Warwick, declared governors of the kingdom; the earl of Richmond preſented to the King, Henry's pretended prophecy. p. 704
Perplexity of the duke of Burgundy, with regard to Edward. ib.
Lewis XI makes war upon the duke of Burgundy. p. 705
Edward's ſpeech to the duke of Burgundy. ib.
The duke reſolves to aſſiſt him ſecretly. ib.
March. Edward embarks for England. ib.
1471. Warwick made high admiral. Edward lands at Ravenſpur. He is received with indifference, and only takes the title of duke of York. He marches to York. p. 706
The people of York, oblige the magiſtrates to receive him. p. 707
He marches towards London; Montague lets him paſs; the earl of Warwick encamps near Coventry, waiting the coming of the duke of Clarence. ib.
The duke of Clarence betrays the earl of Warwick, and joins the King his brother. ib.
They march to London, leaving behind the earl of Warwick. ib.
Edward is received in London, and ſends Henry VI to the Tower. p. 708

EDWARD IV re-eſtabliſhed.

Battle of Barnet won by Edward, in which the earls of Warwick and Montague are ſlain; Exeter wounded; Oxford and Somerſet eſcape. Edward returns to London. ib. 709
Queen Margaret arrives from France, a few days after the battle; the Prince with her. p. 709
She withdraws to an azyle. ib.
The duke of Somerſet perſuades her to continue the war. ib.
Partizans of the houſe of Lancaſter raiſe troops, and place the Prince of Wales at their head. ib.
Edward marches againſt them. p. 710
Battle of Tewſkbury, won by Edward. ib.
The Queen, Prince, and duke of Somerſet, are taken priſoners. p. 711
The Prince of Wales is killed in cool blood, the duke of Somerſet, and grand prior of St. John's, beheaded. ib.
The Queen is ſent to the Tower. ib.
Rebellion of the baſtard Falconbridge. ib.
He is beheaded. ib.
June. Henry VI murder'd in the Tower. p. 712
The earls of Pembroke and Richmond embark for France; they fall into the power of the duke of Bretagne, who afterwards detains them. ib.
Edward gets the lords to take the oath to his ſon; ſix biſhops pardoned. ib.
The truce with Bretagne confirmed. p. 713
Truce of eight months with France. ib.
1472. A negociation with the Hanſe towns. ib.
Alliance with Portugal. ib.
The earl of Oxford's rebellion; he is ſent priſoner to Hammes, and the archbiſhop of York to Guiſnes. Duke of Exeter's death. Page 713 AN' 1472.
Edward perſecutes the Lancaſtrians, and requires the duke of Bretagne to deliver him up the earl of Richmond, but is refuſed. p. 714
Truce with Scotland. Gruthuyſe made earl of Wincheſter. ib.
Affairs between Lewis XI and the duke of Burgundy. ib. 1473.
Secret negociations between Edward, and the duke of Burgundy. p. 715
Agreement with Portugal. Confirmation of the truce with Scotland. ib.
Edward's alliance with the King of Denmark. ib.
A treaty between Edward, and the duke of Burgundy, againſt Lewis XI. ib. 1474.
Edward prepares for war, and makes ſeveral alliances. p. 716
A marriage concluded between the Prince of Scotland and Cecily, Edward's daughter. ib.
A benevolence granted the King by the ſubjects. ib. 1475.
Edward goes into France at the head of an army, and declares war againſt Lewis XI. ib. 717
The duke of Burgundy fails joining him; they are deceived by the conſtable de St. Pol. p. 717
Edward concludes a peace with France. p. 718 Aug. 29.
A conference between Edward and Lewis. ib.
Lewis gives penſions to the Engliſh. The conſtable beheaded. p. 719
Edward again requires the duke of Bretagne to give him up the earl of Richmond; he is delivered to the embaſſadors. The duke repents, and takes him out of their hands. ib. 1476.
Alliance with Denmark. ib.
Duke of Burgundy defeated at Grandſon, and at Morat p. 720
He is defeated and ſlain at the battle of Nanci. ib. Jan. 5.
Lewis XI, attacks Maria ducheſs of Burgundy, and Edward refuſes to give her aſſiſtance. ib. 1477.
Maria marries the archduke Maximilian. p. 721
Edward drowns his brother the duke of Clarence, in a but of Malmſey. ib. 722 1478.
Lewis amuſes, and deceives Edward. p. 722
Edward creates his eldeſt ſon Prince of Wales, his youngeſt duke of York. He gives himſelf up to his pleaſures. ib.
Embaſſy from Lewis, he retards the Dauphin's marriage with Elizabeth. ib.
He makes uſe of illegal methods to raiſe money. p. 723 1479.
Negociation with Denmark. ib.
Lewis continues to amuſe him. ib.
A treaty between Lewis and Edward, by which Lewis obliges himſelf, and ſucceſſors, to pay 50000 crowns every year. ib.
He ſtirs up the Scots to a war againſt Edward. ib.
Edward is undeceived, and prepares for the war; he ſends an embaſſy to Caſtile. Treaty with Denmark; promiſes aid to Maximilian; he concludes the marriage of his daughter with Philip. ib. 1480.
Embaſſy to France; a fleet to aid Maximilian; the Scots prepare for war; Edward prepares for his defenſe; the Scots enter England, and carry off ſome booty; alliance with Portugal; the duke of Albany eſcapes into England. p. 724 1481.
The duke of Albany makes a treaty with Edward. ib. 1482.
The duke of Gloceſter, marches into Scotland, and takes Berwick. ib.
James III, is deſerted by his ſubjects; the peace is concluded with Edward. p. 725
James intends to free himſelf from his brother the duke of Albany, who renews his treaty with Edward; goes into France, and is there killed. ib. 1483.
Death of the ducheſs of Burgundy, March 1481. ib.

An' 1483. The Dauphin's marriage with Margaret of Auſtria, daughter of the ducheſs of Burgundy. Page 725
Edward prepares to make war againſt Lewis. p. 726
April 9. Death of Edward IV. ib.

EDWARD V.

Edward V, ſon of Edward IV, is proclaimed. p. 727
State of the court before Edward's death. p. 728
Richard duke of Gloceſter, the King's uncle, his artifices to ſeize on the government during the minority of Edward V. p. 729
Buckingham and Haſtings ſtir up Gloceſter to ſeize the King's perſon. The duke of Gloceſter's ſpeech to his friends; their reſult. ib.
Rivers goes for London with the King unguarded; the duke of Gloceſter meets them; they perſuade Rivers to go with them to Northampton, and afterwards arreſt him. p. 730
Richard makes himſelf maſter of the King's perſon, and ſends Richard Grey, the Queen's ſon, a priſoner to Pontefract. p. 731
The Queen takes refuge at Weſtminiſter. ib.
The King brought to London. ib.
The duke of Gloceſter gets himſelf proclaimed protector. p. 732
He artfully gets Richard duke of York, out of the Queen's hands; he lodges the King and Duke in the Tower. p. 733
He wins the duke of Buckingham unto his intereſt. ib.
He cauſes the priſoners in Pontefract to be beheaded. p. 734
He cauſes a report to be ſpread, that the King and his brother are baſtards. ib.
He indeavors to corrupt the lord Haſtings; but not being able to ſucceed, he cauſes him, upon a falſe pretence, to be arreſted, and gets him beheaded. ib. 735
He impriſons the lord Stanley, archbiſhop of York, and biſhop of Ely. p. 735
The priſoners at Pontefract caſtle executed. ib.
Jane Shore Edward IV miſtreſs, is condemned to do public penance. p. 736
The protector puſhes on his projects to ſeize upon the crown. Shaw's ſermon at St. Paul's. ib.
He aſſembles a council at London, and gets himſelf proclaimed King, by ſuborned people. p. 737
The duke of Buckingham goes to offer him the crown. ib.
The protector at firſt refuſes, but afterwards accepts it. ib.

RICHARD III.

June. 22. Richard III, is proclaimed King. ib.
The priſoners are ſet at liberty; the biſhop of Lincoln made chancellor, and John Howard duke of Norfolk. ib.
Doctor Morton biſhop of Ely, is given in cuſtody to the duke of Buckingham. ib.
July. 6. Coronation of the King and Queen. p. 739
Richard ſends embaſſadors to Caſtile and France. ib.
He falls out with the duke of Buckingham. p. 740
He gets his nephews King Edward V, and the duke of York murdered; their bones found in the reign of Charles II. ib.
Auguſt 29. He is crown'd in York. He creates his ſon Prince of Wales. ib.
He renews the alliance with Caſtile. ib.
Death of Lewis XI, Charles VIII ſucceeds him. ib.
The duke of Buckingham, and the biſhop of Ely, conſpire againſt the King. They agree to place the earl of Richmond on the throne. ib. 741
The biſhop of Ely flies into Flanders. p. 742
The duke of Richmond's mother is informed of the plot. ib.
The Queen dowager of Edward IV ingages in the conſpiracy, and promiſes her daughter in marriage to the earl of Richmond. Page 743
The earl of Richmond is determined to acquaint the duke of Bretagne with his deſign, who promiſes to aſſiſt him. ib.
Richard has ſome intimations of the conſpiracy; and ſuſpects the duke of Buckingham. ib.
Richard indeavors to intice the duke of Buckingham to court, but cannot ſucceed. p. 744
The duke takes up arms, to join the earl of Richmond in the Weſt. ib.
An extraordinary overflowing of the Severn hinders his croſſing that river. ib.
He is taken and beheaded. ib.
The earl of Richmond arrives upon the coaſts, and finding himſelf diſcovered, goes back to Bretagne. ib. 745
Several male-contents go over to him. p. 745
Several conſpirators are put to death. ib.
The parliament proclaims the children of Edward IV, baſtards. ib.
An act of attainder againſt the earl of Richmond. ib.
Lord Stanley made high conſtable. ib.
Richard receives new intelligence of the conſpiracy, and makes ſeveral alliances. ib.
He ſecures Caſtile and Portugal; and alſo Maximilian, and ſends embaſſadors to France. p. 746
A truce with the duke of Bretagne. ib.
Richard's ſecret negociation with Peter Landais favorite to the duke of Bretagne, to have the earl of Richmond put into his power. ib.
Truce with Scotland. ib.
Death of the Prince of Wales, Richard's ſon. ib.
Earl of Lincoln declared heir to the crown. ib.
The earl of Richmond is apprized of Landais's deſign, and luckily makes his eſcape into France. p. 747
Richard forms the project to marry Elizabeth his niece, daughter of Edward IV. ib.
The Queen dowager gives him up her daughters. ib.
He gets the Queen his conſort poiſon'd. p. 748
Elizabeth of York refuſes to marry the King her uncle. ib.
Several male-contents go over to the earl of Richmond. Siege and taking of Hammes. ib.
Richard imprudently unmans his fleet. ib.
Charles VIII, determines to give ſome aid to the earl of Richmond. ib. 1485.
The earl of Richmond lands at Milford Haven in Wales. p. 749
He croſſes the Severn at Shrewſbury. ib.
He is join'd by ſir Rice ap Thomas, and received joyfully at Shrewſbury. ib.
Battle of Boſworth, where Richard III is ſlain. Auguſt 12: p. 750, 751
His crown being found, the lord Stanley places it on the earl of Richmond's head. ib.
The character of Richard III. ib.

HENRY VII.

The earl of Richmond is proclaimed King by his army. p. 754
He firſt heſitates at, but afterwards takes the title of King. ib.
He confines the earl of Warwick, ſon of the duke of Clarence, in the Tower. p. 755
He arrives at London, and is well receiv'd. ib. Auguſt 19:
The ſweating-ſickneſs in London. p. 756
Several peers created; earl of Oxford made governor of the Tower. ib.
Truce with France. ib.
Henry VII, gets himſelf crowned before the aſſembling of the parliament. Oct. 30: ib.
He eſtabliſhes a guard for his perſon of 50 archers. ib.
The parliament aſſembles. ib. Nov. 7.
An act in favor of Henry VII, and his poſterity. p. 757
Another againſt Richard III. ib.

Amneſty

AN' 1485. Amneſty. Creation of peers. Page 757
Morton, Fox, and Urſwick privy counſellors, miniſters to the King. p. 758
The affairs of Bretagne. ib.
The affairs of France. ib.
The affairs of the Netherlands. p. 759
The affairs of Spain. ib.
The affairs of Scotland. p. 760
Jan. 18 1486. Henry marries Elizabeth, the eldeſt daughter of Edward IV. ib.
He mortally hates the houſe of York, and behaves with a great deal of indifference towards the Queen. ib.
A truce of three years with France. ib.
Diſpenſation to authorize the King's marriage. ib.
March 27. A bull, to confirm the act of eſtabliſhment on the ſucceſſion. ib.
The King's journey to York. p. 761
Rebellion of the lord Lovel, and of the two Staffords. ib.
The King is in danger in York; the duke of Bedford diſperſes the rebels. p. 762
The lord Lovel makes off, and one of the Staffords is put to death. ib.
A truce with Scotland. ib.
Morton, biſhop of Ely is elected archbiſhop of Canterbury. ib.
Truce prolonged with Bretagne. ib.
Sep. 20. Birth of Arthur the King's ſon. ib.
The people complain of the King's hatred to the houſe of York. ib.
A prieſt's project to make Lambert Simnel, a baker's ſon, paſs for the earl of Warwick. p. 763
The prieſt and Simnel go into Ireland. ib.
Simnel is there proclaimed King. ib.
Henry ſhuts up the Queen his mother-in-law in a monaſtery, and takes away her eſtates and effects. p. 764
She dies in confinement. ib.
He expoſes in public the earl of Warwick. ib.
The earl of Lincoln, and the ducheſs dowager of Burgundy reſolve to aſſiſt Simnel. p. 765
1487. The affairs between the King of France, and the duke of Bretagne. ib.
May. The earl of Lincoln arrives in Ireland. p. 766
Simnel is crown'd in Ireland. ib.
He croſſes into England with an army. ib.
Henry marches againſt him. ib.
June 6. Battle of Stoke. Simnel is taken; the earl of Lincoln ſlain. ib. 767
The King makes Simnel a turnſpit in his kitchen, and afterwards his faulkener. ib.
His accomplices are puniſhed by fines. ib.
The Pope's bull. ib.
Another bull concerning aziles. ib.
Nov. 25. The Queen is crown'd. p. 768
Henry's embaſſy to the Pope. ib.
Commotions in Scotland. ib.
Nov. 28. Henry's negociations, and treaty with the King of Scotland. Several marriages agreed on. ib.
The affairs of the Netherlands. p. 769
Deſigns of Charles the eighth upon Bretagne. His progreſs; his negociations with Henry VII. Extraordinary conduct of Henry. ib.
The duke of Bretagne promiſes his daughter in marriage to the King of the Romans. p. 771
The parliament grants money to the King, for ſupporting the duke of Bretagne. The King keeps the money, and is ſatisfied to negociate with France. ib.
1488. Henry's ſtrange conduct with regard to Bretagne, occaſion'd by his extream avarice. p. 772
Battle of St. Aubin du Cormier, where the duke of Bretagne's army is defeated, and the duke of Orleans taken priſoner. ib.
John a Chamber's rebellion in the North of England, and the puniſhment of the rebels. p. 773
Treaty of Verger, between the French King, and the duke of Bretagne, very advantageous to Charles VIII. Page 774 AN' 1488.
Death of the duke of Bretagne; and his daughter ſucceeds him. ib. Sept. 9.
Henry pretends to ſuccor the ducheſs, and takes falſe meaſures. ib.
The affairs of Scotland. ib.
Death of James III, James IV his ſon ſucceeds him. ib.
The treaty of Redon, between Henry, and the ducheſs of Bretagne; by which Henry's only view is to get money from the ducheſs. ib. 775 Feb. 10. 1489.
Ann marries Maximilian by proxy. p. 776
Henry's negociations with France and Bretagne. p. 777 1490.
The Flemings rebel. ib.
Henry's meaſures to intimidate Charles. 778
Henry ſuffers himſelf to be amuſed by France. ib.
The ducheſs, in vain, importunes him to aſſiſt her. ib.
Henry borrows money of his ſubjects, on pretenſe of the war of Bretagne. p. 779 Decem. 16.
Charles VIII, wins over the ducheſs's counſellors, and concludes his marriage with her. p. 780 1491.
Henry prepares to make war upon France. ib.
Affairs in Scotland; two Scots bargain to deliver up the King to Henry. ib.
He acquaints the parliament with his deſign to make war upon France, who grant him ſupplies. p. 781 1492.
He acts in concert with the French King, concerning the pretended war. ib.
Birth of Henry the King's ſecond ſon. ib.
Henry imbarks for France with an army. p. 782
He concludes a peace with France, and exacts money from Charles VIII. ib.
He conſults his generals, who adviſe him to a peace. ib.
Treaty of Eſtaples. p. 783 Octob. 6.
Henry arrives at London. Truce with Scotland. p. 784 Decem. 17.
The firſt voyage of Chriſtopher Columbus, in the month of Auguſt 1492. ib.
The ducheſs of Burgundy inſtructs Perkin Warbeck to act the perſon of the duke of York, brother to Edward V. ib. 1493.
She ſends him into Portugal, and then into Ireland. p. 785
Charles VIII ſends for him to Paris, and acknowleges him for duke of York before the treaty of Eſtaples. ib.
Charles VIII ſends away Perkin after he had concluded the treaty of peace with Henry. ib.
Perkin goes to the ducheſs of Burgundy, who acknowleges him her nephew. ib.
Henry ſends a garter to the duke of Calabria. ib.
Henry concludes a perpetual peace with Ferdinand, and Iſabella. p. 786 March 8.
The marriage of Arthur Prince of Wales, with Catherine of Arragon is concluded. ib.
A conſpiracy againſt Henry, contrived by William Stanley, lord chamberlain, and others. ib.
Clifford and Barley, two of the conſpirators goes to Perkin in France, and by his letters, confirms the report that the duke of York is alive. ib.
Henry cauſes an inquiry to be made into the death of the duke of York, but his witneſſes are not believed. ib.
He ſends ſpies into Flanders, by whoſe means he is informed of all the actions of Perkin Warbeck. ib.
A ſeven years truce with Scotland. ib.
Maximilian I, becomes Emperor. p. 787 Auguſt.
Morton, archbiſhop of Canterbury is made a cardinal. ib.

Henry

An' 1493. Henry wins over Clifford to his intereſt, who diſcovers to him the ſecrets of the ducheſs of Burgundy, and of Perkin Warbeck. Page 787
Several conſpirators put to death. ib.
1494. Henry the King's ſon made governor of Ireland. ib.
A famous parliament in Ireland. p. 788
Henry extorts money of his ſubjects, on falſe accuſations. ib.
The lord chamberlain is beheaded. ib.
Libels on the King, for which ſome of the authors are put to death. p. 789
Henry, the King's ſon, is created duke of York. ib.
Charles VIII, undertakes the conqueſt of the kingdom of Naples; abſtract of the ſucceſſion of Naples. ib.
Affairs of Milan. ib.
1495. Perkin makes an attempt on the coaſts of Kent, but does not ſucceed. p. 790
The duke of York made governor of the North. ib.
Ducheſs of York's death. ib.
Octob. 13. The parliament aſſembles and makes a ſtatute, by which no man is to be inquired after for having adhered to a King actually on the throne. p. 791
Warbeck goes into Ireland. ib.
Afterwards into Scotland, where James IV marries him to one of his relations. ib.
Feb. 24. A treaty between England, and the Netherlands.
1496. p. 792
The King of Scots, and Warbeck enter England. ib.
October. Marriage of the archduke Philip with Juana of Arragon. p. 793
James ravages Northumberland. ib.
Embaſſy to Spain. ib.
1497. An inſurrection in Cornwal. ib.
The parliament meets. ib.
The rebels march towards London; lord Audley heads them. p. 794
June 22. Battle of Blackheath, where the rebels are defeated. ib.
Lord Audley, and two others executed. ib.
Henry ratifies the agreements of Arthur's marriage. p. 795
He makes a peace with Scotland, and James IV turns off Warbeck. ib.
Seven years truce between Scotland and England. ib.
Propoſal of marriage between Margaret and the Scots King. ib.
April 6. Death of Charles VIII King of France; Lewis XII
1498. ſucceeds him. p. 796
Another inſurrection in Cornwal ib.
Perkin Warbeck places himſelf at the head of the rebels. ib.
He takes upon him the title of King, and beſieges Exeter. ib.
The King ſends troops againſt him. He takes ſanctuary. Henry ſeizes his wife. ib.
He ſurrenders himſelf to the King, on conditions to have his life ſpared. p. 797
He is ſent to the Tower. ib.
The palace of Shene is burned, and rebuilt under the name of Richmond. ib.
1499. Death of Iſabella Queen of Portugal; Miguel her ſon, heir of Spain. ib.
A quarrel between the Engliſh and Scots at Norham. ib.
The negociations for a marriage between Margaret, Henry's daughter, and the King of Scotland. p. 798
Perkin eſcapes out of the Tower; he is retaken; the King grants him a pardon. ib.
A plot diſcovered of the earl of Warwick, and Perkin Warbeck, to eſcape out of the Tower. ib.
One pretending to be earl of Warwick hanged. ib.
Perkin is hanged, and the earl of Warwick is beheaded. ib.
The peace of Eſtaples confirmed by the ſtates of France. p. 799
Lewis XII reduces the duchy of Milan. Page 799
An intended cruſade, to no effect. ib.
Henry choſen protector of the order of St. John. ib.
An interview between Henry, and Philip the archduke. A plague in England. ib.
Death of Prince Michael of Portugal. Charles ſon of Philip becomes preſumptive heir to Ferdinand and Iſabella. ib. p. 800
A bull for the diſpenſation of Margaret the King's daughter's marriage with the King of Scotland. ib.
Death of cardinal Morton. ib.
Lewis XII and Ferdinand, divide the kingdom of Naples. ib.
The King of Naples ſurrenders himſelf to Lewis. ib.
The marriage of Arthur Prince of Wales, with Catherine of Arragon is conſummated. p. 801
The laſt agreements for the marriage of the Princeſs Margaret, with the King of Scotland. ib.
Two treaties between England and Scotland. ib.
Death of Prince Arthur. ib.
Henry his brother is created Prince of Wales. ib.
Confirmation of the treaty between England and Scotland. ib.
A patent to diſcover new countries. ib.
Death of the Queen. ib.
Henry oppreſſes his ſubjects, by the means of Empſon and Dudley. p. 802
The earl of Suffolk withdraws into Flanders; his accomplices apprehended. p. 803
Articles of agreement between Henry and Ferdinand, for the marriage of Henry Prince of Wales, with Catherine of Arragon, his brother's widow. ib.
Pope Julius II's bull of diſpenſation for this marriage. ib.
Margaret the Queen goes to Scotland. p. 804
The French are driven out of the kingdom of Naples. ib.
The parliament aſſembles, and grants the King money for the marriage of the Queen of Scots. ib.
Diverſe acts advantageous to the King. ib.
He amaſſes great ſums. ib.
The deſign of canonizing Henry VI drops, on account of the great expenſes. ib.
The King's proclamation, in favor of his oppreſſed ſubjects. p. 805
Death of Iſabella Queen of Caſtile. ib.
Henry intends to marry the Queen dowager of Naples. ib.
Diſpute between Ferdinand, and the archduke Philip his ſon-in-law. Death of the duke of Saxony. ib.
Henry's alliance with the duke of Saxony. ib.
Philip and Juana ſet out for Spain. A ſtorm oblige them to land in England. Henry detains them in a civil manner; but he ingages Philip to deliver him up the earl of Suffolk, who is ſent to the Tower. p. 806
Henry's marriage with the ducheſs dowager of Savoy is concluded. ib.
Ferdinand retires to Arragon. p. 807
Death of Philp I King of Caſtile. ib.
Juana his Queen dowager loſes her ſenſes. ib.
Margaret of Auſtria, ducheſs dowager of Savoy, governs the Netherlands. ib.
A marriage agreed to between Mary, one of the King's daughters, and Charles Prince of Spain. ib.
Henry inceſſantly hoards up treaſure. ib.
Prince Charles's marriage with the Princeſs Mary, is ſolemnized by proxy. p. 808
Henry being troubled with ptiſick, thinks no more of his marriage. ib.
General Amneſty. ib.
Death of Henry VII. ib.
State of the church in the fifteenth century. p. 810 ad ult.

An' 1499. 1500. 1501. 1502. 1503. 1504. 1505. 1506. 1507. 1508. 1509.
July 28. December. Nov. 14. Jan. 24. April 2. Feb. 11. Jan. 29. Dec. 26. Nov. 26. March 20. Sept. 25. Decem. 21. April 22.

VOLUME the SECOND.

AN' 1509. April. HENRY VIII, at eighteen years of age, ſucceeded his father Henry VII. Page 3
Henry VII, is buried in his chapel in Weſtminſter-abby. p. 4
Lord Stafford ſent to the Tower. ib.
Ruthal made biſhop of Durham. ib.
Accuſations againſt Empſon and Dudley, miniſters to the late King. They are ſent to the Tower. ib.
The King reſolves to conſummate his marriage with Catharine of Arragon, notwithſtanding the oppoſition of Warham archbiſhop of Canterbury. p. 5, 6
June 24. Marriage and coronation of the King and Queen. p. 6 ditto 29. Death of the counteſs of Richmond, Henry VII's mother. ib.
Thomas Wolſey, introduced at court by Fox biſhop of Wincheſter. ib.
The King confirms the treaties made with Scotland, and with the Emperor. ib.
Bambridge, archbiſhop of York, embaſſador to Rome. ib.
State of Italy, and motives of the confederacy of Cambray, concluded the 10th of December 1509. p. 7, 8, 9
Battle of Agnadel, or of Gierradadda, after which the Venetians are ſpoiled of all their eſtates on the continent by the allies. p. 9
The Pope concludes a peace with the Venetians. p. 10
Jan. 21. The parliament aſſembles. ib.
1510. Empſon and Dudley condemned. ib.
Henry renews the alliance with Lewis XII. ib.
April 9. The Pope ſends him a conſecrated roſe. p. 11
Ferdinand King of Arragon quits the league. ib.
A treaty between Henry and Ferdinand, in which the former is dup'd. ib.
Begining of the riſe of Thomas Wolſey. ib.
Julius II, does his utmoſt to imbroil all Italy. He indeavors to quarrel with Lewis XII. p. 12
Ferdinand ſtrives to ingage Henry in the Pope's intereſts. ib.
Lewis XII, makes a league with the Emperor. ib.
1511. Mirandola taken by the Pope. p. 13
Henry enters into the league againſt France. ib.
Birth and death of Prince Herbert. Deſigns of Ferdinand. ib.
Miſunderſtanding between England and Scotland. p. 14
Bambridge made cardinal. ib.
Julius II, gives Modena to the Emperor. ib.
A council conven'd at Piſa by the Emperor and Lewis XII, againſt the Pope. p. 15
The French reduce Bolognia, and re-eſtabliſh the Bentivoglii. The Pope withdraws to Rome. ib.
The Pope convokes a council at Rome. p. 16
Opening of the council of Piſa. ib.
Octob. 4. A league concluded between the Pope, the King of Arragon, and Venice. p. 17 ditto 30. A more ſolemn opening of the council of Piſa. ib.
The Pope excommunicates all who adhere to the council of Piſa. ib.
The King of Navarre is of this number. p. 18
Ferdinand, on this pretence, propoſes to conquer Navarre. ib.
He ingages Henry to make war upon Lewis XII to conquer Guienne; but he makes uſe of Henry's troops to conquer Navarre. ib.
The King of Arragon's army, joins the Pope and Venetians. Page 19 AN' 1511.
The parliament grants the King a ſupply for the war againſt France. ib. 1512.
Dudley's ſon reſtored. ib.
Henry ſends an embaſſy to the Lateran council. Ferdinand reduces Navarre. p. 20
The marquis of Dorſet leads an army into Spain. ib.
Affairs of Italy. p. 21
Battle of Ravenna in Italy, won by Gaſton de Foix, who is ſlain in the fight. p. 22 April. 11.
Opening of the Lateran council. ib.
The Pope excommunicates Lewis XII. ib. May 3.
Tottering ſituation of the affairs of Lewis XII in Italy. ib.
His army returns into France, and abandons Milan. Congreſs of Mantoua between the allies. ib.
Another congreſs at Rome. p. 23
Sforza is put in poſſeſſion of Milan by the allies. ib.
Remarks on the year 1512. ib.
Henry re-ingages in the league, and is duped. ib.
James, King of Scotland, makes a league with Lewis XII. p. 24
Death of Julius II. p. 25
Ferdinand concludes a truce with France, and includes Henry without his participation. p. 26 Feb. 21. 1513.
League of Mecklin, in which Henry is deceived. p. 27
The French army is routed at Navarre by the Swiſs, and returns over the mountains. p. 28
Thomas Wolſey becomes firſt miniſter to Henry. ib.
A ſea fight, in which admiral Howard is ſlain. p. 29 April.
Henry's allies drop him, and he finds himſelf obliged alone to maintain the war. ib.
The earl of Suffolk is beheaded. ib.
Siege of Terouenne. ib. June. 17.
The Emperor bears arms in Henry's army as a voluntier. p. 30
The French defeated at Guinegaſte, or the battle of Spurs. ib. Auguſt.
The taking of Terouenne. ib. ditto 22.
Henry gives the place to the Emperor, who razes it. ib.
The ſiege and taking of Tournay. ib. Sept. 23.
Henry viſits Margaret of Auſtria. ib. Oct. 15.
A treaty concluded at Liſle between Henry, Margaret, and Charles of Auſtria. p. 31 ditto 24.
The King's return to London. ib.
Lewis XII, makes a peace with Leo X. ib.
The Pope exhorts Henry to a peace. ib.
Henry reſolves to make peace with France without the allies. p. 32
Quarrel between Henry, and James IV King of Scotland. ib.
He enters England; takes Norham. ib.
Battle of Flodden, in which the Scots King is ſlain. September. p. 33
Henry cauſes James's corpſe to be carried to London, and buried. ib.
The intereſts and views of the European Princes in the begining of 1514. ib. Jan. 3. 1514.
Margaret of Clarence counteſs of Saliſbury. p. 35
The parliament aſſembles. ib.
Earl of Surrey created duke of Norfolk. Charles Brandon duke of Suffolk. ib.
Thomas Wolſey is conſecrated biſhop of Lincoln, and made adminiſtrator of the ſee of Tournay. ib.
Leo X ſends the King a conſecrated ſword and hat. ib.
Negociations of peace between Henry and Lewis XII. ib.

An' 1514. The King's letter to Wolſey about the peace. Embaſſadors from France. Page 36
Aug. 7. A peace is concluded by three ſeveral treaties. p. 37
Princeſs Mary proteſts againſt her contract with Charles of Auſtria. ib.
July 24. Death of cardinal Bambridge. p. 38
Thomas Wolſey is elected archbiſhop of York. ib.
Oct. 9. Lewis XII conſummates his marriage with Mary, Henry's ſiſter. ib.
Affairs of Scotland. The Queen regent marries the earl of Angus. p. 39
She loſes the regency. The duke of Albany is called from France to be regent. ib.
Jan. 1. Death of Lewis XII. Francis I ſucceeds him. ib.
1515. The Queen dowager of Lewis XII, marries the the earl of Suffolk. ib.
Parliamentary ſtatutes. p. 40
Alliance between France and England renewed. ib.
Francis I, prepares to recover Milan. ib.
Affairs of Italy. Francis gains the battle of Marignano. p. 41
Genoua ſubjected to France. ib.
Ferdinand creates troubles to Francis I. ib.
Henry engaged in new troubles. ib.
Wolſey fearing to loſe the adminiſtration of the biſhoprick of Tournay, ingages Henry in a new war againſt France. p. 42
Wolſey is made a cardinal by Leo X. p. 43
He ſo manages, that Henry ſecretly aſſiſts the Emperor againſt Francis I. ib.
The parliament meet; the clergy refuſe a ſubſidy to the Pope. ib.
Decem. 22. Wolſey is made lord chancellor. p. 44
The King loads him with favors. ib.
Affairs of Scotland. ib.
February. Death of Ferdinand King of Arragon. p. 45
1516. Charles of Auſtria ſucceeds him. ib.
Affairs of Spain. ib.
ditto. 18. Birth of Mary Henry's daughter. ib.
The Emperor's expedition againſt Milan. ib.
Maximilian feigns to make over the Empire to Henry. p. 46
Auguſt 26. Treaty of Noyon between Francis I, and Charles of Auſtria. ib.
Intereſts of the Princes. ib.
Oct. 29. A defenſive league made at London againſt France. p. 47
Henry's views with regard to Scotland; he in vain indeavors to take the regency from the duke of Albany. Hume's rebellion. ib.
A truce with Scotland. p. 48
Indeavors of the Lateran council to reform the Calendar. ib.
1517. The Pope uſes his utmoſt indeavors to ingage the Chriſtian Princes in a croiſade againſt the Turks. ib.
Charles arrives in Spain, and diſcards cardinal Ximenes. The Pope levies a tenth upon the Engliſh clergy. ib.
A conſpiracy againſt the Pope. ib.
Sale of indulgences under pretence of a croiſade. p. 49
Martin Luther preaches againſt the indulgences. ib.
The Pope demands money of Henry, who refuſes him. ib.
Inſurrection at London. p. 50
The ſweating-ſickneſs in London. ib.
Affairs of Scotland. ib.
1518. Leo X continues to urge a croiſade. ib.
Negociations for the giving up Tournay. ib.
Embaſſy from Francis to Henry. p. 51
Leo X ſends the cardinal Campejo into England, to ſollicit the croiſade. Wolſey pretends to join in the legation. ib.
Offenſive league between ſeveral princes againſt the Turks. p. 52
Several treaties between Henry VIII, and Francis I, of the reſtitution of Tournay. p. 53
Mary, Henry's daughter, betroth'd by proxy to Francis the Dauphin. Page 53 An' 1518. Dec. 16.
Death of the Emperor Maximilian I. ib. Jan. 12,
Francis I, pretends to the Empire; as alſo Charles. ib. 1519.
Henry VIII, alſo aſpires to the Empire. ib.
Charles, King of Spain is elected. p. 54
Diſputes between Charles and Francis. ib.
They both indeavor to gain cardinal Wolſey, that they may ingage Henry in their intereſts. ib.
Cardinal Wolſey's elevation. p. 55
He aſpires to the Holy-ſee, depending on the Emperor's promiſes. p. 56
The Emperor and King of France equally court him; regulates the interview between Francis and Henry. ib. 1520. March 12.
Mexico and new Spain diſcover'd. ib.
Henry ſets out for the interview. The Emperor unexpectedly arrives at Dover. He promiſes Wolſey to make him Pope. He goes to Flanders. p. 57
Interview between Francis I, and Henry. Treaty between them. ib. June 6.
Charles V is crowned Emperor. p. 58 Oct. 21.
The Pope excommunicates Luther. ib.
Commotions in Scotland. ib.
Intereſts of the ſeveral Princes. ib. 59, 60 1521.
Francis I, cauſes Leſparre to attack Navarre, who reduces it, and is afterwards driven out. p. 60
Francis ſtirs up Robert de la Marc againſt the Emperor. ib.
Charles requires Henry to aſſiſt him by virtue of the league of London. ib.
Henry ſo manages, that Francis I recalls Robert de la Marc. ib. 61
The Pope's league with the Emperor. p. 61
War in Italy. ib.
Death of Leo X. p. 62 Decem. 1.
War in the Low-countries, between Charles and Francis. Henry offers his mediation, which is accepted. ib.
Congreſs of Calais for a peace. ib.
Henry and Wolſey act unfairly againſt France. p. 63
Continuation of the campain in Flanders. ib.
Campain in Navarre. ib.
Congreſs of Calais without effect. ib.
Treaty between Henry and the Emperor againſt France. Mary the King's daughter is promiſed to the Emperor. p. 64
The duke of Buckingham beheaded. ib.
Abbey of St. Albans given to Wolſey. ib.
Affairs of Scotland. p. 65
Progreſs of the Reformation in Germany. ib.
Henry writes againſt Luther, and preſents it to the Pope, who gives him the title of DEFENDER OF THE FAITH. p. 66
Henry indeavors to prevail on the Scots parliament, to turn out the duke of Albany. ib. p. 67 1522.
A truce between England and Scotland. ib.
The duke of Albany returns to France. ib.
Henry declares war againſt France. ib.
He borrows an exorbitant ſum from his ſubjects. ib.
Great murmurs againſt Wolſey. p. 68
Wolſey is very active to get himſelf elected Pope, but diſappointed. ib.
Adrian VI is elected. ib.
The Emperor takes England in his way to Spain; he is honorably received and inſtalled knight of garter. ib. 69
Treaty between the Emperor and Henry, concerning the war againſt France, and on Charles's with the Princeſs Mary. He makes the earl of Surrey admiral of his fleet. p. 69
Affairs of Italy, and ſucceſs of the war in that country, and in Picardy. p. 70

Wolſey

AN' 1523. Wolsey extorts a subsidy from the clergy. He is mortified by the commons. Page 70
Statute, which authorizes the King to repeal attainders. p. 71
Favors shewn cardinal Wolsey, by Adrian VI. ib.
Christiern King of Denmark, driven out of his dominions, arrives in England. Henry renews the alliance with him. ib.
Projects of the Emperor and Henry against France, grounded on the discontent of the constable de Bourbon. ib.
The constable sides with the Emperor and Henry. p. 72
Adrian VI, enters into the league against France. ib.
Francis I, sets out for Italy, but does not proceed, being informed of the constable's designs. ib.
The constable escapes into Germany. p. 73
Success of the war of 1523, in four several quarters; Italy, Bern, Champagne and Picardy. ib.
September. Death of Adrian VI. p. 74
Wolsey's indeavors to come to the Papal dignity; recital of what passed in the conclave. ib.
Nov. 29. Clement VII elected. p. 75
The new Pope grants Wolsey the legation for life. ib.
Wolsey's oppression to exact the advancing a subsidy. ib.
He forms a project to establish two colleges, and to abolish several little monasteries, and apply the revenues to the maintenance of his two colleges. ib.
Henry's designs against Scotland. p. 76
He invades Scotland; he offers his daughter in marriage to the King his nephew; opposition of the contrary party; the English army retire; the duke goes to Scotland, and marches with an army to the borders. ib.
The earl of Surrey approaches; the regent retires. p. 77
Progress of the Reformation. ib.
Luther answers Henry VIII's book. ib.
1524. Affairs of Italy. ib.
The French army returns over the Alps, and abandon the country of Milan. ib.
July. The duke of Bourbon enters Provence, and lays siege to Marseilles. Francis hastens to its relief. ib. p. 78
He compels Bourbon to break up the siege; who returns into Italy by another rout. ib.
The two armies arrive on the same day. Henry forsakes the Emperor. ib.
Francis reduces Milan, and lays siege to Pavia. ib.
Affairs of Scotland. End of the regency of the duke of Albany. The earl of Angus declared regent. p. 79
A truce between England and Scotland. ib.
The Pope suppresses monasteries for the cardinal's colleges; cardinal Campejo made bishop of Salisbury. ib.
Feb. 24. Battle of Pavia, where Francis I is taken prisoner. ib
1525. The Emperor becomes formidable to all Europe; the Venetians propose a league against him; he offers terms for Francis's liberty, which he rejects. p. 80
June. He is carried into Spain, and shut up in Madrid castle. p. 81
Efforts of the Venetians to make a league against the Emperor. p. 82
Sforza is driven out of Milan. ib.
Continuation of the affairs of Italy. ib. 83
Henry resolves to support France; he sends embassadors to Spain, with unreasonable demands; the Emperor's answer in general terms. p. 84
Cardinal Wolsey undertakes to raise money without the authority of parliament; an insurrection in the country. The King disapproves the procedure, but demands a benevolence. p. 85
The King is upon the point of disgracing the cardinal, who finds means to appease him. The King's letter to him. Page 85 AN' 1525.
The cardinal removes from court those whom he mistrusts; the King restores him to his favor. Henry the King's natural son made duke of Richmond. p. 86
Negociation with the French embassadors. ib.
Henry's generosity towards the prisoner King. ib.
Treaty of Moore concluded with the regent of France. ib. Aug. 30.
The regent's grant to Wolsey. p. 87
Henry calls home his embassdors from Spain. ib.
Affairs of Scotland. Truce prolonged. ib.
Treaty of Madrid for the liberty of Francis I. p. 88 1526. Jan. 14.
Francis I, arrives in France. p. 89 March 17.
He ratifies the treaty of Moore. ib.
He refuses to ratify the treaty of Madrid, and makes a league against the Emperor. ib.
Affairs of Italy; the Pope and allies make war upon the Emperor. ib.
Francis I, deceives the Pope and the Venetians. ib.
Affairs in Italy. p. 90
Clement VII, strenuously indeavors to ingage Henry in the league. p. 91
Francis and Henry agree to leave the Pope and Venetians to decide the war. Battle of Mohatz in Hungary. ib.
Affairs of Scotland. ib.
The Pope's negociations with the viceroy of Naples. ib.
Continuation of affairs of Italy. p. 92 1527.
The duke de Bourbon marches to Rome. He makes an assault, in which he is slain. ib. p. 93 May 6.
Rome is taken and sack'd. ib.
The Pope shuts himself up in the castle of St. Angelo, where he capitulates. He remains prisoner. ib. June 6.
A treaty between Henry and Francis before the Pope's confinement, April 30. ib. p. 94
An alteration in the treaty, on account of the Pope's confinement, May 29. ib.
Negociations for a peace between the Emperor and Francis I. ib.
Francis's conference with Wolsey; three new treaties. p. 95
Wolsey returns for England. Henry's demands on the Emperor. p. 97
Affairs of Italy. ib.
Francis and Henry, sends each other their orders of Knights of St. Michael, and the Garter. ib.
Letter to Henry from the Pope, and imprisoned cardinals. p. 98
Charles attempts to set Francis and Henry at variance; he corrupts Wolsey. ib.
A treaty for the Pope's liberty. p. 99
The Pope escapes out of prison. ib. Decem. 9.
Begining of Henry's divorce. ib.
Continuation of the affair of the divorce. p. 100, 101, 102
Knight is sent to Rome to require the King's being divorced from Catherine of Arragon; the Pope being then confined in the castle St. Angelo. p. 103 July.
The Pope promises every thing, but in the end, his own private interest induces him to raise difficulties to the fulfilling those promises. ib.
He only indeavors to gain time. ib.
Francis and Henry, declare war against the Emperor. p. 104 1528.
On the Emperor's reproaching Francis, with not having accepted his proposition of deciding their quarrel by a single combat, Francis sends him a challenge. ib. March 27.
The affair is terminated without a combat. ib.
Cardinal Wolsey's assurance in disowning the King's

An' 1528. King's herald. He is upon the point of being disgraced. Page 105
The people murmur on account of the war. The cardinal acts with a great deal of haughtineſs. ib.
Succeſs of the war in Naples. Siege of Naples. Death of Lautrec. The French army is intirely loſt. ib. 106.
Continuation of the affair of the divorce. p. 106
Clement VII continues to amuſe the King. ib.
Gardiner and Fox are ſent to Rome, to obtain other bulls. ib.
The Pope makes uſe of diverſe ſtratagems to gain time. ib.
Wolſey and Campejo, are named legates to try the affair of divorce. p. 107
Campejo retards his journey to England on ſeveral pretenſes. ib.
The Imperialiſts produce a forged brief to retard the affair. Campejo exhorts Henry to keep Catherine, and perſuades Catherine to deſiſt from her marriage. ib.
Campejo's artifices to gain time. p. 108
Clement VII, reſolving to be reconciled to the Emperor, makes uſe of the like artifices at Rome, as to the divorce. ib.
Expedients propoſed by Henry. ib.
Several little monaſteries ſuppreſs'd, and their revenues apply'd to the maintaining two colleges belonging to cardinal Wolſey. p. 109
James V, King of Scotland, takes upon him the government before his majority. ib.
Decem. 14. Truce of five years between England and Scotland. ib.
1529. The Pope's ſickneſs. ib.
Cardinal Wolſey has always an eye to the Papal dignity. The Pope recovers. ib. 110
Clement VII, by ſeveral artifices, retards the divorce. p. 110
He gives the biſhopric of Wincheſter to cardinal Wolſey. ib.
The legates begin to proceed on the divorce. p. 111
Artifices of Campejo to ſpin out the affair. ib.
Proceedings in the proceſs. ib.
The Queen's appeal. ib.
An accommodation between the Pope and Emperor. ib.
The Pope diſpatches a courier to London, to bring before him the affair of the divorce. p. 112
Campejo's delays. ib.
He adjourns the court till October, on account of the vacations. ib.
The bull of avocation arrives in London, and the King is cited to appear before the Pope. Remark on Wolſey's behavior. ib.
Thomas Cranmer's advice to the King, to conſult the univerſities. p. 113
The cardinal Campejo returns to Rome. ib.
Oct. 9. Cardinal Wolſey is impeached, of having violated the ſtatute Præmunire. ib.
He is out-law'd, and an inventory of his goods and chattels is made. ib.
His cauſe is brought before the parliament, where he is alſo impeached. Thomas Cromwell defends him in the houſe. p. 114
Aug. 5. Treaty of Cambray, between Charles V, and Francis I. ib.
1530. Affairs of Italy. ib.
Feb 24. Charles V. is crown'd at Bologna by the Pope. p. 115
Continuation of the affairs of Italy. ib.
Henry conſults ſeveral univerſities, and the greater part determine in his favor. p. 116
A letter from the nobility of England to the Pope, concerning the affair of the divorce. p. 117
A proclamation to forbid the receiving any bulls from Rome. ib.
Henry publiſhes his reaſons for ſuing a divorce; allegations on Henry's behalf; arguments for the Queen. Page 117 An' 1530.
Agreement between the King and cardinal Wolſey. p. 118
The King commands him to withdraw to York. ib.
He cauſes him to be arreſted on the road for high treaſon. ib. Nov. 4.
He dies on the road to London. p. 119 ditto 30.
Affairs of the reformation in Germany. ib.
The league of Smalcald. p. 120
The King calls a parliament, to which he communicates the affair of his divorce; the clergy decide in his favor. p. 121 1531.
All the clergy condemned, for having violated the præmunire ſtatute. ib.
The parliament grants the King 100,000 l. ſterling; and paſs an act, in which the King is ſtiled, Supreme head of the church. ib.
The clergy oppoſe it; but are forced to comply. p. 122
The King grants the commons an amneſty. ib.
The monaſteries compound with the King. ib.
The Pope diſſembles. ib.
The Queen refuſes to conſent to the divorce. p. 123
Three men are burn'd for religion. ib.
Affairs of Germany. ib.
Indeavors of Henry and Francis to intimidate the Emperor, and the Pope, leaſt they might ſupport Queen Catherine the Emperor's aunt. ib. 1532.
Interview between Francis and Henry. p. 124 Octob.
Henry privately marries Ann Boleyn. ib.
An alliance propoſed by the Emperor, for the ſecurity of Italy. p. 125
Affairs of religion in England. The commons inclined to reduce the clergy's power. Addreſs preſented to the King. ib.
A ſtatute againſt the clergy. p. 126
An act to aboliſh the Annates. ib.
Of which the Pope complains. ib.
Negociations at Rome on account of the divorce; the Emperor prevents the accommodation. ib.
Sir Thomas More reſigns the great ſeal, which is given to ſir Thomas Audley. ib.
Karne, ſent to Rome as the King's excuſator. ib.
Tranſactions between the Pope and Henry, in relation to the divorce. p. 127
Henry is cited to Rome. ib. Octob. 4.
Affairs between England and Scotland. ib. Febr. 24.
The treaty for the ſecurity of Italy concluded at Bolognia. p. 128 1533.
Affairs of Germany. ib.
Parliament aſſembles. A ſtatute, prohibiting appeals to Rome. p. 129
Cranmer is nominated archbiſhop of Canterbury. ib.
The convocation of the clergy terminate the affair of the divorce in the King's favor. ib.
William Du Bellay's embaſſy to London. ib.
Henry publiſhes his marriage with Ann Boleyn. ib.
Sentence for the divorce of Henry and Catherine. p. 130 May 23.
Remarks on the progreſs of the divorce. ib. 131
The Pope annuls the ſentence. p. 132
His comminatory ſentence againſt Henry. ib.
An interview between the Pope and Francis I, at Marſeilles. ib.
The duke of Orleans's marriage with Catherine of Medicis. ib.
Bonner, in perſon, notifies to the Pope, the King's appeal to the council. ib.
The divorce affair is in a fair way of accommodation, by the interpoſition of Francis I. ib.
The biſhop of Paris goes to Rome, with new expedients. p. 133
Nothing more is wanting but an ingagement in writing by Henry. A courier is diſpatched to London, and the time of his return is limited. ib.

The

AN' 1533. The courier not returning in the prefixed time, the Pope publiſhes a ſentence againſt Henry. Page 133
December. The courier arrives two days after and the Pope refuſes to revoke the ſentence. ib.
Jan. 15 The parliament aſſembles. ib.
1534. Diverſe ſtatutes againſt the clergy. ib.
Elizabeth Barton condemned to death. ib.
An act to aboliſh the Pope's authority. p. 134
Fiſher and More are impriſoned for refuſing the oath. p. 135
Henry acquaints Catherine with the act of parliament; her anſwer. ib.
Negociations between Francis I and Henry, without ſucceſs. ib.
A new quarrel between Charles V and Francis I, on account of Merveilli, beheaded at Milan. ib.
Sept. 26. Death of Clement VII. p. 146
Octob. 12. Paul III is elected. ib.
Affairs of Germany. ib.
Diverſe acts of parliament againſt the Pope. ib.
Fiſher and More are condemned. ib.
General pardon, Fiſher and More excepted. p. 137
Progreſs of the reformation in England; Engliſh bible burnt. ib.
Perſecution in England; ſtoped; Cranmer and Cromwell ſupport the reformation. ib.
A peace between England and Scotland. ib.
Deſigns of Charles V. ib. 138, 139
1535. Views of Francis I. p. 139
The monks become odious to the King; inſolence of a cordelier. p. 140
Priors and monks executed with ſome Proteſtants. ib.
Fiſher and ſir Thomas More executed. ib.
Paul III excommunicates Henry, without publiſhing the bull. p. 141
Henry ſends an embaſſy to the Proteſtants in Germany. ib.
He orders the monaſteries to be viſited, and leaves the management to Cromwell. ib.
Several abbots and priors reſign their houſes to the King. p. 142
Negociations between Henry and the King of Scotland ſucceſsleſs. ib.
October. Death of the duke of Milan. ib.
January. Death of Queen Catharine. p. 143
1536. The parliament meets. ib.
An act for aboliſhing the little monaſteries. ib.
The court of augmentation erected. ib.
The bible to be in Engliſh. ib.
Henry indeavors to be comprehended in the treaty of Smalcald, but in vain. p. 144
The parliament diſſolved; having ſat ſix years. ib.
Henry falls in love with Jane Seymour. p. 145
He is jealous of the Queen. ib.
He cauſes her to be impeached of adultery and inceſt. ib.
She is condemned to death, as alſo the lord Rochford. p. 146
May. 19. She is beheaded. ib.
He gets his marriage with Ann Boleyn anulled. p. 147
May 20. He marries Jane Seymour; Princeſs Mary reconciled to the King. ib.
Parliament. A new act of ſucceſſion, the Pope attempts an accommodation with Henry. ib.
Statute againſt the Pope. p. 148
Another about the marriage of the King's relations; one in favor of the King. ib.
Cromwell is made vicegerent for matters of religion. ib.
Articles propoſed by Henry to the clergy; grand debates between the two parties. ib.
Conſtitutions of the clergy. ib.
A proteſtation againſt the council of Mantoua. p. 149
Reginald Pool falls out with the King. ib.
The King cauſes the irregularities of the ſuppreſſed monaſteries to be publiſhed. Page 150
He ſells their lands. ib.
An inſurrection in the county of Lincoln. ib.
Quelled. ib. 151
An inſurrection in Yorkſhire headed by Aſke; the earl of Shrewſbury riſes for the King. p. 151
The duke of Norfolk is ſent againſt the rebels, and is in great danger. p. 152
The affair is terminated without a fight to the King's advantage, who grants an amneſty to the rebels. ib. 153
Affairs between Francis I and Charles V. 153
The Emperor beſieges Marſeilles. ib. Auguſt 25.
He breaks up the ſiege. ib. Sep. 5.
The King of Scotland's marriage with Magdalen, daughter of Francis I. January 1. ib. 1537.
A revolt; Aſke executed and lord Darcy. p. 154
Henry determines to ſuppreſs the monaſteries. ib.
Six of the Kildare family put to death. ib.
Birth of Prince Edward, the King's ſon. ib. Octob. 12.
Death of the Queen Jane Seymour. ib. ditto 14.
Edward Seymour made earl of Hertford. ib.
The Emperor's views in Germany. ib.
Death of the Queen of Scotland. ib.
James V demands in marriage, Mary of Guiſe. ib. July.
Henry publiſhes the report of the laſt viſitation. 1538. p. 155
Several pious frauds are diſcovered. ib.
Henry orders St. Thomas of Canterbury's bones to be burned. ib.
Paul III, publiſhes his bull againſt Henry. p. 156
Henry orders the new verſion of the bible to be printed. ib.
Pole by his conduct exaſperates the King. ib.
The vicegerent's ordinances concerning images. ib.
Henry perſecutes the Proteſtants. ib.
He publicly diſputes with Lambert, and orders him to be burned alive. ib.
Bonner made biſhop of Hereford, and ſoon after of London. p. 157
The council of Nice, in which the truce for ten years between the Emperor and Francis I is concluded. ib.
Francis I begins to ſlight Henry. ib.
Some of Cardinal Pole's correſpondents are executed p. 158
Eſtabliſhment of the ſuffragan biſhops. ib.
The Queen of Scotland arrives at Edinburg. ib. June.
Reſignation of ſeveral monaſteries to the King. ib. 1539.
Revenues of the ſuppreſſed monaſteries. p. 159
The ſix articles, or bloody ſtatute. ib. April.
The parliament grants the King the effects and revenues of monaſteries. ib.
An act for creating new biſhoprics. ib.
A very extraordinary act for inhancing the regal power. ib.
The counteſs of Saliſbury, mother to Pole, is condemned. p. 160
The King protects Cranmer. ib.
Shaxton and Latimer are ſent to the Tower. ib.
A ſearch made for thoſe who diſavow the articles. ib.
Eſtimate of the produce from ſuppreſſing monaſteries. p. 161
Bibles placed in churches. p. 162
The King's marriage with Ann of Cleves. ib. December.
Cromwell created earl of Eſſex. p. 163 1540.
Suppreſſion of the order of St. John. ib.
Cromwell's diſgrace. ib.
He is condemned by the parliament. ib.
The King gets his marriage with Ann of Cleves annulled. p. 164
Proofs of the ſlaviſh attachments of the parliament; its diſſolution. p. 165
Cromwell is executed. p. 166 July 28.
Several of both religions are executed. ib.

An' 1540. The King's marriage with Catherine Howard. Page 166
Deſigns againſt Cranmer. ib.
Begining of a new quarrel between Charles V and Francis I. p. 167
Sept. 27. Inſtitution of the order of Jeſuits. ib.
1541. The characters of Cranmer, the duke of Norfolk, Gardiner and Bonner. ib.
Foundation of ſix new biſhoprics. p. 168
The expoſition of the Chriſtian doctrine is publiſhed. ib.
The King declares them heretics who believe more or leſs. ib.
Affairs between Francis and Charles. ib.
April. Affairs of Scotland. ib.
Henry is diſſatisfied with his nephew the King of Scotland. p. 169
Diſcovery of the Queen's incontinency; her confeſſion. ib.
Feb. 12. She is beheaded. p. 170
1542. Ireland erected into a kingdom. ib.
A council called at Trent. p. 171
War between the Emperor and Francis I. ib.
War with Scotland. p. 172
December. Defeat of the Scotiſh army. p. 173 ditto 14. Death of James V. ib.
Henry projects the marrying Edward, his ſon, with the Queen of Scotland, born ſeven days before her father's death. ib.
Feb. 11. League concluded between the Emperor and Henry
1543. againſt France. p. 174
Diviſion in Scotland, cauſed by cardinal Beaton; James Hamilton, earl of Arran, is proclaimed regent. p. 175
July 1. Treaty for the marriage between Edward and Mary. ib.
Cardinal Beaton breaks theſe meaſures. ib. 176
Aug. 20. The regent ingages in the Queen's and cardinal's party, and imbraces the Catholic religion. p. 177
Henry's ſixth marriage with Catherine Par. p. 178
Some Proteſtants are burned at Windſor. ib.
A plot againſt Cranmer; the King protects him. ib.
The Queen's brother created earl of Eſſex. p. 179
Continuation of the war between the Emperor and France. ib.
January. The parliament by an act regulates the ſucceſſion.
1544. ib.
The King's title ſetled for ever. ib.
Act to limit the eccleſiaſtical court's juriſdiction. ib.
They acquit the King of all debts. p. 180
Lord Wriotheſly made lord chancellor. ib.
Henry carries the war into Scotland. ib.
Agreement between the King and the earl of Lenox. ib.
The Emperor lays ſiege to St. Didier. p. 181
Henry arrives at Calais; he miſtruſts the Emperor. p. 182
He beſieges Boulogne. ib.
September. Treaty of Crepy between the Emperor and France. ib.
ditto 14. Henry takes Boulogne and withdraws to Calais. ib.
The yielding up the colleges and hoſpitals to the King. ib.
1545. The war continues between France and England. ib.
Francis I's great efforts in the campain of 1545. p. 183
The war with Scotland is carried on. p. 184
Affairs of Germany. ib.
The opening of the council of Trent. p. 185
1546. Treaty of peace between France and England; the peace proclaimed. p. 186
Henry ſeizes on the ſilver veſſels belonging to churches. ib.
Negociations between Henry and the Proteſtants in Germany fruitleſs. p. 187
A league between the Pope and Emperor againſt Proteſtants. An' 1546. Page 187
The Emperor's happy ſucceſs. ib.
A perſecution in Scotland. ib.
Wiſhart's martyrdom. ib.
Cardinal Beaton is murdered. ib.
Shaxton is condemned to be burned; he abjures and is pardoned. p. 188
Ann Aſkew is burned. ib.
Conſpiracy againſt Cranmer; he is protected by the King. ib. 189
The Queen accuſed; ſhe clears herſelf. p. 189
Gardiner's diſgrace. ib.
The duke of Norfolk and his ſon the earl of Surrey are ſent to the Tower. p. 190
The King's will; order of the ſucceſſion. ib. 191
The earl of Surrey beheaded. p. 191 Jan. 19.
An act of attainder againſt the duke of Norfolk. 1547. p. 192
The King's orders for executing the duke. ib. Jan. 29.
Death of Henry VIII. p. 193

EDWARD VI.

Edward VI, nine years and three months old, ſucceeds his father. ib.
He is proclaimed. ib. ditto 31.
King Henry VIII's will opened. ib. Feb. 1.
He named ſixteen perſons to be executors of his will, regents of the kingdom, and tutors to the young King. ib. 194
Twelve other perſons are named by Henry, to form the council of regents. p. 194——196
Characters of ſome of the regents in council. ib.
The earl of Hertford, afterwards duke of Somerſet, is made protector. p. 196
Several dignities confered. ib.
Five or ſix thouſand pound ſterlings of the revenue for the maintenance of the chanters, is alienated to provide revenues for the new lords. ib.
The protector gets himſelf the poſt of high treaſurer and earl marſhal. ditto 10. ib.
Thomas Seymour made high admiral. ib. ditto 11.
Henry VIII is buried at Windſor. ib.
Edward VI crowned. p. 197 ditto 12.
The lord chancellor's diſgrace. ib.
The protector becomes abſolute. ib.
An amneſty is publiſhed with ſome exceptions. ib.
The chancellor is deprived of his poſt, and confined in his houſe. ib.
The great ſeal is given in cuſtody to lord St. John. ib.
The protector is confirmed in his poſt by letters patent by the King under the great ſeal. ib.
Death of Francis I. p. 198
Henry II ſucceeds him; he refuſes to ratify the treaties ſigned at London, the eleventh of May. March 1. ib.
Affairs of Germany. ib.
Affairs touching the reformation in England. ib.
The reformation is incouraged and puſhed on. p. 199
The Protector makes ready to carry the war into Scotland. ib.
Conference for a peace, uſeleſs. ib. Auguſt 4.
The protector enters Scotland and takes ſome caſtles. Sept. 3. ib.
He propoſes a peace to the Scots regent, who rejects his offers. ib.
The Engliſh army draws near to that of the Scots. p. 200
Battle of Pinkey or of Muſſelburgh, where the Scots are defeated; fourteen thouſand of their men ſlain; and fifteen-hundred taken priſoners. ditto 10. ib.
The protector, being informed his brother the admiral caballed againſt him in England, ſuddenly returns, ditto 18.

AN' 1547. returns, having taken but ſixteen days for his expedition. Page 200
Bonner, biſhop of London, and Gardiner, biſhop of Wincheſter are impriſoned. ib.
October. Lord Rich is made chancellor. p. 201
Nov. 3. New privileges granted the protector. ib.
ditto 4. The parliament aſſembles. ib.
Statute for repealing ſeveral others made in the preceeding reigns, and for the eſtabliſhing the order of ſucceſſion appointed by Henry VIII. ib.
The ſix articles are repealed. ib.
Private maſſes are aboliſhed, and the cup is reſtored to the people. p. 202
The power of nominating to biſhoprics is given the King. ib.
Statute againſt vagabonds. ib.
Several revenues of churches given the King. ib.
Amneſty with ſome exception; Gardiner makes uſe of it. ib.
Quarrel between the protector and the admiral. ib.
The Emperor defeats and takes priſoner John Frederick, Elector of Saxony, and proclaims Maurice his couſin, Elector. p. 203
The Landgrave of Heſſe is made a priſoner by the Emperor, by a flagrant treachery. ib.
The Proteſtant party in Germany is weakened. ib.
Peter Martyr, Bucer, Ochin, Fagius, and ſeveral other Proteſtants ſeek refuge in England. ib.
The protector, fearing a rupture with France, diſcontinues the fortifying Bullenberg. p. 203
1548. The work of reformation is incouraged. ib.
Gardiner is ſent to the Tower, for oppoſing it. p. 204
The protector makes the earl of Shrewſbury his lieutenant in the war againſt Scotland. ib.
The Scots regent beſieges without ſucceſs the caſtle of Broughty. ib.
The Engliſh ſeize on Hadington and Lauder. ib.
The Scots having received a ſupply of ſix thouſand Men from France, beſiege Hadington. ib.
The Queen of Scotland is ſent into France. ib.
The earl of Shrewſbury obliges the Scots to raiſe the ſiege of Hadington, and after having offered them battle he returns to England. p. 205
Deſſé, general of the French troops; his fruitleſs attempt on Hadington. ib
He enters England. ib.
He is re-called and his place ſupplied by de Thermes. ib.
The Pope falls out with the Emperor on account of the removing the council of Trent to Bologna. ib.
Interim granted the Proteſtants of Germany. ib.
Nov. 24. The parliament aſſembles. ib.
They puſh on the reformation. ib.
1549. The admiral is ſent to the Tower; informations againſt him. p 206
He refuſes to anſwer. ib.
March 10. He is beheaded. ib.
Subſidies granted the King. p. 207 ditto 14. The parliament is prorogued. ib.
Eſtabliſhment of the new liturgy; the Princeſs Mary refuſes to receive it. ib.
April 12. A woman Anabaptiſt is condemned to be burned; the King ſigns the warrant with tears; is executed. ib.
The people complain of the nobility. ib.
Several inſurrections. ib.
The protector in vain indeavors to bring a remedy to the oppreſſion of the people. ib. 208
June 10. The male-contents draw together in Devonſhire to the number of ten thouſand men, and place Arundel at their head. p. 208
The lord Ruſſel is ſent againſt them. ib.
They ſend him their demands. ib.
Which are rejected. ib.
They beſiege Exeter. p. 209
The lord Ruſſel defeats them; makes them raiſe the ſiege, and puts an end to the rebellion in Devonſhire. Page 209
Arundel is hanged. ib.
The male-contents of Norfolk aſſemble to the number of twenty thouſand, under the leading of one Ket a taner. ib.
The marquis of Northampton is ſent againſt them. ib.
He is driven back to Norwich, with loſs. ib.
The earl of Warwick at the head of the army deſigned againſt Scotland, defeats and diſperſes the rebels. ib.
Ket, their general is hanged. ib.
The rebels of Yorkſhire accept of a pardon. ib.
The King of France enters the Boulonnois, without having declared war. ib.
He is driven back to Bullenberg fort. p. 210
A ſea fight near Jerſey, between the Engliſh and French fleets. ib.
Henry beſieges Boulogne. ib.
The ſiege is changed into a blockade. ib.
De Thermes ſeizes on the caſtle of Broughty. ib.
The protector razes Hadington. ib. Sept. 8.
He propoſes to the council to give up Boulogne to France. ib.
His propoſition is ill received. ib.
Paget is ſent embaſſador to the Emperor to indeavor the concluding a treaty for the ſurety of Boulogne. ib.
Complaints againſt the protector. ib. Octob. 6.
The preſident of the council and ſeveral counſellors withdraw into the city of London. p. 211
They act againſt the protector. ib.
The protector carries the King to Windſor. ib. ditto 7.
Seven counſellors more join thoſe in London. ib.
They ingage the magiſtrates of London in their party. ib. ditto 8.
Five other counſellors deſert the protector. ib.
The council declares the duke of Somerſet unworthy of the protectorſhip. ib.
The King approves the proceeding of the council. ib.
The council goes to Windſor; the accuſation againſt the protector. ib.
The duke of Somerſet is impeached before the council. p. 212
He is ſent to the Tower. ib. ditto 12.
The council nominates ſix governors for the King. ib. ditto 14.
The earl of Warwick takes upon him the adminiſtration of the government. ib.
The earl of Southampton withdraws from court and dies. ib.
A ſecond embaſſy to the Emperor, who refuſes to aſſiſt England. p. 213
His anſwer makes the council reſolve on a peace with France. ib.
The earl of Warwick is made high admiral and great maſter. ib. ditto 28.
The parliament aſſembles. ib. Nov. 4.
They paſs an act againſt illegal aſſemblies, and repeal the ſtatute againſt vagabonds. ib.
An act of attainder againſt the duke of Somerſet grounded on a confeſſion which was ſigned by himſelf. p. 213 Jan. 2. 1550.
He is condemned to loſe his poſt and to pay ſeveral fines. ib.
He is let out of the Tower. ib. Feb. 16.
The King reſtores him to his place in the council. ib. April 6.
An act for confirming the new liturgy, and for burning the images. ib. February.
The parliament is prorogued. ib. ditto 2.
Warwick directs all affairs; he reſolves to give up Boulogne. ib.
Guidotti, an Italian merchant, is imployed in the affair of the giving up Boulogne. ib.
He ſucceeds ſo far as to get plenipotentiaries deputed from both courts. p. 214

An' 1550. A conference near Boulogne. Page 214
March 24. The treaty is ſigned. ib.
The people diſcontented at the yielding up of Boulogne. ib.
The earl of Warwick evades ſigning the ratification of the treaty. ib.
The councils conduct cenſured. ib.
Polydore Virgil retires to Italy. p. 215
Death of Paul III; Pole loſes the pontificate by nicety. ib.
April 18. Gardiner is depoſed. ib.
1551. Julius III choſen Pope. ib.
A new confeſſion of Faith is drawn up; rejected by the Princeſs Mary. ib.
Affairs of Germany. Affairs of Scotland. Affairs of religion. ib.
Princeſs Mary in vain indeavors to leave the kingdom. ib.
The ſweating-ſickneſs makes great havock in England from April to October; two dukes of Suffolk die. p. 216
The earl of Warwick forms the project of marrying Elizabeth to a foreign Prince to exclude Mary from the ſucceſſion, and to marry one of his ſons with Jane Gray, eldeſt daughter of the earl of Dorſet. ib.
Edward ſends an embaſſy to Henry II, to carry him the garter, and to negociate his marriage with Elizabeth, Henry's daughter. ib.
July 19. The treaty for the King's marriage is ſigned at Angers. ib.
The King creates the earl of Warwick duke of Northumberland, and makes ſeveral other creations. ib.
The ruin of the duke of Somerſet is determined. ib.
He is ſent to the Tower. p. 217
Decem. 1. He is impeached before the peers. ib.
He is acquited of treaſon, but found guilty of felony. ib.
The great ſeal is taken from the chancellor for offering to act for the duke. p. 218
Jan. 22. The King ſigns an order for executing the duke of Somerſet. ib.
His ſpeech on the ſcaffold. ib.
He is beheaded. ib.
Execution of his pretended accomplices, Vane, Partridge, Stanhope, and Arundel. ib.
1552. Affairs of Germany. ib.
ditto 23. The parliament re-aſſembles. p. 219
Act which ordains that witneſſes ſhall give their evidences before the face of the accuſed. ib.
The marriage of eccleſiaſtics is declared lawful. ib.
The parliament breaks up. ib.
They give the King power to depoſe biſhops. ib.
Search made after thoſe who have inriched themſelves by the revenues of the church. ib.
Lord Paget is fined and degraded from the order of the garter. ib.
The company of German merchants of the Still-yard is ſuppreſſed. ib.
Cardan arrives in England. ib.
The earl of Arran yields up the regency of Scotland to the Queen dowager. p. 220
Maurice, Elector of Saxony, declares againſt Charles V, and by ſo doing obliges him to grant the Proteſtants the edict of Paſſau. ib.
March 1. The parliament aſſembles. ib.
1553. The commons grant the King a conſiderable ſupply. ib.
Tonſtal, biſhop of Durham, is depoſed. ib.
Suppreſſion of that biſhopric. ib.
The duke of Northumberland is made count Palatine of Durham. ib.
March 31. The parliament is diſſolved. ib.
The King falls dangerouſly ſick. ib.
May. A ſon of the duke of Northumberland marries Jane Gray. ib.
The duke perſuades the King to transfer the crown to Jane Gray. Page 220 An' 1553.
The judges of the kingdom refuſe to draw the aſſignment of the ſucceſſion. p. 221
They are conſtrained to do it, excepting Hales; all the council ſign it alſo. ib. June 15.
The duke of Northumberland is ſuſpected to have contributed to the King's illneſs. ib.
The King dies. ib. July 6.
The duke in vain indeavors to ſeize on the perſons of Mary and Elizabeth. ib.

MARY.

Mary, Elizabeth, Mary Queen of Scotland, and Jane Gray, all four pretend to the crown. p. 222
Mary and Jane Gray remain the two only competitors. ib. ditto 9.
Mary withdraws into the county of Norfolk, where ſhe writes to the council. p. 223
She goes into the county of Suffolk. ib.
She cauſes herſelf to be proclaimed at Norwich, and calls the nobility to her aſſiſtance. ib.
The duke of Northumberland and Suffolk carry Jane word that ſhe is Queen. ib.
Jane Gray accepts the crown, but with ſome difficulty. ib.
She withdraws into the Tower with the council. ib.
The council's anſwer to Mary's letter. ib.
Jane is proclaimed, at which the people expreſs no ſatisfaction. ib. ditto 10.
The counties of Norfolk and Suffolk declare for Mary. p. 225
She promiſes to make no change in religion. ib.
Jane ſends an embaſſador to the Emperor, who will not admit of him. ib.
The council raiſes troops. ib.
The duke of Northumberland ſets out from London to head ſix thouſand men, who were aſſembled at Newmarket. ib. ditto 14.
He marches towards Cambridge and thence to St. Edmundſbury. p. 226
Deſertion in his army. ib.
Haſtings, with four thouſand men, declares for Mary, and gets her proclaimed at Buckingham. ib.
Six men of war ingage in the ſame party. ib.
The duke returns to Cambridge, whence he ſends to the council for ſuccor. ib.
Some counſellors find means to eſcape out of the Tower. ib. ditto 19.
They declare for Mary, and cauſe her to be proclaimed in London. ib.
The duke of Suffolk delivers up the Tower. ib.
Jane diveſt herſelf of her dignity. ib.
The duke of Northumberland proclaimes Mary at Cambridge. ib.
He and his children are conducted to the Tower, with ſeveral others. p. 227 ditto 25.
The whole kingdom declares for Mary. ib.
She ſends Jane Gray, the duke of Norfolk, and ſeveral others to the Tower. ib.
She orders the duke of Norfolk to be ſet at liberty. ib.
She makes her entry into London. ib. Auguſt 3.
She orders ſeveral priſoners in the Tower to be ſet at liberty. ib.
The Queen intends to ſend for cardinal Pole into England, in quality of legate. ib.
Gardiner oppoſes it, and by the Emperor's means induces the Queen to alter her deſign. ib.
The Queen gives him the great ſeal. ib.
Funeral of Edward VI. ib. ditto 12.
The Queen declares ſhe will not conſtrain people's conſciences on account of religion. ib.
Bourn, a chaplain to Bonner, on the point of being maſſacred by the people, for having diſreſpectfully ditto 13.

AN' 1553. fully ſpoken of Edward in a ſermon, is delivered from this danger by two proteſtant miniſters. Page 228

June 18. The Queen puts out a proclamation, which diſcovers her intentions with regard to religion. ib.

The duke of Northumberland, the earls of Northampton and Warwick, ſir Andrew Dudley, ſir John and ſir Henry Gate, and ſir Thomas Palmer, are brought to their trials. ib.

They are condemned. ib.

ditto. 22. The duke of Northumberland, ſir John Gate, and ſir Thomas Palmer, are executed. ib.

The deputies of the county of Suffolk are ill uſed at court; one of them, for having ſpoken with too much boldneſs, was made ſtand in the pillory. p. 229

The two miniſters, who had ſaved Bourn, are impriſoned. ib.

The biſhops depoſed in Edward's reign, are re-eſtabliſhed. ib.

Several eccleſiaſtics are confined. ib.

The ſervice of the Roman church is re-eſtabliſhed in ſeveral parts of the kingdom. ib.

Juſtice Hales is fined 1000 l. ſterling. ib.

Peter Martyr takes refuge in Cranmer's houſe. ib.

Cranmer is ſummoned to appear at the ſtar-chamber, and is acquitted. ib.

He is cited before the council, impeached for treaſon, and ſent to the Tower with Latimer. ib.

The reformed foreigners are permited to quit the kingdom, but the Engliſh are forbid it. ib. p. 230

The Queen creates ſeveral peers. ib.

Oct. 1. The Queen's coronation. ib.

A general pardon is publiſhed, but with many exceptions. ib.

ditto 4. The Queen acquits her ſubjects of the ſubſidy due to Edward. ib.

The archbiſhop of York is ſent to the Tower. ib.

The biſhop of Exeter is re-eſtabliſhed. ib.

The court finds means to have a parliament at its devotion. ib.

ditto 10. Taylor biſhop of Lincoln, and Harley biſhop of Hereford, are turned out of the houſe of lords, for refuſing to kneel in the time of maſs. ib.

The parliament being aſſembled, ſeveral acts are paſſed without meddling with religion. ib.

ditto 21. The parliament is prorogued. p. 231 ditto 24. The parliament re-aſſembles, and annuls the ſentence of divorce between Henry VIII and Catherine of Arragon. ib.

ditto 31. An act for re-eſtabliſhing the ſervice of the church of Rome. ib.

Diverſe other acts. ib.

Nov. 3. Jane Gray, Guilford Dudley her huſband, two other ſons of the duke of Northumberland, and Cranmer archbiſhop of Canterbury, are condemned as traitors. ib.

Commendone is ſent into England by cardinal Dandini, the Pope's legate at Bruſſels. ib.

The Queen demands Pole for legate. ib.

Gardiner oppoſes it. p. 232

The Emperor cauſes to be propoſed the Queen's marriage with Philip of Spain. The Queen approves it. ib.

Pole detained in Germany. ib.

The commons ſend deputies to the Queen, to intreat her not to marry a foreign Prince. ib.

Decem. 6. The Queen diſſolves the parliament. ib.

The convocation of the clergy eſtabliſhes the tenet of tranſubſtantiation. ib.

January 1554. Embaſſy from the Emperor, to treat of the marriage. p. 233 ditto 12. The articles for the marriage is concluded. ib.

ditto 13. The Queen pardons the marquis of Northampton. p. 234

She ſuſpends the act againſt the German merchants of the Still-yard. Page 234 AN' 1554.

The people murmur on account of the Queen's marriage. ib.

The duke of Suffolk, Thomas Wyat, and Peter Carew, form the deſign of ſtiring up the whole kingdom to a rebellion. ib.

Wyat takes the field with a ſmall number of people; he refuſes to lay down his arms. ib.

The militia which the duke of Norfolk led againſt Wyat, join him, and march towards London. ib. ditto 25.

The Queen deputes two perſons to him, to whom he makes exorbitant demands, which are rejected. ib.

He enters Weſtminſter; but finding the city gate ſhut, he ſurrenders himſelf a priſoner. p. 235 Feb. 5.

The duke of Suffolk is ſeized. ib. ditto 11.

Jane Grey, and her huſband are executed. ib. ditto 12.

Several rebels are put to death. ib. 14 & 15.

The Queen pardons 600 of the rebels. ib. ditto 20.

The duke of Suffolk put to death. ib. ditto 21.

Wyat accuſes Elizabeth, and the earl of Devonſhire. They are ſent to the Tower. ib.

Sir Nicholas Throgmorton being acquitted by the jury; they are fined large ſums. ib.

His brother John Throgmorton is condemned, though he was in the ſame caſe. ib.

Wyat clears Elizabeth, and the earl of Devonſhire, and is executed. ib.

Mary orders the church to be purged of the married eccleſiaſtics. p. 236 March.

Several biſhops are depoſed. ib. ditto 13.

Maſs is re-eſtabliſhed throughout the kingdom. ib.

The parliament aſſembles. ib. April 2.

They are ſuborned by the Queen. ib.

Act for confirming the Queen's prerogatives. ib.

The biſhopric of Durham is re-eſtabliſhed. p. 237

The parliament approves the treaty of marriage between the Queen and Prince Philip. ib.

Cranmer, Ridley and Latimer, are conducted to Oxford, to hold a controverſy on the euchariſt. ib. 15, 16, 17. ditto 20.

They are not permited to explain themſelves. ib.

They are excommunicated on refuſing to make abjuration. ib.

The parliament is diſſolved. ib. May 25.

Philip ſets out from Corunna. ib. July 16.

He lands at Southampton. ib. ditto 19.

The marriage is celebrated at Wincheſter. ib. ditto 25.

Philip brings a great deal of money. ib.

He obtains a pardon for Elizabeth, and others. ib.

The duke of Norfolk dies. p. 238 September.

The parliament re-aſſembles. ib. Nov. 11.

The court ſends to meet Pole, and the parliament repeals the act by which he was condemned. ib.

Pole arrives in England, in quality of Pope's legate. ib. ditto 24.

He makes an harangue to the parliament, during which the Queen had ſuch emotions, ſhe thought to have felt a child ſtir in her womb. ib.

The parliament petition the King and Queen, to intreat their indeavoring to reconcile the Pope and kingdom. ib. ditto 29.

The legate grants them abſolution. ib.

Act, which re-eſtabliſhes the Pope's authority by five conditions, ratified by the legate. ib.

Artifices of the court of Rome, touching church lands. ib. 239

Act for renewing ancient ſtatutes againſt heretics. p. 239

Act, which grants Philip the right of taking upon him the title of King of England during his marriage, and declares thoſe who attempt his life, guilty of high treaſon. p. 240

The manner how to proceed againſt the reformed is debated. Pole is for gentleneſs, and Gardiner for ſeverity, and carries it. ib.

An' 1554. The Queen ſends an Embaſſy of obedience to Rome. Page 240
1555. Gardiner takes upon him to ſee the laws put in execution againſt the Proteſtants. ib.
Feb. 4. Rogers burned in London. ib.
ditto 9. Hooper is burned in Gloceſter. ib.
Sanders and Taylor are alſo executed. ib.
Gardiner transfers his commiſſion to Bonner, for the perſecuting the reformed. ib.
The perſecution cauſes an aſtoniſhment throughout the kingdom. ib.
Philip makes his confeſſor preach againſt the perſecution. p. 241
The perſecution is renewed. ib.
Elizabeth is taken out of confinement, and removed to Hampton-court. ib.
The Queen reſtores the revenues of the churches. ib.
March 23. Pope Julius III dies. ib.
April 9. Marcellus II is elected Pope. ib.
Marcellus II dies twenty-days after his election. ib.
May 23. Paul IV ſucceeds him. ib.
He erects Ireland into a kingdom; gives an audience to the Engliſh embaſſador; requires the reſtitution of the church revenues, and the Peter-pence. p. 242 ditto 29. The Queen is brought to bed of ſeveral moles. ib.
July. Bradford is burned. ib.
Sept. 4. Philip conceives a diſlike for the Queen, and ſets out for Flanders. ib.
A pretended conſpiracy. ib.
A ſearch for thoſe who had ſpoiled churches, and monaſteries. ib.
Octo. 21. The parliament aſſembles. ib.
Act for reſtoring the firſt-fruits and tenths. ib.
The commons begin to oppoſe the court. ib.
Nov. 12. Martyrdom of Ridley and Latimer. ib.
Death of Gardiner. p. 243
Decem. 9. The parliament is diſſolved. ib.
Jan. 1. Charles V reſigns all his eſtates to Philip. ib.
1556. Heath, archbiſhop of York, is made chancellor ib.
Feb. 14. Cranmer is degraded; he ſigns an abjuration, of which he repents him. ib.
March 21. He is burned. p. 244
Pole is elected archbiſhop of Canterbury. ib.
The perſecution is continued with fury. ib.
Re-eſtabliſhment, and foundation of ſome monaſteries. ib.
The Queen cauſes to be taken out of the records, whatever had been tranſacted againſt the monks, and the Pope, in Henry VIII's reign. ib.
The Pope induces the French, to break the truce with Spain. p. 245
January. 1557. The bones of Bucer and Fagius are burned at Cambridge. ib.
The body of Peter Martyr's wife is digged up, and buried in a dunghil. ib.
The Queen grants a commiſſion, with intent to ſet up an inquiſition. ib.
The duke of Guiſe marches into Italy. ib.
April 27. Stafford rebels; he ſeizes on Scarborough. p. 246
May 20. Philip arrives in England. ib.
ditto 28. Stafford is taken. ib.
June 7. The Queen declares war againſt France. ib.
ditto 17. Eight thouſand Engliſh, commanded by the earl of Pembroke, go to join the Spaniſh army. ib.
The duke of Savoy lays ſiege to St. Quintin. ib.
Auguſt 10. Battle of St. Laurence. ib.
ditto 18. Taking of St. Quintin. ib.
The Pope recalls Pole, and ſends Peyto in his ſtead. ib.
The Queen forbids Peyto to ſet foot in England. ib.
The Pope makes a peace with Spain. ib.
Pole is re-eſtabliſhed. ib.
The duke of Guiſe returns to France. ib.
The Scots make an irruption into England. ib.
Jan. 1. The duke of Guiſe beſieges Calais. p. 247
Taking of Calais. Page 247 An' 1558.
He reduces Guiſnes and Hames. ib. Jan. 7.
The parliament aſſembles; they grant the Queen a ſubſidy in imitation of the clergy. ib. ditto 20.
Ambroſe and Robert Dudley, ſons of the deceaſed duke of Northumberland, are re-eſtabliſhed. p. 248
The parliament is prorogued. ib. March 7.
The Dauphin marries Mary Queen of Scotland. The ſtates of that kingdom grants him the title of King of Scots. ib. April.
The King of Sweden aſks Elizabeth in marriage, from which ſhe excuſes herſelf. ib.
The perſecution is renewed. ib. 249
The lord Clinton puts to ſea with 120 ſail. ib.
He burns Conqueſt, and withdraws. ib. June.
Conferences are begun at Cambray for a peace between France, England and Spain. ib. October. Nov. 5.
The parliament aſſembles. ib. ditto 17.
The Queen dies. ib.
Cardinal Pole dies. ib.

ELIZABETH.

Mary Queen of Scots, and Frances ducheſs of Suffolk, Elizabeth's rivals. p. 250
The houſe of lords declares for Elizabeth. ib.
The commons concur with the lords. p. 251
Elizabeth is proclaimed. ib.
She comes to London. ib. ditto 19.
She ſends embaſſadors to the principal Sovereigns of Europe. ib.
She places eight Proteſtants in the council. ib.
Philip II makes a propoſition of marriage to the Queen, which ſhe rejects. ib.
She holds a private council, for re-eſtabliſhing the reformation. p. 252
She permits, by a proclamation, the ſervice to be done in the common language of the country, and to read the holy ſcripture. ib.
Queen Mary's funeral. p. 253
Death of Charles V. Affairs of France and Spain. ib.
Affairs of Scotland. Confederacy of ſome gentlemen in Scotland, under the name of the Congregation, for the defenſe of the new religion. ib.
The regent permits their celebrating divine ſervice after their own manner. ib.
Elizabeth creates ſeveral Proteſtant peers. ib. January.
Her coronation. ib. 1559.
The parliament aſſembles. p. 254 ditto 25.
They grant the Queen the tenths, firſt-fruits, and impropriation. ib.
Act, by which Elizabeth is acknowleged lawful Queen. ib.
The parliament makes ſeveral ſtatutes on religion, notwithſtanding the oppoſition of ſome biſhops. ib.
The erection of the high commiſſion court. p. 255
The Queen forbids preaching without licenſe. ib.
Conference on religion, fruitleſs. ib. April.
Nine thouſand four hundred beneficed clergy then in England imbrace the reformation; excepting 14 biſhops, 12 archdeacons, 15 principals of colleges, 50 canons, and about 80 curates, who choſe rather to loſe their benefices. ib.
The peace with France is ſigned at Cateau. ib. dittto 2.
Treaty between Elizabeth, and the King and Queen of Scots. p. 256
The Engliſh embaſſadors to no purpoſe complain, that Henry cauſed the Dauphin to take the arms of England. ib.
The regent of Scotland prohibits the exerciſe of the Proteſtant religion, and intends to baniſh the reformed miniſters. p. 257
Commotions ſtired upon this account. ib.
James Melvil is ſent to Scotland by Henry II. p. 258

Death

July 10. Death of Henry II. Page 259
AN' 1559. Truce concluded in Scotland between the regent and the confederates. ib.
Francis II, the new King of France, ſends troops into Scotland. ib.
The truce is broken. ib.
The family of Guiſe is very powerful in France. ib.
Philip II infringes the privileges of the Low countries. ib.
September. He ſets out for Spain, and leaves the government of the Netherlands to the ducheſs of Parma. ib.
Paul IV dies; Pius IV ſucceeds him. p. 260
State of affairs in England. ib.
Febr. 27. Treaty between Elizabeth and the male-contents in 1560. Scotland. p. 263
The regent of Scotland retires into the caſtle of Edinburg. p. 264
Lord Grey enters Scotland with an army. ib.
The Engliſh army, and that of the confederates of Scotland begin the ſiege of Leith. ib.
Elizabeth publiſhes a manifeſto juſtifying her conduct with regard to Scotland. ib.
France offers to give her up Calais, if ſhe will but draw off her troops out of Scotland, which ſhe refuſes. ib.
Truce with Scotland. ib.
June 10. The regent of Scotland dies. ib.
July. Conference at Edinburg for a peace. ib.
Treaty of Edinburg, between Elizabeth, the King and Queen of France and Scotland, and the confederates. ib.
The treaty with regard to Scotland is executed. p. 265
Francis II refuſes to ratify the treaty with Elizabeth. ib.
The archduke, the King of Sweden, the duke of Holſtein, the earl of Arran, and ſeveral others pretend to a marriage with Elizabeth. ib.
Robert Dudley conceives greater hopes than any of them all; he is in great favor with the Queen. ib.
Bacon, keeper of the great ſeal, and William Cecil, principal miniſters. ib.
Philip II gives the Queen's embaſſador but a cold reception. ib.
He returns the collar of the order of the garter. p. 266
The Pope attempts, to no purpoſe, to gain Elizabeth. ib.
She changes all the coin. ib.
Affairs of France. Affairs of the Netherlands. ib.
Decemb. 5. Francis II dies; Charles IX ſucceeds him. ib.
Philip II's ill ſucceſs againſt Dragut, King of Tripoli, obliges him to draw off his troops from the Netherlands. ib.
Catherine of Medicis, mother to Charles IX, gets the King of Navarra to yield her the regency. ib.
Queen Mary quits the title of Queen of England. p. 267
She eludes the demand made her by Elizabeth to ratify the treaty of Edinburg. ib.
Elizabeth refuſes a ſafe-guard to Mary to return to Scotland. ib.
Auguſt 21. Mary arrives in Scotland, where ſhe is joyfully re-
1561. ceived. p. 269
She ſends an embaſſador to Elizabeth, requiring her to declare her preſumptive heir, which Elizabeth refuſes. ib.
Stuart is made earl of Murray and Areſkin earl of Marr. p. 270
Elizabeth refuſes to receive a nuncio from the Pope. ib.
She cauſes the monks to be paid their penſions. ib.
1562. The counteſs of Lenox is ſent to the Tower. ib.
Plot of Arthur Pole, his brother, and of the chevalier Forteſcue. p. 271
They are condemned to death, but the Queen grants them a pardon. ib.
The Queen ſends Catherine Grey to the Tower, and AN' 1562.
cauſes her marriage with the earl of Hertford to be annulled; Catherine dies a priſoner. Page 271
The Hugonots of France aſk ſuccor from Elizabeth; She makes a treaty with them. ib.
The Engliſh troops enter Diepe and Havre de September.
Grace. p. 272
The King of Navarre takes Roan by ſtorm. ib.
He dies of a wound he received in this ſiege. ib.
Battle of Dreux between the Catholics and the December.
Hugonots. ib.
Affairs of Scotland. ib.
Plot againſt the earl of Murray diſcovered. ib.
The earl of Huntley deſigns to carry of the Queen. ib.
Huntley is defeated by Murray and taken priſoner; he dies; Gordon his ſon is condemned. ib.
Affairs of France. p. 273
The duke of Guiſe is ſlain by Poltrot in the ſiege 1563.
of Orleans. ib.
The Hugonots make a peace with the King of France, without including Elizabeth. ib.
Siege and taking Havre. ib.
The truce between France and Spain concluded. ib.
The Engliſh troops return home and bring the plague along with them. ib.
The cardinal of Lorrain propoſes to Mary a marriage with Charles the archduke, upon which ſhe conſults Elizabeth, who would perſuade her to marry an Engliſhman. ib.
She deſiſts from the match with the archduke. ib.
The ducheſs of Suffolk dies. p. 274
The peace between France and England is ſigned April 9.
at Troyes in Champagne. ib. 1564.
Elizabeth ſends the order of the garter to Charles IX. ib.
The commerce between England and the Netherlands, after having ſuffered ſome interruption, is again re-eſtabliſhed on the ancient footing. ib.
Elizabeth viſits the univerſity of Cambridge, where ſhe makes an harangue in latin. ib.
Mary reſolves to marry the lord Darnley, ſon of the counteſs of Lenox. ib.
Dudley is made earl of Leiceſter. p. 275
In a conference with Mary's envoys, Elizabeth propoſes a marriage between that Queen and the earl of Leiceſter. ib.
The propoſition is ill received. ib.
Death of the Emperor Ferdinand I. Maximilian his ſon ſucceeds him. ib.
David Rizzo, an Italian muſician, becomes Mary's 1565.
favorite ib.
Darnley arrives in Scotland. p. 276 February.
The earl of Murray, and ſeveral other lords, combine in vain to prevent his marriage with the Queen of Scotland. ib.
Mary gets her marriage approved by an aſſembly of great men. ib.
She requires Elizabeth's approbation, who indeavors to diſſuade her from it. ib.
Elizabeth recalls the earl of Lenox and lord Darnley, who excuſe themſelves for not obeying. p. 277
The Queen of Scotland marries the lord Darnley. ib. July 29.
The confederate lords of Scotland perſecuted by the Queen withdraw into England. ib.
Mary refuſes an audience to Elizabeth's envoy; ſhe however receives her letter. ib.
Mary takes a diſguſt to the King, and her conduct with Rizzo is ſcandalous. ib. 278
Interview between the French and Spaniſh courts at Bayona. p. 278
Pius IV dies. Pius V ſucceeds him. ib. December.
The ſtates of Scotland aſſembles at Edinburg. ib. 1566.
The King of Scotland gets Rizzo aſſaſſinated. ib.
The Queen has guards ſet upon her. p. 279
The King forſakes the murderers of Rizzo. ib.
The Queen eſcapes to Dunbar. ib.

She

An' 1556. She re-aſſumes her authority and pardons the fugitive lords. Page 279
The earl of Bothwel becomes Mary's favorite. p. 280
Mary forms a project of dethroning Elizabeth, her ſchemes are diſcovered by means of a ſpy. ib.
The ſpy is apprehended. ib.
June 19. Birth of James, Mary's ſon. p. 280
Mary ill uſes the King and behaves herſelf in a ſcandalous manner with Bothwel. p. 281
She refuſes to ratify the treaty of Edinburg. ib.
The abuſed King withdraws; he is poiſoned; but reſiſts the poiſon. ib.
Elizabeth viſits Oxford univerſity. p. 282
Novemb. The parliament aſſembles with deſign to declare Mary preſumptive heir to Elizabeth. ib.
The houſe of lords depute Bacon to the Queen to intreat her marrying. ib.
She cauſes the deputies of both houſes to appear before her to whom ſhe makes an ambiguous ſpeech to elude their requeſt. ib.
The parliament is diſſolved. p. 283
The great men of the Netherlands enter into a confederacy againſt the eſtabliſhing the inquiſition. ib.
Lewis earl of Naſſau, with four hundred attendants, preſents a petition to the governeſs. ib.
Remarks on the King's cataſtrophe. ib. 284, 285
1567. Henry Stuart, King of Scotland is ſtifled or ſtrangled in his bed; Bothwel is accuſed of his death. p. 286
He is buried by the Queen's orders near to Rizzo. ib.
The Queen to get the caſtle of Edinburg, delivered to her by the earl of Marr, puts the Prince into his hands. ib.
The earl of Lenox accuſes Bothwel with the murder of the King, and requires juſtice of the Queen. ib.
Bothwel gets himſelf acquited by the commiſſioners aſſembled to examine him. p. 287
Indeavors are made to no purpoſe to diſſuade the Queen from marrying Bothwel. ib.
She conſents to be carried off by Bothwel. ib.
Bothwel is divorced from his wife. ib.
He marries the Queen. ib.
The Queen and Bothwel get ſome lords to ſign a league ib.
Murray refuſes to ſign, and retires into France. ib.
The earls of Argyle, Morton, Marr, Athol, Glencarn, and baron Boyd ſign a confederacy to puniſh the King's murderers, and to break the Queen's marriage. p. 288
The Queen and Bothwel withdraw to Dunbar. ib.
And march towards Edinburg. ib.
The two armies being near each other, the apprehenſion the Queen was in of being deſerted by her troops made her capitulate with the confederates. ib.
She puts herſelf into their power. ib.
Bothwel retires to Dunbar. ib.
The Queen is confined in the caſtle of Rochlevin. ib.
A box, belonging to Bothwel, being intercepted, a letter found in it which diſcovered the conſpiracy againſt the late King. ib.
Bothwel withdraws to the iſles of Orkney. p. 289
June 24. The Queen is conſtrained to yield the crown to the Prince. ib.
She is permited to name a regent; ſhe names the earl of Murray. ib.
ditto 29. Inauguration of the young King. ib.
Some lords aſſemble at Hamilton, and form a party for the Queen. ib.
The earl of Murray arrives in Scotland; he ill uſes the Queen. ib.
He is acknowleged regent. ib.
The lords who met at Hamilton refuſe to go to the States. ib.
The regent takes from Balfour the government of Edinburg caſtle, and gives it to Grange. Page 289 An' 1567.
Twelve lords ſign a league in favor of the Queen. ib.
The regent takes poſſeſſion of fortreſſes. p. 290
Elizabeth requires the reſtitution of Calais, grounded on the treaty of Cateau. ib.
France makes her a refuſal. ib.
Negociation for Elizabeth's marriage with the archduke Charles. ib.
The negociation broke off. p. 291
John Baſtilowitz, grand duke of Moſcovy, ſends an embaſſy to Elizabeth to make an offenſive and defenſive league with her; to which ſhe anſwers in an ambiguous manner. ib.
Shan O Neal rebels in Ireland; he is murdered by his own people. ib.
Death of the duke of Norfolk. ib.
Affairs of France. ib.
The duke of Albe arrives at Bruſſels; he puts to death the counts of d'Egmond and de Horne. ib.
Montigny is put to death in Spain. ib.
The eſtates of the Prince of Orange confiſcated. ib.
The Prince of Conde blocks up Paris. ib.
La Noue ſeizes on Orleans. ib. Sept. 1.
Battle at the gates of Paris, in which Montmorency, the conſtable, is ſlain. ib. Nov. 10.
Elizabeth's menaces and intreaties procure a peace for the Hugenots of France. ib. 292 1568.
Chatherine di Medicis propoſes the duke of Anjou's marriage with Elizabeth. ib.
Philip II gives Elizabeth tokens of reſentment. ib.
Affairs of Scotland. ib.
Bothwel purſued flies into Denmark, where he is impriſoned. ib.
The Queen of Scotland makes her eſcape out of priſon. ib.
She marches with ſix thouſand men againſt the regent, who had but four thouſand. ib.
Battle of Glaſgow, where the Queen is defeated. ib.
She withdraws towards the frontiers. ib.
She ſends an expreſs to Elizabeth to aſk her protection. p. 293
She arrives in England, and writes to Elizabeth. ib.
Elizabeth orders her to be conducted to Carliſle, and treated as a Queen. ib.
She refuſes to ſee her till ſhe has juſtified herſelf. ib.
The council is divided concerning the manner in which Mary ought to be uſed. ib.
Elizabeth reſolves to detain her. p. 294
The regent of Scotland, notwithſtanding the oppoſition of the contrary party, and the intreaties of Elizabeth, aſſembles the ſtates, to condemn thoſe who had taken arms for the Queen. ib.
He perſecutes thoſe who were condemned. ib.
Mary offers to name commiſſioners to juſtify her cauſe before Elizabeth. ib.
Elizabeth writes to the regent, to ſend deputies to examine the difference between Mary and him. ib.
He reſolves to go in perſon with eleven deputies. p. 295
The conference is held at York. ib. October 4.
And continued at Hampton-court. ib.
They proceed to examine the evidences againſt Mary. p. 296, 297
Elizabeth will not decide the affair. p. 298
The regent informs her of Mary's intelligence with the duke of Norfolk. ib.
Elizabeth having had notice of ſome plots, which were forming in Mary's favor, has her tranſported to the caſtle of Tutbury. ib.
The Hugonots being perſecuted in France, aſk Elizabeth for ſuccor, who ſends them an hundred thouſand gold crowns, and a train of artillery. ib.
The duke d'Alva perſecutes the Proteſtants in the Low-countries. ib.

The

An' 1568. The Prince of Orange withdraws among the Hugonots in France. Page 298
A great number of Flemiſh families take refuge in England. ib.
Elizabeth ſeizes on a large ſum of money belonging to the Italian merchants, and deſigned for the duke d'Alva. Quarrel on this account. ib.
1569. Some lords conſpire the ruin of Cecil. p. 299
The Queen ſupports him. ib.
Story, an Engliſhman, and ſpy to the duke d'Alva, is taken in the Low-countries, and brought into England, where he is condemned to death. ib.
Hoſtilities between Philip and Elizabeth. ib.
She makes an alliance with the Czar. i
Mary's partizans, unknown to Elizabeth, contrive the duke of Norfolk's marriage with the Queen of Scots. p. 300
To which Mary conſents. ib.
This project is communicated to the Kings of France and Spain. ib.
Of which Elizabeth is informed. ib.
She forbids the duke to think of this match; from which he promiſes to deſiſt. ib. 301
He retires, but returns, and is ſent to the Tower. p. 301
His accomplices are baniſhed from court, excepting the earl of Leiceſter. ib.
The earls of Northumberland and Weſtmoreland rebel. ib.
The Queen, leaſt they might deliver Mary, has her removed to Coventry. ib.
The rebels diſperſe themſelves, and the earls make their eſcape. ib.
The Queen puniſhes ſome, and pardons the reſt. ib.
Leonard Dacres rebels. He raiſes an army, and ſeizes on ſome caſtles. p. 302
He is defeated, and eſcapes into Flanders. ib.
Commotions in Ireland, put an end to. ib.
The duke of Chateleraut would take upon him the regency of Scotland, but cannot ſucceed. ib.
He is impriſoned. p. 303
Mary writes to the ſtates of Scotland, to annul her marriage with Bothwel. p. 305
Elizabeth writes to them in favor of Mary. ib.
They make no anſwer to Mary, but they write to Elizabeth. ib.
The earl of Liddington arreſted by the regent, is carried off by Kircaldie. ib.
March 13. Mary's party very much weakened in Scotland. ib.
Affairs of France. Battle of Jarnac, in which the Prince de Condé is ſlain. ib. p. 306
September. Raiſing of the ſiege of Poitiers. ib.
October. The Hugonots loſe the battle of Moncontour. ib.
Elizabeth lends money to the admiral on the jewels of the Queen of Navarre, and permits the raiſing a company of 100 gentlemen, to ſerve in the Hugonots army. ib.
The King of France reduces St. John d'Angli. ib.
The duke d'Alva continues his oppreſions in the Low-countries. ib.
January. 1570. The regent of Scotland ſeizes the earl of Northumberland. ib.
The regent is aſſaſſinated. ib.
Some Scots waſte the frontiers of England. ib.
The earl of Liddington is ſet at liberty; he acts for Mary, and indeavors to unite Scotland againſt Elizabeth. ib.
She avoids the ſnare, by complaining only of the peace, and not againſt the whole nation. ib.
Grange ſets the duke of Chateleraut at liberty, with ſeveral other priſoners of the Queen's party. p. 307
Mary's party aſſembles their ſtates at Linlithgow, afterwards at Edinburgh, of which they, in vain, indeavor to become maſters. ib.
The Engliſh army, commanded by the earl of Eſſex, draws near. ib.
Elizabeth conſents to be a mediatrix between the two parties, but reſerves to herſelf the puniſhing the infringers of the peace. Page 307 An' 1570.
The Engliſh army waſtes all the lands belonging to thoſe who were concerned in the invaſion. ib.
The ſtates convoked in the King's name aſſemble at Edingurgh. ib. May.
Mary's partizans beſiege the caſtle of Glaſgow; Drury obliges their raiſing the ſiege. ib.
The ſtates chuſe an Inter-Rex. The earl of Lenox is elected. ib.
He is made regent. ib.
He takes the caſtle of Brechin from the earl of Huntley, and diſperſes his troops. ib.
The Pope cauſes a bull to be poſted up in London againſt Elizabeth. p. 308
Several plots in Mary's favor, are diſcovered. ib.
The biſhop of Roſs, Mary's embaſſador, is arreſted. ib.
The duke of Norfolk is ſet at liberty. ib.
Elizabeth makes ſeveral propoſitions to Mary; who makes but general anſwers to them, and deſires their being communicated to the heads of her party in Scotland. ib.
Mary's party makes particular anſwers to Elizabeth's propoſitions. ib. 309
France is not diſpoſed to put Mary in poſſeſſion of the two crowns of England and Scotland. p. 309
The biſhop of Roſs ſollicits the Pope, and the Kings of France and Spain, in favor of Mary, but without ſucceſs. ib. 310
Affairs of the Netherlands. p. 310
The French King grants a peace to the Hugonots to allure them. ib. Auguſt.
Catherine of Medicis propoſes to Elizabeth to marry the King her ſon; and upon her refuſal, ſhe propoſes to her the duke d'Anjou. ib.
Cecil is created baron Burleigh. ib. Jan. 1571.
Conference at London, between the two Scotiſh parties. ib. February. & March.
Elizabeth protracts the affair. ib.
The conference breaks up. p. 311
The Scots regent takes Dunbar by ſurprize. ib.
The archbiſhop of St. Andrew's, impeached of being an accomplice in the murder of the late King, is hanged. ib.
Elizabeth's miniſters prevail on her to negociate her marriage with the duke d'Anjou. ib.
Walſingham is ſent embaſſador to France. ib.
The negociation for the marriage is agreed upon. Both parties equally diſſemble. ib. 312 March.
They cannot agree on the article of religion. p. 312
The negociation breaks off. p. 313
Mary applies to Spain. ib.
She imploy's Ridolfi the Florentine. ib.
He ingages the duke of Norfolk in Mary's intereſt. ib.
The duke proceeds cautiouſly. ib.
Ridolfi's intrigues partly diſcovered. ib.
The biſhop of Roſs arreſted. p. 314
The duke of Norfolk betrayed by his ſecretary. ib.
He is arreſted and ſent to the Tower. ib. September.
He confeſſes part of what he is accuſed of. ib.
Conſultations about the biſhop of Roſs. ib.
He is brought before the council. ib.
He is ſent to the Tower. ib.
The Queen informs the court of France, of the duke of Norfolk's affair. p. 315
Act of parliament to maintain the Queen's title. ib.
Mary's party becomes maſters of Edinburgh, where the chiefs convoke the ſtates. ib. May.
The earl of Lenox aſſembles the ſtates of the King's party in one of the ſuburbs. ib.
The King's ſtates aſſemble at Sterling, and thoſe of the Queen at Edinburgh. ib. Auguſt.
Thoſe of Mary's party, project to ſeize the great men of the King's party aſſembled at Sterling. ib.

An' 1571. They take the regent, and the earl of Morton priſoners; but the earl of Mar, with the garriſon of the caſtle obliges them to withdraw. Page 315
The earl of Morton eſcapes. ib.
The regent is kill'd in cold blood. ib.
The earl of Mar is elected regent. ib.
Charles IX ſhews great favor to the Hugonots. p. 316
He concludes a marriage between the Princeſs Margaret his ſiſter, and the King of Navarre. ib.
Affairs of the Netherlands. ib.
Elizabeth refuſes to aſſiſt the Prince of Orange. ib.
Jan. 6. 1572. The duke of Norfolk is tried, condemned, and beheaded. ib.
The Queen creates ſeveral peers. ib.
Act againſt thoſe who ſhall attempt the delivering a priſoner attainted of high treaſon. ib.
Elizabeth examines the Queen of Scots. p. 317
April. A defenſive league between France and England concluded at Blois. p. 318 ditto 17. She ſwears to the defenſive league with France. ib.
Maſſacre in Paris on St. Bartholomew's day. ib.
Charles IX propoſes to Elizabeth the renewing the league with a new oath; the marrying the duke d'Alençon, and to ſtand godmother to his daughter. She accepts this latter propoſition. p. 319
The earl of Northumberland is beheaded. ib.
Affairs of Scotland. ib.
France ſuſpected by Elizabeth in regard to Scotland. ib.
Negociation of the regent with Mary's party. p. 320
Death of the regent; Morton elected regent. ib.
He is attached to England. ib.
The French court ſends Verac into Scotland, with a ſupply of money to maintain the Queen's party. ib.
Affairs of the Netherlands. ib.
De la Marc ſeizes on the Briel. ib.
The whole province of Holland, and ſome towns in Zealand, throw off the Spaniſh yoke. ib.
The duke of Medina-Celi is defeated at ſea by the confederates. ib.
Lewis, count de Naſſau, ſurprizes Mons. ib.
The ſupply ſent by Charles IX to the count de Naſſau, is defeated by the duke d'Alva. ib.
Sept. 19. The duke recovers Mons. ib.
Frederick de Toledo his ſon, ſeizes on Zutphen, Naerden, and ſeveral other towns. ib.
1573. Marriage with the duke of Alençon again propoſed to the Queen. p. 321
She eludes the complaints of France, concerning the aſſiſtance given to Rochelle. ib.
The regent of Scotland ſigns a treaty of peace with the chiefs of the Queen's party; which the ſtates of the kingdom ratifies. ib.
Grange, governor of Edinburgh caſtle, is not comprized in the treaty. ib.
Elizabeth makes a treaty with the regent. p. 322
She ſends troops and artillery into Scotland. ib.
Siege and taking of Edinburgh caſtle. ib.
Grange, and ſome others are hanged. ib.
Verac taken at Scarborough; ſent to London. ib.
Elizabeth's loftineſs to the French embaſſador. ib.
The biſhop of Roſs is baniſhed England. p. 323
France urges the Queen's marriage. ib.
June 25. Raiſing of the ſiege of Rochelle. ib.
The duke of Anjou is elected King of Poland. ib.
The Hugonots obtain a peace. ib.
Elizabeth refuſes the duke of Alençon's viſit. ib.
The earl of Eſſex obtains leave to go into Ireland, to make conqueſts at his own expenſes. The earl of Leiceſter prevents his ſucceeding. ib.
1574. Catherine of Medicis prevents the duke of Alençon deſigns, by procuring a guard to be ſet over him, and the King of Navarre. ib.
May 30. Death of Charles IX. ib.
The duke of Anjou, King of Poland, ſucceeds him under the name of Henry III. ib.
Marriage of the earl of Lenox. ib.
Affairs of the Netherlands. Page 323 An' 1574.
The confederates in the Low-countries, ſeize on Middleburgh. ib.
Lewis earl of Naſſau is defeated on Moker-heath, where himſelf, his brother Henry, and Chriſtoper earl Palatine, are ſlain. ib.
The revolted Spaniſh troops ſurprize and plunder Antwerp. ib.
Affairs of France. ib.
Henry III, makes war upon the Hugonots. ib. 1575.
He renews the treaty of Blois with Elizabeth. ib.
Elizabeth ſupplies the Prince of Condé with money. p. 324
Commotions in Scotland appeaſed. ib.
Death of the duke of Chateleraut. ib.
The earl of Eſſex dies in Ireland; the earl of Leiceſter privately marries his widow. 1576. ib.
Death of Don Luis de Zuniga Requeſens, governor of the Low-countries. ib.
The town of Aloſt is plundered by the revolted Spaniſh ſoldiers. ib.
A league made at Bruſſels to drive out the Spaniſh troops. ib.
The revolted Spaniſh troops plunder Maeſtricht, and Antwerp. ib.
Union or pacification of Ghent. ib.
The peace between the King of France and the Hugonots. May. 9. ib.
The duke of Alençon takes the title of duke d'Anjou. October. ib.
Begining of the league, or Holy Union. ib.
Arrival of Don Juan of Auſtria in the Low-countries. January. p. 325 1577.
Perpetual edict to keep the Spaniards out of the Low-countries. ib.
Don Juan, by ſurprize, ſeizes on the caſtle of Namur. ib.
The archduke Matthias is choſe governor by the confederates. The Prince of Orange is proclaimed his lieutenant. ib.
The States declare war againſt Don Juan. ib.
They ſend an embaſſy to Elizabeth. ib.
She lends them 100,000 l. ſterling. ib.
She writes to Philip II, to juſtify her aſſiſting the confederates p. 326
The Hugonots of France make a counter league. ib.
The edict of pacification is repealed, and new hoſtilities are begun. ib.
Henry III grants a peace to the Hugonots. ib.
Stukely, a fugitive Engliſhman, ingages Pope Gregory XIII, and the King of Spain, to undertake the conqueſt of Ireland. 1578. ib.
He puts to ſea from Civita-Vecchia with ſome ſhips, and arrives at Liſbon. ib.
Don Sebaſtion, King of Portugal, takes him with him to Africa, to make war upon the Moors. ib.
Don Sebaſtian, and Stukely, are ſlain in the battle of Alcazar. ib.
Several companies of Engliſh voluntiers inliſt themſelves in the ſervice of the States of the Netherlands. ib.
Don Juan defeats the army of the States at Gemblours, and takes from them ſeveral towns. ib.
They reject the peace offered them. ib.
The city of Amſterdam joins the confederates. ib.
The government of the city of Haerlem, of Utrecht, and of ſome others, is given to the Reformed. ib.
The duke d'Anjou is made protector of the Begic liberties. ib.
Diviſions among the confederates. ib.
The duke d'Anjou and Prince Caſimir, gives them ſuccor, which their diviſions render uſeleſs. p. 327
The duke d'Anjou withdraws into France. ib.
Caſimir croſſes into England. ib.
Don Juan of Auſtria dies. The Prince of Parma takes upon him the command of the army. Oct. 1: ib.

The

AN' 1578. The duke d'Anjou urges his marriage with Elizabeth. Page 327
She gives his envoy a favorable reception. ib.
Some Scots lords, diſſatisfied with the regent, ingage the young King to take the reins of government. p. 328
The young King ſends to Elizabeth, to require her giving him the eſtates of his grandfather the earl of Lenox, and the renewing the treaty. ib.
Elizabeth eludes his requeſts. ib.
The earl of Morton ſeizes on Sterling, and the King's palace, and re-aſſumes his authority. ib.
The earl of Athol, chancellor of Scotland dies. ib.
1579. Elizabeth ſhews a particular regard for Prince Caſimir. ib.
Simié envoy of France, puſhes on the affair of the duke d'Anjou, and indeavors to deſtroy the earl of Leiceſter. ib.
A piſtol fired in the barge where the Queen then was, with the French envoys. p. 329
The duke d'Anjou incognito viſits the Queen. ib.
Eſme Stuart baron of Aubigny, and Stuart of Oghiltry, favorites to James King of Scotland, give the King ill impreſſions againſt the earl of Morton, and indeavor to create a miſunderſtanding between the earl and Elizabeth. ib.
Negociation at Cologn for a peace with the Low-countries, without ſucceſs. ib.
Union of Utrecht. ib.
Taking of Maeſtricht by the duke of Parma; ſeveral towns ſurrender to him. ib.
January. Elizabeth forbids building houſes in London, be-1580. yond certain limits. ib.
Four prieſts, brought up in Engliſh ſeminaries, ſetled at Rome, and at Rheims, are put to death. p. 330
Two Jeſuits, the firſt ſent into England, to preach ſedition. ib.
Proclamation, ordering all the Engliſh to call home their children from foreign countries. ib.
Seven hundred Spaniards and Italians, under the leading of San Joſeppo, make a deſcent into Ireland, and build a fort, they called Del Oro. ib.
They are obliged to ſurrender at diſcretion. The Spaniards are put to the ſword, and all the Iriſh who join'd them are hang'd. ib.
Novemb. Francis Drake returns from his voyage round the world. ib.
The Spaniſh embaſſador makes great complaints againſt him. ib.
The Queen returns great part of the treaſures which Drake had taken from the Spaniards. ib.
Death of the earl of Arundel. ib.
The war on account of religion is terminated in France by a ſixth treaty of peace. ib.
Philip II ſeizes on the throne of Portugal, vacant by the death of King Henry. Don Antonio, prior of Crato, vainly indeavors to diſpute it with him. ib.
Affairs of Scotland. ib.
Aubigny is created duke of Lenox, and James Stuart is made earl of Arran. p. 331
Elizabeth ſends Bowes into Scotland to accuſe the duke of Lenox of having correſpondencies, prejudicial both to England and Scotland. ib.
Bowes is ill received. ib.
Elizabeth refuſes an audience to the baron of Humes, whom James ſent to juſtify his favorite. ib.
The earl of Morton is impeached of having been an accomplice in the murder of the late King, and is impriſoned. ib.
1581. Randolph, Elizabeth's envoy, not being able to obtain any thing in the earl of Morton's favor, indeavors to excite the Scots to an inſurrection; but has no effect. ib.
The earl of Morton is beheaded. ib.
James's two favorites render themſelves odious. AN' 1581. Page 331
The conditions of the match between Elizabeth and the duke d'Anjou are agreed to. ib.
The duke d'Anjou is proclaimed Sovereign of the confederated provinces in the Low-countries. p. 332
The States declare Philip to have forfeited his Sovereignty over theſe provinces. ib.
The duke d'Anjou obliges the Prince of Parma to raiſe the ſiege of Cambray. ib.
Elizabeth raiſes objections to her marriage. ib.
The duke d'Anjou arrives in England, where he is received with deference. ib.
The Queen gives him her ring. ib.
She alters her behavior towards him. p. 333
Don Antonio of Portugal withdraws into France, and afterwards into England. ib.
The parliament aſſembles. ib. January.
The indiſcretion of the Catholics, oblige the par- 1582.
liament to enact ſevere laws againſt them. ib.
The duke d'Anjou quits England. ib. February.
He is crowned duke of Brabant at Antwerp. p. 334
Elizabeth ſends the order of the garter to Frederic II King of Denmark. ib.
Henry III, acquaints Elizabeth with the duke of Guiſe's deſigns, in favor of the Queen of Scots. ib.
Conſpiracy of Ruthven. The conſpirators ſeize on the King of Scotland, and drive out the two favorites. ib.
Queen Mary conſents to aſſociate her ſon in the Sovereignty. ib.
The calendar reformed by Gregory XIII. p. 335
Elizabeth feigns a willingneſs to ſet Mary at liber- 1583.
ty. ib.
She makes her propoſitions to amuſe her. ib.
The duke of Lenox withdraws into France; and dies. ib.
King James, having approved in the aſſembly of the ſtates, what the lord Ruthven had done, he is ſet at liberty. ib.
He recalls the late earl of Arran. p. 336
He does not perform the amneſty he promiſed the confederates of Ruthven, which obliges them to withdraw. ib.
Elizabeth's letter to the King of Scotland; ſhe ſends Walſingham to him, who returns diſſatisfied. ib.
The duke d'Anjou projects the reducing Antwerp, and ſeven or eight other towns in one day, but fails in his deſign; he withdraws into France. ib.
A conſpiracy in Scotland againſt the earl of Ar- 1584.
ran. ib.
The conſpirators ſeize on Sterling. p. 337
The earl of Goury, one of the plotters being taken; the others, loſing courage, quit the kingdom. ib.
Goury is beheaded at Edinburgh. ib.
Elizabeth ſends Daviſion into Scotland, to indeavor the gaining over the earl of Arran, in which he ſucceeds. ib.
The earl of Hunſdon for England, and the earl of Arran for Scotland, make a treaty, by which the latter promiſes to hinder the King's marrying for the ſpace of three years. ib.
Elizabeth diſcovers Mary's ſecrets, through the means of Gray the Scots embaſſador. ib.
A conſpiracy is diſcovered in favor of Mary; Throckmorton is ſeized; Paget and Charles Arundel withdraw into France. ib.
The Catholics indeavor to traduce the Queen, in accuſing her of having put a great many of them to death without any ground. ib.
The Queen reprimands the judges for being too ſevere. ib.

They

An' 1584. They maintain they never put any to death for their religion. Page 337
Elizabeth tranſports ſeventy prieſts, ſome of whom were condemned to death p. 338
The Spaniſh embaſſador is diſcovered to have been ingaged in the plot formed to carry off Mary. ib.
He is deſired to appear in the council, where he makes an ill defenſe ib.
He is ſent out of the kingdom ib.
The Queen ſends to inform Philip, who refuſes an audience to her envoy. ib.
Throckmorton is hanged ib.
Elizabeth renews the negociation with Mary ib.
The negociation is broke off. ib.
Diſcovery of another plot between the Pope, the King of Spain and the duke of Guiſe, for the invaſion of England. ib. 339
A general aſſociation is made in England to proſecute to death thoſe who attempt any thing againſt the Queen. p. 339
Mary makes propoſitions to Elizabeth who refuſes to have any hand in them. ib.
Mary is given in cuſtody to ſir Drue Drury. ib.
The Prince of Orange is murdered by Baltazar Gerard. ib.
The States-general confer the government of Holland and Zealand on Maurice, his ſecond ſon. p. 340
The duke of Parma lays ſiege to Antwerp. ib.
The States take a reſolution to give themſelves up to France; Henry refuſes their offers. ib.
June. The duke d'Anjou dies. ib.
The duke of Guiſe renews the league ib.
Decem. 31. He makes a particular league with the King of Spain, to place the cardinal de Bourbon on the throne after the death of Henry III in prejudice of the King of Navarre. ib.
1585. Doctor Parry's plot, to kill the Queen diſcovered. ib.
He is executed. ib.
The parliament ratifies the general aſſociation. ib.
They make a ſtatute for authorizing twenty-four commiſſaries named by the Queen, to make a ſearch after thoſe who ſhould excite any rebellion in the kingdom; attempt the Queen's life, or pretend any right to the crown. ib.
Another act againſt the Papiſts. ib.
The earl of Arundel is ſeized, on his leaving the kingdom. p. 341
The earl of Northumberland kills himſelf in the Tower. ib.
Elizabeth manaced from diverſe quarters. ib.
She ſends embaſſadors into Germany and Denmark to indeavor to ingage the Proteſtant Princes in a defenſive league with England. p. 342
She ſends Wotton into Scotland, to break the match between James and the King of Denmark's daughter. ib.
Lord Ruſſel is ſlain on the frontiers of Scotland. ib.
Elizabeth requires a reparation. ib.
She permits the fugitive Scots to return home. ib.
Wotton attempts to carry off the King; he fails in his enterprize and makes his eſcape. ib.
The fugitives, returned to Scotland, ſeize on the King's perſon; they are reſtored to their poſſeſſions. ib. 343
Colonel Stuart enters at Copenhagen upon the negociation of the King's marriage. p. 343
Elizabeth refuſes the ſovereignty of the Low-countries, which was propoſed to her. ib.
She concludes a treaty with the States, by which ſhe ingages to give them ſuccor. ib.
She makes the earl of Leiceſter general of her auxiliary troops. ib.
She publiſhes a manifeſto, to juſtify her giving ſuccor to the States. ib.
She ſends a fleet to America againſt the Spaniards. ib.
The Engliſh fleet ſeizes on St. Jago of Cape Verd; St. Domingo's capital, Carthagena, and burns St. Antonio and Helena in Florida, afterwards return to England, loaded with booty. Page 343 An' 1585.
John Davis diſcovers a new paſſage. ib.
Affairs of France. ib.
Henry III is conſtrained by the duke of Guiſe, to forſake the King of Navarre, to publiſh an edict againſt the Hugonots, and to join the duke to extirpate them. ib. 344
The Prince de Conde is compelled to take refuge in England. p. 344
Elizabeth ſupplies him with fifty thouſand crowns, and lends him ten ſhips, with which he relieves Rochelle. ib.
Gregory XIII dies; Sixtus V ſucceeds him ib. April.
The earl of Leiceſter goes to Holland; the States declare him governor and captain general of the united provinces. ib. January. 1586.
Of which Elizabeth complains and reproaches the earl for having accepted the dignity. ib.
He forms ſchemes againſt the liberty of the United Provinces. ib.
He returns to England. ib.
Elizabeth propoſes an alliance with James for the defenſe of religion ib.
The French embaſſador vainly oppoſes it. p. 345
The treaty of alliance and ſtrict harmony between the two crowns is ſigned at Berwick. ib.
A conſpiracy againſt the Queen. p. 346
Mary writes to Babington, one of the conſpirators; five more join him to aſſaſſinate the Queen. ib.
Correſpondence by letters between Mary and the conſpirators. ib.
Gifford makes a full diſcovery to Walſingham, who makes uſe of him to convey letters to Mary, and to bring back anſwers. ib.
The conſpirators are ſeized, who accuſe one another and lay open the whole affair. p. 347
All Mary's papers are ſeized. ib.
Nave and Curle her two ſecretaries are arreſted. ib.
Mary's paper are by ſubtility got out of the French embaſſadors hands. ib.
Execution of fourteen conſpirators. ib.
Elizabeth communicates authentic copies of Mary's letters to the French King. ib.
The court reſolves to try and condemn Mary. ib.
Elizabeth names her judges ib.
Elizabeth's commiſſion. ib. October 9.
Mary refuſes to acklowlege the competency of her judges. p. 348
She at length determines to anſwer before them. ib. ditto 14.
The judges meet in the caſtle of Fotheringay. ib.
Mary appears before them. ib.
They proceed to her trial. ib.
She requires to be heard in preſenſe of the Queen and her council, in parliament aſſembled. p. 351
The court adjourns to Weſtminſter. ib.
They meet in the Star-chamber and pronounce ſentenſe againſt Mary, containing her having tranſgreſſed the ſtatute of the foregoing year. ditto 25. p. 352
The judges declare, their ſentence can be of no prejudice to the King of Scotland. ib.
The parliament aſſembles, and confirms the ſentenſe, they petition the Queen to put it in execution. Octob. 29. ib.
She anſwers them in a manner which expreſſes her perplexity, and uncertainty how to act. ib.
She deſires both houſes to ſeek an expedient to ſave the Queen's life, without indangering the ſtate. p. 354
The two houſes perſiſt in their demand. ib.
The Queen anſwers them by a ſpeech much to the purpoſe of her firſt. ib.
The parliament is prorogued. p. 355
Mary informed of her ſentenſe; ſhe receives it with great reſolution. ib.

The

AN' 1587. The French embaſſador makes ſollicitations in her favor. Page 355
The ſentenſe is publiſhed in London, Dec. 6. ib.
Mary writes to Elizabeth, to aſk certain favors, concerning her execution; her burial, and her domeſtics. ib.
The King of Scotland vainly intercedes for his mother. ib.
The French King ſends an embaſſador to Elizabeth ſeemingly to intercede for Mary, but in fact to haſten her death. ib.
The French embaſſador is diſcovered to have corrupted two aſſaſſins to murder the Queen. p. 356
The people loudly demand Mary's being put to death. ib.
Feb. 1. Elizabeth gives Daviſon a writing under her own hand, by which ſhe commands him to draw up a commiſſion for Mary's execution, and to paſs it under the great ſeal; at the ſame time with inſtructions not to communicate it to any living ſoul. ib.
ditto 2. She ſends to him to haſten the execution of the order; and having learned it was already drawn up and ſealed, ſhe breaks out into a paſſion, pretending he was too expeditious; nevertheleſs, ſhe does not take the order from him. ib.
Daviſon, perplexed by the Queen's contrary ſteps, confers with one of the privy council, who informs the other members of the affair. ib.
The council unanimouſly reſolves to have the commiſſion put in execution; which is given to Beale, who, with two executioners, ſets out for Fotheringhay. ib.
After Beale's departure the Queen informs Daviſon ſhe had altered her reſolution; however ſhe does not recall Beale, tho' ſhe had time enough to do it. p. 357 ditto 28. The Queen of Scotland is beheaded. ib.
For which Elizabeth expreſſes a great affliction. ib.
She writes to the King of Scotland in her own juſtification. ib.
Daviſon is accuſed of a miſtake, and of having diſobeyed the Queen's orders. ib.
He is fined ten thouſand pounds ſterling, and to be impriſoned as long as the Queen pleaſes. ib.
The King of Scotland immediately reſolves to revenge the death of his mother; but his own intereſt made him ſtifle his reſentment. p. 358
The Queen ſends Drake with a fleet againſt the Spaniards; he does them a great deal of damage. p. 359
Cavendiſh does them as much on the coaſt of Peru and Chili. ib.
The United States complain of the earl of Leiceſter. ib.
They give Prince Maurice the command of their army. ib.
The earl returns to Holland to ſuccor Sluys, which the duke of Parma beſieged; he does not ſucceed. ib.
He intends to reduce ſeveral towns at a time; but his deſign upon Leyden having been diſcovered, the Queen recalls him. ib.
Willoughby is ſent in his ſtead, tho' only to command the Engliſh troops. ib.
Elizabeth accepts the mediation offered her by Philip, to make a peace between this Prince and the States. ib.
The negociation is begun; which the preparation of Spain interrupts. p. 360
Bull of Sixtus V againſt which he abſolves her ſubjects from their oaths of allegiance, and makes over the kingdom to the firſt who gets poſſeſſion of it. ib.
Philip prepares a fleet, called the Invincible Armada, of hundred and fifty large ſhips, to invade England. ib.
The duke of Parma brings an army of thirty thouſand men on the coaſts of the Netherlands, with deſign to join the fleet and make a deſcent in England. Page 360 AN' 1587.
Elizabeth puts herſelf in a poſture of defenſe both by ſea and land. ib.
The duke of Medina-Celi ſets out from the mouth of the Tagus with the Invincible fleet; they are ſcattered by a ſtorm. p. 361 June 3. 1588.
They get together and ſet ſail from Corunna. ib. July 12.
The Engliſh take ſeveral of the Spaniſh ſhips. ib.
A ſea fight between the two fleets with equal advantage on either ſide. ib. ditto 24.
The Engliſh and Dutch ſhips lying off the coaſts of Flanders, hinder the duke of Parma from puting to ſea. ib.
The invincible fleet comes up as far as Calais. ib.
Eight fire ſhips, ſent by the Engliſh admiral, ſtrike a terror among the Spaniſh, which ſcatter themſelves, ſome of them are taken by the Engliſh and others by the Zealanders. ib.
The Spaniards reſolve to withdraw by the North ſea. p. 362
Several of their ſhips run aſhoar on the coaſt of Scotland and Ireland. ib.
Philip without the leaſt emotion receives the news of this ill ſucceſs. ib.
Elizabeth's public thankſgiving to God for this victory. ib.
Death of the earl of Leiceſter. ib. Dec. 14.
The duke of Parma lays ſiege to Bergen-op-Zoom; the vigorous reſiſtance of the Engliſh governor obliges him to break up the ſiege. ib.
The King of France cauſes the duke of Guiſe and his brother to be murdered. ib.
The King of Denmark having learned that James had taken ſome ſteps towards marrying Catherine ſiſter to the King of Navarre, gives his daughter to the duke of Brunſwick. p. 363
A conſpiracy formed by the earl of Huntley and Bothwell, againſt the King of Scotland, is diſcovered. ib. 1589.
The earl of Arundel is condemned to death; the Queen pardons him. ib.
She ingages Drake and Norris to pay the expenſes of an expedition by ſea againſt Spain. ib.
They ſet out from Plymouth, land at Corunna; they carry the lower town by ſtorm; they break up the ſiege of the higher town to march againſt the count d'Andrada, and kill three thouſand of his men. ib. April 5.
They ſet ſail for Portugal, where they take Penicha. ib.
Norris marches towards Liſbon, and reduces one of the ſuburbs; but Drake not being able to recover the Tagus with his fleet, Norris withdraws. ib.
Drake takes the town of Caſcaes and blows up the caſtle. ib.
He ſeizes on ſixty ſhips loaded with corn, belonging to the Hanſe-towns. ib.
He takes Vigo, burns it, and returns to England. ib.
The Hanſe-towns make their complaints. ib.
The Queen declares their veſſels prizes. p. 364
The confederates ſtir up almoſt all France to a rebellion againſt Henry III, who is obliged to call the King of Navarre to his aſſiſtance. ib.
He lays ſiege to Paris. ib.
James Clement, a Benedictine monk, kills him with a dagger. ib.
Before he expired, he named the King of Navarre for his ſucceſſor, who took the name of Henry IV. ib.
He aſks Elizabeth for ſuccor, who ſends him both money and troops. ib.
The duke of Mayenne proclaims the old cardinal de Bourbon King. ib.

An' 1589. James of Scotland marries the King of Denmark's second daughter. Page 364
1590. Henry IV wins the battle of Yvry againſt the duke of Mayenne; he blocks up Paris, and carries the ſuburbs. p. 365
The duke of Parma obliges the King to raiſe the blockade, and afterwards withdraws to the Netherlands. ib.
Prince Maurice takes Breda by ſurprize. ib.
The duke of Mercœur, with the aſſiſtance of the Spaniards, reduces Bretagne. ib.
Death of Walſingham and Randolph. ib.
1591. Elizabeth promiſes to ſuccor Henry IV. ib.
She ſends him three thouſand men. ib.
The earl of Eſſex leads three thouſand more, on condition that Henry beſieges Roan. ib.
Henry does not keep his word, and the earl of Eſſex returns to England leaving his troops with him. p. 366
The Queen complains of Henry, who, to ſatisfy her, inveſts Roan. ib.
The earl of Eſſex goes to the ſiege, notwithſtanding the Queen's poſitive order to the contrary. ib.
Henry ſends Du Pleſſis Mornay to aſk aſſiſtance of Elizabeth, who obtains nothing. ib.
The earl of Eſſex returns to England, and pacifies the Queen. ib.
The duke of Parma raiſes the ſiege of Roan. ib.
Ill ſucceſs of Thomas Howard's expedition againſt the Spaniſh fleets in the Indies. ib.
1592. Elizabeth makes a new treaty with Henry IV. ib.
He violates the treaty, in imploying her troops in Normandy, in lieu of Bretagne. ib.
The earl Bothwell, after having vainly attempted to ſeize the King's perſon, makes his eſcape into England. p. 367
Sir Walter Raleigh takes a Spaniſh carrac of five decks coming from the Indies richly laden. ib.
The Thames almoſt dry at London. ib.
February. The parliament aſſembles. ib.
1593. They make an act againſt thoſe who don't aſſiſt at the divine ſervice eſtabliſhed by law. ib.
They grant the Queen a very conſiderable ſupply. ib.
Elizabeth refuſes to deliver up Bothwell to King James, but ſhe ſends him out of England. p. 368
He has the aſſurance to appear before the King, who ſeeing him ſupported by a powerful party is conſtrained to grant him his pardon. ib.
Henry IV changes his religion. ib.
He indeavors to juſtify himſelf with Elizabeth, who writes to reproach him. ib.
Henry continues to deceive the Queen. p. 369
The preparations of the King of Spain oblige Elizabeth to make an offenſive league with Henry notwithſtanding the ſubjects of complaint ſhe had againſt him. ib.
Heſquet is hanged for indeavoring to perſuade the earl of Darby to take the title of King. ib.
The earl dies by poiſon. ib.
The earl de Fuentes and Don Diego d'Iberra govern the Low-countries. ib.
1594. They bribe two Portugueſe, and Roderigo Lopez a jew and phyſician to the Queen, to poiſon her. ib.
Lopez and his accomplices are executed. ib.
It is diſcovered that Iberra had ſuborned Patric Cullin, Edmund York, and Richard Williams to the ſame intent, and to ſet fire to the fleet. ib.
Cullin is executed. ib.
Elizabeth complains of theſe plots to the archduke but to no effect. ib.
Henry IV having reduced Paris carries the war into Bretagne. ib.
Elizabeth intreats King James to act againſt the Catholics; the King makes her an anſwer little ſatisfactory. p. 370
Bothwell having got together ſome troops ſurpriſes Leith. Page 370 An' 1594.
Having been worſted in a battle againſt the King's troops, he withdraws towards the frontiers. ib.
James alters his conduct and acts againſt the Catholics. ib.
The Catholics form a project of procuring the crown of England for the infanta Iſabella; Philip makes preparations to put it in execution. ib. 1595.
The earl of Tir-oen rebels in Ireland. ib.
Henry requires a ſupply from Elizabeth, who complains of him, and refuſes his requeſt. ib.
Elizabeth and James keep up a good harmony. p. 371
York and Williams are executed. ib. February.
Ferdinand de Velaſco enters Franche-comté with an army of eighteen thouſand men. ib. April.
The count de Fuentes enters Picardy and takes Catelet. ib.
He beſieges Dourlens; beats the French who came to relieve the town, and takes it by aſſault. ib.
The Spaniards reduce Cambray. ib.
Henry ſends Lomenie to Elizabeth to aſk ſuccor; the embaſſador being denied threatens the Queen. ib.
The Spaniards make a deſcent in Cornwal, and burn ſome villages. p. 372
Henry complains of the States; they ſend him troops, money and corn. ib.
Elizabeth demands the re-imburſement of the money ſhe had lent them.
They make an agreement for a time with the Queen. ib.
The Hanſe-towns complain againſt Elizabeth. ib.
Raleigh, Drake and Hawkins enter upon new enterprizes in America, but with little ſucceſs. ib.
The two latter die in this expedition. ib.
The earl of Tir-oen obtains a truce. ib. 1596.
Henry IV beſieges La Fere. ib.
Albertus the archduke lays ſiege to Calais. ib.
Henry ſends to Elizabeth for aſſiſtance. ib.
Taking of Calais and Ardres. ib.
Elizabeth lends Henry ſome money. ib.
She fits out a fleet againſt Spain of an hundred and fifty ſail, with twenty-two Dutch ſhips, under the command of admiral Howard. p. 373
The earl of Eſſex is made general of the land forces. ib.
The fleet appears before Cadiz. ib. June 19.
They attack the Spaniſh ſhips and oblige them to run aſhore; two of them are taken and one burned. ib.
The earl of Eſſex with eight hundred men, takes Cadiz and plunders the town. ib.
The merchant ſhips are burned. ib
The town and ſome villages are fired. ib.
The fleet returns to England with great booty. ib.
Robert Cecil is made ſecretary of ſtate, and ſir Francis Vere governor of the Briel. ib.
The Queen again demands her money of the States. ib.
Offenſive and defenſive league between France and England; the States enter into the league. ib
Philip fits out a new fleet againſt England; which is ſcattered by a ſtorm. p. 374
Prince Maurice wins the battle of Turnhout againſt the Spaniards. ib. January. 1597.
Portocarrero takes Amiens by ſurpriſe. ib. March
The Queen being informed Philip had a deſign upon Ireland, fits out a fleet againſt Spain under the command of the earl of Eſſex and Raleigh; they return without any ſucceſs in their expedition. ib.
A Spaniſh fleet deſigned to make a deſcent in Cornwal is diſperſed by a ſtorm. ib.
Admiral Howard is made earl of Nottingham and the earl of Eſſex lord marſhal. ib.
The diſpute of the Hanſe-towns revived. ib.

Henry

May. Henry IV beſieges Amiens. Page 375
An' 1597. He requires of Elizabeth the ſupply of four thouſand men. ib.
The Queen offers to ſend the troops on condition he will pay them. ib.
Henry threatens to make a peace without her. ib.
Elizabeth juſtifies her conduct by the treaty. ib.
September. She lends Henry money in lieu of ſending troops. ib.
Taking of Amiens. ib.
Henry privately negociates with Spain, upon which the Queen calls a parliament which grants her a conſiderable ſum. ib.
1598. Henry concludes a peace with Spain, without his allies. ib.
They complain to no purpoſe. ib.
The Queen writes him a very reſenting letter. p. 376
May 10. Henry's plenipotentiaries ſign the peace of Vervins without his allies. ib.
June 12. He ratifies the peace. ib.
Elizabeth makes a new treaty with the States. ib.
The earl of Tir-oen becomes formidable in Ireland. p. 377
James inſiſts on being declared preſumptive heir of Elizabeth. ib.
He writes to the Pope. ib.
Edward Squire is ſeized in London for attempting to kill the Queen by poiſoning her ſaddle-bow. ib.
September. Philip II dies. ib.
He leaves the ſovereignty of the Low-countries as a dowry to Infanta Iſabella his daughter, in marrying her to Albert the archduke. ib.
Philip III ſucceeds him. ib.
The Queen gives the earl of Eſſex a box on the ear. ib.
The lord treaſurer William Cecil, baron Burleigh dies; lord Buckhurſt ſucceeds him in his poſt. ib.
Affairs of Ireland. ib.
1599. The province of Munſter in Ireland riſes in rebellion. ib.
The earl of Eſſex is made lord lieutenant. p. 378
March. He goes to Ireland, where he acts contrary to his inſtructions. ib.
He treats with the earl of Tir-oen and grants him a truce. ib.
The Queen ſuſpects the earl of Eſſex and writes to him in ſharp terms. p. 379
The earl of Southampton diſſuades him from the reſolution he had taken of going into England, with the flower of his troops, to revenge himſelf on his enemies. ib.
He goes to England without leave; he makes but a weak juſtification for himſelf. ib.
He is arreſted. ib.
He makes his own apology; and but an ill defenſe. ib.
The earl of Tir-oen breaks the truce. ib.
The earl of Eſſex's friends cabal among the people. ib.
October. The Queen aſſembles the council in which the earl's conduct is examined and condemned. ib.
He gives himſelf up to devotion. ib.
The archduke, to amuſe Elizabeth, propoſes a peace. ib.
1600. The earl of Tir-oen reduces the whole province of Ulſter; but lord Montjoy the new lord lieutenant of Ireland puts a ſtop to his progreſs. ib.
Conference at Boulogne for a peace between Spain and England, fruitleſs. ib.
July 2. Battle of Newport gained by Prince Maurice againſt the archduke. p. 380
Clement VIII ſends two briefs into England, one to the Roman clergy, and the other to the people, by which he forbids the acknowleging any Sovereign after the death of Elizabeth, who does not by oath promiſe to maintain their religion with the utmoſt of his power. ib.
The Ruthvens conſpire to kill the King of Scots; he eſcapes; the two Ruthvens are killed and their accomplices condemned to death. Page 380 An' 1600.
Decree of the ſtates obliging thoſe who bore the name of Ruthven to change it. ib.
The Queen permits the earl of Eſſex to retire to his own houſe, under the guard of ſir Richard Berkley. ib.
He appears before the council, where he is accuſed of having failed in the obedience and deference he owed the Queen. ib.
He acknowleges himſelf guilty, and is condemned to loſe his poſts, and to be impriſoned during the Queen's pleaſure. ib.
The Queen grants him his liberty, but orders him to keep from court. ib.
The Queen having refuſed him a requeſt, he forms pernicious ſchemes. p. 381
He ruins himſelf in the Queen's thoughts. ib. 1601.
He writes to the King of Scotland, that a plot was made to deprive him of the crown of England in favor of the Infanta of Spain. ib.
He draws together Preſbyterian miniſters, Catholics, and ſoldiers, and eſtabliſhes a council. ib.
He, with his council, projects the ſeizing the palace, and the Queen's perſon. p. 382
He is ſent for by the council; he deſires to be excuſed. ib.
He reſolves to ſtir up a rebellion in London. ib.
The Queen ſends him three lords, whom he detains priſoners. ib.
He goes thro' the city to raiſe an inſurrection but cannot ſucceed. ib.
He is proclaimed a traitor. ib
He withdraws with much difficulty to his own houſe where he is inveſted. ib.
He ſurrenders, and is ſent to the Tower; the other conſpirators alſo are impriſoned. p. 383
Thomas Lee's execution. ib. Febr. 12.
The earl of Eſſex and Southampton are condemned to death. ib. ditto 19.
The earl of Eſſex diſcovers all his accomplices; he is very penitent. ib.
He is beheaded. ib. ditto 25.
Some of his accomplices are executed; the Queen pardons ſeveral others. p. 384
Embaſſy from the King of Scotland. ib.
Begining of the ſiege of Oſtend. ib. July.
Henry IV goes to Calais; Elizabeth and he reciprocally compliment each other. ib. Auguſt.
The Queen, upon complaint of the commons, aboliſhes all monopolies. p. 385
Don Juan d'Aguilar leads ſuccor to the earl of Tir-oen, and reduces Kinſale. ib.
Tir-oen is defeated; the Spaniards withdraw. ib.
Elizabeth equips a fleet againſt Spain. ib. 1602.
Taking of a rich Spaniſh carac. ib.
Gallies taken, by the Engliſh and Dutch ſhips, from Spinola. ib. September.
Proclamation againſt Jeſuits. p. 386
Conſpiracy againſt Henry IV. ib.
He beheads the marſhal de Biron. ib.
The earl of Tir-oen ſubmits to the Queen. ib.
Elizabeth falls ſick. ib.
Her courtiers forſake her to pay their deference to the Scots King. ib.
She names the King of Scotland for her ſucceſſor. ib.
She dies. ib. March 24.
Her character. ib. 387

JAMES I.

James VI King of Scotland is proclaimed at London, by the name of James I. p. 388
James ſets out from Edinburgh to repair to London. p. 389 April 5. 1603.
He arrives at York; the Engliſh peers meet him. ib. ditto 15.
He arrives at Newark, and orders a cut-purſe to be hang'd without any other trial. ib.

He

An' 1603. He arrives at Theobalds, a houſe belonging to ſir Robert Cecil, whither the council goes to compliment him. Page 389
May 4. He puts ſeveral Scots lords in his council. p. 390
He makes ſeveral knights and peers. ib.
ditto 7. The earl of Eſſex's ſon, and the earl of Southampton, are reſtored to their liberty, eſtates and honors. ib.
He ſends for the Queen. p. 391
June 7. Valentine Thomas is hanged. ib.
ditto 8. Mr. de Roſny embaſſador from Henry IV arrives at London. ib.
Embaſſy from the archduke. Another from the King of Spain. p. 392
The King retires to Wilton on account of the peſtilence in London. ib.
June 23. The King repeats the letters of repriſals againſt the Spaniards. ib.
July 3. The conſpiracy of the lords Cobham and Brook, ſir Walter Raleigh, and others, to place Arbella Stuart on the throne, is diſcover'd and the conſpirators ſeiz'd. ib.
ditto 25. The King and Queen are crown'd. ib.
Auguſt 1. Proclamation forbiding thoſe who had any requeſts to make, going near the court till winter, on account of the plague. ib.
The plague makes great havock. ib.
Nov. 4. The conſpirators are conducted to Wincheſter, where they are condemn'd and ſome executed. ib.
Decem. Lord Cobham, ſir Walter Raleigh, and ſome others, are ſent back to the Tower. Sir Walter Raleigh remains there twelve years. ib.
In the year 1603 the plague carried off in London 38242 ſouls. ib.
The Catholics preſent a petition, the Puritans another. ib.
1604. Conference at Hampton court between the biſhops
Jan. 14. and the Preſbyterians or Puritans, in which the King preſided. p. 393
James's threats to the Preſbyterian miniſters. ib.
Feb. 22. Proclamation ordering the Jeſuits to quit the kingdom. p. 394
Death of Whitgift archbiſhop of Canterbury. ib.
Proclamation againſt the Puritans. ib.
March. Proclamation to aboliſh ſeveral abuſes. ib.
Another againſt hunting. ib.
ditto 25. The King and Queen make their entry into London. ib.
The parliament aſſembles. The King makes a ſpeech very artificial with regard to the government; very ambiguous with regard to religion, and very clear with his deſign of uniting the two kingdoms. p. 395--400
Act to confirm the King's title. Commiſſioners to examine the union of the two kingdoms. p. 401
The people's diſcontent about religion; artifice of the Jeſuits to foment it. ib.
The King aſſumes the title of King of Great Britain. ib.
A difference between the King and commons. ib.
June 16. The commons addreſs to the King, leting him
July 7. know their privileges. p. 402
The parliament is prorogu'd to the ſeventh of February 1604-5. ib.
ditto 18. The treaty of peace between England and Spain. ib.
Mar. 28. Earl of Nottingham ſent embaſſador extraordi-
1605. nary to Spain. p. 403
April 19. The earl of Hertford is ſent embaſſador to Bruſſels. ib.
July 1. Affront to the Engliſh colors by a Dutch ſhip of war. ib.
Novem. 4. Gunpowder plot diſcover'd; particulars on it and proceedings thereupon. p. 404, 405 ditto 9. The parliament aſſembles. p. 406
The King's ſpeech concerning the plot. ib.
The parliament is prorogu'd to the twenty-firſt of January. Page 407
The lords Mordant and Sturton are condemn'd in large fines by the ſtar-chamber. ib.
The parliament re-aſſembles. ib.
Some of the conſpirators are executed. ib.
The report of the King being kill'd at Oking is ſpread in London. ib.
Embaſſadors congratulate the King on the diſcovery of the powder plot. ib.
Garnet and Oldcorn jeſuits, executed for the conſpiracy. ib.
The parliament orders the oath of allegiance to be taken, and grants a large ſubſidy. ib.
Urban VIII, forbids by a brief, all the Engliſh Catholics to take the oath of allegiance. p. 408
The fifth of November appointed to be kept as a holy-day. ib.
The parliament prorogu'd to the eighteenth of November. p. 409
Arrival of the King of Denmark at London. ib.
The King of Denmark returns Auguſt fourteen. vid. note (1). ib.
Arrival of the Prince Vaudemont, third ſon of the duke of Lorrain. ib.
The parliament aſſembles. ib.
The affair of the union of the two kingdoms is debated. ib.
The King's ſpeech in parliament, to confirm the union of the two kingdoms. ib.
The union is rejected. ib.
Inſurrection in Northamptonſhire. p. 410
The parliament is prorogu'd to the ſixteenth of November. ib.
The earl of Tir-oen's flight. ib.
The King's apology on the motives alleged by the earl for his flight. ib.
Negociations of peace with the Netherlands. ib.
The proroguing of the parliament is continued to the nineteenth of February, 1609. ib.
Jervis a prieſt and Thomas Garnet a jeſuit are executed. ib.
Death of the earl of Dorſet high treaſurer. ib.
The earl of Saliſbury ſucceeds him ib.
Monopolies of cloaths and allom. ib.
Diſpute between the King and the Dutch concerning the fiſhery. ib.
Bancroft perſecutes the Puritans. ib.
Negociations for peace between Spain and the United provinces. p. 411
A truce for twelve years between Spain and the united provinces.
The books of Cowell and Blackwood publiſhed, concerning the abſolute power of the King ib.
The people are diſpleaſed with the government. ib.
The Catholics are favored. ib.
The parliament aſſembles. ib.
The King, by his high treaſurer, aſks money. p. 412
Nothing but oppreſſions is heard talk'd of in the houſe of commons. ib.
The high commiſſion is complain'd of. ib.
The King's ſpeech to both houſes, he advances maxims with which the commons are not pleaſed. p. 413
Henry, the King's eldeſt ſon, is, with great ſolemnity, created Prince of Wales. ib.
Henry IV King of France kill'd by Ravaillac. p. 414
Proclamation ordering all jeſuits to leave the kingdom before the fifth of July. ib.
The parliament is prorogu'd to the ſixteenth of October. ib.
Death of Bancroft archbiſhop of Canterbury: Abbot ſucceeds him. ib.
The parliament aſſembles, but are ill diſpoſed to the King. ib.
The King diſſolves the parliament by a proclamation. ib.
An' 1605. Jan. 21. June 3. 1606. March 22. April 24. May 3. ditto 21. Octob. 21. ditto 27. July 17. Auguſt 14. Sept. 23. Nov. 18. 1607. March 31. July 4. September. 1608. April 11. ditto 9. May 8. 1609. January. Feb. 19. 1610. June 4. July. Octob. 16.

Juliers

AN' 1610. Juliers taken. Page 414
February. Robert Carr, a Scotiſh lad about twenty, becomes 1611. the King's favorite. p. 415
The King ſides with the Gomariſts againſt the Arminians. ib.
1612. Carr made baron of Branſpeth, and viſcount Rocheſter, and privy couſellor. p. 416
Amours of the viſcount Rocheſter with the counteſs of Eſſex. ib.
Earl of Saliſbury's death. Suffolk made treaſurer. p. 417
May. The body of Mary Stuart the King's mother is removed to Henry VII's chapel in Weſtminſter-Abby. ib.
June. Lord Sanquir a Scots nobleman is hanged at London. ib.
July. Sir Robert Sherley a Scotſman, arrives at London in quality of embaſſador from the King of Perſia. ib.
Octo. 16. Arrival of Frederick V Elector Palatine. ib.
Nov. 12. Death of the Prince of Wales. ib.
The Elector Palatine, and Maurice Prince of Orange, are made knights of the garter. p. 418
1613. Marriage of the Elector Palatine, with Elizabeth
Feb. 14. the King's daughter. ib.
April 28. They ſet out for Germany. ib.
The earl of Eſſex's ſtory. ib.
The viſcount Rocheſter's deſign to get the earl of Eſſex's marriage broke, and to marry the counteſs; his confident Overbury oppoſing it, he induces the King upon another pretenſe, to ſend him to the Tower. ib. p. 419
The counteſs of Eſſex accuſes her huſband of impotency, and requires her being divoreed. ib.
The marriage is annulled. p. 420
Nov. 4. The viſcount Rocheſter is made earl of Somerſet. p. 421
Decem. 26. He marries the counteſs of Eſſex. ib.
January. Overbury is poiſoned in the Tower, by orders from the earl and counteſs of Somerſet. ib.
Death of the earl of Northampton. ib.
The Preſbyterians are hindered to ſettle in New England. p. 422
Creation of knights baronets. ib.
He ſells dignities. ib.
The earl of Somerſet perſuades him to call a parliament. p. 423
1614. The parliament aſſembles. ib.
April 5. Inſtead of granting money to the King, they examine the peoples grievances. ib.
May They preſent an addreſs to the King. ib.
June 7. The King diſſolves the parliament. ib.
He impriſons ſeveral members. ib.
Account of the Electreſs's marriage expenſes. ib.
The King exacts a benevolence. ib. 424
July 15. The King of Denmark makes the King and Queen a ſecond viſit. p. 424
Embaſſy from Muſcovy. ib.
The ruin of the King's favorite is projected. ib.
This year Hugh Middleton, authorized by an act of parliament, found means to bring water from Hertfordſhire, to ſupply all London. ib.
1615. George Villiers begins to come into favor. ib.
The King grows weary of the earl of Somerſet. p. 425
He is informed of Overbury's being poiſoned. p. 426
Somerſet and his accomplices in Overbury's death arreſted. ib.
October. The earl and counteſs of Somerſet, with their accomplices are condemned, and afterwards pardoned. p. 427
Novemb. Their accomplices are executed. ib.
Death of Arabella Stuart. p. 428
George Villiers is looked upon as favorite, and becomes very powerful. ib.
1616. Diſpute between the King and judges of the kingdom, concerning the royal prerogative; the AN' 1616.
council decides in the King's favor. Page 428
Judge Edward Coke, is diveſted of his imployment. p. 429
The chancellor Elleſmere returns the great ſeal to the King. ib.
Francis Bacon is made keeper of the great ſeal, and afterwards chancellor. ib.
Prince Charles created Prince of Wales. ib.
The King projects the marrying the Prince to Mary Infanta of Spain. ib.
The King gives up the towns in Holland mort- June 14.
gaged to Elizabeth. p. 430
The earl of Suffolk lord treaſurer is accuſed of miſmanagement, and condemned to pay thirty thouſand pounds. p. 431
The King's ſpeech in the ſtar-chamber. ib.
George Villiers is created baron of Whaddon, and Auguſt 17.
viſcount Villiers, and earl of Buckingham. p. 432
Marco Antonio de Dominis, archbiſhop of Spalato, 1617.
arrives in England, and imbraces the Proteſtant religion. ib.
The King takes a journey to Scotland. p. 433 May.
He undermines Preſbyterianiſm, and diſcontents the Scots. ib.
Buckingham made privy counſellor of Scotland.
He returns to England. p. 434 Auguſt.
He permits the people to divert themſelves on Sundays and Holidays after divine ſervice, and writes a book on this ſubject, which he orders to be read in churches. ib.
All the family of the favorite is promoted. p. 435
His mother being a Catholic, favors thoſe of her own religion. ib.
Sir Walter Raleigh returns from his ſucceſsful voyage to Guiana, which he undertook by commiſſion from the King. ib. October.
By the intrigues of the count de Gondomar the Spaniſh embaſſador, ſir Walter Raleigh is beheaded, by virtue of a ſentence given againſt him in 1603. ib. 1618.
The King and people are diſſatified with each other. p. 436
Murmurs againſt the favorite. ib.
The King ſigns five articles, containing the preliminary agreements for the match between his ſon, and the Infanta of Spain. p. 437
Affairs of Germany. ib.
Commotions in Bohemia. ib. May.
The Emperor levies an army in the Low-countries under the earl of Bucquoy. p. 438
The Spaniſh court amuſes James, leaſt he intermeddle in the affairs of Bohemia. ib.
The earl of Northumberland obtains his liberty. ib. 1619.
Williams made privy counſellor. ib.
Death of the Queen. ib. March 2.
The King's illneſs. ib.
Death of Matthias the Emperor. p. 439 ditto 19.
Ferdinand of Auſtria is proclaimed King of Bohemia. ib.
He is elected Emperor. ib. Auguſt 28.
Frederick V Elector Palatine, ſon-in-law to King Sept. 5.
James, is elected King of Bohemia. ib.
James uſes his indeavors to make him deſiſt from his right. ib.
James vainly interpoſes to procure a peace be- 1620.
tween Frederick and the Emperor. p. 440
Philip III leaves an army in the Low-countries to invade the Palatinate; at which James takes offenſe, and is amuſed by Spinola. ib.
He is prevailed upon to ſend 2200 Men into the Palatinate, under the leading of Horatio de Vere. ib. 441
The 2200 Engliſh join the troops belonging to Aug. 31.
Frederick's allies. p. 441
The campain is begun late in the Palatinate. ib.

An' 1620. The Elector of Saxony ſubdues Luſatia. Page 441
The duke of Bavaria joins Bocquoy. ib.
Nov. 7. Battle of Prague, wherein Frederick's army is defeated. ib.
Frederick takes refuge in Holland. ib.
James vainly intercedes to Lewis XIII, in favor of the Hugonots. p. 442
He takes falſe meaſures to ſave the Palatinate. ib.
He ſuffers himſelf to be led away by Gondomar the Spaniſh embaſſador. ib.
The duke of Buckingham's letter to Gondomar ib.
Lord Conway is made ſecretary of ſtate. p. 443
Montague high treaſurer is ſtrip'd of his poſt; Cranfield ſucceeds him. ib.
Marriage of the earl of Buckingham. ib.
The King convenes a parliament to raiſe money on pretenſe of ſaving the Palatinate. ib.
The parliament aſſembles. p. 444
Jan. 30. The King's ſpeech to the parliament. ib. p. 445
The parliament grants the King a ſupply of money. p. 446
Lord Digby is ſent to Vienna. ib.
Several petitions laid before the parliament, concerning monopolies. ib.
Sentenſe of the houſe of lords againſt Michel and Monpeſſon monopolizers. ib.
Chancellor Bacon is ſtriped of his poſt, by a ſentenſe of the houſe of lords. ib. p. 447
Two parties are formed in England, one for the King, and the other for the people. Origin of Whig and Tory. p. 447
June 4. The King adjourns the parliament ib.
The commons pretend the King has no right to adjourn the parliament. The lords refuſe to concur with them. ib. p. 448
Declaration of the commons, on their being adjourned; concerning the Palatinate. p. 448
July. Doctor John Williams is made keeper of the great ſeal. ib.
The Upper Palatinate is loſt in this campain, and the Lower Palatinate violently attacked. ib.
Death of Philip III. He is ſucceeded by his ſon Philip IV. ib.
James vainly negociates to retrieve his ſon-in-law's affairs. He is amuſed by the Emperor, the archduke, and the King of Spain. p. 449
Succeſs of Digby's embaſſy. ib.
Death of the archduke. ib.
Satisfaction offered Ferdinand by King James, in the Palatinates name. ib.
The Emperor ſends an embaſſador to amuſe him. ib.
James aſſembles the parliament on Digby's return. p. 450
The keeper's, Digby's, and the treaſurer's ſpeeches. ib.
The commons remonſtrance. ib.--452
James offended at the manner of it. p. 452
His letter to the ſpeaker. ib.
A petition from the commons. ib. p. 453
James's anſwer to the petition. p. 454, 455, 456
The commons proteſtation. p. 456, 457
James eraſes this proteſtation from the journal book. p. 457
The parliament diſſolved. ib.
Proclamation forbiding to ſpeak of ſtate affairs. p. 458
Several members are impriſoned. ib.
Cauſe of the difference between King and commons. Remarks on it. ib.
The Armenians, and the Catholics, ſide with the King's party. p. 460
The King loſes his intereſt in foreign countries, where ſeveral Paſquins are wrote againſt him. ib.
1622. He exacts a benevolence from his ſubjects. p. 461
Abbot archbiſhop of Canterbury kills a man by accident, as he was ſhooting at a deer; he withdraws from the council. ib.
Lord Digby is made earl of Briſtol, and ſent to Madrid, to conclude the marriage of the Prince. Page 461 An' 1622.
Gage is ſent to Rome to obtain a diſpenſation. ib.
All the recuſant priſoners are ſet at liberty. ib.
Sir Richard Weſton is ſent to Bruſſels to negociate with the Infanta Iſabella, concerning the Palatinate. p. 462
Heidelberg and Manheim taken; Frankendal is beſieged in November. Negociations at Bruſſels. ib.
The King ſuffers himſelf to be impoſed on by all, and deceives himſelf by falſe meaſures. p. 463
His letter to the earl of Briſtol. ib.
Gage arrives from Rome with the conditions on which the Pope offers the diſpenſation. p. 464
The King reſolves to accept them, ſaving ſome few Sept. 9.
triſles. p. 466
He gives the earl of Briſtol orders to conclude the marriage. ib.
The King of Spain looking on theſe conditions as very advantageous for the Catholic religion, at length conſents to the marriage. ib.
The duke of Bavaria is made Elector in lieu of January.
the Elector Palatine. p. 467
Truce of fifteen months concluded at London for March 27.
the Palatinate. ib. 1623.
Frankendal is depoſited in the Infanta Iſabella. ib.
The King accepts all the conditions propoſed by the Pope, concerning the marriage. ib.
The earl of Briſtol agrees to every thing with the Spaniſh court, and to the time for celebrating the marriage. Nothing more is wanting but the diſpenſation; however no ſtipulation is made concerning the Palatinate, notwithſtanding the King's expreſs commands. ib.
The marquis of Buckingham perſuades the Prince of Wales to go into Spain, to which James has the weakneſs to conſent. ib. 468
The Prince ſets out incognito. p. 468 Febr. 17.
He arrives at Madrid; he is not permited to ſee March 7.
the Infanta in private. ib.
The diſpenſation is waited for. ib.
Pope Gregory XV writes to the Prince. p. 469 May 19.
The Prince's anſwer. ib. June. 20.
The Pope adds new conditions. ib.
The King grants every thing. p. 470
He ſigns the articles, and ſends them to Madrid. ib.
Buckingham created duke. p. 473
Declaration in favor of Papiſts. ib.
Death of Pope Gregory XV. p. 474
Urban VIII ſucceeds him. ib. Auguſt 6.
Urban delays the diſpenſation, waiting the converſion of the Prince of Wales. ib.
The Prince reſolves to break off the match. ib.
He uſes artifice to retire from Spain. ib.
He arrives at Portſmouth. ib. p. 475 Oct. 5.
The King conſents to the breaking off the match. ib.
The earl of Briſtol is recalled. ib. p. 476
The King calls a parliament. p. 477
Project of a match between the Prince, and the 1624.
Princeſs Henrietta Maria, ſiſter of Lewis XIII King of France. ib.
The parliament aſſembles. The King's ſpeech. ib. Feb 19.
The duke of Buckingham declares the reaſons for breaking off the match; the parliament applaud him. p. 478
The parliament adviſes the King to break off the match, and promiſes him ſupplies. p. 479
Petition of both houſes to the King. p. 480
His anſwer. ib.
The Spaniſh embaſſador privately gives the King an information againſt the Prince, and the duke of Buckingham. p. 481
The Prince and duke of Buckingham ſuſpected. ib.
The duke on the point of being diſcarded. ib.
He is conſtrained to diſgrace the earl of Briſtol; his defenſe. p. 482

James

AN' 1624. James ſends 6000 men into Holland. Page 482
Negociation in France for the Prince's marriage. ib.
Lewis ſends the biſhop of Ambrun to the King. ib.
Private conferences betweeen the archbiſhop of Ambrun and the King. p. 483
Life of cardinal Richelieu. p. 484
Nov. 10. The match is concluded in Paris. ib.
Articles of the marriage. ib. 485
The King gives the earl of Mansfield an army for the Palatinate. p. 486
He demands Frankendal from the Infanta, who grants it; but he cannot place a garriſon in it, not having ſtipulated a paſſage for his men thro' the Emperor's dominions. ib.
December. The earl of Mansfield embarks with his army; France refuſes him a paſſage; his army diſperſes. ib. 487
Jan. & Feb. 1625. Difficulties concerning the diſpenſation. p. 487
March 27. Death of James I. ib.

CHARLES I.

James funeral p. 491
King Charles's marriage celebrated at Paris. The duke of Chevreuſe proxy for the King. ib.
May 24. The duke of Buckingham arrives at Paris to receive the new Queen. ib.
June 12. The Queen imbarks at Bologne. ib.
She arrives at Dover. ib.
The marriage is conſummated at Canterbury. ib.
The King and Queen arrives at London. ib.
The parliament aſſembles. ib.
The King demands money to make war againſt Spain. p. 492
Both houſes preſent a petition to the King againſt Popiſh recuſants; which the King approves. ib.
Montague is brought to the bar of the houſe of commons, for publiſhing a book declared contrary to the laws. ib.
The King brings the cauſe before council. ib.
Laud looked on as head of the Arminians. ib.
The commons grant the King two ſubſidies, which he accepts, but aſks more. ib.
July 11. The parliament is adjourned to Oxford on account of the plague. p. 493
While the parliament was adjourned, the King lends France ſix ſhips to be ſent againſt Rochelle. ib.
Aug. 1. The parliament re-aſſembles at Oxford. ib.
The commons examine grievances, and complain againſt Buckingham, Neile and Laud. ib.
dittto 4. The King cauſes both houſes to come before him, and aſks them money. ib.
The parliament complains of the King's having pardoned a jeſuit, under ſentence of death, the day after he had favorably anſwered their petition againſt the recuſants, and ſome other grievvances. ib.
The King favorably anſwers every particular article of the petition. ib. 494, 495 ditto 11. The commons declaration. p. 496 ditto 12. The King diſſolves the parliament. ib.
September. The King borrows money. ib.
Negociation at the Hague for a league againſt Spain. ib.
The King fits out a fleet. ib.
Oct. 2. The fleet ſets ſail for Cadiz, under the command of Edward viſcount Wimbleton. p. 497
Novemb. The fleet returns having done nothing. ib.
December. The King calls a parliament to meet on the ſixth of February. ib.
Order to all who have 40 l. per annum, ſterling, rent or upwards, to come and receive the order of knighthood before the King's coronation. ib.
Feb. 2. The King is crowned. ib.
The parliament aſſembles; lord keeper's ſpeech. ib.
The commons examine grievances. p. 498
Report of a commitee againſt Montague's book; intitled, "Appeal to Cæſar." ib.
The King orders the judges to proceed againſt Popiſh recuſants. Page 498
AN' 1625.
The King ſends to the commons to aſk money. ib.
The lords preſs the commons on this ſubject, at which they take offenſe. p. 499
His Majeſty's letter to the ſpeaker. ib.
The commons examine the duke of Buckingham's conduct; their anſwer to the King. p. 500
The King writes to the ſpeaker, to preſs their granting the ſupply of money. ib.
The King ſends a ſecond letter to the ſame purpoſe. March 7. ib.
The commons promiſe to aſſiſt the King, ſaying they do not doubt but the King will liſten to their remonſtrances on grievances. ib.
The King accepts the offer, but refuſes the conditions. ib.
The houſe declares the duke may be impeached upon a public rumor. ib.
The King ſharply complains of it. ib.
The houſe of commons paſs their vote for granting the King three ſubſidies, and three fifteeenths. ib.
They continue to examine the conduct of his favorite. March 29. ib. 1626.
The King cauſes both houſes to meet at Whitehall, and ſeverely reproaches the commons by the keeper of the great ſeal. p. 501
The commons are highly diſcontented at the King's, and the lord keeper's expreſſions. p. 503
The duke of Buckingham, in a conference with both houſes excuſes the King, and from thence takes an opportunity to juſtify himſelf. ib.
The commons remonſtrance to his Majeſty. ib.
The earl of Briſtol's petition to the lords, to be admited to ſit in parliament. p. 505
The King ſends him a ſummons, at the ſame time, orders him not to make uſe of it. ditto 31. ib.
Remonſtrance of the commons on the ſpeech made by the King, and the lord keeper at Whitehall. April. ib.
The parliament adjourned for eight days, on account of the Eaſter holidays. ib.
The commons draw up articles of impeachment againſt the duke, and aſk him if he has any thing to ſay; the King conſents to his proſecution. ib.
The lords will not let him anſwer. ib.
The commons add to the articles of impeachment, that of the plaiſter and potion given to King James. ib.
The King cauſes the earl of Briſtol to be impeached. ib.
The earl of Briſtol preſents the lords with the articles of impeachment againſt the duke of Buckingham, and lord Conway ſecretary of ſtate. May 1. ib.
The commons give into the lords, the articles of impeachment againſt the duke of Buckingham; Diggs opens againſt him, and Elliot concludes. ditto 8.
The King ſends them to the Tower. p. 506
The King goes to the houſe of lords to juſtify the duke. ditto 11. ib. 507
The commons require the duke may be commited. p. 507
They expreſs their diſcontent on the impriſonment of their members. ib.
The King ſets them at liberty. ib.
A difference between the King and the houſe of lords, occaſioned by the earl of Arundel's confinement. ditto 19. ib.
The King releaſes the earl of Arundel. ib.
The duke of Buckingham is made chancellor of Cambridge in lieu of the earl of Suffolk. June 2. p. 508
The commons oppoſe and the King maintains the election. ib.
The duke's defenſe before the lords upon the articles of his impeachment. ditto 8. ib.
The King ſends to preſs the ſubſidy bill. ib. ditto 9.

The

An' 1626. The commons petition the King concerning the recuſants, and name about fifty-nine in public imploys. Page 508, 509
Anſwer of the commons to the King's laſt meſſage upon intelligence the parliament was to be diſſolved. ib.
They immediately draw up a declaration againſt the duke, and a remonſtrance upon tonage and poundage. ib. 510
June 15. The King diſſolves the parliament. p. 510
The commons remonſtrance not preſented. ib. 512
The King publiſhes a declaration dated the thirteenth of June, to juſtify his diſſolving the parliament. p. 513--515
Proclamation, forbiding the publiſhing the declaration and the remonſtrance. p. 516
Another prohibiting any ſermon or writing for or againſt Arminianiſm. ib.
Commiſſion for compounding with the Popiſh recuſants. ib.
The city of London refuſes lending the King an hundred thouſand pounds ſterling. ib.
Orders to the maritime towns to furniſh ſhips; London can obtain no diminution. ib.
Orders of the council on this ſubject. ib.
Aug. 27. The King, under the name of Benevolence, inacts from private people the three ſubſidies and three fifteenths, which had been granted by the commons. ib.
The King of Denmark is defeated by Tilly. ib.
Charles, to aſſiſt the King of Denmark, borrows money from all his ſubjects upon commiſſion under the great ſeal. ib.
Inſtructions to the commiſſioners. ib.
Soldiers are quartered in the counties by tickets in private houſes contrary to cuſtom. p. 517
Randal Crew, lord chief juſtice of the kingdom, is turned out of his imployment for refuſing to lend money to the King. ib.
1627. Thoſe who refuſe to lend are greatly oppreſſed. ib.
Febr. 27. Sibthorp's ſermon to incourage paſſive obedience. ib.
Another ſermon on the ſame ſubject preached before the King by Manwaring. p. 518
The archbiſhop ſuſpended for refuſing to approve the ſermons. ib.
The King diſmiſſes the Queen's French domeſtics. p. 519
Charles declares to the council his motives of making war on France. ib.
The duke of Buckingham commands the fleet againſt France, without any declaration of war. p. 520
The Rochellers refuſe him the entry of their town. ib.
He makes a deſcent in the iſle of Rhee, and beſieges the fort St. Martin. ib.
Nov. 9. The duke leaves the iſle of Rhee, having ſuffered great loſs. ib.
Complaints againſt the government and Buckingham. ib.
The Rochellers aſk aſſiſtance of the King. ib.
Jan. 19. The King calls a parliament to meet the ſeventeenth of March. p. 521
He releaſes the priſoners who were confined on account of the loan. ib.
March 17. The parliament aſſembles; the King aſks money. ib.
A writing handed about among the people, intitled, a ſpeech without doors. p. 523 ditto 22. The commons examine grievances. ib.
ditto 24. The King preſſes them on the ſubſidy bill. His demands. p. 524 1628. Meſſage concerning Buckingham. ib.
A ſecond meſſage from the King to the commons. ib.
Five ſubſidies voted. ib.
Charles hinders the houſes from adjourning at Eaſter. ib.
He preſſes the commons about a ſupply; who reſolve that ſupply and grievances go together. Page 525 An' 1628.
Both houſes petition the King againſt the billeting ſoldiers on private houſes. ib. 526 March 31.
The King's reply. p. 527
Propoſitions made by the lords touching the petition of right. p. 528
Rejected by the commons. ib.
The King ſends for both houſes to Whitehall. ib.
Lord keeper's ſpeech to them. ib.
Coke moves the houſe to diſpatch the ſubſidy bill. p. 529
The King requires their taking his word. ib. May. 1.
He ſends word to the houſe he deſigns to prorogue the parliament. ib. ditto 2.
The commons anſwer to diverſe meſſages, that they will truſt to the King, but they cannot forſake the intereſt of the public. ib. ditto 3.
The King anſwers by the keeper of the great ſeal that they ought to truſt to his word. p. 530
Another meſſage for retarding the petition of right. ib. ditto 6.
Vote of the commons that a vocal promiſe from the King is not a ſufficient ſecurity, and cannot be taken for the King's promiſe, when not made in parliament. p. 531
The commons fix times of the ſubſidy's payments before the bill paſſed. ib.
Letter from the King in which he maintains the right of impriſoning, without ſpecifying for what cauſe in the warrant. ib. ditto 12.
The houſe gives it no attention. p. 532
The lords propoſe the inſerting a clauſe in the petition of right. ib. ditto 17.
The commons make appear this clauſe would deſtroy the petition. ib. ditto 23.
The King goes to the parliament; his ſpeech. ib. June 2.
The lords agree with the commons to preſent the petition without any addition. ib.
Petition of right. ib.
The King's anſwer. p. 533
The commons are not well pleaſed at it; they retake the grievances into conſideration. p. 534 ditto 3.
Sentenſe againſt Manwaring, who is declared incapable of any eccleſiaſtical dignity. ib.
Meſſage from the King to the commons, telling them he deſigned to prorogue the parliament the eleventh, and forbad their moving any new affair. ib. ditto 5.
He orders their breaking up till next day. ib.
The ſpeaker carries a more favorable meſſage from the King to the commons. ib. ditto 6.
The houſe examines a privy ſeal by the King, to bring foreign troops into the kingdom; the commiſſion is produced and the evidences are examined. ib.
The King goes to the parliament, and gives his aſſent to the petition of right. p. 535 ditto 7.
The commons examine a commiſſion under the King's hand dated in February, to raiſe money by impoſition, or otherwiſe. ib.
Conference of both houſes on this ſubject. ib.
New debates concerning the duke of Buckingham. ib.
Reſolved that the duke was the cauſe of all the evils of the kingdom. ib. ditto 13.
Remonſtrance againſt the duke. ib. 538
The commons remonſtrance on tonage and poundage. p. 539
The King goes to the parliament; he gives his aſſent to the ſubſidy bill, and prorogues the houſe to the twentieth of October. p. 540 ditto 26.
Proclamation to ſuppreſs Manwaring's ſermon, condemned by the parliament. p. 541
Another againſt prieſts and jeſuits, and the titular biſhop of Chalcedon. ib.
Sir Richard Weſton a Catholic, is made earl of Portland, and high treaſurer. ib. July 16.

William

AN' 1628. William Laud is made biſhop of London. Page 541
Montague is made biſhop of Chicheſter. ib.
Aug. 23. The duke of Buckingham aſſaſſinated by Felton. ib.
Commiſſioners to compound with recuſants. ib.
September. The fleet ſets ſail from Portſmouth to relieve Rochelle. ib.
ditto 20. The Engliſh fleet appear before Rochelle but were prevented by cardinal Richelieu. ib.
October 1. The parliament is prorogued to the tenth of Jan. ib.
ditto 20. Taking of Rochelle. ib.
Rolls, Vaſſal, and Chambers, merchants of London, refuſe to pay tonage, &c. ib.
Their goods are ſeized on the ſame account. ib.
Jan. 20. The parliament aſſembles. ib.
The King ſends for both houſes. ib.
His ſpeech concerning tonage and poundage. p. 542 ditto 26. The commons examine matters of religion. ib.
Vow of the lower houſe concerning religion. ib.
They petition for a faſt. fb.
Declaration of the commons to the King. ib.
The King ſends to forward the bill of tonage, &c. ib.
The commons take into conſideration religious grievances. ib.
Laud's character. ib.
Febr. 4. Debate in the houſe of commons on the proclamation prohibiting all diſputes on Arminianiſm; Laud and Montague are ſuſpected of having procured it. p. 543 ditto 19. New diſputes on account of tonage and poundage. p. 544
March 2. The ſpeaker refuſes to propoſe a queſtion moved in the houſe, ſaying, he had contrary orders from the King, and to adjourn the houſe to the tenth of March; he would have retired, but is forced to ſtay till a proteſt is drawn up. ib.
Proteſtation againſt the levying tonage and poundage. ib.
The houſe is adjourned to the tenth of March. ib.
Proclamation for diſſolution of the parliament on the tenth of March. ib.
ditto 4. Several members are impriſoned. ib.
The King's ſpeech at the diſſolving the parliament. ib.
1629. Queſtions propoſed by his Majeſty's judges concerning the impriſoned members. p. 545
The attorney general informs againſt the impriſoned members. ib.
Alderman Chambers condemned by the Star-chamber to pay a fine of twenty thouſand pounds for having refuſed to pay the duties on tonage and poundage. ib. 551
The impriſoned members fined. p. 546
Libels diſperſed againſt the King's counſellors. ib.
The King's declaration to ſatisfy the people on his diſſolving the parliament. ib.——551
Proclamation againſt falſe rumours touching parliaments. p. 551
A writing puhliſhed againſt the King. p. 552
Charles makes peace with France. ib.
Diminution of the King's revenues. ib.
A very ſtrict order about the cuſtoms. p. 553
Another concerning the militia. ib.
July. Several monopolies granted. ib.
1630. A peace with Spain concluded. ib.
The King's inſtructions for the government of the church conformable to Laud's propoſitions. ib.
The King reſolves to ſend ſix thouſand men to the King of Sweden in the marquis of Hamilton's name. ib.
May 29. Birth of Prince Charles. ib.
ditto 31. Negociation of the King of Sweden which he made with the marquis of Hamilton. ib.
July 6. A commiſſion to compound with thoſe who had neglected to receive knighthood. p. 554
Innovations in Divine-ſervice. ib.
1631. Laud conſecrates the church of St. Catherine's, and celebrates the Lord's ſupper with extraordinary ceremonies. Page 554 AN' 1631.
Monopoly on cards; another on ſoap. p. 555
Three miniſters of Oxford condemned for preaching againſt Arminianiſm. ib. 1632.
Proclamation forbiding the gentry to quit their country houſes to live in London. ib. June 10.
Commiſſioners appointed to puniſh thoſe who had, contrary to their orders, inlarged the city of London by new buildings. ib. ditto 16.
The city of London fined fifteen hundred marks for the death of Lamb, killed in a tumult. ib. May.
Attempts to eradicate Puritaniſm. ib.
Trial and condemnation of Sherfield, reader of Saliſbury; for taking down windows in a church, in which was ſome images. p. 456 December.
He is fined five hundred pounds ſterling. ib.
Viſcount Wentworth preſident of the council of York. ib. March 11. 1633.
Remarks on the council of York. ib.
The King ſets out for Scotland. p. 557 May 13.
He arrives at Edinburg. ib.
He is crowned. ib. June 16.
The parliament of Scotland aſſembles; they give him a large ſubſidy. ib. ditto. 28.
The King makes uſe of ſome violence to get two acts paſſed in parliament, at which the people are diſcontented. p. 558
The Puritans perſecuted in England. ib.
Oath ordained by the biſhop of Wincheſter in the viſit of churches. ib.
Laud made archbiſhop of Canterbury on the death of Abbot. p. 559 Auguſt 6.
James duke of York born, October 13. ib.
Juſtice Richardſon is obliged to revoke a decree made againſt the feaſts of the dedication of churches. ib.
The King orders divine ſervice to be celebrated in his chapel at Edinburg, according to the manner of the church of England, at which he commands his council and judges of ſeſſions to be preſent. p. 560
Affairs of the church of St. Gregory. p. 561
Condemnation of Pryn, for the book intitled, Hiſtrio-Maſtrix. ib. February. 1634.
The firſt writ for ſhip money to the city of London. p. 562
The city of London's petition to the King. p. 563
Laud forbids the Walloon and French churches; the Engliſh church at Rotterdam, and the regiments in the ſervice of the United Provinces, to imploy any Preſbyterian miniſter, and injoins them to conform to the church of England. ib. 1635.
A great number of people accuſed of having tranſgreſſed the prohibition to reſide in London. p. 564 March.
Ship money laid upon the whole kingdom. ib. Auguſt,
Which produced in the year 1636 two hundred thirty ſix thouſand pounds. ib.
Proclamation for compounding defective titles. ib.
William Parr aged an hundred and fifty-two, is this year preſented to the King. ib. Sept. 29.
Abuſes by informers prevented. ib.
Juxton, biſhop of London, made treaſurer. ib.
Arrival of Lewis Elector Palatine and Prince Rupert. p. 565 Nov. 22.
Proclamation to forbid departing the realm. ib.
Proclamation forbiding ſtrangers fiſhing on the coaſts of England and Scotland. ib. 1636. May 10.
The earl of Northumberland ſinks ſeveral fiſher boats, and diſperſes others; they at length compound with him. ib. June.
Diſpute between the archbiſhop and the two univerſities on account of his viſit in quality of archbiſhop. ib.
Commiſſion about depopulation. ib. July 9.
Charles inſiſts on ſhip money; the Londoners petition rejected. ib.

An' 1636. Several law ſuits about ſhip money. Page 566
The King publiſhes the opinion of the judges on ſhip money. ib.
His Majeſty's letter to the judges; queſtions propoſed to them; their anſwer. ib.
Which is entered in the court of juſtice. ib.
Hampden's proſecution. p. 567
The ſtate of Epiſcopacy in Scotland. p. 568——573
1637. The King ſends to Scotland the book of canons. p. 573
And afterwards the liturgy. p. 574
July 23. Firſt tumult at Edinburg upon the reading the liturgy, ordained by the King. ib.
Octob. 18. Another riot. ib.
Diverſe petitions of the male-contents. ib.
Decemb. 7. Proclamation in Scotland againſt riots. ib.
Women and children petition againſt the ſervice book. p. 575
Petition of the nobles. ib.
Feb. 19. The King's proclamation in Scotland. ib.
1638. Proteſtation of the male-contents. p. 576
The male-contents erect tables to manage their affairs. ib.
They ſubſcribe the covenant. ib.
The explication of the covenant. ib.
May 10. The King nominates the marquis of Hamilton his high commiſſioner in Scotland. p. 578
Propoſitions offered to the male-contents by the high commiſſioner. p. 579
June 28. The King's declaration publiſhed at Edinburg. ib.
Proteſtation of the male-contents. ib.
July 6. The marquis goes to court to receive the King's orders. ib.
ditto 27. He returns with power to call a general aſſembly and a parliament. ib.
He offers eleven propoſitions. ib.
Which are rejected. ib.
Auguſt 25. The marquis of Hamilton returns to England. p. 580
Sept. 9. New inſtitutions given the marquis in which the King grants a great deal. ib.
The King commands the Scots to ſign the old confeſſion of faith. ib.
ditto 22. Convocation of a general aſſembly on the twenty-firſt of November, 1638, and of a parliament on the fifteenth of May following 1639. ib.
Nov. 21. The general aſſembly of the Scotiſh church begins at Glaſgow. p. 581 ditto 27. In which a declinator of the biſhops is read. ib.
ditto 28. The high commiſſioner diſſolves the aſſembly. ib.
They refuſe to break up. p. 582 ditto 29. Proclamation for diſſolving the aſſembly. ib.
Proteſtation. ib.
Acts of the aſſembly after its diſſolution. ib.
Decemb. 8. The Scotiſh biſhops are depoſed. ib.
1639. The King orders the nobility to be at York the firſt
Januar. 26. of April, each with as many horſes as he could raiſe. p. 583
The King demands money of the clergy. ib.
The Queen writes to the Catholics. ib.
Febr. 11. The archbiſhop of Canterbury's letter to the clergy, exhorting their contribution to the Scotiſh war. ib.
ditto 14. Manifeſto of the Scots; ſpread in England. p. 584 ditto 27. The King's proclamation. ib.
March 27. He ſets out for the North. ib.
Leſley marches towards Kelſey with twelve thouſend men. ib.
The Scots ſue for peace. ib.
The King appoints ſix commiſſioners to treat with the Scots. ib.
Conference held the eleventh of June; the Scots demands. The King's anſwer. p. 585
Articles agreed on; the Scots diſband their troops. ib.
The King nominates earl Traquair high commiſſioner. His inſtructions. ib. 586
The King's letter to the archbiſhop of St. Andrews. p. 587
Acts of the general aſſembly at Edinburg. p. 588
Acts of the Scotiſh parliament. Page 589 An' 1639.
The King prorogues the parliament. ib.
They declare againſt it. p. 590
They break up but leave a commitee. ib.
The King refuſes audience to their deputies. ib.
The council of England reſolves on a war with Scotland. ib.
Other deputies from Scotland with two petitions. ib. 1640.
It is obſerved that they have not power to treat with the King. ib.
Reaſons alleged by the King for breaking with Scotland. ib.
The Scotiſh male-contents letter to the French King; King Charles makes uſe of it. ib.
True cauſe of the war. Ship money levied. p. 591
Sir John Finch made lord keeper. p. 592
Earl of Northumberland made general againſt Scotland. ib.
Earl of Strafford lieutenant general. ib.
Parliament meets. ib.
The King's and lord keeper's ſpeeches. ib. 595
Glanville choſen ſpeaker. p. 595
The parliament neglects the affair of Scotland and go on upon grievances. ib.
The houſes ſent for to Whitehall. ib.
The lord keeper's ſpeech to both houſes. ib. 596
They go on to examine grievances. p. 596
The King's meſſage. ib.
The King by a meſſenger requires immediate anſwer. ib. May 2.
Another meſſage by which he requires twelve ſubſidies for aboliſhing ſhip money. ib. ditto 4.
The houſe debates till ſix in the evening, and remit the affair to the following day. p. 597
The King diſſolves the parliament; his ſpeech. ib. ditto 5.
Several members impriſoned. ib. ditto 6.
Declaration on its diſſolution. ib.——600
The King continues the convocation. p. 600
Oath injoined by the convocation; objections to it. p. 601 ditto 7.
The clergy give his Majeſty a ſubſidy. ib.
The Scots incite the Engliſh againſt their King. ib.
The King's methods to raiſe money. ib.
Order from the council againſt London. p. 602 Auguſt 28.
The 'Engliſh routed in defending the paſs of the Tine. ib.
Newcaſtle taken by the Scots. ib.
The Scots ſue for peace. p. 603
The King ſummons the nobility to York. ib.
The Scots demands. ib. Sept. 9.
They gain the Londoners affection. ib.
Petition ſent to the King at York by ſome of the aldermen and common council. ib.
Petition from twelve peers. p. 604
Petition by the gentry of Yorkſhire. ib.
The King's ſpeech to his great council of peers. p. 605
It is reſolved to treat with the Scots. ib.
Commiſſioners appointed to meet at Rippon. ib.
The treaty begins at Rippon. ib. October 1.
The preliminaries demanded by the Scots. ib. ditto 16.
The transfering the negociation of peace from Rippon to London is agreed on. p. 606 ditto 23.
A truce concluded. ib. ditto 26.
Proceedings againſt the earl of Briſtol. p. 606---636
Conſiderations on the writers of King Charles's hiſtory. p. 636----640
The parliament meets. p. 640
The King puts them in mind of ſeeking means to drive the Scots out of the kingdom. p. 641
A great number of petitions are preſented to the houſe of commons, who only apply themſelves to the redreſſing grievances. p. 642
Pym's ſpeech about grievances. ib. 644
The commons appoint a commitee for drawing a repreſentation of the preſent condition of the kingdom. p. 644 Nov. 9.

Principal

AN' 1640. Principal authors of the grievances. Page 645
Earl of Strafford accuſed of high treaſon, and ſent to the Tower. ib.
Windebank cited; he gets away to France. ib.
Votes that the canons of the late convocation, and the ſupply granted the King, are contrary to the laws. p. 646
The Scotiſh commiſſioners give into the houſe of lords an accuſation againſt the archbiſhop of Canterbury. ib.
Matthew Wren, biſhop of Ely, held to bail. ib.
Lord Finch, keeper of the great ſeal, indeavors to juſtify himſelf before the commons. ib.
He is declared a traitor. ib.
He eſcapes into Holland. ib.
Sir Edward Littleton made lord keeper. ib.
Chief juſtice Branſton, chief baron Davenport, and juſtice Crawley, obliged to give each ten thouſand pounds bail on an information againſt them. p. 647
Method of the commons to redreſs grievances. ib.
Acts paſſed in 1640 and 1641 for that purpoſe. ib.
The commons render themſelves formidable. ib.
Method to declare people delinquents. ib.
Proceedings in parliament, touching ſhip money. p. 648
Lord Falkland's ſpeech. ib. 649
Commitee to examine the judges. p. 650
The lords cancel the judgment in mr. Hampden's caſe. ib.
Bill againſt ſhip money has the Royal aſſent. ib.
Diſpoſition of the two houſes touching religion. ib.
Their proceedings, concerning religion, in 1640 and 1641. p. 653——659
Affair of Goodman the Jeſuit. p. 659
The commons iſſue their orders that all judges in their cirtuits ſhould put in execution the penal laws againſt prieſts and jeſuits. ib.
Proceeding of the commons, concerning the money given by Papiſts for the war with Scotland. ib.
The Queens meſſage to the commons. ib.
Montague, Winter, and ſir Kenelm Digby retire to France. p. 660
The Queen's confeſſor accuſed. ib.
Affairs with the Scots. ib.
The earl of Briſtol's relation of his negociation with the Scots. ib. 661
Treaty with Scotland. p. 662
Charles concedes to the Scots demands. p. 663
Plot to get the army to declare for the King p. 664
Which does him great prejudice. ib.
Bill of attainder againſt the earl of Strafford paſſes the houſe of commons. ib.
1641. Petition againſt him, ſubſcribed by upwards of forty thouſand Londoners. ib.
The King's ſpeech in parliament. ib.
A rabble aſſemble at Weſtminſter. ib.
Pym diſcovers to the commons a plot to ſeduce the army. ib.
Proteſtation taken by the commons. p. 665
Petition of the rabble to the lords. ib.
The lords take the proteſtation. ib.
The populace retire. ib.
Bill for the parliaments continuance. ib.
Flight of ſome conſpirators. ib.
The ſpeaker's letter to the army. p. 666
Report concerning the plot. ib.
Mr. Percy's letter to the earl of Northumberland. p. 667
Draught of the officers petition communicated to his Majeſty, who approves it. p. 669
The pretended petition of the officers and ſoldiers of the army. ib.
Reaſons, why this cannot be the true petition. p. 670
The earl of Strafford's trial. p. 671——675
Commitee from the Iriſh parliament to complain of Strafford. p. 675
Reaſons for and againſt the earl. Page 675 AN' 1641.
Votes of the commons. p. 676
Bill of attainder paſſed and ſent up to the lords. ib.
Lord Digby's ſpeech againſt the bill. ib.
Petition of ſeveral thouſand Londoners againſt the earl. ib.
The King's ſpeech in favor of him. ib.
The lords paſs the bill of attainder. ib.
The continuance bill paſſed in the upper houſe. p. 677 May 7.
Charles's conſultations about the bill of attainder. ib. ditto 9.
Letter from Strafford to the King. ib.
Charles paſſes the two bills. ib.
The earl of Strafford beheaded. ib.
Reaſons for and againſt him. ib.
Charles tries in vain to pacify the commons. p. 678
The earl of Eſſex made lord chamberlain. ib.
The parliament's aim. ib.
Extreme diffidence of the King. p. 679
Obſervation on the houſe of peers. ib.
Political reaſons for the biſhops excluſion. ib.
Difference between the Puritans. ib.
The commons labor to exclude the biſhops, and redreſs grievances. ib.
Proceedings of the commons as to religion. p. 680
Difference between both houſes touching the proteſtation. ib.
The commons explain a clauſe in the proteſtation. ib.
Difference about the Star-chamber. ib.
The collectors of cuſtoms offer an hundred and fifty thouſand pounds for an act of oblivion, which is accepted. ib.
Lord Digby called to the houſe of peers. ib.
Charles inclinable to give part of the Iriſh army to Spain. ib.
The commons oppoſe it. ib.
They publiſh an ordinance againſt tranſporting them. Sept. 9. p. 681
Charles determines to give the Scots full ſatisfaction. ib.
His reaſons for ſo doing. ib.
He promiſes to go into Scotland. ib.
The commons are jealous of this journey. ib.
Charles ſets out for Scotland. ib.
The parliament ſends a commitee into Scotland, as ſpies upon him. ib.
Votes againſt the monopoly of ſoap. ib.
Votes concerning the plantation of Londonderry. ib.
Reſolution of both houſes to adjourn. ib.
On which many members retire into the country. p. 682
The others continue and proceed to debate about the liturgy. ib.
Votes againſt innovations. ib.
The peers votes concerning the liturgy. ib.
The commons declaration concerning innovations. ib.
The lords renew their order concerning divine ſervice. ib.
The commons refuſe their conſent. ib.
Declarations of the commons. ib.
Remarks on theſe differences. ib.
Both houſes adjourn, but appoint a commitee. p. 683
Notice of a plot in Scotland. ib.
Report of the commitee. ib.
The parliament meet. ib.
Conference about the Scotiſh conſpiracy. ib.
The parliament deſire a guard of the earl of Eſſex. ib.
Account of the pretended conſpiracy. ib.
Remark on this conſpiracy. ib.
Complaint to the commons, concerning the Non-obſervance of their declaration. ib.
Sir Edward Deering's ſpeech. ib. 684
The commons prepare a remonſtrance of the kingdom's condition. p. 687
The Iriſh rebellion. ib.
Votes of the commons in relation to Ireland, and Roman Catholics in England. ib.

Both

An' 1641. Both houſes declare they will aſſiſt his Majeſty with their whole powes to reduce the Iriſh rebels. Page 688
The King demands aid of the Scotiſh parliament. ib.
Their anſwer. ib.
Irelands great neceſſity of a powerful ſuccor. ib.
The Iriſh report they had the King's orders for what they did. ib.
They ſend a circular letter with the pretended commiſſion. ib.
The pretended commiſſion. p. 689
Arguments that the King could not have given this commiſſion. ib.
Ill conſequence of this rumour to the King. ib.
Inſtructions to the Engliſh commitee in Scotland, mortifying to the King. ib.
Great debates touching the remonſtrance: p. 690
Charles returns from Scotland. ib.
Eſſex reſigns his commiſſion. ib.
The King diſmiſſes the guards given to the parliament. ib.
The commons deſire they may be continued. ib.
The King refuſes, but offers another guard, which the commons refuſe. p. 691
A commitee preſents to the King the remonſtrance, with a petition. ib.
Sir Ralph Hopton's report to the houſe on his preſenting the petition and remonſtrance. ib.
The petition and the remonſtrance. ib. 702
The King's anſwer to the petition and remonſtrance. p. 702——706
His Majeſty's ſpeech to both houſes, Dec. 2. p. 706
Vote againſt O-Neal. p. 707
The Iriſh demand a toleration. ib.
Vote of both houſes thereupon. ib.
Meſſage from the King in relation to ſome condemned prieſts. ib.
Votes of the peers concerning Ireland. ib.
The commons impriſon the lords Coſtelough and Taaff, who were ſent from Ireland with propoſitions. p. 708
Proclamation declaring the Iriſh to be traitors and rebels; order to the printer. ib.
Charles ſets a guard near the parliament. ib.
Decem. 8. The commons diſmiſs them. ib
Bill for preſſing ſoldiers. p. 709
Petition of many Londoners againſt Lunsford, made lieutenant of the Tower. p. 710
The commons require Lunsford's removal. ib.
The lords refuſe concuring. ib.
Votes againſt Lunsford by the commons, who alſo declare againſt him. ib.
Lunsford removed from his poſt. ib.
New meaſures of the commons. p. 711
Mob of Weſtminſter. ib.
Origin of the name of Roundheads. ib.
Lunsford and others wound ſome citizens. ib.
The lords try in vain to appeaſe the tumult. ib.
The commons act coldly. ib.
The tumult continues. ib.
Remarks on the commons procedure. ib.
Twelve biſhops ſend their proteſtation to the King and lords. p. 712
The commons accuſe them of high treaſon. p. 713
They are ſent to the Tower. ib.
The commons deſire a guard, and cauſe arms to be brought into their houſe. ib.
The inns of court gentlemen offer to guard the King. ib.
Charles orders a peer and five commoners to be accuſed of high treaſon. p. 715
Charles demands the five members. p. 716
Thoſe members are ordered to attend daily on the houſe. ib.
The King goes to the lower houſe; his ſpeech there; the houſe adjourns. ib.
The commons aſſembled the next day, and vote the King had violated the privilege of parliaments. Page 717
The commons appoint a commitee to ſit at Guild-Hall. ib.
City of London's petition; the King's anſwer. ib.
His Majeſty quits London. p. 718
His meſſage to both houſes; he deſiſts from his method of proceeding. ib.
The commons impeach ſir Edward Herbert, the attorney general. p. 719
Sentence upon the attorney general. p. 720
Remarks on the procedure. ib.
The commons appoint themſelves a guard. p. 721
Lord Digby quits the kingdom. ib.
The parliament forbid colonel Goring to deliver up Portſmouth without the King's order ſignified to him by both houſes. ib.
The commons ſend Hotham to ſecure Hull. ib.
A guard ſet about the Tower. ib.
The peers forbid the earls of Eſſex and Holland going to court. ib.
Differences between both houſes about the Scotiſh ſuccor. ib.
The Scots ſend forces into Ireland. p. 722
Different aims of King and parliament with regard to Ireland. ib.
Pym's ſpeech to the lords; petition of the lord mayor and aldermen. ib.
Pym's ſpeech continued. p. 723——725
The commons thank Pym. p. 726
Charles complains of ſome expreſſions in the ſpeech; the commons ſtand by what Pym has ſaid. ib.
Difference between the King and parliament about the militia. ib.
The parliament preſents the King a form of ordinance for the militia. p. 728
The petition of both houſes on that ſubject and his Majeſty's anſwer. p. 729
Another petition given to the King at Theobalds; his anſwer. p. 730, 731
Votes of the commons. p. 732
Declaration of both houſes preſented to the King at Newmarket, with his Majeſty's extempore anſwer. p. 732——735
The King acquaints the commons with his deſign to reſide at York. p. 736
Votes of the houſe of commons; votes of the houſe of lords. ib.
The King's declaration to both houſes in anſwer to the Newmarket petition. ib.
The reply of both houſes. p. 739
The King's anſwer. p. 740——742
Both houſes recommend the earl of Warwick to the King to command the fleet. p. 742
He is acknowleged and received as ſuch, contrary to the King's inclination, by the earl of Northumberland lord admiral. ib.
The King rejects the militia bill. ib.
The King's meſſage to both houſes on the militia bill. ib. 743
Declaration of the lords and commons in anſwer to it. p. 743, 744
His Majeſty's anſwer. p. 744——747
Proclamation againſt the ordinance. p. 747
Declaration of both houſes againſt it. ib.
Bills paſt for excluding the biſhops and impreſſing ſoldiers. p. 748
The King's condeſcending meſſage to both houſes. ib.
Letters from lord Digby to the Queen and others intercepted. p. 749
He is accuſed of high treaſon. ib.
Propoſals about Ireland. ib.
The Queen goes to Holland. ib.
The King iſſues a proclamation againſt Papiſts. ib.
He informs the parliament of his deſign to paſs into Ireland. ib.
Both houſes petition the King againſt going. ib.

An' 1641.
March 1.
1642.
Mar. 26.
April 8.

The

AN' 1642. The King appears before Hull. Page 751
He is refuſed entrance into the town by Hotham the governor. p. 752
He returns to York. ib.
The King demands juſtice upon Hotham. ib.
The parliament juſtify him. ib.
The King lays a ſcheme for the ſurpriſing of Hull. ib.
He is betrayed. ib.
Both King and parliament prepare for a war and ſtrive to gain the people. p. 753
The King ſummons all the gentry of Yorkſhire. ib.
A commitee from the parliament ſent to York, who are ſpies upon the King. ib.
A guard propoſed by, and raiſed for the King in Yorkſhire; the command of which is given to the Prince of Wales. ib.
The King ſends for Skippon; the parliament will not let him go. ib.
The declaration, or remonſtrance, of both houſes. p. 754——762
The King's anſwer, and remarks. p. 762——770
The earl of Briſtol propoſes an accommodation, but in vain. p. 772
Votes of the commons. ib.
The lord keeper Littleton ſends the great ſeal to the King, and followed it next day himſelf. ib.
The parliament petition the King to diſband his forces. ib.
Nineteen propoſitions ſent his Majeſty by the parliament. ib. 773
The King's anſwer, and the remarks thereon. p. 774——781
The Queen pawns her jewels in Holland; buys and ſends arms to the King. p. 781
Precautions of the commons. ib.
Nine lords deprived of their ſeats in parliament for going to the King. p. 782
The parliament publiſh propoſals for the bringing in plate or money towards the defenſe of the kingdom. ib.
The parliament forbids publiſhing any declaration, &c. from the King. ib.
The King's deſign upon the fleet miſcarries. ib.
He poſſeſſeth himſelf of the town of Newcaſtle, and the caſtle of Tinmouth. ib.
The King names his general officers. p. 783
He beſieges Hull, but is obliged to break up the ſiege, and return to York. ib.
Goring, governor of Portſmouth, declares for the King; he is inveſted by the militia, and obliged to capitulate, and ſurrenders the town to a commitee of the parliament. ib.
The King's manifeſto; he declares both houſes guilty of high treaſon. ib.
Proclamation to attend the Royal ſtandard at Notingham. ib.
The King goes to Notingham, and from thence haſtes to Coventry to prevent the parliament taking poſſeſſion of that city; but the mayor ſhuts the gates againſt him; he returns back to Notingham, having only taken Lincoln. ib.
He ſets up his ſtandard at Notingham the 25th of Auguſt. p. 784
The King is in great danger at Notingham. ib.
Several meſſages and replies between the King and parliament, on the ſubject of a pacification. p. 785, 786
The earl of Eſſex heads the parliament's army. p. 786
The King's proteſtation at the head of his army. ib.
The King marches from Notingham towards Wales; he is received at Shrewſbury. p. 787
He forms an army of 10,000 foot, and 4000 horſe. ib.
The univerſity of Oxford, make him a preſent of their plate. ib.
Prince Rupert ingages near Worceſter 500 horſe, under the command of colonel Sandys, who is killed with 30 of his followers, and the reſt put to flight. Page 787 AN' 1642.
The earl of Eſſex poſſeſſes himſelf of Worceſter, and ſecures Hereford, Gloceſter, and Briſtol. p. 788
The battle of Edge-Hill, October 23. ib.
The King retires to Oxford. p. 789
The King offers a pardon to the Londoners. p. 791
Declaration of the parliament, incouraging apprentices to inliſt in their army. p. 792
The parliament demand the Scots to declare for them. ib. Nov. 3, 11.
The King, at Reading, is petitioned by the parliament to agree to a treaty of peace. p. 793
He receives the commitee. ib.
He attacks and takes Brentford. ib.
He retires to Kingſton. ib.
Hoſtilities carried on in almoſt every county in England. p. 794
Tadcaſter and Giſborough fights. ib. Jan. 16.
Leeds taken, and 500 Royaliſts made priſoners by ſir Thomas Fairfax. ib. ditto 23.
Sir William Waller blows up Farnham-caſtle, and takes the gariſon priſoners of war; he reduces Wincheſter and Chicheſter. ib. Decem. 29.
Willmot, commiſſary general of the King's horſe, takes Marlborough and burns it; kills and takes about a thouſand of the gariſon. ib. ditto 5.
Prince Rupert takes Cirenceſter, and 1200 priſoners. ib. Febr. 2.
The lord Brooke ſlain in the attacking of Litchfield, which is afterwards carried by his troops. ib. March 1.
Battle of Hopton or Salt-heath, where the earl of Northampton is ſlain, and the victory obtained by the parliament. ib. ditto 19.
Sir William Waller ſurprizes lord Herbert before Gloceſter, takes Chepſtow and Monmouth. ib.
Affairs of the Weſt. ib.
Sir Ralph Hopton becomes maſter of all Cornwall, and makes incurſions into Devonſhire. p. 795
Parliament's army in the Weſt commanded by the earl of Stamford, who ſends a detachment under the command of Ruthen governor of Plymouth into Cornwall; he is defeated; a great number of his men ſlain; upwards of 1200 priſoners taken by Hopton, who follows him to, and beats him out of Saltaſh; the earl of Stamford, who had withdrawn to Taviſtock, retires to Plymouth. ib.
Aſſociation of the Northern counties for the King. p. 796
The like aſſociation for the parliament. ib.
Neutralities, the parliament ſets them aſide. ib.
Some priſoners of the parliament's ſide are condemned. ib.
The parliament threaten reprizals. ib.
Petition from the mayor, aldermen and council to the King; his anſwer. p. 797
Which is read in public, and replied to by Pym. ib.
The Queen ſends the King a ſupply from Holland. p. 798
The parliament ſends Strickland to the Hague, who is coldly received. ib.
He delivers to a member of the States, a declaration or repreſentation of both houſes of parliament, in which they charged the King with the deſign of undermining the Engliſh liberties, and requires the States to deſert the King, and aſſiſt them. ib.
The States promiſe a neutrality, and offer their mediation. ib.
The Queen arrives in England, and goes to York. ib. Feb. 22.
Plot to deliver up Briſtol to the King. p. 799 March 7.

An' 1642. The conſpirators are condemned to die; the King threatens to make reprizals; they are notwithſtanding executed. Page 799
The parliament deſires a ſafe-conduct to treat for a pacification. ib.
The earl of Briſtol's ſpeech for continuing the war. ib.
The earl of Dorſet's ſpeech for an accommodation. ib.
1643. The parliament require a peace. p. 800
Their propoſitions. ib.
The King condeſcends to a treaty. p. 801
He deſires a ceſſation may be firſt ſetled. ib.
Articles for a ceſſation ſent by the parliament. ib.
Propoſitions, anſwers, and replies. ib. 807
The conference is broken off. p. 807
He detaches Prince Rupert to ſettle a communica- between York and Oxford. p. 808
He reduces Birmingham and Litchfield in his way. ib.
April 26. Eſſex takes Reading by ſiege. ib.
Sir William Waller takes Hereford. ib.
June 18. A glorious expedition of Prince Rupert. p. 809 ditto 24. Hambden ſlain. ib.
The Queen brings the King a great ſupply. ib.
July 22. Prince Rupert takes Briſtol. ib.
Aug. 10. The King beſieges Gloceſter, he raiſes the ſiege upon the approach of Eſſex. p. 810
Eſſex returns towards London, and in his way ſurprizes the town of Cirenceſter. ib.
Prince Rupert overtakes him at Auborn-Chace, a ſharp ingagement inſues, in which Eſſex is worſted. ib.
The battle of Newbury. p. 811
The King retires to Oxford, and the earl of Eſſex to Windſor. ib.
Military actions in the Weſt. ib.
Stamford defeated by Hopton near Stratton. ib.
Hopton remains maſter of Cornwall. ib.
The King ſends the marquis of Hertford weſtward. ib.
He takes Bridgewater and Taunton. ib.
An action near Bath, in which Prince Maurice is wounded. p. 812
July 5. The battle of Lanſdown, in which the marquis loſt moſt of his cavalry, but gained a compleat victory. ib.
ditto 5. The battle of Round-way Down, where Waller is intirely routed. ib.
The King ſends Prince Maurice to command in the Weſt. p. 813
Earl of Caernarvon advancing before Prince Maurice, takes Weymouth, Dorcheſter, and Portland-caſtle. ib.
Sept. 5. Prince Maurice takes Exeter. ib.
Oct. 6. He takes Dartmouth, and beſieges Plymouth. ib.
Military actions in the North. ib.
May 21. Sir Thomas Fairfax attacks and takes Wakefield, and makes general Goring priſoner. ib.
June 50. The earl of Newcaſtle having Howley-houſe, defeats lord Fairfax Atherton-Moor. ib.
Gainſborough taken by Willmot; the earl of Kingſton made priſoner, and killed by accident. ib.
The earl of Newcaſtle re-takes the town, poſſeſſes himſelf of Lincoln, and beſieges Hull. ib.
He is obliged to raiſe the ſiege. ib.
Oct. 11. The earl of Mancheſter beats lord Widrington at Horn-caſtle. ib.
May 15. Affairs of Scotland. ib.
The King ſends thither the earls of Roxborough, Kinnoul and Lanerick, with a patent to create the marquis of Hamilton duke. p. 814
June 10. The King conſents to a convention of the ſtates, with certain limitations. ib.
Which are rejected by the ſtates. ib.
The convention of ſtates meet the 22d of June. ib.
Aug. 2. The general aſſembly of the kirk. ib.
The parliament ſends for aid to the ſtates of Scotland. Page 814 An' 1643.
Reaſons of the general aſſembly for aſſiſting the Engliſh parliament. p. 815
Covenant between the two nations approved in Scotland and England. p. 816 Aug. 17.
Treaty between England and Scotland ſigned November the 29th. p. 818
An army prepared in Scotland. p. 819
Manifeſto of the Scots. ib.
The King's anſwer. ib.
The Scots army enters England, Jan. 15, 1643-4. ib.
The King inclined to make a truce with Ireland. ib.
He concludes it September 15, 1644. p. 820
The parliament ſends a commitee to Dublin. ib.
By the King's expreſs order, they are ſent back to England. ib.
The King impowers the marquis of Ormond to treat with the rebels. p. 821 April 23.
Part of the Iriſh army land in England for the King, and take Hawarden-caſtle in Flintſhire, and other places in Cheſhire. ib.
Lord Fairfax defeats the Iriſh. ib.
Several events follow, which has been omited this year. p. 822
A deſign to oblige the parliament to a peace. ib.
The King allows in December 1642, free commerce between his quarters and London. ib.
The commons forbid it. ib.
The Queen accuſed of high treaſon. ib. May 23.
The King forbids obedience to the parliament. ib.
Mr. Pym communicates to the peers, a plot to force the parliament to a peace. ib.
Oath agreed on by both houſes. p. 823 June 6.
The King's declaration after his ſucceſſes. ib.
The houſe of lords propoſe ſending to his Majeſty offers of peace. p. 824
Propoſitions for peace by the peers. ib.
The commons conſent to the propoſitions. p. 825 Aug. 5.
The city of London petition againſt it. ib.
Five thouſand women, with white ribbands in their hats, gather about the parliament houſe, requiring peace; ſome companies of ſoldiers attack them, wound ſome, killed one or two, and diſperſed the reſt. ib.
Character of the earl of Eſſex. ib.
The earl of Mancheſter made general by the parliament, of the aſſociating counties. p. 826
Sir John Hotham's diſgrace. ib.
The parliament accuſes the King with countenancing Popery, and exciting the Iriſh rebellion. p. 827
The King's proteſtation in regard to the firſt charge. ib.
Declaration of both houſes againſt the King, touching the Iriſh rebellion. ib. 830
Policy of the parliament in accuſing the King. p. 831
The book of ſports burned by the parliament's order. ib.
Judge Berkley's ſentence. ib.
The King's, Queen's, and Prince's revenues ſeized. ib. Sept. 21.
The parliament orders a new great ſeal. p. 832
Count Harcourt embaſſador from France to the King. p. 833
Sir Edward Dearing returns to the parliament, and dies ſoon after. ib.
Pym died December 8, 1643. ib.
The parliament hangs one of the King's meſſengers, whom he had ſent with offers of peace. ib.
The aſſembly of divines, write circular letters to the churches abroad, juſtifying the parliament. p. 834
The King's manifeſto to all the Proteſtant churches touching religion. ib.
The King calls a parliament at Oxford, which met the 22d of January, 1643. ib.

This

AN' 1643. This parliament propoſes peace. Page 834
A letter from the parliament of Oxford to the earl of Eſſex, ſigned by the Prince of Wales, duke of York, &c. p. 835
The earl of Eſſex's anſwer. ib.
The King's meſſage to both houſes at Weſtminſter. ib.
Declaration of both houſes to his Majeſty. ib.
The Oxford parliament's declaration on a peace. ib.
The Weſtminſter parliament's declaration on the ſame account. ib.
Votes at Oxford againſt the Scots. p. 836
Means to procure money for his Majeſty. ib.
The word Exciſe firſt made uſe of in England. ib.
The Oxford parliament prorogued. ib.
The Scots army enters England. ib.
Lord Fairfax takes Selby, makes Bellaſis, and ſixteen hundred of his men priſoners, and kills a great number. ib.
1644. The ſiege of Newark raiſed by Prince Rupert, and Meldrum defeated. p. 837
He takes Stopworth by ſtorm in his way to Latham-houſe, where the counteſs of Derby was beſieged, and had made a gallant defenſe for eighteen weeks, but the beſiegers diſlodging, and reinforcing Bolton, he takes that town by ſtorm, and afterwards takes Liverpool. ib.
The parliament has five armies. ib.
The earl of Mancheſter joins Fairfax, and the Scots. ib.
The ſiege of York. ib.
The marquis of Newcaſtle makes a ſally, and is repulſed. p. 838
Prince Rupert approaches York. ib.
The ſiege is raiſed. ib.
The parliament generals retire. ib.
Prince Rupert follows them. ib.
Battle of Marſton-moor, where the Prince's army is defeated. ib.
Marquis of Newcaſtle goes to Holland. p. 839
July 15. York is taken by the parliament. ib.
The Scots take Newcaſtle, which ſurrenders at diſcretion. ib.
The parliament makes extraordinary preparations. ib.
The King ſends Hopton Southward, in hopes of breaking their aſſociation with the four Southern counties. ib.
Hopton takes Arundel-caſtle, but it is ſoon after re-taken by Waller. p. 840
He beats up one of lord Hopton's quarters, and carries off colonel Boles's regiment. ib.
March 29. The battle of Alresford in which lord Hopton is defeated, and forced to retire to Reading, and thence to Oxford. ib.
The parliament reſolves upon the ſiege of Oxford. ib.
The King demoliſhes Reading, and draws off the gariſon, conſiſting of 2500 men, to ſtrengthen his army. ib.
The parliament's army, conſiſting of 23500 horſe and foot march towards Oxford; upon their approach, Willmot abandons Abington, which is poſſeſſed by Eſſex. ib.
Waller gains the paſs at Newbridge over the Iſis, and falls upon the rear of the King's infantry; Eſſex paſſes the Cherwell, and Goſworth-bridge with his army and the King leaves Oxford upon the third of June. ib.
He arrives ſafe at Worceſter. p. 841
Eſſex countermands the orders of the parliament, and marches into the Weſt, breaking up the ſiege of Oxford. ib.
July 14. The Queen retires into France. ib.
Prince Maurice at the approach of Eſſex, on the 15th of June, breaks up the ſiege of Lime, before which town he had lain from the 20th of April, and retires to Exeter. Page 841 AN' 1644.
Eſſex poſſeſſes himſelf of Dorcheſter. ib.
Sir William Balfour takes Weymouth. ib.
Prince Maurice ſends a detachment to ſecure Barnſtable, but the inhabitants ſhut the gates againſt him, and ſend to Eſſex to take poſſeſſion of that town, which he did by lord Roberts. ib.
Here was taken captain Howard, who formerly, with nineteen troopers, deſerted to the King, for which he was now tried, condemned, and executed; and Prince Maurice by way of reprizal, hanged one Turpin a ſea captain. ib.
Serjeant Glanvil is thereupon ordered to be impeached of high treaſon, and ſeveral on both ſides ſuffer by way of repriſal. ib.
The King deceives Waller in his march, and advances towards Oxford. ib.
Cropedy-bridge fight. ib. June 29.
The King marches Weſtward. p. 842
He arrives at Bath, ſtays but two days, from thence goes to Exeter, and finds his army more numerous than that of the earl of Eſſex. ib.
He ſends a meſſage to both houſes for peace; to which they return no anſwer. ib.
His ſpeech to the men of Somerſetſhire. ib. p. 843 July 25.
Eſſex marches into Cornwall, and is followed by the King. ib.
Eſſex writes to the parliament for more forces. ib.
Colonel Middleton is detached with 2500 horſe and dragoons. ib.
The King writes to Eſſex; he returns no anſwer. ib. Aug. 6.
The King orders Willmot to be arreſted. ib.
Eſſex deceived by the lord Roberts's promiſes, is greatly ſtreightened. p. 844
He ſaves his cavalry by the help of a dark night, and, by ſea, eſcapes with ſome officers to Plymouth. ib.
He leaves major general Skippon to make the beſt terms he can; who gives up all his artillery and ammunition. ib.
The King's meſſage to both houſes, with offers of peace. ib.
He attacks Plymouth, but does not ſucceed. ib.
The Elector Palatine arrives at London. p. 845
The King reſolves upon marching to London, and iſſues a prolamation. ib.
Meets with obſtructions in his march. ib.
He alters his reſolution, and goes to Oxford. p. 846
The parliament forms a great army. ib. Oct. 18.
The King falls on the rear of Waller's army. ib.
The earl of Northampton relieves Banbury-caſtle. ib.
The ſecond battle of Newbury. ib.
The King retires in the night. ib.
He draws off his canon from Dennington-caſtle, in ſight of the enemy. ib.
An ordinance, injoining the forbearance of one meal per week in every family, and contributing the value thereof to the public ſervice. p. 847 March 26. May 7.
A difference between the two houſes. ib.
Ordinance againſt ſuch members as had deſerted. ib. June 29.
The earl of Leiceſter returns to London, and is ordered into cuſtody. p. 848
Embaſſadors from the States General offer their mediation; but at firſt refuſe to acknowlege the two houſes at Weſtminſter for the parliament of England; but afterwards complying, they preſented their memorial. ib.
The fine impoſed by the ſtar-chamber, on dr. Denzil Holles, is repaid him by order of the houſe of commons. ib. July 6.
Lord Macguire, and Macmahone, brought to their trial. ib.
Archbiſhop Laud's trial and execution. ib. 849
The liturgy aboliſhed. p. 849

The

An' 1644. The parliament ſends propoſitions to his Majeſty at Oxford. Page 849
The commiſſioners have a private conference with the King. ib.
The King's anſwer. p. 850
Agreed between the King and parliament, that commiſſioners on each ſide ſhould meet at Uxbridge, January the 30th, 1644. ib.
Propoſitions of the parliament, and Scots commiſſioners. ib.——852
Some papers found in the King's cabinet at Naſeby fight, which the parliament got printed and publiſhed. p. 853——856
The King's commiſſioners offers with regard to religion. p. 856
About the militia. ib.
Concerning Ireland. p. 857
The King's propoſition concerning the ceſſation of arms being refuſed, the treaty breaks off. ib.
State of King and parliament. ib.
Different origin of the Independents, with regard to religion and civil government. ib.
They join at firſt the Preſbyterians. ib.
The Independents begin to undermine the Preſbyterians power. p. 858
Cromwell accuſes the earl of Mancheſter, with not having done his duty in parliament. ib.
The parliament's partiality in diſtributing imploys. ib.
Cromwell's ſpeech to both houſes. p. 859
Motion to exclude all members from poſts, approv'd. ib.
Another for new modelling the army. ib.
The ſelf-denying ordinance paſſes the commons. ib.
The lords reject it. ib.
1645. The army new modelled, Fairfax made general. ib.
The lords paſs the ſelf-denying ordinance. ib.
The earls of Eſſex, Denbigh and Mancheſter, reſign their commiſſions. ib.
Cromwell defeats a brigade of the King's horſe at Iſlip-bridge, has Blechington ſurrendered to him by Windebank, who is condemned and ſhot by a council of war; Cromwell gains other advantages, but is repulſed at Farrington. p. 860
Cromwell detached towards Oxford. ib.
The Royaliſts beſiege Taunton. Fairfax ordered to relieve it. ib.
May 8. He is ſent for back, and detaches colonel Welden with part of his forces to Taunton. p. 861
The King takes the field, and marches to the relief of Cheſter. ib.
The ſiege of Taunton is raiſed. ib.
Fairfax receives orders to lay ſiege to Oxford. ib.
He draws near that city. ib.
The King takes Leiceſter by aſſault. ib.
He marches to Harborough. ib.
Fairfax breaks up the ſiege of Oxford to follow the King. ib.
And is repulſed at Broſtal-houſe. ib.
Cromwell is made general of the horſe, notwithſtanding the ſelf-denying ordinance. ib.
Battle of Naſeby, where the King is intirely routed, and his artillery, baggage, and his cabinet of letters taken, which letters the parliament printed. ib.
Fairfax reduces Leiceſter. p. 862
He marches towards the Weſtern provinces. ib.
Fairfax defeats general Goring at Langport. ib.
Bridgewater aſſaulted. ib.
Taking of Bridgewater. ib.
Taking of Bath. ib.
Capitulation of Sherborn. ib.
Fairfax beſieges Briſtol. ib.
Prince Rupert gives up Briſtol. ib.
Cromwell reduces the Deviſes. p. 863
He takes Berkley-caſtle. ib.
And Wincheſter-caſtle. ib.
Baſing taken by aſſault. ib.
Fairfax takes Tiverton. Page 863 An' 1645.
By aſſault he takes Dartmouth. ib.
Exeter blockaded. ib.
Battle of Torrington, where Hopton is defeated by Fairfax. ib.
Fairfax follows him into Cornwall. ib.
The Prince of Wales retires into the Iſle of Silly. ib.
Faifax ſends honorable terms to Hopton in caſe he would capitulate, who finding himſelf ſurrounded, and without redreſs, agrees; the treaty is ſigned the 14th of March, and all the horſes and arms were delivered to Fairfax, who returned to ſit down before Exeter, which ſurrendered to him the 9th of April. p. 864
The Scots beſiege Hereford, but are obliged to break up the ſiege. ib.
They ſit down before Newark about the cloſe of October, which they do not reduce before May 1646. ib.
Pomfret and Scarborough-caſtle ſurrender to the parliament. ib.
His Majeſty quits Wales with 3000 horſe; takes Huntington, where he finds a great booty; from thence goes to Oxford, were ſtaying but three days, and taking with him what forces could be ſpared, he marched to Camden, arrives at Hereford, where he received news of the ſurrender of Briſtol. ib.
The King marches to the relief of Cheſter. ib.
An action near that town, in which the King is defeated, and is obliged to retire into Wales. p. 865
He comes from thence to Newark in Notinghamſhire, which place he quits by night, and arrives at Oxford the ſixth of November. ib.
He vainly attempts to bring the parliament to a peace. ib.
Subſtance of a treaty between the earl of Glamorgan, and the confederate Iriſh Catholics. p. 868
The French court ſends Montrueil, who adviſes the King to join with the Preſbyterians, which he refuſes. p. 869 1646.
The King goes to the Scots army. ib. May 15.
He orders Newark to be ſurrendered to the Scots, who carry him to Newcaſtle. p. 870
He ſends a meſſage to both houſes, in which he agrees, that they ſhall for ſeven years nominate all the commiſſioners of the militia. ib.
He writes to the city of London, that he was ready to comply with the parliament in every thing. ib. June 10.
By a ſecond meſſage, the King preſſes the parliament to ſend him their propoſals for peace, and requires the liberty of repairing to London, to treat with them in perſon. ib.
The Scots deny, by declaration, having made any treaty with his Majeſty, and petition the King to take ſome ſpeedy courſe for ſettling religion in England, and eſtabliſhing the privileges and liberties of his kingdom. p. 871
The commons in England vote the Scots army no July 6. longer neceſſary. ib.
They ſend to his Majeſty propoſitions for a peace, little differing from thoſe debated at Uxbridge, with an additional article, that the parliament ſhall have the ſole power over the militia for twenty years; and that they, by their own authority, ſhall raiſe what money they ſhall think neceſſary for its maintenance, &c. ib.
The King's anſwer. ib.
The Scots preſs him to accept the propoſals. ib.
The Scots offer to return home. ib.
Diſputes concerning the arrears due to the Scots. ib.
Four hundred thouſand pounds is allowed them. p. 872
Conferences about diſpoſing the King's perſon. ib.
Debates in the Scots parliament about the diſpoſal of the King's perſon, and the reſolution thereupon. p. 873

Which

AN' 1646. Which the general aſſembly oppoſes. Page 873
Decem. 20. The King's meſſage to both houſes for a perſonal treaty. p. 874
The commons vote his Majeſty's going to Holmby-houſe in Northamptonſhire; and on the fifth of January, 1646-7, a commitee of both houſes is appointed to go down and receive his Majeſty from the Scots. ib.
Jan. 16. The Scots parliament's declaration. ib.
His Majeſty is delivered to the parliament's commiſſaries at Newcaſtle, the ſame day the Scots army begin their march for Scotland; his Majeſty arrives at Holmby the ſixteenth of February. p. 875
The difference of the Preſbyterians and Independents. ib.
Cromwell's diſſimulation. ib.
He raiſes a ſpirit of mutiny in the army. ib.
Project of a petition from the army. ib.
The houſe orders Fairfax to publiſh at the head of every regiment a declaration importing, that the petition tended to breed mutiny in the army and menacing to proceed againſt the promoters of it as enemies of the ſtate, and diſturbers of the public peace. p. 876
The army's diſcontent increaſes. ib.
The parliament ſends a commitee to form the army for Ireland. ib.
The army no ways inclined to obey them. ib.
Skippon nominated to command in Ireland. ib.
NB. The parliament's deſign was to chuſe out of the army a certain number of officers, troopers and ſoldiers to compoſe an army to ſend into Ireland, to place gariſons in England, and to diſband the remainder; but they would not conſent to be caſhiered, and ſought opportunities to quarrel with the parliament, that they might come to an open rupture, or to an agreement, by which they ſhould be kept on foot.
The declaration of the officers. ib.
1647. Their ſecond declaration preſented to both houſes, with ſome of the principal officers at their head. ib.
Vote to diſband the army. p. 877
April 30. Petition of eight regiments of horſe, complaining of many late ſcandalous and falſe ſuggeſtions againſt the army, with reaſons for their not ſerving in Ireland, &c. ib.
Votes in favor of the army. ib.
New commiſſioners ſent to them. ib.
Anſwer of the officers to the commiſſioners. ib.
The ſoldiers deſire to conſult among themſelves, which is granted, and they ſet up the council of agitators. ib.
The parliament perſiſts in their deſign to diſband the army, and to break the regiments at different times and places. ib.
The army openly complains, and gives reaſons why the votes are not thought ſatisfactory. ib.
They proceed to threats. ib. 878
The army's quarters are contracted. p. 878
The parliament re-call their commiſſioners, and project dividing the army. ib.
June 4. The King forcibly carried away from Holmby. ib.
He is conducted to Newmarket. p. 879
Vote for renewing the ſelf-denying ordinance. p. 880
The general marches towards London; the city makes a ſhew of puting itſelf in a poſture of defenſe; the general writes to the magiſtracy; the common council return him an anſwer. ib.
A month's pay offered by the parliament's commiſſioners to the army on condition they approach no nearer to London. ib.
The army's declaration. ib.
They accuſe eleven members; their charge againſt them; they make demands on the parliament; ſome counties ſide with them. p. 881
The parliament, reſolving to ſatisfy the army, by their conceſſions, diſcover their weakneſs; the army is not contented. Page 881
They remonſtrate. p. 882
Upon which both houſes ſend deputies to treat with them upon the points remonſtrated. ib.
The eleven accuſed members deſire leave to abſent themſelves from the houſe, which is granted, and the army ſatisfied. ib.
The parliament comply with the army, apprehending the danger of a rupture, and appoint their head quarters at Wickham. ib.
A conſpiracy at London againſt the army, in which the magiſtracy are concerned; the common-council petition the parliament. ib.
Cromwell, Ireton, &c. commiſſioners nominated by the army to treat with thoſe of the parliament. p. 883
The apprentices preſent petitions to the parliament. ib.
The Northern forces publiſh a declaration of their adherence to the army. ib.
The army has ſome intelligence of the conſpiracy carrying on in London, and petition the parliament. ib.
Solemn ingagement of the citizens. p. 884
The parliament forbids ſigning it. ib.
Commotions in London. ib.
Two petitions for the continuing the militia. ib.
Perplexity of the parliament. ib.
The apprentices, and others, petition the parliament for the continuing the militia, and by their riotous proceedings compell both houſes to agree to their demands. p. 885
Upon the intelligence of the army's advancing towards London, the citizens put themſelves into a poſture of defenſe. ib.
The two ſpeakers, and ſeveral other members in the intereſt of the army, abſent themſelves. ib.
The remaining members vote that the King ſhould come to London, and that the city ſhould have power to raiſe what forces they ſhall think fit. ib.
Major general Maſſey choſen commander in chief. ib.
General Fairfax ſends a ſevere letter to the city. ib.
The city's declaration againſt the army. ib.
Both houſes order Fairfax to remove the army farther from London. ib.
They vote to admit the eleven accuſed members. p. 886
The army marches towards London. ib.
Preparations in the city. ib.
Fairfax gives the parliament's commiſſioners propoſals for peace. ib.
The two ſpeakers, and the abſenting members, fly to the army's protection. ib.
The army's manifeſto. ib.
The common-council give way to the army on their near approach to London. p. 888
The forts on the Weſt ſide of the city delivered to Fairfax. ib.
He comes to London, and reſtores the ſpeakers, and other members, to their places. ib.
He is conſtituted governor of the Tower, and receives thanks from the parliament. ib.
Diſpute between lords and commons. ib.
Situation of the King's affairs. ib.
His Majeſty treated with great lenity by the army. ib.
But on prevailing they abate much of their reſpect. p. 889
Tranſactions by the army and parliament from the time of his Majeſty's being at Hampton court. ib.
The King is carried from Holmby by the army's authority. ib.
Articles propoſed to be treated on by the army's commiſſioners. ib. 891
Regulation touching the army. p. 892

AN' 1647. July 30.

An' 1647. The King reſolves to eſcape from Hampton court. Page 892
He goes to the iſle of Wight. p. 893
The King's letter to both houſes left upon his table at Hampton-court. ib.
The parliament orders ſearch to be made for the King in London. ib.
An account of the Levellers. ib. 894
Cromwell diſperſes them. p. 894
The King's letter and propoſals to both houſes. ib.
The parliament takes not any notice of them. p. 895
Negociation of the Scots commiſſioners. p. 896
Conteſt between them and the parliament. ib.
Nov. 26. The lords propoſe a peace with the King on his aſſenting to four bills. ib.
Declaration of the Scots, which offends the parliament. ib.
The four bills preſented to his Majeſty. ib.
The Scots commiſſioners arrive at the iſle of Wight. ib.
They deliver to the King a declaration againſt the propoſitions and the four bills. ib.
Treaty ſigned by the King and the Scots commiſſioners on the twenty-fifth of December. p. 897——899
The King's anſwer to the parliament's commiſſioners. p. 900
The King deprived of all his ſervants and ſtrictly guarded by Hammond. ib.
Decem. 29. Burley, for indeavoring to excite the inhabitants of the iſle of Wight to releaſe the King, is hanged and quartered. ib.
Jan. 3. His Majeſty's anſwer read in the houſe of commons. ib.
Cromwell inveighs againſt the King. ib.
Vote that no more addreſſes be made to, nor meſſages received from his Majeſty. ib.
The ſchemes for his Majeſty's deliverance. ib.
Strict union between the parliament and army. p. 904
Precautians taken by the parliament to curb the Londoners. ib.
The Scots reſolve upon their parliaments meeting the tenth of March, which occaſions the parliament at Weſtminſter to ſend commiſſioners into Scotland to obſerve the motions of the Scots. ib.
1648. Speeches in the Scots parliament to excite the people againſt England. ib.
A commitee appointed in which care was taken that there ſhould be a majority of ſuch members as were for raiſing an army to go againſt England, called, The commitee of danger. ib.
They find it neceſſary to raiſe an army of forty thouſand men. ib.
The reſolution of this commitee oppoſed by the kirk's commiſſioners. ib.
Several proteſtations againſt a war. p. 906
Hamilton made general by order of parliament. ib.
Several obſtacles raiſed by Argyle and the rigid eccleſiaſtics, which cauſe great delays. ib.
Combination in Wales, to reſcue his Majeſty, by Langhorn, Powel and Poyer; the latter refuſing to obey the general's commiſſion, is declared a traitor by the parliament; he defeats Fleming. p. 907
A riot at Canterbury the twenty-fifth of December, in which the mayor, and other magiſtrates, are wounded and abuſed. ib.
Inſurrection in Kent; Hales declared their general. ib.
The Kentiſh male-contents, led by the earl of Norwich and ſir William Waller, advance towards Blackheath. ib.
And are diſperſed by Fairfax. ib.
The earl of Norwich, with about five or ſix hundred followers, croſs over into Eſſex. ib.
The diſpoſition of the people of Eſſex. ib.
Fairfax marches into Eſſex; the revolters retire to Colcheſter, where they are defeated. p. 908 Tumult in London. Page 908 April 9.
The mutineers diſperſed. ib. An' 1648.
The duke of York eſcapes from London. ib. April 21.
Langdale ſeizes on Berwick; Muſgrave on Carliſle. p. 909
Part of the fleet revolts againſt the parliament, and go over to Holland, where they receive on board the duke of York. ib.
The Prince of Wales goes on board the fleet and ſails towards Yarmouth, in his way takes a rich ſhip of London, bound for Rotterdam. ib.
He is refuſed admitance into Yarmouth, and enters the river Thames. ib.
The earl of Warwick approaches in order to ingage him, but they part without fighting. ib.
The King's friends ſeize Pontefract caſtle, and Scarborough caſtle revolts to the King. p. 910
Project of the earl of Holland in the King's favor. ib.
He is joined by the duke of Buckingham and others, who are declared traitors; they are routed near Kingſton by colonel Leveſy. ib.
The lords ſurpriſed at St. Neots, where lord Francis Villiers is ſlain, and the earl of Holland taken. ib.
The Scots army enters England. ib.
Pembroke caſtle ſurrenders to Cromwell who marches Northward. July 11. ib.
Duke of Hamilton's views. p. 911
The Scots commiſſioners and Royaliſts indeavor to deceive each other. ib.
Duke Hamilton marches to Carliſle where he places a Scots gariſon; he is joined by Langdale, and enters Lancaſhire. ib.
Cromwell joins Lambert; they march directly to Preſton in ſearch of the duke of Hamilton. ib.
Langdale intirely routed. p. 912
Duke of Hamilton routed at Preſton. ib.
Cromwell's letter to the parliament on this ſubject. ib.
Duke Hamilton retires to Nantwich, and being purſued by Lambert he marches to Utoxeter, where he and all his officers are taken. ib. 913
Colcheſter ſurrenders to Fairfax. ib Auguſt 27.
The Independents prevail in parliament. ib
The Preſbyterians rely on the aſſiſtance of the Scots. ib.
The Preſbyterians get the upperhand in parliament. ib.
The city of London petitions that the chains of the city may be again ſet up, and the army removed to a greater diſtance from London. ib.
The commons votes are oppoſite to the views of the Independents. ib.
Petition preſented to the common-council by ſeveral citizens with relation to the militia, which occaſions a petition from the common-council to parliament. p. 914
Petition from Surrey in the King's behalf. ib.
A ſkirmiſh between the parliament's guard, and ſome Surrey men. ib.
Union between the parliament and city. ib.
The Preſbyterians determine on concluding of peace with his Majeſty, upon three previous conditions. p. 915
The Londoners addreſs the parliament; they grant what the city deſires and vote to treat with the King. ib.
Petition from London to treat with the King. p. 916
Tranſactions between the lords and commons. ib.
The Independents retard the treaty. p. 917
The common-council attempt to force the parliament to treat, who order general Skippon privately to liſt ſoldiers in the city to be a guard for them in caſe of violence, which is complained of by the common-council; the houſe indeavors to appeaſe them. ib.
Some Royaliſts mixed with the Preſbyterians. ib.

Duke

AN' 1648. Duke Hamilton's behavior when he entered England. Page 918
The King's demands; the votes of the lords thereupon, with the commons reſtrictions. p. 919
Freſh inſtructions given to colonel Hammond. ib.
Prince Charles's letter to the lords. p. 920
Petition from the common-council in behalf of the King. ib.
Another of the ſame tenor from the reduced officers. ib.
The commons anſwer to the common-council of London. ib.
Sept. 11. Petition from the Independents for new regulations. ib.
Another of the ſame tenor from maſters of ſhips; neither of them anſwered. p. 921
Cromwell marches againſt Monroe. ib.
The face of affairs changed in Scotland. ib.
Argyle raiſes forces to oppoſe Monroe. ib.
Cromwell marches to Edinburg, and the commitee of ſtate diſperſe. ib.
Articles between Argyle and Monroe. p. 922
Cromwell received into Edinburg, and obtains the reſtitution of Berwick and Carliſle, and, leaving Lambert in Scotland with ſome regiments, returns to London. ib.
Conference at Newport. ib.
The King objects to the preamble of the third bill, but after ſeven days diſpute is obliged to yield to it, tho' thereby he charges himſelf with having made war upon the parliament. ib.
The King's meſſage and offers to both houſes. ib.
His offers rejected. p. 923
He makes propoſals concerning delinquents. ib.
The conferences are prolonged for a week. p. 924
The King makes new offers with regard to epiſcopacy, and makes farther conceſſions. ib.
He refuſes to relinquiſh epiſcopacy. ib.
The parliament vote the King's offers not ſatisfactory. ib.
The treaty prolonged fourteen days. ib.
The commiſſioners make a report on the King's laſt anſwer. ib.
The parliament vote that his Majeſty's anſwer concerning the church form of prayer, is not ſatisfactory. p. 925
Votes upon the King's deſires. ib.
The treaty farther prolonged. ib.
The army reſolves forcibly to prevent a peace. ib.
Cromwell before Pontefract. ib.
He ſends a part of his army to Fairfax. p. 926
Nov. 20. Remonſtrance of the army, to which the parliament makes no anſwer. ib.
Several petitions demanding juſtice upon the King. ib.
Both houſes indeavor to amuſe the army. p. 927
The King rejects the propoſitions concerning Ireland. ib.
Hammond recalled to the army, and the care of his Majeſty commited to colonel Ewers. ib.
The vote of the commons with regard to this change proves fruitleſs. ib.
The commons order Fairfax to recall his orders and ſend back colonel Hammond to the iſle of Wight, which he ſlights and removes his Majeſty to Hurſt caſtle. Page 927
The army's declaration. ib.
Nov. 30. Fairfax writes to the city to adviſe them of his moving towards London, and requires that forty thouſand pounds be ready for him, which ſum the commons agree the city ſhall ſend him, and acquaint him that it is the pleaſure of the houſe that he ſhall approach no nearer London. p. 928
Fairfax arrives and takes up his quarters in Whitehall and St. James's Meuſe. ib.
The parliament vote that the removal of his Majeſty was contrary to the advice of the houſe, and that his Majeſty's conceſſions were ſufficient. ib.
Commitee to confer with the general. ib.
Forty members of the commons put under arreſt. ib.
Propoſals and deſires of the army preſented to the commons. ib.
The ſoldiers exclude a hundred members. p. 929
Cromwell arrives at London. ib.
Fairfax ſeizes on the money in Weavers-hall. ib.
Decem. 11. Plan for ſetling the government founded upon independent principles, and agreeable to the army's remonſtrance. ib.
The ſecluded members having proteſted againſt the violence done them, both houſes declare their proteſt ſcandalous and ſeditious. ib.
Order, concerning the election of lord mayor, and the repreſentation of the common-council thereupon. ib.
Some of the arreſted members releaſed. p. 930
Several petitions for juſtice upon the King. ib.
A commitee appointed to draw up a charge againſt him. ib.
The fleet ſends Fairfax a declaration of their concurring with the army in its remonſtrance. ib.
Stratagem for the King's eſcape fruſtrated. ib.
He is brought to Windſor, where he is treated without the uſual ceremonies, and from thence conveyed to St. James's. ib.
Ordinance, touching the election of the lord mayor. ib.
Preface of the ordinance for erecting a court of juſtice. ib.
The ordinance rejected by the lords. p. 931
Commons vote the peers concurrence unneceſſary, and ſtrike out the names of ſix lords, who had been appointed judges, after which they make three extraordinary votes. ib.
Moſt material points in King Charles's trial. ib.
The King's reaſon for not owning the court's authority. p. 933
Remarkable depoſitions againſt his Majeſty. p. 934
Sentence pronounced againſt him. ib.
He is executed. ib.
His character. ib.

VOLUME the THIRD.

The COMMONWEALTH of ENGLAND.

REcapitulation of ſome material matters. Page 3
Act to prohibit proclaiming the King's ſon. p. 4
March 9. The commons aboliſh the houſe of peers. ib.
The parliament reduced to about eighty members who act with abſolute power. ib.
They aboliſh Monarchy. Page 4 1649.
A new great ſeal; the inſcription. p. 5
Council of ſtate; new high court of juſtice. ib.
Some noble priſoners brought before it. ib.
Their condemnation. ib.

Sir

An' 1649. Sir John Owen's execution ſuſpended. Page 6
The execution of duke Hamilton, lord Capel and others. ib.
The Prince of Wales aſſumes the title of King. ib.
The Queen calls him into France. ib.
He is treated coldly in Holland. ib.
State of Ireland. ib.
Affairs of Scotland. p. 7
Proteſtation of the Scots. ib.
The parliament's anſwer. p. 8
Anſwer of the Scots deputies. ib.
Proclamation of Charles II in Scotland. p. 9
The earls of Lanerick, Lauderdale, and marquis of Montroſe arrive at the Hague. ib.
The King commiſſions the marquis of Montroſe to invade Scotland. p. 10
May 3. The Engliſh agent murdered at the Hague. ib.
Inſurrection in Scotland. ib.
State of Ireland. ib.
Cromwell made governor there. ib.
The Levellers riſe in arms. p. 11
Ormond beſieges Dublin; is defeated by colonel Jones. ib.
Cromwell lands at Dublin. ib.
The King retires to Jerſey. ib.
Windram ſent to him from Scotland. ib.
Cromwell takes Drogheda. ib.
The King appoints Breda for treating with the Scots commiſſioners. ib.
Terms preſented to the King by them. p. 12
The King amuſes the commiſſioners. p. 13
Montroſe's progreſs in Germany. ib.
His arrival in Scotland. ib.
1650. The Scots parliament diſpleaſed with the King, they raiſe ſixty thouſand men againſt Montroſe. ib.
April 29. He is ſurpriſed, defeated, and taken priſoner. p. 14
Is condemned to be hanged; his ſpeech at his execution. ib.
The King agrees to the Scots propoſals. ib.
He imbarks for Scotland and arrives there June the ſixteenth. ib.
He is forced to ſign the covenant. ib.
The manner of his Majeſty's reception. ib.
He attempts to eſtabliſh the Hamiltonians. p. 15
Engliſh parliament's reſolution againſt Scotland. ib.
Cromwell's conqueſts in Ireland; he is called home. ib.
June 26. He leaves Ireton to command. ib.
Fairfax reſigns his commiſſion, and is ſucceeded by Cromwell. ib.
Parliament's manifeſto. p. 16
The Scots raiſe an army under Leſley. ib.
Cromwell enters Scotland; ſkirmiſhes between the armies. ib.
Sept. 3. He marches to Dunbar; a battle there. ib.
The Scots defeated. ib.
Two parties in Scotland. p. 17
His Majeſty's ſtrange declaration. ib.
His flight. ib.
He is brought back and better treated. p. 18
He is crowned in Scotland, and appears at the head of the Scots army. ib.
He incamps at Torwood; Cromwell dare not attack him. ib.
1651. Cromwell enters Fife; he routs the King's detachment. ib.
He takes St. Johnſtoun. ib.
July 31. The King marches into England. p. 19
His ill ſucceſs. ib.
Sept. 1. He ſtops at Worceſter. ib.
ditto 3. Cromwell approaches. ib.
The battle of Worceſter; the King defeated. ib.
He narrowly eſcapes. p. 20
He goes into France. ib.
Monk reduces Scotland. ib.
The Engliſh commonwealth's power. ib.
Cromwell returns to London. p. 21
The parliament's fleet takes Jerſey, Barbadoes, and other iſlands. Page 21 An' 1651.
The parliament unite England and Scotland. ib.
They reſolve to declare war againſt the States of Holland. p. 22
The States indeavor to prevent the war. ib.
Letters of the parliament to foreign Princes. ib.
The Dutch fleet appears in Dover road. p. 23 1652.
The firſt naval ingagement. ib.
Manifeſtos from both nations. ib.
Van Trump's fleet diſperſed by a ſtorm. ib.
The Engliſh formidable at ſea; they take ſeveral ſhips. ib.
Trump ſails to the iſle of Rhee. ib. Nov. 29.
An ingagement in the channel. ib.
The duke of Gloceſter ſent out of England. ib.
A naval ingagement which laſted three days. p. 24 1653.
The States ſue for a peace. ib.
Project againſt Cromwell; his meaſures to ſupport his authority. ib.
The officers petition the parliament; they demand its diſſolution. ib.
The houſe votes againſt it. p. 25
Cromwell goes to the parliament houſe with ſome officers and ſoldiers; he diſſolves it. April 20. ib.
He vindicates his conduct in a declaration. p. 26
Chuſes perſons to take care of the government, and delegates it to them by an inſtrument; they aſſume the name of parliament. ib.
The council of ſtate appoint embaſſadors to negociate a peace with the ſtates. May 2. ib.
The two fleets ingage; Trump beaten. ib. June 2.
Another ingagement, which continues three days; Trump ſlain; the fleet retires. ib.
The Engliſh put to ſea again; the fleet damaged by a tempeſt. ib.
Peace negociated at London. p. 27
The parliament returns the ſupreme authority to the army. ib.
Cromwell made protector. ib.
Inſtrument of government. ib.
Cromwell takes an oath to obſerve it; he aſſumes the title of Highneſs. ib.

OLIVER CROMWELL, Protector.

A peace between England and Holland. p. 28 1654.
Conſpiracy againſt Cromwell; the authors rigorouſly puniſhed. ib.
The brother of the Portugueſe embaſſador beheaded. July 10. ib.
Occaſion of this embaſſy from Portugal. ib.
The King's circumſtances in France. p. 29
Prince Rupert arrives in France. ib.
He retires to Germany, and the King to Cologne. ib.
Affairs of Ireland. ib.
Ireton's death. ib.
The Iriſh invite the duke of Lorrain to accept their government; he rejects the propoſals. p. 30
Affairs of Scotland. ib.
Cromwell calls a parliament; his ſpeech to them. ib. Septem. 4.
Lenthal made ſpeaker. ib.
Cromwell's authority queſtioned; he ſpeaks to the houſe with great warmth, and excludes ſeveral members. p. 31
He diſſolves the parliament. ib.
A plot againſt Cromwell. ib.
Saliſbury ſurpriſed by ſir Joſeph Wagſtaff. ib.
The conſpirators afterwards defeated and three of them executed. 1655. p. 32 May 16.
Manning, Cromwell's ſpy at the King's court at Cologne, diſcovered and executed. ib.
Affairs between France and England. ib.
Between England and Spain. ib.
Cromwell reſolves on a war with Spain; his deſign upon St. Domingo. ib.
Conqueſt of Jamaica; King of Spain ſeizes the effects of the Engliſh merchants. p. 33

Peace

AN' 1655. Peace with France. Page 33
Cromwell ſurrounded with enemies, conſtitutes major-generals. ib.
1656. He calls a parliament of the three nations. p. 34
1657. Two conſpiracies againſt Cromwell diſcovered. ib.
April. Blake's attempt on the galeons at St. Croix in the Canary iſlands; he deſtroys them, and dies in his return home. ib.
Debates in the houſe concerning offering the crown to Cromwell. ib.
The propoſal brought in by an alderman of London, and incouraged by others. p. 35 ditto 9. A commitee appointed to offer Oliver the crown; he refuſes it, and is confirmed in his protectorſhip by the parliament. ib.
Contents of the act of the humble petition and advice. ib.
June 26. Cromwell ſolemly inaugurated. p. 36
A league, offenſive and defenſive, between France and Cromwell. ib.
King Charles makes an alliance with Spain. ib.
He goes to reſide at Bruges. ib.
The duke of York obliged to quit France. ib.
Cromwell ſends ſix thouſand Engliſh into France. p. 37
He compoſes another houſe of parliament; they meet in two houſes. ib.
The excluded members received into it. ib.
They examine the validity of the humble petition and advice; Cromwell's ſpeech. ib.
1658. Lambert turned out of his preferments, is ſucceeded by Fleetwood. p. 38
Cromwell's family. ib.
He reduces the power of the major-generals. p. 39
A conſpiracy of the Royaliſts diſcovered by Stapley. ib.
Slingſby, Hewet, and others executed. ib.
Addreſs of ſome ſectaries to the King. ib.
Dunkirk taken and delivered to Cromwell. ib.
Cromwell's death, his deſcent life and character. p. 40——43

RICHARD CROMWELL, Protector.

Richard Cromwell ſucceeds his father, and receives addreſſes from all parts. p. 43
He indeavors to gain the friendſhip of Monk, who ſubmits to him. ib. 44
The different factions conceive hopes from Richard's advancement. ib.
Decem. 4. He calls a parliament of two houſes. p. 45
He propoſes an addition of new members to his council. ib.
The principal officers of the army combine againſt him. ib.
He is adviſed to call a great number of officers to London, who form a great council of the army. ib.
The parliament meet. ib.
An act to recognize Richard. p. 46
1659. Vote of the commons againſt the officers. ib.
April. 22. The officers force the protector to diſſolve the parliament. ib.
Richard loſes all his credit. ib.
The officers ſeize the government, and chuſe Fleetwood for their general. ib.
Lambert's deſigns. ib.

The LONG-PARLIAMENT reſtored.

The parliament diſſolved in 1653 is reſtored. p. 47
They are called in deriſion the Rump, and why. ib.
They ſend Clarges to Monk, who ſubmits to them. ib.
May 12. Lambert, with ſeveral officers, preſent their petition and addreſs from the general council of officers to the parliament. p. 48
The parliament's anſwer. ib.
Richard ſubmits to the powers in being. ib.
The parliament grants him twenty thouſand pounds to pay his debts, and order him to quit Whitehall. p 49
Fleetwood appointed general but for one year. AN' 1659. Page 49
The parliament orders all military commiſſions to be ſigned by the ſpeaker. ib.
They provide for the government of Ireland, and recall Henry Cromwell. ib.
His good character. ib.
The parliament enters upon meaſures to make itſelf maſter of the army. ib.
Monk writes to the parliament, who ſtop in their proceedings. p. 50
They continue the monthly tax upon the three kingdoms. ib.
The Preſbyterians incline to join with them. ib.
The project of an inſurrection betrayed by Willis. ib.
Sir George Booth ſeizes Cheſter, and publiſhes a manifeſto; joined by ſir Thomas Middleton. ib.
Middleton defeated by Lambert. ib.
Monk, the clergyman, ſent by the Royaliſts to general Monk. Auguſt. ib.
The Scots army reformed by the parliament, which offended Monk. ib.
The King goes to Fontarabia. ib.
Conferences of the army officers to prevent the deſigns of the parliament. ib.
Lambert's officers preſent a petition to the parliament. Sept. 16. p. 51
The parliament vote againſt it. ib.
The great council of officers reſolve to preſent another petition. ib.
The parliament tries to prevent it; however, it is preſented. Oct. 5. ib.
The parliament not pleaſed, yet return a mild anſwer. p. 52
The officers diſtruſt the parliament. p. 53
Monk writes ſubmiſſively to the parliament, who return him a gracious anſwer. ib.
They give a haughty anſwer to the addreſs from the officers. ib.
Lambert comes to London, and draws his forces thither. ib.
The parliament makes an act injurious to the army, and caſhiers ſeveral officers who had ſigned the addreſs. ib.
They vacate Fletwood's commiſſion. ib.
Lambert aſſembles the army; two regiments ordered to Weſtminſter by the council of ſtate for ſecuring the parliament. ib.
Lambert hinders the ſpeaker from going to the houſe. ib.
The members not ſuffered to aſſemble. ib.
The parliament's guard retires. ib.
A guard placed by Fleetwood at the door of parliament houſe. ib.
The officers form a council of ten, and elect their own generals. ib.
The exact diſcipline of the army. ib.
Colonel Cobbet ſent to Monk by the officers. ib.
The King's ſucceſs at Fontarabia. ib.

The COMMITEE of SAFETY.

The army erect a commitee of ſafety for the adminiſtration of the government. p. 54
The declaration of the council of officers. ib.
State of Monk's affairs in Scotland. ib.
He reſolves to march into England. ib.
He deſigns reſtoring the King. ib.
The Preſbyterians contribute to the King's reſtoration. p. 55
The commitee of ſafety ſend Clarges to Monk, to propoſe an accommodation. ib.
Clarges comes to him in Scotland. ib.
Monk and he agree to amuſe the commitee by a negociation. ib.
Commiſſioners ſent to London for that purpoſe. p. 56

An' 1659. The governor of Portſmouth declares for the parliament. Page 56
The town is blocked up, and the ſoldiers deſert. ib.
Vice admiral Lawſon declares for the parliament. ib.
And a regiment ſent from Lambert. ib.
The commitee of ſafety conſents to reſtore the parliament. ib.

The RUMP PARLIAMENT reſtored.

The Rump reſtored, who meet the 26th of December. ib.
Lambert put under an arreſt by his own troops. ib.
Vane put under an arreſt. ib.
Monk procures a ſupply of money from the Scots. p. 57
Monk enters England with his army. ib.
He is received into York by the lord Fairfax. ib.
The parliament ſuſpects him. ib.
They form a council of ſtate, and impoſe an oath upon the members. ib.
They ſend two commiſſioners to be ſpies upon Monk. ib.
Monk receives an addreſs from London, for the reſtitution of the ſecluded members. ib.
Monk's diſſimulation. p. 58
He demands that the forces in London withdraw, to make room for him. ib.
Febr. 3. Monk enters London. ib.
He refuſes the abjuration oath. ib.
Complimented by the ſpeaker of the houſe of commons. ib.
The city of London refuſes the payment of taxes. p. 59
Monk ordered by the parliament to chaſtiſe the city for its inſolenſe. ib.
Barebone preſents a petition, that the abjuration oath might be univerſally taken. ib.
Monk brings back his forces into the city. p. 60
He writes a letter to the parliament, filled with complaints and reproaches. ib.
He marches into the city. ib.
The parliament ſends deputies to ſatisfy him, but without ſucceſs. ib.
Monk reconciles himſelf with the city magiſtrates. ib.
Great rejoicings in the city. ib.
Monk being required by the council of ſtate to aſſiſt in their deliberations refuſes. ib.
Monk receives great numbers of petitions, for the re-eſtabliſhing of the excluded members. ib.
He reſolves to reſtore by force the excluded members. ib.
The ſecluded members reſume their places. ib.
The Independent chiefs withdraw. ib.
Circular letters ſent by Monk and his officers, to all the regiments. ib.
Acts made by the parliament during the remainder of its ſeſſion. p. 61.
The parliament ſummon another, and diſſolves itſelf. ib.
Votes of the parliament before its ſeparation to amuſe the public. ib.
The Republicans indeavor to prevail with Monk to take the government upon himſelf, but without ſucceſs. ib.
An ingagement of ſome officers preſented to Monk, to oblige him to abjure the King; he rejects it. ib.
He forbids the officers to aſſemble without leave from him. ib.
Mazarine indeavors to intereſt himſelf in the Engliſh affairs, but without ſucceſs. ib.
Sir John Greenvil diſpatched to Monk from the King. p. 62
Monk anſwers his meſſage. ib.
1660. Monk caſhiers ſeveral officers, and ſubſtitutes others more faithful in their places. ib.
Lambert eſcapes out of the Tower, puts himſelf at the head of ſome troops. Page 62 An' 1660. April 9.
He is defeated, and made priſoner by Ingoldſby. ib.
A forged letter diſperſed to prevent the King's reſtoration. ib.
Declaration of the King's party. ib.
The parliament meets. ib. ditto 25.
The King ſends a commiſſion to Monk, to make him general. ib.
Greenvil preſents a letter and a declaration to the lords from the King; the ſubſtance of it. ib.
The King's declaration. ib. 63
Vote of the lords in favor of the King. p. 63
The commons receive a letter from the King, with the declaration. ib.
The commons concur with the lords, and the King is reſtored without any conditions. ib.
Preſents made by the commons to the King, duke of York, and duke of Gloceſter. ib.
The King proclaimed, May 8. ib.
Commiſſioners from the parliament and city, to the King. ib.
Conference between ſome Preſbyterian miniſters, and the King. ib.
The King gives audience to the deputies from the parliament. p. 64 May 16.
He arrives at Whitehall May 29. ib.

CHARLES the SECOND.

He is received with great demonſtrations of joy. ib.
The King's, and the duke of York's characters. p. 65
The King forms his council. p. 66
Chancellor Hyde his firſt miniſter. ib.
The parliament is called a convention. ib.
Acts paſſed by the ſtatutes, 12 Car. 2. ib.
An act of indemnity. ib.
The commons and lords accept the pardon promiſed by the King. ib.
Proclamation in favor of the late King's judges. ib. June 6.
The Republicans demand of the King particular letters of pardon. p. 67
Act of indemnity. ib.
Other acts. ib.
The King's ſpeech to the parliament. p. 68
Preſents made by the parliament to the King's brothers. ib.
A vote to ſettle on the King 1,200,000 l. ib.
The parliament adjourned. ib.
Diverſe acts. ib.
Duke of Gloceſter dies. ib.
Trial and execution of the Regicides. ib. Oct. 25.
A proclamation concerning religion. ib.
The biſhops reſtored. ib.
Embaſſies from diverſe parts. ib.
The Princeſs dowager of Orange arrives in England, and the Queen-mother. ib.
The parliament meets. p. 69
The duke of York's firſt marriage. ib.
Money granted for diſbanding the army. ib.
The King inſtitutes guards. ib.
The vote of the 1,200,000 l. to be ſettled on the King confirmed. ib.
The bodies of Cromwell, and other rebels dug up. ib.
The King's ſpeech to both houſes. p. 70
The chancellor's ſpeech. ib.
The parliament diſſolved. ib.
The death of the Princeſs of Orange. p. 71
Other deaths. ib.
The Royal Society founded. ib.
Affairs of Scotland. ib.
Affairs of Ireland. ib.
Inſurrection of the Anabaptiſts under Venner. ib.
A new parliament, and how compoſed. p. 74 1661.
The King crowned. ib.
The King's ſpeech to the parliament. ib.
He acquaints them with his marriage. ib.

The

AN' 1661. The commons ordered to receive the ſacrament in the church of England. Page 75
Several acts burned by the common hangman. ib.
Order concerning the Regicides. ib.
The parliament adjourned. ib.
A convocation. ib.
May 8. Affairs of Scotland. p. 76
Epiſcopacy there received. ib.
The marquis of Argyle beheaded at Edinburgh. ib.
The parliament meets. ib.
The King's ſpeech to them. ib.
The Preſbyterians perſecuted. p. 77
Petition of the parliament. ib.
A ſupply granted to the King. ib.
Some Regicides called before the parliament. ib.
Oath injoined by the corporation act. ib.
Death of the Queen of Bohemia. p. 78
Report of a conſpiracy made by the chancellor. ib.
The King's ſpeech to the commons. ib.
1662. Act againſt the Quakers. p. 79
May 2. Other acts. ib.
Act of Uniformity. ib.
Militia-act. p. 80
An oath injoined. ib.
Chimney-act. ib.
The Queen's arrival. ib.
ditto 21. Her marriage. ib.
Arrival of the Queen-mother. p. 82
The ſale of Dunkirk. ib.
Three Regicides executed. p. 82
June 2. Proceedings againſt Vane and Lambert. p. 83 ditto 14. Lambert pardoned. ib.
Vane executed. ib.
Rigorous execution of the corporation act. p. 84
A plot. ib.
Six conſpirators executed. ib.
Oct. 5. Peace with Algier. ib.
The King's conduct to the Preſbyterians. ib.
A declaration in their favor. p. 85
The earl of Clarendon begins to ſink in his credit. ib.
The earl of Arlington made ſecretary of ſtate. ib.
The King's ſpeech to both houſes in favor of his declaration. ib.
The commons are alarmed. ib.
Addreſs of the commons about the King's declaration. p. 86
The King's anſwer. ib.
1663. The King addreſſed by the two houſes. ib.
His anſwer. ib.
April 9. A proclamation againſt Romiſh Prieſts. p. 87
The King demands a ſupply; has it granted. ib.
The chancellor's credit declines. ib.
July 10. Articles of accuſation againſt him. ib.
Rejected by the lords. p. 88
The revenue of the poſt ſettled on the duke of York. b.
The parliament prorogued. ib.
The King makes a progreſs. p. 88
A plot of the Republicans and Independents. ib.
Dr. Juxon dies. ib.
The King's ſpeech to the parliament. ib.
1664. The act for triennial parliaments revoked. ib.
The cauſe of the Dutch war. ib.
Vote of the parliament againſt the Dutch. p. 89
The parliament addreſs the King. ib.
His anſwer. ib.
The ſpeaker's ſpeech to the King. p. 90
Prorogation of the parliament. ib.
The King demands reparation of damages from the States. ib.
An embaſſador ſent from the States. ib.
The city of London lends the King money. p. 91
The Engliſh intercept the Dutch merchant-men returning from Bourdeaux before the war was declared. ib.
The King refuſes the French King's mediation. AN' 1664. Page 91
The King's ſpeech to the parliament for money. p. 92
They thank the city, and vote a large ſupply for the King, and adjourn. ib.
A declaration concerning letters of mart againſt the Dutch. ib.
The Engliſh take a great many Dutch veſſels. ib.
Ruyter recovers the places taken from the Dutch at Cape Verde and Guinea. ib.
The money bill is paſſed. ib.
The parliament prorogued. ib.
The clergy give up their right of taxing themſelves. p. 93
The King of France's conduct with regard to the 1665. war between England and Holland. ib.
His letter to the count d'Eſtrades. ib.
The duke of York ſails with the Engliſh fleet. ib.
The fleet of the States put under the command of Obdam. p. 94
Sea fight gained by the duke of York, in which Obdam is ſlain. ib.
Medals ſtruck in honour of the duke of York. p. 95
The Queen-mother returns to France. ib.
The Engliſh fleet put under the command of the July. earl of Sandwich. ib.
Several Dutch ſhips retire to Bergen in Norway. ib.
The Kings of England and Denmark attempt to ſieze them, but are diſappointed. ib.
The Engliſh takes twenty Dutch ſhips. ib.
A great plague in London, which carried off in leſs than a year, 100,000 perſons. ib.
The parliament meets at Oxford. p. 96
Money granted the King, the Five-mile act. ib.
The parliament prorogued. ib.
Great rigor ſhewn to the Preſbyterians in Scotland. ib.
France declares war againſt England. p. 97
The King of Denmark joins with the States. ib.
The biſhop of Munſter makes peace with them. ib.
War proclaimed againſt France. ib. 1666.
Prince Rupert, and the duke of Albemarle command the Engliſh fleet. ib.
A ſea ingagement, where the Engliſh ſuffer great loſs. ib.
Another ingagement, where the Dutch have the diſadvantage. p. 98
The French fleet arrives at Rochelle. ib.
The Engliſh make a deſcent upon Holland, and do great damage. ib.
Management of Lewis XIV. ib.
London burnt; the monument erected; the inſcription. ib. 99
The parliament meets; the King's ſpeech. p. 99
A large ſupply voted. ib.
They addreſs the King againſt Papiſts. ib.
Proclamation againſt jeſuits. ib.
An inſurrection in Scotland quelled. ib.
Lord Mordaunt accuſed. p. 100
The parliament prorogued. ib.
Money-act, and act for rebuilding London. ib.
Steps taken by the States towards a peace. ib.
Peace treated of at Breda. p. 101 1667.
A difficulty relating to the iſle of Poleron. ib.
The King recedes from his demand. ib.
The Dutch come into the mouth of the Thames. p. 102
They burn ſeveral ſhips, and ſail up as far as Chatham. ib.
Other exploits of Ruyter. ib.
The peace concluded at Breda. ib.
Articles of the peace. ib.
The King of France invades the Netherlands. p. 103
The chancellor's diſgrace. ib.
Cauſes of his fall. p. 104

The

An' 1667. The great ſeal taken from him. Page 104
The earl of Southampton's death. ib.
The parliament meets; the lord keeper's ſpeech. ib.
Octob. 15. The addreſs of both houſes to the King. ib.
Nov. 6. Articles againſt the earl of Clarendon. p. 105
He withdraws into France, but leaves an apology. ib.——107
It is communicated to the commons, who order it to be burnt by the hangman. p. 107
A bill paſſed for the earl's baniſhment p. 108
He dies at Roan 1674, aged 67. ib.
The parliament adjourns. ib.
A proclamation againſt Papiſts. ib.
The Royal Exchange built. p. 109
Death of biſhop Wren, and mr. Cowley. ib.
A triple alliance concluded between England, Holland and Sweden. ib.
A peace between Spain and Portugal. p. 110
The parliament meets; the King's ſpeech. ib.
Miſmanagements examined into by the commons. ib.
1668. The King is addreſſed to put the laws in execution againſt Papiſts, and Non-conformiſts. ib.
He puts out a proclamation. ib.
A difference between the two houſes. ib.
The King paſſes ſome bills, then adjourns, and after prorogues the parliament. ib.
Lewis XIV makes himſelf maſter of Franche Comté. ib.
Peace concluded at Aix la Chapelle, between France, Spain, England, Sweden and the States. p. 111
The Dutch challenge the honor of it, and ſtrike a medal with a moſt arrogant motto. ib.
The King ſends a fleet to the Mediteranean. p. 112
Advancements at court. ib.
Deaths of ſome noted perſons. ib.
1669. The Prince of Tuſcany arrives in England. ib.
After him Prince George of Denmark. ib.
Theatre at Oxford opened. ib.
A project of comprehenſion, in order to which the lord keeper procures a conference between ſome Church and Preſbyterian miniſters. p. 113
A petition of the Non-conformiſts favorably received by the King. ib.
The commons examine the public accounts. ib.
Proceedings againſt the Non-conformiſts. ib.
Votes of the commons. ib.
The commons vote the King a ſupply. ib.
The difference of the two houſes renewed. ib.
The parliament prorogued. ib.
Affairs of Scotland. ib.
The Scots parliament inlarges the King's ſupremacy, and approves by an act the raiſing of the militia. p. 114
Deaths of the Queen-mother, the duke of Albemarle, and mr. Prinne. ib.
The King, and the lord keeper's ſpeeches to the parliament. ib.
A large ſupply granted to the King. p. 115
1670. Diverſe acts, one againſt conventicles. ib.
The parliament adjourned. ib.
The King eſtabliſhes a council, which is called the Cabal. p. 116
Characters of the counſellors. ib. 117
The King makes a ſecret alliance with France. p. 118
The ducheſs of Orleans comes into England. ib.
She manages an alliance between the Kings of England and France. ib.
Her death. ib.
The duke of Buckingham ſent into France to conclude a treaty with that King. ib.
The duke of Lorrain diſpoſſeſſed of his duchy by the French, vainly applies for relief to King Charles. ib.
Proclamation againſt the old parliament officers. ib.
The keeper's ſpeech to the parliament. ib.
The commons vote the King a large ſupply, and are adjourned. Page 119
An' 1670.
The Prince of Orange comes into England. ib.
Sir William Temple recalled. ib.
Sir John Conventry's barbarous uſage gives an occaſion for a new act of parliament. ib.
The addreſs of both houſes againſt Popery. ib.
The King's anſwer. p. 120
Money bills. p. 121
The Lord Lucas's warm ſpeech concerning ſubſidies, which is burnt by the hangman. ib.
Difference between the two houſes. ib.
A long prorogation of the parliament. p. 122 1671.
Death of the ducheſs of York. ib.
The duke of York formally abjures the Proteſtant religion. ib.
He makes an open profeſſion of the Popiſh religion. ſb.
A yacht belonging to the King, fires at the Dutch, to ingage them to ſtrike the flag. p. 123
The King receives money from the King of France. ib.
Blood ſteals the crown. ib. May 9.
He is examined by the King. ib.
He is pardoned. p. 124
Death of the lord Fairfax, and the earl of Manchester. ib.
The Exchequer ſhut up. p. 125
Four Dutch India men taken. ib.
Declaration for liberty of conſcience. p. 126 1672.
War is declared againſt the Dutch. ib.
The French King declares war againſt Holland. March 28. p. 127
The biſhop of Munſter declares war againſt the Dutch. ib.
The Elector of Cologne, an ally of France. ib.
Offers made by the States to pacify the King. ib.
The Prince of Orange made captain general, and admiral. ib.
Progreſs and conqueſts of the King of France. ib.
Of the biſhop of Munſter. ib.
A naval ingagement at Southwold Bay, or Solbay; victory uncertain. p. 128
Advancements at court. ib.
The King ſuſpends the execution of two acts of parliament. May 10. ib.
Holland in a moſt deplorable condition. ib.
Admits the Prince of Orange to the office of Stadtholder. July 3. ib.
The two De Wits torn to pieces by the rabble. ib.
Charles ſends embaſſadors to Holland. p. 129
Lewis marches into Flanders. ib.
The Exchequer ſhut up by a new order. ib.
The King's demands for a peace. ib.
Coventry made ſecretary, and Shaftſbury lord chancellor. ib.
The parliament meets, and a new ſpeaker choſen. p. 130
The King's and chancellor's ſpeeches. ib. 131
Members unduly elected, turned out of the houſe. p. 132
Two parties in the parliament. ib.
That of the people uppermoſt. ib.
Addreſs of the commons againſt the declaration for liberty of conſcience; King's anſwer. p. 133
Mr. Seymour choſen ſpeaker by the commons. ib.
Addreſs from the parliament againſt the Papiſts, and a proclamation upon it. p. 134
The King recalls his declaration. p. 135
The Cabal very much diſpleaſed with the King. ib.
Shaftſbury goes over to the country party. ib.
He declares publicly againſt the King. p. 136
The teſt-act paſſes the commons. p. 137
As alſo another bill to prevent the duke of York's marrying with a Popiſh Princeſs. ib.
Two petitions relating to grievances. ib.
Acts paſſed, and the parliament adjourned. p. 138 1673.

The

An' 1673. The duke of York, and lord Clifford reſign their places. Page 138
Lord Clifford dies. ib.
Prince Rupert appointed commander of the Engliſh Fleet. ib.
He joins the French. ib.
Three ingagements at ſea, diſtinguiſhed with no conſiderable advantage to either ſide. ib.
Succeſſes of Lewis, and the Prince of Orange. ib.
Sir Thomas Oſborne conſtituted lord high treaſurer. ib.
The duke of York marries the Princeſs of Modena. ib.
The commons addreſs againſt the duke's marriage. p. 139
The parliament prorogued. ib.
The King's anſwer relating to the duke's marriage. ib.
A bill for a general teſt. ib.
Vote of the commons to grant no more ſupplies to the King. ib.
Addreſs againſt the duke of York's marriage. ib.
A vote againſt a ſtanding army; other votes contrary to the King. p. 140
The parliament prorogued. ib.
Sir Heneage Finch ſucceeds Shaftſbury. ib.
Proclamation againſt Papiſts. ib.
Conſummation of the duke's marriage. ib.
The parliament meets, they are inraged againſt the court. ib.
Addreſs of the lords for the removal of Papiſts. p. 141
A proclamation upon it. ib.
Vote againſt the duke of Buckingham. ib.
The earl of Arlington impeached. p. 142
A bill for a teſt. ib.
The teſt. ib.
The States make propoſals to the King for a peace. ib.
The States commiſſion the Spaniſh embaſſador at London, to make peace in their name. ib.
The King aſks advice of the parliament. p. 143
Peace concluded. ib.
The commons go on with examining into grievances. ib.
The King acquaints the parliament with a peace. ib.
Grievances relating to Scotland and Ireland. ib.
The Habeas Corpus act. ib.
The parliament prorogued. id.
1674. The peace is proclaimed. ib.
Charles offers his mediation to Lewis, and the States, who accept it, and bring their allies to do the ſame. p. 144
The King refuſes to diſſolve the parliament. ib.
Preferments and removals at court. ib.
Deaths of the earl of Clarendon, and the poet Milton. ib.
The earl of Arlington in diſgrace. ib.
Oſborne made lord treaſurer. p. 145
A bill againſt Popiſh prieſts. ib.
1675. Addreſs to the King, that the duke of Lauderdale may be removed from the council for ever, which the King refuſes. ib. 146
The earl of Danby's conduct examined by the commons p. 146
The earl of Lindſey brings in a bill to prevent dangers from diſaffected perſons. ib.
On which there are great debates. ib.
The bill paſſes. p. 147
A quarrel between the two houſes. ib.
Parliament prorogued. ib.
Death of marſhal Turenne. ib
Oct. 13. The fifteenth ſeſſion of parliament opened, with a very ſhort ſpeech from the King. p. 148
The commons reſume the interrupted bills, and examine the public accounts. ib.
A vote to grant money for building of ſhips; and the ſtate of commerce examined. Page 148
An attempt of a jeſuit. ib.
The Quarrel between the houſe revived, and the parliament prorogued. p. 149
The Prince of Newburg arrives in England, and the ducheſs of Mazarine. ib.
Finch made chancellor. Deaths. ib.
The nation diſcontented. ib.
Coffee houſes ſuppreſſed. ib.
Proclamation againſt libels. ib.
Congreſs of Nimeguen. ib.
French privateers moleſt the Engliſh. p. 150
Proclamation againſt Papiſts. ib.
Earl of Briſtol's death. ib.
A queſtion ſtarted, whether the parliament was not diſſolved. ib.
King's ſpeech to the parliament: ib.
The duke of Buckingham makes a ſpeech to prove the parliament diſſolved. ib.
Seconded by three other lords; all four ſent to the Tower. p. 151
The commons addreſs the King againſt France. ib.
Acts paſſed. ib.
Towns taken by the French. p. 152
The Prince of Orange loſes a battle. ib.
Great debates among the commons. ib.
The parliament adjourned. p. 153
Project of a marriage of the Prince of Orange with the Princeſs Mary. ib.
The Prince arrives in England. p. 154
A difference between the King and the Prince. ib.
The King yields, and the marriage is concluded, and conſummated. ib.
A plan for a general peace agreed upon. ib.
The Prince returns for Holland. ib.
Secret negociations with France. p. 155
The King concludes alliances with the States. p. 156
The commons ingaged in difficulties. p. 157
Their addreſs to the King. ib.
A vote of the commons. ib.
The earl of Shaftſbury diſcharged. ib.
Ghent and Ipres taken by the French. ib.
The parliament prorogued. p. 158
An embaſſy from the States, to acquaint the King, that he might yet prevent the peace between them and France. ib.
A treaty negociated at London, between Charles and Lewis. ib.
The parliament ſits. p. 159
A reſolution of the commons communicated to the King, and his anſwer. ib.
A vote for diſbanding the army. ib.
The King acquaints the houſes with the peace of Nimeguen, and demands money. ib.
Acts paſſed. p. 160
The parliament prorogued. ib.
A league between the King and the States. ib.
The King diſconcerts the meaſures of the States. ib.
The peace ſigned at Nimeguen the eleventh of Auguſt. p. 161
The duke of Luxemburgh ſurprized by the Prince of Orange, Auguſt the fourteenth, three days after the peace was ſigned. ib.
Tonge diſcovers a plot to the King. p. 162
Account of Titus Oates. p. 163, 164
The council examines the affair of the plot; ſeveral of the conſpirators apprehended. p. 165
The murder of ſir Edmundbury Godfrey. ib.
The treaſurer communicates the plot to the council. p. 166
Oates examined by the commons. ib.
A vote of the commons. p. 167
Several of the conſpirators apprehended, of which five were Popiſh lords. ib.
Proclamation againſt Papiſts. ib.

An' 1675.

1676.

1677.

1678.

Decem. 29.

June 18.

An' 1678. The commons ſend ſecretary Williamſon to the Tower. Page 169
A proclamation againſt Romiſh prieſts or Jeſuits. ib.
The King demands money, on which the commons reſolve to diſband the forces. ib.
The militia-bill rejected. p. 170
Coleman's trial; the ſubſtance of Oates's evidence againſt him; Bedloe's evidence; Extract of Coleman's letters, &c. ib.——172
A proclamation to incourage farther diſcoveries. p. 173
Oates and Bedloe accuſe the Queen. ib.
The trials of Ireland, Pickering and Grove. ib.
They are condemned and executed. p. 174
The earl of Danby's affair. p. 175
The King prorogues the parliament. p. 176
The earl of Sunderland made ſecretary. ib.
The earl of Danby reſigns. ib.
Prance taken up for the murder of ſir Edmundbury Godfrey; he denies all; he is ſent to Newgate, confeſſes it; retracts. ib.——178
The ſubſtance of Prance's depoſition, concerning ſir Edmundbury Godfrey's murder. p. 179
Jeſuits taken up on the information of Dugdale. ib.
The King diſſolves the parliament, and calls another. p. 180
Elections for a new parliament. ib.
Trial of the murderers of Godfrey. ib. 181
They are condemned and executed, without making any confeſſion. p. 182
The duke of York leaves the kingdom, and withdraws to Bruſſels. ib.
Proceedings againſt Danby. ib.
A difference between the King and the commons, about the choice of a ſpeaker. ib.
A ſhort prorogation; another ſpeaker choſen. ib.
A ſecret committee appointed. ib.
The affair of the earl of Danby reſumed. p. 183
Tonge and Oates examined. ib.
The King intereſts himſelf in the earl of Danby's affair. ib.
The commons examine into the earl's pardon; the chancellor's account of it. ib.
Speeches againſt the earl of Danby. ib.
1679. The earl of Danby withdraws. p. 184
A bill preferred againſt him by the commons. ib.
Paſſed by the lords; he ſurrenders himſelf, and is ſent to the Tower. ib.
The King forms a new council; acquaints the parliament with it. ib.
An obſervation upon the earl of Shaftſbury. p. 185
A deſign diſcovered to burn London. ib.
Vote of the commons againſt the duke of York. ib.
The earl of Danby pleads the King's pardon. ib.
A reflection upon the King's offers relating to the duke of York's ſucceſſion. p. 186
Judgment demanded againſt the earl of Danby. p. 187
An addreſs againſt the duke of Lauderdale. ib.
Pickering ordered for execution. ib.
A difference betwixt the two houſes on the earl of Danby's affair. ib.
Addreſs of the commons for the raiſing of the militia. p. 188
A bill brought in againſt the duke of York. ib.
A difference between the two houſes relating to the biſhops. ib.
The excluſion bill is read. ib.
An inquiry into the members of the laſt parliament. ib.
The parliament prorogued. p. 189
The barbarous murder of the archbiſhop of St. Andrews. ib.
An inſurrection in Scotland ſuppreſs'd by the duke of Monmouth. Page 189 An' 1679.
The trial of five jeſuits. ib.
Depoſitions againſt them. ib. 190
The priſoners defenſe. ib.
They are condemned. p. 191
Langhorn's trial; he is condemned. ib.
The jeſuits executed without making any confeſſion. ib.
The King diſſolves the parliament. p. 193
Sir George Wakeman and others tried and acquited. ib.
The King's ſickneſs. ib.
The duke of York returns. ib.
The duke of Monmouth and Shaftſbury in diſgrace. Octob. 7. ib.
The duke of York goes for Scotland. p. 194
The King, contrary to the advice of his council, prorogues the parliament. ib.
Changes in the council. ib.
A plot contrived; Dangerfield the chief actor in it. ib.
It obtains the name of the Meal-tub plot; Dangerfield diſcovers the fraud ib.
The death of Hobbes. p. 195
Libels againſt the court. ib.
Addreſſes to the King for meeting of the parliament; the parliament meets, and is farther prorogued. ib.
The duke of York returns to court. ib.
Two parties formed called the Addreſſers, and the Abhorrers. ib.
Riſe of Whig and Tory. ib.
A report ſpread of the duke of Monmouth's legitimacy ſilenced by the King. 1680. p. 196
The accomplices of the Meal-tub plot acquited. ib.
Bedloe dies. ib.
His depoſition before the lord chief juſtice North on his death-bed. ib.
The duke of Monmouth returns, and takes no notice of the court. p. 197
The duke of York preſented as a Papiſt. ib.
The King ſends away the duke of York. ib.
The commons expel the Abhorrers, and petition againſt Jefferies. ib.
The commons reſume the examination of the plot. p. 198
The commons reſume the excluſion bill. ib.
Votes of the commons for the excluſion of the duke of York; ſpeeches for and againſt it. ib.
The excluſion bill read. ib.
Secretary Jenkins ſupports the intereſt of the duke of York. ib.
The commons paſs the excluſion-bill. p. 200
A meſſage from the King. ib.
An addreſs from the commons. ib.
The King's meſſage to the houſe in relation to Tangier. p. 201
The lords throw out the excluſion-bill. p. 202
The trial of the lord Stafford; he is condemned and beheaded. ib. 203
Several reſolves of the commons. ib.
Different opinions in the council. p. 205
Debates about the excluſion. ib.
A vote againſt lending the King money upon any branches of his revenue. ib.
The King prorogues the parliament, and is addreſſed by the city of London; he afterwards diſſolves it, and calls one at Oxford. p. 206
The King perſiſts in ſtanding by his brother. ib.
New promotions among the privy counſellors and judges. ib.
London chuſes the old members. ib.
The affair of Fitz-Harris. p. 207
He is ſent to Newgate. p. 208
By the King's order he is ſent to the Tower. ib.

He

An' 1680. The King comes to Oxford before the time. Page 208
His ſpeech to the parliament there. ib.
A reſolution to print the votes. p. 209
1681. Expedients to prevent the bill of excluſion. ib.
A difference between the two houſes. p. 210
Votes of the commons. ib.
The bill of excluſion read. ib.
The parliament diſſolved. ib.
A declaration of the reaſons for diſſolving the two laſt parliaments. p. 211
Promotions at court. p. 212
June 9. Fitz-Harris tried and executed. ib.
And Oliver Plunket. ib.
The earl of Shaftſbury ſent to the Tower. ib.
Colledge, the Proteſtant joiner, is indicted of high-treaſon; he is condemned and executed. ib.
Oates turned out of Whitehall. ib.
The earl of Shaftſbury acquited. p. 213
Affairs of Scotland. ib.
Acts in favor of the King and Royalty. ib.
An oath impoſed; the earl of Argyle refuſes it; is impriſoned, tried, and condemned; he makes his eſcape. ib.
The Diſſenters are perſecuted. ib.
The duke of York returns from Scotland. p. 214
1682. Goes back again; and is in very great danger; he returns. ib.
The earl of Shaftſbury eſcapes into Holland. p. 215
Pilkington fined for words ſpoken againſt the duke of York. ib.
Mr. Thynne murdered by count Coningſmark. ib.
Embaſſies, one from the King of Fez and Morocco, and another from the King of Bantam. ib.
Deaths of Prince Rupert, duke of Lauderdale, earl of Nottingham, and earl of Shaftſbury. ib.
The King goes to Newmarket; a fire obliges him to return to London. p. 216
1683. Several aldermen tried for a riot. ib.
A Quo Warranto brought againſt the charter of London. ib.
June 12. The charter declared forfeited. ib.
The city ſubmits to the King. ib.
Conditions offered by the King; the city accepts them. ib.
The Rye-houſe plot. ib.
Trial of the lord Ruſſel; he is condemned. ib. 219
The earl of Eſſex found with his throat cut in the Tower. ib.
Walcot, Hone, and Rouſe executed. p. 220
Lord Ruſſel executed. ib.
Trial of Algernoon Sidney. ib.
He is condemned and beheaded. p. 221
The Oxford decree. ib. 223
Marriage of the Princeſs Ann. p. 223
The duke of Monmouth reconciles himſelf with the King. ib.
He obtains pardon, and the King requires a letter from him. ib.
He demands it back; has it reſtored, and is baniſhed from the King's preſence. p. 224
A great froſt which laſted from the begining of December to the fifth of February following. ib.
Tangier demoliſhed. ib.
The ſiege of Vienna raiſed by the King of Poland. ib.
The earl of Danby diſcharged. ib.
The Popiſh lords admited to bail. p. 225
The trial of mr. Hampden; he is fined forty thouſand pounds. ib.
1684. Scandalum Magnatum brought againſt Dutton Colt, for calling the duke of York, Papiſt Dog. ib.
Several indictments againſt Titus Oates, for notorious perjuries. ib.
Holloway brought from the Weſt Indies and executed. ib.
The charters of the principal buroughs ſurrendered to the King. An' 1684. Page 226
A ſtatue erected to the King. ib.
His Death; fifty-four years of age, February ſix, and the twenty-fifth of his reſtoration. p. 227
Extract out of doctor Welwood on the death of the King. ib. 230
Other particulars relating to his death. p. 230---234

JAMES II.

The duke of York is proclaimed King. p. 235
The King's declaration to the council. ib.
Every body is pleaſed with the ſpeech. ib.
The King makes no alterations. p. 236
He goes publicly to maſs. ib.
The late King's funeral. ib.
James fills the vacant places. ib.
Great number of addreſſes. ib.
The King and Queen crowned. p. 237 1685.
Proceedings of the parliament of Scotland. ib.
The lord commiſſioner's ſpeech. p. 238
The trial of Titus Oates. ib.
The trial of Dangerfield. p. 239
He is condemned to be whiped. ib.
He is killed by Robert Frances, who was afterwards hanged for it. ib.
The parliament meets. p. 240
The King's ſpeech to both houſes. ib.
Both houſes thank the King. p. 241
Vote for granting the ſame revenue as Charles the ſecond injoyed. ib.
The Popiſh lords are diſcharged together with the earl of Danby. p. 242
Bill in the houſe of lords to reverſe the lord Staffords attainder. ib.
Act of parliament in Scotland. ib.
Project of the earl of Argyle and the duke of Monmouth. ib.
Argyle perſuades Monmouth to invade England. ib.
He lands in Scotland. p. 243
He publiſhes two declarations. ib.
The parliament of England reſolve to ſtand by the King. ib.
The earl of Argyle's proceedings; he is taken and beheaded. p. 244
The duke of Monmouth ſails from Holland and lands at Lyme. ib.
His declaration. p. 245
Act of attainder againſt Monmouth. ib.
Acts paſſed. ib.
The King demands money. ib.
The duke of Monmouth advances, and comes to Taunton; he takes the title of King James II. ib. 246
He publiſhes three proclamations. p. 246
He marches to Bridgewater and is proclaimed there. ib.
He marches towards Briſtol; hears of the advance of the King's army, and retreats to Bridgewater. ib.
He receives the news of Argyle's defeat. ib.
The King makes preparations for his defenſe. ib.
The Prince of Orange offers to head the army, but is refuſed. ib.
Feverſham made general. ib.
The duke of Monmouth attacks the King's army. July 6. ib.
He is defeated. ib.
He is taken and ſent up to London; he writes to the King. ib.
He prepares for his death, and is executed. p. 247
The barbarous proceedings of Jefferies and Kirk. ib.
The King's flouriſhing condition. p. 248
His proceedings in Ireland. p. 249
The King's ſpeech to both houſes of parliament. p. 250
The lords thank the King. ib.

The

An' 1685. The commons defer it. Page 251
A ſupply voted. ib.
Debates about Popiſh officers. ib.
The commons addreſs. p. 252
Petitions from the lords priſoners. ib.
The King prorogues the parliament. ib.
The lord Delamere's trial. ib.
He is acquited. p. 253
1686. The lord Stanford is diſcharged upon bail. ib.
The death of ſir John Marſham. ib.
Proceedings of the parliament of Scotland. ib.
Affairs of Ireland. ib.
Alteration among the judges and in the privy council. p. 254
The judges give their opinion that the King may diſpenſe with the laws. ib.
The Papiſts openly profeſs their religion. ib.
Popiſh biſhops conſecrated. ib.
Places beſtowed on Papiſts. p. 255
The clergy forbid to preach upon controverted points, but they perſiſt in it. ib.
The King erects an eccleſiaſtical commiſſion. ib.
Power of the eccleſiaſtical commiſſioners ib.
The affair of the biſhop of London. ib.
Sept. 6. Who is ſuſpended. p. 256
Johnſon, a clergyman, addreſſes a writing to the army, for which he is ſentenſed to be whiped, pilloried and fined. ib.
Miles Prance proſecuted. ib.
The earl of Sunderland turns Papiſts. ib.
The earl of Rocheſter, refuſing to become a Papiſt, is removed from being treaſurer. ib.
The earl of Clarendon diſplaced. ib.
The earl of Caſtlemain ſent embaſſador to the Pope, and is coldly received. ib.
Letter from a Jeſuit at Liege. p. 257
The parliament prorogued. p. 258
1687. The King publiſhes a proclamation in Scotland for liberty of conſcience. ib.
The council of Scotland thanks him. p. 259
The King publiſhes a declaration in England to the ſame purpoſe. ib.
An order to the univerſity of Cambridge to admit a Benedictine monk to the degree of maſter of arts. p. 260
The vice chancellor deprived. ib.
The affair of Magdalen college in Oxford. ib.
The fellows of the college expelled. ib.
The addreſs from the Middle-temple. p. 261
The King farther prorogues the parliament. ib.
A libel againſt the King. ib.
He diſſolves the parliament. ib.
Quo Warrantos iſſued out againſt diverſe corporations. p. 262
The public entry of the Pope's nuncio at Windſor. ib.
Father Peters received into the council. ib.
The King receives favorably the diſtreſſed Proteſtants from France. ib.
1688. Death of the duke of Buckingham. ib.
The Queen declared to be with child. p. 263
The King congratulated by numerous addreſſes. ib.
He increaſes his army and fleet. p. 264
He ſends for his troops out of Holland. ib.
The States refuſe to ſend them. ib.
A ſecond declaration for liberty of conſcience. ib.
An order to the biſhops to ſee it read in all churches and chapels; ſeveral meet and debate about it. p. 265
They petition the King to be excuſed from ſending it to their clergy. ib.
The King's anſwer. p. 266
The biſhops ſummoned before the council. ib.
Their appearance and behavior. ib.
They are ſent to the Tower. ib.
The Queen delivered of a Prince. p. 267
Extracts from ſeveral authors concerning it. ib. 273
The King ſends for forces out of Ireland. p. 273
The Carliſle addreſs. Page 273 An' 1688.
Trial of the ſeven biſhops; are acquited. ib.
Great rejoicing thro' the whole kingdom. ib.
The King fills the vacancies in his army with Popiſh officers and ſoldiers. p. 274
Addreſs of the Cheſhire miniſters. ib.
Orders from the eccleſiaſtical commiſſioners concerning the reading of the declaration. ib.
The biſhop of Rocheſter leaves the commiſſioners, and ſends his reaſons. ib.
An union propoſed between the church of England and the Preſbyterians. p. 275
A reſolution taken to call in the Prince of Orange. ib.
Several Engliſh noblemen and gentlemen go over to him. p. 276
The Engliſh lords apply to the States, and are favorably heard. ib.
The affair of Cologne made uſe of to cover the deſign upon England. ib.
Meaſures of the Prince of Orange. ib.
Advice ſent from France to the King; he neglects it. ib.
Mr. Skelton, the King's envoy at the Hague, ſends him intelligence, which he alſo neglects. ib.
The King orders writs for calling a parliament. p. 277
He rejects ſome offers from France. ib.
A new treaty with France. ib.
The King orders the marquis of Albyville, his embaſſador in Holland, to preſent a memorial to the States. ib.
Their anſwer. ib.
Which cauſes the King to put himſelf on his guard. ib.
Memorial from count d'Avaux to the States General; which the King diſowns. ib.
Suſpicions againſt the earl of Sunderland. ib.
A proclamation about a new parliament. p. 278
Which produces no effect. ib.
Propoſals from the French embaſſador rejected. ib.
The earl of Feverſham made general. ib.
King James diſowns the treaty with France. ib.
The Prince's expedition declared; the King reſolves to conſult the biſhops. ib.
Proclamation againſt the Prince of Orange's invaſion. ib.
The biſhop of London reſtored, and a new lord mayor. p. 279
The King promiſes to reſtore the city charter. ib.
King James takes ſome ſteps towards the redreſs of grievances. ib.
He augments his forces. p. 280
Takes new precautions, and ſhuts up the Popiſh chapels. ib.
The Prince of Wales baptized. ib. Octob. 15.
The King calls an extraordinary council to prove the birth of the Prince of Wales; his ſpeech to them. ib.
Depoſitions taken. ib.
The King's ſpeech after the examination of the witneſſes. p. 281
The depoſitions are recorded. ib.
The earl of Sunderland removed from all his places. p. 282
Letters of pardon granted to ſeveral of the moſt obnoxious perſons. ib.
The Prince of Orange's declaration. ib.
The reſolution of the States General. p. 283
The Prince of Orange takes his leave of the States. p. 284
He ſets ſail. ib.
His fleet diſperſed by a tempeſt. ib.
The King revokes ſome of his acts of grace. ib.
The Prince's declaration falls into his hands. ib.
He is for obliging the biſhops to diſown it. ib.
They excuſe themſelves. ib.

The

AN' 1688. The King prints the Prince's declaration with remarks. Page 284
Two letters from the Prince of Orange, one to the army, the other to the fleet. ib.
The fleet ill affected to him. p. 285
Prince of Orange ſails a ſecond time. ib.
Lands at Torbay, and afterwards marches to Exeter. ib.
The King orders his army to meet on Saliſbury plain. ib.
His ſurprizing indolence. ib.
He ſhews ſome reſolution; nor will hear of any accomodation. p. 286
Nov. 9. The Prince meets with little incouragement at Exeter. ib.
Is at laſt joined by the gentlemen of the country. ibid.
An aſſociation entered into. ib.
The Prince marches to Saliſbury. ib.
The King's army deſerts. ib.
ditto 17. Some lords arm for the Prince, others demand a parliament of the King. ib.
The King's anſwer. p. 287
He is afraid of being deliver'd up to the Prince of Orange. ib.
He prepares to meet the Prince. ib.
Arrives at Saliſbury, and is taken with a bleeding at the noſe. ib.
Declaration of the chief officers to the King. ib.
Earl of Feverſham adviſes the King to ſecure the lord Churchill, who the next day goes over to the Prince. ib.
Churchill's letter to the King after his deſertion. ibid.
The King returns to London, and finds Prince GEORGE of Denmark gone over to the Prince. ibid.
The Prince of Orange arrives at Sherburn and Saliſbury. p. 288 ditto 20. The King mortified with a ſucceſſion of ill news. ibid.
The Princeſs of Denmark retires; her letter to the Queen. ib.
The King abuſed by his counſellors. ib.
Different characters of Charles II, and James II. ib.
The King in great ſtraits, conſults the Proteſtant peers, who give him their advice. p. 289
The King declares he will call a free parliament; and a proclamation is iſſued accordingly. ibid.
ditto 30. Commiſſioners ſent to treat with the Prince of Orange. ib.
A falſe declaration publiſhed in the Prince of Orange's name. ib.
The Popiſh party ſunk. ib.
The King makes propoſitions to the Prince, who returns no anſwer, but next day makes propoſals to the King. ib. 290
The King owns the moderation of the Prince's propoſals, and calls an extraordinary council, which meets the next day. ib.
The King is prevailed on by Popiſh counſellors, who are aſſiſted by the Queen. ib.
The Queen reſolves to go over to France. ib.
The King attempts to follow her. p. 291
The lords who were in town meet at the Guildhall, London. ib.
A meſſage from the lords, and the common-council imploring the Prince's protection. ib.
An inſurrection of the mob. ib.
Chancelor Jefferies ſeized, and ſent to the Tower, AN' 1688.
where he dies. p. 291 Dec. 12.
The earl of Feverſham diſbands his army. ib.
A report of the wild Iriſh coming, alarms the whole kingdom. ib.
The Prince of Orange's declaration for re-aſſembling ditto 13.
the King's army. p. 292
Another of the lords to the ſame purport. ib.
The King ſeized at Feverſham, and abuſed by the rabble. ib.
He returns to London, where he publiſhes an order of council to ſuppreſs riotous aſſemblies, which was his laſt act of royalty. ib.
The earl of Feverſham ſent by the King to the Prince, is arreſted. ib.
Three lords ſent by the Prince to the King. p. 293 ditto 17.
The Dutch guards take poſſeſſion of Whitehall. ib.
The King deſired to remove, makes choice of Rocheſter. ib.
The Prince arives at St. James's. ib. ditto 18.
A ſecond inſurrection of the mob. ib.
The King leaves the kingdom, and retires to France. ib. 294
His letter, with remarks on it. p. 294

INTER-REGNUM.

The lords take on themſelves the adminiſtration of the government. p. 295
They deſire the Prince to take charge of it, and ditto 28.
call a convention. ib.
An order againſt Papiſts. ib.
The Prince aſſembles ſeveral old members, and aſks their advice, who are of the ſame opinion as the lords. ib. 296
The French embaſſador ordered to leave the kingdom. p. 296
The Prince communicates in the church of England. ibid.
He viſits the Queen Dowager. ib.
Affairs of Scotland and Ireland. ib.
Several biſhops ſign the aſſociation. p 297
The Prince ſends for his Princeſs. ib.
The convention meets; the Prince's letter to them. ibid.
The Prince addreſs'd by the two houſes. ib.
A thankſgiving appointed, Jan. 31. ib. Jan. 31.
King James's letter to his privy-council; and to the two houſes of convention; rejected. ib.
A regency is propos'd, and rejected. p. 298
The queſtion, whether there was an original contract or not, between the King and people debated? paſſes in the affirmative. ib.
Debates about the word abdication, with remarks. Feb. 4.
ib. 308
The Prince of Orange declares his mind to ſome lords, as to the ſucceſſion to the crown. p. 308
Reaſons againſt examining the birth of the Prince of Wales. ib.
The lord Danby propoſes Princeſs MARY to be Queen alone, but ſhe refuſes. p. 309
It is concluded the Prince and Princeſs ſhould be ditto 7.
King and Queen. ib.
The convention make a ſolemn offer off the crown ditto 13.
to them. ib.
The Prince of Orange's anſwer on that occaſion. p. 310
Diſſertation on the riſe, progreſs, views, ſtrength, intereſts, and characters of the two parties of the Whigs and Tories. p. 311—330

Thus far Mr. RAPIN.

A

SUMMARY or ABRIGEMENT

OF THE

CONTINUATION

OF THE

Hiſtory of England.

An' 1689. THE ſtate of England under James II. Page 333, 341

INTER-REGNUM.

Diſpoſition of the Engliſh towards the Prince of Orange. p. 431
Snares laid for the Prince by K. James's friends, which he prudently avoids. p. 342
The peers offer the Prince the adminiſtration. ib.
He aſſembles a convention, wherein the commons declare the throne vacant. ib.
Several biſhops, and other lords, diſſent from this vote, and give their reaſons. The anſwer. ib. 343.
Another objection of the houſe of peers. Reply to it. p. 343
A propoſal to inquire into the birth of a Prince of Wales; droped. ib.
The peers declare the throne vacant. ib.
Debates on the queſtion for electing a King. p. 344
Reaſons alleged by thoſe who were for a regent. ib.
Their different motives. ib.
The anſwer of thoſe who were for a King. ib.
Objections to a regency; with the private views of this party. p. 345
Debates of the two houſes about the choice of a King. ib.
The Princeſs of Orange promiſes to transfer her right to the Prince. ib.
Different ſentiments of the parties how to diſpoſe of the crown. p. 346
Conduct of the Prince during theſe debates. ib.
He declares his mind. ib.
The crown confered jointly on the Prince and Princeſs of Orange. ib.
The liberties of the ſubject reduced into an act. ib.
The oath of allegiance, which gives occaſion to pernicious diſtinction. p. 347
A ſalvo for the high-church party. ib.
Feb. 12. The Princeſs of Orange arrives. ib.
ditto 13. King William and Queen Mary proclaimed. ibid.
The King's letter to the States-general. ib.
Earl of Sunderland ſet at liberty. ib.

WILLIAM and MARY.

Some reflections on the advantages accruing to Europe by the revolution. p. 347
King William appoints a privy-council. p. 348
Dr. Burnet made biſhop of Saliſbury. ib.
The King propoſes to turn the convention into a parliament, which is carried in the affirmative. p. 349 An' 1689.
His ſpeech to both houſes; meets with a general applauſe. ib.
Bill to turn the convention into a parliament, with the debates pro and con. ib. 350
The bill paſſes. p. 351
Debates concerning the revenue. ib.
Bill for regulating the trials of peers; dropped. ib.
Another in favor of Diſſenters read. ib. Feb. 28.
The earl of Nottingham's motion thereupon. ib.
Order for diſcovering Papiſts. ib.
The earl of Eſſex's murder inquired into by the lords. ib.
Two remarkable meſſages from the King to both houſes. ib. 352 March 1.
A vote of the commons concur'd with by the peers, and entered in the journal of their houſe. ib. ditto 5.
Addreſs of both houſes; with the King's memorable anſwer. ib. 353
Sea-fight at Bantry-bay. p. 363 ditto 14.
Defection of the army. p. 353
Act for puniſhing mutiny and deſertion. ib.
Proceedings in parliament in favor of Diſſenters. ib.
The King goes to the houſe of peers; paſſes ſome acts, and makes a ſpeech. ditto 16.
Bill againſt Papiſts; arguments pro and con. p. 355
Act of pardon, indemnity, and oblivion. ib.
Bill for naturalizing the Prince of Denmark, paſs'd. ibid. April 3.
Bill for uniting their Majeſties Proteſtant ſubjects, on which two queſtions being put, the votes were equal to both; ſome lords enter their proteſts. ib. 356 ditto 4.
The high-church party diſcontented. p. 356
Act for eſtabliſhing the coronation-oath; form of it. p. 357
King William and Queen Mary crown'd. ib.
The ſpeaker's ſpeech to them on this occaſion; the King's anſwer. ib.
An addreſs of the commons in favor of the Church of England. ib.
A convocation deſired; the King's anſwer. p. 358
A conference between the two houſes concerning the oaths; arguments of the commons; anſwer of the lords. ib.
They agree upon an expedient. p. 359
Brief account of the affairs of Scotland. ib.
King William and Queen Mary proclaim'd King and Queen of Scotland. p. 360
Repreſentation of the forein miniſters to King William

AN' 1689. LIAM with reſpect to France, preſſing him to declare war. p. 361
The commons addreſs for a war; the King's anſwer. ibid.
April 25. Proclamation for relief of Proteſtants. ib.
Prohibition of French manufactures. p. 362
May 7. Declaration of war againſt France. ib.
Judges conſtituted. p. 363
Affairs of Ireland. p. 364
King JAMES lands there; and iſſues five proclamations. p. 365
He takes Colraine and Kilmore. ib.
Treachery of colonel Lundee. ib.
Londonderry inveſted by King JAMES. ib.
Great diſtreſs of the inhabitants. p. 366
The ſiege raiſed. p. 367
Succeſs of the Inniſkillin men. ib.
Proceedings of the Iriſh parliament; prorogued. ib. 368
Impolitic behavior of King JAMES, with regard to the univerſity of Dublin, and the Proteſtants in general. p. 368
Proceedings of the Engliſh parliament. ib.
A remarkable ſpeech to his Majeſty, by the ſpeaker of the houſe of commons, on preſenting the poll-act. ib.
Another on preſenting the land-tax act. p. 369
A bill of indemnity brought in. ib.
Perſons deſign'd to be exempted. ib.
The intent of the houſe of commons therein. p. 370
Attainders revers'd. ib.
Earl of Devonſhire's caſe examin'd into. ib.
ditto 15. Report about forfeitures, &c. ib.
Proceedings concerning Titus Oates, and of Johnſon. p. 371
Succeſſion in the houſe of Hanover propoſed. ib.
Oppoſed by the commons; the lords reaſons for it. ib.
Birth of the duke of Glouceſter ends the diſpute, ib.
Motion for an addreſs to remove ſome perſons from his Majeſty's council; dropped. p. 372
Acts paſſed. ib.
Reſolutions againſt Papiſts. ib.
Miſcarriages of Ireland inquired into. ib.
King JAMES's letters intercepted. ib.
Farther reſolutions againſt the Papiſts. ib.
Several perſons impeached. p. 373
June 28. King's ſpeech to the parliament. ib.
Debates on the coffee, tea, and chocolate bill. Bill loſt. ib.
July 25. Acts paſs'd. p. 374
Iriſh miſcarriages reſumed. ib.
Uproar of the Weavers. ib.
Bill of attainders; loſt. ib.
Auguſt 13. Bill for paying the States-general paſs'd. ib.
ditto 23. A remarkable ſpeech of mr. Powle, ſpeaker of the houſe of commons, on preſenting the bill. ib.
Parliament adjourn'd. p. 375
Affairs in Ireland. ib.
Duke Schomberg ſent with an army to Ireland, who arrives in Carrickfergus bay; Belfaſt abandon'd, Carrickfergus taken; Newry abandon'd, and alſo Dundalk. ib. 376
The Iriſh, tho' ſuperior in number, decline fighting. ibid.
They take Sligo and James-town. ib.
Tyrone declares for King WILLIAM. ib.
Maritime affairs. ib. 377
Treaties concluded with forein Princes. p. 377
Battle of Walcourt. ib.
Campain in Germany. ib.
Their Majeſties purchaſe Kenſington-houſe. ib.
Military abuſes redreſs'd. ib.
Malecontents in England. ib.
Biſhop Burnet's paſtoral letter. ib.
Commiſſioners of cuſtoms and exciſe appointed. p. 378
Creations of nobility. p. 378
Eccleſiaſtical preferments. ib. AN' 1689.
Dignified clergy ſuſpended ab officio. ib.
A convocation ſummon'd. ib.
King's ſpeech to the parliament. ib. Octob. 19.
Their proceedings in reſpect to State-priſoners. p. 379
Bills of rights and indemnity. ib.
Colonel Ludlow comes to England; makes his eſcape again. ib.
Bill of pains and penalties. ib.
Proceedings concerning the lord Griffin, and the lord Preſton. p. 380
Miſcarriages of Ireland inquired into. ib.
——— and of the fleet. p. 381
Farther proceedings on the bill of indemnity, and on that of rights. ib.
Queſtion concerning court and placemen. ib.
Miſcarriages again complain'd of. ib.
Bills paſs'd. p. 382
Debates about Princeſs ANNE's revenue. ib.
The King's ſpeech at the diſſolution of the parliament. AN' 1690. ib.
Proceedings of the convocation. ib. Jan. 27.
The King and Queen dine in the city. p 383
Indignity offer'd the King's Picture. ib.
The Queen of Spain convoy'd to the Groyne. ib.
Affairs of Scotland. p. 384
Preparations for the expedition to Ireland. ib.
The privy-ſeal and treaſury put in commiſſion. ib.
Proceedings of the parliament of England. ib.
His Majeſty's ſpeech to both houſes. ib. March 20.
The revenue ſettled. p. 385
Parliament adjourn'd. ib.
Preferments. ib.
Affairs of Ireland. p. 386
State of that Kingdom before King WILLIAM's arrival. ib.
The Iriſh routed at Belturbat. ib.
King WILLIAM goes to Ireland; his proceedings there. ib.
The battle of the Boyne. p. 387
Duke Schomberg kill'd; and dr. Walker. p. 388
King WILLIAM obtains the victory. ib.
King JAMES leaves Ireland. p. 389
Affairs of England. ib.
Deſigns of the Jacobites. ib.
Addreſs of the Navy-officers. p. 390
The French fleet comes into the channel. ib.
Sea fight off of Beachy. ib.
The confederate fleet retreat; and return to the Thames. ib. 391 June 24.
Apprehenſions of an invaſion; prevented by her Majeſty's prudent conduct. p. 391
The Queen's generoſity to the Dutch. p. 392
Continuation of the Iriſh affairs ib.
King WILLIAM enters Dublin. ib. July 6.
Several places taken in Ireland. ib.
The King leaves the army; but ſoon returns. ib. 393 ditto 27.
Bravery of colonel Erle. P. 393 Auguſt 9.
The ſiege of Limerick. ib.
Sarsfield ſurprizes and blows up the Engliſh train. ditto 12. ibid.
The trenches open'd. ib. ditto 17.
The King in great danger. ib.
The ſiege raiſed. p. 394 ditto 30.
The King returns to England, ib. Sept. 5.
The earl of Marlborough arrives at Cork, and lays ſiege to it. ditto 21. ib.
Diſpute between the duke of Wirtemberg, and the earl of Marlborough; made up by the earl's prudence. ib.
The town of Cork capitulates, and afterwards ſurrenders. ditto 27. ib.
The duke of Grafton receives his death's wound there. ib.
Articles of capitulation. P. 395
The earl beſieges Kinſale, which capitulates; he returns; and afterwards goes back again to Ireland. Octob. 5. ib.

Maritime

An' 1690. Maritime affairs. p. 395
Vice-admiral Killigrew's expedition to the Mediterranean. ib.
Proceedings of the main fleet. p. 396
Sir Cloudesly Shovel's proceedings on the coast of Ireland. ib.
Affairs of Italy. p. 397
Campain in Flanders. ib.
Affairs of Germany. ib.
Insurrection in Catalonia. ib.
The parliament of England meets Oct. 2. The King's speech to them. ib.
Proceedings in parliament. p. 398, 399
A supply granted for building of ships. p. 399
Parliament adjourn'd. p. 400
Nov. 15. Titles and Preferments. ib.
Miss Wharton an heiress carried away. Sir John Johnston executed for it. ib.
Dec. 31. The duke of Zell elected knight of the garter. ib.
An' 1691. The King intends to go to Holland, is in great dan-
Jan. 6. ger; but arrives in safety. ib. 401
Congress at the Hague. King William's speech to them; with the resolutions thereupon. p. 401
Lord Preston's plot. p. 402 ditto 16, 19. His and mr. Ashton's trial at the Old-Bailey for the same. ib. ditto 28. Lord Preston pardon'd; but Ashton executed. ib.
March 11. Preferments. ib.
The parliament adjourn'd. ib.
April 25. Ecclesiastical preferments. p. 403
ditto 30. The King goes to Holland. ib.
Campain in Flanders. ib.
July 12. The King returns to England. ib.
Affairs of Ireland. ib.
Ballymore and Athlone besieged and taken. ib. 404
Battle of Aghrim. p. 404, 405, 406
The Irish routed. p. 406
Galway and Limerick surrender'd. ib.
Ireland intirely reduced. ib.
Affairs of Scotland this year inconsiderable. ib.
Maritime affairs. ib.
Affairs in America, Spain, Italy, and Germany. p. 409
Octob. 22. King's speech to the parliament. Their addresses. ib.
Proceedings in parliament. ib. 410
Regulations of the East-India company, &c. p. 410
Proceedings of the fleet inquired into. p. 411
Dr. Welwood, author of the Observator, censured. ibid.
Dec. 24. Bills passed. ib.
ditto 31. King's speech to both houses. p. 412.
Mr. Molesworth (afterwards lord Molesworth) complain'd of to the King by the Danish minister; the King's reply. p. 412
An' 1692. A bill to regulate trials in cases of High-treason brought in; arguments pro and con; drop'd. p. 413, 414
The commons give general Ginckel thanks; his answer. p. 414
Fuller pilloried for an impostor. p. 415
French Protestants pray for relief. ib.
The King goes to the house of peers; passes several acts; makes a speech, and adjourns the parliament. ib.
Jan. 21. A proclamation against vice and prophaneness. ib.
Sir Evan Cameron, one of the leaders of the Scotish male-contents, submits to their Majesties. p. 416
Feb. 2. Knights of the garter elected. ib.
ditto 20. General Ginckel created earl of Athlone; and treated by the city of London at Merchant Taylor's hall. ib.
March 1. Preferments. ib.
ditto 5. The King goes to Holland. ib.
The Queen Dowager leaves England. ib.
March 7. Sir Rowland Gwyn treasurer of the bed-chamber, removed. p. 416
A Jacobite plot unsuccessful. ib.
King James writes to his late council. His decla- An' 1692.
ration. p. 417
Preparations of the Jacobites in England. ib.
Intelligence sent to France. ib.
The Queen's vigilance. ib.
A fleet order'd to sea. ib.
Malicious aspersions cast on the officers; removed by the Queen's politic messages, which occasioned an address from them. p. 418
The parliament prorogued. ib. May 16.
The French and confederate fleet meets. ib.
Disposition of the fleets. p. 419
La Hogue fight, an account of it. p. 420
Her Majesty's bounty on that occasion. p. 421
A descent on the coast of France projected. p. 422
Campain in Flanders. ib.
Namur besieged by the French; surrender'd. p. 423 ditto 25.
The battle of Steenkirk. ib. 424 August 3.
The English take Furnes and Dixmuyde. p. 424
A plot against King William's life. The author executed. ib.
Affairs of Germany, Piedmont, Catalonia. p. 425
An earthquake in England. ib. Sept. 28.
A sham plot. Detected. ib. 426
Affairs of Scotland and Ireland. p. 426
The King returns to England. ib. Octob. 18.
Their Majesties dine in the city. ib. ditto 29.
The King's speech to the parliament; commons ad- Nov. 4.
dress. ib. 427
Bill for regulating trials, &c. again lost. p. 427
The commons give their thanks to admiral Russel. ibid.
Mismanagement of the fleet inquired into. ib.
Sir John Ashby and admiral Russel cleared. ib.
A supply granted. ib. ditto 15.
Orphans bill left unfinish'd. p. 428
East-India company's affair resum'd. ib.
Advice of the commons to the King. ib.
The King displeased with a bill which was presented to him for the royal assent, refuses to sign it, ib. An' 1693.
Acts pass'd. ib.
Pamphlets censured. ib. Jan. 20.
Complaints against the officers of the army. p. 429
Abuses in Ireland examin'd into. ib. Feb. 24.
Address concerning them; the King's answer. ib.
The King goes to the house; passes several acts; makes a speech, and prorogues the parliament. ib. 430
Admiral Russel set aside. Admirals appointed. p. 430
The lord Mohun tried for the murder of mr. Mountford, acquited. ib.
Places disposed of. ib. March 23.
The King goes to Holland. ib. ditto 31.
Naval affairs. ib. 431, 432, 433
Campain in Flanders. p. 433
The battle of Landen; confederate army defeated. p. 434
Charleroy surrender'd to the French. p. 435
Campain in Piedmont, Catolonia, and Germany. ib.
Famine in France. ib.
France sues for peace. ib.
Justices of Ireland appointed. ib. July 10.
Proclamation against exportation of corn. ib.
King William returns to England. p. 436
Russel again made admiral. ib.
Parliament meets. The King's speech to them. ib.
Miscarriages of the fleet inquired into. ib.
Proceedings in parliament. ib.
Affair of the East-India company. p. 437
A blasphemous pamphlet censured. ib. Dec. 16.
Lord Coningsby and sir Charles Porter impeached. ib. ditto 29.
Places disposed of. ib.
Death of archbishop Sancroft; his Epitaph. ib. 438
Mr. Germain prosecuted for adultery. ib. ditto 31.
Prince Lewis of Baden arrives in England. ib. An' 1694.
Acts passed. ib. Jan. 25.
Representation of the commons to the King on his refusing

AN' 1694. refuſing to ſign a bill preſented to him; with the King's anſwer. p. 438
Feb 6. The million lottery. ib.
ditto 17. Lord Falkland call'd to account for bribery. p. 439
March 23. The bank of England erected. ib.
The King's ſpeech; parliament prorogued. ib.
France ſues for peace again. ib.
Places diſpoſed of, and honors confer'd. ib.
The King goes to Holland. ib.
Miſfortune of a ſquadron of ſhips under ſir Francis Wheeler. p. 440
Proceedings of the main fleet. ib.
A deſign to deſtroy the harbor of Breſt; ſituation of the place. p. 441
The deſign given up; the fleet returns. p. 442
Lord Berkley takes ſeveral prizes. ib.
Diep and Havre de Grace bombarded. ib.
Proceedings of the confederate fleet in the Mediterranean. p. 443
June 5. Knights of the garter inſtalled at Windſor. ib.
ditto 8. The Bank-charter granted. ib.
Colonel Parker apprehended, on ſuſpicion of the aſſaſſination plot, but eſcapes. ib.
Campain in Flanders. ib.
Huy town and caſtle taken by the allies. p. 444
Campain in Piemont, Catalonia, and Germany. ib.
Nov. 8. King WILLIAM returns to England; meets the parliament, and makes a ſpeech to them. p. 445
Proceedings in parliament. ib.
Death of archbiſhop Tillotſon; his character. ib.
Dec. 28. Death of Queen MARY. ib.
Oppoſition to King WILLIAM's title after the Queen's deceaſe; and to the eſſence of the then parliament; in vain. ib. 446 ditto 31. The lords and commons addreſſes of condolance; the King's anſwer. p. 446
AN' 1695. Princeſs ANN's letter to King WILLIAM. ib.
Character of Queen MARY. Her funeral. ib.
Farther proceedings in parliament. ib.
Lancaſhire plot inquired into. p. 447
Proceedings againſt bribery. ib.
The commons makes a repreſentation to the King. His anſwer. ib. 448
Proclamation for ſtrict diſcipline. p. 448
Contractors for cloathing the ſoldiery commited to the Tower. ib.
Commiſſioners for Hackney-coaches removed. ib.
A commitee appointed to inquire into briberies in the caſe of the Eaſt-India company, with their report. ib. 449
Bribery in caſe of the orphan's bill examined into. p. 450
India company's affair continued. ib. 451
April 19. Acts paſs'd; the King's ſpeech to the parliament; addreſſes from the commons; the King's anſwer. p. 451
India company's affair farther examined into. p. 452
Debates in the houſe of commons thereupon. p. 453
The duke of Leeds's ſpeech to the lords, in order to clear himſelf of this affair; and alſo to the commons. ib. 454
The duke of Leeds impeach'd. ib.
Debates in the houſe of commons on the duke's ſpeech. ib.
Bill for impriſoning Cook and others on the Eaſt-India company's affair. ib.
Articles againſt the duke of Leeds. His vindication; complains of partiality. ib.
Reſolution of the commons againſt bribery. ib.
Mr. Robarts, one of the parties concern'd in the Eaſt-India company's affair, abſconds. p. 455
Farther proceedings concerning the duke of Leeds, with his ſpeech to the lords. ib.
Bad ſtate of the coin inquired into. ib.
A bill to prevent cliping and coining. p. 456
Addreſs of the commons about coals. ib.
Addreſs of the commons concerning the allies: the King's anſwer. ib.
The King goes to the houſe of peers; paſſes ſeveral acts; makes a ſpeech, and prorogues the parliament. p. 456 AN' 1695.
Promotions. p. 457
The King goes to Holland. ib.
Affairs of Scotland. ib.
——of Ireland. p. 458
Maritime affairs. ib. 459
Campain in Flanders. p. 460
Siege of Namur; the town ſurrenders; and caſtle afterwards. ib. 461
Dixmuyde and Denſe ſurrender'd to the French. p. 461
Bruſſels bombarded. ib.
Marſhal Bouflers arreſted; releaſed again. p. 462
Major general Ellemberg beheaded for cowardice. ibid.
Campain on the Rhine, Catalonia, and Italy. ib.
King WILLIAM returns to England. p. 463
The parliament diſſolved, and a new one called, who meet on the 22d of November. Octob. 11. ib.
The King goes a progreſs to the North. ib.
He meets his parliament, and makes a ſpeech to them. ib.
Addreſſes of both houſes; the King's anſwers. p. 464
Bill for regulating trials in caſes of high-treaſon, &c. paſſes both houſes. ib.
Debates about re-coining the mony, with the reaſons for and againſt it. ib. 465
It paſſes in the affirmative. Reſolution thereupon. p. 465
Debate about the ſtandard, with reaſons for and againſt the raiſing it. Reſolution thereupon. ib. 466
A public faſt appointed for the ſucceſs of the parliament. p. 466
Written protections declared void. ib.
Inconveniencies occaſioned by calling in the cliped mony. AN' 1696. ib.
Reſolutions of the commons; and a bill brought in thereupon. ib. 467
Acts paſs'd p. 467 Jan. 21.
Debates about lowering the price of guineas; reaſons for and againſt. ib.
The value of Guineas ſunk, viz. from 30 to 21 s. and 6 d. ib.
Affair of the Scotiſh Eaſt-India company. ib.
A council of trade voted. p. 468
A grant to the earl of Portland much reſented. ib.
Part of mr. Price's remarkable ſpeech on that occaſion. p. 469
An addreſs againſt it; the King's anſwer. ib. ditto 22.
A plot to invade England, and aſſaſſinate King WILLIAM. ib.
King JAMES arrives at Calais, in order to imbark for England. ib.
Proclamation to apprehend the conſpirators. p. 471 ditto 23.
The King paſſes ſome acts, and makes a ſpeech to both houſes concerning the plot. ditto 24. ib.
Addreſs of both houſes; the King's anſwer. ib.
An aſſociation ſign'd by the commons; preſented to the King; his declaration thereupon. ib. 472
It is voted legal. p. 472
Preparations to oppoſe the deſigns of France. ib.
King JAMES returns to St. Germains. ib.
Habeas corpus act ſuſpended. ib. March 7.
Trial of Charnock, King, and Keyes, for a conſpiracy. ditto 11. ib. 473
They are condemn'd and executed. Their confeſſions. p. 473
Proclamation for apprehending lord Montgomery and ſir John Friend. ditto 18. ib.
Trial of ſir John Friend, and ſir William Perkins; they are condemn'd. ditto 23; ib. 474 24.
Their examination before a commitee of the houſe of commons. April 1. p. 474
Their execution, and confeſſions. ib. ditto 3.

An' 1696. They are abſolved by three non-juring clergymen at the place of execution, two of whom were commited to Newgate. p. 475 ditto 21. Rockwood, Lowick, and Cranburn, three other conſpirators, tried; executed. ib.
Cook and Knightley, two others, condemned; reprieved. ib.
Parliamentary affairs. ib.
Civil liſt and French Proteſtants conſider'd. ib.
National land-tax-bill. ib.
Bill for ſecurity of his Majeſty's perſon and government. p. 476
The King paſſes ſeveral acts; makes a ſpeech, and prorogues the parliament. ib.
Growth of Socinianiſm. ib.
Preferments. p. 477
The King goes to Holland. ib.
Maritime affairs. ib.
April 1. Calais bombarded. ib.
Lord Berkley appointed admiral of the fleet. ib.
The Engliſh fleet does conſiderable damages to the iſlands on the coaſt of France. p. 478
Admiral Benbow cruiſes before Dunkirk. Du Bart eſcapes him; he follows him in vain. Convoys the Eaſt country fleet. Goes in purſuit of du Bart again, but to no purpoſe. ib.
Affairs of Scotland and Ireland. ib. 479
Proceedings of the Lords Juſtices in England. p. 479
Campain in Flanders. ib.
The enemy's magazines at Givet burnt. ib.
The French ſue for peace. ib.
Affairs of Italy. p. 480
A ſeparate peace between France and Savoy. ib.
The duke of Savoy throws off the diſguiſe. ib.
Valencia beſieged; which frightens Spain into the peace of Italy. p. 481
Campain in Catalonia and on the Rhine. ib.
Death of the Queen Mother of Spain, and King of Portugal. ib.
K. William leaves the army and returns to England. Is complimented by the city. ib.
Octob. 20. The parliament meets; the Kings ſpeech to them. ib.
Addreſs of the commons to the King; the King's anſwer. p. 482
Sir John Fenwick taken at Romney in Kent. ib.
His letter to his lady during his confinement there; intercepted. ib.
His counter-plot; and tampering with the King's witneſſes. ib. 483
Admiral Ruſſel lays Fenwick's caſe before the commons. p. 483
Sir John examin'd before the houſe; where his own informations are voted ſcandalous. ib.
Bill to attaint him of high-treaſon. ib.
Debates thereon, with reaſons pro and con. ib. 486
It paſſes both houſes, and has the royal aſſent. p. 486
Some lords proteſt againſt it. ib.
Sir John is beheaded. ib.
An' 1697. Jan. 28. A paper deliver'd by him to the ſherif at the place of execution. ib.
Ill ſtate of the coin farther remedied. p. 487
Acts paſſed. ib.
Public credit at a low ebb. ib.
The nation in great diſtreſs, but relieved by the wiſdom of parliament. ib. 488
Miſcarriages of the fleet inquired into. p. 488
Meſſage concerning the civil liſt. ib.
Several acts paſs'd. ib. 489
The King's ſpeech to the parliament; prorogued. p. 489
Plenipotentiaries for a general peace named ib.
Domeſtic occurrences ib.
The King goes for Holland. p. 490
Captain Vaughan executed for high-treaſon. ib.
Affairs of Ireland. ib.
Treaty of Ryſwick. p. 490 An' 1697.
Preliminaries. Objections againſt them. p. 491
Death of the King of Sweden like to put a ſtop to the treaty. ib.
Ceremonials ſettled; the treaty ſign'd. ib.
Principal articles between Great-Britain and France. p. 492
Between France and Spain. ib.
Between France and the States. ib.
Between France, the Emperor, and the Empire. ib.
King James's intereſt not at all regarded in this treaty. ib.
The French refugees likewiſe diſappointed. p. 493
Maritime affairs. ib.
Vice-admiral Nevil's expedition in the Weſt-Indies. ibid.
He arrives at Barbadoes; gets intelligence of Ponti's ſquadron; chaſes them; but they eſcape. ib.
He arrives at Carthagena, and finds it deſtroyed by the French. p. 494
He burns Petit Guavas, and arrives at the Havanna. ib.
Death of the vice-admiral. ib.
Captain John Norris (now ſir John) lets Ponti eſcape a ſecond time. ib.
Ponti purſued by ſix Engliſhmen of war, but eſcapes a third time. ib.
Peace proclaimed. ib. Octob. 19.
The King lands in England, from Holland. p. 495 Nov. 14.
A thankſgiving appointed and celebrated. ib. ditto 17.
The parliament meets. The King's ſpeech to them. Dec. 5.
Addreſs of the lords and commons. The King's anſwers. ib. 496
Reaſons for and againſt diſbanding the army. Carried for it. p. 496 An' 1698.
A ſupport of the civil liſt voted. ib. Jan. 14.
Acts paſſed. ib.
Reſolutions concerning the ſupply. ib. Feb. 10.
National debts conſider'd, and in part provided for. p. 497
Whitehall conſumed by fire. p. 498
Czar of Muſcovy arrives in England. ib.
Parliamentary affairs reſumed. p. 398
Commons addreſs againſt impiety. The King's anſwer. ib.
A bill for that end, which gave riſe to the ſociety for the reformation of manners. ib.
Several acts paſs'd. p. 499 March 7.
The earl of Macclesfield's caſe. ib.
The Eaſt-India trade again brought on the carpet. ib.
Owlers and Smuglers puniſh'd. p. 500
Falſe indorſements on exchequer bills detected. ib.
Acts paſs'd ib. May 16.
The dependance of Ireland on the parliament of England aſſerted. ditto 21. ib. ditto 28.
The King's revenue provided for. ib. June 25.
Duties on glaſs, &c. taken off. p. 501
Complaints againſt the woollen manufactures in Ireland. ib.
Several acts paſs'd. ib. July 5.
The King's ſpeech to the parliament. It is diſſolv'd. ib.
A new Eaſt-India company erected. ib.
Some domeſtic occurrences. p. 502
The King goes to New-market. ib.
The earl of Portland's embaſſy to France. ib.
The King declares his intention of going to Holland, and appoints lords-juſtices. ditto 16. ib.
Affairs of Scotland. ib.
——of Ireland. p. 503
——Maritime. p. 504
Negociation of the firſt treaty of partition. ib.
The King's letter to the lord Sommers on this affair. His lordſhip's anſwer. ib. 505
Articles of the firſt treaty of partition. p. 505
Intrigues of the marq. de Harcourt. ib.

Farther

AN' 1698. Farther intrigues of France. p. 505
K. WILLIAM goes to Zell. ib.
Treaty of Carlowitz. p. 506
Dec. 3. K. WILLIAM returns to England. ib.
ditto 6. The parliament meets, and chuſes ſir Thomas Littleton ſpeaker. ib.
The King's ſpeech at opening the parliament. ib.
Remarks on this ſpeech. ib.
AN' 1699. Acts paſs'd. ib.
Feb. 1. King's ſpeech to the parliament on their diſcharging the Dutch guards. p. 507 ditto 4. Addreſs of the commons. His Majeſty's anſwer. Of the lords. ib.
The army reduced to 7000 men. ib.
March 18. The King's meſſage to the commons about the Dutch guards. ib.
Their addreſs thereupon. His Majeſty's anſwer. ib.
The Dutch guards return to Holland. ib. ditto 24. Acts paſs'd. ib.
Miſmanagements of the navy inquired into. The commons addreſs thereupon. The King's anſwer to it. p. 508
Addreſs of the commons againſt Papiſts, &c. King's anſwer. ib.
Petition of the old Eaſt-India company. A bill in their favor rejected. p. 509
May 4. Acts paſs'd. ib.
The King's ſpeech to the parliament. Its prorogation. ib.
The King's order to the play-houſes. ib.
Proclamation for a general faſt. p. 510
Trials of the lords Warwick and Mohun for murder. ibid.
Preferments. ib.
The King appoints lords-juſtices, and goes to Holland. ib.
Affairs of Scotland. ib.
—— Ireland. p. 511
—— Maritime. ib.
The King returns to England. Is complimented by the city, and the clergy. p. 512
Duke of Shrewsbury made lord-chamberlain. ib.
Nov. 16. The parliament meets. The King's ſpeech to them. ib. 513
Dec. 4. Addreſs of the commons. The King's anſwer. p. 513
Iriſh forfeitures reſumed. ib.
Report of the commiſſioners. Votes thereupon. ib. 514
A remarkable paſſage. Farther votes thereon. p. 514
The reſumption bill for the forfeited eſtates in Ireland tacked to the mony-bill. ib.
AN' 1700. State of the nation conſider'd. p. 515
Addreſs of the commons concerning the forfeited eſtates. The King's anſwer. ib.
The commons provok'd at the King's anſwer, paſs a ſevere reſolution. ib.
Votes concerning exciſe. ib.
The commiſſioners of forfeited eſtates rewarded. ib.
Truſtees appointed for the Iriſh forfeitures. ib.
The reports concerning Iriſh forfeitures printed. p. 516.
Difference between the two houſes about the forfeiture bill. ib.
The bill paſſed. ib.
Inquiry into the commiſſion of peace. Addreſs thereon. The King's anſwer. ib.
Diſcontent of the commons. ib.
April 11. Many acts paſs'd. The parliament prorogued. ib. 517
Mr. Stephens's ſermon before the houſe of commons cenſured. p. 517
A ſecond treaty of partition. ib.
The great ſeal taken from the lord Sommers and given to ſir Nathan Wright. ib.
May 4. Knights of the garter made. ib.
K. WILLIAM declares his intentions of going to Holland, and appoints lords juſtices. ib.
Affairs of Scotland. p. 518 AN' 1700.
Death of the duke of Glouceſter. p. 519 July 29.
Maritime affairs. ib.
A ſquadron ſent to the Mediterranean, another to Newfoundland, a third to the Eaſt Indies, and a fourth to the Baltick. ib.
The King returns to England. p. 520
Conſequences of the ſecond partition treaty. ib.
The King of Spain's Death. His laſt will. ib.
The duke d'Anjou declared King of Spain. The Dutch acknowledge him. ib.
The parliament diſſolved. Another called. ib.
Promotions. ib.
The King's ſpeech to both houſes on meeting the new parliament. AN' 1701. ib.
Bribery in elections inquired into. p. 521 Feb. 10.
Several addreſſes from the commons; the King's anſwers to them. ib.
Addreſs from the lords. The anſwer. ib.
Alliance between the Emperor, England, and Holland. ib.
The commons declare for the Proteſtant ſucceſſion, under ſome limitations. March 3. p. 522
The houſe of Hanover agreed to be the next in ſucceſſion. ib.
The ducheſs of Savoy proteſts againſt it. But not regarded by the commons. ib.
The convocation meets. ib. ditto 10.
Exchequer Bills renewed. ib. ditto 13.
Several meſſages, and addreſſes. Their anſwers. ib. 523, 524
Advice of the commons to the King. His anſwer. p. 524
King WILLIAM acknowledges the duke d'Anjou King of Spain. His congratulatory letter thereon. ib.
Negociations at the Hague fruitleſs. ib.
Earl of Portland impeach'd of high crimes, &c. ib.
Lord Sommers impeach'd. p. 525 ditto 14.
Addreſs of the commons againſt the impeached lords. ditto 15. ib.
The earl of Oxford and lord Halliſax impeach'd. ib. ditto 23.
The lords addreſs in favor of the impeached lords. Gain'd no anſwer. ib.
The King's anſwer to the commons addreſs. ib.
Indirect practices of the French; at which the Dutch are under great apprehenſions ib.
The King's meſſage to the commons concerning them. The reſolution of the houſe thereupon. ib. 526
Articles againſt the impeach'd lords. Their anſwers. p. 526, 527
The lords and commons at variance concerning theſe impeachments. A free conference agreed to. p. 527, 528
The commons reſent ſome words ſpoken there by the lord Haverſham. p. 528
Rules given by the lords for the trial of the lord Sommers. Reaſons of the commons for not appearing at the trial. Anſwer'd by the lords. His acquital. ib.
Lord Haverſham's anſwer to the charge againſt him. ib.
Warm reſolution of the commons. p. 529
The earls of Orford and Portland, the lords Haverſham and Halifax acquited. ib.
The Kentiſh petition. The petitioners impriſon'd. ib. May 3.
A memorial called LEGION, ſent to the ſpeaker. p. 530
The King paſſes ſeveral acts, and makes a ſpeech to both houſes. June 12. ib.
Addreſs and anſwer. ib.
Difference in the two houſes about the bill for ſtating the public accounts. ib.
The King to put an end to theſe diſputes, goes to the houſe; paſſes ſome acts; makes a ſpeech, and cloſes the ſeſſion. p. 531

The

An' 1701. The ſpeaker's ſpeech on preſenting the mony bill. p. 531
Preferments. ib.
The King goes to Holland. His ſpeech to the aſſembly of the States-general. Their anſwer. ib.
Monſieur d'Avaux's memorial to the States. The anſwer. p. 532
Prince Eugene penetrates into Italy. ib
A war in the North. ib.
Maritime affairs. p. 533
Preparations for war. ib.
Sep. 6. Death of K. James II.
Lewis XIV proclaims the Pretender K. of England. ib.
The Dauphin's ſpeech in council thereon. p. 534
The Engliſh embaſſador recalled. His letter to monſ. de Torcy. De Torcy's anſwer. ib.
The French ſecretary ordered to leave England. ib.
An indignity from France reſented by the whole Engliſh nation, in their addreſſes to the King. ib.
Addreſs of the city of London, which may ſerve as a ſpecimen for all the country. ib.
Articles of the grand alliance. p. 535
The Engliſh manufactures prohibited by France. ib.
Nov. 4. K. William returns to England. ib.
Dec. 30. The parliament diſſolved. A new one called, which An' 1702. meets. The King makes an excellent ſpeech to them. p. 535, 536
Jan. 5. The commons addreſs, and the King's anſwer. p. 536
Preferments. p. 537
Marſhall de Villeroy ſurpriz'd at Cremona. ib.
The Kentiſh petition affair revived; and the reſolutions of the houſe thereon. ib.
The King falls off his horſe. ib.
His meſſage to the commons. ib.
Acts paſs'd. p. 538
The King's death. His character. ib. 539, 540

Queen ANN.

March 8. Queen Ann's acceſſion to the crown: p. 541
Her firſt ſpeech to the privy-council; who were ſworn. ib.
Proclamations iſſued ib.
The Queen's letter to the privy-council of Scotland. ib.
Addreſſes from the lords, commons, biſhops, city, &c. Their anſwers. p. 542, 543
Her Majeſty's letter to the States-general. The good effects it had in Holland. The States reſolution thereon. p. 543
The duke of Bedford and earl of Marlborough made knights of the garter. p. 544
Earl of Marlbrough made captain-general; and ſent plenipotentiary to Holland. ib.
Arrives there, and has a public audience. ib.
His ſpeech to the States-general. The preſident's anſwer. ib.
French intriegues, prove of no effect. p. 545
ditto 14. Proceedings of the commons. Acts paſs'd. ib.
ditto 30. An inſtance of the Queen's generoſity. ib.
The Queen is complimented by the forein miniſters. ibid.
K. William's funeral. ib.
Preferments. ib.
Eaſt and Weſt Jerſey ſurrender'd to the crown. p. 546
The Queen's letter to the parliament of Scotland. ib.
The late King's papers inſpected into. ib.
Reſolutions of the houſe of peers thereon. ib.
Dr. Drake's pamphlet, intitled, the hiſtory of the laſt parliament, cenſured. ib.
The Queen forms her miniſtry. p. 547
The lord Godolphin made lord treaſurer. ib.
A report of the Prince of Denmark's commanding the confederate army; oppoſed by the Dutch. p. 548
May 2. Debates in council about declaring war, and concerning the operation of it. ib.
The war approv'd by parliament. p. 549 ditto. 4. The Queen's declaration of war againſt France and Spain. ib.
The Emperor and Dutch declare war againſt France and Spain. An' 1702. p. 550
The French King's declaration of war. ib.
The Princeſs Sophia order'd to be pray'd for. ib. May 5.
Acts paſs'd. ib. ditto 6.
Two proclamations iſſued, one for recalling ſeamen, ditto 15. the other for a public faſt for the ſucceſs of the war. p. 550
An addreſs of both houſes of parliament. The anditto 21. ſwer. ib.
Addreſs of the lords about privateers. The anſwer. ib. 551
The Queen goes to the houſe; paſſes ſeveral acts; ditto 25. makes a ſpeech, and puts an end to the ſeſſion. p. 551.
Preferments. ib.
Some other domeſtic occurrences. p. 552
Affairs of Scotland. The parliament aſſembles. Duke Hamilton's ſpeech againſt the exiſtence of the parliament. His proteſt. He withdraws, with 79 members. The Queen's letter to the parliament. Their anſwer. The lord high chancellor's ſpeech. Acts paſs'd. The Queen's ſecond letter. They refuſe to ſettle the Hanover ſucceſſion. Adjourn. p. 553
Commiſſioners appointed to treat of an union. Their proceedings. The Queen's ſpeech to them. The progreſs of the treaty ſtop'd. p. 553
Defection of ſome of the German Princes. p. 554
State of affairs before the earl of Marlborough headed the confederate army. ib.
Diſadvantages under which the confederates begun the war. ib.
Siege of Keyſerſwaert. The counterſcarp taken by ſtorm, and the town by capitulation. p. 555
A bold attempt of the marſhal de Bouflers. Diſpoſition of the confederate army thereon. The deſign fruſtrated. ib. 556
Prudent conduct of the earl of Athlone on this occaſion. p. 556
The earl of Marlborough arrives at the Hague, where he is declared generaliſſimo of all their forces. ib.
He takes the command of the army; purſues the French; and has great ſucceſs. ib. 557
Venlo beſieged and taken. p. 557, 558
Bravery and prudent conduct of ſeveral officers at the ſiege. p. 558
Ruremond and Stevenſwaert beſieged and taken. Octob. 16. p. 559
Liege town and citadel beſieged and taken. ib. 560
The Chartreuſe ſurrenders. p. 560
The earl of Marlbrough taken by a French party; but gets out of their hands by a ſtratagem. ib.
Conſternation of the Dutch on this occaſion. p. 561
The grand-penſionary's compliment to the earl on that occaſion. The earl's modeſt anſwer. ib.
Affairs of the Empire. Landau taken by the Imperialiſts. The elector of Bavaria ſeizes Ulm. The Emperor declares war againſt the French King, and the duke of Anjou. The Empire's quota. ib.
Affairs of Italy. Battle of Luzara. French account of it. ib. 562
Maritime affairs. Bembow's expedition to the Weſt-Indies. He goes in purſuit of du Caſſe's ſquadron. An ingagement. Betrayed by ſome captains. His leg broke. He returns to Jamaica. The captains tried by a court martial, and condemn'd. p. 563, 564
——Sir John Munden's attempt to deſtroy ſome ſhips at the Groyne, fruſtrated. He returns to England. The affair examin'd into by a court-martial, wherein ſir John is acquited. p. 564, 565
——Sir George Rooke's expedition to Cadiz. Make ſeveral attempts, and take ſome places. Indeavor to intercept the Spaniſh plate-fleet. They attack, take, and burn ſeveral ſhips. Vigo taken. Admiral returns to England. p. 565-569

—Sir

AN' 1702. ——Sir Cloudesly Shovel returns with prizes. p. 570
Parliament dissolved; a new one chosen, which is prorogued. ib.
Promotions and preferments. ib.
Queen ANN and her consort go to the Bath; and return to Windsor. ib.
The parliament meets. The Queen's speech to them. Their addresses. ib. 571
The Queen dines in the city. ib.
Nov. 2. Resolution of the commons about the impeach'd lords. p. 572
Sept. 4. The Queen's message to the commons for a thanksgiving. Their answer. ib.
Bill for preventing occasional conformity passes the commons, who vote against tacking. ib.
Nov. 6. Vote of thanks to the duke of Ormond and sir George Rooke for signal services. The speaker's speech to the latter thereon. ib.
ditto 12. Thanksgiving solemnized. p. 573 ditto 18. Resolutions of both houses for and against the bishop of Worcester and his son, for undue elections. ib.
Dec. 1. Resolution of the commons to settle 100,000 l. per ann. on his royal highness Prince George of Denmark. p. 574
Vice-admiral Hopson rewarded. ib.
The earl of Marlborough receives the thanks of the commons. His answer. Is made a duke. The Queen's message in his favor. Debates thereon. A second message. The commons address the Queen about it. Her answer. ib.
ditto 13. Proclamation for recovery of all effects imbezeled at Port St. Mary's or Vigo. p. 575 Earl of Ranelagh proceeded against for mismanagements. Resolutions of the commons thereon. ib.
ditto 23. Acts pass'd. ib.
Motion for resuming grants made in K. JAMES's time; pass'd in the negative. ib.
AN' 1703. Her Majesty's letter to the commons about the representation of the States. Their address in answer. The Queen's answer. Address of the lords on the same occasion. The answer. ib. 576
Debate on the occasional conformity bill. It is lost. p. 576, 577
Proceedings against the lord Hallifax, concerning the public accounts. The lords examine the affair and clear him. Difference between the two houses thereupon, with their debates. p. 578
Earl of Ranelagh expelled the house of commons. ib.
Feb. 27. The Queen goes to the house. Passes several acts. Makes a speech. Prorogues the parliament. p. 580
Disputes in the convocation reviv'd. ib.
The earl marshal declares the Queen's motto, Semper eadem. p. 581
Promotions, creations, &c. ib.
Affairs of Scotland. ib. 582
Affairs of Ireland. ib. 583, 584
Maritime affairs. Vice-admiral Graydon sent to the West-Indies; meets part of du Casse's squadron; but lets them escape. Rear-admiral Whetstone successful. Several places taken. The squadron returns to St. Christophers. p. 584, 585
——Sir George Rooke commands the fleet, but with little success. p. 585, 586
——Sir Cloudesly Shovel's expedition to the Mediterranean. Several French prizes taken. He arrives at Cascais. p. 586
——Sir Stephen Fairborn sent to Lisbon. Arrives at Tangier. Gets thro' the Streights. Lands troops in Spain. Indeavors to relieve the Cevennois; in vain. Return to Leghorn. Disputes about salutes. The fleet sails from Leghorn to England. ib. 587, 588
A French man of war taken. p. 588
——Rear-admiral Dilkes expedition on the coast of Normandy. ib.
Campain in the Netherlands and on the Rhine. ib.
Rhineburg taken. ib.
Siege of Bonn. The governor's letter to the duke of Marlborough. His grace's answer. The place surrender'd. AN' 1703. p. 589
A design of the marshals Bouflers and Villeroy frustrated. ib.
Tongeren taken by the French, and abandon'd. They retire before the confederates, and shelter themselves within their lines. ib. 590
The French lines atack'd by general Cohorn and baron Spar. June 27. p. 590
Duke of Marlborough forms a design on Antwerp, which is frustrated by the vigilance of the enemy. ib.
Motions of the army preceding the battle of Ekeren. General Schlangenberg's account of it. ib. 592
Huy besieged and taken. p. 593
The duke of Marlborough proposes forcing the French lines. Is opposed by the Dutch. ib.
The siege of Limburg resolved on. Is taken. ib. 594
Affairs of Germany. The elector of Bavaria takes possession of Ratisbon. His manifesto. He invades Tirol; but quits it. Takes Augsburg. House of Austria in great distress. Duke of Savoy comes into the grand alliance. p. 594, 595
Duke of Marlborough visits the King of Spain. The King makes the duke a present. p. 596
Rebellion in Hungary. ib.
The parliament of England meets. The Queen's speech to them. Addresses of the two houses. Answers. ib. 597
A violent storm of wind. p. 597 Nov. 26.
The King of Spain arrives in England. p. 598
The occasional conformity bill again rejected. ib.
The Queen's speech concerning the Scotish plot. ib.
Prisoners taken into custody of the black rod in order to their being examin'd before the lords. A great dispute thereupon between the two houses. The Queen's speech thereupon. ib. 599, 602
Another difference between the two houses in the case of Ashby and White concerning elections. AN' 1704. p. 602
Address of the lords about the navy. Her Majesty's answer. p. 603
Votes of the lords against admiral Graydon. They clear the earl of Orford. ib.
The lords address about the commissions for the peace. The answer. ib.
Two books order'd to be burnt by the common hangman. p. 604
Her Majesty's message concerning the poor clergy. Feb. 7. ib.
The Queen goes to the house; makes a speech and prorogues the parliament. ditto 24. ib.
Duke of Marlborough goes to the Hague to concert measures for the insuing campain, and returns. ib.
The order of the thistle reviv'd in Scotland. p. 605
The play-houses regulated. ib.
Proceedings against the author of the Observator. ib.
English convocation meets, to little purpose. ib.
Address of the Irish convocation. ib.
Changes at court. ib.
Legion's address to the lords. A proclamation for discovering author and printer of it. ib. 606
Affairs of Scotland. Change in the ministry. The parliament meets. The Queen's letter to them. Speeches inforcing it. Resolutions concerning the union and succession. Persons and papers concerning the plot call'd for. Resolutions against the English lords, and the act of security. The act of security passes; tenor of it. Parliament prorogued. p. 606, 607
Maritime affairs. Sir George Rooke convoys the King of SPAIN to Lisbon. Siege of Gibraltar. Sea fight off of Velez-Malaga. Loss on both sides. The French attempt Gibraltar in vain. p. 607--610 Affairs on the continent. Deplorable state of the

An' 1704. Emperor and Empire. The Emperor implores the Queen's protection. A memorial from him. The Queen's anſwer. p. 611

April 8: The duke of Marlborough arrives at the Hague. The States concur in his meaſures. His march into Germany. Firſt interview with Prince Eugene. A ſmall ſketch of the character of theſe two generals. Reſult of their own conſultation. Reciprocal compliments. ib. 613

June 12. Prince Lewis of Baden comes to the duke of Marlborough. Expreſſions of civility betwixt them. p. 613

A conference between the generals. ib.

Motions of the confederate army. They join with that under Prince Lewis of Baden. ib.

Schellenberg fight. Loſs on both ſides. p. 614

July 5. The elector of Bavaria quits his camp, and intrenches himſelf under the canon of Augſburg. p. 615

Newburg, Rain, Aicha and Friedberg taken. ib.

The Emperor's letter to the duke of Marlborough. who confers the title of Prince of the Empire on him. ib.

Elector of Bavaria cut off from his dominions; he accepts of propoſals of accommodation, but afterwards rejects them. His country ravaged. ib. 616

Auguſt 6. The ſiege of Ingolſtadt reſolved on. Left to the conduct of Prince Lewis of Baden. ib.

Monſ. Tallard joins the Elector of Bavaria; and Prince Eugene the duke of Marlborough. ib.

Reaſons for attacking the enemy in their advantageous poſts. ib.

Marlborough's unſhaken reſolution. p. 617

The battle of Blenheim or Hockſtadt. The ſeveral ſucceſſes of the confederate generals. ib. 618, 619

Marſhal Tallard taken priſoner. p. 619

Oberklau attack'd with ſucceſs. ib.

Farther ſucceſs of the duke of Marlborough. His great prudence. ib. 620

The French in Blenheim ſurrender priſoners of war. p. 620

Compliments between the duke of Marlborough and marſhal Tallard. p. 621

Loſs on both ſides at Blenheim. p. 622 ditto 16. Augſburg and Memmingen ſubmit. Landau inveſted, and afterwards ſurrenders. Ulm ſurrender'd. p. 623

The duke's expedition on the Moſel. He returns to Landau, and ſends the cavalry towards Holland. ib

Nov. 10. A treaty concluded between the Emperor and the Electreſs of Bavaria. p. 624

Duke of Marlborough ends this campain, and goes to Berlin. Returns to Holland. ib.

Traerbach beſieged; ſurrender'd. ib.

Campain in Flanders. ib.

Affairs in Italy. ib.

Campain in Portugal. p. 625

The States congratulate her Majeſty on the victory of Blenheim. ib.

A public thankſgiving throughout all England. ib.

Numerous addreſſes on this occaſion. ib.

The parliament meets. The Queen makes a ſpeech to them. Is addreſs'd by both houſes. Her anſwers. ib. 626

Soldiers and ſeamen rewarded. p. 626

Parliamentary affairs. Occaſional conformity bill again rejected. Lord Haverſham's ſpeech to the lords about grievances. Various effects of it. ib. 627

Debates on Scotiſh affairs. Reſolutions thereon. p. 627

Duke of Marlborough concerts the operations of this year's campain at the Hague. Returns to England with his priſoners. The lord-keeper's ſpeech on his victory. The duke's anſwer. His grace receives the thanks of the houſe of commons. His anſwer. p. 628

Dec. 16. The French priſoners ſent to Nottingham and Litchfield. ib.

Lord Godolphin inſtalled knight of the garter. p. 629

The ſtandards, &c. taken at Blenheim, put up in Weſtminſter-hall. p. 629

An' 1705. The duke entertain'd by the city of London. ib.

Addreſs of the commons to the Queen in his favor; which occaſion'd a meſſage to them from her Majeſty. Reſolutions thereon. ib.

March 11. An act paſs'd in his favor, veſting him with the manor of Woodſtock. ib.

Blenheim houſe order'd to be built. ib.

Advancements in the navy. ib.

Acts paſs'd. Addreſſes and anſwers. ib. 630

Affair of the Aileſbury-men revived. Subſtance of the debate. The lords addreſs about it. The Queen's anſwer. ib.

Her Majeſty comes to the houſe of peers; paſſes ſeveral acts; makes a ſpeech, and puts an end to the ſeſſion. p. 631

The Dutch permited to trade with France. ib.

Creations and promotions at court. ib.

Proclamation for calling a new parliament. ib.

April 5. Death of Emperor Leopold. Joſeph's acceſſion. p. 632

Affairs of Scotland and Ireland. ib.

Maritime affairs continued. Monſieur Ponti comes before Gibraltar. Sir John Leake and ſir Thomas Dilkes take and burn ſeveral French men of war. Sir John returns to Liſbon. ib. 633

——The earl of Peterborough and ſir Cloudeſly Shovel in joint commiſſion as admiral of the grand fleet. Their arrival at Liſbon. p. 633

The King of Spain imbarks on board the confederate fleet, arrives at Gibraltar, and takes poſſeſſion of his kingdom. The fleet arrives at Barcelona, which is afterwards ſurrender'd; and the King makes his entry into the city. Montjuy attack'd and taken. The fleet returns. ib. 634

Duke of Marlborough's ſcheme for this year's campain, approv'd by the Dutch. p. 635

The duke confers with Prince Lewis. A reſult of their conferences. Motions of the confederate army thereon. ib.

The duke incamps near the enemy; who intrench themſelves. ib.

His real deſign. Render'd abortive by the Prince Lewis of Baden. ib.

Motions of the French Army. They take Huy, and inveſt the citadel of Liege. Repreſentation of the States hereupon to the duke of Marlborough. p. 636

The duke returns to the Netherlands very much mortified. ib.

Ill conduct of the Germans. ib.

Huy retaken by the allies. ib.

The duke propoſes to force the French lines; is oppoſed by the Dutch; but prevails. A ſtratagem put in practice, which ſucceeds. They are forc'd. Several priſoners taken. p. 637

Retreat of the Elector of Bavaria and marſhal de Villeroy. ib.

Motions of the confederate army. p. 638

The duke forms a project, which is oppoſed by the Dutch. He ſubmits with reluctance, and ſends an expoſtulatory letter to the States. They indeavor to juſtify themſelves. ib.

Sandvliet inveſted and taken. p. 639

The duke of Marlborough ſets out for Vienna. Has audience of their Imperial Majeſty's. Departs for the court of Berlin; and returns by Hanover to the Hague and England. ib.

Campain in Germany, Italy, Spain and Portugal. p. 640

Domeſtic occurrences during the interval. p. 641

A pamphlet, called, the Memorial of the Church of England, order'd to be burnt by the hangman. ib.

The parliament meets. The Queen makes a ſpeech to both houſes. They addreſs. Her anſwers. ib. 642

Addreſs

AN' 1705. Addreſs of both houſes concerning the union. The Queen's anſwer. Lord Haverſham's ſpeech thereupon. p. 642
Motion in the houſe of peers for inviting over the Princeſs Sophia, carried in the negative. p. 643
Bill for the ſecurity of the Hanover ſucceſſion. ib.
A bill for an union with Scotland. ib.
Advice of the ſucceſſes in Catalonia. The Queen's ſpeech thereupon. The commons congratulate her on this occaſion. Both houſes addreſs for a good underſtanding with the allies. The Queen's anſwer. ib. 644
Dec. 3. The Princeſs Sophia naturalized. p. 644
Debates about the church of England's being in danger. Reſolution of both houſes thereupon. They addreſs the Queen on it. Her anſwer. ib.
Charles Cæſar, eſq; member for Hertford ſent to the Tower by the commons. p. 645
The Queen goes to the houſe, paſſes ſeveral acts, and makes a ſpeech. The commons addreſs. ib.
ditto 31. Queen Katherine, dowager of K. CHARLES II, died at Liſbon. ib.
AN' 1706. Thanks given to the duke of Marlborough by the houſe of commons. His anſwer. ib.
Aſperſions thrown on the duke, eſpecially by mr. Stephen's rector of Sutton in Surry. ib.
An attempt ſaid to be form'd againſt the duke in the houſe of lords. ib.
He concerts an attempt on Toulon. ib.
Feb. 16. Acts paſs'd. p. 646
Bill againſt Popery drop'd. The lords addreſs againſt it. The Queen's anſwer. ib.
Sir Rowland Gwyn's letter to the earl of Stamford, relating to the Princeſs Sophia, cenſured. ib.
Differences between the two houſes of convocation. ib.
The Queen's ſpeech to both houſes. The parliament prorogued. p. 647
Electoral Prince of Hanover, choſen knight of the garter. ib.
Campain in Flanders. The two armies take the field. They meet. The famous battle of Ramellies. The duke twice in danger. The confederates gain a compleat victory. Juſt praiſe of the generals, officers and troops. ib. 650
The French abandon Louvain. The confederates take poſſeſſion of it. ib. 651
Precipitate flight of the Elector of Bavaria. p. 651
Conſequences of the battle of Ramellies. ib.
June 1. A thankſgiving celebrated. p. 652
The caſtle of Ghent ſurrenders. Oudenarde ſurrenders. ib.
Bruges and the Franc ſubmit to K. CHARLES. ib.
Damme abandon'd by the enemy. ib.
ditto 5. The army incamps at Arſele. ib.
The garriſon of Antwerp, capitulates. ib.
Oſtend beſieged and taken. p. 653
Courtray abandon'd by the enemy. ib.
Menin beſieged and taken. ib.
Dendermond beſieged and taken. ib.
Aeth beſieged and taken; which ends this year's campain. p. 654
Affairs of Germany. ib.
Maritime affairs. Suppoſed treachery of the Portugueſe. Siege of Barcelona raiſed. Carthagena and Alicant ſurrender. ib. 655
Campain in Spain and Portugal. Alcantara taken. Queen of Spain's ſpeech to the grandees. Cividad Rodrigo taken. K. PHILIP quits Madrid, and K. CHARLES is proclaim'd there, who joins the allies. Ivica and Majorca ſubmits to King CHARLES. p. 655, 656
Campain in Italy. p. 656, 661
Affairs of the North, and of Hungary. p. 661
Treaty of Union begun. Preliminary articles. A previous propoſal. Particular articles agreed on. An abſtract of them. The Queen's ſpeech to the commiſſioner's on preſenting them. ib. 662, 663
AN' 1706. Congratulatory addreſſes from all parts to the Queen on the victory of Ramellies. p. 663
France offers peace. Reaſons why it did ſo. ib.
Oct. 3. The Queen's letter to the parliament of Scotland concerning the union. Proceedings concerning it. Tumults raiſed. Petitions againſt it. Reaſons alleged againſt it by the Scots. They burn the articles in Scotland. They are ratified there. p. 664, 665
Dec. 3. The Engliſh parliament meet. The Queen's ſpeech to them. Lords and commons addreſs. p. 665, 666 ditto 5. Lord-keeper's ſpeech to the duke of Marlborough. His grace's anſwer. p. 666
The commons vote the thanks of their houſe be given to his grace. His grace's anſwer. ib.
Reſolution of the commons as to their privileges. ib.
Parliamentary affairs. ib. 667
Creations and promotions. p. 667
Lords addreſs in favor of the duke of Marlborough. The Queen's anſwer. ib.
His grace's ſpeech on that occaſion. ib.
ditto 19. The ſtandards and colors taken at Ramellies hung up in Guild-hall, London, and the ſame day the duke of Marlborough dines in the city. ib.
A bill in favor of the duke of Marlborough paſs'd. Extract of the ſpeaker's ſpeech on that occaſion; and of her Majeſty's p. 668 ditto 31. A general thankſgiving for the ſucceſſes of this year. ib.
AN' 1707. Addreſs of the commons in favor of the duke of Marlborough. The Queen's anſwer; and a meſſage from her Majeſty to them in his grace's favor. A bill paſs'd thereupon. ib.
The Queen's ſpeech to the parliament about the union. Debates in the houſe of commons thereon. Proceedings of the lords on the ſame. p. 669
Lord Haverſham's ſpeech in the houſe of lords. p. 670
March 4. The act of ratification of the union paſſes both houſes, and receives the royal aſſent. ib.
The Queen's ſpeech to both houſes on this occaſion. Addreſſes and anſwers. ib. 671
April 24. Her Majeſty's ſpeech at proroguing the parliament. Paſſes ſeveral acts. p. 671
May 1. Thankſgiving for the union. ib.
ditto 4. Promotions. ib.
ditto 5. Proclamation for holding the firſt parliament of Great-Britain. ib.
ditto 23. Prince George of Denmark made lord-high-admiral of Great-Britain. ib.
Affairs of Ireland. p. 672
The duke of Marlborough goes to Holland, and acquaints the States with his deſign of going into Saxony, who approve of it. ib.
The eyes of all Europe on the King of SWEDEN. The allies under apprehenſions from him. ib.
ditto 27. The duke of Marlborough goes to the King of SWEDEN's quarters near Leipſick. Has audience. His compliment to the King. Is well received. The King's anſwer. Succeſs of this negociation. The duke has an opportunity of complimenting King Staniſlaus. p. 673
Campain in Flanders. Little done in it. ib 674
Maritime affairs. Sir George Byng detach'd with ſupplies for the army; is join'd by ſir Cloudeſly Shovel. p. 675
Campain in Spain. Battle of Almanza fatal to the confederates. ib. 676
The attempt on Toulon concerted. p. 676
A brave action of ſir John Norris. ib.
The confederates come before Toulon. The French deſtroy their own ſhips in harbor. The town and harbor bombarded. The ſiege raiſed. p. 677
Sir Cloudſley Shovel returns for England. Is loſt. ib.
Suſa taken by Prince Eugene. ib.
Naples reduced by the Imperialiſts. p. 678
Campain on the Rhine. ib.
Oct. 23. The Queen's ſpeech to the firſt parliament of Great-Britain. Addreſs of the commons. ib. 679

The

An' 1707. The lords inſtead of addreſſing fall on the grievances of the nation. Lord Haverſham's ſpeech on this occaſion. Debates thereon. p. 679
Reſolution of the commons about the ſea-ſervice. p. 680
Reſolutions in regard to Scotland. ib.
Dec. 18. Acts paſs'd. The Queen makes a ſpeech. ib.
Debates in the houſe of peers concerning the affairs of Spain. p. 681
Addreſs of the lords, and another of both houſes, for carrying on the war in Spain. ib.
An' 1708. Gregg executed for treaſonable practices. p. 682
Situation of the court at this time. ib.
The ducheſs of Marlborough declines in the Queen's favor. Mrs. Maſham and Mr. Harley gain her eſteem. The duke of Marlborough and earl of Godolphin complain of Mr. Harley and offer to lay down their places. Mr. Harley and ſeveral others lay down. Mr. Boyle made ſecretary of ſtate. ib. 683
Promotions of admirals. p. 683
Proceedings in parliament about the affairs of Spain. ib.
Great-Britain threatned with an invaſion. p. 684
Feb. 27. Sir George Byng ſets out with a ſquadron. The enemy ſails from Dunkirk. He purſues and diſcovers them on the coaſt of Scotland. Takes the Salisbury, in which were ſeveral officers both Engliſh and Iriſh. The French ſhips return to Dunkirk. ib.
The Queen's ſpeech to both houſes on proroguing the parliament. p. 685
Promotions. ib.
April 15. Proclamation for calling a new parliament. ib.
Lord Griffin order'd for execution but repriev'd. ib.
Campain in Flanders. The enemy take Ghent and Bruges by treachery. Damme attempted in vain. Fort Plaſſendahl taken. Oudenarde attack'd in vain. The battle of Oudenarde. Bravery of his preſent Majeſty and of the Prince of Orange Naſſau. The victory indiſputable on the ſide of the allies. Loſs on both ſides. ib. 688
Siege of Liſle. Is taken. p. 689
Some reflections on the battle of Wynendale. ib.
An account of the battle and victory. p. 690, 691
The French and Spaniards lay the blame on each other. p. 691
Major-general Webb's juſt praiſe. His eminent ſervices publicly acknowledged. The convoy under him arrives ſafe in the army. ib.
A fruitleſs attempt on Bruſſels. ib.
The citadel of Liſle ſurrenders. p. 692
Ghent taken. ib.
Bruges and other places abandon'd by the French. ib.
The duke of Marlborough ends this glorious campain, and goes to the Hague. ib.
Campain on the Rhine, and in Italy. ib.
Maritime affairs. Sir John Leake ſent to the Mediterranean. Takes a large convoy of proviſions, and arrives at Barcelona and Vado. Convoys the Queen of Spain to Barcelona. Subdues the iſland of Sardinia and Minorca. Returns. Port Mahon taken. ib. 693
Campain in Spain and Portugal. p. 693
Succeſs of commodore Wager in the Weſt-Indies. ib.
Promotions at court. ib.
Octob. 28. Death of Prince George of Denmark. ib.
Lord chancellor's ſpeech at the meeting of the new parliament. Lord's addreſs. Her Majeſty's anſwer. ib. 694
The convocation meets. Is prorogued. p. 694
Proceedings in parliament. Votes againſt the eldeſt ſons of the peers of Scotland. Land-tax act paſs'd. ib. 695
Proclamation for a thankſgiving on reducing Ghent. p. 695
A pamphlet, intitled, the Sacramental teſt cenſured. An' 1709. p. 695
Lord Haverſham's ſpeech concerning the invaſion. Jan. 12. Papers relating thereunto call'd for. ib. 696
The commons vote their ſolemn thanks to the duke of Marlborough. His grace's anſwer. p. 696
The parliament addreſs the Queen to marry again. ib.
Acts paſs'd. ib. ditto 26.
Part of lord Haverſham's ſpeech on the Scotiſh invaſion. Debates about this matter. ib.
The duke of Marlborough arrives in England, and receives the thanks of the houſe of peers. His anſwer. p. 697
The commons approve the conduct of the government. ib.
More acts paſs'd. ib.
An addreſs of the commons not anſwer'd. ib.
Lord-chancellor's ſpeech to both houſes. Parliament prorogued. ib.
Negociations for a peace. Overtures made by France debated. p. 698, 699
Prince Eugene, the duke of Marlborough, and the marquis de Torcy arrive at the Hague. p. 699
Preliminaries for a peace agreed on; but the French miniſters refuſe to ſign them. ib.
Abſtract of them. ib. 700
The negociation broke off. p. 700
The campain in Flanders open'd. ib.
Tournay inveſted and taken. ib. 701
The ſiege of Mons reſolv'd on. Afterwards taken p. 701
The battle of Malplacquet. Loſs on both ſides. p. 702, 703
France makes new offers of peace, and monſ. Pettecum goes to Paris for that end. p. 704
The propoſals of France rejected. ib.
Campain on the Rhine, and in the North. ib.
Maritime affairs. ib. 705
Affairs of Spain, Portugal, Dauphiny, and Ireland. p. 705
The poor Palatines come to England. p. 706
Proclamation for a thankſgiving for the ſucceſs of her Majeſty's arms, &c. this campain. Octob. 3. ib.
The plague at Dantzick. ib.
Promotions in the navy. ib.
The parliament meets. The Queen's ſpeech to them. Nov. 15. ib.
The duke of Marlborough arrives in London. The commons vote him thanks. His anſwer. ib. 707
The lord chancellor gives the thanks of the houſe of peers to the duke. His anſwer. p. 707
Dr. Sacheverel's proſecution. ib. Dec. 15.
An addreſs in favor of Mr. Hoadly preſented to the Queen. p. 708
Articles of impeachment againſt Sacheverel carried up to the lords. His ſentence. An' 1710. ib. Jan. 13.
Books and Pamphlets burnt. ib.
Acts paſs'd. The Queen's ſpeech to both houſes. The parliament prorogued. ib. 709
The duke of Marlborough ſent ſuddenly to Holland. p. 709
The duke of Shrewſbury made lord-chamberlain. ib.
Ducheſs of Marborough retires from court ib.
Farther overtures for a peace made by France. Rejected by the allies. Others propoſed. Reſolution of the allies. ib. 710
Paſſes granted the French plenipotentiaries. They arrive at Gertruydenburg. Feb. 23. p. 710
A ſummary account of the whole negociation. ib.
Some remarks on this treaty. ib.
A change in the miniſty begun. Is total. p. 711
Campain in Flanders. The confederates enter the French lines. The enemy retreat before them. ib. 712
Douay beſiged and taken. p. 712

Bethune

AN' 1710. Bethune beſieged and taken. p. 713
St. Venant and Aire beſieged and taken. ib.
Campain on the Rhine, Italy, Spain, Portugal, and Piedmont. ib. 714
Maritime affairs. p. 714
Nov. 25. The parliament meets. Her Majeſty's ſpeech to them. Addreſs of both houſes. The Queen's anſwer. ib. 715
Parliamentary affairs. p. 715
Mr. Hill named envoy extraordinary and plenipotentiary to the States-general. p. 716
The commiſſions of three general officers ſuperſeeded. Extenuated by ſome. ib.
The duke of Marlborough arrives in London. Meets with a gracious reception from the Queen. ib.
Her Majeſty reſolves to reconcile the duke and Mr. Harley. ib.
AN' 1711. The duke of Marlborough not thank'd by either houſe of parliament. Reſolves not to lay down. ib. 717
Changes and promotions at court. p. 717
Jan. 15. A memorable debate in the houſe of lords concerning the affairs of Spain. ib.
The earl of Peterborough receives the thanks of the houſe of peers for his ſervices in Spain. ib.
The duke of Marlborough retires to Blenheim houſe; returns to London, and goes to Holland. p. 718
Proceedings of the commons. ib.
Acts paſs'd. ib.
Monſieur Guiſcard ſtabs Mr. Harley; but not mortally. ib
Mr. Harley on his recovery, is complimented by the commons. ib.
Bill for building fifty new churches. p. 719
Death of Emperor Joſeph. The Queen's reſolutions thereupon, approved by parliament. ib.
Mr. Harley's ſcheme for ſatisfying the public debts. He is made a peer of Great-Britain, and lord high treaſurer. ib.
Repreſentation of the commons on miſmanagements. The Queen's anſwer. p. 720
Addreſs for inquiring into the ſtate of affairs in Spain and Portugal. ib.
Acts paſs'd. The Queen makes a ſpeech and prorogues the parliament. ib.
Campain in Flanders. The allies take Arleux. It is retaken by the French. The duke of Marlborough reſolves to attempt their lines by ſtratagem. He goes to view them. His real deſign. The whole confederate army paſſes the French lines. ib. 721, 172
Bouchain beſieged and ſurrender'd. The campain ends. p. 722, 723
The election of K. CHARLES to the Imperial throne. p. 723
Affairs on the Rhine, in Italy, Spain and Portugal. p. 724
Pacification in Hungary ib.
Maritime affairs. ib.
The biſhop of Briſtol made lord privy ſeal. p. 725
Negociations for a peace renewed. ib.
The ſeven preliminary articles as communicated to the forein miniſters. Occaſion of great murmurings. p. 726
The Emperor ſends circular letters to the Princes of the Empire, and writes to the States-general to diſſuade them from accepting the offers made by France. p. 727
The earl of Strafford ſent to the Hague. ib.
The States conſent to a congreſs at Utrecht to be begun on January 1. ib.
The Elector of Hanover's memorial preſented. ib.
The duke of Marlborough viſits the new miniſters. ib.
Plenipotentiaries for a peace named. ib.
The Queen's ſpeech to both houſes at meeting of the parliament. p. 728
Warm debates in the houſe concerning the peace. ib.
Addreſſes of both houſes concerning the peace. Her Majeſty's anſwer. p. 729
The occaſional conformity bill paſs'd by a new title. ib.
Report of the commiſſioners for ſtating public accounts chiefly levell'd at the duke of Marlborough. The duke's letter to them; with a copy of her Majeſty's warrant. His farther vindication. ib. 730
AN' 1712. Jan. 24. The houſe proceed againſt the duke. Their reſolutions laid before the Queen. Her anſwer. ib. 731
The duke diſmiſs'd from all his imployments. p. 731
Twelve new peers created. ib.
Prince Eugene comes to England. Is unſucceſsful in his negociation. ib.
Promotions. ib.
The Queen's meſſage to both houſes, by way of ſpeech. ib. 732
Addreſſes of thanks from both houſes. p. 732
Feb. 4. Reſolutions of the commons on the ſtate of the war. ib.
A repreſentation to the Queen grounded thereon. ib.
Debates in parliament on that account. ib.
The barrier-treaty cenſured. p. 732
AN' 1712. The application of the two and half per cent deduction from the pay of the forein forces voted. p. 733
A repreſentation of ſome forein Princes in favor of the duke of Marlborough. ib.
Preparations for opening the campain. ib.
The duke of Ormond's conduct. ib.
Debates in the houſe of lords about the duke of Ormond's orders. ib.
Earl Powlet reflects on the duke of Marlborough. The duke reſents it. It is made up. ib.
The biſhop of Briſtol's declaration to the States; which puts them in a great conſternation. A letter from the States to the Queen thereon. Her Majeſty's anſwer. ib 734
A vote of the houſe of commons concerning it. p. 734
Their reſolution about the peace. The Queen thanks them for it. ib
The French make propoſals for a general peace. They are received with indignation. ib.
Her Majeſty makes her ſpecific demands. ib.
A difference ariſes concerning the manner of treating. The conferences ſuſpended thereby. ib.
Terms for a general peace open'd to the parliament of Great-Britain in a ſpeech from the throne. ib. 735
Debates in the houſe of peers about the peace. The duke of Marlborough's ſenſe of it. p. 736 Reſolution of the commons preſented to the Queen. Her Majeſty's anſwer. ib.
The Queen's ſpeech at the riſing of the parliament. ib. 737
Campain in Flanders. Queſnoy taken by the allies. p. 737
The duke of Ormond propoſes a ceſſation of arms. ib.
The Imperialiſts and Auxiliaries ſeparate from the duke's army. ib.
A ceſſation of arms publiſh'd between the Engliſh and French. ib.
The allies beſiege Landrecy, but abandon it. ib.
The French force the confederate lines, and defeat them at Denain. ib. 738
Dunkirk deliver'd into the hands of the Engliſh. p. 738
The French take ſeveral important places. ib.
The ſuſpenſion of arms twice renewed. ib.
Ceſſation of arms in Catalonia. ib.
The Engliſh forces ſail to Port-Mahon. ib.
The duke of Marlborough leaves England. ib.
A duel between duke Hamilton and lord Mohun. Both ſlain. ib. June 27.
The Queen's ſpeech communicated to the miniſters at Utrecht. ib.
King Philip renounces his claim to France. p. 739
A ſuſpenſion of arms concluded between France and Portugal. ib.
The earl of Strafford returns to Holland. ib.
The States conſent to the new plan. ib.
A new ſucceſſion and barrier-treaty ſign'd. ib.
AN' 1713. The dukes of Berry and Orleans renounce their pretenſions on Spain. ib.
Count Sinzendorf, in the name of the Emperor, proteſts againſt the peace. ib.
Peace concluded and ſign'd. Abſtract of the treaty ib. 740
The Germans reſolve to carry on the war. p. 740
Queen's ſpeech to the parliament. She is congratulated on the peace by both houſes. p. 741
Peace proclaim'd in London. ib. May 5.
The Scots attempt to diſſolve the union. ib.
Meſſage for ſupply of the civil liſt. Reſolution of the commons thereupon. June 25. ib. 742
The Queen goes to the houſe; paſſes ſome acts; makes a ſpeech, and prorogues the parliament. p. 742 Auguſt 8.
Proclamations for calling a new parliament. ib.
Promotions. ib.
Her Majeſty taken ill, but recovers. ib.
She ſends a letter to the lord mayor aſſuring him of her recovery, and reſolution to open the new parliament the 16th of this month, which meets accordingly; Her ſpeech to them. p. 743 Dec. 24. AN' 1714. Feb. 1.
Abſtract of the treaty between Great-Britain and Spain. ib.
The duke of Argyle and earl of Stairs laid aſide. p. 744
A writ demanded to call the Electoral Prince of Hanover to the houſe of peers. ib.
Addreſſes of both about the peace. ib.
Death of the Princeſs Sophia. ib. July 9.
The Queen's laſt ſpeech to the parliament. She paſſes ſeveral acts. ib. 745
Ill ſucceſs of the Germans at war. p. 745
Peace between France and Germany. ib.
Behavior of the Catalans. ib.
The miniſtry of Great-Britain divided. ib.
The Queen's laſt ſickneſs. She makes the duke of Shrewſbury lord treaſurer. p. 746
Great prudence of ſome privy counſellors. ib.
Death of Q. ANN. Her general character. Her particular one. A deſcription of her perſon. ib. 747
Her funeral. p. 748

The END.

Directions to the BINDER.

In the First VOLUME.

RAPIN's Head facing the Title.
Map of Britannia, to be placed at the beginning of the Introduction.
The Ancient Britons, Introduction. page ix.
Saxon Idols. —— —— p. 24
A Map of Britain, under the Saxon Government. —— —— —— p. 28
Posterity of Woden. —— —— p. 97
Chronological and Synchronical Table. p. 98
The Head of King Egbert. p. 99
K. Alfred. —— —— p. 107
K. Canute. —— —— p. 148
K. Edward the Confessor. p. 154
Genealogy of the King's of Wessex, &c. p. 169
K. William the Conqueror. p. 194
Map of Great-Britain and Ireland. p. 198
K. William II. —— p. 214
K. Henry I. —— p. 223
K. Stephen. —— —— p. 233
K. Henry II. —— —— —— p. 258
K. Richard I. —— —— —— p. 284
K. John —— —— —— p. 295
K. Henry III. —— —— p. 335
K. Edward I. —— —— —— p. 405
K. Edward II. —— —— —— p. 439
K. Edward III. —— —— —— p. 456
K. Richard II. —— —— —— p. 507
K. Henry IV. —— —— p. 542
Genealogies of William the Conqueror, &c. p. 549
A Genealogical Table of Edward III. &c. p. 550
K. Henry V. —— —— p. 567
First Genealogical Table of the Royal Family of Scotland, &c. —— —— p. 598
K. Henry VI. —— —— p. 598
K. Edward IV. —— —— p. 685
K. Edward V. —— —— p. 727
K. Richard III. —— —— p. 738
K. Henry VII. —— —— —— p. 753
Map of France, and Explication of the Genealogical Tables, at the End of VOL. I.

In the Second VOLUME.

RAPIN's Head facing the Title.
K. Henry VIII. —— —— p. 3
Cardinal Wolsey. —— —— p. 28
K. Edward VI. —— —— p. 193
Q. Mary I. —— —— —— p. 221
Q. Elizabeth. —— —— p. 450
Mary Queen of Scots. —— —— p. 357
K. James I. p. 388
Genealogical Table of the Posterity of K. James I. —— —— —— p. 488
Trial of K. Charles I. at the End of VOL. II.

In the Third VOLUME.

RAPIN's Head facing the Title.
Oliver Cromwel. —— —— —— p. 3
General Monk. —— —— p. 62
K. Charles II. —— —— p. 64
K. James II. —— —— p. 235
K. William and Queen Mary. —— p. 347
Q. Ann and Prince George of Denmark. p. 541
Duke of Marlborough. —— —— p. 574
The Index.
The Summary or Abridgment.
Map of the King of Great Britain's Dominions, in Europe, Africa and America, at the End of VOL. III.

BRITISH MUSEUM